Now that I am retired, I love spending time on my computer doing family genealogy, planning events for several ladies groups, arranging travel, etc etc etc. It's a sorry state of affairs that I have to constantly be on the alert and spend more and more money to protect myself and my computer from spyware, viruses and trojans.

I happen to be somewhat computer savy, but have friends who are not. What happens to them?

Why is it more appropriate for someone to invade my privacy through my computer than for them to break down my front door and invade my home?

The Congress did a sloppy job trying to stop spam. I would hope the FTC could do a better job stopping 'spyware'.
