Regarding: Taking away debt settlement option from consumers

To The FTC:

Recently, I heard you guys want to regulate fees being charged for debt settlement services. How can anyone work and provide a service before money is paid to them. That doesn't make any type of business sense. That's like asking a doctor to perform surgery before knowing the patient even has insurance. If fees are regulated, then companies that perform under par will be the only ones standing. Good companies that provide the service with integrity will no longer stay around because there isn't any money to secure the services provided. Eventually, you guys would completely erase the option of debt settlement for consumer debtors and the whole nation will be filing bankruptcy. That would really help the economy wouldn't it? Serious consideration needs to be taken before you guys make such a rash decision.
