Dear Sir/Madame:

I don't like SPAM any more than the next guy. What I've read about the CAN-SPAM act so far is a step in the right direction, but I believe the use of suppression lists may actually make the problem worse.

The biggest problem with the suppression list is that if a Spammer gets a hold of the list, which will readily available, then there will be more SPAM, not less. There's also the potential problem that legitimate email will be deemed as SPAM and harm a legitimate business.

I believe that the suppression lists will make the problem they are supposed to fix worse and create new problems that aren't intended. The suppression lists are a bad idea.

Sincerely,

Rocky Ramsey
