

From: Vincent Napolitano
Posted At: Tuesday, March 30, 2004 4:17 PM
Posted To: spywareworkshop2004
Conversation: Spy ware Workshop - Comment, P044509
Subject: Spy ware Workshop - Comment, P044509

I'd like to add my personal two cents to the spy ware workshop. I visited a site about two weeks ago trying to find out information about a song, when I entered the site, (can't remember exactly which one it was) up popped a window telling me I must download a program in order for the page to work, which I declined approximately 6 or 7 times before the window finally went away. Unfortunately the program was installed anyway. Immediately I was bombarded with popup ads which eventually pointed to a site called lop.com. Even though I have updated virus, spy ware programs, and popup killer, running on my pc, the spy ware basically took over my pc. After a week and a half of trying everything I knew possible to rid the spy ware from my pc, I eventually went to a site called broadbandreports.com and was able to get advice from a knowledgeable fellow on their bulletin board.

Now I read that the company that runs lop. COM, C2 Media is submitting papers stating that they are a legitimate business and not spy ware, and that they should be excluded from any spy ware legislation. I find that preposterous, and hope that the fcc takes a long hard look at lop. COM.

Thank you,

Vincent Napolitano