

From: Maggy Da Silva
Posted At: Saturday, April 10, 2004 7:13 PM
Posted To: spywareworkshop2004
Conversation: Monitoring Software on your PC
Subject: Monitoring Software on your PC

It is a total invasion of privacy, same as if someone were allowed to tap into your phone every time-no rhyme or reason, unless a mechanism is bought by the customer (me) to guard against it.

Why should the public have to constantly be defending their privacy.

I don't understand.

There needs to be a regulation.

Advertising agencies did not get away with this back before internet, now it has gone haywire in the internet generation.

Our credit card companies protect what we purchase as do the department stores we go to, why then do spyware, adware, and other software violate this.
Simply because there is no rule, policy for privacy set in place.

An "Internet Privacy Act of 2004" would be a good name for it.
Let it pass.

I also dislike the junk email solicitation that results from this violation. It is time consuming, an inconvenience, and a nuisance to my everyday work activities.

Maggy Dasilva
web designer/developer