Dear Sir or Madam,

As you know, the Federal Trade Commission sent letters to 15 window and glass manufacturers, including Nationwide Window & Siding Corp. ("Nationwide"), on August 17, 2012. Pursuant to the Commission's vote, the letters were also published on the FTC's website. The FTC's letter to Nationwide expressed concerns about certain claims Nationwide made about the energy savings attributable to use of its windows.

Upon receipt of the FTC's letter, Nationwide voluntarily removed the savings claim in question from its website, and the FTC did not pursue enforcement action against Nationwide. Based upon Nationwide's recent request for further information about the FTC's actions, we are sending this letter to confirm that the FTC has closed any inquiry into Nationwide's advertising practices.

Our decision not to pursue enforcement action is not to be construed as a determination that a violation did not occur, just as the sending of a warning letter should not be construed as a determination that a violation has occurred. The Commission reserves the right to take further action as the public interest may warrant.

Sincerely,

Sarah Waldrop
