Subject: contact lens rule

To whom it may concern

I wear contacts and enjoy participating in America's capitalist society, which allows consumers to purchase their goods and services from whom ever they choose. Timely service and delivery are an important part of this process, and the FTC's proposed rule could adversely affect both. This would be a tremendous inconvenience for contact lens wearers who choose to purchase their lens from sources other than where they received their eye exam. Like myself, many contact wearers now solely rely on their contacts, and having to wait days for them is impossible. I would be forced to buy my lens from my eye exam provider, and this is not the capitalist system that I love.
