

Dear Mr. Leibowitz:

The FTC issued a policy paper on the “reinvention of journalism” that seems designed to prop up old liberal papers losing money and readers. It has also held hearings on this topic. In addition to being a waste of federal resources, what is the legal and constitutional justification for the FTC’s involvement in this matter? The FTC claims that its job is “protecting America’s consumers.” If this is the case, the FTC ought to stay out of the journalism business. Consumers have more choices than ever before. Consumers do not want what the liberal media have to offer. We hope your marriage to Washington Post journalist Ruth Marcus isn’t affecting the work of the FTC.

Note: Over 500 of the public comments that were filed in paper form with the Commission on this proceeding were part of a single mass mail campaign - i.e., letters that are based on all or part of one generic form letter template. Accordingly, the FTC is posting only one of these public comments as a representative example of the campaign. Appended to this representative comment is a list of the names of additional commenters who submitted a copy of this form letter. Form letters that include additional unique text are posted individually on the site, and can be found in the alphabetical index by commenter name.
