To Federal Trade Commision Comments Department:\

Hi my name is Monica Lin and I have been a member since the year 2003. I have been using Quixtar products for about ten years already. Since joining I have achieved the Founders Platinum award. My next goal is to earn the Emerald Award with Quixtar.

First of all I don't feel like I should need to give out references to my prospective clients. Say in the event that I do in fact disclose this information, the purpose would be to give the new member resources to contact and such. Well, what If these ten resources give out incorrect information and it then becomes my job to reeducate the prospective member. It would be much easier if the prospective member has any concerns to contact Quixtar on their own. I also do not want other IBOs' giving out my personal information. I feel that it is an invasion of privacy since most of us conduct the business in our very own homes. In the event that I do hours upon hours of negotiations with my new clients and I give them another IBOs' information, what if they contact the other IBO and register with them. That would not be at all fair making me give away my hard work to a competitor. When I first decided to join, my sponsor gave me the Quixtar website and other information for me to research on my own. I was instructed to learn all of this before I intended to register.

Lastly I do not want to give out my personal income records because when we talk about Quixtar, our first intention is not money. We try to share our experiences with products with our friends and slowly if they are interested they will inquire us about our business therefore it is not necessary to disclose our personal income records. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely

Monica Lin
