deceive members of the public into the mistaken and erroneous beliefs that respondent's preparations designated "Golden Peacock Bleach Cream" and "Miracream" are different from other creams or ointments offered for sale in commerce and were perfected by eminent doctors and skin specialists during a period of years; that the preparations have been endorsed by leading medical authorities and beauty specialists; that said preparations have the property to nourish and rejuvenate the skin and are active, effective treatments for all discolorations, blotches, disorders, skin defects, sallowness, liver spots, and skin blemishes no matter from what cause.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of respondent many corporations, partnerships, and persons who sell and distribute in commerce face creams and preparations similar to "Golden Peacock Bleach Cream" and "Miracream" and other preparations sold by respondent, who do not misrepresent the properties or therapeutic efficacy of their products.

PAR. 7. The above described acts and practices of the respondent have had and do have the tendency and capacity to induce members of the purchasing public to buy and use said preparations because of the erroneous and mistaken beliefs engendered as above set out; and the tendency and capacity unfairly to divert trade to the respondent from its competitors in said commerce. Thereby, substantial injury has been, and is, being done by the respondent to competitors in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Golden Peacock, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

IN THE MATTER OF ABRAHAM SOHN AND BENJAMIN SOHN, DOING BUSI-NESS AS SOHN BROS.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3199. Complaint, Aug. 10, 1937—Decision Feb. 16, 1938

Where two individuals engaged in the manufacture of mattresses made by them with new covers or "sheeting" or "drilling," and from cotton filling from old mattresses secured from dealers in such products, and in the sale of such mattresses, with their new covers and with appearance of new products made from materials which had never been used, to retailers at prices much lower than those of the necessarily much more costly new products with all new material, and, as thus engaged, in substantial competition with others engaged in manufacture and sale of mattresses—

Sold, as aforesaid, their new-appearing products with no labels, markings, or designations thereon, or in connection therewith, to indicate that they were in fact made from old, used, discarded, and second-hand mattresses, to retailers for resale to public without disclosure by latter of aforesaid facts;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive many retailers and substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said mattresses, made as aforesaid, were new products made from new materials, and with result, as direct consequence of such mistaken and erroneous belief, that number of the consuming public purchased considerable volume of their said products and trade was unfairly diverted to them from competitors engaged in manufacture and sale of new mattresses in commerce throughout the various States; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Robert S. Hall, trial examiner.

Mr. George Foulkes for the Commission.

Mr. Charles Cohn and Mr. Harold N. Blitstein, of Chicago, Ill., for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Abraham Sohn, an individual, and Benjamin Sohn, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Abraham Sohn and Benjamin Sohn, are individuals doing business under the name of Sohn Bros., with their principal place of business located at 1320 Roosevelt Road, Chicago, Ill. Respondents are now, and for more than 1 year last past have been, engaged in the business of manufacturing mattresses from old cotton and other materials which they obtain from old, used, discarded, and second-hand mattresses and from other sources and of selling the same to retailers located in the various States of the United States. Respondents cause, and have caused, said mattresses, when sold, to be transported from their place of business in Chicago to the aforesaid purchasers thereof located in the State of Illinois and to other of the aforesaid purchasers located in various other States of the United States. In the course and conduct of their business respondents are now, and have been, in substantial competition with other individuals, corporations, and firms likewise engaged in the manufacture and sale of mattresses in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents have bought and still buy second-hand, old, used, and discarded mattresses, cotton and other used materials. The materials obtained from said second-hand, old, used, and discarded mattresses and the other used materials are combed with a machine and then used by respondents in the manufacture of mattresses which are covered with new covering and are sold by the respondent to retailers who resell the same to the purchasing public.

PAR. 3. The aforesaid mattresses manufactured from old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials, as described in paragraph 2 herein, have the appearance of new mattresses manufactured from materials which have never been used, and said mattresses are sold by respondents to retailers without any label, marking, or designation on or about said mattresses to indicate that they are in fact manufactured from old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials which have been made over by respondents into mattresses. Said mattresses sold to retailers by respondents are resold by such retailers to the public without disclosing the fact that such mattresses have been manufactured from old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials.

The cost to respondents of obtaining said old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials and manufacturing the same into mattresses is much less than the cost to manufacturers of manufacturing new mattresses, and respondents are thereby able to sell said mattresses at substantially lower prices than manufacturers of new mattresses can sell their products.

PAR. 4. The acts and practices of respondents, as hereinabove set forth, had and now have a tendency and capacity to, and do, induce many retail dealers and many of the purchasing public to purchase said mattresses manufactured from old, used, and discarded materials in the mistaken belief that they are purchasing new mattresses manufactured from new and unused materials. As a result, trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture and sale of mattresses and who truthfully label, mark, and designate the same. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of respondents have been and are now all to the prejudice of the purchasing public and of respondents' competitors, as aforesaid, and have been and are now unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on August 12, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Abraham Sohn, an individual, and Benjamin Sohn, an individual, doing business as Sohn Bros., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by George Foulkes, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Charles Cohn, attorney for the respondent, Abraham Sohn, and Harold N. Blitstein, attorney for the respondent, Benjamin Sohn; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission in the said complaint and answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the allegations of the complaint, respondents having filed no briefs and no request having been made for oral argument; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Abraham Sohn and Benjamin Sohn, are individuals who, for some time last past have been engaged in the business of manufacturing mattresses under the trade name and style "Sohn Bros.," with their principal office and place of business located at 1320 Roosevelt Road, Chicago, Ill.

Respondents manufacture their product from material obtained from old, used, discarded, and second-hand mattresses, and from other sources. Respondents have caused said mattresses, when sold, to be transported from their place of business in Chicago to retail purchasers located in the State of Illinois and to other retail purchasers located in various other States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have been in substantial competition with other mattress manufacturing concerns who are likewise engaged in the manufacture and sale of mattresses in commerce among and between various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. The larger part of respondents' business has consisted of manufacturing mattresses from old and previously used mattresses. Respondents, however are equipped to make mattresses from new materials. Respondents made new mattresses only when receiving orders for the same. New mattresses were not manufactured in quantities for the purpose of sale.

Respondents purchased old, previously used mattresses from which they obtained cotton fillings. These purchases were made from dealers in such merchandise, who make a business of collecting and selling old mattresses. Respondents purchased their old mattresses from the dealers either in the form of old mattresses or in bales of cotton obtained by the dealers from old mattresses. When the old mattresses were received by respondent at their plant, the mattresses were placed in a machine called a "picker." The "picker" operates in such a manner as to comb or separate the filling of the mattress. After the contents of the mattress have been separated, the respondents stuff the same into new mattress covers.

The mattress covers, known in the trade as "sheeting" or "drilling," and the old cotton and other materials obtained from old, previously used mattresses, are compressed by a machine in such a manner as to give the mattress form and shape.

Respondents sold the finished product to retailers, who resold the same to the purchasing public.

PAR. 3. The mattresses manufactured by respondents from old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials have the appearance of new mattresses manufactured from materials which have never been used.

All the covers, otherwise known in the trade as "sheeting" or "drilling," used by respondent in the manufacture of said mattresses, are new, and are purchased by respondent from dealers of such merchandise, and the purchasing public in buying such a mattress, unless informed by retailers, did not know that the contents of the mattress were obtained from old, previously used mattresses, since inspection by purchasers of the contents cannot be accomplished unless the covering material is cut and the contents examined. The mattresses were sold by respondents to retailers without any labels, markings or designation on or about said mattresses to indicate that they were in fact manufactured from old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials which respondents had made over into mattresses. Retailers to whom respondents sold the mattresses resold them to the public without disclosing the fact that the mattresses were manufactured from old, used, discarded, and second-hand materials.

The cost to respondents of manufacturing mattresses from old and previously used materials were substantially lower than the cost to respondents' competitors of manufacturing mattresses from new materials. Respondents purchased old cotton obtained from old and previously used mattresses at about one-half the prevailing price of new cotton. Consequently, respondents were able to, and did, sell mattresses made from old materials at a price substantially lower than the prices at which manufacturers of mattresses could sell mattresses made from new materials. Respondents sold their mattresses at prices ranging from $2.50 to $2.75 per mattress. New mattresses made from new materials and of the same type as respondents' mattresses, that is, in the same general cost class, were sold for about $4.50 by respondents' competitors.

The use of new coverings, sheeting, and drilling, in the manufacture of mattresses, and the failure of respondents to properly label, tag, or otherwise indicate on the mattresses that the contents of the mattresses were old and previously used filling materials, is deceptive and leads purchasers to believe that the mattresses are new and manufactured out of new materials.

The acts and practices of respondents as hereinabove set forth had the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive many retail dealers and a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said mattresses manufactured from old, discarded, and previously used mattress materials were new mattresses made from new materials.

Order

As a direct result of this mistaken and erroneous belief, a number of the consuming public purchased a considerable volume of respondents' mattresses with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from concerns engaged in the manufacture and sale of new mattresses in interstate commerce throughout the various States of the United States.

As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, Abraham Sohn and Benjamin Sohn, individuals doing business as Sohn Bros., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondents, testimony, and other evidence taken before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and brief in support of the complaint, respondents having filed no brief and no request having been made for oral argument, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Abraham Sohn and Benjamin Sohn, individuals doing business as Sohn Brothers, or under any other trade name, their representatives, agents, employees, successors, or assigns, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of mattresses in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, through failure to affix or attach tags or labels thereto clearly and conspicuously showing that such mattresses are composed, in whole or in part, of second-hand or used materials, or through any other means or device, that mattresses made from second-hand or used materials, in whole or in part, are composed of new materials.

Order

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

Docket 3272. Complaint, Nov. 23, 1937—Decision, Feb. 16, 1938

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of diamonds, diamond rings, watches, and other jewelry, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia; in advertising his said products through price lists, catalogs, and other advertising material published, issued, and circulated through the mails to his customers and prospective customers in the various States and in said District—

- (a) Represented that said products were composed of a grade and quality superior to grade and quality possessed by them, and their prices as being in excess of the customary retail prices at which said products usually sold, through such statements, among others of similar tenor, as \$900.00 LADIES DIAMOND SOLITAIRE, 2 carats, 98% perfect blue white set in all platinum * * * specially priced.-----\$150," "\$700.00 MAN'S (GENTLEMEN'S) DIAMOND SOLITAIRE, 2 $\frac{1}{8}$ carats, exceptionally brilliant and perfect * * * now-----\$350," etc., facts being such and other articles and items of merchandise thus listed and described did not possess retail values or prices represented, or closely approximating those represented, and were not of the carat, weight, or degree of perfection thus held out;
- (b) Represented that he was liquidating a stock of merchandise secured from bankrupt sales, banks, estates, and individuals at a fraction of the original cost, through such statements as "Now liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings at a fraction of their original cost," and "* * * the greatest diamond values ever offered in the northwest * * *," and "These bargains are made possible through our constant effort to secure fine quality diamond jewelry from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources," facts being he was not liquidating a distressed stock, as aforesaid set forth, at a fraction of the original cost of such rings, nor did his stock represent greatest value ever offered in northwest; and so-called bargains offered were not purchased from bankrupt stocks, etc., from which he obtained only an infinitesimal part of his stock, with balance purchased in usual channels from which competitors secured their merchandise;

- (d) Represented, through letterheads, circulars, order blanks, and general business stationery, and through newspaper and magazine advertisements, that he was a diamond broker, facts being he was not such a broker, but merely a dealer in diamonds, diamond rings, watches and other jewelry;

26 F. T. C.

With effect of misleading substantial number of purchasers and prospective purchasers into erroneous and mistaken beliefs that his said products were composed of superior materials and were of superior value, or were products which ordinarily retail, in the usual course of trade, for prices closely approximating those listed as being usual retail value or price of said merchandise, that he was liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings and other merchandise at a fraction of the original cost, that the products were secured from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources, and that watches sold were latest models and new merchandise, and of the value represented, and that the diamonds sold were 100 percent perfect and of the full carat weight represented, and that he was a diamond broker, and with result, as consequence of erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced by his said acts, that a substantial part of the purchasing public bought substantial quantity of his products, and of thereby unfairly diverting trade to him from competitors engaged in like and similar businesses and who truthfully represent their products and business status; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyne Teu, II for the Commission.

Stinchfield, Mackall, Crouse, McNally & Moore, of Minneapolis, Minn., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Elmer Sussman, an individual trading as Diamond Brokerage Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said Act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Elmer Sussman, is an individual trading as Diamond Brokerage Company, and having his principal place of business in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota. He is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of diamonds, diamond rings, watches, and other jewelry in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. When said products are sold respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from his principal place of business in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There is now and has been at all times mentioned herein a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described products sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his said business respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing diamond rings, pins, watches, and other jewelry, and likewise engaged in competition with distributors of diamond rings and pins, watches and other jewelry in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent, in soliciting the sale, and in the selling, of said products, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public therefor, has advertised through the media of price lists, catalogs and other advertising matter published, issued, and circulated through the United States mails to his customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means respondent makes, and has made, to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by him.

PAR. 4. Many articles and items of merchandise listed in said price lists, catalogs, and other advertising matter published and distributed by respondent are described and represented as possessing retail values or prices, carat weight, and degrees of perfection which they do not possess.

PAR. 5. Representative of the advertisements wherein respondent's products are described as possessing retail values or prices, carat weight, and degrees of perfection which they do not possess are the following:

1. $900.00 LADIES' DIAMOND SOLITAIRE, 2 carats, 98% perfect blue white set in all platinum distinctively paved with 14 large diamonds, specially priced-----$450.

2. $700.00 MAN'S (GENTLEMEN'S) DIAMOND SOLITAIRE, 2½ carats, exceptionally brilliant and perfect, set in heavy handsome 14 K yellow gold setting, now-----$350.

3. $250.00 LADY'S DIAMOND SOLITAIRE, 1 carat blue white slightly imperfect, set in attractive 14 K white or yellow gold, 6 blue white side diamonds, now-----$125.

In truth and in fact, said articles and items of merchandise listed in said price lists, catalogs, and other advertising matter, including the articles referred to in subdivisions (1), (2), and (3) hereinabove do not possess retail values or prices described or represented and do not possess retail prices or values closely approximating said represented prices. Said articles and items of merchandise are not of the carat weight or degree of perfection represented in respondent's price lists, catalogs, and other advertising matter and are not substantially of the quality and character therein represented.

PAR. 6. The catalogs, price lists, newspaper and magazine articles, and other printed matter of respondent, and herein referred to, contain other misleading and false statements and representations, of which the following is representative:

Now liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings at a fraction of their original cost.

In this column you will find the greatest diamond values ever offered in the northwest. These bargains are made possible through our constant effort to secure fine quality diamond jewelry from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources.

WALTHAM, HAMILTON, BULOVA, ELGIN, GRUEN WATCHES FOR LADIES and MEN; latest round, square, or rectangular styles in yellow or white gold, 9-15-17 and 21 jewels; also pocket watches in 17 and 21 jewel railroad watches. All watches fully guaranteed. Values up to $60.

OUR PRICES $10 to $30.

In truth and in fact, respondent was not, and is not, liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings at a fraction of their original cost. His stock does not represent and has not represented the greatest values ever offered in the northwest. The alleged bargains offered by respondent were not purchased from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources. Further, in truth and in fact, the respondent obtains only an infinitesimal part of his stock from the above enumerated sources. The remainder of respondent's stock is purchased in the usual channels from whence his competitors secure their stock of merchandise.

The watches offered for sale by respondent and described above are not the newest style as represented by respondent, but in most instances are second-hand and obsolete models of watches.

PAR. 7. The respondent, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling, his commodities, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said commodities, now causes, and for more than 1 year has caused, himself to be represented through his letterheads, circulars, order blanks, and general business stationery as well as newspaper and magazine advertisements as a diamond broker.

In truth and in fact the respondent is not a diamond broker, but merely a dealer in diamonds, diamond rings, watches, and other jewelry.

PAR. 8. There are among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who refrain from advertising or representing through their catalogs and other advertising media, and through fictitiously advertised prices, or in any other manner, that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit, origin, and value that it does not have, or that they have a business status which they do not have.

PAR. 9. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of the respondent have a tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead a substantial number of purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous beliefs that:

1. The said products are composed of superior materials, and are of superior value, and are products which ordinarily retail in the usual course of trade for prices closely approximating the prices represented as being the usual retail value or price of said merchandise;

2. Respondent is liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings and other merchandise at a fraction of their original cost;

3. The said products were secured from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources;

4. The watches sold by respondent are the latest models and new merchandise, and possess the values represented;

5. Diamonds sold by respondent are 100 percent perfect, and are the full carat weight represented; and

6. Respondent is a diamond broker.

As a result of such erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced by the aforesaid misrepresentations on the part of the respondent, a substantial portion of the purchasing public has purchased a substantial quantity of respondent's products, thereby unfairly diverting trade to the respondent from those competitors engaged in like and similar businesses referred to. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 10. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on November 23, 1937, issued, and on November 26, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Elmer Sussman, an individual trading as Diamond Brokerage Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act.

On January 13, 1938, respondent filed his answer to the Commission's complaint, in which answer he admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that he waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and that without further evidence or intervening procedure the Commission may issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom:

26 F. T. C.

In this column you will find the greatest diamond values ever offered in the northwest. These bargains are made possible through our constant effort to secure fine quality diamond jewelry from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources.

WALTHAM, HAMILTON, BULOVA, ELGIN, GRUEN WATCHES FOR LADIES and MEN; latest round, square or rectangular styles in yellow or white gold, 9-15-17 and 21 jewels; also pocket watches in 17 and 21 jewel railroad watches. All watches fully guaranteed. Value up to $60.

OUR PRICES $10 to $30

The respondent was not, and is not, liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings at a fraction of their original cost. His stock does not represent, and has not represented, the greatest value ever offered in the northwest. The so-called bargains offered by respondent were not purchased from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources. The respondent obtains only an infinitesimal part of his stock from the above sources. The remainder of respondent's stock is purchased in the usual channels from which his competitors secure their stock of merchandise.

The watches offered for sale by respondent and described supra are not the newest style as represented by respondent. In most instances, they are second-hand and obsolete models of watches.

PAR. 6. In soliciting the sale of, and in selling his commodities and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the purchasing public for his commodities, the respondent now causes, and for more than 1 year has caused, himself to be represented through his letterheads, circulars, order blanks and general business stationery, as well as newspaper and magazine advertisements as a diamond broker.

The respondent is not a diamond broker, but merely a dealer in diamonds, diamond rings, watches, and other jewelry.

PAR. 7. The use by the respondent of the false and misleading statements and representations set out herein has a tendency and capacity to, and does mislead a substantial number of purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that the products are composed of superior materials and are of superior value, or are products which ordinarily retail in the usual course of trade for prices closely approximating the prices listed as being the usual retail value or price of said merchandise; that respondent is liquidating a distressed stock of diamond rings and other merchandise at a fraction of their original cost; that the products were secured from bankrupt stocks, individuals, banks, estates, and distressed sources; that the watches sold by respondent are the latest models and new merchandise, and possess the values represented; that diamonds sold by respondent are 100 percent perfect and are the full carat weight represented; and that the respondent is a diamond broker.

PAR. 8. As a result of the erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced by the acts of the respondent, a substantial part of the purchasing public has purchased a substantial quantity of respondent's products, thereby unfairly diverting trade to the respondent from those competitors engaged in like and similar businesses and who truthfully represent the products offered for sale and sold by them, and their business status.

As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been, and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Elmer Sussman, an individual trading as Diamond Brokerage Company, are to the prejudice of the public and the respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and states that he waives hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and its conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Elmer Sussman, an individual trading as Diamond Brokerage Company, or under any other trade name, his representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of diamonds, diamond rings, watches, and other jewelry in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or indirectly:

1. Representing that said products of respondent are composed of materials of a grade and quality superior to that actually contained;

2. Representing that fictitious prices in excess of the customary retail prices at which said products of respondent are customarily sold are the usual and customary retail prices for said products;

3. Representing that respondent is liquidating a stock of merchandise secured from bankrupt sales, banks, estates, and individuals at a fraction of the original cost, when said merchandise was purchased in the usual merchandise marts in the usual course of trade;

4. Representing that respondent's watches are the latest models, unless this is a fact;

5. Representing that respondent's diamonds possess a greater degree of perfection or a greater carat weight than they actually possess;

6. Representing that respondent is a diamond broker when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

Where an individual engaged, under trade name including word "Tailors" and other names, in offer and sale of ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men, through traveling salesmen and agents, to purchasers in various other States, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution of such ready-made articles in interstate commerce, including many selling their clothing through salesmen or agents and who have not adopted acts, practices, and methods as below set forth, and including (1) many who, as manufacturers of such garments, rightly represent themselves as such, (2) others who, as purchasers of such products dealt in by them, do not represent that they manufacture same, and (3) many who rightfully represent their said suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men as tailored according to the individual measurements of the purchaser from material of the color, weave, grade, quality, and texture selected from samples displayed, and (4) many who sell such garments made in stock sizes and do not represent same as made to purchaser's individual measurements—suits and other garments sent to customers, in many instances, were not made from materials corresponding to samples as displayed to them by his said sales agents and representatives, and selected by the purchaser, but, in many instances, were furnished in materials substantially inferior in quality, grade, and texture to that of sample displayed and selected;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into mistaken and erroneous beliefs that said individual was a manufacturer of men's clothing, garment ordered would be made to individual measurements of purchaser and tailored to fit, made to measure, custom made, or made to order, as understood by public, and, as ordered, would be made from material, color, weave, grade, quality, and texture selected by purchaser from samples exhibited by salesmen or agent, and into purchase of his said suits, overcoats, and topcoats in and on account of such beliefs, and with result, as a consequence thereof, that substantial trade in interstate commerce was unfairly diverted to him from competitors who do not use similar acts and practices in connection with the sale of their said products; to their injury and that of the public:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Joseph Cominsky, an individual doing business under the trade names Waverley Tailors, Mayfair Clothing Company, and Barclay Clothing Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said Act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect, as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Joseph Cominsky, is an individual, having his principal office and place of business located at 678 Broadway, in the city of New York, in the State of New York. Respondent, for more than 2 years last past, has been, and still is, engaged in the business of selling men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats, and in offering said articles of men's clothing for sale and selling the same in commerce between the State of New York and the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. When said articles of clothing are sold, respondent transports, or causes the same to be transported, from his place of business in the State of New York to the purchasers thereof, located in States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than 2 years last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said articles of clothing thus sold and distributed by respondent, between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now, and for more than 2 years last past has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with partnerships, corporations, and firms engaged in the manufacture, or in the sale and distribution, of like and similar articles of men's clothing in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent, by and through sales agents and representatives, sells and has sold men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats directly to the persons by whom such suits, overcoats, and topcoats are to be worn. Respondent furnishes and has furnished to his sales agents and representatives order blanks, bearing one of his trade names, which set forth directions for taking measurements usually regarded as essential to the tailoring of a suit, overcoat, or topcoat to the individual measure of a customer. Such sales agents and representatives, by displaying such order blanks to customers and prospective customers, and by taking the measurements specified thereby, and by their statements and conduct, represent and have represented to such customers and prospective customers that the men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats sold by respondent are tailored to the individual measurements of the purchasers thereof. Respondent also, through said sales agents and representatives and otherwise, represents to his customers and prospective customers, that the men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats sold and offered for sale by him are "Tailored-to-Fit," "Made to Measure," and "Custom-Made." Further, respondent represents, through said sales agents and representatives and otherwise, that orders so solicited and received are forwarded to said respondent at his principal place of business, in the city of New York, State of New York, which said place of business respondent and his said sales agents and representatives represent to be a tailoring establishment. Respondent further represents that said orders, when received by him, are filled according to said measurements, and of a cloth whose grade and texture is represented to be the same as the samples displayed by said sales agents and representatives and as selected by the customer.

PAR. 3. The statements and representations of respondent set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and others similar thereto, have the capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's said articles of clothing into the false and erroneous beliefs:

(a) That respondent is a tailor or manufacturer;

(b) That the men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats sold and distributed by respondent are "Tailored-to-Fit," "Made to Measure," "Custom-Made," or "Made to Order";

(c) That said men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats are made in accordance with measurements submitted by said sales agents and representatives, and of a cloth whose grade and texture is the same as the samples displayed by such sales agents and representatives and as selected by said customers.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact, respondent, trading under the various trade names hereinabove set forth, is not a tailor or manufacturer of clothing. None of the men's ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats sold by respondent are made by respondent, but they are made by other manufacturers. The said men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats sold and distributed by him were and are not "Tailored to Fit," "Made to Measure," "Custom Made," or "Made to Order," as represented, but were and are of the ready-made variety or stock type, and are altered, when deemed necessary, to partially conform to the measurements shown on the order blanks. Further, in many instances, the men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats sent to customers did not and do not correspond to the samples displayed to said customers by said sales agents and representatives, and as selected by said customers. Nor are said men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats made in accordance with measurements submitted by respondent's said sales agents and representatives, or of a cloth whose grade and texture is the same as that of the samples displayed by said respondent's sales agents and representatives, and as selected by the customers. In many instances, said garments are furnished in materials substantially inferior in quality, grade, and texture to that of the sample displayed and selected by the purchasers.

PAR. 5. There are, among the competitors of respondent referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, many who manufacture the men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats which they sell, and who rightfully represent that they are the manufacturers thereof. There are others of said competitors who purchase the men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats in which they deal, and which they resell, who do not represent that they manufacture said men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats. There are also, among said competitors, many who rightfully represent that the men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats which they sell are tailored according to the individual measurements of the purchasers thereof, of a cloth whose grade and texture is the same as that of the samples displayed by them and by their sales agents and representatives; and others of said competitors who sell men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats made in stock sizes, and who do not represent that the men's suits, overcoats, and topcoats sold by them are made to the individual measurements of the purchasers.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous beliefs described in paragraph 3 hereof, and into the purchase of respondent's said suits, overcoats, and topcoats in and on account of such beliefs. Thereby trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from those competitors referred to in paragraph 5 as herein described. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury is done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 7. Said acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 3, 1937, issued, and, on August 4, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Joseph Cominsky, trading as Waverley Tailors, Mayfair Clothing Company, and Barclay Clothing Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, the Commission by order duly entered herein extended the respondent's time for filing answer to January 22, 1938, on which date the respondent filed an answer to the complaint wherein he admitted all of the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that the Commission might, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, which said answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Joseph Cominsky is an individual engaged in the business of offering for sale, and selling, ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men, through salesmen or agents who travel throughout the United States soliciting and accepting orders for such clothing. His office and principal place of business is located at 678 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Respondent has been trading and doing business under the names Waverley Tailors, Mayfair Clothing Company, and Barclay Clothing Company.

Respondent in the usual course of such business has constantly engaged in interstate commerce, selling and shipping such clothing from his place of business in New York, N. Y., to purchasers located in various other States of the United States.

In the operation of his business as aforesaid, respondent comes into substantial competition with others engaged in selling and distributing ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men, in interstate commerce. Among such competitors are many who likewise sell such clothing through salesmen or agents, and who have not adopted the acts, practices, and methods in the sale thereof used by the respondent in the sale of his clothing as hereinafter described.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent, by and through sales agents and representatives, sells ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men directly to the persons by whom such suits, overcoats, and topcoats are to be worn. Respondent furnishes to his sales agents and representatives order blanks, bearing one of his trade names, which set forth directions for taking measurements usually regarded as essential to the tailoring of a suit, overcoat, or topcoat to the individual measure of a customer. Such sales agents and representatives, by displaying such order blanks to customers and prospective customers, and by taking the measurements specified thereby, and by their statements and conduct, represent to such customers and prospective customers that the ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men sold by respondent are tailored to the individual measurements of the purchaser thereof. Respondent also, through said sales agents and representatives and otherwise, represents to his customers and prospective customers, that the ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men sold and offered for sale by him are "Tailored-to-Fit," "Made-to-Measure," and "Custom-Made," and implies to prospective purchasers of his clothing that he will make for, and deliver to, purchasers of his clothing made-to-measure or tailor-made garments made from material of the color, weave, quality, and texture selected by purchasers from the samples exhibited by his salesmen or agents.

In many instances, the garments delivered by the respondent to purchasers are not made-to-measure or tailor-made garments, as that term is understood by the purchasing public, but are "ready-made" or "hand-me-down" garments, having been previously manufactured without regard to the individual measurements of the purchaser to whom the garment is eventually sold.

Respondent represents, through said sales agents and representatives and otherwise, that orders so solicited and received are forwarded to the respondent at his principal place of business in the city of New York, which said place of business respondent and his sales agents and representatives represent to be a tailoring establishment. Respondent further represents that said orders when received by him are filled by making a garment according to the individual measurement of the purchaser from a material of the color, weave, grade, quality, and texture selected by the purchaser from samples exhibited by said agents and representatives.

PAR. 3. The statements and representations of respondent set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and others similar thereto, have the capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's said articles of clothing into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the respondent is a manufacturer of men's clothing; that the garment ordered will be made to the individual measurement of the purchaser; that such garment will be "Tailored-to-Fit," "Made-to-Measure," "Custom-Made," or "Made-to-Order" as those terms are understood by the public; and that the garment ordered will be made from material of the color, weave, grade, quality, and texture selected by the purchaser from samples exhibited by salesmen or agents of the respondent.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact, respondent, trading under the various trade names hereinabove set forth, is not a tailor or manufacturer of clothing. None of the ready-made suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men sold by respondent are made by respondent, but they are made by other manufacturers. The said suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men sold and distributed by him were and are not "Tailored-to-Fit," "Made-to-Measure," "Custom-Made," or "Made-to-Order," as represented, but were and are of the ready-made variety or stock type, and are altered, when deemed necessary, to partially conform to the measurements shown on the order blanks. In many instances, the suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men sent to customers are not made from materials corresponding to the samples displayed to said customers by said sales agents and representatives, and as selected by said purchasers. Nor are said suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men made in accordance with individual measurements of the purchasers submitted by respondent's said sales agents and representatives. In many instances, said garments are furnished in materials substantially inferior in quality, grade, and texture to that of the sample displayed and selected by the purchasers.

PAR. 5. There are, among the competitors of respondent referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, many who manufacture suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men which they sell, and who rightfully represent that they are the manufacturers thereof. There are others of said competitors who purchase suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men in which they deal, and which they resell, who do not represent that they manufacture said suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men. There are also, among said competitors, many who rightfully represent that the suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men which they sell are tailored according to the individual measurements of the purchasers thereof from material of the color, weave, grade, quality, and texture selected by purchasers from samples displayed; among said competitors are many who sell suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men made in stock sizes, and who do not represent that the suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men sold by them are made to the individual measurements of the purchasers.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous beliefs described in paragraph 3 hereof, and into the purchase of respondent's said suits, overcoats, and topcoats for men in and on account of such beliefs. As a consequence thereof, substantial trade in interstate commerce is unfairly diverted to the respondent from his competitors who do not use similar acts and practices in connection with the sale of their said products in said commerce, to the injury of such competitors and the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Joseph Cominsky, trading as Waverley Tailors, Mayfair Clothing Company, and Barclay Clothing Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

777

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on January 22, 1938, by respondent, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Joseph Cominsky, an individual trading as Waverley Tailors, Mayfair Clothing Company, and Barclay Clothing Company, or under any other name or style, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of ready-made suits, overcoats and topcoats for men in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia; do forthwith cease and desist from directly or indirectly representing:

1. That respondent manufactures the suits, overcoats and topcoats sold and distributed until he actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, the tailoring establishment, factory, or plant wherein such clothing is made;

2. That the ready-made suits, overcoats and topcoats sold by him are tailored-to-fit, made-to-measure, custom-made, or made-to-order, unless and until his said garments are actually cut and made to the individual measurements of the purchasers;

3. That the garments sold by respondent will be made from the material selected by the purchasers from samples submitted by his salesmen or agents, unless and until the garments sold by him are made from materials of the color, weave, quality, and texture selected by such purchasers.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent shall within 60 days from the date of service upon him of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

BUNTE BROTHERS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 1811. Complaint, Jan. 17, 1936¹—Decision, Feb. 19, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "break and take," or "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, sale and distribution of which, affording, in connection with sale thereof to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise substantial number of purchasers and consumers of such type of candy, and particularly of so-called "break and take" assortments, and appearance of which "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments in the markets of manufacturers of "straight" merchandise has been followed by marked decrease in sale of such "straight" goods, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with other—

Sold to wholesalers and retailers (1) "break and take" assortments, together with explanatory display cards for retailers' use, composed of number of chocolate-covered penny candies of uniform size and shape, together with number of larger pieces, to be given as prizes to those securing by chance one of a relatively few of said uniform pieces, enclosed colored centers of which differed from that of majority, and to purchaser of last of said uniform pieces in assortment, and (2) "draw" or "deal" assortments composed of number of packages of candy of varying size, together with punchboard or push card, as case might be, for sale in accordance with explanatory legend thereon and under a plan by which chance purchaser received, for nickel paid, one of said packages, of a value in excess of said sum, or nothing, dependent upon success or failure in punching of certain numbers or punching of last number in each of certain sections into which board was divided;

So packed and assembled that such various assortments were and might be displayed, distributed, and sold by the numerous retail dealer purchasers thereof to consuming public by lot or chance, in accordance with aforesaid or similar plans, and sold, as packed, as aforesaid and without alteration or rearrangement, and with knowledge and intent that such candy should and would thus be resold to purchasing public as aforesaid by retail dealers therein; contrary to public policy and in competition with many who do not make and sell such lottery assortments but sell, in competition therewith, their "straight" merchandise, and with many who regard such sale and distribution by lot or chance as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, and as injurious to industry in question through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retailers with means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed that same can be resold to public by lot or chance;

Complaint

With result that retailers, finding such "break and take" or "draw" or "deal" candy more salable, purchased from it and others employing similar methods, trade was diverted to it and such others from aforesaid competitors, able to compete on even terms only by giving same or similar devices to retailers, some competitors began sale and distribution to public by lot or chance to meet competition of manufacturers selling such candy, in constant demand, and there was diversion of trade to it from its said competitors and a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in industry concerned; to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors:

Held. That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

Whereas, The Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit on May 1, 1930, issue its complaint herein charging and alleging that respondent herein is and has been guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, and

Whereas, This Commission having reason to believe that respondent herein has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint as aforesaid, and it appearing to said Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest:

Now, therefore, Acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that Bunte Brothers, Inc. has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. It is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States and causes the said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now and has been for several years last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers certain packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all-inclusive of the various packages nor does it include all of the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of chocolate-covered candies of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate-covered candies in the following manner:

The majority of said chocolate-covered candies in said assortment have centers of the same color but a small number of said chocolate-covered candies have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in said assortment retail at the price of 1 cent each but the purchasers who procure one of said candies having a center of a different color than the majority of said candies are entitled to receive and are to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy. The purchaser of the last piece of chocolate-covered candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment, thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers with said assortment of candy, a display card, to be used by the retailer in offering said merchandise for sale to the public, which display card bears a legend or statement informing the prospective purchaser which color of the said colored center candies contained in said assortment entitles the purchaser to a prize, and that by purchasing the last piece of candy in said assortment the purchaser will receive one of the said larger pieces of candy free of charge.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by the respondent is composed of a number of 1-pound boxes of assorted chocolates, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5 cents each and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The punches on said board are arranged in three sections, and the purchaser of the last punch in the first and second section each receive two 1-pound boxes of candy and the purchaser of the last punch on the board receives four 1-pound boxes of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number in one of the sections or on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) larger pieces of candy; (b) a box or boxes of candy.

The use by respondent of said method of the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said methods or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 1, 1930, issued and served its complaint upon the respondent, Bunte Brothers, Inc. Thereafter on January 17, 1936, the Federal Trade Commission issued and served an amended and supplemental complaint upon said respondent, charging that respondent had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On February 8, 1936, the respondent filed its answer to said amended and supplemental complaint and, subsequent to the filing of said answer, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the amended and supplemental complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Leroy Krein, attorney for the respondent, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said amended and supplemental complaint and answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (oral arguments of counsel aforesaid having been waived), and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Bunte Brothers, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located in Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers, and to retail dealers, located in all the States of the United States, and causes its said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Chicago, Ill. to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in all the other States of the United States at their respective places of business. And there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In so carrying on said business respondent is, and has been, engaged in active competition with other corporations, and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacturing of candy, and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof the respondent has sold in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, to wholesale and retail dealers, certain packages or assortments of candy composed of a number of pieces of chocolate-covered candies of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy were to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate-covered candies, in substantially the following manner:

The majority of said chocolate-covered candies in said assortment had centers of the same color, but a small number of said chocolate-covered candies had centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retailed at the price of 1 cent each, but the purchasers who procured one of the said candies having a center of a color different from the majority of said candies were entitled to receive, and were to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy. The purchaser of the last piece of said chocolate-covered candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment was entitled to receive, and was to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procured a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment, thus procured one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent furnished to said wholesale and retail dealers with said assortment of candy a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said merchandise for sale to the public, which display card bore a legend or statement informing purchasers and prospective purchasers which color of the said colored center candies contained in said assortment entitled the purchaser to a prize, and that by purchasing the last piece of candy in said assortment the purchaser would receive one of the said larger pieces of candy free of charge.

The sale and distribution of said assortment involved the use of a lottery scheme, a game of chance, or a gift enterprise when said assortment was sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. The respondent manufactured, sold, and distributed several assortments involving the above-described sales plan or principle, but varying in detail. One such assortment was described by respondent as "Mascot Bar Assortment," another such assortment was described by respondent as "Santa Claus Bar Assortment," and still another assortment was described by respondent as "Jar Bar Assortment." The evidence offered shows, and the Commission finds, that on or about April 1, 1934, the respondent discontinued the sale and distribution of assortments similar to those just above described to purchasers located in States other than the State of Illinois.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent was, and is, selling and distributing in commerce between and among the various States of the United States several other assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme, game of chance, or gift enterprise when sold or distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Such assortments were and are shipped or transported by respondent from its place of business in Chicago, Ill., to the purchasers thereof in all of the States of the United States at their respective points of location. Such assortments are composed of a number of packages of candy of varying sizes, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said packages of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner:

The said punchboard has a number of indicated holes, and in each hole a slip of paper bearing a printed number or legend is secreted. Sales are 5 cents each, and when a punch is made from said board one of the printed slips bearing a number or legend is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive a package of candy, and the size thereof. The punches on said board are arranged in sections, and the purchaser of the last punch in each section receives a specified package of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers or legends calling for one of the packages of candy, or by punching the last number in one of the sections, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The packages of candy are each worth more than 5 cents, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a package of candy receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the printed slip of paper separated from the board. The packages of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent is and has been distributing several assortments involving the same principle but varying in detail. Some of the assortments are composed of packages of candy and other articles of merchandise to be given as prizes to purchasers selecting particular numbers or legends, and some of the assortments contain a device commonly called a "push card" rather than a punchboard, but the candy and other merchandise distributed by push cards involve the same plan or method as the punchboard.

PAR. 4. Candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as described in paragraph 2, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take" assortments. Assortments of candy as described in paragraph 3 above are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without any lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" assortments. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish the separate types of assortments.

PAR. 5. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells, or has sold, its assortments resell, or have resold, same to retail dealers. Respondent also sells, and has sold, its assortments direct to retail dealers. Numerous retail dealers purchase, and have purchased, the assortments described in paragraphs 2 and 3 above either from respondent or from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from the respondent, and such retail dealers have, and do, display said assortments for sale to the public as packed by the respondent, and the candy contained in the majority of said assortments is, or has been, sold and distributed to the consuming public by means of said "break and take" sales plan or method, or by means of the punchboards or push cards, in the manner above described.

PAR. 6. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesalers or jobbers, or to retail dealers, are, and have been, absolute sales, and respondent retains and has retained no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber, or retail dealer. The assortments are, and have been, assembled and packed in such manner that they are, and have been, used and may be used by retail dealers for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement.

In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, and to retail dealers direct, of the assortments of candy described in paragraphs 2 and 3, respondent had, and now has, knowledge that the said candy was, and is, to be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it has packed, and does pack, such candy in the way and manner described, so that without alteration, addition, or rearrangement thereof, it would be, and may be, resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 7. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell "break and take," "draw," or "deal," assortments of candy, and who sell their "straight" merchandise in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal," candy, and manufacturers of "straight" merchandise have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "break and take," "draw," or "deal," assortments have appeared in their market. This decrease in the sale of "straight" merchandise is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal," candy.

Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "break and take," "draw," or "deal," candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "break and take," "draw," or "deal," assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy, particularly the "break and take" assortments.

PAR. 8. The sale and distribution of candy by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance, and constitutes a lottery or gaming device. Competitors of respondent appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds, that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad, and as encouraging gambling, especially among children, and as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and has provided retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competition. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take" method, and that they can dispose of more candy by the "draw" or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted from said competitors to respondent and others using similar methods. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" candy show a marked decrease.

The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods, some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by the respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon, and a detriment to, the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 9. As stated previously in these findings, the respondent sells its merchandise in all States of the United States, and while the annual volume of business of the respondent was not shown exactly, an officer of the respondent testified, and the Commission finds, that the respondent's annual volume of "break and take" assortments was substantial, and its annual volume of business of "draw" or "deal" assortments is, and has been, substantial.

PAR. 10. The Commission finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, are contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Bunte Brothers, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken in support of the allegations of the complaint and in opposition thereto before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and brief of counsel for the Commission, and brief of counsel for the respondent (oral argument having been waived), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Bunte Brothers, Inc., a corporation, its officers, directors, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy and candy products in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers for resale to retail dealers, and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy or candy products contained in said assortments to the public;

3. Packing or assembling in the same packages or assortments of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy, which said larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy having a center of a particular color;

4. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," or a device commonly called a "push card," for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail; and

5. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," or a device commonly called a "push card," either with packages or assortments of candy or candy products, or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

Order

26 F. T. C.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Mr. Freer dissented to the inclusion of certain words in the Commission's order to cease and desist in this case, involving a respondent located within the Seventh Circuit, because the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the case of A. McLean & Son—Docket 2264—had stricken from the order in said previous case these words and substituted others for them.

LES PARFUMS D'ISABEY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Les Parfums d'Isabey, Inc., a corporation, organized and doing business by virtue of and under the laws of the State of New York, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been, and is now, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the said Act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PAR. 1. Respondent Les Parfums d'Isabey, Inc., is a New York corporation, having its principal office and place of business located at 312 East Thirty-second Street, city of New York, State of New York. The respondent has been for more than 1 year last past engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumes to retail dealers purchasing for resale. In the course and conduct of its business respondent offers said products for sale and sells the same in commerce between the State of New York and the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. When the said products are sold, respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in the States of the United States other than the State of New York and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of, or in the sale and distribution of, like and similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent in soliciting the sale of and in selling its products, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said commodities, has advertised its commodities through the media of price lists and other printed matter published, issued, and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means the respondent makes and has made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it.

PAR. 4. The said price lists and other printed matter published and distributed by respondent as aforesaid contain misleading descriptions and representations concerning its products. For example, certain of the perfumes have printed on the carton thereof or on the labels thereof the following words and phrases:

Isabey parfums d'Isabey, parfums d'Isabey
Isabey-Paris

while on the bottle or container of the perfume appear these words—"le muguet isabey."

The aforementioned representations and descriptions in the French language appearing on the aforesaid articles and their containers serve to lead the purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the commodities so described and referred to are manufactured in France.

PAR. 5. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and still has, and has so expressed, a marked preference for perfumes which are manufactured or compounded in foreign countries, especially in France, and then imported into the United States.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, the aforesaid articles are not manufactured in France or any other foreign country, but are domestic products made or compounded in the United States.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of the respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and origin of their respective products. There are also among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who refrain from advertising or representing through their price lists and other printed matter that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a value, merit, or origin that it does not have.

PAR. 8. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to is to mislead a substantial part of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by inducing them to mistakenly believe that the various articles of perfumes hereinabove set out and described in paragraph 4 are manufactured in France and imported from that country into the United States.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid false and misleading statements and representations on the part of respondent have induced and still induce a substantial number of consumer purchasers of said commodities to buy the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by the respondent on account of the aforesaid erroneous and mistaken belief. As a result thereof trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses referred to in paragraph 7. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 10. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Such methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on June 11, 1937, issued, and on June 12, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Les Parfums d'Isabey, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by S. Brogdyne Teu, II, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by John H. Glaccum, attorney for the respondent, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it; and said testimony and evidence was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (oral argument not having been requested), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Les Parfums d'Isabey, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business are at 245 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Its shipping point is at 318 East Thirty-second Street, New York, N. Y. It is engaged in the sale and distribution of perfume and toilet water.

PAR. 2. Respondent's products are distributed from its aforesaid place of business to retailers located throughout the United States. When orders are received for respondent's products it causes such products to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. Since the date of its incorporation, 3 or 4 years ago, the respondent, Les Parfums d'Isabey, Inc., has maintained a course of trade in said products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. At all times since respondent entered into said business it has been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution, or in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of perfumes in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. The respondent has advertised and now advertises its products by means of labels attached to the containers and cartons in which respondent's products are packed and sold and by use of other means. On the labels appear certain words and phrases purported to be descriptive of the product and its source or country of origin. The following is representative of the statements and representations made on the labels attached to the containers and cartons of respondent's products:

Isabey Parfums d'Isabey, Parfums d'Isabey "Isabey—Paris."

All of the above set out statements and representations appearing on the containers and cartons in which respondent's products are packaged and sold are in the French language.

PAR. 5. The respondent purchases the perfumes which it sells and distributes under the false and misleading labels above described from the George Silver Import Company (now Roure-Dupont, Inc.). The George Silver Import Company imports essential oil or flower essence, aromatic chemicals, and animal products which are blended in various proportions depending upon the formula of the specific odor desired. Sometimes these ingredients are imported separately in bulk. Sometimes these ingredients are blended before being imported. When they are blended, they are referred to in the trade as perfume concentrate. The George Silver Import Company imports either the perfume concentrate already blended in the proper proportion for the odors desired or it imports separately the necessary ingredients of the completed perfume concentrate. After the ingredients have been blended so as to form the perfume concentrate, it is still necessary to compound or blend this concentrate with an alcohol vehicle.

All of the perfumes purchased by the respondent from the George Silver Import Company are actually compounded in the United States. As stated above, in some instances ingredients are imported separately, then blended, so as to form perfume concentrate, and subsequently compounded with the alcohol vehicle. In other instances, the perfume concentrate made up of the same ingredients which are sometimes imported separately is imported and subsequently compounded with the alcohol vehicle. Perfume concentrate as made up of the various ingredients before the addition of the alcohol vehicle is not ready for use as a perfume by members of the general purchasing public and cannot satisfactorily be used for such purpose. A perfume concentrate is not a perfume within the generally understood meaning of that term as used by the purchasing public. A perfume, as that term is understood by the public generally and by the trade, is a compound of a perfume concentrate and an alcohol vehicle. A perfume is not made or compounded until the alcohol or other agent of application has been united with the concentrate.

The Commission finds that there exists in the minds of the purchasing public a preference for imported perfumes and a particular preference for perfumes made in and imported from France.

PAR. 6. The use by respondent of the statements and representations, as set out hereinabove, in which its products are packaged and sold has had and now has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive a substantial part of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said representations are true and that the said perfume is imported into the United States from Paris, France.

Acting under the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false, deceptive and misleading statements and representations herein referred to, the public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's products, with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors engaged in the manufacture and distribution, or in the sale and distribution of perfumes, who truthfully describe said perfume and truthfully represent the country or source of origin of their products. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been and is being done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Les Parfums d'Isabey, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Con-

799

Order

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Fioret Sales Company, Inc., a New York corporation, and Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman, individuals and officers of Fioret Sales Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said Act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that the proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Fioret Sales Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business at 312 East Thirty-second Street, city of New York, State of New York. Respondents, Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman, are respectively president and secretary and treasurer of Fioret Sales Company, Inc. Respondents are now and have been for more than 1 year last past engaged in the manufacture and in the sale and distribution of perfumes in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their said business respondents are now and have been in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling perfumes in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. When said products are sold respondents transport or cause same to be transported from their place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than 1 year last past and still is a constant current of trade in commerce in said products so sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Respondents, in soliciting the sale and in the selling of their products, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said commodities, have advertised their products through the media of price lists and other printed matter published, issued, and circulated through the United States mails to their customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means the respondents make and have made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by them.

PAR. 5. The said price lists and other printed matter published and distributed by respondents as aforesaid contain misleading descriptions and representations concerning their products. For example, certain of the perfumes have printed on the carton thereof the following words and phrases:

Les Parfums des Jardins
de
Paris New York

The above language appears on the display part of the carton in which respondents' perfumes are sold.

On the back of the display carton in which respondents' perfumes are sold appears the following in French:

ont et crees en France par

FIORET, INC.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned representations and descriptions appearing on the aforesaid articles and their containers by labels with the above set out words printed thereon serve to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the commodities so described and referred to are manufactured in France.

PAR. 7. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and still has, and has so expressed, a marked preference for perfumes which are manufactured or compounded in foreign countries, especially in France, and then imported into the United States.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact, the aforesaid articles are not manufactured in France or any other foreign country, but are domestic products made or compounded in the United States.

PAR. 9. There are among the competitors of respondents manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and origin of their respective products.

There are also among the competitors of respondents manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who refrain from advertising or representing, through their price lists and other printed matter, that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a value, merit, or origin that it does not have.

PAR. 10. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondents in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to is to mislead a substantial part of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by inducing them to mistakenly believe that:

(1) The various articles of perfumes hereinabove set out and described in paragraph 5 are manufactured in France and imported from that country into the United States.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid false and misleading statements and representations on the part of respondents have induced and still induce a substantial number of consumer purchasers of said products to buy the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by the respondents on account of the aforementioned mistaken and erroneous belief. As a result thereof trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondents engaged in similar businesses. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 12. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Such methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 29, 1937, issued, and on June 30, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Fioret Sales Company, Inc., a corporation and respondents Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman, individually, and as officers of respondent Fioret Sales Company, Inc., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by S. Brogdyne Teu, II, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by John H. Glaccum, attorney for the respondents, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (oral argument not having been requested), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Fioret Sales Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business are at 245 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Its shipping point is at 312 East Thirty-second Street, New York, N. Y. It is engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumes and toilet waters.

Respondents Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman are respectively, president and secretary and treasurer of respondent Fioret Sales Company, Inc.

PAR. 2. Respondent's products are distributed from its place of business to retailers located throughout the United States. When orders are received for respondents' said products they cause them to be shipped from their place of business at New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. Since the date of incorporation, 2 or 3 years ago, the respondent, Fioret Sales Company, Inc., under, by, and through the direction of respondents Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman, has maintained a course of trade in said products in commerce in and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. At all times since respondents entered into said business they have been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution, or manufacture, sale, and distribution of perfumes in commerce, among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. The respondents have advertised and now advertise their products by means of labels attached to the containers and cartons in which respondents' products are packaged and sold. On the labels appear certain words and phrases purported to be descriptive of the product and its source or country of origin. The following is representative of the statements and representations made on the labels attached to the containers and cartons of respondents' products:

On the back of the display carton in which respondents' perfumes are packaged and sold appears the following:

BOTTLED IN U. S. A.

Substantially all of the above set out statements and representations appearing on the containers and cartons in which respondents' products are packed and sold are in the French language.

PAR. 5. The respondents purchase the perfumes which they sell and distribute under the false and misleading labels above described from the George Silver Import Company (now Roure-Dupont, Inc.). The George Silver Import Company imports essential oil or flower essence, aromatic chemicals, and animal products which are blended in various proportions depending upon the formula of the specific odor desired. Sometimes these ingredients are imported separately in bulk. Sometimes these ingredients are blended before being imported. When they are blended, they are referred to in the trade as perfume concentrate. The George Silver Import Company imports either the perfume concentrate already blended in the proper proportion for the odors desired or it imports separately the necessary ingredients of the completed perfume concentrate. After the ingredients have been blended so as to form the perfume concentrate, it is still necessary to compound or blend this concentrate with an alcohol vehicle.

All of the perfumes purchased by the respondents from the George Silver Import Company are actually compounded in the United States. As stated above, in some instances ingredients are imported separately, then blended, so as to form perfume concentrate, and subsequently compounded with the alcohol vehicle. In other instances, the perfume concentrate made up of the same ingredients which are sometimes imported separately is imported and subsequently compounded with the alcohol vehicle. Perfume concentrate as made up of the various ingredients before the addition of the alcohol vehicle is not ready for use as a perfume by members of the general purchasing public and cannot satisfactorily be used for such purpose. A perfume concentrate is not a perfume within the generally understood meaning of that term as used by the purchasing public. A perfume, as that term is understood by the public generally and by the trade, is a compound of a perfume concentrate and an alcohol vehicle. A perfume is not made or compounded until the alcohol or other agent of application has been united with the concentrate.

There exists in the minds of the purchasing public a preference for imported perfumes and a particular preference for perfumes made in and imported from France.

PAR. 6. The use by respondents of the statements and representations on the cartons and containers, as set out hereinabove, in which their products are packaged and sold has had, and now has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive a substantial part of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said representations are true and that the said perfume is an imported perfume from Paris, France.

Acting under the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false, deceptive and misleading statements and representations herein referred to, the public has purchased a substantial volume of respondents' products, with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from their competitors engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in the sale and distribution of perfumes, who truthfully represent the country or source of origin of their products. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been, and is, being done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Fioret Sales Company, Inc., Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman, individually, and as officers of the respondent, Fioret Sales Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and to the respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and briefs filed herein (oral argument not having been requested), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Fioret Sales Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, and Murray W. Morin and Irving Unterman, individually, and as officers of respondent Fioret Sales Company, Inc., in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of perfumes in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or through implication:

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Alpha Laboratory, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter designated as respondent, is now and has been using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its amended complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Alpha Laboratory, Inc., is now, and has been for several years last past, a corporation organized, existing, and doing business, under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 5908 North Clark Street in the city of Chicago and the State aforesaid.

Respondent has been engaged in the sale and distribution of certain so-called hygienic and other products for use by women, in commerce between the State of Illinois and the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes these products, when sold, to be transported from its aforesaid place of business to purchasers thereof in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of said business, respondent has been and is in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations similarly engaged in offering for sale and selling in commerce among and between the various States of the United States so-called hygienic and other products intended and designed for use by women exclusively.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, it has been and is the practice of respondent to offer for sale and sell for such use a product known and described as Va-Jel and similar products. Such products are sold principally to wholesale druggists, although when an order is received by respondent from any individual unit of the purchasing or consuming public, it is filled by respondent.

In the carton or container in which the said product is marketed, there is enclosed certain advertising literature in which the product is represented and described. Such advertising matter is also distributed by respondent among purchasers and prospective purchasers who inquire about the said product. It also employs and uses agents for the introduction of said product and promotion of its sale. They call upon druggists and install advertising window display and distribute other advertising matter including circulars, a booklet entitled "A Confidential Talk to Women" and matches, the latter of which contain on their cover certain legends. Such legends are "Let Va-Jel Scientific Prophylactic Open the Way for a Better, Happier Life for all Women. Doctors advise use of Va-Jel." On the inside of such cover of the matches appears the following: (sic) "Strike for Freedom. Va-Jel solves the Woman's Problem. Send this folder with self-addressed stamped envelope to Alpha Laboratory, Inc., Chicago, Illinois, for Free booklet 'A Confidential Talk to Women.' Va-Jel has no substitute."

As inducements to the purchase of Va-Jel, respondent represents that use of such product will prevent conception; that it is a protection against venereal diseases. As a further inducement for the purchase of its product Va-Jel, respondent has represented its cooperation with the American Birth Control League using such language as signifies and implies the close connection between respondent and such League. It also represents that it has received approval of the product Va-Jel by the American Medical Association and by physicians generally, and that it is generally dispensed and prescribed by thousands of physicians. It further represents that respondent is well known to the medical profession for its high class pharmaceutical products. Respondent further represents that the product Va-Jel is not a patent or proprietary medicine but rather an open formula which is given to physicians whenever they request it.

In truth and in fact the use of respondent's said product neither uniformly nor invariably prevents conception, nor the contraction of venereal diseases. It is neither a scientific prophylactic which opens the way to a better and happier life for all women, nor does it solve the woman's problem. The product Va-Jel has not received the approval of The American Medical Association, nor of any officer, medium, or agency thereof. It has not been dispensed and prescribed by thousands of physicians, and respondent is not known in the medical profession for the high class of its pharmaceutical products. There is no connection, direct or indirect, between the respondent and The American Birth Control League. The product of respondent is a patent or proprietary medicine. It is not an open formula as the words are generally understood since ingredients of the product are not declared or disclosed.

PAR. 3. Respondent represents in its corporate name and in the sale of its products that it owns and operates a laboratory and uses and displays such name containing the word "laboratory" in its advertisements and advertising matter. In truth and in fact respondent does not own, control, or operate any laboratory and does not own, operate, or control any place devoted to the application of scientific principles in the making or preparation of said products. Respondent is not the manufacturer of the products it sells but purchases said products from others.

PAR. 4. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations who have been offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce medicines or preparations of various kinds for use by women in so-called feminine hygiene, antiseptic, germicidal and for similar uses without stating expressly or implying or importing in their representations that their products or any of them are invariably or uniformly effectual. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce medicines or other preparations which they truthfully represent will prevent the contraction of venereal diseases by women when used in accordance with directions.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid practices of respondent have had and have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive wholesale dealers, retail dealers and their customers, the consuming or purchasing public, into the erroneous beliefs that Va-Jel is invariably and uniformly effective in preventing conception and is likewise a preventive of venereal diseases, and that all other representations of the respondent hereinbefore stated in paragraph 2 are true, and into the purchase of such product in reliance upon such erroneous beliefs or one or more of them.

The aforesaid practices have also had and have the capacity and tendency to divert trade to respondent from the competitors mentioned in paragraph 4 hereof, as a result of which respondent has been doing and is doing substantial injury to such competitors in the course of such competition.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 29, 1937, issued and, on July 1, 1937, served its amended complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Alpha Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said amended complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by William L. Taggart, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it. Thereafter, on October 21, 1937, the respondent, submitted an amended answer to the complaint, in which answer respondent admitted all of the material allegations of the amended complaint to be true and stated that it waived hearings on the charges set forth in said amended complaint and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the amended complaint. The Commission, by order entered herein, substituted said amended answer dated October 21, 1937, in lieu of the original answer to the amended complaint filed on July 19, 1937. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said amended complaint, amended answer dated October 21, 1937, and testimony and other evidence; and the Commission having duly considered the matter, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Alpha Laboratory, Inc., a corporation organized, existing, and doing business, under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 325 West Huron Street, in the city of Chicago and the State aforesaid.

Respondent is now, and for the past several years has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of certain so-called hygienic products for use by women. It causes these products, when sold, to be transported from its aforesaid place of business to purchasers thereof located at points in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of said business, respondent has been and is in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and corporations similarly engaged in offering for sale and selling in commerce among and between the various States of the United States so-called hygienic and other products used and useful for the purpose for which respondent recommends that its said product be used.

The respondent advertises the product to the public through printed pamphlets, leaflets, booklets, and other printed matter which it distributes among purchasers and prospective purchasers. The advertising matter in addition to being distributed generally is placed in the carton or container in which the said product is marketed. Respondent as an advertising medium also employs agents who call upon druggists and others interested in the purchase of the product and make representations in addition to those in the printed matter and install large window displays.

In one of said booklets, called "A Confidential Talk to Women," and on the cover of pocket matches the following statements appear:

Let Va-Jel scientific prophylactic open the way for a better happier life for all women.

Doctors advise use of Va-Jel.

Va-Jel solves the womens problem.

Send this folder with self-addressed stamped envelope to Alpha Laboratory, Inc., Chicago, Ill., for free booklet.

As further inducements to the purchasing public, respondent represents in its advertising and otherwise, directly and by implication, that the use of Va-Jel will prevent pregnancy; and that it is a protection against venereal diseases; that respondent works in cooperation with the American Birth Control League, using such language as signifies and implies a close connection between respondent and such League. It also represents that it has received approval of the product Va-Jel by the American Medical Association and by physicians generally, and that it is generally dispensed and prescribed by thousands of physicians. It further represents that respondent is well known to the medical profession for its high-class pharmaceutical products.

PAR. 2. It has been and is the practice of respondent, to offer for sale and sell to the purchasing public for such use as is herein set out a product known as Va-Jel and similar products. Va-Jel is a jelly consisting of glycerine, gum tragacanth, lactic acid, phenol, and some scent. It is applied through a pipe, tube, or applicator, inserted by hand in the vagina and the tube squeezed to force the jelly up into the vagina.

The use of the product as directed will not prevent conception. A contraceptive jelly such as that sold by the respondent is only effective when used to function with an occlusive device placed in the vagina at the opening of the cervix. The secretions that flow from the cervix and in the vagina during intercourse prevent the jelly alone from acting as an occlusive. No occlusive device is supplied with respondent's product. A contraceptive jelly is further rendered ineffective because the vaginal secretion has an acidity or alkalinity which not only varies between different women but also varies in the same person from week to week and from month to month which may or may not render such a jelly ineffective depending upon the degree of acidity or alkalinity which may be present at a given time. The respondent's product has not sufficient germ destroying power to isolate and destroy the male sperm.

The product is not a scientific prophylactic and has no beneficial use therapeutically in so-called feminine hygiene. The preparation has no therapeutic value whatever in the treatment of ailments, ills, and diseases peculiar to women and will not act as a preventative of venereal disease in either sex.

The use of the product with the applicator is not harmless as in many cases the indiscriminate use of the product and the applicator is capable of causing injuries and might have a deleterious effect upon the female using it.

The product has never been approved for use by the American Medical Association and is not used or recommended for use by a large number of well known clinics and is not recommended by the medical profession generally. The respondent is not connected with and does not cooperate in any manner with the American Birth Control League.

PAR. 3. Respondent represents in its corporate name and in the sale of its products that it owns and operates a laboratory, and it uses and displays such name containing the word "laboratory" in its advertisements and advertising matter. In truth and in fact respondent does not own, control or operate any laboratory and does not own or control any place devoted to the application of scientific principles in the making or preparation of said products. Respondent is not the manufacturer of the products it sells but purchases said products from others.

Many of the respondent's competitors who sell and distribute, or manufacture, sell, and distribute so-called feminine hygiene products in commerce, do not in any way misrepresent the effectiveness of their products or their efficacy for feminine hygienic purposes.

PAR. 4. The use by respondent of the representations set forth above has had and now has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true. As a consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading statements and representations above referred to, the purchasing public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's products with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors engaged in the business of selling and distributing feminine hygiene products in said commerce, or in the manufacture, and in the sale and distribution of feminine hygiene products in said commerce, who truthfully represent the efficacy of their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations who have been offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce medicines or preparations of various kinds for use by women for hygienic, antiseptic, germicidal and for similar purposes without stating expressly or implying or importing in their representations that their products are invariably or uniformly effective for the purposes for which they are recommended. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce medicines or other preparations for use by women which are truthfully represented to the public.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Alpha Laboratories, Inc. are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended complaint of the Commission, testimony and other evidence taken before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and the amended answer of respondent, dated October 21, 1937, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and states that the Commission may, without the taking of further testimony or any other intervening procedure, enter and issue its findings as to the facts an order to cease and desist; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Alpha Laboratory, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of Va-Jel and similar products sold under the name of Feminine Hygiene Products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that the use of said preparation alone or in conjunction with an appliance will prevent conception;
2. Representing that said preparation is a scientific prophylactic for feminine hygienic purposes, and is a protection against venereal disease;
3. Representing that said preparation acts two ways in preventing feminine hygienic troubles, mechanically and as a germicide;
4. Representing that the preparation is prescribed by thousands of physicians and that it has the approval of the American Medical Association, American Birth Control League, and physicians generally, that the respondent is connected with the American Birth Control League;

5. Representing that the preparation is not a patent or proprietary medicine, but an open formula;

6. Representing that the said preparation and appliance may be used with safety and without deleterious effects by all women;

7. Representing that respondent owns or operates a laboratory in which the product is manufactured or that it owns or operates any establishment devoted to the application of scientific principles in the making or preparation of said product;

8. Representing that respondent is noted on account of the manufacture and sale of high-class pharmaceutical products;

9. Making other representations of similar import and of like character to those made as above set forth.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
GOLF BALL MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SUBSECS. 2 (a), 2 (d), AND 2 (f) OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914, AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936

Docket 3161. Complaint, Aug. 18, 1937¹—Decision, Feb. 25, 1938

Where (1) an unincorporated trade association, membership of which consisted of manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls, in competition with one another and with nonmembers likewise thus competitively engaged, but for the matters and things below set forth, (2) the officers of said association, and (3) member manufacturers thereof, who owned and controlled practically all of the factories engaged in the production of golf balls in the United States and produced most of the golf balls sold and distributed in this country; and (1) an unincorporated association, members of which consisted of approximately 1,500, out of some estimated 2,500, professional golfers engaged in retail sale of golf balls and golf equipment throughout the country and, as thus engaged, in competition with one another and with nonmember retailers likewise thus competitively engaged, but for the matters and things hereinbelow set forth, (2) the officers thereof, and (3) the members thereof, constituting a group so large and influential in the trade as to be able, by themselves and in cooperation with aforesaid members of said manufacturers' association, to control and influence the flow of trade and channels of distribution in golf balls throughout the country, as well as the prices at which, and the terms and conditions under which, nonmember retailers of such articles buy and resell the same;

In pursuance, concertedly, of a common course of action and undertaking, in which they had combined and united and which was directed to enforcing, fixing and maintaining, throughout the United States, certain monopolistic prices, policies, sales methods, and trade practices, and, generally, a policy and practice designed to and tending to monopolize the sale and distribution of golf balls in themselves, and in the accomplishment of which, to the substantial or potential injury of some of such manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers and of ultimate purchasers and consumers of such products, they held official and unofficial meetings of their associations and members, discussed policies and practices as aforesaid, adopted, agreed upon, and issued bulletins, circulars, letters, price lists, etc., announcing such policies, etc., and the imposition thereof upon all affected thereby, obtained promises and assurances of cooperation from one another, exchanged information, and acted concertedly to control resale markets and to require, coercively, recalcitrant manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers to conform to practices and methods in question—

(a) Entered into and carried out contracts and agreements directed to the maintenance of uniform wholesale prices to be exacted by manufacturers of golf balls, as between members of said professional association and other nonmember dealer purchasers, with respect to balls of equal grade and quality, and made it a policy and practice to require that all manufacturers and wholesalers, as aforesaid, observe such provisions; and

- (b) Fixed, as a policy and practice, prices for resale of such products by non-member retailers, and persuaded, coerced, and compelled such dealers to refrain, abstain, and desist from selling golf balls at less than designated price, and supervised and investigated practices and policies of retail dealers in golf balls, and acted concertedly to maintain resale prices agreed upon; and

Where said association of professional golfers, its officers, members, etc.—

- (c) Required, coerced, or persuaded said member manufacturers and wholesalers to enter into contracts with said professional association for the payment of monies to it for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on golf balls sold it; and
- (d) Required, as a policy and practice, all manufacturers and wholesalers, selling their products to its members to refrain and abstain from giving, allowing, or granting, in any way or manner, any rebate, discount, royalty, or refund, in any manner or form, to nonmember retailer purchasers, and acted concertedly and coercively to require conformance of recalcitrant manufacturers and wholesalers; and

Where such manufacturers' association, its officers, members, etc.—

- (e) Granted unlawful discriminations in price through payment of monies to aforesaid golfers' association for privilege of causing letters "PGA" to be printed on golf balls sold to said last organization, and for partial redistribution to members thereof, or through discounts, commensurate with designated percentage of such payments and in lieu thereof, direct to members on their purchases, and not allowed, in any manner or form, to nonmember retail dealer purchasers; and
- (f) Made payments as aforesaid, to said professional association, not made available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing with members of said professional association in distribution of balls of like grade and quality, for use, in part, in advertising, promoting, and creating a preference on the part of the purchasing public for golf balls having letters "PGA" imprinted thereon, and for the promotion of the interests and welfare of the members, to the disadvantage of the non-member retail golf ball dealers;

With capacity and tendency to, and effect of—

- (1) Monopolizing, in members of said manufacturers' association, business of manufacturing and selling golf balls to retailers of the United States, and monopolizing, in members of said professional association, retail sale of such products to consumers therein;
- (2) Fixing and maintaining prices at, and conditions under, which golf balls are sold by manufacturers and wholesalers thereof and by retailers thereof to consumers;
- (3) Bringing about an unlawful discrimination in prices at which such articles of same grade and quality are sold by manufacturers and wholesalers to retailers therein, and of substantially increasing cost to such retailer purchasers of said articles;
- (4) Unreasonably lessening, eliminating, restraining, stifling, hampering, and suppressing competition in the golf ball trade and industry, and depriving the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry, and of otherwise operating as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry;

- (5) Suppressing, eliminating, and discriminating against small business enterprises which are or have been engaged, or desire to engage, in manufacturing, selling, or distributing golf balls, and of obstructing and preventing the establishment of new distributors of golf balls; and
- (6) Suppressing and eliminating all price competition among manufacturers and wholesalers in sale of such articles, and among retail dealers engaged in resale thereof, and of hampering and interfering with the natural flow of trade in commerce of golf balls to and through the various States, and of injuring competitors by unfairly diverting business and trade from them, depriving them thereof and otherwise driving or freezing them out of business, and of prejudicing and injuring manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers and others who do not conform to their program or methods, or who do not desire to conform to them, but are compelled to do so by their concerted action as herein set forth; and

With dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the golf ball trade throughout the United States, and to create monopoly thereof in the hands of aforesaid associations, officers, and members; and

Where said professional association, its officers, etc.—

- (g) Induced and received such unlawful discrimination in price or allowance in connection with purchase of golf balls in interstate commerce, through concerted action as aforesaid, and through the formulation, adoption, and administration of policy and practice requiring payment of monies, or discount direct, as above set forth, for the privilege of imprinting letters "PGA" on golf balls sold to members;
- (h) Induced and received payments contracted for as aforesaid, and not made available on proportionally equal terms to all other customer competitors of such manufacturer members, to be used by such professional association for the purpose of promoting and creating a preference on the part of the purchasing public for golf balls having letters "PGA" imprinted thereon over balls of equal grade, quality and value offered and sold by retail competitors; and
- (i) Knowingly induced and received such discriminations in price, as aforesaid set forth, on purchases of golf balls made by them;

With the result that the general effect of the policies and practices requiring systematic discriminations in price for golf balls of like grade and quality between customers in the same class, as hereinabove set forth, had been, or might be, substantially to lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, and distribution thereof, and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition between and among manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers of golf balls, and deprive purchasing public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which might be received and enjoyed under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry, and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry:

Held, That such acts and practices had a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the golf ball trade throughout the United States, and to create monopoly thereof in the hands of said associations, their officers and members, and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, and that their said acts and practices in granting unlawful discriminations or paying, or contracting to make, payments for the promotion of said "PGA" balls and interests as hereinabove set forth, or in inducing or receiving any such discriminations or payments, as aforesaid constituted a violation of the provisions of Sections 2 (a), 2 (d) and 2 (f) of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, as amended by an act approved June 19, 1936.

existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" approved October 15, 1914 as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes" (The Robinson-Patman Act), the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the respondents hereinabove designated have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said Federal Trade Commission Act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest; and the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the said respondents have violated and are now violating the provisions of Subsection "a", Subsection "d" and Subsection "f" of Section 2 of said Clayton Act as amended, hereby issues its amended and supplemental complaint against said respondents, stating its charges as follows:

For convenience the above named respondents will hereinafter be referred to as members of the "Manufacturers' Association."

PAR. 3. The respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" cause their golf balls when sold to be transported to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States. They are in competition among themselves, except in so far as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by their practices and methods hereinafter particularly described and set forth. There are other manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls, who sell and distribute their said products in the various States of the United States, and who, in the ordinary course of their business, seek the same customers that are sought by the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association." These nonmember manufacturers and wholesalers also cause their golf balls to be shipped and transported from the various points of manufacture and sale in certain States through and into other States of the United States. They are also in competition among themselves and with respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" except in so far as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition forestalled as a result of the use of the practices and methods by the parties respondent hereinafter described. The respondent "Manufacturers' Association" and its officers are not engaged in commerce, but are engaged in unfair methods, hereafter described, which directly affect competition among respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" and nonmember manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls, and also directly affect the competition in the sale of golf balls, between and among retail dealers located in the various States of the United States engaged in the retail sale of said products.

PAR. 4. The respondent, Professional Golfers' Association of America, hereinafter for convenience referred to as "PGA," is an unincorporated trade association, with an office at 14 East Jackson Boulevard, in the City of Chicago, Ill. Respondent "PGA" is a nonprofit association organized and created for the purpose of promoting the game of golf and the general welfare and interests of its members who are engaged in the sale of golf balls and golf equipment.

Its membership consists of approximately 1,500 of an estimated total of 2,500 professional golfers who are engaged in the retail sale of golf balls and golf equipment throughout the country. Among the members of said respondent "PGA" are respondents C. M. Irwin, Tom Kerrigan, Joe Bradley, Jim Dante, Jack Fox, Jack Hagen, John Inglis, R. C. MacDonald, Alex Main, and Jack Forrester, all individuals, engaged in the retail sale of golf balls and golf equipment. The above named members of said respondent "PGA" do not constitute the entire membership thereof but are representative members thereof. All members of respondent "PGA" are also made respondents herein, as a class, of which those specifically named are representative of the whole. Said respondent members are hereinafter for convenience collectively referred to as respondent members of "PGA."

The respondent members of "PGA" are in competition with one another in the retail sale of golf balls to consumers in the various localities in which they respectively operate, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by the practices and methods of the parties respondent hereinafter specifically described and set forth. There are numerous other retailers of golf balls who are nonmembers of respondent "PGA" who are engaged in the sale of such products to consumers in the various localities and trade areas in the United States in competition with one another and with one or more of respondent members of "PGA," except insofar as such competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by the use of the practices and methods of the parties respondent hereinafter described. All or nearly all of respondent members of "PGA" and their competitors above mentioned are engaged in purchasing golf balls from manufacturers or wholesalers thereof which are transported from one State to and through other States to them as a result of such purchases and in reselling the same to customers located in the various trade areas in which they respectively operate. All of said respondent members of "PGA" are engaged in unfair methods, as hereinafter set forth, which directly and substantially affect competition among themselves, and between themselves and other retail dealers, and among the manufacturers and wholesalers of said products.

PAR. 5. The respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" own and control practically all of the factories engaged in the production of golf balls in the United States and produce most of the golf balls sold and distributed in this country. They are able to and do determine and control the prices and terms at which and conditions under which golf balls are sold and distributed by manufacturers and wholesalers throughout the United States. The respondent members of "PGA" constitute a group of retailers of golf balls so large and influential in the trade as to be able by themselves and in cooperation with respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" to control and influence the flow of trade and channels of distribution in golf balls throughout the country, as well as the prices at which, and the terms and conditions under which non-member retailers of golf balls buy and resell such products.

PAR. 6. The parties respondent named herein have within the past several years agreed and conspired, combined and confederated together and with others, and have united in and pursued a common and concerted course of action and undertaking, among themselves and with others, to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce, fix, and maintain throughout the United States, certain monopolistic prices, policies, sales methods, and trade practices, hereinafter described, which the said parties respondent have agreed to and adhered to themselves and which they have attempted to and have, by coercion and compulsion imposed upon manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers who were not permitted to be or did not desire to be members of either of the respondent associations, and others, to the substantial or potential injury of some of such manufacturers, wholesalers and retail dealers and of ultimate purchasers and consumers of golf balls.

PAR. 7. The said monopolistic prices, sales methods, policies, and trade practices referred to in the preceding paragraph and which were so adopted, fixed, and put into effect are as follows:

1. A policy and practice of requiring that all manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who sell their said products to the members of respondent "PGA" enter into a purported license agreement with respondents, A. G. Spalding and Brothers, and U. S. Rubber Products Company permitting them to manufacture golf balls in accordance with a process on which the said respondents profess to have obtained a patent.

2. A policy and practice of requiring that all golf balls manufactured under the aforesaid purported license agreements be sold in accordance with uniform price lists attached thereto and made a part thereof.

3. A policy and practice of requiring as a condition precedent to the sale of golf balls to respondent members of "PGA" that manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls enter into purported license agreements or contracts with the respondent "PGA" providing for the payment of a royalty to the respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on the golf balls so sold.

4. A policy and practice of causing, permitting, and allowing the respondent "PGA" to remit and pass along to its members a designated percentage of the royalties paid by manufacturers and wholesalers to respondent "PGA" under the aforesaid purported license agreements.

5. A policy and practice of causing, permitting, and allowing the respondent "PGA" to use the funds derived from the payment of royalties under the aforesaid purported license agreements for the purpose of promoting and creating a preference on the part of the purchasing public for golf balls having the letters "PGA" imprinted thereon to golf balls of equal quality and value offered for sale and sold by retail competitors of the respondent members of "PGA."

6. A policy and practice of requiring that manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls bearing the letters, "PGA" refrain and abstain from selling the same to any persons or parties other than members of respondent "PGA."

7. A policy and practice of requiring that all manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who manufacture and sell balls under the aforesaid purported license agreements maintain uniform prices with those quoted in the price lists attached to and made a part of the aforesaid license agreements in the sale of their golf balls of equal grade and quality to those bearing the letters "PGA" to retail purchasers who are nonmembers of respondent "PGA."

8. A policy or practice of granting, giving, or allowing members of the respondent "PGA" a discount on purchases of golf balls commensurate with the designated percentage of the aforesaid royalties to be received by them in lieu of said designated percentage.

9. A policy and practice of requiring that all manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who sell their products to members of respondent "PGA" refrain and abstain from giving, allowing, or granting, in any way or manner any rebate, discount, royalty, or refund in any manner or form to retail purchasers who are not members of respondent "PGA."

10. A policy and practice of persuading, coercing, and compelling retail dealers in golf balls who are not members of respondent "PGA" to refrain, abstain, and desist from selling golf balls at a price less than that designated by the parties respondent herein.

11. Generally, a policy and practice designed to and tending to monopolize the manufacture, sale, and distribution of golf balls in the parties respondent herein.

PAR. 8. For the purpose of making such sales practices, policies, and pricing methods effective, and of requiring compliance therewith and observance thereof by all manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers in golf balls throughout the United States, the parties respondent herein, acting through their officers, directors, committees, and individually, in furtherance of and in pursuance of the general plan, undertaking, conspiracy, and policy, have collectively as groups or individually done the following things:

1. Formulated, adopted, followed, carried out, enforced, imposed, and made effective the policies, practices, and methods described in the preceding paragraph.

2. Held official and unofficial meetings of said respondent associations and their members at which the policies and practices hereinabove described were discussed, adopted, and agreed to, and issued bulletins, circulars, letters, price lists, and other printed matter, and

3. Caused practically all members of the respondent "Manufacturers' Association" to enter into purported license agreements with respondents, A. G. Spalding and Brothers, and U. S. Rubber Products Company to manufacture their golf balls in accordance with a patented process professed to be owned by said respondents and to cause the golf balls so manufactured to be sold in accordance with uniform price lists attached to and made a part of said purported license agreements.

4. Caused all manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who sell their products to members of respondent "PGA" to enter into purported license agreements or contracts with respondent "PGA" providing for the payment of royalties to respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on their golf balls.

5. Caused, permitted, and allowed the respondent "PGA" to remit and pass along to its members a designated percentage of the royalties paid by the manufacturers and wholesalers to the respondent "PGA" under the aforesaid purported license agreements.

6. Caused, permitted, and allowed the respondent "PGA" to use the funds derived from the payment of royalties under the aforesaid purported license agreements for the purpose of promoting the interests and welfare of its members to the disadvantage of retail dealers in golf balls who are not members of said respondent "PGA."

7. Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" have and do refuse to sell golf balls manufactured under the aforesaid purported license agreements to parties and persons who are not members of the respondent "PGA."

Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" maintain uniform prices with those quoted in the price lists attached to and made a part of the aforesaid license agreements in the sale of their golf balls of equal grade and quality to those manufactured and sold under said purported license agreements.

9. Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" grant, give, and allow members of respondent "PGA" a discount on purchases of golf balls commensurate with the designated percentage of the aforesaid royalties to be received by them in lieu of said percentage of royalties.

10. Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" refuse and refrain from giving, allowing, or granting in any way or manner any rebate, discount, royalty, or refund in any manner or form to retail purchasers who are not members of respondent "PGA."

11. The parties respondent herein have persuaded, coerced, and compelled retail dealers in golf balls who are not members of the respondent "PGA" to refrain, abstain, and desist from selling golf balls at a price less than that designated by them.

12. Respondents generally have sought and have obtained promises and assurances of cooperation from one another in establishing and making effective the sales practices, policies, and pricing methods hereinabove described.

13. The parties respondent generally have exchanged information with reference to their respective businesses and activities to be used in furtherance of the policies and methods referred to.

14. The parties respondent generally have supervised and investigated the practices and policies of retail dealers in golf balls, and have acted concertedly to maintain certain resale prices agreed upon, to control resale markets and to coercively require recalcitrant manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers to conform to such practices and methods.

PAR. 9. The capacity, tendency, and effect of said plan, agreement, combination, conspiracy, undertaking, policies, and methods, and the said acts and practices of said respondents in pursuance thereof, are and have been:

1 To monopolize in the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" the business of manufacturing and of selling golf balls to retail dealers in the United States.

2. To monopolize in the respondent members of "PGA" the retail sale of golf balls to consumers in the United States.

3. To fix and maintain the prices at and conditions under which golf balls are sold by manufacturers and wholesalers thereof.

6. To unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in the golf-ball trade and industry and to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

9. To obstruct and prevent the establishment of new distributors of golf balls.

10. To suppress and eliminate all price competition among manufacturers and wholesalers in the sale of golf balls and among retail dealers engaged in the resale thereof.

11. To hamper and interfere with the natural flow of trade in commerce of golf balls to and through the various States of the United States; and to injure the competitors of individual respondents by unfairly diverting business and trade from them, depriving them thereof and otherwise driving or freezing them out of business.

12. To prejudice and injure manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers and others who do not conform to respondents' program or methods or who do not desire to conform to them, but are compelled to do so by the concerted action of respondents herein alleged.

PAR. 10. The above alleged acts and things done by the parties respondent have a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the golf-ball trade throughout the United States, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Paragraphs 1 to 9 inclusive of count 1 hereof are hereby adopted and made a part of this charge as fully as if set out herein verbatim.

PAR. 2. The parties respondent herein named have conspired and confederated together to bring about and have brought about and made effective a policy and system whereby respondent members of the Manufacturers' Association discriminate and have discriminated in price between different purchasers of golf balls of like grade and quality, in violation of Section 2a of an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

The aforesaid discriminations in price between different purchasers of golf balls of like grade and quality were and are effected through the concerted action of the parties respondent herein through the formulation, adoption, and administration of a policy and practice of requiring the payment of purported royalties to respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on golf balls which are sold to members of the respondent "PGA," a percentage of which purported royalties to be passed along to the member purchaser with the knowledge and consent of the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association"; or a policy or practice of requiring that the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" give members of respondent "PGA" a discount or rebate on the purchase prices quoted to the retail trade on golf balls of like grade and quality; or a policy or practice requiring that the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" quote and sell members of respondent "PGA" golf balls of like grade and quality to those offered and sold the nonmember retail dealers at a price less than that at which they are sold to nonmember retail purchasers.

PAR. 3. The respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" have contracted for the payment of, and have made payments of money to the respondent "PGA" to be used by said respondent "PGA" for the purpose of promoting the welfare and interest of their customers who are members of said respondent "PGA" in violation of Section 2d of said Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

The aforesaid payments of money are effected through the payment of purported royalties to the respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on golf balls which are sold to members of the respondent "PGA," and the said payments consist of that percentage of said purported royalties which is not passed along to the respondent member purchasers of golf balls but is retained by the respondent "PGA" and used by it for the benefit and promotion of the welfare of its respondent members. The said payments of money are not available, and are not made to any customers of the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" who are not members of the respondent "PGA."

PAR. 4. The respondent members of the respondent "PGA" have knowingly induced said respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" to discriminate in price as charged in paragraph 2 of count 2 of this complaint, and have knowingly received such discriminations in price on purchases of golf balls made by them, in violation of Section 2f of the said act entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

PAR. 5. The general effect of the policies and practices requiring the systematic discriminations in price for golf balls of like grade and quality between customers in the same class as set forth in paragraphs 2 and 4 hereof has been or may be substantially to lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of golf balls, and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition between and among manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers of golf balls and to deprive the purchasing public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which might be received and enjoyed under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes" (the Federal Trade Commission Act), and pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" (the Clayton Act), as amended by "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914 as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes" (the Robinson-Patman Act), the Federal Trade Commission, on August 18, 1937, issued, and subsequently served, its amended complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents named in the caption hereof, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said Federal Trade Commission Act, and with acts and practices in violation of Subsections 2 (a), 2 (d), and 2 (f) of Section 2 of said Clayton Act as amended.

After the issuance and service of said amended complaint, respondents filed their answers thereto, making general denial of the substantial allegations of the complaint. Subsequently all the respondents petitioned the Federal Trade Commission for permission to withdraw said answers and to file in lieu thereof substitute answers to the complaint, in which substitute answers respondents admitted, for the purposes of this proceeding only, all the material allegations of said complaint except the facts alleged in paragraph 7, Subsections 1 and 2, and paragraph 8, Subsection 3, of count 1, and the same allegations as adopted and made a part of paragraph 1 of count 2 of the amended complaint—all of which allegations were severally denied. Pursuant to permission granted by the Commission, said original answers were withdrawn by said respondents and said substitute answers were filed in lieu thereof. Said respondents also consented therein that the Commission might proceed to make its findings of fact without further proceedings and that an order might issue and be served upon the respondents requiring them to cease and desist from the unfair methods of competition alleged in the complaint. The said Commission having duly considered the above and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

For convenience the above-named respondents will hereinafter be referred to as members of the "Manufacturers' Association."

PAR. 3. The respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" cause their golf balls when sold to be transported to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States. They are in competition among themselves, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by their practices and methods hereinafter particularly described and set forth. There are other manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls, who sell and distribute their said products in the various States of the United States, and who, in the ordinary course of their business, seek the same customers that are sought by the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association." These nonmember manufacturers and wholesalers also cause their golf balls to be shipped and transported from the various points of manufacture and sale in certain States through and into other States of the United States. They are also in competition among themselves and with respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition forestalled as a result of the use of the practices and methods by the parties respondent hereinafter described. The respondent "Manufacturers' Association" and its officers are not engaged in commerce, but are engaged in unfair methods, hereafter described, which directly affect competition among respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" and nonmember manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls, and also directly affect the competition in the sale of golf balls, between and among retail dealers located in the various States of the United States engaged in the retail sale of said products.

PAR. 4. The respondent, Professional Golfers' Association of America, hereinafter for convenience referred to as "PGA," is an unincorporated trade association, with an office at 14 East Jackson Boulevard, in the city of Chicago, Ill. The officers of said respondent "PGA" are respondents George R. Jacobus, president; Jack B. Mackie, treasurer; and Tom Walsh, secretary. Its membership consists of approximately 1,500 of an estimated total of 2,500 professional golfers who are engaged in the retail sale of golf balls and golf equipment throughout the country. Among the members of said respondent "PGA" are respondents C. M. Irwin, Tom Kerrigan, Joe Bradley, Jim Dante, Jack Fox, Jack Hagen, John Inglis, R. C. MacDonald, Alex Main, and Jack Forrester, all individuals, engaged in the retail sale of golf balls and golf equipment. The above-named members of said respondent "PGA" do not constitute the entire membership thereof but are representative members thereof. All members of respondent "PGA" were made respondents herein, as a class, of which those specifically named are representative of the whole. Said respondent members are hereinafter for convenience collectively referred to as respondent members of "PGA."

The respondent members of "PGA" are in competition with one another in the retail sale of golf balls to consumers in the various localities in which they respectively operate, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by the practices and methods of the parties respondent hereinafter specifically described and set forth. There are numerous other retailers of golf balls who are nonmembers of respondent "PGA" who are engaged in the sale of such products to consumers in the various localities and trade areas in the United States in competition with one another and with one or more of respondent members of "PGA," except insofar as such competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by the use of the practices and methods of the parties respondent hereinafter described. All or nearly all of respondent members of "PGA" and their competitors above mentioned are engaged in purchasing golf balls from manufacturers or wholesalers thereof which are transported from one State to and through other States to them as a result of such purchases and in reselling the same to customers located in the various trade areas in which they respectively operate. All of said respondent members of "PGA" are engaged in unfair methods, as hereinafter set forth, which directly and substantially affect competition among themselves, and between themselves and other retail dealers, and among the manufacturers and wholesalers of said products.

PAR. 5. The respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" own and control practically all of the factories engaged in the production of golf balls in the United States and produce most of the golf balls sold and distributed in this country. The respondent members of "PGA" constitute a group of retailers of golf balls so large and influential in the trade as to be able by themselves and in cooperation with respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" to control and influence the flow of trade and channels of distribution in golf balls throughout the country, as well as the prices at which, and the terms and conditions under which non-member retailers of golf balls buy and resell such products.

PAR. 6. The parties respondent named herein have within the past several years agreed, combined, and united in and pursued a common and concerted course of action and undertaking, among themselves and with others, to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce, fix, and maintain throughout the United States, certain monopolistic prices, policies, sales methods, and trade practices, hereinafter described, which the said parties respondent have agreed to and pursued to the substantial or potential injury of some of such manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers and of ultimate purchasers and consumers of golf balls.

PAR. 7. The said monopolistic prices, sales methods, policies, and trade practices referred to in the preceding paragraph and which were so adopted, fixed, and put into effect are as follows:

1. A policy and practice of coercing, in connection with the sale of golf balls to respondent members of "PGA," manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls to enter into contracts with the respondent "PGA" providing for the payment of monies to the respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on the golf balls so sold.

2. A policy and practice of causing, permitting and allowing the respondent "PGA" to remit and pass along to its members a designated percentage of the monies paid by manufacturers and wholesalers to respondent "PGA" under the aforesaid contracts.

3. A policy and practice of causing, permitting, and allowing the respondent "PGA" to use the funds derived from the payment of monies under the aforesaid contracts for the purpose of promoting and creating a preference on the part of the purchasing public for golf balls having the letters "PGA" imprinted thereon to golf balls of equal quality and value offered for sale and sold by retail competitors of the respondent members of "PGA."

4. The policy and practice of requiring that all manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who manufacture and sell balls under the aforesaid contracts observe the provisions of said contracts with respect to the maintenance of uniform prices as between members of the respondent "PGA" and other retail dealer purchasers who are nonmembers of respondent "PGA" in the sale of their golf balls of equal grade and quality.

5. A policy or practice of granting, giving, or allowing members of the respondent "PGA" a discount on purchases of golf balls commensurate with the designated percentage of the aforesaid payments to be received by them in lieu of said designated percentage.

6. A policy and practice of requiring that all manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who sell their products to members of respondent "PGA" refrain and abstain from giving, allowing, or granting in any way or manner any rebate, discount, royalty, or refund in any manner or form to retail purchasers who are not members of respondent "PGA."

7. A policy and practice of persuading, coercing, and compelling retail dealers in golf balls who are not members of respondent "PGA" to refrain, abstain, and desist from selling golf balls at a price less than that designated by the parties respondent herein.

8. Generally, a policy and practice designed to and tending to monopolize the sale and distribution of golf balls in the parties respondent herein.

PAR. 8. For the purpose of making such sales practices, policies, and pricing methods effective, and of requiring compliance therewith and observance thereof by all manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers in golf balls throughout the United States, the parties respondent herein, acting through their officers, directors, committees, and individually, in furtherance of and in pursuance of the general plan, undertaking, and policy, have collectively as groups or individually done the following things:

1. Formulated, adopted, followed, carried out, enforced, imposed, and made effective the policies, practices, and methods described in the preceding paragraph.

2. Held official and unofficial meetings of said respondent associations and their members at which the policies and practices hereinabove described were discussed, adopted, and agreed to, and issued bulletins, circulars, letters, price lists, and other printed matter, and distributed the same among the members of said respondent associations and others, announcing the adoption of the policies, practices, and requirements referred to and the imposition of the same upon all affected thereby.

3. Caused manufacturers and wholesalers of golf balls who sell their products to members of respondent "PGA" to enter into contracts with respondent "PGA" providing for the payment of money to respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on their golf balls.

4. Caused, permitted, and allowed the respondent "PGA" to remit and pass along to its members a designated percentage of the monies paid by the manufacturers and wholesalers to the respondent "PGA" under the aforesaid contracts.

5. Caused, permitted, and allowed the respondent "PGA" to use the funds derived from the payment of monies under the aforesaid contracts for the purpose of promoting the interests and welfare of its members to the disadvantage of retail dealers in golf balls who are not members of said respondent "PGA."

6. Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" have observed the provisions of the aforesaid contracts with respect to the maintenance of uniform prices as between members of the "PGA" and others than members of the "PGA" in the sale of golf balls of equal grade and quality to those sold to members of the "PGA" under the provisions of said contracts.

7. Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" have given and allowed members of respondent "PGA" a discount on purchases of golf balls commensurate with the designated percentage of the aforesaid payments of money to be received by them in lieu of said percentage thereof.

8. Respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" refuse and refrain from giving, allowing, or granting in any way or manner any rebate, discount, royalty, or refund in any manner or form to retail dealer purchasers who are not members of respondent "PGA."

9. The parties respondent herein have persuaded, coerced, and compelled retail dealers in golf balls who are not members of the respondent "PGA" to refrain, abstain, and desist from selling golf balls at a price less than that designated by them.

10. Respondents generally have sought and have obtained promises and assurances of cooperation from one another in establishing and making effective the sales practices, policies, and pricing methods hereinabove described.

11. The parties respondent generally have exchanged information with reference to their respective businesses and activities to be used in furtherance of the policies and methods referred to.

12. The parties respondent generally have supervised and investigated the practices and policies of retail dealers in golf balls, and have acted concertedly to maintain certain resale prices agreed upon; to control resale markets and to coercively require recalcitrant manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail dealers to conform to such practices and methods.

PAR. 9. The capacity, tendency, and effect of said plan, agreement, undertaking, policies, and methods, and the said acts and practices of said respondents in pursuance thereof, are and have been:

1. To monopolize in the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" the business of manufacturing and of selling golf balls to retail dealers in the United States.

2. To monopolize in the respondent members of "PGA" the retail sale of golf balls to consumers in the United States.

3. To fix and maintain the prices at and conditions under which golf balls are sold by manufacturers and wholesalers thereof.

4. To fix and maintain the prices at and conditions under which golf balls are sold by retail dealers to consumers.

5. To bring about an unlawful discrimination in the prices at which golf balls of the same grade and quality are sold by manufacturers and wholesalers to retail dealers therein.

6. To unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in the golf ball trade and industry and to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

Findings

7. To substantially increase the cost to retail dealer purchasers of golf balls.

8. To suppress, eliminate, and discriminate against small business enterprises which are or have been engaged or desire to engage in manufacturing, selling, or distributing golf balls.

9. To obstruct and prevent the establishment of new distributors of golf balls.

10. To suppress and eliminate all price competition among manufacturers and wholesalers in the sale of golf balls and among retail dealers engaged in the resale thereof.

11. To hamper and interfere with the natural flow of trade in commerce of golf balls to and through the various States of the United States; and to injure the competitors of individual respondents by unfairly diverting business and trade from them, depriving them thereof and otherwise driving or freezing them out of business.

12. To prejudice and injure manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers and others who do not conform to respondents' program or methods or who do not desire to conform to them, but are compelled to do so by the concerted action of respondents herein alleged.

PAR. 10. The above alleged acts and things done by the parties respondent have a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the golf ball trade throughout the United States, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PAR. 11. The parties respondent herein named have brought about and made effective a policy and system whereby respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" discriminate and have discriminated in price between different purchasers of golf balls of like grade and quality, in violation of Section 2a of the Clayton Act as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

The aforesaid discriminations in price between different purchasers of golf balls of like grade and quality were effected through the concerted action of the parties respondent herein through the formulation, adoption, and administration of a policy and practice of requiring the payment of monies to respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on golf balls which are sold to members of the respondent "PGA," a percentage of which monies to be passed along to the member purchaser with the knowledge and consent of the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association"; or a policy or practice of requiring that the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" give members of respondent "PGA" a discount or rebate on the purchase prices quoted to the retail trade on golf balls of like grade and quality; or a policy or practice requiring that the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" quote and sell members of respondent "PGA" golf balls of like grade and quality to those offered and sold the non-member retail dealers at a price less than that at which they are sold to nonmember retail purchasers.

PAR. 12. The respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" have contracted for the payment of, and have made payments of money to the respondent "PGA" to be used by said respondent "PGA" for the purpose of promoting the welfare and interest of their customers who are members of said respondent "PGA" in violation of Section 2 (d) of the Clayton Act as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

The aforesaid payments of money were effected through the payment of monies to the respondent "PGA" for the privilege of causing the letters "PGA" to be imprinted on golf balls which are sold to members of the respondent "PGA," and the said payments consist of that percentage of said monies which is not passed along to the respondent member purchasers of golf balls but is retained by the respondent "PGA" and used by it for the benefit, and promotion of the welfare of its respondent members. The said payments of money are not available, and are not made to any customers of the respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" who are not members of the respondent "PGA."

PAR. 13. The respondent members of the respondent "PGA" have knowingly induced said respondent members of the "Manufacturers' Association" to discriminate in price as aforesaid, and have knowingly received such discriminations in price on purchases of golf balls made by them, in violation of Section 2 (f) of the Clayton Act as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

PAR. 14. The general effect of the policies and practices requiring the systematic discriminations in price for golf balls of like grade and quality between customers in the same class as set forth in paragraphs 11 and 13 hereof has been or may be substantially to lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of golf balls, and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition between and among manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers of golf balls and to deprive the purchasing public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which might be received and enjoyed under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents have a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the golf ball trade throughout the United States, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914; and the acts and practices, set forth in paragraphs 11 to 14 inclusive, of the said respondents are in violation of Sections 2 (a), 2 (d) and 2 (f) of the Clayton Act as amended by an act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes."

UNITED WOOLEN MILLS

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3312. Complaint, Jan. 25, 1938—Decision, Mar. 2, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in sale of men's suits and clothing, to purchasers in other States, in competition with others likewise engaged in sale and distribution of such products in commerce as aforesaid, and including many who distribute and sell such suits and clothing, not manufactured by them, and who do not in any way represent themselves as manufacturers thereof—
Adopted and used corporate and trade name including word "Mills," and represented, through such statements as "UNITED WOOLEN MILLS Tailors-to-Men", etc., displayed on letterheads, billheads, cards, invoices, labels, and newspaper advertising matter of interstate distribution, that it was the manufacturer of the garments sold in commerce by it, notwithstanding fact it did not manufacture said garments, as understood by trade and purchasing public generally, nor own and operate, or directly and absolutely control, any mill or mills making same;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that such representation was true, and that it actually was the manufacturer of the garments sold by it, and with result, as direct consequence of mistaken and erroneous beliefs thus induced, that number of consuming public purchased substantial volume of its said suits and clothing as and from clothing manufacturer, for direct dealing with whom a substantial portion of wholesale and retail purchasers of such products has preference, as securing closer prices, superior quality, and other advantages not had through selling agency or middleman or anyone else, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors likewise engaged in sale and distribution of men's suits and clothing and who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Karl Stecher for the Commission.

Mr. A. Leo Oberdorfer, of Birmingham, Ala., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that United Woolen Mills, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said Act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

In the course and conduct of its business said respondent is, and has been, in competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of men's suits and clothing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, said respondent adopted as and for its corporate and trade name, the words "United Woolen Mills," under which to carry on its business, and which corporate and trade name it has used continuously for several years last past, and is now using, in soliciting the sale of and selling its said men's garments in commerce among and between the various States of the United States. Docket 2849. Complaint, June 20, 1936—Decision, Mar. 5, 1938

Where word "Distilleries," when used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, had had and still had a definite significance and meaning to minds of wholesalers and retailers and to ultimate purchasing public as designating places where such liquors are made by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, and substantial portion of purchasing public preferred to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distilleries; and thereafter a corporation engaged as importer, wholesaler, and retailer of whiskies and other alcoholic beverages, in substantial competition with others similarly engaged—

W. 1, England," and thereby represented to customers, and supplied to them means of representing to their retailer-vendees and to ultimate consuming public, that whisky thus contained was made in Scotland by aforesaid "Distilleries";

Notwithstanding fact said concern neither owned, operated, nor controlled any place or places where alcoholic liquors are produced by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and did not produce any whisky which went into bottles thus labeled, and whisky in question was made for it under agreement with English distillers, and there were no such distilleries at said Glasgow address; and

Notwithstanding fact said liquor was not a distinctive product of Scotland, nor there made nor bottled, and was neither "Scotch Whisky" in fact nor in accordance with standards of identity for distilled spirits established by Federal Alcohol Administration;

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Prendergast-Davies Company, Ltd., a corporation hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 601 West 26th Street, in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, engaged in the business of an importer, wholesaler, and retailer of whiskies and other alcoholic beverages, purchasing, importing, and selling the same at both wholesale and retail in constant course of trade and commerce between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes the aforesaid alcoholic beverages when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid, into and through the various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid, respondent is now and has been, for more than 1 year last past, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms, engaged in the purchase, importation, and sale at wholesale and retail of whiskies and other alcoholic beverages in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "Distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the places where such liquors are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distilleries. Further, "Scotch Whiskey" for a long time has had and still has, a definite significance to the minds of wholesalers, retailers, and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: a distinctive product of Scotland, manufactured in Scotland, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy Scotch whiskey manufactured in Scotland.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has heretofore sold and is now selling, a whiskey in bottles with labels attached thereto containing the following representations, to wit:

Sandy MacNab's
Old Liqueur Scotch
Whiskey

A blend of the finest aged Scotch Whiskey
Produce of Scotland—Bottled in Scotland

MacNab Distilleries Limited

266 Clyde St.,
Glasgow, Scotland
Head Office

11 Waterloo Place,
London S. W. 1,
England

By the use of the aforesaid designation "Scotch Whiskey" on said labels, together with the phrases "MacNab Distilleries, Ltd.," "Bottled in Scotland" and the address "266 Clyde Street, Glasgow, Scotland" on the aforesaid labels in which it sells and ships the aforesaid whiskey, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskey in said bottles contained is a true Scotch whiskey, a distinctive product of Scotland and manufactured in Scotland by the MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., when as a matter of fact the MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., is an English company with its principal office in the city of London, England, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic liquors are produced by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash and does not produce or manufacture any whiskey or whiskies which go into the bottles so labeled as aforesaid; the so-called "Sandy MacNab Scotch Whiskey" is produced by W. H. Holt and Sons, Ltd., distillers of Chorlton-Cum-Hardy, England, under an agreement with the aforesaid MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., of London, England, and said whiskey is not a distinctive product of Scotland and is neither manufactured nor bottled in Scotland, and is neither "Scotch Whiskey" in fact, nor in accordance with the standards of identity for distilled spirits established by Article II of Regulation No. 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration, effective May 1, 1936, duly enacted and promulgated pursuant to the authority of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, 49 Stat. 977, approved August 29, 1935. There are no MacNab Distilleries at 266 Clyde Street, Glasgow, Scotland.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of Scotch Whiskey, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals, who sell at wholesale and retail as Scotch whiskey, whiskey which is manufactured and bottled in Scotland and is a distinctive product of that country and which whiskey is truthfully labeled as the product of actual distilleries located in Scotland. There are also among the competitors of respondent as aforesaid, corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships, who sell "blended Scotch Type Whiskey," a mixture or blend made outside of Great Britain and who do not falsely represent its place of distillation on the labels attached to the bottles in which such liquor is sold and shipped.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof for each of them have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that the "Scotch Whiskey" by it sold is the product of an actual distillery located in Scotland, and that it is a distinctive product of Scotland, manufactured there, and is otherwise genuine Scotch whiskey, imported from Scotland and have the capacity and tendency and do induce dealers and the purchasing public acting in such beliefs to purchase the Sandy MacNab "Scotch Whiskey" sold by respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not so misrepresent the Scotch whiskies and blended Scotch type whiskies by them sold and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on June 20, 1936 issued, and later served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Prendergast-Davies Company, Ltd., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

PARAGRAPHS 1. This respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes the aforesaid alcoholic beverages when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid, into and through the various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid, respondent is now and has been, for more than 1 year last past, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms, engaged in the purchase, importation, and sale at wholesale and retail of whiskies and other alcoholic beverages in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "Distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the places where such liquors are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distilleries. Further, "Scotch Whiskey" for a long time has had and still has, a definite significance to the minds of wholesalers, retailers and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: a distinctive product of Scotland, manufactured in Scotland, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy Scotch whiskey manufactured in Scotland.

Pursuant to the authority conferred upon him by the act of August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977) the Federal Alcohol Administrator promulgated regulations No. 5, article II of which became effective as of May 1, 1936. Said article II establishes certain official standards of identity for distilled spirits, including Scotch whiskey. The standard of identity thus established is as follows:

"Scotch whiskey" is a distinctive product of Scotland, manufactured in Scotland in compliance with the laws of Great Britain regulating the manufacture of Scotch whiskey for consumption in Great Britain, and containing no distilled spirits less than three years old: Provided, That if in fact such product as so manufactured is a mixture of distilled spirits, such mixture is "Blended Scotch whiskey" (Scotch whiskey—a blend). "Scotch whiskey" shall not be designated as "straight."

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has heretofore sold and is now selling, a whiskey in bottles with labels attached thereto containing the following representations, to wit:

Sandy MacNab's
Old Liqueur Scotch Whiskey

Findings

A blend of the finest aged Scotch Whiskey
Produce of Scotland—Bottled in Scotland
MacNab Distilleries Limited

266 Clyde St.,
Glasgow, Scotland

Head Office

London, S. W. 1,
England

By the use of the aforesaid designation "Scotch Whiskey" on said labels, together with the phrases "MacNab Distilleries, Ltd.," "Bottled in Scotland" and the address "266 Clyde Street, Glasgow, Scotland" on the aforesaid labels in which it sells and ships the aforesaid whiskey, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskey in said bottles contained is a true Scotch whiskey, a distinctive product of Scotland and manufactured in Scotland by the MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., when as a matter of fact the MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., is an English company with its principal office in the city of London, England, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic liquors are produced by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash and does not produce or manufacture any whiskey or whiskies which go into the bottles so labeled as aforesaid; the so-called "Sandy MacNab Scotch Whiskey" is produced by W. H. Holt and Sons, Ltd., distillers of Chorlton-Cum-Hardy, England, under an agreement with the aforesaid MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., of London, England, and said whiskey is not a distinctive product of Scotland and is neither manufactured nor bottled in Scotland, and is neither "Scotch Whiskey" in fact, nor in accordance with the standards of identity for distilled spirits established by article II of regulations No. 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration, effective May 1, 1936, duly enacted and promulgated pursuant to the authority of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, 49 Stat. 977, approved August 29, 1935. There are no MacNab Distilleries at 266 Clyde Street, Glasgow, Scotland. At the time of the issuance of the complaint and for a long period of time thereafter, the company known as "MacNab Distilleries, Ltd.," did not own, operate, or control any distilleries whatever. All sale of "Sandy MacNab Scotch Whiskey" by respondent was discontinued in February 1937.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of Scotch whiskey, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals, who sell at wholesale and retail as Scotch Whiskey, whiskey which is manufactured and bottled in Scotland and is a distinctive product of that country and which whiskey is truthfully labeled as the product of actual distilleries located in Scotland. There are also among the competitors of respondent as aforesaid, corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships, who sell "blended Scotch Type Whiskey," a mixture or blend made outside of Great Britain and who do not falsely represent its place of distillation on the labels attached to the bottles in which such liquor is sold and shipped.

Order

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, and each of them have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that the "Scotch Whiskey" by it sold is the product of an actual distillery located in Scotland, and that it is a distinctive product of Scotland, manufactured there, and is otherwise genuine Scotch whiskey, imported from Scotland, and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public acting in such beliefs to purchase the Sandy MacNab "Scotch Whiskey" sold by respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not so misrepresent the Scotch whiskeys and blended Scotch type whiskeys by them sold, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Prendergast-Davies Company, Ltd., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on the 28th day of February 1938 by respondent, admitting all the material allegations of fact contained in the complaint to be true, waiving hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint, and stating that without further evidence or other intervening procedure the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom, and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Prendergast-Davies Company, Ltd., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of "Sandy MacNab" brand whiskey in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the word "Distilleries" in the trade or corporate name of the bottler of said "Sandy McNab" whiskey as shown on all stationery, advertising or labels attached to the bottles in which said "Sandy McNab" whiskey is sold and shipped, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that said bottler is a distiller of the said "Sandy McNab" whiskey; or (b) that the said "Sandy McNab" whiskey is by said bottler manufactured through a process of distillation; or (c) that said bottler owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such "Sandy MacNab" whiskey is by said bottler manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until such bottler shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

2. Representing that a product imported into this country and resold by said respondent, which product as of June 1936, was designated and labeled "Sandy MacNab Old Liqueur Scotch Whiskey" is either a blend of the finest aged Scotch whiskey or that it is a product of Scotland, or that there are in existence any distilleries known as "MacNab Distilleries," unless and until the corporation known as MacNab Distilleries, Ltd., shall actually own, operate, or control a place where, in a continuous process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, spirits shall be by it produced by distillation and said spirits shall be distinctive products of Scotch manufacture in Scotland, in compliance with the laws of Great Britain regulating the manufacture of Scotch whiskey for consumption in Great Britain and containing no distilled spirits less than 3 years old; provided that if in fact such products by said distilleries so manufactured are mixtures of distilled spirits, such mixture may be called "Blended Scotch Whiskey" or "Scotch Whiskey—a Blend."

26 F. T. C.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF

TOSTO FOODS, INC., AND WILLIAM C. MITHOEFER

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3290. Complaint, Jan. 3, 1933—Decision, Mar. 5, 1938

Where a corporation and an individual, vice president, secretary, and treasurer thereof, engaged in sale and distribution of salted peanuts to wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, in competition with others similarly engaged in sale and distribution of salted nuts, confections, and candy—

Sold its so-called "Strange As It Seems" nuts, packed in individual, small, sealed, 5-cent cartons, within a few of which there were concealed, in accordance with notice on individual cartons thereof advising ultimate purchaser "You may find 5 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1," some such sum, as determined through selection and breaking of carton, and thereby supplied to and placed in hands of others means of conducting lotteries in sale of their said product as displayed and sold by retail purchasers thereof, in accordance with such plan or game of chance and in violation of public policy of the common law and criminal statutes and contrary to that of the United States Government;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of such products were attracted by element of chance involved in sale thereof, and thereby induced to buy same, thus packed and sold, in preference to nuts or candy of competitors who are not willing to and do not offer and sell their products so packed, assembled or otherwise arranged as to involve game of chance and refrain therefrom, and with tendency and capacity thereby to divert to themselves trade and custom from competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and to exclude from said trade all aforesaid unwilling competitors and lessen competition therein and create a monopoly of said trade in themselves and in such other distributors as use same or an equivalent method, and to deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in said trade and eliminate or exclude therefrom, as case may be, all actual or potential competitors who do not adopt and use such methods:

Held, That such method, act, and practices were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the Tosto Foods, Inc., a corporation, and William C. Mithoefer, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Tosto Foods, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal place of business at 307 East Twelfth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Respondent William C. Mithoefer is its vice president, secretary, and treasurer and has his business office at the same address as that of the corporate respondent. Respondents act together and in cooperation with each other in doing the acts and things hereinafter alleged. Respondents are now, and for more than 1 year last past have been, engaged in the sale and distribution of salted peanuts to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers. Said respondents cause and have caused their said products, when sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, to purchasers thereof in the State of Ohio and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such salted peanuts between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondents are in competition with other corporations and individuals and with partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, and candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to wholesale and retail dealers salted peanuts so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Said salted peanuts are packed in individual, small, sealed cartons which retail to the ultimate consumer at 5 cents per carton. Said salted peanuts are designated by respondents as "Strange as It Seems." Sealed within a small number of individual cartons are 5 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1, but the ultimate purchasers cannot ascertain which cartons contain one of the above-named sums until a selection has been made and the individual carton broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said individual cartons of salted peanuts who procure one of the said sums of money thus procure the same wholly by lot or chance. The individual cartons of said salted peanuts have lithographed or printed thereon the following language: "You may find 5 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1."

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondents sell the said salted peanuts resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondents sell direct expose said salted peanuts for sale and sell same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has a capacity and tendency to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' said products in preference to salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections or candy offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said salted peanuts to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a sum of money. The use by respondents of said method in the sale of salted peanuts, and the sale of salted peanuts by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the salted nut and peanut confection or candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections or candy in competition with the respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said products so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections and candy are attracted by respondents' said method and manner of packing said salted peanuts, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said salted peanuts so packed and sold by respondents in preference to salted peanuts or candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondents has the tendency and capacity because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondents and in such other distributors as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 3, 1938, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, Tosto Foods, Inc., and William C. Mithoefer, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondents' request for permission to withdraw said answer and substitute therefor a substitute answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission, on the said complaint and the substitute answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Tosto Foods, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal place of business located at 307 East Twelfth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Respondent William C. Mithoefer is its vice president, secretary, and treasurer and has his business office at the same address as that of the corporate respondent. Respondents act together and in cooperation with each other in doing the acts and things hereinafter found. Respondents are now, and for more than 1 year last past have been, engaged in the sale and distribution of salted peanuts to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers. Said respondents cause and have caused their said products, when sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, to purchasers thereof in the State of Ohio and in various States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such salted peanuts between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondents are in competition with other corporations and individuals and with partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, and candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to wholesale and retail dealers salted peanuts so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Said salted peanuts are packed in individual, small, sealed cartons which retail to the ultimate consumer at 5 cents per carton. Said salted peanuts are designated by respondents as "Strange As It Seems." Sealed within a small number of individual cartons are 5 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1, but the ultimate purchasers cannot ascertain which cartons contain one of the above named sums until a selection has been made and the individual carton broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said individual cartons of salted peanuts who procure one of the said sums of money thus procure the same wholly by lot or chance. The individual cartons of said salted peanuts have lithographed or printed thereon the following language: "You may find 5 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1."

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondents sell the said salted peanuts resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondents sell direct expose said salted peanuts for sale and sell same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has a capacity and tendency to induce purchases thereof to purchase respondents' said products in preference to salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, or candy offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said salted peanuts to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a sum of money. The use by respondents of said method in the sale of salted peanuts, and the sale of salted peanuts by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the salted nut and peanut confection or candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections or candy in competition with the respondents, as above described, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said products so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections and candy are attracted by respondents' said method and manner of packing said salted peanuts, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said salted peanuts so packed and sold by respondents in preference to salted peanuts or candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondents has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said salted peanut and candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said salted peanut and candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said salted peanut and candy trade in respondents and in such other distributors of salted peanuts and candy as used the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said salted peanut and candy trade. The use of said method by respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said salted peanut and candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, as hereinabove found. Said method, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer of the respondents admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Tosto Foods, Inc., a corporation, its officers, and William C. Mithoefer, individually, and as an officer of Tosto Foods, Inc., and their respective representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of salted nuts or confections in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing salted nuts or confections so packed and assembled that sales of such salted nuts or confections to the general public are to be made or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;
2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers assortments of salted nuts or confections which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the salted nuts or confections contained in said assortments to the public;

3. Selling or distributing individual packages of salted nuts or confections containing coins or other United States money, which said individual packages of salted nuts or confections are packed and assembled in assortments with other individual packages of salted nuts or confections of similar size, shape, and appearance not containing coins or other United States money, for resale to the public by retail dealers.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

CARL E. KOCH AND EUGENE F. HEFLEBOWER, TRADING AS CO-OPERATIVE BUYERS' SERVICE AND AMERICAN BEAUTY PRODUCTS COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2529. Complaint, Nov. 17, 1936¹—Decision, Mar. 7, 1938

Where two partners and a corporation, which they served as president and vice president, respectively, and stock of which they owned, with same principal place of business and representing a common enterprise, engaged in sale and distribution of beauty and barber shop supply products consisting of a large number of different items, such as permanent-waving machines, scissors, brushes, lotions and oils, and other related products, through catalogs, correspondence, bulletins, and monthly trade literature, and with branch offices in seven American cities—

(a) Represented business conducted by them as that of a cooperative, through selecting and using trade name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service" for business conducted by the two partners, and represented to customers and prospective customers, through long stories and articles in their said trade literature and in other ways, that business done under aforesaid trade name was that of a cooperative and that prices at which said products were offered were cost prices, and that only profit which enured to their benefit for purchase of their said products, at prices listed, was service charge paid on order;

Facts being business was not in any sense a cooperative, prices included a profit to them over and above such charge, and there was no difference in the method and manner of conduct of business done under said trade name and that done by said corporation, conducted from same office, by same personnel, and with same overhead expense, and trade literature of both listed same products at same price quotations, and orders to either were filled from same stock, in same manner, and at identical prices, excepting addition of service charge in case of so-called "cooperative";

(b) Falsely represented in their trade literature that they had branch offices in San Francisco and Paris; and

(c) Adopted and pursued plan and practice of advertising and offering for sale in their trade literature nationally known patented and trade-marked products of manufacturers who refused to sell same to them, at prices substantially below said products' prevailing market prices, and filled many orders therefor with products of inferior quality and grade to those called for;

Notwithstanding fact they did not keep in stock and were unable to purchase in natural channels of trade sufficient quantities of such nationally known products to fill, supply, and service a normal and anticipated number of orders therefor at prices advertised, and in many instances did not have any of such products in stock and were unable to obtain any substantial quantities thereof; and with no expectation of filling all or any substantial portion of orders therefor, but with intent and effect of creating confusion and dissatisfaction in trade, to the injury of good will which had attached to products offered and sold by competitors, and to create impression and belief on part of customers that they were able to fill and service a normal number of orders therefor; and

Where such trade names as "Mar-O-Oil," "Vita Tonic," "Oil of Pine," "Oil-O-Castor," "Realistic," and "Revivatone" had long been used in connection with sale and distribution of competing products, and same had become well and favorably known and were closely associated in minds of the purchasing public with said brand names, and there was a substantial preference on part of portion of consuming public for said trade-marked, patented, and nationally known products over any other competing goods; and thereafter aforesaid partners and corporations, engaged as above set forth—

- (d) Selected and adopted such brand names for products offered by them as "Marlow," "Vita Tone," "Oil-O-Pine," "Oil of Castor," "Realistic," and "Revitasheen," in furtherance of plan and practice adopted, used and pursued, of simulating nationally known and advertised products of competitors, and of selecting and adopting brand names for their products similar in letters, sound, and appearance to those under which nationally known and advertised competing products had long been offered, as aforesaid;
- (e) Selected and used cartons, packages, bottles, designs, labels, slogans, and verbiage in connection with promotion and sale of their own products similar to and imitative of those long used in connection with manufacture, sale, and distribution of nationally known and advertised articles;
- (f) Selected and used such language as "A substitute for" and "Similar to" in loose and disconnected association with brand names under which nationally known and advertised competing goods were distributed and sold, and adopted and used such statements as "Modern science is able to reproduce any product," "The days of secret formulas are gone forever," "The products listed will give the same results as the most expensive advertised items," and many others to same effect and import;

Notwithstanding fact that products offered, listed, and advertised as aforesaid were not substitutes for the designated nationally known and advertised brands, and were not similar thereto in quality or composition and would not produce the same results;

- With effect of enabling them to pass off their own products as and for those nationally advertised, patented, and trade-marked goods sold by their competitors, and with result of confusion and deception of purchasers respecting identity of their said goods;
- (g) Falsely represented in their trade literature that said corporation was manufacturer and importer, facts being it did not manufacture or import any substantial portion of goods offered and sold;
- (h) Falsely represented that certain merchandise would be given free to purchasers who bought a certain quantity of their products, facts being total cost of both items and profit thereon were included in resale prices of articles sold at purported bargain prices;
- (i) Falsely represented that their products had regular retail prices and were customarily sold for sums greatly in excess of those charged, and that offers made of certain products were limited offers or based on purchase of limited quantities;

Complaint

- (j) Represented that products offered and sold were of exactly same nature, quality, and substance as those made, distributed, and sold by competitors under well and favorably known trade names and brands which enjoyed substantial demand among purchasers thereof, facts being they were not comparable thereto, nor of same nature, quality, and substance, but were other and different articles, inferior in grade and quality; and
- (k) With intent and effect of unfairly disparaging competitors, made many and varied unfounded or unwarranted representations and statements to effect that competitors did not deal with customers on a fair and honest basis but defrauded and cheated same and took unfair advantage of them, used "gyp" equipment and effected fake trade-ins, and were racketeers, and that businesses thereof were rackets;

With effect of deceiving, confusing, and misleading purchasers into buying products which they did not intend to buy and of unfairly diverting to them trade of competitors engaged in selling products of the same kind and nature as their own or other products designed for similar usage, and truthfully advertised, represented, and described, and with capacity and tendency so to deceive, confuse, mislead, and divert; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. W. W. Sheppard, trial examiner.

Mr. John Darsey, for the Commission.

Mr. Clinton O. Thompson, of Chicago, Ill., for respondents.

AMENDED COMPLAINT¹

Whereas, The Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit, on the 26th day of August 1935, issue its complaint herein charging that respondents herein have been, and are, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas, This Commission has reason to believe that respondents herein have been, and are, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint as aforesaid, and it appearing to the Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest;

Now, therefore, Acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Congress aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, trading as Co-operative Buyers' Service and American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, have been, and are now, using unfair methods of competition in commerce and hereby issues its amended complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, are residents of Chicago, Ill., and are partners trading under the name and style of Co-operative Buyers' Service, with the principal place of business of said partnership located in the city of Chicago in the State of Illinois. They are now, and for more than 1 year last past have been, engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce, between and among various States of the United States, of beauty shop supplies.

American Beauty Products Company is a corporation organized, chartered, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal place of business located in the city of Chicago in the State of Illinois. It is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce, between and among the various States of the United States, of beauty shop supplies.

PAR. 2. Said Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, as individuals and as partners, trading and doing business as Co-operative Buyers' Service and American Beauty Products Company, in the course of their said business were, at all times hereinbefore referred to, and now are, in competition with other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals likewise engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of similar products.

PAR. 3. The Federal Trade Commission is advised, believes to be true, and consequently charges that the said respondents, Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, own and control the entire capital stock of respondent, American Beauty Products Company, or else own a majority of such stock and are in full and complete control of the business operated and conducted by said respondent, American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, and dictate and direct its business policy.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, said respondents in soliciting the sale of and selling their products in interstate commerce, respectively used and employed, and still do use and employ the following methods and practices, to wit:

(a) Said Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, trading under the name and style, "Co-operative Buyers' Service," use and employ the following methods and practices:

1. They adopted as and for a trade name and partnership name under which to carry on their said business the words "Co-operative Buyers' Service," and use such name in advertisements and advertising matter circulating through interstate commerce, which advertisements and advertising matter contain such statements and representations as:

Your International Purchasing Agent.

The prices in this Value Index are at cost. Our service charge of $1.00 on orders over $3.00 and 50¢ on smaller orders is our only profit. Many beauty supply jobbers make a 50% gross profit on sales. You share profits. In July and January of each year a part of our service charges are rebated to our regular clients, according to our profit participation plan. Co-operation of this sort puts money into your cash register. Co-operation makes these low prices possible. Here you buy at cost plus a small service charge.

HERE'S WHAT WE MEAN BY CO-OPERATION. The relationship between Co-operative Buyers' Service and beauty shop owners is strictly a matter of co-operation. This becomes clear to you when you give a moment's consideration to the basic difference between our practice and that of the jobber operating on the conventional basis of merchandising. The jobber must look to "price mark up" to produce his profits, while a small service charge added to any order sent to us entitles you to our service as your purchasing agent in the markets of the world. Marking up the price of each individual item we sell has no place in our merchandising plan.

When in truth and in fact, said Co-operative Buyers' Service was not and is not operated cooperatively by said Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower; they did not and do not act as purchasing agents, and did not and do not sell their merchandise at cost plus a service charge.

2. They stated and represented in advertisements and advertising matter circulated in interstate commerce that Co-operative Buyers' Service had offices in San Francisco, Calif. and Paris, France; when in truth and in fact, said Co-operative Buyers' Service had no office or offices either in San Francisco, Calif. or in Paris, France.

3. For the purpose and with the intent and effect of creating confusion and dissatisfaction in the trade, to the end of injuring competition and the good-will of the products so advertised, and inducing the impression that they are able to fill and service a normal number of orders for such products, the respondents adopted, use, and pursue a plan of practice of advertising and offering for sale through the trade literature of the Co-Operative Buyers' Service and the American Beauty Products Company, at prices below the prevailing market prices of such products, nationally known, patented, and trade-marked products of manufacturers who refuse to sell respondents such products. The respondents do not keep in stock and are unable to purchase in the natural channels of trade sufficient quantities of such products to fill, supply, and service a normal and anticipated number of orders for the same at the prices advertised. In many instances the respondents do not have any of such products in stock and are unable to obtain any substantial quantities thereof, and many orders for such products, when received, are filled with products of inferior quality and grade to those actually ordered; they do not expect to fill all orders received for such products, and the purpose of the adoption and execution of such plan and practice is to prejudice and injure competition, rather than the legitimate sale of such products.

4. For the purpose and with the intent and effect of passing off their products for those of competitors, the respondents adopted, use and pursue a general plan and practice of simulating nationally known and advertised products of competitors. Illustrative, but not all-inclusive; of the acts and things done in accomplishment of this plan and program are the following:

The selection and adoption of trade names for products by them offered for sale, similar in letters, sound, and appearance to those under which nationally known and advertised competing products have long been offered for sale; the selection and use of cartons, packages, bottles, designs, labels, slogans, and verbiage in connection with the promotion of sale and sale of their products, similar to those long used in connection with the manufacture, sale, and distribution of nationally known and advertised competing products; the selection and use of such language as "a substitute for" and "similar to" in loose and disconnected association with the trade names under which nationally known and advertised competing products are distributed and sold; the adoption and use of such statements as "Modern science is able to reproduce any product," "The days of secret formulas are gone forever," "The products listed will give the same results as the most expensive advertised items," and many other statements to the same effect, gist, or meaning.

The products offered for sale, listed, and advertised as aforesaid, are not substitutes for the designated nationally known and advertised brands; they are not similar to in quality and composition, and will not produce the same results as the nationally known and advertised brands for which they are offered as substitutes. The practice of simulating products of competitors, as set forth hereinabove, has a tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive purchasers respecting the identity of said products.

(b) Said respondent, American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, employed the following practices and methods, to wit:

1. It caused advertisements of its products to be circulated in interstate commerce among customers and prospective customers, in which advertisements and advertising matter the following statements and representations appeared:

AMERICAN BEAUTY PRODUCTS CO.
MANUFACTURER—AGENTS—IMPORTER

WHO IS AMERICAN BEAUTY PRODUCTS COMPANY? An Illinois corporation founded several years ago by Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower * * *

The said respondent, American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, further stated and represented in its catalog as follows:

It is against the law for a dealer to break up and sell separately items of merchandise in a package that is packed as and intended to be sold as a unit package;

when, in truth and in fact, said corporation was not a manufacturer, nor an importer; it was not "founded several years ago," but was organized in 1934; and there was no law forbidding the breaking up and selling separately of units of packages.

2. Said respondent, American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, advertised for sale, sold, and distributed in interstate commerce, a product designated as "Marlow Soapless Oil Shampoo," which was a simulation of the name under which a similar product had for several years been manufactured and sold by J. W. Marrow Manufacturing Company of Chicago, Ill., to wit, "Mar-O-Oil Shampoo," and which simulation had and has a tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive purchasers respecting the identity of said products.

PAR. 5. Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, as individuals and as partners, trading and doing business as Co-operative Buyers' Service and American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, for the purpose of inducing the purchase of various items of merchandise sold by them, have caused advertisements purporting to describe said merchandise to be circulated in interstate commerce to customers and prospective customers. Said advertisements contain statements and representations to the effect: (1) That upon the purchase of a certain quantity of respondents' merchandise, other merchandise would be given to the purchaser free or at a very slight cost; (2) that the merchandise sold by respondents had regular retail values and customarily sold for sums greatly in excess of the prices charged for said articles by respondents; (3) that certain articles of merchandise offered for sale and sold by the respondents are of exactly the same nature, quality and substance as other articles manufactured, distributed, and sold by established and well-known manufacturers under well and favorably known trade names and brands which enjoy a substantial demand among purchasers thereof; and (4) that offers made in such advertisements were limited offers or offers based on a limited quantity.

In truth and in fact, the respondents do not give other merchandise free or at a slight extra cost when purchases of certain articles are made at respondents' regular resale prices. The total cost to the respondents of both items of merchandise, as well as the respondents' profit thereon, is included in the resale prices of the articles sold at the purported regular prices. Articles of merchandise sold by the respondents do not have regular values greatly in excess of the prices actually charged by the respondents and are not customarily sold by others for sums greatly in excess of the prices charged by respondents. The articles of merchandise sold by the respondents and represented to be of the same nature, quality, and substance as competitive articles manufactured and sold by well-established manufacturers under well-known trade names are not, in fact, comparable to said articles and are not of the same nature, quality, and substance, but are, in fact, other and different articles of merchandise and less valuable than the articles to which they are compared. The purported limited offers or offers based on limited quantity purchases are not limited or qualified offers but the prices quoted by said respondents in said offers are the regular and customary prices charged by them for said merchandise irrespective of limits as to quantity and time of purchase.

The respondents named herein, in the course and conduct of their business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, have adopted and followed, and now follow, a course of action designed to, and having the effect of unfairly disparaging their competitors. Respondents have represented that said competitors do not deal with their respective customers on a fair and honest basis but defraud and cheat said customers and take unfair advantages of them in business dealings. Respondents also represent that said competitors charge high and exorbitant prices for the articles of merchandise sold by them so as to result in substantially more than a legitimate profit to said competitors. Respondents also charge and represent that said competitors are racketeers and that the businesses conducted by said competitors are rackets because of high and exorbitant prices charged for merchandise and for other reasons.

In truth and in fact, said competitors are engaged in business in a legitimate way and operate on a reasonable profit. They do not charge high and exorbitant prices for the merchandise which they sell as to result in substantially more than legitimate profits to them. They are not racketeers and the businesses which they conduct are not rackets but are, in fact, legitimate businesses operated on reasonable margins of profit.

PAR. 6. The said respondents, Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, as individuals, and said Koch and Heflebower, partners, trading and doing business as Co-operative Buyers' Service and American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, all have the same and identical place of business, to wit, 2568 Lincoln Avenue, Chicago, Ill.; and all of said respondents are engaged in the same business, to wit, the selling, in interstate commerce, of beauty shop supplies. Therefore, the Federal Trade Commission, on information and belief, charges that the said partnership and the said corporation are instrumentalities under which the said Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower conduct the business hereinbefore described, and that the said Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower are engaged in a joint enterprise, and therefore the said Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower are joined and made parties respondent herein, both as individuals and as partners trading and doing business under the name and style of Co-operative Buyers' Service, along with respondent American Beauty Products Company, a corporation.

PAR. 7. The use by the respondents of the false and misleading advertisements, representations, and practices set out herein has had and now has a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasing public, and to unfairly divert trade to the respondents from other corporations, firms, and individuals engaged in a like or similar business to that of the respondents, and who honestly and truthfully advertise and represent their said products. As a result thereof, substantial injury is done by respondents, both to the public and to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. The acts and things done as herein alleged by respondents are to the injury and prejudice of the public and competitors of respondents, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on November 17, 1936, issued and served its amended complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Carl E.

Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, as individuals and as partners, trading and doing business under the name and style of Co-Operative Buyers' Service and American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said amended complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said amended complaint were introduced by John Darsey, attorney for the Commission and in opposition to the allegations of the amended complaint by Clinton O. Thompson, attorney for the respondents, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the amended complaint and in opposition thereto (respondents having not requested oral argument herein); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents are Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower in their individual capacities and as partners trading and doing business under the name and style of Co-Operative Buyers' Service, and the American Beauty Products Company, an Illinois corporation. The above-named individuals manage and control the business operated under the name and style of Co-Operative Buyers' Service, and are the sole parties at interest therein. They are also president and vice president respectively of the American Beauty Products Company, the respondent corporation, and own all of the stock of said corporation. The aforesaid individual respondents direct and control the sales policies and general business activities of the corporate respondent. All of the parties respondent herein have the same principal place of business located at 1157 Fullerton Avenue, Chicago, Ill. The respondents are engaged in the sale and distribution of beauty and barber shop supply products, consisting of a large number of different items such as permanent-waving machines, scissors, brushes, combs, mirrors, lotions and oils, and other related products. The method of doing business adopted and used by all of the parties respondent is that of a mail order house. The beauty and barber shop trade is circularized through the medium of catalogs, correspondence, bulletins, and other trade literature. When orders are received in response to this advertising campaign, respondents fill such orders by shipping and transporting such merchandise through the medium of the United States mail and such other public utility transportation services as the occasion may suggest from their aforesaid principal place of business, or from one of their branch offices, to customers residing in various States of the United States other than the State within which the principal office or the branch offices filling such orders are located. The respondents have branch offices located in Atlanta, Ga.; Dallas, Tex.; Kansas City, Mo.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Newark, N. J.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Salt Lake City, Utah. Orders of customers are usually addressed to one of the respondents at the nearest branch office. All of the parties respondent use the same branch offices and the same office force and personnel maintained therein.

PAR. 2. There are many other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the sale of like and similar products, and of products used for the same and similar purposes, who seek the patronage and trade of the same customers, and who cause their respective products, when sold, to be transported from their respective places of business to purchasers thereof residing in the various other States of the United States. In the course and conduct of their said business as aforesaid, all of the parties respondent have been, and are, in competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States with such other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their businesses as aforesaid, and for the purpose of promoting the sale of their said products, the respondents have adopted and they now pursue a plan of representing the business conducted by them to be that of a cooperative. In furtherance of such a plan, the individual respondents selected as a trade name under which to do business the name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service." All respondents have represented to customers and prospective customers through long stories and articles which they cause to be inserted in their trade literature and in other ways, that the business done under such trade name is that of a cooperative, that the prices at which the aforesaid products are offered for sale are cost prices, and that the only profit which enures to the benefit of the respondents from the purchase of their products at the prices listed is a service charge paid on such orders.

The business conducted by the individual respondents under the trade name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service" is not in any sense that of a cooperative. The prices at which products are offered for sale and sold under said trade name to customers are not cost prices plus a service charge, but are prices which include a profit to the respondents over and above the service charge paid. There is no difference in the method and manner of the conduct of the business done by the individual respondents under the trade name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service" and that done by the respondent, American Beauty Products Company. The businesses of both are conducted from the same office, by the same personnel, and with the same overhead expense. The trade literature of both businesses conducted by respondents contains listings of the same products with the same price quotations, and an order addressed to one is filled from the same stock in the same manner that an order for the same product would be filled if addressed to the other. The products are sold at identical prices in either instance except that, if sold by the individual respondents, trading as Co-Operative Buyers' Service, the applicable service charge is added. The trade literature in which the respondents cause the aforesaid articles to be described and the aforesaid representations to be made is published by the respondents periodically, usually once a month, and is distributed by them to the trade located in the various States of the United States. The trade name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service" is false and potentially deceptive in character. The aforesaid representations and statements contained in the stories and articles published in respondents' trade literature and otherwise brought to the attention of their customers have no foundation in fact and are wholly false and untrue.

PAR. 4. In connection with the promotion of sale and sale of their products as aforesaid, the respondents cause representations and statements to appear in their trade literature to the effect that branch offices are maintained by them in the cities of San Francisco, Calif., and Paris, France. The respondents do not maintain any branch offices in the aforesaid cities, and such representations and statements are wholly false and untrue.

PAR. 5. In connection with the promotion of sale and sale of their own products, and for the purpose and with the intent and effect of creating confusion and dissatisfaction in the trade to the injury of the goodwill which has attached to products offered for sale and sold by competitors, and for the purpose of creating and inducing the impression and belief on the part of customers that they are able to fill and service a normal number of orders for such products, the respondents adopted and now use and pursue a plan and practice of advertising and offering for sale in their trade literature at prices substantially below prevailing market prices of such products, nationally known, patented, and trade-marked products of manufacturers who refuse to sell their products to respondents. The respondents do not keep in stock, and are unable to purchase in the natural channels of trade, sufficient quantities of such products to fill, supply, and service a normal and anticipated number of orders for the same at the prices advertised. In many instances, the respondents do not have any of such products in stock and are unable to obtain any substantial quantities thereof. Many orders for such products, when received, are filled with products of inferior quality and grade to those actually ordered. The respondents do not expect to and do not in fact fill all or any substantial portion of the orders so received with such nationally known and trade-marked products. The purpose of the adoption and execution of such a plan and practice is to prejudice and injure the reputation of competitors and the goodwill which may attach to the products sold by them, rather than the legitimate sale of such products.

PAR. 6. For the purpose and with the intent and effect of passing off their own products for those of competitors, the respondents adopted and now use and pursue a general plan and practice of simulating nationally known and advertised products of competitors. In furtherance of such a plan, the respondents have selected and adopted brand names for products by them offered for sale, similar in letters, sound, and appearance to those under which nationally known and advertised competing products have long been offered for sale, such as the brand names "Marlow," "Vita Tone," "Oil-O-Pine," "Oil of Castor," "Realistic," and "Revitasheen," which trade names are similar to and variations respectively of the brand names "Mar-O-Oil," "Vita Tonic," "Oil of Pine," "Oil-O-Castor," "Realistic," and "Revivatone." The aforesaid brand names "Mar-O-Oil," "Vita Tonic," "Oil of Pine," "Oil-O-Castor," "Realistic," and "Revivatone" have long been used in connection with the sale and distribution of competing products designed for similar usage and such products are well and favorably known by and are closely associated in the minds of the purchasing public with said brand names. There is a substantial preference on the part of a portion of the consuming public for the aforesaid trade marked, patented, and nationally known products over any other competing products. Respondents have selected and now use cartons, packages, bottles, designs, labels, slogans, and verbiage, in connection with the promotion of sale and sale of their products, similar to and imitative of those long used in connection with the manufacture, sale, and distribution of nationally known and advertised competing products. They have selected and now use such language as "A substitute for" and "similar to" in loose and disconnected association with the brand names under which nationally known and advertised competing products are distributed and sold. They have adopted and now use such statements as "Modern science is able to reproduce any product," "The days of secret formulas are gone forever," "The products listed will give the same results as the most expensive advertised items," and many other statements to the same effect and import. The products offered for sale, listed, and advertised as aforesaid are not substitutes for the designated nationally known and advertised brands; they are not similar thereto in quality or composition, and will not produce the same results as the nationally known and advertised brands for which they are offered as substitutes. The practice of simulating products of competitors as hereinabove set forth has enabled respondents to pass off their own products as and for those nationally advertised, patented, and trade-marked articles sold by their competitors and has resulted in confusion and deception of purchasers respecting the identity of respondents' products.

PAR. 7. The respondents have caused representations and statements to appear in their said trade literature, which is distributed as aforesaid, to the effect that respondent, American Beauty Products Company, is a manufacturer and importer. The American Beauty Products Company is not a manufacturer or importer and does not manufacture or import any substantial proportion of the products offered for sale and sold by it.

PAR. 8. In connection with the promotion of sale and sale of their products as aforesaid, the respondents have caused representations and statements to appear in their trade literature to the effect that certain merchandise will be given free to purchasers who purchase a certain quantity of respondents' products; that products sold by respondents have regular retail prices and are customarily sold for sums greatly in excess of the prices charged for said products by respondents; that products offered for sale and sold by respondents are of exactly the same nature, quality, and substance as products manufactured, distributed, and sold by competitors under well and favorably known trade names and brands which enjoy a substantial demand among purchasers thereof; and that the offers made of certain products by respondents are limited offers or offers based on the purchase of limited quantities. The respondents do not give merchandise free with purchases of certain quantities of products offered for sale by them. The total cost to the respondents of both items of merchandise, as well as the respondents' profit thereon, is included in the resale prices of the articles sold at the purported bargain prices. The articles of merchandise offered for sale and sold by the respondents do not have regular values greatly in excess of the prices actually charged by them and are not customarily sold by others for sums greatly in excess of the prices charged by respondents. The articles of merchandise represented to be of the same nature, quality, and substance as those offered for sale and sold by competitors under well known trade names are not comparable to such products and are not of the same nature, quality, and substance, but are, in fact, other and different articles of merchandise of inferior grade and quality to those with which they are compared. The purported limited offers, or offers based on limited quantity purchases, are not limited or qualified offers, but the prices quoted by the respondents in said offers are their regular and customary prices irrespective of limits as to quantity and time of purchase.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their businesses and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, the respondents have adopted and follow a course of action designed to and having the effect of unfairly disparaging their competitors. In pursuance of such a plan, the respondents have made many and varied representations and statements to the effect and meaning that their competitors do not deal with their customers on a fair and honest basis, but defraud and cheat their customers and take unfair advantages of their customers in business dealings; that their competitors use gyp equipment and effect fake trade-ins; that their said competitors are racketeers and that the businesses conducted by them are rackets. The aforesaid statements and representations unfairly disparage the respondents' competitors and their respective businesses and the record in this case shows an absence of any proof on the part of the respondents that the aforesaid disparaging statements and representations are truthful.

PAR. 10. The foregoing statements, representations, practices, and methods set forth in paragraphs 3 to 9 inclusive herein are false and misleading and have the capacity and tendency to deceive, confuse, and mislead and have deceived, confused, and misled purchasers into buying products which they did not intend to buy. The aforesaid acts, practices, and methods of the respondents have the capacity and tendency to divert unfairly, and they have unfairly diverted, to said respondents the trade of competitors engaged in selling, in interstate commerce, products of the same kind and nature as those of respondents, or other products designed for similar usage, all of which products are truthfully advertised, represented, and described. Substantial injury is thereby done by respondents to substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, as individuals and as partners, trading and doing business under the name and style of Co-Operative Buyers' Service and American Beauty Products Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said amended complaint and in opposition thereto, and briefs filed herein (respondents having not requested oral argument), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Carl E. Koch and Eugene F. Heflebower, in their individual capacities and as partners doing business under the trade name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service," or any other trade name, their agents, representatives, and employees, and the American Beauty Products Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of beauty and barber shop supply products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or indirectly:

3. Representing that respondents maintain branches in San Francisco, Calif., and Paris, France, or in any other place in which they do not maintain such branch.

4. Representing, through listing and offering for sale well-known or trade-marked products of others who refuse to sell to respondent which they do not have on hand and are unable to purchase in the regular channels of trade, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that respondents are able to service and fill orders for such products unless and until they have on hand, or can secure through the normal channels of trade, a sufficient quantity of such products to be able to service and fill a normal number of orders or demands for such products.

5. Substituting products of a different grade and quality for well-known or trade-marked products.

6. Using trade or brand names, or cartons, packages, bottles, designs, labels, and slogans, in connection with the sale of respondents' products, which simulate and imitate those long used in connection with the manufacture, sale, and distribution of well-known or trade-marked competing products through similarity of letters, sound, or appearance, or in any other manner, or which have the tendency and capacity to confuse and deceive the purchasing public in relation to the origin, identity, or quality of the products so designated and described.

8. Representing that the respondent corporation is an importer, or that any substantial portion of the products offered for sale by it is of foreign origin.

9. Representing that merchandise will be given free or without additional charge to purchasers of designated quantities of respondents' products, or that offers of designated products are limited as to time or quantity, or any other respect, when such is not the fact.

10. Representing, through use of purported special sale prices which are in fact respondents' regular prices, or through any other means or device, that such products have regular retail values or prices and are customarily sold for sums in excess of the prices charged for such products by respondents.

11. Representing that such products are of exactly the same or substantially the same nature, quality, and substance as well-known or trade-marked competing products when such is not the fact.

12. Circulating, representing, or publishing, or causing to be circulated, represented, or published in the trade, any false or deceptive or misleading statement respecting or concerning the business methods of competitors, or the character or integrity of the managements of competitors.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

- (a) Represented "They are perfect according to the specifications of the United States Federal Trade Commission of Washington, D. C.," and "Certified perfect diamonds. Certified perfect diamonds are 'perfect' according to the specifications approved by the Federal Trade Commission of Washington, D. C.;" and
- (b) Furnished to purchasers of said diamonds and diamond rings certificates containing, among other things, statements and representations to same effect as those used in aforesaid advertisements in regard to said diamonds being perfect according to specifications of, or approved by, said commission;

Facts being it had neither fixed nor promulgated any standard of perfect or other diamonds, nor inspected, found or certified said or any other diamonds as perfect;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true, and into purchase of said articles on account of such erroneous and mistaken beliefs thus induced, and with result that substantial trade in said commerce was unfairly diverted to him from competitors who do not misrepresent and guarantee their diamonds and diamond rings, and with capacity and tendency so to mislead, deceive, and divert to said competitors' substantial injury:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Joseph Cohen, of Kansas City, Kans., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Barnett C. Helzberg, trading under the name Helzberg's Diamond Shop, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Barnett C. Helzberg, trading under the name Helzberg's Diamond Shop, is the sole owner and general manager of five retail jewelry stores located in Kansas City, Kans.; Kansas City, Mo.; Wichita, Kans.; Topeka, Kans., and Des Moines, Iowa. His business includes the sale and distribution of diamonds and diamond rings. His principal place of business is at 612 Minnesota Avenue, Kansas City, Kans. Respondent in the course and conduct of his business sells and distributes his diamonds and diamond rings to purchasers and members of the public and causes said wares when sold, to be transported from the State of Kansas and the other States of origin of his shipments, to purchasers thereof located at points in the various States of the United States other than the State of origin of such shipments. There is now, and has been during all the times herein mentioned, a course of trade in commerce in diamonds and diamond rings between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent is now, and has been during all the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in offering for sale and selling diamonds and diamond rings to purchasers and members of the general public in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business of selling diamonds and diamond rings in interstate commerce, and to induce the purchase of certain of its said diamonds and diamond rings, respondent caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers having an interstate circulation, containing, among other matter, the following statements and representations, and others of similar substance and import, as to the diamonds and diamond rings offered for sale and sold by him:

(a) They are perfect according to the specifications of the United States Federal Trade Commission at Washington, D. C.

(b) Certified Perfect Diamonds. Certified Perfect Diamonds are "Perfect" according to the Specifications approved by the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, D. C.

Respondent furnishes to purchasers of said diamonds and diamond rings certificates containing, among other things, statements and representations to the same effect as those used in said advertisements in regard to said diamonds being perfect according to the specifications of, or approved by, the Federal Trade Commission.

Complaint

The said advertisements and the certificates furnished in accordance therewith to purchasers of his diamonds and diamond rings constitute and are representations by respondent that the diamond rings sold by him, when accompanied by such certificates, are in fact perfect in accordance with a standard and specifications required by the Federal Trade Commission. The intent of respondent in so representing and certifying his said diamonds and diamond rings, and the effect thereof, is to mislead and deceive purchasers of such diamond rings into the erroneous belief that the Federal Trade Commission has in fact fixed and promulgated specifications and a required standard for perfect diamonds, and that these diamonds of respondent meet those requirements.

In truth and in fact the Federal Trade Commission has neither fixed specifications nor promulgated any standard for perfect diamonds.

Said advertisements and certificates are also intended by respondent to imply, and they do imply, that the diamonds sold with such certificates have been inspected, found, and certified by a United States Government agency, to wit, the Federal Trade Commission, to be perfect diamonds, in accord with certain specifications made by it. In truth and in fact the Federal Trade Commission has neither promulgated any such specifications, nor inspected nor found nor certified said diamonds to be perfect diamonds.

All of said advertisements, statements, representations, and implications are deceptive, misleading, and false, and tend to and do deceive and mislead purchasers into the purchase of respondent's said diamonds and diamond rings in the erroneous belief that said representations and implications are true.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent many who do not so misrepresent their diamonds and diamond rings, and the basis of their certificates.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of the respondent as above alleged in the course of selling and offering for sale his diamonds and diamond rings in commerce as described herein have the capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's diamonds and diamond rings on account of the erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced as aforesaid. As a result thereof, trade in said commerce has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from those of his competitors referred to in paragraph 4 hereof who do not so misrepresent their certificates and diamonds and diamond rings. In consequence thereof, substantial injury has been, and is being, done to respondent's competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts and practices have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and the respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on January 4, 1938, issued, and on January 8, 1938, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Barnett C. Helzberg charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, respondent on February 10, 1938, filed an answer to said complaint, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and said answer; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent Barnett C. Helzberg, trading under the name of Helzberg's Diamond Shop, is the sole owner and general manager of five retail jewelry stores located in Kansas City, Kans.; Kansas City, Mo.; Wichita, Kans.; Topeka, Kans.; and Des Moines, Iowa. His business includes the sale and distribution of diamonds and diamond rings. His principal place of business is at 612 Minnesota Avenue, Kansas City, Kans. In the course and conduct of his business respondent sold and distributed his diamonds and diamond rings to purchasers and members of the general public and caused said wares, when sold, to be transported from his places of business in the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Iowa to the purchasers thereof located at various points in the several States of the United States other than the States of origin of said shipments.

PAR. 2. Respondent is engaged in substantial competition with various other individuals, and with firms and corporations engaged in offering for sale and selling diamonds and diamond rings to purchasers and members of the general public in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondent, in the course and conduct of his business, in order to induce the purchase of certain of his said diamonds and diamond rings, inserted in newspapers having an interstate circulation, advertisements containing, among other matters, the following statements and representations, and others of similar substance and import, as to the diamonds and diamond rings offered for sale and sold by him:

(a) They are perfect according to the specifications of the United States Federal Trade Commission of Washington, D. C.

(b) Certified perfect diamonds. Certified perfect diamonds are "perfect" according to the specifications approved by the Federal Trade Commission of Washington, D. C.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of his business of selling diamonds and diamond rings in interstate commerce, and to induce the purchase of his said diamonds and diamond rings, respondent furnished to purchasers of said diamonds and diamond rings, certificates containing, among other things, statements and representations to the same effect as those used in said advertisements in regard to said diamonds being perfect according to the specifications of, or approved by, the Federal Trade Commission.

PAR. 5. Respondent's said advertisements and the certificates furnished in accordance therewith to purchasers of his diamonds and diamond rings constitute and are representations by respondent that the diamonds and diamond rings sold by him, when accompanied by said certificates, are in fact perfect in accordance with standards and specifications required by the Federal Trade Commission. The effect of so representing and certifying his diamonds and diamond rings was to mislead and deceive purchasers of said diamonds and diamond rings into the erroneous belief that the Federal Trade Commission had in fact fixed and promulgated a required standard for perfect diamonds and that these diamonds of respondent met that requirement. The general form, arrangement, and text of said certificates implied that the diamonds sold with such certificates had been inspected, found, and certified by a United States Government agency, to wit, the Federal Trade Commission, to be perfect diamonds.

PAR. 6. All of said statements, advertisements, representations, and implications are deceptive, misleading, and false in that the Federal Trade Commission has neither fixed nor promulgated any standard of perfect or other diamonds, nor inspected, nor found, nor certified said diamonds, or any other diamonds, to be perfect.

Order

26 F. T. C.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent many who do not misrepresent their diamonds and diamond rings and the basis of their guarantees.

PAR. 8. The acts and practices of respondent as above set out in the course of selling and offering for sale his diamonds and diamond rings in commerce, as described herein, have a capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive dealers and a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's diamonds and diamond rings on account of the erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced as aforesaid. As a result thereof substantial trade in said commerce has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from those of his competitors who do not misrepresent their guarantees or their diamonds and diamond rings. In consequence thereof, substantial injury has been, and is being done to respondent's competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent Barnett C. Helzberg are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on February 10, 1938, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That respondent, Barnett C. Helzberg, trading under the name of Helzberg's Diamond Shop, or under any other trade name, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of diamonds and diamond rings in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist in any manner directly or indirectly from representing:

1. That the diamonds and diamond rings offered for sale and sold by respondent are perfect, "according to the specifications of the United States Federal Trade Commission at Washington, D. C." or "according to the specifications approved by the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, D. C.";

2. That the Federal Trade Commission has fixed or promulgated any standard for perfect or other diamonds;

3. That the Federal Trade Commission has inspected said diamonds or that it has found and certified them to be perfect diamonds;

4. That any agency of the United States Government has fixed or promulgated any standard for perfect or other diamonds, until and unless a standard has been fixed and promulgated by such an agency;

5. That an agency of the United States Government has inspected said diamonds, or that it has found and certified them to be perfect diamonds, until and unless such an agency has inspected said diamond sand found and certified them to be perfect.

It is further ordered, That said respondent Barnett C. Helzberg shall within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
DERMOLAV LABORATORIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2813. Complaint, May 21, 1936—Decision, Mar. 10, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of hair and scalp preparations for prevention and cure of baldness and stimulation of hair growth under designation "Dermolav Liquid" and "Dermolav Compound"—

Represented in newspaper and magazine advertising, and through leaflets, booklets, and letters circulated among prospective purchasers, that its said preparations constituted effective treatments for all types and forms of baldness and new ways of removing the several causes of falling hair, scalp diseases, and baldness, through such statements as "WHY MEN GET BALD * * *". Full particulars of an amazing new discovery that enables people who have dandruff, scalp itch, falling hair, or baldness to harmlessly remove the congested thin outer layer of scalp skin and activate the dormant hair roots to grow new hair. WILL BE SENT, ABSOLUTELY FREE, to any sufferer who will write," etc., and referred to aforesaid letters in support of its claims, etc.;

Notwithstanding fact neither of said products nor any of the ingredients therein contained were beneficial, either singly or in combination, in removing causes of baldness, and were in no wise a scalp food and did not involve any new scientific methods in treatment of said ailment and other scalp conditions, would not grow hair or revive or bring to life so-called dormant hair roots, nor cure alopecia areata; and were not harmless preparations for removing congested skin from the scalp, but resulted in a rash for people who were hypersensitive to elements therein contained;

With effect of misleading and deceiving substantial part of purchasing public into false and erroneous belief that said representations and claims were true, and that said preparations would cure falling hair and prevent baldness, etc., and were harmless, new, and scientific, and with capacity and tendency so to do, and with result that public, acting in mistaken and erroneous beliefs thus induced, purchased a substantial volume of its said products, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors engaged in manufacture and sale or sale and distribution of treatments intended for such various conditions, and who truthfully represented nature and curative value of their respective products;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Dermolav Laboratories, Inc. has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its office and principal place of business located at 1700 Broadway in the city of New York, within the State of New York. Said respondent is now, and for more than 2 years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture and sale of preparations for use on the scalp, known as Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound, and in the distribution thereof between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent causes said preparations, when sold by it, to be transported to the purchasers thereof located in the State of New York and in various other States of the United States. The business conducted by said respondent is a mail-order business, a large portion of its sales, to wit, 99 percent, being conducted through the mails, and the remaining portion of the sales, to wit, 1 percent, being local. There is now, and for more than 2 years last past has been, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said preparations between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business the said respondent is now, and for more than 2 years last past has been, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with various other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture and interstate sale of preparations for use on the scalp.

PAR. 2. In the regular course and conduct of its said business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 1, said respondent has been and now is engaged in extensive advertising through the medium of local tabloid papers such as "The Daily Mirror" and "The Daily News," and also through magazines with a national distribution such as "Physical Culture," "Picture Play," "True Story," "Radio Guide," and the Detective Story group.

In addition to the advertising which has been and now is being done by said respondent using newspapers and magazines as media, as hereinbefore set forth, said respondent has been and now is furnishing to purchasers and to persons making inquiry as a result of the advertisements used by respondent, as hereinabove set forth, additional information other than that contained in its newspaper advertisements. This information has been and now is contained in various circulars, pamphlets, letters, and folders. All of said advertisements were and are intended by said respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., to be read by the general public and in particular by prospective purchasers of preparations for use on the scalp, and to cause and induce said prospective purchasers to buy those preparations manufactured and sold by said respondent.

PAR. 3. Said respondent, in its said advertisements of its said preparations known as Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound manufactured and sold by it, has made and is now making various false, deceptive and misleading statements concerning said preparations. Among the said statements which said respondent has used and is now using in its advertisements in newspapers, magazines, circulars, pamphlets, folders, and letters are statements to the effect that its said preparations, Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound, will grow hair; that the said products, Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound, will cure alopecia areata, which is a disease causing bald spots on the head; that Dermolav Scalp Compound is a scalp food; that the Dermolav treatment is a new way of removing several causes of falling hair, and will grow new hair; that Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel is a harmless liquid for removing congested skin from the scalp; and that the Dermolav treatment is beneficial in reviving dormant roots and restoring hair.

The above statements made, and now being made, by said respondent in its said advertisements were, and are now, false, deceptive, and misleading because in truth and in fact its said preparations, Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound, will not grow hair; its said preparations, Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound, will not cure alopecia areata, which is a disease causing bald spots on the head; Dermolav Scalp Compound is not a scalp food; the Dermolav treatment is not a new method and will not remove several causes for falling hair and baldness, and will not cause new hair to grow; Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel is not a harmless liquid for removing congested skin from the scalp, but its use may result in serious injury; and the Dermolav treatment will not revive dormant hair roots, and will not cause a new growth of hair.

PAR. 4. Said respondent, in the regular course and conduct of its said business, has for more than 2 years last past in its advertisements contained in circulars, pamphlets, folders, and letters represented to prospective purchasers that said respondent would pay to any user of its product the sum of $50 for photographs showing the head before and after using respondent's Dermolav treatment, and showing new hair as a result of said treatment. Said offer has been made and is now being made by said respondent as an inducement to the purchasing public to purchase its said preparations, with the full knowledge on the part of respondent that said preparations would not grow hair, and that therefore respondent would not be required to make the payments as offered by it.

PAR. 5. The use by said respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., of the foregoing false, deceptive, and misleading representations alleged to be used by the said respondent in paragraphs 3 and 4 hereof, have had and do now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that its said preparations, Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound, will in truth and in fact grow hair; will cure alopecia areata; that Dermolav Scalp Compound is a skin food; that the Dermolav treatment is a new way of removing several causes of falling hair and baldness, and will grow new hair; that Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel is a harmless liquid for removing congested skin from the scalp; and that the Dermolav treatment is beneficial for dormant hair roots, and will promote the growth of new hair, and has thereby induced and does now induce the consuming public and especially prospective purchasers of preparations for use on the scalp, acting in said erroneous belief, to purchase Dermolav Liquid Scalp Peel and Dermolav Scalp Compound in preference to preparations for use on the scalp offered for sale by other manufacturers and distributors who do not falsely, deceptively, and misleadingly advertise their products. As a result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondent trade has been diverted to respondent from other manufacturers and distributors of preparations for use on the scalp, who do not falsely, deceptively, and misleadingly advertise their products, and thereby injury to its competitors has been done and is now being done by said respondent.

PAR. 6. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondent contained in its advertising have resulted in injury to respondent's competitors, and to retail dealers and distributors and in prejudice to the buying public, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 21, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in violation of the provisions of said Act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Reuben J. Martin, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by F. C. McIntyre, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation, organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business are at 1700 Broadway, in the city of New York, State of New York. It has been for more than 1 year last past, and now is, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of products designated as Dermolav Liquid and Dermolav Compound, together known as Dermolav Method and Dermolav Scalpfood, preparations recommended, advertised and sold as treatments for the hair and scalp, for the prevention and cure of baldness, and the stimulation of the growth of hair.

PAR. 2. Respondent's products are compounded and packaged at its place of business in the city of New York, State of New York, and sold to individual purchasers and to retail dealers purchasing for resale to the consuming public. When orders are received for respondent's said products, it causes them to be shipped through the United States mail from its place of business in the city of New York, State of New York, to the purchasers thereof located at various points in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. Since the date the respondent began the manufacturing and compounding of its said products, it has maintained a course of trade in said products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondent is now and has been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of preparations designed and sold as treatments for the hair and scalp, for the prevention of baldness and the stimulation of the growth of hair, in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Ninety-eight percent of the respondent's business is done by mail.

PAR. 4. The respondent advertises its said product in newspapers and magazines having a general circulation, as follows:

WHY MEN GET BALD

Full particulars of an amazing new discovery that enables people who have dandruff, scalp itch, falling hair or baldness, to harmlessly remove the congested thin outer layer of scalp skin and activate the dormant hair roots to grow new hair. WILL BE SENT, ABSOLUTELY FREE, to any sufferer who will write to Dermolav Lab., Desk 47, 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Send no money. No obligation.

Respondent, in addition to advertising its compound in newspapers and magazines having a general circulation, has advertised and now advertises its Dermolav Liquid and Dermolav Compound by leaflets, booklets and letters circulated among prospective purchasers. The following is representative of the statements and claims made by the respondent in said advertising matter as to the value of respondent's products as a treatment for the hair and scalp for the prevention of baldness and the stimulation of the growth of hair:

And so it is with these voluntary letters of praise we receive. You may remark—"You can't grow hair on a bald part"—but, my friend, as so many of these letters of praise state—"I have grown hair where bald," how can any one deny such a possibility?

Now why not put your own mind at rest on this subject of starting a new hair growth, where bald, or where hair is thinning out, by getting the above complete treatment on the easy terms offered? You may yet live to thank the day I decided to "throw out this last life line to you."

Respondent has made numerous other statements and representations in its advertising copy and literature to the effect that its products manufactured, sold and distributed by it will cure alopecia areata, a disease causing bald spots on the head, that its product is a scalp food, that its method is a new way of removing the causes of falling hair, that its products will grow new hair, that they are harmless preparations for removing congested skin from the scalp, and that the products are beneficial in reviving so-called dormant hair roots and restoring hair.

By means of the foregoing statements, the respondent represents to purchasers and prospective purchasers that its products are effective treatments for all types and forms of baldness and that respondent's products are new ways of removing the several causes of falling hair, scalp diseases, and baldness.

PAR. 5. The quantitative formula of the Dermolav Liquid is as follows:

Resorcinol.....	12 oz.
Alcohol.....	8 oz.
Euresol.....	8 cc.
Water.....	100 oz.
Sodium benzoate.....	$\frac{3}{4}$ oz.

The quantitative formula of the Scalpfood is as follows:

Pilocarpine hydrochloride.....	$\frac{3}{4}$ oz.
Oxycholesterin.....	1 lb.
Crude Oil.....	1 lb. 4 oz.
Castor Oil.....	2 lbs.
Lanolin.....	5 lbs. 8 oz.
Petrolatum.....	38 lbs.
Perfume.....	Q. S.
Beeswax.....	2 lbs. 4 oz.

PAR. 6. None of the respondent's products, Dermolav Liquid and Dermolav Compound, together known as Dermolav Method and Dermolav Scalpfood, or any of the ingredients in respondent's products, as shown by formulae in paragraph 5 supra, either singly or in combination, are beneficial in removing the causes of baldness and are in no wise a scalp food. They do not involve or embrace any new scientific methods in the treatment of baldness and other conditions of the scalp, and they will not grow hair or revive or bring to life so-called dormant hair roots. Further, respondent's products will not cure alopecia areata and are not harmless preparations for removing the congested skin from the scalp.

Respondent's products are sold to individuals for self-medication. People who are hypersensitive to the elements in respondent's products find that the use of the products causes a rash.

The use by respondent of the representations and claims herein set out has had and now has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive a substantial part of the purchasing public into the false and erroneous belief that said representations and claims are true, and that the respondent's products, Dermolav Liquid and Dermolav Scalpfood, will prevent falling hair, will cure baldness and alopecia areata, revive so-called dormant hair roots, and are harmless, new and scientific preparations.

Acting under the above mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and deceptive statements and representations made by respondent as herein set out, the public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's products. As a result, trade in interstate commerce has been unfairly diverted to respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in the sale and distribution of treatments intended to be used and used for the treatment of the condition of falling hair and baldness, and for other afflictions of the scalp, who truthfully represent the nature and the curative value of their respective products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and briefs filed herein, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Dermolav Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of preparations recommended and sold for the treatment of conditions of the scalp and now designated as Dermolav Liquid, Dermolav Compound, Dermolav Method, and Dermolav Scalpfood, or under any other

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Lord & Taylor, Biberman Bros., Inc., and Galey & Lord, Inc., corporations, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its amended complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lord & Taylor, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located on Fifth Avenue at 38th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in business as a retailer of coats, dresses, robes, and other items of wearing apparel. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such articles of merchandise to members of the purchasing public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent, Biberman Bros., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at 15th and Mt. Vernon Street in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, and with a sales office located in the city of New York, State of New York. It is engaged in business as a manufacturer of dresses which it sells and distributes to department stores and retail stores located in the various States of the United States.

Respondent, Galey & Lord, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 57 Worth Street, in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in business as a commission house in converting and selling dress fabrics to the cutting trade located in various States of the United States.

Respondents now cause, and during the time herein mentioned have caused, their articles of merchandise when sold to be shipped from their respective places of business to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the States of origin of such shipments. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondents in their respective products between and among the various States of the United States.

Respondents are now, and at all times herein mentioned have been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of wearing apparel, dresses, robes, and dress fabrics in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, Lord & Taylor, purchased and now purchases certain of the dresses offered for sale and sold by it in commerce as set out in paragraph 1 hereof from the manufacturer thereof, respondent Biberman Bros., Inc. The latter concern, in turn, purchased and now purchases the fabric from which said dresses were made from respondent, Galey & Lord, Inc. To aid and facilitate the sale of said dresses, the said Lord & Taylor, with the aid, assistance, and cooperation of said Biberman Bros., Inc., and the said Galey & Lord, Inc., caused and now causes advertising matter to be inserted over the name of Lord & Taylor in newspapers having interstate circulation and in which advertising matter said dresses were represented, designated and referred to as "Soft, silky Seal Crepe, woven from Enka Yarns and printed with charming motifs * * *." The said respondents, acting in cooperation each with the other, also caused and now cause a substantial number of leaflets to be distributed to customers and prospective customers located in various States of the United States and which leaflets referred to such dresses in the following language:

Lovely colors—new, different looking prints on that marvelously soft, silky Seal Crepe—woven from Enka Yarns

Said dresses displayed and offered for sale by the said Lord & Taylor bear tags and labels placed upon the dresses of respondents in cooperation with each other on which were printed the statement:

washable

26 F. T. C.

The said dresses advertised and tagged by said respondents acting cooperatively each with the other, as hereinabove set forth, were and are offered for sale and sold by the said Lord & Taylor in commerce as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof. Such statements and representations served and now serve as representations on the part of respondents that such dresses so advertised and offered for sale were silk dresses.

The representations hereinbefore set forth are and were grossly false and misleading in that said dresses so represented, designated, and referred to are not and were not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but were composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. Respondent Lord & Taylor, in soliciting the sale of and selling certain pajama robes in commerce as in paragraph 1 hereof, set out, caused and now causes said pajama robes to be advertised in newspapers having interstate circulation as "Silk Robes—Rich Brocades, all silk-lined. A Variety of Handsome Patterns and a Good Color Range. Silk Facings and Trims in All Robes." Also respondent Lord & Taylor in soliciting the sale of and selling certain dresses in commerce as in paragraph 1 hereof, set out, caused and now causes, such dresses to be advertised in newspapers having interstate circulation as "Satin" dresses. In truth and in fact, the said robes and dresses so represented and designated contain no silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but are composed wholly of other and different materials.

PAR. 4. The word "Silk" for many years past has had, and still has, in the minds of the consuming public a definite and specific meaning, to-wit: the product of the cocoon of the silk worm. Silk fabrics for many years have held and still hold great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fiber has long been woven into a variety of fabrics, and a variety of distinctive terms has been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving. Dress goods, pajama robes and other similar products designated, described or referred to as "Silk," "Silky," "Crepe," "Satin," "Pure Dye," and "Seal Crepe" have been for a long time, and at the present time still are, associated in the public mind with a fabric made from the cocoon of the silk worm, commonly known and understood by the public as silk.

PAR. 5. The use by respondents of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and to cause them to purchase such dresses and pajama robes on account of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. There are among the competitors of respondents as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of dresses and pajama robes and other items of wearing apparel who do not misrepresent the kind of dresses, pajama robes, and other items of wearing apparel offered for sale. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such competitors and thereby substantial injury is being and has been done by respondents to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on July 21, 1937, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents Lord & Taylor, Biberman Bros., Inc., and Galey & Lord, Inc., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, and Gould & Wilkie, Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, and Erwin Feldman, counsel for respondents, executed a stipulation as to the facts wherein it was agreed that the statement of facts therein recited might be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint or in opposition thereto, and that the Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it may draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts was subsequently approved by the Commission and was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto and said stipulation as to the facts; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lord & Taylor, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located on Fifth Avenue at 38th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in business as a retailer of coats, dresses, robes, and other items of wearing apparel. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such articles of merchandise to members of the purchasing public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent, Biberman Bros., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at 15th and Mt. Vernon Street in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, and with a sales office located in the city of New York, State of New York. It is engaged in business as a manufacturer of dresses which it sells and distributes to department stores and retail stores located in the various States of the United States.

Respondent, Galey & Lord, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 57 Worth Street, in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in business as a commission house in converting and selling fabrics to the cutting trade located in various States of the United States.

Respondents caused said articles of merchandise when sold to be shipped from their respective places of business to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State where the shipments originate. There is now, and has been for the several years last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondents in their respective products between and among the various States of the United States.

Respondents are now, and at all times herein mentioned have been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of wearing apparel, dresses, robes, and dress fabrics in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, Lord & Taylor, purchased and now purchases certain of the dresses offered for sale and sold by it in commerce as set out in paragraph 1 hereof from the manufacturer thereof, respondent Biberman Bros., Inc. The latter concern, in turn, purchased and now purchases the fabric from which said dresses were made from respondent, Galey & Lord, Inc. To aid and facilitate the sale of said dresses, the said Lord & Taylor, with the aid, assistance, and cooperation of said Biberman Bros., Inc., and the said Galey & Lord, Inc., caused advertising matter to be inserted over the name of Lord & Taylor in newspapers having interstate circulation and in which advertising matter said dresses were represented, designated, and referred to as "Soft, silky Seal Crepe, woven from Enka Yarns and printed with charming motifs * * *." The said respondents, Lord & Taylor and Biberman Bros., Inc., acting in cooperation with each other, also caused a substantial number of leaflets to be distributed to customers and prospective customers located in various States of the United States and which leaflets referred to such dresses in the following language:

Lovely colors—new, different looking prints on that
marvelously soft, silky Seal Crepe—woven from Enka Yarns

Said dresses displayed and offered for sale by the said Lord & Taylor bore tags and labels placed upon the dresses by the respondents in cooperation with each other on which were printed the statement:

This Garment is made from SEAL CREPE
Fast Color, Pure Dye Unweighted and washable

Made From

and the reverse side reads:

A L'Aiglon Frock

SEAL CREPE we recommend dry cleaning.

The said dresses advertised and tagged by said respondents acting cooperatively each with the other, as hereinabove set forth, were offered for sale and sold by the said Lord & Taylor in commerce as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof.

Said dresses so represented, designated and referred to were not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but were composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. Respondent Lord & Taylor, in soliciting the sale of and selling certain pajama robes in commerce as in paragraph 1 hereof set out, caused said pajama robes to be advertised in newspapers having interstate circulation as "Silk Robes—Rich Brocades, all silk-lined. A Variety of Handsome Patterns and a Good Color Range. Silk Facings and Trims in All robes." Also respondent Lord & Taylor in soliciting the sale of and selling certain dresses in commerce as in paragraph 1 hereof set out, caused such dresses to be advertised in newspapers having interstate circulation as "Satin" dresses. In truth and in fact, some of said robes and dresses so represented and designated contained no silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but were composed wholly of other and different materials.

PAR. 4. Silk fabrics for many years have held, and still hold, great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities; silk fiber has long been woven into a variety of fabrics, and a variety of distinctive terms has been applied to the fabrics resulting from this type of weaving; dress goods, pajamas, robes, and other similar products designated, described or referred to as "Silk," "Silky," and "Pure Dye," when used to designate and describe the material from which a garment is made, and the words "Crepe," "Satin" and "Seal Crepe," when used alone to designate and describe the material from which a garment is made, have been for a long time, and at the present time still are, associated in the public mind with the material made from the cocoon of the silkworm, commonly known and understood by the public as silk.

PAR. 5. Respondent Lord & Taylor, in designating and describing certain of its robes as "Silk Robes—Rich Brocades, all silk-lined. A Variety of Handsome Patterns and a Good Color Range. Silk Facings and Trims in All robes", as set out in paragraph 3 hereof, did so through mistake and not through any intent to mislead and deceive the purchasing public.

In all the other instances herein mentioned, wherein the other terms hereinabove set out were used by respondents, all of said respondents believed that said terms and designations accurately and truthfully described the material from which the garments were made.

PAR. 6. The use by the respondents of the representations above set forth in describing the materials from which said garments were made had the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said garments were made from silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, and to cause them to purchase such articles on account of such erroneous beliefs.

There are among the competitors of the respondents corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of dresses, pajama robes, and other items of wearing apparel who accurately describe and brand such products by terms properly descriptive of the fabric content thereof. The representations made by respondents as aforesaid had the capacity and tendency unfairly to divert trade to respondents from their said competitors. Thereby, substantial injury is being done and has been done by the respondents to competition in commerce as herein set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents Lord & Taylor, Biberman Bros., Inc., and Galey & Lord, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

IN THE MATTER OF
LONNIE E. CARTER, INDIVIDUALLY, AND TRADING AS CARTER CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3300. Complaint, Jan. 15, 1938—Decision, Mar. 11, 1938

Where an individual engaged in manufacture of candies and processing of salted nuts, and in sale and distribution thereof to wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, in competition with others similarly engaged in sale and distribution of candies, salted nuts, and peanut confections—

Sold its so-called "Early Bird Peanuts," packed in individual, small, sealed, 5-cent cartons, within small number of which, as placed in larger pasteboard containers, there were concealed, in accordance with individual cartons, and retailers, explanatory display cards, legends advising ultimate purchaser "You may find 5¢, 10¢, 25¢ or $1," some such sum, as determined through chance selection and breaking of one of such enclosing cartons, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others means of conducting lotteries in sale of his said product, as displayed and sold by retail purchasers thereof in accordance with such plan or game of chance and in violation of public policy of the common law and criminal statutes and contrary to that of the United States Government;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of such products were attracted by element of chance involved in sale thereof, and thereby induced to buy same, thus packed and sold, in preference to nuts or candy of competitors who are not willing to and do not offer and sell their products so packed, assembled, or otherwise arranged as to involve game of chance, and refrain therefrom, and with tendency and capacity thereby to divert to himself trade and custom from competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and to exclude from said trade all aforesaid unwilling competitors and lesson competition therein, and create a monopoly of said trade in himself and in such other distributors as use same or equivalent method, and to deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in said trade and eliminate or exclude therefrom, as case might be, all actual or potential competitors who do not adopt and use such methods:

Held, That such method, acts, and practices were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lonnie E. Carter, individually, and trading as Carter Candy Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Lonnie E. Carter is an individual doing business under the trade name of Carter Candy Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 2300 East Twenty-eighth Street, Chattanooga, Tenn. He is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the manufacturing of candies and processing of salted nuts, and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers. Respondent causes and has caused his products when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., to purchasers thereof in the State of Tennessee and in other States of the United States, at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candies and salted nuts between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is in competition with other individuals, and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of candies, salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold, to wholesale and retail dealers and jobbers, salted peanuts so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Said salted peanuts are packed in individual, small, sealed cartons for retail to the ultimate consumer at five cents per carton. A number of these small cartons of peanuts are placed in a larger pasteboard carton. Said salted peanuts are designated by respondent as "Early Bird Peanuts." Sealed within a small number of individual cartons are 5 cents, 10 cents, 25 cents, or $1, but the ultimate purchasers cannot ascertain which cartons contain one of the above named sums until a selection has been made and the individual carton broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said individual cartons of salted peanuts who procure one of the said sums of money thus procure the same wholly by lot or chance. The individual cartons of said salted peanuts bear stickers which have lithographed or printed thereon the following language: "You may find 5¢, 10¢, 25¢." With said assortments respondent furnishes display cards for use by the retail dealers in offering such assortments to the public, which display cards bear legends or statements containing, among other things, the following: "You may find 5¢, 10¢, 25¢ or $1," and inform the purchasing public that such assortments are being distributed in accordance with the above described sales plan.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells the said salted peanuts resell same to retail dealers and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said salted peanuts for sale and sell same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has a capacity and tendency to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, or candy offered for sale and sold by his competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said salted peanuts to the purchasing public, in the manner above alleged, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a sum of money. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of salted peanuts, and the sale of salted peanuts by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the salted nut, peanut confection, or candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections or candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said products so packed and assembled as above alleged or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance or any other method of sale that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, and candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said salted peanuts and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described and are thereby induced to purchase said salted peanuts so packed and sold by respondent in preference to salted peanuts or candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from his competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method, to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful, to lessen competition in said trade, to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and in such other distributors as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and are to the prejudice of the public.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 15, 1938, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Lonnie E. Carter, individually, and trading as Carter Candy Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, respondent filed in the office of the Commission an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further testimony and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer; and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Lonnie E. Carter is an individual doing business under the trade name of Carter Candy Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 2300 East 28th Street, Chattanooga, Tenn. He is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and processing of salted nuts, and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers. Respondent causes and has caused his products when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., to purchasers thereof in the State of Tennessee and in various States of the United States, at their respective places of business. There is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candies and salted nuts between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is in competition with other individuals, and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of candies, salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold, to wholesale and retail dealers and jobbers, salted peanuts so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Said salted peanuts are packed in individual, small, sealed cartons for retail to the ultimate consumer at 5 cents per carton. A number of these small cartons of peanuts are placed in a larger pasteboard carton. Said salted peanuts are designated by respondent as "Early Bird Peanuts." Sealed within a small number of individual cartons are 5 cents, 10 cents, 25 cents, or $1, but the ultimate purchasers cannot ascertain which cartons contain one of the above named sums until a selection has been made and the individual carton broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said individual cartons of salted peanuts who procure one of the said sums of money thus procure the same wholly by lot or chance. The individual cartons of said salted peanuts bear stickers which have lithographed or printed thereon the following language: "You may find 5¢, 10¢, 25¢." With said assortments respondent furnishes display cards for use by the retail dealers in offering such assortments to the public, which display cards bear legends or statements containing, among other things, the following: "You may find 5¢, 10¢, 25¢ or $1.00," and inform the purchasing public that such assortments are being distributed in accordance with the above described sales plan.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells the said salted peanuts resell same to retail dealers and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said salted peanuts for sale and sell same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has a capacity and tendency to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, or candy offered for sale and sold by his competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said salted peanuts to the purchasing public, in the manner above found, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a sum of money. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of salted peanuts, and the sale of salted peanuts by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly, in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the salted nut, peanut confection, or candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same of an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell salted nuts, salted peanuts, and peanut confections or candy in competition with the respondent, as above described, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said products so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance or any other method of sale that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, salted nuts, salted peanuts, peanut confections, and candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said salted peanuts and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described and are thereby induced to purchase said salted peanuts so packed and sold by respondent in preference to salted peanuts or candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from his competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method, to exclude from said salted peanut and candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful, to lessen competition in said salted peanut and candy trade, to tend to create a monopoly of said salted peanut and candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of salted peanuts and candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said salted peanut and candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said salted peanut and candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove found. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of the respondent, Lonnie E. Carter, individually, and trading as Carter Candy Company, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lonnie E. Carter, an individual trading as Carter Candy Company, or under any other trade name, his agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of salted nuts or confections in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing salted nuts or confections so packed and assembled that sales of such salted nuts or confections to the general public are to be made or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

2. Supplying to and placing in the hands of dealers assortments of salted nuts or confections which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the salted nuts or confections contained in said assortment to the public;

3. Selling or distributing individual packages of salted nuts or confections containing coins or other United States money, which said individual packages of salted nuts or confections are packed and assembled in assortments with other individual packages of salted nuts or confections of similar size, shape and appearance not containing coins or other United States money, for resale to the public by retail dealers;

4. Furnishing to dealers a display card, either with packages or assortments of salted nuts or confections, or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchaser that the salted nuts or confections are being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

VAN OGDEN, INC., AND FREDERICK T. GORDON

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2851. Complaint, June 26, 1936—Decision, Mar. 18, 1938

Where a corporation, as engaged under direct management, supervision, direction, and control of an individual who was president, treasurer, and managing officer thereof, in sale and transportation of chemicals, extracts, and other food products through personal solicitation of prospective purchasers in various States by agents and other representatives—

- (a) Described two of its products, in advertising same through circulars and pamphlets distributed throughout the various States, as "Dr. Gordon's Solid Comfort Foot Soap" and "Dr. Gordon's Mustard Oil Cream," and made various other statements intended to create impression that commodities thus labeled and designated were made under direction or according to formula of registered physician, facts being such commodities were in fact named after aforesaid individual and president, etc., who was neither registered pharmacist nor physician;
- (b) Advertised certain products, including those designated as "Walnut," "Maple," and "Rootbeer," as flavoring extracts, in circulars distributed in interstate commerce, notwithstanding fact such products were not compounds wherein flavoring, secured by extraction of juices from beans, berries, nuts, or fruits, is suspended in alcohol, as trade and public had been generally led to believe and understand for many years from word "extract" as applied to product offered as flavoring ingredient, but were imitation extracts composed of synthetic chemical substitutes and not of genuine ingredients;

With tendency and capacity to confuse and deceive purchasing public in regard to true nature and quality of its product and induce purchasers to buy same on account of mistaken belief that they were made in accordance with doctor's prescription and were true extracts, and with result that trade was thereby unfairly diverted to it from competitors engaged in sale in commerce of similar products, truthfully advertised and represented by them:

Held, That such corporate and individual acts and practices were to injury and prejudice of public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Van Ogden, Inc., a corporation, and Frederick T. Gordon, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., is a corporation, existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Chicago in such State. Frederick T. Gordon is an individual, the president and treasurer of the respondent corporation, and its managing officer, and is a resident of, and has his principal place of business in the city of Chicago, and State of Illinois. Respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., a corporation, is under the direct management, supervision, direction, and control of the respondent, Frederick T. Gordon, and is engaged in the manufacture, sale, and transportation of chemicals, extracts, and other food products. In the course and conduct of such business respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., sells, transports and causes to be transported the above named commodities into, and through the various States of the United States, other than the State of Illinois. Such sales are, and have been made to purchasers and users thereof located in various States of the United States, as aforesaid, through the medium of personal or individual solicitation of prospective users and purchasers in interviews had for that purpose by agents, salesmen, and representatives of the respondent corporation, and pursuant to orders procured thereby, shipments have been made as aforesaid. Respondent has thus maintained a constant current of trade and commerce into and through the various States of the United States in the commodities above listed.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., under the supervision and direction of Frederick T. Gordon, as aforesaid, has been and now is, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, persons, and copartnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of commodities of like nature, character, and design throughout the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Among such competitors is one styled as "Gemac Sales Corporation," a corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois and having its principal office and place of business in the city of Chicago and State of Illinois.

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

PAR. 4. Since the organization of the respondent, approximately 3 years heretofore, it has, acting by and through its president and treasurer, Frederick T. Gordon, and other agents, officers, and employees, both in their own individual capacity and official person endeavored to appropriate and has appropriated values created by said competitor, "Gemac Sales Corporation" by enticing and attempting to entice the employees of the same to violate their contractual relations with such competitor and to enter into the employ of the respondent, Van Ogden, Inc. The values of such competitor, so appropriated and attempted to be appropriated by the respondent, are—training, experience, and ability of such employees as salesmen in their particular field of competition.

PAR. 5. The enticing and the attempts to entice, as related in the paragraph last above, have been made throughout the various States of the United States by the above named respondents, and each of them, and their agents, servants, and employees.

PAR. 6. In enticing, and in attempting to entice in the manner above related, respondents, their agents, servants, and employees, have made various representations to the employees of Gemac Sales Corporation, that it, the respondent corporation, would provide an increased compensation, promotions in position, additional responsibility, and have made various and numerous statements and representations, unfairly disparaging the organization, the business policies, and the financial standing of the Gemac Sales Corporation, with the result that a large number of the most experienced and skilful employees of the Gemac Sales Corporation have been induced to quit the employ of such corporation, and enter the employ of the respondents.

In truth and in fact, the respondent did not and now does not provide increased compensation, promotions in position, additional responsibility, or other increments to employees as represented by it.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of the business of the respondent corporation, it has advertised in various periodicals, magazines, and newspapers having an interstate circulation, and has through the medium of circulars and pamphlets, distributed throughout the various States of the United States, represented and described one of its products under the trade name or brand of:

Dr. Gordon's Solid Comfort Foot Soap;

another as:

Dr. Gordon's Mustard Oil Cream;

another as:

Dr. Trask's New Treatment for Constipation.

and has made various other statements calculated and intended to create the impression that the commodities so labeled and designated were, and are, manufactured under the direction, or according to a formula of a registered physician.

In truth and in fact, the individual Gordon from whom the first two commodities above listed obtained their name and designation, is the respondent, Frederick T. Gordon, who is not a chemist, is not a registered pharmacist, and is not a physician.

PAR. 8. Also in the advertising matter above referred to, the respondents describe and represent certain of the products vended by the respondent corporation as "Flavoring Extracts," including such products as "Walnuto," "Mapleo," and "Root Beer."

Over a period of many years, the trade and the public generally have been led to and now do believe and consider an "extract" offered for sale as a flavoring ingredient to be a compound wherein the flavoring is secured by the extraction of juices from beans, berries, nuts, or fruits. Such juices are then suspended in alcohol, which is recognized as a most valuable and desirable vehicle that can be used for dissolving and preserving extracts of juice from beans, nuts, berries, or fruits.

In truth and in fact, the products advertised and represented by the respondent, as herein related, are not extracts within the common meaning and acceptance of the term but are imitations of the same.

PAR. 9. The acts and practices of the respondents are prejudicial and injurious to respondents' competitor, Gemac Sales Corporation, a corporation, in that such acts and practices effectually appropriate values of such competitor to the use and benefit of the respondents, enabling the respondents to maintain a large selling staff, and cause a substantial decrease in the personnel of the sales organization of said competitor, thereby causing a substantial diversion of trade from the said competitors to the respondents in interstate commerce.

PAR. 10. The acts and practices of the respondents, as aforesaid, likewise have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial number of the members of the purchasing public into the false beliefs that:

1. Certain commodities vended by the respondents were and are manufactured under the direction of, or according to a formula prepared by a registered physician, when in truth and in fact such commodities are not so prepared.

2. Certain products and commodities vended by the respondents variously labeled as "Flavoring Extracts," "Walnuto," "Mapleo," and "Root Beer," and others, are in fact extracts when, in truth and in fact, they are but imitations of such.

As a result of such belief, many purchasers have purchased commodities of respondent and as a result thereof there has been caused a substantial diversion of trade to respondent from competitors in interstate commerce who do not falsely represent that the commodities vended by them have been manufactured by them and who do not falsely represent commodities vended by them to be extracts when in truth and in fact they are not.

PAR. 11. There are among the competitors of the respondents, a substantial number who truthfully represent that certain commodities vended by such competitors were and are manufactured under the direction of, or according to a formula of a physician; that certain flavoring extracts represented by them to be extracts are, in truth and in fact, genuine extracts.

PAR. 12. There are likewise among the competitors of the respondents, those who do not through the use of false and misleading statements and representations concerning the organization, business policy, or financial standing of their competitors, entice and endeavor to entice, employees of such competitors with the calculated design of thereby appropriating to themselves values created by such competitors.

PAR. 13. The above acts and practices done, and caused to be done by the respondents, are and were, each and all, to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 26th day of June 1936, issued, and on the 29th day of June 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Van Ogden, Inc., and Frederick T. Gordon, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Alden S. Bradley, attorney for the Commission, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Charles J. Trainor, attorney for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceedings came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (respondent not having requested oral argument), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., is a corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Chicago, in such State. Frederick T. Gordon is an individual, the president and treasurer of the respondent corporation and its managing officer. He is a resident of and has his principal place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., is a corporation under the direct management, supervision, direction, and control of the respondent, Frederick T. Gordon, and is engaged in the sale and transportation of chemicals, extracts, and other food products. In the course and conduct of its said business, Van Ogden, Inc., sells, transports, and causes to be transported the above named commodities from the State of Illinois into the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and in the District of Columbia. Such sales are, and have been, made to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States as aforesaid, through the medium of personal solicitation of prospective purchasers by agents, salesmen, and other representatives of the respondent corporation. Pursuant to orders procured thereby, shipments have been made, and are made, as aforesaid. Respondent has thus maintained a course of trade and commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., under the supervision of Frederick T. Gordon, has been and is now in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, and copartnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of commodities of like nature, character, and design in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent is charged in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the complaint with enticing away employees of a competitor corporation. However, this charge is not substantiated by a preponderance of the evidence and appears to be a private controversy, lacking in public interest.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent corporation has advertised through the medium of circulars and pamphlets distributed throughout the various States of the United States, describing two of its products under the trade names or brands of:

Dr. Gordon's Solid Comfort Foot Soap, and

and has made various other statements intended to create the impression that the commodities so labeled and designed were, and are, manufactured under the direction or according to the formula of a registered physician. The two commodities above listed are in fact named after respondent, Frederick T. Gordon, who is not a registered pharmacist, nor a physician.

Respondent has also distributed circulars in interstate commerce advertising certain of its products as flavor extracts. Included under this head are such products as "Walnuto," "Mapleo," and "Rootbeer". Over a period of many years, the trade and the public generally have been led to and do now believe and consider an "extract" offered for sale as a flavoring ingredient to be a compound wherein a flavoring is secured by the extraction of juices from beans, berries, nuts, or fruit. Such juices are then suspended in alcohol which is recognized as the most desirable vehicle that can be used for dissolving and preserving extracts of juices from beans, nuts, berries, or fruits. The evidence shows that the product advertised and represented as extracts by respondent are not extracts within the common meaning and acceptance of the term, but are imitation extracts composed not of genuine ingredients, but of synthetic chemical substitutes.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of respondents as herein described have had, and have, the tendency and capacity to confuse and deceive the purchasing public in regard to the true nature and quality of its products and to induce purchasers to buy such products on account of the mistaken belief that these products are made in accordance with a doctor's prescription, and are true extracts. Trade is thereby unfairly diverted to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in commerce as herein defined of products similar to those sold and distributed by said respondent, which competitors truthfully advertise and represent their products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Van Ogden, Inc., and Frederick T. Gordon, are to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondent, Van Ogden, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, and respondent, Frederick T. Gordon, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of their soaps, toilet articles, and food flavors in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Directly or indirectly using or causing to be used the word "Doctor" or the abbreviation "Dr." in connection or in conjunction with the name, or in any way as a trade name, brand, or designation for their products, or in any way which may have the capacity and tendency to confuse and mislead or deceive purchasers into the belief that said products are made in accordance with the prescription of a doctor, or under the supervision of a doctor, when such is not a fact.

2. Designating any food flavors as extracts unless and until the product is composed of genuine ingredients as distinguished from synthetic chemical substitutes and such ingredients are suspended in ethyl alcohol.

Order

26 F. T. C.

It is further ordered, That that part of the complaint dealing with the enticement of competitors' employees be dismissed for lack of public interest.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

MIDWEST PUBLISHING COMPANY, AND WALTER H. GORHAM, INDIVIDUALLY, AND AS PRESIDENT OF MIDWEST PUBLISHING COMPANY

Docket 2893. Complaint, Aug. 10, 1936—Decision, Mar. 18, 1938

Where a corporation and an individual, substantially sole owner thereof and responsible for its policies and activities, engaged in sale of its so-called "Modern American Encyclopedia," together with extension service therefor, through agents and representatives supplied with advertising folders, prospectuses, sample volumes, order blanks or contracts, sales talks, and other literature and paraphernalia for exhibition, distribution, and use in connection with sale or solicitation thereof; pursuant to a scheme to foist upon purchasing public at a profit said old and obsolete set of reference books, of little or no value as such, and consisting of reprints, poorly made on inferior paper from plates cast in 1891, and ownership of which plates changed hands from time to time, and then currently issued and sold under aforesaid deceptive and misleading title—

- (a) Represented verbally through said authorized agents, etc., and through advertisements, letters, etc., to prospective and actual purchasing public throughout United States, that their said "Modern American Encyclopedia" was in fact a new, modern, and up-to-date encyclopedia and reference work, and had been kept perpetually up-to-date and up to the minute, facts being, printed as aforesaid, with only few page or minor revisions between 1912 and 1922, and none in following decade, and only minor ones between 1932 and 1934, and none of substance since, it had not been for many years, and was not then, a modern or up-to-date reference work which in any reasonable degree met needs and requirements of purchasing and using public for reliable work of reference;
- (b) Set forth in broadside, issued as part of their advertising and in which was included expression "keep abreast of the times," list of 33 persons prominent in particular fields of learning or industry, and represented that each had contributed substantially to said alleged new and modern work, facts being none had made any contribution thereto or done anything in connection therewith to make it new and modern so as to enable purchaser to keep abreast of the times, and only contribution was a very slight one on the part of a few to the original work in 1891 and earlier revisions thereof, and some of persons so listed had been dead for a number of years;
- (c) Represented that in order to keep said "Modern American Encyclopedia" from becoming obsolete and getting out of date, they would furnish a 10-year, quarterly, loose-leaf, extension service to purchasers which made and kept information in set current, facts being that they discontinued such loose-leaf service within first 2 years of said 10-year period and issued and used in lieu thereof so-called Year Book, for which they usually demanded and received $1 a year, and which they offered to purchasers, after expiration of said period, for $7.50 a year, but which was of little or no authoritative value as reference work, and did not make and keep information in set current, etc., and $7.50 price of which was not regular or intended retail price, but fictitious, and used and offered solely to induce purchasers to believe that book was of a much greater value than $1, or regular price at which offered;

- (d) Represented in many instances to prospective purchasers that set's regular price, at which offered, ranging from $15.75 to $19.80, was a special and reduced one and much less than its usual price, represented as several times the true one, and variously stated former as being from $59 to $80, with extra charge for 10-year, quarterly, loose-leaf, extension service, ranging from $1 to $7.50 a year, facts being no sets were ever sold for more than offered price and higher figures were either for original issue when new or for sets in special deluxe bindings;
- (e) Represented that certain other books, value of which was stated as being equal to or in excess of total purchase price of set, would be delivered to prospective purchasers free and as a gratuity and as a result of purchase of encyclopedia, facts being so-called "free" books were not thus given, but price thereof, including profit to themselves, was included in and made part of purchase price of set, and value of said pretended, free books was not equal to or in excess of purchase price of set;
- (f) Falsely represented that price quoted at any time for said offer was "just what" purchaser is "to pay" for everything, facts being extra annual, or total, price was later demanded for 10-year service of current replacement pages or Year Book;
- (g) Represented that other purchasers or persons had recommended prospect for special list of those to receive set at alleged pretended special price, or to receive complimentary set free in return for card to be filed, facts being no such recommendation had been made and no free sets were given out, but cards obtained were used by them in procuring entree to other prospects, and books promised free were not sent;

With effect of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true and into purchase of said books in and on account of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced by said acts and practices, and with result that trade was diverted unfairly to them from their competitors who do not resort to false and deceptive practices in sale of their respective reference books, and with tendency and capacity so to mislead and deceive:

Held, That such acts, practices and representations were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Walter H. Gorham and Midwest Publishing Company, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as defined by said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Midwest Publishing Company, is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois. Respondent, Walter H. Gorham, is the sole owner of respondent, Midwest Publishing Company (except qualifying shares in the name of the secretary), and fixes its policies and directs its activities. Respondents' plant, office, and principal place of business is located at 540 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Respondents are now and for some time have been engaged in the business of selling books, chief among which is a set of reference books now called "Modern American Encyclopedia," together with extension service therefor.

PAR. 2. Said respondents being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause said books, when sold, to be transported from respondents' place of business in the State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which shipments are made. Respondents now maintain a constant current of trade in commerce in said books, distributed and sold by them, between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are now and have been in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling reference books, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their said business in selling and seeking to sell said encyclopedia, and the extension services, respondents employ various agents, solicitors, salesmen, and representatives, who are authorized and directed to solicit orders for, and to sell said commodities to prospective purchasers in the several States, said salesmen and representatives ordinarily traveling from place to place and canvassing prospective purchasers at such places. Respondents furnish such salesmen and representatives with advertising folders, prospectuses, sample volumes, order blanks or contracts, sales talks, and other literature and paraphernalia, which are exhibited, distributed, and used in connection with the sale or solicitations for the sale of said books, and extension services. Upon a sale being made by such salesmen or representatives, the purchaser is asked to sign a printed order or contract which is then transmitted to the respondent. Respondent thereupon causes a shipment of said books and extension services to be made to such purchaser from Chicago, Ill. At the time the order is signed the salesman or representative usually collects a down payment from the purchaser, and the order or contract so signed ordinarily requires additional payments in installments until the total purchase price is paid in full.

PAR. 5. During the time above mentioned, in the course and conduct of their said business, respondents, through verbal statements made by their agents, salesmen, representatives, and employees, and by means of their advertisements, letters, order blanks, sales talks, and other literature used and distributed and exhibited to prospective purchasers and to purchasers, have represented and now represent to the prospective and actual purchasing public throughout the United States the matters and things hereinafter set forth:

1. That said so-called "Modern American Encyclopedia" is a new, modern, and up-to-date encyclopedia and reference work.

The truth and facts are that Walter H. Gorham, and two associates organized an Illinois corporation known as "Modern American Company," and also organized respondent corporation, Midwest Publishing Company. Acting through the former, respondent and said two associates purchased a set of old plates made in 1891 from which, at various times from 1891 to 1933, four prior owners had printed and sold five separate issues or editions of reference books, under four different titles, to-wit: the original issue or edition was called "New Practical Reference Library"; the second and third issues or editions were called "New Students' Reference Works"; the fourth issue or edition was called "Students' Reference Works"; and the fifth issue or edition was called "Students' Encyclopedia." From these old plates, very slightly revised, Modern American Company has been and now is printing, as called for by respondent Gorham and his associates above named, a sixth issue or edition under the name "Modern American Encyclopedia," "1934 Edition," and "1935 Edition." Respondents, having bought said sets, sell and distribute same in commerce as above described.

Respondents also failed and neglected in any proper way to disclose to or inform its prospective purchasers of the fact that its said so-called Modern American Encyclopedia is an old work, as above described, and is substantially the same as prior sets of reference works put out at various times from 1891 to 1933 under the various other names and titles above stated.

The chief value of any reference book or set is that it is in fact "Modern" and contains the latest facts and data available on each subject treated. The purchasing public generally buys such reference books or sets or encyclopedias chiefly for the purpose of procuring such up-to-date facts, data and information, and generally rely implicitly upon them as furnishing exactly that, up to the date of actual issue. Reference books which purport to be, but are not of that character, are not only in themselves misleading, deceptive, and of little or no value for the purposes for which purchased, but are in fact injurious to the purchasing public who consult and read them, by reason of the misguided reliance placed on the antiquated data, erroneous facts, and superseded theories and processes therein set forth or treated. The many and rapid scientific, historical, and other changes and discoveries that have occurred since 1891, the date of the plates from which respondents' issues of the so-called "Modern American Encyclopedia" are printed, render it practically valueless as a reference work.

For these reasons, all claims, representations, and implications, as above described, made by respondents, have been and are false, fraudulent, misleading, deceptive, and injurious to the purchasing public in that they tend to and do confuse and mislead the public into the belief that they are buying and obtaining for use a new and useful up-to-date reference work.

2. As a part of their advertising of said work and to induce its purchase, respondents issued a broadside containing the expression "Keep abreast of the times." This broadside contains a list of 33 persons, each prominent in some particular field of learning or industry, and respondents represented that each of these had contributed substantially to such alleged new and modern encyclopedia.

In truth and in fact, not one of the persons named in said lists has made any contribution to the "Modern American Encyclopedia" or done anything in connection therewith to make it a new and modern encyclopedia so as to enable a purchaser to "keep abreast of the times," save that some few of the persons named did contribute very slightly to the said original work in 1891, and the earlier revisions thereof. Some of the persons listed have been dead for a number of years.

The use and circulation of said broadside and list is false, deceptive, and misleading, and tends to and does further the deception of the members of the purchasing public into the belief that they are receiving a work which is new and "modern," and is being kept "abreast of the times," by substantial contributions from the several persons on said list.

3. Part of the sales talk which sales people of respondents were and are instructed to make, is as follows:

Mrs. Miller, one valid complaint against encyclopedias is that they get out of date very quickly. At the rate the world moves today it is not too much to say that an encyclopedia depreciates in value at least ten per cent a year. That rate of depreciation means that in ten years an encyclopedia is obsolete and of no value like an old city directory. But the publishers of this encyclopedia do not permit it to get out of date.

The purpose and effect of such sales talk was and is to further impress upon prospective purchasers the quick obsolescence of such reference work, the modern and up-to-date character of respondents' said encyclopedias, by thus coupling with a correct statement as to the rapid obsolescence of all authoritative reference works, the direct assertion that the encyclopedias which respondents are selling are not permitted to get out of date.

The truth and fact is that such assertion is grossly false, contrary to the facts as above set forth.

4. Respondents represented that, in order to keep the "Modern American Encyclopedia" from becoming obsolete and from getting "out of date," they would furnish a 10-year quarterly loose-leaf service to purchasers which makes and keeps the information in the set current. When less than 2 years of the 10-year period had expired, as to the first of such loose-leaf services promised, the quarterly loose-leaf service was discontinued and in lieu thereof the respondents issued and now use a so-called year book, for which they usually demand and receive a price of $1 per year and which they offer to furnish to purchasers after the expiration of the 10-year period for the sum of $7.50 per year.

In truth and in fact, said year book is of little or no authoritative value as a reference work and does not make and keep the information in the set current and thereby prevent it from becoming obsolete and from getting "out of date." The price of $7.50 at which the year book is offered after the expiration of the 10-year period, is a fictitious price and not the regular or intended retail price at which said year book is to be sold, and is used and offered solely to induce purchasers to believe that the year book is of a much greater value than the price at which it is now offered, $1 per year. In truth and in fact, the price of $1 per year for said year book is the regular price for it, and such price will yield respondent a profit on any reasonable volume of sales.

5. Respondents offer the "Modern American Encyclopedia" at prices ranging from $15.75 to $19.80 a set and, in many instances, represent to prospective purchasers that this is a special and reduced price, much less than the usual or regular price at which the set is sold. In such instances, the representation is made that the usual or regular price at which the set is sold is several times that at which it is being offered, and the usual or regular price is variously stated to be from $59 to $80 per set, with an extra charge for the 10-year quarterly loose-leaf service, variously quoted to be from $1 to $4 per year.

The truth and fact is that no sets of respondents' encyclopedia were ever sold for more than the offered price, the higher prices named were either for the original issue when it was new, or for sets in special De Luxe bindings, and the usual or regular price for the set was from $15.75 to $19.80.

6. To induce prospective purchasers to purchase said encyclopedia the respondents, in many instances, represent that certain other books, the value of which is represented as being equal to or in excess of the total purchase price of the set, will be delivered to said prospective purchaser free and as a gratuity, if the encyclopedia is purchased.

In truth and in fact, said "free" books are not given as a gratuity but the price therefor, including a profit to the respondents, is included in and made a part of the purchase price of the set, and the value of said "free" books is not equal to or in excess of the purchase price for the set.

7. Respondents represented that the price quoted at any time for the set offered is "just what" the purchaser is "to pay" * * * "for everything."

This representation was false and deceptive in that an extra annual or total price was later demanded for the 10-year service of current replacement pages or Year Book.

8. Respondents represented that other purchasers or persons had recommended the prospect for a special list to receive the set at the alleged special price aforementioned or to receive a complimentary set free in return for a card to be filed.

The truth is that no one had so recommended any prospect, and that no free sets were given out, but when cards were obtained they were used by respondents in procuring entree to other prospects, and the books promised to be sent free were not sent.

9. Respondents at all times have recklessly hired applicants for sales positions indiscriminately and with no effort to learn of their character and capacity, and have permitted and acquiesced in the representations made by such sales people touching said set which were made to the prospective purchasers among other ways in form and substance in all the manners hereinbefore described.

The whole plan and methods employed by respondents constitute merely a scheme to foist upon the purchasing public, at a profit, an old and obsolete set of reference books of little or no value as reference books, by reprints poorly made on inferior quality of paper, from plates cast in 1891, and now issued and sold under the deceptive and misleading title "Modern American Encyclopedia."

PAR. 6. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents have the tendency and capacity to and do mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public and cause it erroneously to believe that said representations are true, and, because of such erroneous belief, to purchase these reference books of the respondents, with the result that trade in said commerce is unfairly diverted to the respondents from said competitors who do not misrepresent their reference books, to the substantial injury of said competitors and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 7. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondents have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 10, 1936 issued and on August 12, 1936 duly served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Midwest Publishing Company, a corporation, and Walter H. Gorham, individually and as president of Midwest Publishing Company, a corporation, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. No answer was filed by either respondent but after the issuance of the complaint, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Wm. T. Chantland and Henry Junge, Jr., attorneys for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by respondent Walter H. Gorham appearing in his own behalf and on behalf of respondent Midwest Publishing Company, a corporation, before John W. Norwood, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint, no brief having been filed by respondent (no oral argument having been requested), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Midwest Publishing Company, is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois. Respondent, Walter H. Gorham, is the sole owner of respondent, Midwest Publishing Company (except qualifying shares in the name of the secretary), and fixes its policies and directs its activities. Respondents' plant, office, and principal place of business is located at 540 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Respondents are now and for some years have been engaged in the business of selling books, chief among which is a set of reference books now called "Modern American Encyclopedia," together with extension service therefor.

PAR. 2. Respondents, being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause said books, when sold, to be transported from their place of business in the State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments are made, and respondents have maintained a course of trade in commerce in said books and extension services sold and distributed by them, between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are now and have been in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling reference books and services in connection therewith, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their said business in selling and seeking to sell said encyclopedia, and the extension services, respondents employ various agents, solicitors, salesmen, and representatives, who are authorized and directed to solicit orders for, and to sell said reference books and the extension services in connection therewith to prospective purchasers in the several States, and said salesmen and representatives travel from place to place and canvass prospective purchasers. Respondents furnish such salesmen and representatives with advertising folders, prospectuses, sample volumes, order blanks or contracts, sales talks, and other literature and paraphernalia, which are exhibited, distributed and used in connection with the sale or solicitations for the sale of said books, and extension services. When a sale is made by any such salesman or representative, the purchaser is asked to sign and does sign a printed order or contract which is then transmitted to the respondents. Respondents thereupon cause a shipment of said books and extension services to be made to such purchaser from Chicago, Ill.

At the time the order is signed the salesman or representative usually collects a down payment from the purchaser, and the order or contract so signed ordinarily requires additional payments in installments until the total purchase price is paid in full.

PAR. 5. During the time above mentioned, in the course and conduct of their said business, and as inducement to the purchase of said books and services, respondents, through verbal statements made by their agents, salesmen, representatives, and employees, and by means of their advertisements, letters, order blanks, sales talks, and other literature used and distributed and exhibited to prospective purchasers and to purchasers, have represented to the prospective and actual purchasing public throughout the United States, that respondents' so-called "Modern American Encyclopedia" has been and is in fact a new, modern, up-to-date encyclopedia and reference work, and that it has been kept perpetually up-to-date and up to the minute.

Reference books are valuable only in proportion to their accuracy and up-to-dateness. Failing in either, they are to that extent in and of themselves misleading and deceptive to those who buy and use them in reliance upon their up-to-date accuracy. Obsolescence of such works approximates 10 percent per annum, so that if unrevised such a work in 10 years becomes practically valueless for its intended purposes.

Respondents' said so-called "Modern Encyclopedia" is printed from plates originally made long prior to 1912 when they changed hands. The plates had been reset in 1908, after which and until 1922 there had been made only some few page revisions, or revisions of less amount. In about 1922 the plates again twice changed hands, the latter vendee at that time holding and owning them without revision until about 1932 when they were purchased by the Modern American Corporation, a holding company, in part owned by respondent Gorham. Since 1932 only minor revision work has been done on said plates and none of substance since 1934, so that respondents' said "Modern American Encyclopedia" has not been for many years and is not now a modern or up-to-date reference work which in any reasonable degree meets the needs and requirements of the purchasing and using public for a reliable reference work.

PAR. 6. As a part of the plan or scheme to sell and distribute said "Modern American Encyclopedia" and the extension service in connection therewith in interstate commerce, and as inducements to procuring purchasers therefor—persons, each prominent in some particular field of learning or industry, and respondents represented that each of these had contributed substantially to such alleged new and modern encyclopedia. In truth and in fact, not one of the persons named in said lists has made any contribution to the "Modern American Encyclopedia" or done anything in connection therewith to make it a new and modern encyclopedia so as to enable a purchaser to "keep abreast of the times," save that some few of the persons named did contribute very slightly to the said original work in 1891, and the earlier revisions thereof. Some of the persons listed have been dead for a number of years.

(b) Respondents represented that, in order to keep the "Modern American Encyclopedia" from becoming obsolete and from getting "out of date," they would furnish a 10-year quarterly loose-leaf service to purchasers which makes and keeps the information in the set current. When less than 2 years of the 10-year period had expired, as to the first of such loose-leaf services promised, the quarterly loose-leaf service was discontinued and in lieu thereof the respondents issued and now use a so-called year book, for which they usually demand and receive a price of $1 per year and which they offer to furnish to purchasers after the expiration of the 10-year period for the sum of $7.50 per year. In truth and in fact, said year book is of little or no authoritative value as a reference work and does not make and keep the information in the set current and thereby prevent it from becoming obsolete and from getting "out of date." The price of $7.50 at which the year book is offered after the expiration of the 10-year period, is a fictitious price and not the regular or intended retail price at which said year book is to be sold, and is used and offered solely to induce purchasers to believe that the year book is of a much greater value than the price at which it is now offered, $1 per year. In truth and in fact, the price of $1 per year for said year book is the regular price for it, and such price will yield respondent a profit on any reasonable volume of sales.

(c) Respondents offer the "Modern American Encyclopedia" at prices ranging from $15.75 a set to $19.80 a set and, in many instances, represent to prospective purchasers that this is a special and reduced price, much less than the usual or regular price at which the set is sold. In such instances, the representation is made that the usual or regular price at which the set is sold is several times that at which it is being offered, and the usual or regular price is variously stated to be from $59 to $80 per set, with an extra charge for the 10-year quarterly loose-leaf service, variously quoted to be from $1 to $7.50 per year. The truth and fact is that no sets of respondents' encyclopedia were ever sold for more than the offered price, the higher prices named were either for the original issue when it was new, or for sets in special De Luxe bindings, and the usual or regular price for the set was from $15.75 to $19.80.

(d) Respondents, to induce prospective purchasers to purchase said encyclopedia, in many instances, represent that certain other books, the value of which is represented as being equal to or in excess of the total purchase price of the set, will be delivered to said prospective purchaser free and as a gratuity, if the encyclopedia is purchased. In truth and in fact, said "free" books are not given as a gratuity but the price therefor, including a profit to the respondents, is included in and made a part of the purchase price of the set, and the value of said "free" books is not equal to or in excess of the purchase price for the set.

(e) Respondents represented that the price quoted at any time for the set offered is "just what" the purchaser is "to pay" * * * "for everything." This representation was false and deceptive in that an extra annual or total price was later demanded for the 10-year service of current replacement pages or Year Book.

(f) Respondents represented that other purchasers or persons had recommended the prospect for a special list to receive the set at the alleged special price aforementioned or to receive a complimentary set free in return for a card to be filed. The truth is that no one had so recommended any prospect, and that no free sets were given out, but when cards were obtained they were used by respondents in procuring entree to other prospects, and the books promised to be sent free were not sent.

(g) Respondents have permitted, authorized, and benefited from, the representations made to prospective purchasers by their agents concerning said set, which representations were made as hereinbefore set out, and in various other forms.

PAR. 7. The whole plan and methods employed by respondents constitute merely a scheme to foist upon the purchasing public, at a profit, an old and obsolete set of reference books of little or no value as reference books, by reprints poorly made on inferior quality of paper, from plates cast in 1891, and now issued and sold under the deceptive and misleading title "Modern American Encyclopedia."

PAR. 8. There are among the competitors of respondents engaged in the sale of books of reference, as mentioned in paragraph 3 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals, who do not in connection with such sale, resort to the false and deceptive practices hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents have the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that said representations are true and into the purchase of respondents' reference books in and on account of the aforesaid erroneous and mistaken beliefs so induced by the acts and practices of the respondents. As a result trade has been diverted unfairly to the respondents from their aforesaid competitors who do not resort to false, misleading, and deceptive acts and practices in the sale of their respective competitive reference books.

CONCLUSION

The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondents have been, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Midwest Publishing Company, a corporation, and its officers, and Walter H. Gorham, individually, and their respective representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of encyclopedia now entitled "Modern American Encyclopedia" and extension services in connection therewith and of other books, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist from, directly or indirectly, or through any corporate or other device, advertising or in any other manner representing:

1. That respondents' so-called "Modern American Encyclopedia" is a new, modern, up-to-date encyclopedia or reference work, or that it has been kept up-to-date.

Order

26 F. T. C.

2. That any person or persons, especially those prominent in particular fields of learning, have contributed substantially or at all to any revision of said so-called "Modern American Encyclopedia," when such is not the fact.

3. That respondents furnish any extension service of a kind or character that will keep said "Modern American Encyclopedia" up-to-date, unless and until they furnish such service.

4. That the regular price for which respondents will furnish to the purchaser of said "Modern American Encyclopedia" an annual extension service is greater than the price at which said extension service is actually and usually sold.

5. That respondents furnish any specified character of extension service for any specified term of years, when such is not the fact.

6. That the regular prices at which the sets of encyclopedias and services are habitually and generally offered are special prices or reduced prices offered only to a selected list of persons, for special reasons.

7. That other allegedly valuable books offered in connection with said "Modern American Encyclopedia" are given free or as a gratuity when in fact the price named includes payment at a profit for all of the books so offered and delivered.

8. That any price that a purchaser will be required to pay for the books and services offered and sold, is different from the total price which respondents actually collect or attempt to collect.

9. That any prospect has been recommended to receive a set of said reference or other books and services in connection therewith at a special price, or as a free gift, or in return for a testimonial letter, when any of said representations are untrue.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF

ALBERT L. HILKEMEYER AND LEONARD HILKEMEYER, INDIVIDUALLY, AND TRADING AS DIXIE HATCH-
ERIES, AND AS JEFFERSON FARMS

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3285. Complaint, Dec. 21, 1937—Decision, Mar. 19, 1938

Where two individuals, engaged as part owners and under profit-sharing arrangements in business of hatching, selling, and distributing poultry and baby chicks under name "Dixie Hatcheries"—

Advertised, over such name, their said business in various issues of poultry journals and papers of interstate circulation, in which issues, in substantially identical advertisements, they offered, at a much lower scale of prices, same grade and type of baby chicks over trade name of Jefferson Farms, then inoperative hatchery of one of said individuals, and turned over for filling to former hatcheries and filled at same prices, with one exception, orders coming to latter, in competition with those who do not falsely advertise or otherwise represent that affiliated or branch businesses are separate and distinct competing businesses;

With effect of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that such representations were true and that said Dixie Hatcheries and Jefferson Farms were separate and distinct competing business, and into purchase of said chicks because of erroneous and mistaken beliefs thus induced, and with result that trade was unfairly diverted to them from competitors who do not misrepresent their business connection or status, and with tendency and capacity so to mislead and deceive; to the injury of such competitors:

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice of public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Wm. T. Chantland for the Commission.

Stokes & Stokes and Mr. John W. Hilldrop for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Albert L. Hilkemeyer and Leonard Hilkemeyer, individually, and trading as Dixie Hatcheries and as Jefferson Farms, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Albert L. Hilkemeyer is an individual residing at Westphalia, Missouri, and for some time last past he has been, and is now, doing business as the owner-lessor of a number of baby chick hatcheries located in States of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tennessee, including one located at 2401 Second Avenue, North Birmingham, Ala., which is known as the Dixie Hatcheries. Respondent Leonard Hilkemeyer is a part owner of the chick hatchery business operated in Birmingham under the name Dixie Hatcheries, and said respondent, for some time last past has operated, and now operates, said Dixie Hatcheries under an agreement by which each of said respondents share in the profits from said business. Respondent Leonard Hilkemeyer maintains his residence at 2401 Second Avenue, North Birmingham, and at Jefferson Farms, Highway 31, twelve miles north of Birmingham, Ala.

Respondents are now, and have been for some time past, engaged in the business of hatching, selling, and distributing poultry, more particularly young chickens which are commonly known and referred to as "baby chicks." The business in which the respondents are engaged is commonly known as and is hereinafter referred to as the chick-hatchery business. Respondents in the course and conduct of their business under the name Dixie Hatcheries sell and distribute said baby chicks to members of the public and cause said chicks, when sold, to be transported from the State of Alabama, the State of origin of the shipment, to purchasers thereof located at points in the various States of the United States other than the State of Alabama. There is now, and has been during all the times herein mentioned, a course of trade in commerce in said baby chicks sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents are now, and have been during all the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in hatching, offering for sale, and selling baby chicks to members of the general public in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. As part of their said business operations, said respondents have, for some time last past and since June 1, 1936, caused to be inserted in various issues of poultry journals and papers having an interstate circulation certain advertisements over the trade name of Dixie Hatcheries and other advertisements substantially identical except with a much lower scale of prices for the same grade and types of baby chicks over the trade name of Jefferson Farms.

The use of the different trade names Jefferson Farms and Dixie Hatcheries in connection with advertising the same grades and types of baby chicks at different prices serves as a representation to prospective purchasers that the businesses conducted under the names Dixie Hatcheries and Jefferson Farms were, and are, separate and distinct competing chick-hatchery businesses. Through use of such advertisements and representations, and through the quoting of cheaper prices for the same grades and types of baby chicks by the Jefferson Farms, the respondents induce inquiries and orders by members of the purchasing public. Such inquiries and orders are answered under the trade name Dixie Hatcheries with quotations of prices higher than those originally quoted in the advertisements over the name Jefferson Farms, and sales are made under the name Dixie Hatcheries with baby chicks hatched by said Dixie Hatcheries.

PAR. 4. At one time, respondent Leonard Hilkemeyer conducted a baby chick hatchery at Jefferson Farms near Birmingham, Ala. In the conduct of such business, respondent did business under the name Jefferson Farms, but he ceased all operations of such business about June 1, 1936. Since that time, all the operations and business relating to baby chicks theretofore conducted at Jefferson Farms by respondent Leonard Hilkemeyer under the trade name Jefferson Farms, included those resulting from the aforementioned advertising printed under the trade name Jefferson Farms have been carried on by respondents as part of the business operations conducted under the trade name Dixie Hatcheries.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact the baby chick-hatchery business formerly conducted under the name Jefferson Farms has not been in operation since June 1, 1936 and respondents have actually operated only one business at or near Birmingham, Ala., since that date, although they have continued to represent and hold themselves out as the operators of two separate and distinct competing businesses for the purpose and with the effect of attracting additional inquiries, contacts and purchasers from members of the public. Respondents do not conduct any chick hatchery operation at the Jefferson Farms and this name is used by them in their aforesaid advertisements solely for the purpose of inducing inquiries on account of the advertised lower prices. The advertisements appearing over the name Jefferson Farms are merely a subterfuge for the business conducted under the name Dixie Hatcheries. The Dixie Hatcheries replies to all correspondence and inquiries addressed to Jefferson Farms and it makes all sales secured pursuant thereto at higher prices than originally quoted in the advertisements under the name Jefferson Farms.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of respondents many who do not advertise or otherwise represent that affiliated or branch businesses are separate and distinct competing businesses, when such is not the fact, and who do not otherwise misrepresent the character and status of their respective businesses by operating the same plant under two or more different names, or selling the same quality or grade of chicks at the same or different prices using separate sets of literature, or in any other manner.

PAR. 7. The acts and practices of the respondents as above alleged in the course of selling and offering for sale their baby chicks in commerce as described herein have the capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true and that Dixie Hatcheries and Jefferson Farms are separate and distinct competing businesses, and into the purchase of respondents' baby chicks on account of the erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced as aforesaid. As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from those of their competitors rereferred to in paragraph 6 hereof who do not misrepresent their business connection or status. In consequence thereof, injury has been, and is being, done to respondents' competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts and practices have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and the respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on December 21, 1937 issued, and on December 23, 1937 served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Albert L. Hilkemeyer and Leonard Hilkemeyer, individually, and trading as Dixie Hatcheries and as Jefferson Farms, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance and service of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondents' motion for leave to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substituted answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Albert L. Hilkemeyer is an individual residing at Westphalia, Mo., and for some time last past he has been, and is now, doing business as the owner-lessor of a number of baby chick hatcheries located in States of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tennessee, including one located at 2401 Second Avenue, North Birmingham, Ala., which is known as the Dixie Hatcheries. Respondent Leonard Hilkemeyer is a part owner of the chick-hatchery business operated in Birmingham under the name Dixie Hatcheries, and said respondent, for some time last past, has operated, and now operates, said Dixie Hatcheries under an agreement by which each of said respondents share in the profits from said business. Respondent Leonard Hilkemeyer maintains his residence at 2401 Second Avenue, North Birmingham, and at Jefferson Farms, Highway 31, 12 miles north of Birmingham, Ala.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and have been for some time past, engaged in the business of hatching, selling, and distributing poultry, more particularly young chickens which are commonly known and referred to as "baby chicks." The business in which the respondents are engaged is commonly known as, and is hereinafter referred to as the chick hatchery business. Respondents in the course and conduct of their business under the name Dixie Hatcheries sell and distribute said baby chicks to members of the public and cause said chicks, when sold, to be transported from the State of Alabama, the State of origin of the shipment, to purchasers thereof located at points in the various States of the United States other than the State of Alabama. There is now, and has been during all the times herein mentioned, a course of trade in commerce in said baby chicks sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents are now, and have been during all the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in hatching, offering for sale, and selling baby chicks to members of the general public in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. As part of their said business operations, said respondents have, for some time last past and particularly from June 1, 1936 to February 1937, caused to be inserted in various issues of poultry journals and papers having an interstate circulation certain advertisements over the trade name of Dixie Hatcheries and other advertisements substantially identical except with a much lower scale of prices for the same grade and types of baby chicks over the trade name of Jefferson Farms.

PAR. 5. For some time during 1936 and 1937, and particularly from June 1, 1936 to February 1937, the Jefferson Farms Hatchery was closed down and all orders coming to it were turned over to Dixie Hatcheries to be filled. With one exception, the prices at which these orders were filled by the Dixie Hatcheries were not higher than those quoted in the current Jefferson Farms' advertisements.

PAR. 6. Jefferson Farms has now been leased and its control and operation passed to the lessee.

PAR. 7. Among competitors of respondents are many who do not advertise or otherwise represent that affiliated or branch businesses are separate and distinct competing businesses when such is not the fact.

PAR. 8. The advertising of respondents as above described has the tendency and capacity to and does mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations were true, and that Dixie Hatcheries and Jefferson Farms were separate and distinct competing businesses, and so into the purchase of respondents' baby chicks because of the erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced as aforesaid. As a result thereof trade was unfairly diverted to respondents from those of their competitors who did not thus misrepresent their business connection or status to the injury of such competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The above and foregoing acts and practices have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and of the respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Albert L. Hilkemeyer and Leonard Hilkemeyer, individually, and trading as Dixie Hatcheries, and as Jefferson Farms, their representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of baby chicks in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or indirectly, or by implication, in their advertising or in any other manner, representing:

That any baby chick hatchery or business owned, operated, or controlled by them or either of them is otherwise owned, operated, or controlled; or that one of two or more such hatcheries or businesses owned, operated, or controlled by either or both of them is competitive with the others similarly owned.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
SELECTED KENTUCKY DISTILLERS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3047. Complaint, Feb. 3, 1937—Decision, Mar. 26, 1938

Where a corporation engaged as wholesaler only of whiskies, wines, liquors, gins, and champagnes purchased from distillers and rectifiers, and doing no distilling, rectifying, or bottling, and neither owning, operating nor controlling any place or places where alcoholic beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and in competition, as thus engaged, with individuals and concerns who manufacture and distill, from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and truthfully use words "Distillery," "Distilleries," "Distillers," or "Distilling" as part of their corporate or trade names on labels of bottles in which they sell and ship their said whiskies, etc., and with those engaged as purchasers, rectifiers, blenders, bottlers, and sellers of whiskies, etc., or as wholesalers thereof, who do not use said words as aforesaid—

Falsely represented, through use of term "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and invoices and on labels attached to bottles in which it sold and shipped its products, and in various other ways, to customers, whom it thereby furnished with means of similarly representing to their retailer-vendees and to ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller of whiskies, wines, gins, and champagnes, i. e., as long understood by trade and ultimate purchasing public, engaged in manufacture of alcoholic beverages by process of original and continuous distillation from raw materials such as grain, mash, or wort;

With capacity and tendency to lead retail liquor dealers to purchase its said products under false impression that it was a distiller and owned and operated a distillery, and to induce purchasers and prospective purchasers unfairly to buy its said liquors in preference to those of competing wholesalers who do not thus falsely designate themselves, and with effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into aforesaid belief, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such belief, to buy said whiskies, etc., labeled and sold by it, and of thereby unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors who do not, through their corporate or trade names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are distillers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and with capacity and tendency so to do:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Robert S. Hall, trial examiner.

Mr. DeWitt T. Puckett for the Commission.

Mr. R. L. Durning, of Louisville, Ky., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Selected Kentucky Distillers, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Kentucky, with its office and principal place of business at 305 West Broadway, in the city of Louisville, Ky. It is now and for more than 1 year last past has been engaged as a wholesaler of spirituous liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers, and retailers, some located within the State of Kentucky, and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than 1 year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than 1 year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distilling," "distillery," "distilleries," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, or on their stationery, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, bottling, and selling at wholesale, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 3, 1937, issued, and on February 5, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Selected Kentucky Distillers, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it. No testimony or other evidence was introduced by the respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint. The said testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony, other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (no oral argument having been requested); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its finding as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kentucky, with its principal office and place of business at 653 South Third Street in the city of Louisville in said State. It was incorporated in May 1934, and has been continuously engaged since that time as a wholesaler only of whiskies, wines, liquors, gins, and champagnes, which it purchases from distillers and rectifiers. Respondent does no distilling, rectifying, or bottling.

Respondent's said products are distributed through other wholesalers, retail stores, taverns, and bars. When orders are received for respondent's said products, it causes them to be shipped from its place of business in Louisville, Ky., and from the points where the concerns from which it purchases said products are located, to the purchasers thereof located at various points outside the State of Kentucky. During 1935 and the first half of 1936, the respondent had wholesale permits to sell its merchandise in Missouri and Kentucky. Its total volume of business for 1935 was $480,000 and for the first half of 1936, it was $200,000.

At all times since respondent entered into said business, it has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in the sale and distribution, of whiskies, wines, liquors, gins, champagnes, and other spirituous beverages in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The corporate name, Selected Kentucky Distillers, Inc., appears on the letterheads, envelopes, and invoices used by respondent. The labels attached to its labeled products read "Bottled for Selected Kentucky Distillers," "Distilled and Bottled for Selected Kentucky Distillers," and "Bottled at the Distillery for Selected Kentucky Distillers." For a long period of time, the word "distillers," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of distillers, rectifiers, and wholesalers in such industry, and to the ultimate purchasing public; to wit, persons engaged in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages by the process of original and continuous distillation from raw materials such as grain, mash, or wort.

At a hearing in Louisville, Ky., 6 persons engaged in various aspects of the liquor industry and 13 members of the lay public testified as to the meaning of the trade name "Selected Kentucky Distillers" and the meaning and effect of the term "distillers" when used by a concern engaged in the distilled-spirits industry. From the testimony of the trade witnesses, the Commission finds that the term "distillers," when used on the labels or in other advertising matter by a concern engaged in the liquor industry, indicates that that concern is a distiller of alcoholic spirits; that use of the term has a commercial value; that wholesalers, retailers, and the purchasing public are influenced by use of the term and they prefer to buy from a concern that distills and bottles its own products. The Commission also finds from the testimony of the lay public witnesses that a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy alcoholic spirits from retailers who purchase their alcoholic beverages direct from the manufacturers thereof, as against the products of a wholesaler or rectifier; that that preference is based upon a belief that a better quality and more uniform product can thus be obtained; that ultimate purchasers are influenced in making purchases of alcoholic beverages by the labels borne thereby; that if such labels contain the word "distillers," it implies that the contents so labeled have been manufactured by the concern whose name appears thereon.

The Commission further finds that the inclusion of respondent's present corporate name upon the labels of the bottles in which it sells and ships its aforesaid liquors therefore has a tendency unfairly to induce purchasers and prospective purchasers to buy respondent's said liquors in preference to liquors sold by competing wholesalers who do not falsely designate themselves as distillers or distilling companies, and to induce retailers to purchase respondent's whiskies, wines, liquors, gins, and champagnes in preference to like products sold by wholesalers who do not use trade or corporate names having a capacity and tendency to confuse the purchasing public as to their status in the trade.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by use of the term "distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller of whiskies, wines, gins, and champagnes, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where any alcoholic beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash. The Commission finds that such advertising and labeling has been and is misleading and deceptive in fact and has had and now has the capacity and tendency to lead retail liquor dealers to purchase respondent's products under the false impression that respondent is a distiller and owns and operates a distillery.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products as whiskies, wines, liquors, gins, champagnes, and other alcoholic beverages. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in business as purchasers, rectifiers, blenders, bottlers, and sellers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, or as wholesalers thereof, who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers," as a part of their corporate or trade names on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent as set forth herein has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent is a distiller, and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, wines, gins, champagnes, and other spirituous beverages labeled and sold by the respondent, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from those of its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Selected Kentucky Distillers, Inc., are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Selected Kentucky Distillers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any way by a word, or words of like import (a) that respondent is a distiller of the said whiskies, wines, liquors, gins, champagnes, or other spirituous beverages; or, (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through a process of distillation; or (c) that respondent owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
CALIFORNIA RICE INDUSTRY, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3090, Complaint, Mar. 26, 1937—Decision, Mar. 26, 1938

- Where an unincorporated trade association, which included individuals and concerns and corporate cooperative organization of some 300 rice growers of northern California, engaged in said State in purchasing, processing, milling, and selling and distributing, in aforesaid and other States and as below set forth, the "California-Japan type," produced, substantially, only in said State and shipped, largely, to Hawaii and Puerto Rico; association officers, including individual who, as chairman of its marketing board and member of its crop board, was dominant factor in its organization and directing executive of its practices and those of (1) its said marketing board, membership of which, excepting said chairman (neither miller nor grower), constituted all the rice millers in said State, and of (2) its said crop board, which had come to be dominated, likewise, by millers, rather than, in accordance with original plan and fact, the independent growers; and association members; acting under and in pursuance of the "Intrastate Marketing Agreement" to which they became signatories shortly preceding termination by Secretary of Agriculture of the theretofore effective "Interstate Marketing Agreement," and under which intrastate agreement said association, and its said marketing and crop boards, were set up—
- (a) Fixed prices, terms of sales, quantity discounts, and brokerage fees for sale of processed rice in interstate commerce through actions of its marketing board from time to time in (1) fixing at weekly meetings, with concurrence of crop board, industry price for extra-fancy clean rice, through which, by formula adopted by former, base price, producer's price and trade prices for all grades of processed rice were computed, and in (2) fixing, through former alone, prices for screenings and brewers;
 - (b) Listed, published, and distributed, through said association and marketing board members, said prices, and uniformly observed and maintained same, both in purchase of paddy from growers, and on all sales of processed rice, whether sold in aforesaid State or sold and shipped to customers in Hawaii or other points, and charged trade, with rare exception, prices which, for given time and grade, were uniform;
 - (c) Acting in agreement with Hawaiian Rice Importers Association, organized by aforesaid interstate agreement's marketing board, and composed of islands' largest rice importers, to monopolize rice markets thereof for benefit of its own miller members, and membership of which importers' association board determined and classified, fixed discount to purchasers on so large a minimum, that no single buyer was able to take advantage thereof, made available to and enjoyed by said importers' association through pooling member requirements and placing pooled orders with miller members, and submitted to audit, in behalf of said importers' association, to guarantee such discounts, and deducted from sales to importer members, as dues to and for benefit of said importers' association, charge of cent a bag; with result that said importer members, as sole recipients through such membership, obtained monopoly, practically, of rice industry in said islands, and nonmembers were unable to purchase said preferred "California-Japan type" rice from said miller members at competitive price, and only negligible sales were made to them;

- (d) Fixed percentages, under aforesaid Intrastate Marketing Agreement, of total annual rice crop which each miller member of marketing board might process, and determined, through said board, monthly processing quota for each miller, and required payments of miller members on each 100-pound bag processed, with additional 10 cents for each bag processed in excess of allotted quota for preceding month, for said board's expenditures and for distribution thereafter among the membership, and provided for imposition of a penalty against any miller member for violating board's provisions; and
- (e) Employed, through said board, certified public accountants to check records and invoices of members, and to ascertain compliance with board's prices, terms of sale, quantity discounts, and brokerage rates, and made monthly reports of said accountants, following audits, and test checks of all records of invoices of members, irrespective of where rice was shipped, subject of discussion at board's meetings, and thus checked observance of said prices, etc., and payments of discounts on sales to Hawaii, and calculation of aforesaid dues payable to said Importers' Association in behalf of its members, and proper remission thereof;

With result that competition in sale of rice and rice products was restricted and suppressed, and said association and members, etc., acquired a monopoly in sale of said "California-Japan type" rice, as above set forth:

Held, That such purposes, practices and policies constituted an unlawful agreement to fix and maintain prices of rice and rice products in commerce, and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the association, the individuals, and the corporations hereinafter described and named as respondents have been and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said Act of Congress and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PAR. 3. Respondents Charles S. Morse, Allen A. Morse, Nelson B. Morse, Clarence G. Morse, and Gertrude Morse are individuals trading as the Capital Rice Mills and own and operate a rice mill in the city of West Sacramento in the State of California and have their principal offices and place of business at 310 California Street in the city of San Francisco, State of California.

Respondents Ellen S. Grosjean and Eileen Callaghan are individuals trading as C. E. Grosjean Rice Milling Company and own and operate a rice mill, and have their offices and principal place of business, at 3230 20th Street in the city of San Francisco, State of California.

Respondent William Crawford is an individual trading as Woodland Rice Milling Company and owns and operates a rice mill, and has his office and principal place of business, in the city of Woodland in the State of California.

Respondent Growers Rice Milling Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California and owns and operates a rice mill in the city of South San Francisco,

State of California and has its office and principal place of business at 503 Market Street in the city of San Francisco, Calif.

Respondent Pacific Trading Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California and owns and operates a rice mill in the city of Sacramento, State of California, and has its office and principal place of business at 460 Battery Street in the city of San Francisco, State of California.

Respondent Phillips Milling Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California and owns and formerly operated a rice mill in the city of Sacramento, State of California and has its office and principal place of business at 38 Drumm Street, in the city of San Francisco, State of California.

Respondent Rice Growers Association of California is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California and owns and operates a rice mill, and has its office and principal place of business, in the city of West Sacramento, State of California.

Respondent Rosenberg Brothers and Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California and owns and operates rice mills in the cities of Biggs, San Francisco, and South San Francisco in the State of California, and has its office and principal place of business at 334 California Street, San Francisco, State of California. The respondents named in this paragraph are hereinafter referred to as the member respondents.

PAR. 4. All of the said member respondents are, and, at all times mentioned herein, were, engaged in the milling or processing of rice and rice products as more fully hereinafter described, and in the sale and distribution of said products to customers located in the several States other than the State of California and in the respective Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and in foreign nations, and cause said products when milled, processed, and sold to be transported from the place of milling, or processing, to the purchasers thereof located as aforesaid, and there now is, and has been at all times herein mentioned, a constant and recurring current of trade and commerce in said products beginning at the places of milling, or processing, in the State of California and flowing through and into the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, and foreign nations.

Prior to the adoption and use of the acts, practices, and methods hereinafter alleged, these member respondents were in active and substantial competition with each other in making and seeking to make sales of their said products in said commerce, and, but for the facts hereinafter alleged, such active and substantial competition would have continued to the present time and said member respondents would now be in active and substantial competition with each other.

The member respondents constitute all of the rice millers located in the State of California, and mill, sell, and distribute substantially all of the rice produced in that State. The rice produced in the State of California is of the short plump grain variety, commonly known as the Japan type or, on occasions, as the California-Japan type, and is often referred to as the round grain rice as distinguished from the long or medium grain rice produced in other sections of the United States. Substantially all of the round grain or Japan type rice produced in the United States is produced in the State of California and is milled, sold, and distributed by the member respondents. Consumers of rice located in the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Japan, and in other territories, insular possessions and foreign nations, and in various parts of the United States prefer round grain or Japan type rice of the type produced in California and sold and distributed by the member respondents to the long grain rice produced in other parts of the United States. Because of this preference for round grain or Japan type rice there is practically no competition as to price between sellers of the two types of rice in those sections where said preference exists. The member respondents occupy such a position in the milling, selling, and distributing of the round grain or Japan type rice produced in the United States that they control, direct, and dominate the industry in the United States and control, direct, and dominate purchasers of such rice for resale throughout the world.

PAR. 5. Prior to August 28, 1935, the member respondents and the individual respondents caused the organization of the association respondent for the promotion and protection of the interests of the said member respondents. On or about August 28, 1935, said member respondents entered into and thereafter carried out an understanding, agreement, combination, and conspiracy, hereafter, at times, referred to as an undertaking, for the purpose and with the effect of restricting, restraining, and monopolizing, and suppressing and eliminating competition in, the sale of milled rice, of both the round and long grain type, and in the sale of milled rice products in trade and commerce between, among, in and with the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, foreign nations, and Territories of the United States.

PAR. 6. Pursuant to said understanding, agreement, combination, and conspiracy, and in the furtherance thereof said respondents have done and performed, and still do and perform, the following acts and things:

1. Said member respondents agreed to fix and have fixed and maintained uniform prices in the sale of all grades of rice milled, sold, and distributed by them.

2. Said member respondents agreed to fix and have fixed and maintained uniform terms and conditions, including, but without limitation, discounts, brokerage fees, freight, and other allowances, which were to apply and have applied to all grades of rice.

3. Said member respondents agreed to allocate and have allocated among the member respondents the percentage of the total annual rice crop which each of said members could process or mill and have processed or milled monthly annually.

4. Said member respondents agreed to curtail and have curtailed the production of processed or milled rice and rice products.

5. Said member respondents agreed to refuse and have refused to make sales of rice and rice products to others than the parties to said undertaking except at prices substantially in excess of those which they agreed would apply and which have applied to sales between the parties to said undertaking.

6. Said member respondents agreed that the respondent association could and it does assess and collect penalties from said member respondents for violating the terms and conditions of agreements made in furtherance of said undertaking.

7. Said member respondents agreed that respondent association could and it did through agencies therein set up, select, appoint, and employ accountants to check, and they have checked, the books and records of the member respondents to determine whether the member respondents were complying with the terms and conditions of agreements made in furtherance of said undertakings and with rules and regulations adopted and announced by the said marketing and crop boards.

8. Said member respondents agreed to pay and have paid a sum certain in money for each bag of rice processed by them into a fund deposited with the respondent association, and agreed that penalties assessed against members for violations of the terms and conditions of the agreements made in furtherance of said undertaking could be deducted from the respective sums so deposited by said members and distributed among the other members, and penalties have been so deducted and distributed.

9. Said respondents, through said respondent association, entered into and carried out an agreement with the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association, an association of rice importers in the Territory of Hawaii, whereby they agreed that they would not and they did not sell to importers located in Hawaii who were not members of said association.

10. Said respondents organized within the respondent association the marketing board and the crop board mentioned in paragraph 2 hereof, for the administration of the affairs of the member respondents in carrying out said undertaking. Among others said boards have done and performed and still do and perform the following acts and things:

(a) The marketing board and the crop board meet from time to time and jointly fix the prices to be observed and maintained, and which are observed and maintained by the member respondents in the sale of rice and rice products, as aforesaid.

(b) Said marketing board meets from time to time to determine, and has determined, the business policies, terms of sale, brokerage fees, discounts and freight and other allowances to be observed and maintained by said member respondents in the sale of rice and rice products, as aforesaid.

(c) Said marketing board, acting by and through its said chairman, individual respondent Harry M. Creech, promulgates the said marketing board's rules and regulations concerning the policies and terms of sale mentioned in sub-paragraph "b" of this paragraph, among the member respondents through and by the circulation of its so-called "Policy Memoranda," and through and by this means regulates the business and sales policies of the said respondent members in the sale of rice and rice products, as aforesaid.

(d) Said marketing board, through its said chairman, said individual respondent Creech, regularly and periodically collects from and disseminates among said member respondents information regarding the acts, practices and policies of said member respondents in carrying out said undertaking, to determine whether or not said member respondents have violated or are violating the terms and conditions of agreements made in furtherance of said undertaking; and from time to time fixes and collects penalties, as more particularly described in paragraph 6 herein, from said member respondents for violating the terms and conditions of the agreements made in the furtherance of said undertaking.

11. Said respondents have used and are now using other methods and means designed to suppress and prevent competition and restrict and restrain the sale of rice and rice products in said commerce.

PAR. 7. Each of the said respondents acted in concert and cooperation with one or more of the other respondents in doing and performing the acts and things hereinabove alleged in furtherance of said understanding, agreement, combination and conspiracy.

PAR. 8. Said understanding, agreement, combination, and conspiracy and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto and in furtherance thereof, as hereinabove alleged, have had and do have the effect of unduly and unlawfully restricting and restraining the sale of said rice and rice products in trade and commerce between, among, in and with the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, foreign nations, and Territories of the United States; of unduly and unlawfully restricting and restraining trade and commerce in said rice and rice products in said commerce; of substantially enhancing prices to the consuming public and maintaining prices at artificial levels and otherwise depriving the public of the benefits that would flow from normal competition among and between the member respondents in said commerce; of eliminating competition, with tendency and capacity of creating a monopoly, in the sale of said rice and rice products in said commerce. Said understanding, agreement, combination, and conspiracy and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto and in furtherance thereof, as above alleged, constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and are to the prejudice of the public.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on March 26, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents California Rice Industry, et al., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Daniel J. Murphy, attorney for the Commission, before Charles F. Diggs, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Harry M. Creech, attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceedings regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent California Rice Industry is a voluntary unincorporated trade association with its offices in the Balfour Building in the city of San Francisco, State of California. The said association does not have officers or directors, neither does it have articles of organization, constitution, or by-laws, except the Intrastate Marketing Agreement which created it.

PAR. 2. Organized within the association and controlling and administering its policies and activities are the marketing board and the crop board. Respondent Harry M. Creech, the chairman of the marketing board and a member of the crop board, was the dominant factor in the organization of the association and is the directing executive of the practices of said association and its marketing and crop boards.

PAR. 3. The respondent members of the marketing board, with the exception of its chairman who is neither a rice grower nor a miller, constituting all the rice millers located in the State of California, are as follows :

Charles S. Morse, Allen A. Morse, Nelson B. Morse, Clarence G. Morse, and Gertrude Morse are individuals trading as the Capital Rice Mills and own and operate a rice mill in the city of West Sacramento in the State of California, and have their principal offices and place of business in the city of San Francisco, State of California.

Ellen S. Grosjean and Eileen Callaghan are individuals trading as C. E. Grosjean Rice Milling Company and own and operate a rice mill, and have their offices and principal place of business in the city of San Francisco, State of California.

William Crawford is an individual trading as Woodland Rice Milling Company and owns and operates a rice mill, and has his office and principal place of business in the city of Woodland, State of California.

The Growers Rice Milling Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California and owns a rice mill in the city of South San Francisco, State of California. Said corporation has not processed any rice since 1933 and its mill is leased to respondent Rosenberg Brothers & Company, which now operates the said mill.

Pacific Trading Company, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California and owns and operates a rice mill in the city of Sacramento, State of California, and has its office and principal place of business in the city of San Francisco in the said State of California.

Phillips Milling Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California and owns a rice mill in the city of Sacramento, State of California. The said corporation since 1933 has not milled or processed any rice except rice flour. Said corporation has no vote in the meetings of the marketing board because on October 1, 1935, it leased its mill to the marketing board. The marketing board has never operated said mill.

Rice Growers Association of California is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California and owns and operates a rice mill, with its principal place of business at West Sacramento in the State of California. It is a cooperative organization comprised of approximately 300 rice growers of northern California, and the said corporation mills and processes the rice of its members. The said Association also buys paddy rice from nonmembers thereof and mills and sells said rice at a profit.

Rosenberg Brothers & Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California and owns and operates rice mills in Biggs and San Francisco in the State of California, and also operates a rice mill in the city of South San Francisco, State of California, which is leased from the respondent Growers Rice Milling Company.

PAR. 4. Respondents George W. Brewer, William Crawford, Florence M. Douglas, Charles S. Morse, J. S. Ritterband, and O. F. Zebal are representatives on the marketing board of the several miller respondents.

Respondent I. Yamakawa formerly was the representative of the respondent Pacific Trading Company, but has not represented said company on said marketing board since October 6, 1936. Since December 8, 1936, said company has been represented on said marketing board by J. S. Ritterband.

Respondent W. T. Welisch up to about July 1, 1936, was a representative of the respondent Phillips Milling Company on said marketing board but since that date has not been identified or affiliated with the respondent California Rice Industry or its marketing board.

PAR. 5. The respondent members of the crop board are N. F. Dougherty, its secretary; R. A. Renaud, Hugh Baber, Ernest Grell, A. E. Scarlett, Leon Brink, and Louis Manor.

PAR. 6. The original intention was that the representatives of the independent rice growers should constitute the membership of the crop board and dominate its affairs in order to safeguard and protect the interests of the growers. This plan was carried out until about a year and a half ago; since then four of the eight members of the crop board became and are now identified with the respondent Rice Growers Association of California, which is a miller organization and a member of the marketing board. The miller respondents, therefore, dominate the activities of both the marketing and the crop boards.

PAR. 7. Substantially all of the rice produced in the State of California is a short, plump grained variety, commonly known as the "Japan type" or as the "California-Japan type," and is often referred to as the "round grain rice" as distinguished from the long or medium grain rice produced in other sections of the United States. Substantially all of the round grain or the "Japan type" rice produced in the United States is produced in California, and is milled, sold, and distributed in interstate commerce by the miller respondents, members of the Marketing Board of the California Rice Industry.

PAR. 8. The average annual crop of Japan type rice grown in California is about 3 million 100-pound bags of paddy rice, which is equivalent to a million and one-half bags of clean rice. Of this latter, approximately 50 percent is shipped to Hawaii, where there is a preference for the Japan type rice; approximately 25 percent of the remainder is shipped to Puerto Rico, and the balance is sold in California and in various other States of the United States.

PAR. 9. On September 28, 1933, all the respondents entered into what has been termed an "Interstate Marketing Agreement." This agreement or program was in force until terminated by the Secretary of Agriculture on September 14, 1935.

PAR. 10. On August 28, 1935, all the respondents became signatories to what is termed an "Intrastate Marketing Agreement," which agreement became effective on said date; the marketing board, however, did not begin to function till October 1, 1935, the beginning of the crop year; said agreement has been since continually administered.

PAR. 11. Since October 1, 1935, the respondents, under the Intrastate Marketing Agreement, fixed prices, terms of sales, quantity discounts, and brokerage fees in the sales of processed rice in interstate commerce. At meetings held on Tuesday of each week the marketing board from time to time, and with the concurrence of the crop board, fixes an industry price for extra-fancy clean rice, and from this price, by use of a formula adopted by said marketing board, the base price, producer's price, and trade prices for all grades of processed rice are computed. The marketing board alone fixes the prices for screenings and brewers. Lists of said prices, from time to time, were published and distributed by the California Rice Industry and the members of the marketing board. The miller respondents, members of the marketing board, uniformly observe and maintain the prices so fixed by the marketing board, not only for the purchases of paddy from the growers but also on all sales of processed rice, whether the rice is sold in the State of California or sold and shipped to customers in Hawaii or various other points. With rare exceptions, the trade prices charged by the miller respondents are uniform at any given time for the same grade of rice.

PAR. 12. Prior to 1933 the respondents were engaged in open competition in the purchase of paddy and in the sale of processed rice; since September 1933 there has been practically no competition, as the prices paid for paddy to the growers and the prices charged by the millers for processed rice have been uniform and fixed by agreement.

PAR. 13. The marketing board of the Interstate Marketing Agreement organized the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association in the Territory of Hawaii, which association is composed of the largest importers of rice in the Hawaiian Islands. The marketing board determined the membership and classified the members of said association as island importers. The purpose of the organization of said association was to monopolize the rice markets in the Hawaiian Islands for the benefit of the respondent millers.

PAR. 14. The marketing board under the Intrastate Marketing Agreement, and in agreement with the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association, fixed a discount of 22 cents a bag to purchasers of a minimum of forty thousand 100-pound bags of rice a month. This was later changed to 25 cents a bag on a minimum of 50,000 bags per month. No single purchaser is able to take shipments sufficiently large to entitle him to this discount. The members of the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association pool their requirements and the said association places the pooled orders with the respondent millers and the rice is shipped and billed to the association, which thus becomes the sole recipient of the above described discount for the benefit of its members. Because of this advantage, nonmembers of the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association are unable to purchase rice from the respondent millers at a competitive price, and only negligible sales are made to them. The members of the said association have thus obtained practically a monopoly of the rice industry in the Hawaiian Islands.

PAR. 15. The marketing board fixes the price of rice for Hawaii at 15 cents per 100-pound bag over the domestic price, and this 15 cents per 100-pound bag became a deferred discount which was deducted from the price of rice sold to the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association and deposited by the miller vendor respondents in the Wells-Fargo Bank and Union Trust Company in San Francisco, Calif., as a credit to the said association. This 15 cents thus deducted accounted for part of the 22 cents discount referred to above as allowed to the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association. The remainder of 7 cents was quantity discount which in some cases was deducted from the face of the invoice when presented for payment, and in other cases was deposited to the credit of the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association.

PAR. 16. The Hawaiian Rice Importers Association employed a firm of auditors, to wit, Logan & Logan of San Francisco, Calif., to examine the invoices of the miller members of the marketing board and to check the deposits at the banks in order to determine that the above described discounts were properly given and deposited in the banks to the credit of the said association.

PAR. 17. The respondent miller members of the marketing board made an additional charge of 1 cent per bag on all sales intended for the members of the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association. This 1 cent per bag, so deducted, was remitted by the miller respondents to the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association as the membership dues of its members.

PAR. 18. The Intrastate Marketing Agreement fixes the percentages of the total annual rice crop which each miller member of the marketing board may process, and the marketing board determines monthly the processing quota for each miller. The miller members are required to pay into the "Millers' Trust Fund" 10 cents for each 100-pound bag of rice processed during the preceding month, and an additional 10 cents for each bag of rice processed by them in excess of their quota for the preceding month. After the expenditures of the marketing board are paid from the said Millers' Trust Fund, the remainder of the said fund is distributed among the miller members. The intrastate agreement further provides that a penalty shall be imposed upon a miller member for any violation of its provisions, and the amount of the penalty to be deducted from his share of the trust fund.

PAR. 19. The marketing board employs a firm of certified public accountants, to wit, Hood & Strong of San Francisco, to check each month the records and invoices of the miller members in order to ascertain the compliance of said millers with the prices, terms of sale, quantity discounts, and brokerage rates as fixed by said marketing board. The accountants in their audits make test checks of all records and invoices of the miller members of the marketing board, regardless of whether the said records or said invoices refer to rice shipped to Hawaii, Puerto Rico or any other destination. Monthly reports are submitted by the accountants to the marketing board, and said reports are discussed at its meetings. The monthly reports from November 1, 1935, to April 1, 1937, show, except for a very few instances which were later corrected, that the miller members maintained the said prices, terms of sale, discounts, and brokerage rates, as fixed by the marketing board, in the sale of processed rice in interstate commerce. The accountants check the sales invoices of the miller members not only to determine that the discounts on sales to Hawaii were properly maintained, but also to calculate the dues payable to the Hawaiian Rice Importers Association, in behalf of its members, and to verify the remission of same.

CONCLUSION

1. The purposes, practices, and policies of the respondents as set forth in the aforesaid findings of facts constitute an unlawful agreement to fix and maintain prices of rice and rice products in commerce as defined in Section 4 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."
2. As a result of the respondents entering into and making effective the agreement as above described, competition in the sale of rice and rice products in commerce as hereinabove referred to has been restricted and suppressed.
3. As a further result, respondents thereby have acquired a monopoly in the sale of California-Japan type rice in commerce as hereinabove referred to.
4. The acts and practices of the respondents, as set forth in the foregoing findings as to the facts, and the circumstances therein set forth, constitute a combination and conspiracy to engage in and to further unfair methods of competition in commerce as hereinabove referred to within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Murphy, counsel for the Commission, and by Harry M. Creech, counsel for the respondents, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, California Rice Industry; Harry M. Creech, George W. Brewer, Florence M. Douglas, J. S. Ritterband, W. T. Welisch, I. Yamakawa, O. F. Zebal, R. A. 1. Fixing and maintaining uniform prices.
2. Compiling, publishing, and distributing any joint or uniform list or compilation of prices.
3. Adopting any joint or uniform price list or other device which fixes prices.
4. Discussing through the medium of meetings of the California Rice Industry or its marketing and crop boards, or in any similar manner, uniform prices, terms, discounts, agreements upon prices, by resolution or otherwise, or employing any similar device which fixes or tends to fix prices, or which is designed to equalize or make uniform the selling prices, terms, discounts, or policies of respondent millers.
5. Fixing or determining the quotas or percentages of the rice crop that the miller respondents may mill or process which, thereby, unlawfully restricts or hinders the sale of rice or rice products in interstate commerce.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after the service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

- (b) Represented that most common ailments have their origin in the digestive system and that "Biotone" had healing qualities that corrected serious disorders, and aided nature in its natural cleansing, building, and normalizing process of the body and helped to neutralize acids therein and combat and eliminate toxins, build sound healthy tissues, and promote vigorous normal body functions; and
- (c) Represented that said "Biotone" was a helpful remedy for malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, stomach ulcers, and various other ailments and conditions;

Facts being normal average American food supply furnishes enough chemical substances to keep body normal without supplementing diet by medicine, said preparation was not a helpful remedy in cases of malnutrition, high blood pressure, etc., generally caused by or directly associated with serious systemic or metabolic disorders, most common ailments do not have their origin in digestive system nor are great majority of common ailments of humanity traceable to unbalanced body chemistry resulting in acidity, toxemia, or mineral deficiency, natural cleansing, etc., processes of the body do not need aid of any medicine or chemical to take place and function properly, ingredients in said preparation were present in such small quantities as to be totally ineffective, and aforesaid representations as to functioning and values of said preparation in aiding nature, etc., and with respect to its curative and remedial qualities were grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue;

COMPLAINT¹

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that James W. Fitches, an individual, and Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc. is a corporation existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 18 West Second South Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Respondent, James W. Fitches, also of Salt Lake City, Utah, was president and manager of respondent, Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., during the time of its corporate existence, and controlled, managed, and directed the business activities, sales policies, and transactions of said corporate respondent, Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., and used said corporation as an instrumentality and agency to accomplish such things as he proposed and planned.

Respondent, Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., and respondent, James W. Fitches, are now, and have been for some time engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling in commerce, as herein set out, a medicinal preparation designated as "Biotone."

PAR. 2. Said respondents, being engaged in business as aforesaid, caused said medicinal preparation when sold, to be transported from their respective offices and places of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof, located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made. Both respondents have maintained, and now maintain, a constant current of trade in commerce in said medicinal preparation, manufactured, distributed, and sold by them between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, both said respondents are now and have been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals and firms likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling medicinal preparations and kindred remedies for the same ailments for which said respondents represent "Biotone" to be a remedy, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course of operation of their respective businesses and for the purpose of inducing individuals to purchase "Biotone" both respondents have caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the United States and have printed and circulated throughout the various States to customers and prospective customers advertising folders and literature. Both respondents have caused statements and representations concerning the curative and remedial quality of "Biotone" to be made over radio broadcasts. Certain advertising matter used by said respondents in making said representations, and certain statements made or caused to be made by said respondents over radio stations are set out herein, as illustrative of said representations, but are not all-inclusive. Such advertisements and statements are as follows:

BIOTONE—THE NATURAL SOLUTION FOR YOUR HEALTH PROBLEM.

The average family is not getting the elements from its food supply necessary to maintain normal chemical balance.

Most common ailments have their origin in the digestive system.

Because of the natural healing qualities of BIOTONE and its normalizing and alkalizing effects, it has proven a most remarkable corrective for many of the more serious stomach and intestinal disorders.

It helps to neutralize acids, combat and eliminate toxins, the building of sound, healthy tissues, and the promotion of vigorous, normal body functions.

Especially helpful in malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, languidness and depleted vitality.

BIOTONE gets results even when all other methods have failed.

The basic causes of most ailments are Acidity, Toxemia, and lack of the essential elements which the body must have. BIOTONE corrects all those foundations of illness, by neutralizing acids and toxins and supplying the body with these vital elements.

If your bloodstream and the vital fluids of the body are normally alkaline you cannot keep from enjoying health and vitality. But the big trouble is, that our modern methods of eating devitalized, demineralized and refined foods deprives us of the essential elements to maintain a normal chemical balance.

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

The lack of even one or two of these important substances may result in serious physical and mental disturbances. The absence of several of them may bring about a complication of said symptoms.

Sour stomach, gastritis, internal ulcers, high blood pressure, rheumatism, arthritis, eczema and many others are the result of chemical deficiencies. An acid condition proves the lack of sodium, magnesium and chlorine. A toxic condition proves the lack of sufficient sulphur, potassium, iodine, iron, manganese, phosphorus and similar elements. We urge the use of BIOTONE as the real and quick solution to these deficiency disorders.

By the use of advertisements in newspapers, pamphlets, testimonials, and over the radio, both respondents represent that:

1. Biotone is the natural solution for all health problems.
2. The average individual is not getting the elements from his food supply to maintain a normal chemical balance in the body, and that Biotone supplies these elements.
3. The most common ailments have their origin in the digestive system, and that Biotone has healing qualities that correct serious stomach and intestinal disorders.
4. Biotone aids nature in its natural cleansing, building and normalizing processes of the body and helps to neutralize acids in the body, and combat and eliminate toxins, and aids in building healthy tissues and the promotion of vigorous healthy body functions.
5. Biotone is a helpful remedy for malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, languidness, depleted vitality, ulcers of the stomach, liver trouble, prostatitis, eczema, high blood pressure, acidity, toxemia, sour stomach, gastritis and rheumatism.

PAR. 4. Representations made by said respondents with respect to the curative and remedial qualities of Biotone when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact Biotone is not a natural solution for all health problems, and it is not true that the average individual is not getting the elements from his food supply necessary to maintain normal chemical balance in the body. In truth and in fact the most common ailments do not have their origin in the digestive system, and Biotone does not have healing qualities of such a character as to correct serious stomach and intestinal disorders. Biotone does not aid nature in its natural cleansing, building and normalizing processes of the body, and it does not help to neutralize acids in the body, or to combat and eliminate toxins. Biotone does not aid in the building of healthy tissues or in the promotion of vigorous healthy body functions. Biotone is not a helpful remedy for malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, languidness, depleted vitality, ulcers of the stomach, liver trouble, prostatitis, eczema, high blood pressure, acidity, toxemia, sour stomach, gastritis, and rheumatism.

PAR. 5. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations, made by both respondents, as hereinabove set forth, in their advertising in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other advertising literature, in offering for sale and selling Biotone, had and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a large portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of the stated misleading, mistaken, and erroneous beliefs, induced by advertisements and statements of both respondents, as hereinabove enumerated, a number of the purchasing public purchased a substantial volume of respondents' product with a result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling medicinal preparations, who truthfully advertise their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done and is being done by both respondents to competition in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondents have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, as aforesaid, and are unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on October 26, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon Biotone Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, and Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of the complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by George Foulkes, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by James W. Fitches, who appeared on behalf of both respondents, before Charles P. Vicini and Robert S. Hall, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. The chief counsel filed a motion to amend the complaint to conform to the proof contained in the record by deleting from the complaint Biotone Laboratories, Inc., as respondent, and inserting in lieu thereof James W. Fitches, an individual, as respondent, and it appearing that the respondents had due notice of the pendency of said motion, the motion of the chief counsel was granted. Thereafter the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the amended complaint, respondents not having filed briefs, and having not requested oral arguments herein; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Utah with its office located at 18 West Second South Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

In the year 1936 respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., became inactive, and respondent James W. Fitches became trustee of the corporate property.

Respondent James W. Fitches, also of Salt Lake City, Utah, was president and general manager of respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., during the time of its corporate activity, and controlled, managed, and directed the business activities, sales policies, and transactions of the respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., and used said corporation as an instrumentality and agency to accomplish such things as he proposed and planned.

There is a possibility that respondent James W. Fitches may again organize respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., for the purpose of resuming sales of its principal commodity, "Biotone." Respondent James W. Fitches now holds title to the said product "Biotone" as trustee of respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc.

Respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., and respondent James W. Fitches have for some time last past been engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling in commerce a pharmaceutical preparation designated as "Biotone."

PAR. 2. The respondents caused the medicine designated "Biotone," when sold, to be transported from their principal office and place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made.

Respondents have maintained a course of trade in commerce in said preparation, manufactured, distributed, and sold by them between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the operation of their business, respondents have been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and firms likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling other preparations and treatments for the same ailments for which the respondents represent "Biotone" to be a remedy, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., and respondent James W. Fitches caused advertisements descriptive of said preparation to be inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the United States, and have printed and circulated throughout the various States, to customers and prospective customers, similar advertising folders and literature.

The respondents have also caused statements and representations concerning the curative and remedial quality of "Biotone" to be made over radio broadcasts.

Certain advertising matter used by the respondents in making the aforementioned representations, and certain statements made or caused to be made by respondents over radio broadcasts are as follows:

BIOTONE—THE NATURAL SOLUTION FOR YOUR HEALTH PROBLEM

The average family is not getting the elements from its food supply necessary to maintain normal chemical balance.

Most common ailments have their origin in the digestive system.

Because of the natural healing qualities of BIOTONE and its normalizing and alkalizing effects, it has proven a most remarkable corrective for many of the more serious stomach and intestinal disorders.

Especially helpful in malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, languidness and depleted vitality.

BIOTONE gets results even when all other methods have failed.

The basic causes of most ailments are Acidity, Toxemia, and lack of the essential elements which the body must have. BIOTONE corrects all those foundations of illness, by neutralizing acids and toxins and supplying the body with these vital elements.

If your bloodstream and the vital fluids of the body are normally alkaline you cannot keep from enjoying health and vitality. But the big trouble is, that our modern methods of eating devitalized, demineralized and refined foods deprives us of the essential elements to maintain a normal chemical balance. The lack of even one or two of these important substances may result in serious physical and mental disturbances. The absence of several of them may bring about a complication of said symptoms.

Sour stomach, gastritis, internal ulcers, high blood pressure, rheumatism, arthritis, eczema, and many others are the result of chemical deficiencies. An acid condition proves the lack of sodium, magnesium and chlorine. A toxic condition proves the lack of sufficient sulphur, potassium, iodine, iron, manganese, phosphorus and similar elements. We urge the use of BIOTONE as the real and quick solution to these deficiency disorders.

By use of advertisements in newspapers, pamphlets, testimonials, and over the radio, both respondents represent that:

1. Biotone is the natural solution for all health problems.
2. The average individual is not getting the elements from his food supply to maintain a chemical balance in the body, and that Biotone supplies these elements.
3. The most common ailments have their origin in the digestive system, and that Biotone has healing qualities that correct serious stomach and intestinal disorders.
4. Biotone aids nature in its natural cleansing, building and normalizing processes of the body and helps to neutralize acids in the body, and combat and eliminate toxins, and aids in building healthy tissues and the promotion of vigorous healthy body functions.
5. Biotone is a helpful remedy for malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, languidness, depleted vitality, ulcers of the stomach, liver trouble, prostatitis, eczema, high blood pressure, acidity, toxemia, sour stomach, gastritis, and rheumatism.

An analysis of the commodity "Biotone" shows that it is made up as follows:

Silica (SiO ₂)	317.0	parts	per	million
Calcium (Ca)	125.0	"	"	"
Magnesium (Mg)	155.0	"	"	"
Sodium (Na)	34.0	"	"	"
Potassium (K)	55.0	"	"	"
Phosphorus (P ₂ O ₅)	5.0	"	"	"
Chlorides (Cl)	122.0	"	"	"
Sulphur (S)	3739.0	"	"	"
Iron (Fe)	5153.0	"	"	"
Alumina (Al)	228.0	"	"	"
Manganese (Mn)	5.0	"	"	"
Notrogen (N)	64.0	"	"	"
Carbon (C)	974.0	"	"	"
Iodine (I)	Trace	"	"	"

PAR. 4. The foregoing representations made by respondents with respect to the curative and remedial quality of "Biotone" when used are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue.

In truth and in fact the normal average American food supply furnishes enough chemical substances to keep the body normal, and it is not necessary to supplement the diet by taking internally any medicine. "Biotone" is not a helpful remedy in cases of malnutrition, high blood pressure, ulcers of the stomach, prostatitis, rheumatism, gastritis, and eczema. The aforesaid conditions and ailments are generally caused by or directly associated with serious systemic or metabolic disorders and do not respond to treatments containing ingredients similar in their properties to those contained in respondents' preparation. Said preparation is not a helpful remedy in cases of loss of appetite, or in cases of lack of energy. Said preparation is not of any value in cases of liver trouble, acidity, sour stomach, and toxemia. In the treatment of such cases a diagnosis is necessary and no medicine such as respondents' compound could be applied in all cases.

The most common ailments do not have their origin in the digestive system, and respondents' preparation does not have healing quality of such a character as to correct serious stomach and intestinal disorders.

Respondents' preparation does not aid nature in its natural cleansing, building, and normalizing processes of the body, and it does not help to neutralize acids in the body or to combat and eliminate toxins.

"Natural cleansing, building, and normalizing processes of the body" mean the normal processes of eating, digesting, assimilating, and eliminating food material maintaining it by normal adequate intake of food, and the average individual does not need the aid of any medicine, chemical, or chemical compound for the cleansing, building up, or for the so-called normalizing processes to take place.

The great majority of the common ailments of humanity are not traceable to unbalanced body chemistry, resulting in acidity, toxemia, or mineral deficiency.

From the expert testimony adduced at the hearings, it is found that the ingredients of respondents' preparation are present in such small quantities as to be considered totally ineffective. Many of the ingredients present in the preparation are in no higher concentration than may be found in ordinary drinking water. Even if the system is deficient in some element or necessary ingredients, the amount of said element or ingredient in respondents' preparation is so minute as to render it ineffectual in supplying the deficiency. The only significant ingredients in respondents' preparation are iron and aluminum. The physiological effects of such quantities of aluminum as are contained in the preparation are negligible. The amount of iron that is contained in three teaspoonsful of the preparation, which is the prescribed dose per day, is equivalent to about one grain of iron per day. In certain deficiency diseases, varying dosages of iron may be prescribed.

PAR. 5. The above false and misleading statements and representations, made by respondents, as above set forth, in their advertising in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other advertising literature, in offering for sale and selling "Biotone," had and now have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a large portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that all the said representations are true and that said preparation possesses substantial therapeutic value.

As a direct consequence of the stated mistaken and erroneous beliefs as hereinbefore enumerated, a number of the purchasing public purchased a substantial volume of respondents' product, with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling other preparations designed and intended for similar usage, who truthfully advertise the efficacy of their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is being done, by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, and James W. Fitches, an individual, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before Charles P. Vicini and Robert S. Hall, examiners of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and brief in support of the complaint, respondents having filed no brief and having not requested oral argument, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents Rocky Mountain Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, and James W. Fitches, an individual, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a pharmaceutical product now known as "Biotone" or any product containing the same or substantially the same ingredients, and possessing similar properties, sold under that name or any name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That said preparation is the natural solution for all health problems.

2. That the average individual is not getting the elements from his food supply necessary to maintain a normal chemical balance of the body, and that "Biotone" supplies these elements.

3. That the most common ailments have their origin in the digestive system, and that said preparation has any healing qualities that correct stomach and intestinal disorders.

4. That said preparation aids nature in its natural cleansing, building, and normalizing processes of the body, helps to neutralize acids in the body, combats and eliminates toxins from the body, or aids in building healthy tissues and the promotion of vigorous, healthy body functions.

5. That said preparation has any beneficial value whatsoever for the treatment of malnutrition, loss of appetite, lack of energy, languidness, depleted vitality, ulcers of the stomach, liver trouble, prostatitis, eczema, high blood pressure, acidity, toxemia, sour stomach, gastritis, and rheumatism, or similar diseases, ailments or conditions.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION

Docket 3138. Complaint, May 23, 1937—Decision, Mar. 30, 1938

Where a firm engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" merchandise, composed, among others, of (a) assortments of marbles, candy bars, fudge squares and 216-hole punchboards, concealed within various holes of which boards said marbles, in accordance with color thereof as disclosed by chance punches at a penny each, and with advisory legend on said boards displayed, entitled purchaser to marble without charge, to marble only, to marble and bar of candy, or to marble and fudge square, and (b) assortments of 200 penny pieces of chocolate-covered candy of uniform size and shape, enclosed, concealed brown or chocolate centers of some of which, as distinguished from white centers of majority, entitled chance purchaser, without further charge, to one of cream bars therewith, while chance purchaser of one of still smaller numbers of pink squares was similarly entitled to one of candy bars included, with purchaser of last piece similarly entitled, without further charge, to assortment's small package of candy—

Sold said assortments to dealers knowingly so assembled and packed that they could be displayed and used by retailers for distribution to purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement, in competition with many manufacturers who do not make and sell such "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, but only "straight" merchandise, sales of which have materially decreased whenever and wherever said other goods have appeared in their markets, due to latter's gambling or lottery feature, and in competition with many who regard sale and distribution of such lottery candy as morally bad and as teaching and encouraging gambling among children, substantial purchasers and consumers of such candy, and as injurious to the candy industry, and therefore refuse to sell candy so packed that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result of placing in hands of retail merchants who purchase, from them and from others employing same methods, such "break and take," "draw," or "deal" goods as more salable in view of consumer preference therefor because of gambling feature connected with sales thereof, means of violating the laws of the several States in sale of such candy by lot or chance and operation thereby of a lottery, gambling device, or gift enterprise, and of putting to a competitive disadvantage aforesaid competitors, and with effect of diverting thereby unfairly trade from said competitors to themselves and others using similar methods:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Ira W. Minter and Clayton A. Minter, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm names and styles of Minter Brothers and Douglass Candy Company, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents, Ira W. Minter and Clayton A. Minter, are individuals and are doing business as copartners under the firm names and styles of Minton Brothers and Douglass Candy Company, and have their principal office and place of business located at 3917 Lancaster Avenue, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondents are now, and for several years last past have been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondents cause and have caused their said candy when sold to be transported from their principal place of business in Philadelphia, Pa., to purchasers thereof in the State of Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondents are in competition with other partnerships and with corporations and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of candy balls, a number of marbles, a number of candy bars, and four packages of candy. The said candy balls and marbles are concealed in a device commonly known as a "punchboard." The punchboard has a number of holes containing marbles and candy balls. The holes are clearly indicated, but the contents thereof are effectively concealed by a piece of paper which is pasted over the said board. The area on the board occupied by the said holes is divided into four sections. The marbles and candy balls are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular marble or candy ball separated from the board. The board has legends stating that sales are 1 cent each, and that the purchaser obtaining a marble receives only that particular marble for his money; that a purchaser obtaining a white candy ball receives another punch or selection free; that a purchaser obtaining a black candy ball receives, without additional charge, one of the candy bars contained in said assortment; and that the purchaser of the last punch in each section receives one of the packages of candy contained in said assortment. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the marbles, one of the candy balls free with the privilege of making another selection, one of the candy balls and a bar of candy, or a package of candy, for the price of 1 cent, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondents is composed of a number of pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a package of candy, which larger pieces of candy and package of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candies of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of the said chocolate covered candies contained in said assortment have centers of the same color, but a small number of said chocolate covered candies have centers of a different color. Said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1 cent each, but the purchasers who procure one of the said pieces of candy having a center of a different color than the majority of said candies are entitled to receive and are to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the package of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the center of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment, thus procure the larger pieces of candy and the package of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondents manufacture, sell, and distribute numerous assortments involving the features of the above described sales plans, but varying in detail.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondents sell their assortments resell and have resold said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondents sell and have sold direct expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth; and said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) candy balls, marbles, candy bars, or a package of candy, and (b) larger pieces of candy, or a package of candy. The use by respondents of said methods in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or equivalent or similar elements of chance or lottery schemes. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondents' said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondents in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondents has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondents and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 28, 1937, issued and served its complaint upon the respondents, Ira W. Minter and Clayton A. Minter, individually, and doing business under the firm names and styles of Minter Brothers and Douglass Candy Company, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition thereto by David H. Kinley, attorney for the respondents, before Miles J. Furnas and John L. Hornor, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it. The said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (oral argument not having been requested), and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents are individuals doing business under the firm names and styles of Minter Brothers and Douglass Candy Company, with their principal offices and place of business located in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondents are now, and for several years last past have been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to dealers located in States in the eastern part of the United States, including, among others, the New England States, States bordering on the State of Pennsylvania, and States as far south as North Carolina. Respondents cause, and have caused, their products when so sold to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in the State of Pennsylvania, and in other States of the United States as above mentioned, at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the various States of the United States. In so carrying on said business, respondents are, and have been, engaged in active competition with other partnerships and other individuals and with corporations engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. The approximate annual volume of sales of the respondents to wholesale dealers and jobbers is $1,300,000, and the approximate total annual volume of sales to retail dealers is $600,000.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 above, the respondents have sold in commerce between and among the States of the United States various assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. The said assortments were described by one of the respondents called as a witness at the instance of the Commission, and certain of said assortments are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by the respondents, but these descriptions do not include all of the assortments or the details of the several sales plans which the respondents have been or are using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of marbles, a number of candy bars and a number of fudge squares. The said marbles are concealed in a device commonly known as a punchboard. The punchboard has 216 holes in which the said marbles are concealed. The locations of the holes are clearly indicated, but the color of the marbles is effectively concealed by a piece of paper which is pasted over said board. Sales are 1 cent each and a purchaser punches one of the holes so as to separate the marble from the board. The board has legends advising purchasers and prospective purchasers that the purchaser obtaining a marble of a particular color receives the same free of charge, that a purchaser obtaining a marble of a different but specified color receives only the marble for the price of 1 cent, that the purchaser obtaining a marble of a different but specified color receives the marble and a bar of candy for the price of 1 cent, that the purchaser obtaining a marble of a different but specified color obtains the marble and a fudge square for the price of 1 cent. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the marbles free or pays 1 cent therefor, or receives a marble and a candy bar or a marble and a fudge square for the price of 1 cent is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondents is composed of 200 pieces of chocolate-covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with 48 larger pieces of candy known as cream squares and 16 larger pieces of candy known as candy bars and a small package of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small package of candy are distributed as prizes to purchasers of said candy in the following manner: 130 of the said chocolate-covered candies contained in said assortment have white centers, 48 of the said chocolate-covered candies have brown or chocolate centers and 16 of the said chocolate-covered candies have pink centers. Said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1 cent each, but the purchasers who procure one of the said pieces of candy having a brown or chocolate center are entitled to receive, and are to be given free of charge, one of the said cream squares, and the purchasers who procure one of the said pieces of candy having a pink center are entitled to receive, and are to be given free of charge, one of the said candy bars. The purchaser of the last piece of chocolate-covered candy of uniform size and shape is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, the small package of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the center of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procure a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority pieces of candy thus procure the larger pieces or bars of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Candy assortments involving the lottery or chance features, as described in paragraph 2 above, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without any lottery or chance feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" merchandise. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish the various types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The dealers to whom respondents sell their assortments resell the same to the public or to other dealers and said assortments are displayed for sale to the public as packed by the respondents and sold to the public in accordance with the above described sales plans.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondents to dealers are absolute sales and respondents retain no control over said assortments after they are delivered to their customers. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are and have been used and may be used by retail dealers for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement.

In the sale and distribution of the assortments of candy hereinbefore described, respondents have knowledge that the said assortments are to be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and respondents pack such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition thereto, or rearrangement thereof it will be and may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers. Such packing and distribution are contrary to public policy.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" merchandise in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortment candy, and manufacturers of straight merchandise have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "break and take," "draw," or

26 F. T. C.

"deal" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" merchandise is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy.

Consumers prefer to purchase the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sales. The sale and distribution of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments of candy or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery, gambling device, or gift enterprise. Many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children, and injurious to the candy industry. The sale and distribution by respondent of such assortments of candy supplies to and places in the hands of retail merchants a means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondents refuse to sell candy so packed that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a competitive disadvantage. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, buy from respondents and others employing the same methods of sale and thereby trade is unfairly diverted from said competitors to respondents and others using similar methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Ira W. Minter and Clayton A. Minter, individually and doing business under the firm names and styles of Minter Brothers and Douglass Candy Company, are to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

Lank, counsel for the Commission, and by David H. Minter individually, and doing business under the firm names and styles of Minter Brothers and Douglass Candy Company, or under any other firm names and styles, their agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce, and in the District of Columbia, of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers assortments of candy, together with a punchboard or other lottery device, for use or which may be used in distributing or selling such candy to the public at retail.

(4) Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers a punchboard, or other lottery device, either with assortments of candy or separately, which punchboard or other lottery device is to be used or may be used in distributing or selling such candy to the public, or which punchboard or other lottery device bears legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy contained in said assortments is being sold to the public by lot or chance in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery device or gift enterprise.

5. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy or small boxes of candy, which said larger pieces of candy or small boxes of candy are to be given as prizes to pur-

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that William W. Cummings, Arthur W. Lawton, and Everett Buck, individually, and trading as United States Caramel Company, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents, William W. Cummings, Arthur W. Lawton, and Everett Buck, are copartners trading as United States Caramel Company, with their principal office and place of business located at 150 Orleans Street, East Boston, Mass. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to dealers. Respondents cause and have caused their products when sold to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of East Boston, Mass., to purchasers thereof in the State of Massachusetts and in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their business respondents are in competition with other firms, individuals, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and similar products, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to dealers certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when distributed to the consumers thereof. One of said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public in the following manner:

This assortment consists of a number of individually wrapped pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of licorice pops, which licorice pops are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are of a certain color, but the minority of said pieces of candy are of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1 cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said minority pieces of candy is entitled to receive, without additional charge, and is given, one of the licorice pops heretofore referred to. The color of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from the purchaser or prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed therefrom. The aforesaid purchasers who procure one of the said minority pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment thus procure one of said licorice pops wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Retail dealers who purchase respondents' candy, directly or indirectly, expose and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has a tendency and capacity to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' candy in preference to candy and similar products offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an additional piece of candy. The use by respondents of said method in the sale of candy and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: That the use thereof has a tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy-trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or equivalent or similar elements of chance or lottery. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy or similar products in competition with the respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or to sell their products so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance or any other method of sale that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate consumers of, candy are attracted by respondents' said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondents in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondents has a tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from the candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful, to lessen competition in the candy trade, to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondents and in such other distributors of said candy as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition. The use of said method by respondents has a capacity and tendency to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents, William W. Cummings, Arthur W. Lawton, and Everett Buck, are individuals trading as United States Caramel Company, with their principal office and place of business located at 150 Orleans Street, East Boston, Mass. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to dealers. Respondents cause and have caused their products when sold to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of East Boston, Mass., to purchasers thereof in the State of Massachusetts and in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their business respondents are in competition with other firms, individuals, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of candy, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to dealers, in interstate commerce, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when distributed to the consumers thereof. One of said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public in the following manner:

This assortment consists of a number of individually wrapped pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of licorice pops, which licorice pops are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are of a certain color, but the minority of said pieces of candy are of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said minority pieces of candy is entitled to receive, without additional charge, and is given, one of the licorice pops heretofore referred to. The color of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from the purchaser or prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed therefrom. The aforesaid purchasers who procure one of the said minority pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment thus procure one of said licorice pops wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Retail dealers who purchase respondents' candy, directly or indirectly, expose and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has a tendency and capacity to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' candy in preference to candy and similar products offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an additional piece of candy. The use by respondents of said method in the sale of candy and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: That the use thereof has a tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or equivalent or similar elements of chance or lottery. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondents, as above described, are unwilling to offer for sale or to sell their products so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance or any other method of sale that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate consumers of, candy are attracted by respondents' said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondents in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondents has a tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to unfairly divert to respondents trade and custom from their competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from the candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful, to lessen competition in the candy trade, to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondents and in such other distributors of said candy as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition. The use of said method by respondents has a capacity and tendency to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or equivalent methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondents, William W. Cummings, Arthur W. Lawton, and Everett Buck, individually and trading as United States Caramel Company, are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, as hereinabove found, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, William W. Cummings, Arthur W. Lawton, and Everett Buck, individually and trading as United States Caramel Company, or under any other trade name, and their respective agents, representatives, or employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of candy, do cease and desist from:

Order

26 F. T. C.

1. Selling and distributing to dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers assortments of candy which are used or which may be used without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail wrapped pieces of candy of uniform size and shape of different colors, together with licorice pops, or any other articles of merchandise, which said licorice pops or other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchasers procuring pieces of candy of a particular color.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

- (b) Represented that said company was manufacturer of "Korjena" and owned and operated apparatus and machinery for that purpose, and laboratories, through such statements as "Manufacturers" and "Laboratories and General Offices," etc., facts being it neither owned nor operated any manufacturing apparatus or machinery or laboratories, either at given address or elsewhere; and
- (c) Represented that said product was drugless and safe and harmless for consumption and constituted a safe and sure way for reducing and a new and scientific treatment for such purpose, and that it cut down moisture immediately, rendered fat liquid, had approval of medical profession, and contained two important ingredients which banished weight-inducing poisons and worked against fatty foods and caused fat to melt away from 7 to 10 pounds in 2 weeks, and that weight disappeared and physical loveliness returned;

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Korjena Medicine Company and Jerome Gladke, an individual, and doing business as Korjena Medicine Company, have been and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the public interest hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAP^H 1. Respondents, Korjena Medicine Company and Jerome Gladke, an individual, are trading as Korjena Medicine Company, with their office and principal place of business in the city of Elmira in the State of New York. Respondents are now and for a considerable period of time immediately heretofore have been engaged in selling, offering for sale, and distributing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, a prepared product called "Korjena," described as a tablet and represented as a fat-reducing agent and a remedy for obesity and overweight. Said respondents have caused and now cause said product, when sold or ordered, to be shipped and transported from the State of origin thereof to various States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipment and to the District of Columbia, in the course and conduct of which respondents have been and are now in competition with corporations, partnerships, and with other firms and individuals engaged in like commerce.

PAR. 3. OPENING ANNOUNCEMENT:

CHIMES

ANNOUNCER:

The modern woman demands youth and beauty—but she can't look youthful, she can't be beautiful, if she's too FAT. Let Miss Mary Blake of the KORJENA LABORATORIES tell you how modern men and women are losing weight quickly and safely. Miss Mary Blake.

BLAKE:

When you looked in your mirror this morning, what did you see? A woman trim, neat of face and figure, a picture which pleased you; or a woman a little old looking, a little tired looking, a little puffy as to face and figure—in other words FAT. Isn't it a crime what too many pounds can do to any woman's looks? And that isn't the worst of it—who can feel alert, bright, and happy with pounds and pounds of superfluous fat making themselves felt—and seen? Well then, why not do something about it? I know. Most methods of weight reduction have been unsatisfactory. Dieting weakens resistance and ruins dispositions. Exercise is wearying if enough is taken to have any effect on overweight, and what with this and that to be done, you can't afford to start the tired out. But have you heard of the new scientific method of weight reduction by which many are losing as much as seven to ten pounds in two weeks without dieting, without exercising? A method which is safe—harmless—yet without drugs? Such is the KORJENA METHOD of weight control. All you have to take is one tiny easy-to-take KORJENA tablet before each meal, and allow it to work with nature in dissolving fatty tissues, and ridding the system of toxins and weight-inducing poisons. Sounds almost too good to be true doesn't it? But that's the story of KORJENA, which is recommended by modern doctors everywhere. If you're burdened down with too many pounds—if you've just sort of let yourself go thinking "what's the use, I'm just too fat and what's to be done about it?"—what a thrill is in store for you when you see those pounds melt away, and inches disappear from places where inches had no right to be! KORJENA—K-O-R-J-E-N-A—costs so little—just one dollar for a two weeks supply, and it's sold with a money-back guarantee. Get it at any Owl, Thrifty, Sontag, Smile Store, and other leading drug stores.

CLOSING ANNOUNCEMENT:

BLAKE:

Any doctor will tell you that too much fat is not only ugly it is often actually dangerous to health. In addition, no woman can afford to lose her charm. The modern woman demands youth and beauty, and she knows she can't be attractive if she's too fat. So she doesn't starve herself, and weaken her resistance and ruin her disposition; she doesn't exercise violently and develop hard muscles; she simply takes one tiny KORJENA tablet before each meal, and watches the fat disappear and the inches vanish from the places where they were not meant to be. Think of that—many women are losing from seven to ten pounds in two weeks SAFELY, SCIENTIFICALLY, without dieting, without exercising. The only thing you must do is to cut down on sweets—and of course be faithful in taking one KORJENA TABLET before each meal. Otherwise eat what you please. Three big meals a day if you like. Why not weigh yourself today, start taking one KORJENA tablet before each meal, and weigh yourself again in two weeks—then see if you don't agree that the KORJENA way is the ideal method of getting rid of excess, unattractive fat. KORJENA, spelled KORJENA—costs but one dollar for a two weeks supply, is sold on a money-back guarantee, and will be found at all Owl, Thrifty, Sontag, Smile Stores and all leading drug stores.

Said statements and representations have tended to induce and have induced the purchase of respondents' product in reliance on such erroneous beliefs, in consequence of which trade has been and is diverted to respondents from their competitors who do not misrepresent their products, all thereby substantially injuring competition and competitors of respondents in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on January 14, 1936, issued, and on January 17, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Korjena Medicine Company and Jerome Gladke, an individual, doing business as Korjena Medicine Company, charging said respondents with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Jay L. Jackson, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Walter L. Post, Attorney for the respondents, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Therefore, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, and the answer thereto, testimony and evidence, brief in support of the complaint, and respondents not having filed any brief or requested oral argument in opposition to said complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Korjena Medicine Company, is a proprietorship controlled, owned, and operated by respondent, Jerome Gladke. Respondent Jerome Gladke is an individual doing business and trading under the name and style of Korjena Medicine Company. The office and principal place of business of said respondents is located at 103-7 West Church Street, in the city of Elmira, in the State of New York. On the 14th day of January 1936, and for a considerable period of time immediately and continuously theretofore, respondents were, and since that date have been, engaged in the business of offering for sale, selling, and distributing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, a prepared product called "Korjena," described as a fat-reducing agent and a remedy for obesity and overweight. Said respondents have caused, and cause, said product, when sold or ordered, to be shipped and transported from the State of New York to wholesale and retail purchasers and sellers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of the business aforesaid, respondents have been, and are, in competition with corporations, partnerships, and with other firms and individuals engaged in the business of offering for sale, selling and distributing, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, preparations and products described and used as a treatment for obesity and overweight and products which are similar in nature and use to the products of respondents.

PAR. 2. Respondents have sold and sell the aforesaid "Korjena" product by means of the United States mails and other carriers in the channels of interstate commerce and by means of newspaper advertising, circulars, labels, container box displays, and written and oral statements by respondents and agents and employees of respondents, and by other forms of advertising and sales promotion, which have been, and are, circulated and distributed to customers and prospective customers and to members of the purchasing public in general located in the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, in the course of which it has been, and is, the practice of respondents to authorize, publish and make, and to cause to be distributed, by the mediums hereinafter, indicated the following statements and representations, among others, to wit:

MR. DRUGGIST:

Please include the above instructions to Foreman, when sending Ad to newspaper. This is IMPORTANT.

PAR. 3. As more fully appears from the foregoing, in the course of offering for sale, selling, and distributing the said Korjena, the respondents state and represent that Jerome Gladke is the president and general manager of the Korjena Medicine Company; that the said company is a corporation; that the said company is a manufacturer of Korjena and owns and operates apparatus and machinery for that purpose, and owns and operates laboratories; whereas, the said statements and representations are wholly false and untrue in that Jerome Gladke is not the president and general manager of said company or of said company as a corporation; that said company is not a corporation but is a proprietorship owned and operated by the said respondent Jerome Gladke under the name thereof as a trade name; that said respondents do not manufacture the said Korjena product, do not own or operate any manufacturing apparatus or machinery, and do not own or operate laboratories either at 103-7 West Church Street, Elmira, N. Y., or elsewhere.

In the course and conduct of the business of offering for sale, selling, and distributing the aforesaid Korjena product, as more fully appears above, respondents further state and represent to customers and to the buying public at large that the said Korjena product is drugless, safe for human consumption and harmless, a remedy and cure for body fat and excessive body weight, and a safe and sure way for reducing body fat and body weight; that it is a new and a scientific treatment for reducing body fat and body weight; that it cuts down moisture immediately; that it renders fat liquid; that weight disappears and physical loveliness returns; that it has the approval of the medical profession in general, and that it contains two important ingredients which banish weight-inducing poisons and work against fatty foods, and causes fat to melt away from 7 to 10 pounds in 2 weeks.

PAR. 4. The foregoing statements are, and each of them is, false and misleading.

Each tablet of the said Korjena product is a compound of the following drugs and ingredients: Phenolphthalein, leptandrin, phytolacca, iodine, resins, calcium as calcium carbonate, and mineral oil. The aforesaid product as compounded is primarily a laxative or purgative being composed of the laxative drugs, phenolphthalein, leptandrin, and phytolacca. These drugs are known as gastro-intestinal irritants because of their effects upon the gastro-intestinal tract and each of them has dangerous properties for harm and injury to human beings when taken internally, the period required for producing such effects depending upon the idiosyncracies of each individual. As presently compounded or constituted, three doses of the said tablets is the limit within which the same can be taken without the expectancy of injurious effects to some individuals. The product cannot, therefore, be represented as drugless, safe, or harmless.

The said Korjena tablets would not be useful in the treatment of obesity resulting from hypothyroid conditions and cannot be expected to have any therapeutic effect on obesity due to pituitary or other glandular disorders. It would not directly affect the metabolism of the body and would not be used in any case of obesity except possibly in the case of superalimentation, and then only in limited doses. There is no scientific treatment or remedy applicable to all cases or causes of obesity, and the said Korjena tablets are not a scientific treatment or remedy for any case or cause of obesity and not a sure way of bringing about permanent reduction in weight.

The quantity of food absorption in the human system is directly related to the quantity of food intake and to the period in which digested food remains in the intestines. Fat is primarily formed from sugars, and sugar not oxidized is converted into fat. Where the causes for obesity are internal, there is delayed metabolism in such a way as to induce the formation of excess adipose tissue, otherwise known as fat. Fat is reduced or used by inducing oxidation, but it is not rendered liquid in this process. Oxidation, the burning process by which fat is destroyed, is induced by way of exercise or increased activity in all the body functions.

Respondents' Korjena tablets do not work against fatty tissue, render fat liquid, reverse the entire fat-making process and by such method effect a reduction in fat or weight, or work against fatty foods. There is no such thing in medical science as "weight-inducing poisons" which are, or can be, banished by the taking of respondents' product. Respondents' product is wholly laxative or purgative in effect, but purgation alone has no effect upon obesity itself, except as it causes starvation and thus a loss of weight due to a lack of food. When the purgation process ceases and the person eats again, the loss of weight is regained. The taking of respondents' tablets as prescribed over a period of two weeks would be expected to effect a loss of weight due to dehydration, but this loss is quickly replaced following the intake of water. The loss of body moisture is not instantaneous, but is accomplished only after the product has had its laxative or purgative effects. Thus, any loss of weight induced by the taking of respondents' product is not evidence of a correction or cure of the causes and cannot be maintained or made permanent except through continuation of purgation or by continued reduction in food intake and control of diet once weight is lost as a result of the purgation process.

PAR. 5. The statements and representations made by respondents, as set forth in paragraph 3 above, have, and each of them has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of drugs and other prepared products used or useful in the treatment of obesity or reduction of weight into the false and erroneous belief that the said representations are true and into the purchase of respondents' product in reliance thereon, and thus unfairly to divert substantial trade in said commerce to respondents, all to the benefit and profit of respondents, from competitors of respondents, who do not engage in making false and misleading representations to induce the sale and distribution of their products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, Korjena Medicine Company and Jerome Gladke, trading as Korjena Medicine Company, are to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, by Jay L. Jackson, counsel for the Commission, and by Walter L. Post, counsel for respondents, and upon brief filed herein by counsel for the Commission, respondents having filed no brief and having requested no oral argument, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that the said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That respondents, Korjena Medicine Company and Jerome Gladke, their representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of the products now designated as "Korjena," or "Korjena Tablets," or of any product or products of substantially the same or similar ingredients, or possessing the same or similar properties, under the same or any other name or names, do forthwith cease and desist, directly or indirectly, from representing:

1. That Jerome Gladke is the President of Korjena Medicine Company, or that Korjena Medicine Company, as now constituted and doing business, is a corporation.

2. That Korjena Medicine Company, or any selling company operated by Jerome Gladke, is a manufacturer of its products, or owns or operates laboratories, when such is not the fact.

3. That said products are drugless, or safe for human consumption and harmless, or a remedy or a cure for body fat and excess body weight, or a safe and sure way of reducing body fat and body weight, or a scientific treatment for reducing body fat and body weight, or cut down body moisture immediately, or render fat liquid, or cause physical loveliness to return, or banish weight-inducing poisons, or work against fatty foods, or have the approval of the medical profession in general.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that George Foster, Inc., a corporation, and George Foster, individually and as an officer of George Foster, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH. 1. Respondent George Foster, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, having its principal office and place of business at 225 East Fourth Street, St. Paul, Minn. Respondent George Foster is an individual and is the president of, and the principal stockholder in, the respondent George Foster, Inc., and formulates, controls, and directs its policies and practices. Respondent George Foster has his offices at the same address as that of the respondent George Foster, Inc. Said respondents act together and in cooperation with each other in doing the acts and things hereinafter alleged. Respondents are now, and have been for more than 1 year last past, engaged in the manufacture of food flavors, food products, cosmetics, and toilet supplies, and in the sale and distribution of said products and of other articles of merchandise. Respondents cause their said products when sold to be transported from the principal place of business of the respondent George Foster, Inc., in the State of Minnesota, to retail dealers and the purchasing public at their respective points of location in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now and has been for more than 1 year last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such products between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents are now, and for more than 1 year last past have been, engaged in substantial competition with other corporations and individuals and with partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business as referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents advertise and have advertised in magazines of interstate circulation, and distribute and have distributed circulars and other advertising literature through the United States mails to retail dealers and prospective retail dealers and to the consuming public announcing their various "deals." The retail dealers to whom respondents sell their said products in turn offer for sale and sell the same to the general purchasing public. Respondents' said advertising matter contains and has contained false and misleading statements and representations of which the following are examples but are not all inclusive:

$1.00 Coupon for 6 Genuine Rogers Spoons And a Regular $1.25 Value Bottle of Pure-Strong-Famous Vanilla Flavor.

— — With every deal that you buy we give you an additional big selling 50¢ retail item FREE.

A gorgeous and costly Windsor fruit and salad bowl and $1.00 silverware coupon FREE.

Also included with this shipment, large deluxe $2.00 sample case with 6 Rogers teaspoons for carrying and displaying the complete deal ABSOLUTELY FREE.

The labels attached to said bottle of vanilla and to the jar of said "additional big selling 50¢ retail item," which, in fact, is respondents' "Blue Spruce Medicated Balm," are price marked $1.25 and 50¢ respectively.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, the said vanilla flavoring did not, and does not, contain ingredients of a "pure" vanilla flavoring, but was and is a cheap imitation vanilla flavoring compound which did not and does not have a "regular $1.25 value"; said coupons did not and do not have a $1.00 value, nor were they redeemable in said silverware unless accompanied by 20 three-cent stamps; "Blue Spruce Medicated Balm" was not and is not an additional big selling 50¢ retail item," but on the contrary, did not and does not have an established retail sales value; the retail prices set forth hereinabove for said vanilla and "Blue Spruce Medicated Balm" are fictitious and greatly in excess of the normal retail values of said products and the prices at which said products are ordinarily sold or ever intended to be sold to the ultimate consumers thereof; no merchandise is given away "free" by said respondents, but the cost thereof is included in the specified price to be paid by the purchaser of the said "deal" or "deals" of which said merchandise is a part.

PAR. 4. For many years a substantial portion of the consuming public has had and has expressed a marked preference for flavoring extracts, food products, cosmetics, and similar commodities which are composed of superior ingredients produced by manufacturers who sell at prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products or for products made with inferior ingredients. The said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked and stamped the suggested retail prices on said products to indicate the superior quality and character of the product and its higher value.

The public generally understands the custom of marking or stamping the actual retail price or value on various commodities and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped on commodities and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom. As a result of the respondent's representations, members of the purchasing public are led to erroneously and mistakenly believe that the actual value and selling price of respondents' products are the prices stamped or marked thereon, when, in fact, many of the prices so stamped or marked are fictitious and in no sense represent the actual selling price or value of the products referred to. Thus respondents, by distributing said advertising literature containing the said false and misleading statements and representations to said retail dealers, have placed and are placing in the hands of others the means of deceiving and defrauding the purchasing public.

PAR. 5. The use by respondents of the false and misleading statements and representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such statements and representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said respondents' products as a result of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondents, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who do not misrepresent the price at which their products are sold, or otherwise publish claims for their products which are untrue. By the statements and representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such competitors and as a result thereof, substantial injury is being, and has been done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The aforesaid methods, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on February 3, 1938, issued, and thereafter served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, George Foster, Inc., a corporation, and George Foster, individually and as an officer of George Foster, Inc., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, respondents filed in the office of the Commission an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further testimony and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts, and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent George Foster, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, having its principal office and place of business at 225 East Fourth Street, St. Paul, Minn. Respondent George Foster is an individual and is the president of, and the principal stockholder in, the respondent George Foster, Inc., and formulates, controls, and directs its policies and practices. Respondent George Foster has his offices at the same address as that of the respondent George Foster Inc. . Said respondents act together and in cooperation with each other in doing the acts and things hereinafter found. Respondents are now, and have been for more than 1 year last past, engaged in the manufacture of food flavors, food products, cosmetics, and toilet supplies, and in the sale and distribution of said products and of other articles of merchandise. Respondents cause their said products when sold to be transported from the principal place of business of the respondent George Foster, Inc., in the State of Minnesota, to retail dealers and the purchasing public at their respective points of location in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such products between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents are now, and for more than 1 year last past have been, engaged in substantial competition with other corporations and individuals and with partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents advertise and have advertised in magazines of interstate circulation, and distribute and have distributed circulars and other advertising literature through the United States mails to retail dealers and prospective retail dealers and to the consuming public announcing their various "deals." The retail dealers to whom respondents sell their said products in turn offer for sale and sell the same to the general purchasing public. Respondents' said advertising matter contains and has contained false and misleading statements and representations, of which the following are examples but are not all inclusive:

$1.00 Coupon for 6 Genuine Rogers Spoons and a Regular $1.25 Value Bottle of Pure-Strong-Famous Vanilla Flavor.

— With every deal that you buy we give you an additional big selling 50¢ retail item FREE.

A gorgeous and costly Windsor fruit and salad bowl and $1.00 silverware coupon FREE.

Also included with this shipment, large deluxe $2.00 sample case with 6 Rogers teaspoons for carrying and displaying the complete deal ABSOLUTELY FREE.

The labels attached to said bottle of vanilla and to the jar of said "additional big selling 50¢ retail item," which, in fact, is respondents' "Blue Spruce Medicated Balm," are price-marked $1.25 and 50 cents, respectively.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, the said vanilla flavoring did not, and does not, contain ingredients of a "pure" vanilla flavoring, but was and is a cheap imitation vanilla flavoring compound which did not and does not have a "regular $1.25 value"; said coupons did not and do not have a $1 value, nor were or are they redeemable in said silverware unless accompanied by twenty 3-cent stamps; "Blue Spruce Medicated Balm" was not and is not an "additional big selling 50¢ retail item," but on the contrary, did not and does not have an established retail sales value; the retail prices set forth hereinabove for said vanilla and "Blue Spruce Medicated Balm" are fictitious and greatly in excess of the normal retail values of said products and the prices at which said products are ordinarily sold or ever intended to be sold to the ultimate consumers thereof; no merchandise is given away "free" by said respondents, but the cost thereof is included in the specified price to be paid by the purchaser of the said "deal" or "deals" of which said merchandise is a part.

PAR. 4. For many years a substantial portion of the consuming public has had and has expressed a marked preference for flavoring extracts, food products, cosmetics, and similar commodities which are composed of superior ingredients produced by manufacturers who sell at prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products or for products made with inferior ingredients. The said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked and stamped the suggested retail prices on said products to indicate the superior quality and character of the product and its higher value.

The public generally understands the custom of marking or stamping the actual retail price or value on various commodities and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped on commodities and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom. As a result of the respondents' representations, members of the purchasing public are led to erroneously and mistakenly believe that the actual value and selling price of respondents' products are the prices stamped or marked thereon, when, in fact, many of the prices so stamped or marked are fictitious and in no sense represent the actual selling price or value of the products referred to. Thus respondents, by distributing said advertising literature containing the said false and misleading statements and representations to said retail dealers, have placed and are placing in the hands of others the means of deceiving and defrauding the purchasing public.

PAR. 5. The use by respondents of such false and misleading statements and representations, as hereinabove found, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled, a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such statements and representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said respondents' products as a result of such erroneous belief. There are, among the competitors of respondents, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who do not misrepresent the price at which their products are sold, or otherwise publish claims for their products which are untrue. By the statements and representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such competitors and as a result thereof, substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid methods, acts, and practices of respondents George Foster, Inc., a corporation, and George Foster, individually and as an officer of George Foster, Inc., are to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of the respondents admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act,

It is ordered, That the respondent George Foster, Inc., a corporation, and its officers, and respondent George Foster, individually, and their respective representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of food flavors, food products, cosmetics, toilet supplies, and any other articles of merchandise, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, directly or indirectly, in any manner:

1. As the customary or regular retail prices for such products, prices which are fictitious and greatly in excess of the regular or customary prices at which said products are sold or offered for sale at retail;

2. That flavorings made from chemical compounds as substitutes for the juice of fruits, nuts, beans or berries, are pure flavorings;

1027

Order

3. That any of their products have established sales records, when such is not the fact;

4. That any of the articles of merchandise offered for sale and sold by them will be given free of cost when the cost thereof is included in and is a part of the sale price of articles of merchandise which are sold in a group;

5. That their coupons possess designated values or are valuable, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

ROBERT MORRIS, TRADING AS D. P. PEN COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3131. Complaint, May 15, 1937—Decision, Apr. 9, 1938

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of fountain pens and pencils, in commerce between and among the various States and in the District of Columbia—

Described such pens in newspaper advertisements as possessing retail values and prices many times in excess of the actual price at which said individual sold his merchandise to ultimate purchasers, and sold many of articles dealt in with retail prices stamped and printed on labels attached or on containers thereof, which were many times in excess of the actual selling price to consuming public and many times in excess of their true and actual value, through such advertising as offering, for 59 cents, for two-day period only and for "special discount coupon", as pretended, alleged "$5.00 Value Vacuum 'Morris' Fountain Pens," etc., and, for 29 cents, "$2.00 Pencils to Match Above Pens";

Facts being such indicated retail prices, which appeared on items of merchandise or on containers thereof, were not intended to be true retail price or true retail value of merchandise thus price-marked, but to be far in excess of price to be charged and actually charged in sale of said articles to consumers purchasing in usual course of trade, and far in excess of true value of such articles, true retail value of which was 59 cents and 29 cents, respectively, and not $5 and $2, respectively, as advertised;

With effect of misleading a substantial part of consuming public by inducing them to believe that said items were superior products made by manufacturer to sell at retail at a price closely approximating that stamped thereon, and that said pens had retail values closely approximating their purported retail value and price of $5, and had a value substantially in excess of their aforesaid actual value of about 59 cents; and with result that such false and misleading statements and representations constituted inducements for a substantial number of purchasers to buy products thus offered, sold, and distributed, and unfairly diverted to said individual substantial volume of trade from competitors, among whom there are many who manufacture ordinary fountain pens and others who make pens of superior quality and truthfully represent selling price or value to consuming public, and with tendency and capacity so to divert:

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Robert Morris, doing business under the trade name and style of "D. P. Pen Company," hereinafter referred to as respondent, is now and has been using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Robert Morris is an individual who is now and has been for all times mentioned herein doing business under the trade name and style of D. P. Pen Company, city of Bordentown, State of New Jersey. Respondent is now and has been for more than 1 year last past engaged in the business of selling fountain pens in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said fountain pens, when sold, to be transported from his principal office and place of business in the State of New Jersey, to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said fountain pens sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with partnerships, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling fountain pens in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the course and conduct of his business as detailed in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, has caused and still causes to be inserted in newspapers having a general interstate circulation, advertisements purporting to be descriptive of the merchandise offered for sale and sold by him. The articles offered for sale and sold by the respondent are described in said advertisements as possessing retail values and prices many times in excess of the actual price at which the respondent sells said merchandise to purchasers. Many of said articles have retail prices stamped and printed on the labels attached thereto, or on the containers in which they are offered for sale and sold to the public. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are many times in excess of the actual selling price of the said articles to the consuming public, and are many times in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or printed, as aforesaid, are false and fictitious, and in no sense represent either the true value or the true selling price of the article so price-marked.

The retail prices as indicated above, appearing on the items of merchandise or on the containers thereof, were not intended to be the true retail price or the true retail value of the merchandise so price-marked. Complaint to the consumer purchasing in the usual course of trade, and far in excess of the true value of the various articles so price-marked.

PAR. 5. Over a period of many years, manufacturers in many trades have formed a custom of marking or stamping on the article or item of manufacture, or on the container thereof, the retail price at which said manufacturers suggest the retailer should sell the item or article to the ultimate consumer purchaser; this suggested retail price so stamped or marked is intended to represent the cost of the manufacture of the article, plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer and retailer, and consequently, to represent the approximate retail sales value of the article. The range of suggested retail prices is intended by the manufacturer to be indicative of the quality and character of the materials used and the process by which the article is manufactured. The public generally understands the custom herein detailed, and has been led to and does place its confidence in the price-marking so stamped and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product, to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on the aforesaid custom.

PAR. 6. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public have expressed, have had and still have, a marked preference for fountain pens manufactured of superior materials and produced by the manufacturer thereof with the intent and design of selling said products for prices in excess of the general and usual run of prices for fountain pens manufactured with the usual and customary materials, or with inferior materials. Said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked or stamped the suggested retail prices on said fountain pens or on price labels or tags attached thereto as indicative of the superior quality and character of the fountain pens and their resulting higher values.

Whenever a genuinely superior product so stamped or marked with the retail price thereof is offered for sale at a substantially reduced price, the general purchasing public has been led to believe and does believe, that in purchasing said products it is securing a bargain not ordinarily obtainable in the usual course of trade. The purchasing public has had and still has a preference for purchasing genuinely superior products sold at less than the customary retail price thereof over ordinary products sold for the regular price, which is lower than the normal retail price of the superior product in the customary course of trade.

In truth and in fact, the merchandise sold by respondent and described herein is not a superior product, normally sold in the usual channels of trade for the retail price stamped on price labels or tags attached thereto, or on the container thereof, or for any price closely approaching the said stamped retail price.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent many who manufacture ordinary fountain pens, and others who manufacture fountain pens of superior quality, and who truthfully represent said pens and their selling price or value to the consuming public.

PAR. 8. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale the items of merchandise as herein described, with false and fictitious price-marks stamped on price labels or tags attached thereto, is to mislead a substantial part of the consuming public in the several States of the United States, by inducing them to mistakenly and erroneously believe that:

The items of merchandise sold and distributed by respondents were and are superior products, manufactured with the intent and purpose on the part of the manufacturer that said products should be sold at retail at a price closely approximating the price stamped thereon.

PAR. 9. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of the respondent are inducements for a substantial number of purchasers to buy the products so offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent, and have the tendency and capacity to, and do, unfairly divert to the respondent a substantial volume of trade from competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses, with the result that substantial quantities of respondent's products are sold to the consuming public on account of said beliefs induced by the false and misleading representations, and as a consequence thereof, a substantial injury has been done to competitors in commerce among the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 10. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission on May 15, 1937, issued and on May 18, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Robert Morris, an individual trading as the D. P. Pen Company. The respondent failed to file answer. After due notice to respondent, hearings were held on behalf of the Commission at which hearings evidence was adduced in support of the charges in the Commission's complaint. Respondent has failed to adduce evidence in opposition to the charges made in the Commission's complaint. All attempts to serve upon respondent a copy of the Commission's brief failed. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, testimony, and other evidence and the Commission's brief, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Robert Morris is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of D. P. Pen Company, with his principal office and place of business in the city of Bordentown, State of New Jersey. He has been for more than 1 year last past engaged in the business of selling fountain pens in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. When the fountain pens are sold the respondent transports, or causes them to be transported, from his principal office and place of business in the city of Bordentown, State of New Jersey, to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than New Jersey and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been for some time past, a course of trade in the fountain pens sold by respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is now, and has been, in competition with other individuals and with partnerships, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling fountain pens in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondent, in the conduct of his business, has caused, and still causes advertisements purporting to be descriptive of the merchandise offered for sale and sold by him to be inserted in newspapers having a general interstate circulation. Said pens are described in such advertisements as possessing retail values and prices many times in excess of the actual price at which the respondent sells his merchandise to ultimate purchasers. Many of the articles have retail prices stamped and printed on the labels attached thereto or on the containers in which they are offered for sale and sold to the public. The retail prices so stamped or printed are many times in excess of the actual selling price to the consuming public, and are many times in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or printed are false and fictitious and in no sense represent the true value or the true selling price of the article so price-marked. to the consumer purchasing in the usual course of trade, and far in excess of the true value of the articles so price-marked. In fact the actual and true retail value of the pens and pencils sold and distributed by respondent is 59¢ and 29¢, respectively, and not $5.00 and $2.00, respectively, as advertised by respondent.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent many who manufacture ordinary fountain pens and others who manufacture fountain pens of superior quality who truthfully represent the selling price or value to the consuming public.

PAR. 5. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale the articles of merchandise as herein described, with false and fictitious price-marks stamped on price labels or tags attached thereto, or on the containers thereof, is to mislead a substantial part of the consuming public in the several States of the United States by inducing them to mistakenly and erroneously believe that the items of merchandise sold and distributed by respondent were and are superior products, manufactured with the intent and purpose on the part of the manufacturer that said products should be sold at retail at a price closely approximating the price stamped thereon; that said pens have retail values closely approximating the purported retail value and price of $5.00; and that said pens have a value substantially in excess of their true and actual value of approximately 59¢.

PAR. 6. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of the respondent are inducements for a substantial number of purchasers to buy the products so offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent, and have the tendency and capacity to and do unfairly divert to the respondent a substantial volume of trade from competitors of respondent also engaged in selling and distributing fountain pens in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent Robert Morris, an individual trading as D. P. Pen Company, are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the Commission's brief and the record herein (the respondent having filed no answer to the proceeding herein and having elected not to introduce any evidence on his behalf or file a brief herein), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That respondent Robert Morris, an individual trading as D. P. Pen Company, or doing business under any other trade name, his agents, representatives, servants, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of fountain pens or pencils in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or indirectly:

1. Representing, through fictitious prices marked or stamped on or affixed to said products, or on the containers thereof, or through any other means or device or in any manner, that said prices so marked, stamped, or affixed are the regular or customary retail prices for such products;

2. Representing, as the customary or regular retail prices for such products, prices which are in fact fictitious and greatly in excess of the prices at which said products are regularly and customarily offered for sale and sold at retail.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he is complying with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of various articles of merchandise, including electric razors and pen and pencil sets, to wholesale dealers and jobbers—

Furnished push cards for distribution of such merchandise to ultimate consumer, wholly by lot or chance, under plan or scheme by which number selected by chance, as disclosed under disc, determined amount paid by player, and in which correct chance selection from card's list of feminine names of name corresponding to that disclosed under master seal after sale of chances, resulted in player's receiving, without further cost, article of merchandise specified on card, and in which those selecting certain indicated numbers also similarly received articles of merchandise, which various articles were of a greater value than cost of single push or punch, and normal retail prices of which were much in excess of such cost;

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Donald Reichgott, individually and trading as American Novelty Company hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of American Novelty Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 1841 Broadway, New York, N. Y. He is now, and for several months last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of various articles of merchandise, including, among others, electric razors and pen and pencil sets, to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to members of the public located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused such merchandise when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in New York City to purchasers thereof in the State of New York and in other States of the United States at their respective places of location. There is now, and has been for several months last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing the said merchandise, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises or lottery schemes by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance. Said devices and plans of merchandising consist of push cards, the use of which, in connection with the sale and delivery to the purchasing public, was and is substantially as follows: The push cards have a number of partially perforated disks, and when a push is made and the disk is separated from the card a number is disclosed. There are as many separate numbers as there are disks on the card, but the numbers are varied or assorted and are not arranged in numerical sequence. The number on said disks are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disk separated from the card. The price or terms of sale vary, depending upon the number obtained. Numbers from 1 to 10, inclusive, are free, and numbers from 11 to 35 pay in cents the amount of the number, and numbers over 35 pay 35 cents. Directly above each disk there is printed a girl's name, and the card has a space prepared for recording the name of each purchaser of a disk opposite the corresponding girl's name. The card also has a master seal which, when removed exposes a girl's name corresponding to one of those appearing under said disks. The purchaser who pushed the disk corresponding to the name under the master seal is entitled to a specified article of merchandise, and the purchasers selecting certain indicated numbers also receive a specified article of merchandise. The name under the master seal is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until all sales have been made and the master seal removed. Purchasers who select names other than the name appearing under the master seal, or numbers other than those indicated as winning a prize, do not receive anything for their money other than the privilege of pushing a disk from said card. The said articles of merchandise are of a greater value than the cost of a single push from said card. The fact as to whether a customer receives his chance free or pays for the same, and the fact as to whether a purchaser receives a specified article of merchandise, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Other push cards furnished and distributed by respondent for use in the sale and distribution of his merchandise involve the same principle, but vary in detail.

PAR. 3. Respondent forwards his push cards, together with various descriptive literature and with instructions as to how to operate said push cards or explaining what to do in order to obtain said articles of merchandise, to various members of the public, and a substantial amount of such merchandise is sold or distributed by such persons by means of said push cards and in accordance with the instructions furnished by respondent. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make or sell merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale or distribution thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell or distribute respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on November 4, 1937, issued, and thereafter served, its complaint in this proceeding upon Donald Reichgott, individually and trading as American Novelty Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and substitute therefor a substitute answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission, on the said complaint and the substitute answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and now being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of American Novelty Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 1841 Broadway, New York, N. Y. He is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of various articles of merchandise, including, among others, electric razors and pen and pencil sets, to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to members of the public located at points in the various States of the United States. causes and has caused such merchandise when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in New York City to purchasers thereof in the State of New York and in various other States of the United States at their respective places of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing the said merchandise, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises or lottery schemes by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance. Said devices and plans of merchandising consist of push cards, the use of which, in connection with the sale and delivery to the purchasing public, was and is substantially as follows: The push cards have a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc is separated from the card a number is disclosed. There are as many separate numbers as there are discs on the card, but the numbers are varied or assorted and are not arranged in numerical sequence. The numbers on said discs are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The price or terms of sale vary, depending upon the number obtained. Numbers from 1 to 10, inclusive, are free, and numbers from 11 to 35 pay in cents the amount of the number, and numbers over 35 pay 35 cents. Directly above each disc there is printed a girl's name, and the card has a space prepared for recording the name of each purchaser of a disc opposite the corresponding girl's name. The card also has a master seal, which, when removed, exposes a girl's name corresponding to one of those appearing above said discs. The purchaser who pushes the disc corresponding to the name under the master seal is entitled to a specified article of merchandise, and the purchasers selecting certain indicated numbers also receive a specified article of merchandise. The name under the master seal is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until all sales have been made and the master seal removed. Purchasers who select names other than the name appearing under the master seal, or numbers other than those indicated as winning a prize, do not receive anything for their money other than the privilege of pushing a disc from said card. The said articles of merchandise are of a greater value than the cost of a single push from said card. The fact as to whether a customer receives his chance free or pays for the same, and the fact as to whether a purchaser receives a specified article of merchandise, are thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Other push cards furnished and distributed by respondent for use in the sale and distribution of his merchandise involve the same principle, but vary in detail.

PAR. 3. Respondent forwards his push cards, together with various descriptive literature and with instructions as to how to operate said push cards or explaining what to do in order to obtain said articles of merchandise, to various members of the public, and a substantial amount of such merchandise is sold or distributed by such persons by means of said push cards and in accordance with the instructions furnished by respondent. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise at prices much less than the normal retail prices thereof. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make or sell merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above found, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale or distribution thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell or distribute respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does, unfairly divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Donald Reichgott, individually and trading as American Novelty Company, are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent Donald Reichgott, individually and trading as American Novelty Company, or trading under any other name, his agents, representatives and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of electric razors, pen and pencil sets, and other articles of merchandise, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

It is further ordered, That, within 60 days from the date of the service of this order upon said respondent, he shall file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF JOE LIEBOWITZ

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3282. Complaint, Dec. 13, 1937—Decision, Apr. 9, 1938

Where an individual engaged in the manufacture of ladies' undergarments and other allied products, and in sale and distribution of such undergarments to retail dealers and other customers in the various States—

Attached and sewed to certain of his aforesaid products a label bearing language "100% Pure Silk," notwithstanding fact that said products, thus represented, designated and referred to, were not composed of pure silk, product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and were not "pure silk," as long understood by retail trade and consuming public generally, i. e., products composed entirely of silk with no weighting material whatsoever, and, as such, regarded by trade and public generally as superior to and much preferred over silk products containing weighting, but were predominantly, or to a substantial degree, composed of non-silk weighting material;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said products were pure silk, and to cause them to purchase same as result of such belief, and with effect of unfairly diverting trade to him from competitors who do not resort to such methods and practices and do not misrepresent material from which their respective products are made:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and of said competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. George W. Williams for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission; to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Joe Liebowitz, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Joe Liebowitz, is an individual with his office and principal place of business located at 1007 Chandler Avenue, Linden, N. J., and is engaged, and for many years last past has been engaged in the business of manufacturing ladies' undergarments and other allied products. He sells, and has sold and distributed, such undergarments to retail dealers and other customers located in the various States of the United States. He causes said products, when sold, to be shipped from his place of business in Linden, N. J., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New Jersey. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said products so sold by him between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been in substantial competition with other persons and with corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of ladies' undergarments and other allied products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent in soliciting the sale of and selling certain of his products, attaches, affixes, and sews to said products a label bearing the following language, "100% Pure Silk."

The representations made on such label by the respondent as in this paragraph set out serve as representations to retail dealers and to members of the purchasing public that such products so advertised and offered for sale were pure silk. The representations thus made were false and misleading in that said products so represented, designated and referred to were not composed of pure silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but were predominantly or to a substantial degree composed of weighting material which is not silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the mind of the retail dealers and consuming public generally a definite and specific meaning, to wit: the product of the cocoon of the silkworm. The expression "pure silk" for many years last past has had in the mind of the retail dealers and consuming public generally a definite and specific meaning to wit: a fabric composed entirely of pure silk and without any weighting whatsoever. Silk products for many years have held and still hold a great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Products composed entirely of pure silk and without weighting are regarded by the trade and the public generally as superior to and much to be preferred over silk products that contain weighting.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof individuals, corporations, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of ladies' undergarments and other allied products who do not misrepresent the nature of the material from which such garments are made.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such products are, and were, pure silk, and to cause them to purchase said products as a result of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. The use by respondent of the representations aforesaid has unfairly diverted, and does unfairly divert, trade to the respondent from its said competitors, and thereby substantial injury is being, and has been done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's said competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 13th day of December 1937, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Joe Liebowitz, an individual, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On March 10, 1938, the respondent filed his answer, in which answer he admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that he waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter this proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and answer, and the Commission having duly considered the matter and now being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

Findings

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Joe Liebowitz, is an individual, with his office and place of business located at 1007 Chandler Avenue, Linden, N. J. He is, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing ladies' undergarments and other allied products. He sells and distributes such undergarments to retail dealers and other customers located in the various States of the United States. He causes said products, when sold, to be shipped from his place of business in Linden, N. J., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New Jersey. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said products so sold by him between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in competition with other persons, corporations, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of ladies' undergarments and other allied products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling certain of his aforesaid products, attaches, affixes and sews to said products a label bearing the following language: "100% Pure Silk."

The aforesaid statement made on such labels by the respondent serves as a representation to retail dealers and to members of the purchasing public that such products so labeled, advertised, and offered for sale are "pure silk." The representation thus made is false and misleading, in that, said products so represented, designated and referred to are not composed of pure silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but are predominantly or to a substantial degree composed of weighting material which is not silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the minds of the retail dealers and consuming public generally, a definite and specific meaning, to wit: A product of the cocoon of the silkworm. The expression "pure silk" for many years last past has had in the minds of the retail dealers and consuming public generally, a definite and specific meaning, to wit: A fabric composed entirely of silk without any weighting material whatsoever. Silk products for many years have held, and still hold, a great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Products composed entirely of pure silk and without weighting are regarded by the trade and the public generally as superior to and much preferred over silk products that contain weighting.

26 F. T. C.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent, referred to in paragraph 1, individuals, corporations, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of ladies' undergarments and other allied products, who do not misrepresent the nature of the material from which such garments are made.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the statements and representations set forth herein has had, and has, a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such products are "pure silk," and causes them to purchase said products as a result of such erroneous belief. The use by respondent of the representations aforesaid has unfairly diverted, and does unfairly divert, trade to respondent from those of his said competitors who do not resort to such methods and practices and who do not misrepresent the material from which their respective products are made.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Joe Liebowitz, an individual, are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's said competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on March 10, 1938, by respondent admitting all the material allegations to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Joe Liebowitz, an individual, his agents, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of ladies' undergarments and other allied products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the terms "pure silk" and "100% pure silk," or any other terms or words of similar import and meaning, to describe or designate any fabrics or products which are not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm:

2. Using the word "silk," or any other word or words of similar import or meaning, to describe or designate fabrics or products which are not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, unless, in the case of a fabric or product composed in part of silk and in part of rayon or material or materials other than silk, there is used in immediate connection and conjunction therewith, and in letters of at least equal size and conspicuousness, a word or words accurately describing the fiber, material or materials from which said fabric or product was actually made; and provided, that the fiber or material content of such fabric or product be accurately disclosed by designating each constituent fiber or material thereof, in the order of its predominance by weight, beginning with the largest single constituent.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

THOMAS R. MOSS, INDIVIDUALLY, AND TRADING AS OKEENA NOVELTY COMPANY AND MANUFACTURERS
SALES COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 3332. Complaint, Feb. 10, 1938—Decision, Apr. 9, 1938*

Where an individual engaged in offer and sale of radios, bridge sets, mixers, dishes, grill sets, and other articles of merchandise to purchasers in the various States and in the District of Columbia—

- (a) Sold and distributed his products through merchandising plan involving distribution of advertising literature, push cards, order blanks, advertisements illustrating his products, and circulars explaining his said plan, under which particular article or articles included, as set forth on cards' explanatory legends, were awarded to player successful in selecting by chance, from feminine names displayed thereon, particular name revealed, after sale of chances, by removal of master seal, at cost to said player of particular chance, as determined by number punched, and card's number price scale, thereon displayed, and under which operators of said cards were compensated by receipt of such merchandise;

With result that purchasing public was thus induced to buy pushes in hope of selecting prize-winning name or number and thereby obtaining article of merchandise of greater value than amount paid, as likewise determined by lot or chance, and many persons, attracted by his aforesaid method and element of chance involved in sale of his said merchandise, as above set forth, were induced to buy and sell same in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors, who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with further result of supplying means of conducting lotteries in sale of his merchandise in furnishing such push cards to operators thereof, in violation of long standing public policy of common law and criminal statutes and that of United States Government, and with effect of unfairly diverting to said individual trade and custom from competitors, including many who are unwilling to adopt and use such or any method involving game or sale of chance to win by chance, or other method contrary to public policy, and refrain therefrom, and with capacity and tendency so to divert; and

- (b) Included word "Manufacturers" in one of trade names employed by him in carrying on a part of his said business, and also used said word and word "Factories" in such phrases as "Associated Factories" and "Manufacturers and Distributors," in conjunction with or separate from trade name, to describe his said business, and in soliciting sales of his said products, and displayed said trade name and aforesaid words and phrases on letterheads, envelopes, catalogs, circulars, and other matter distributed to customers and prospective customers;

Notwithstanding fact that he did not, either independently or in association with others, make products sold by him, and had never done so, and did not own or operate or directly control or have any interest in, any mill or factory wherein such products were made, but filled orders received by him from factories and mills which he neither owned, operated, nor controlled;

Complaint

With effect of misleading and deceiving purchasers by causing them to believe that he actually owned and operated, independently or in association with others, or directly controlled, factories or mills in which products sold by him were made, or that he himself made same, and, on account of such belief, of causing purchasers, certain of whom prefer to buy directly from manufacturer by reason of advantages, including price, uniformity and reliability believed to inhere in such purchasing, to buy said products, and of unfairly diverting trade to him from individuals and concerns who actually manufacture their products, or who sell and distribute same between and among various States and in District of Columbia and do not falsely represent themselves to be manufacturers or mill operators:

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Mr. C. P. Moss, of Dyersburg, Tenn., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Thomas R. Moss, individually, and trading as Okeena Novelty Company, and Manufacturers Sales Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is an individual trading under the names and styles of Okeena Novelty Company and Manufacturers Sales Company, with his principal office and place of business located on West Court Street, in the city of Dyersburg, Tenn. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in offering for sale and selling radios, bridge sets, mixers, dishes, grill sets, and other articles of merchandise, to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. He causes and has caused said merchandise when sold to be shipped or transported from his place of business in the State of Tennessee into and through other States of the United States and the District of Columbia to purchasers thereof at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of like and similar articles of merchandise, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing his merchandise, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes, by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance. The method and sales plan adopted and used by respondent was, and is, substantially as follows:

Respondent causes and has caused to be distributed to the purchasing public, through the United States mails in interstate commerce, certain advertising literature, including, among other things, push cards, order blanks, advertisements containing illustrations of his merchandise, and circulars explaining respondent's plan of selling said merchandise and of allotting it as premiums or prizes to the operators of the push cards. Said push cards bear a number of feminine names, with a blank space opposite each for writing in the name of the customer. Said push cards have a corresponding number of partially perforated discs, on each of which is printed one of the feminine names printed alphabetically elsewhere on the cards. Concealed within each disc is a number, which is disclosed when the disc is pushed or separated from the card. The push cards have a master seal, concealed within which is one of the feminine names appearing elsewhere on the said cards. The push card bears printed legends or instructions, one of which is as follows:

Sales of respondent's products by means of said push cards are made in accordance with the specified legends or instructions. Said articles of merchandise sold and distributed by respondent vary in value, but each of said articles of merchandise is of greater value than the cost of a single push from said push cards. The purchasing public is thus induced and persuaded to purchase pushes from said cards in the hope that they may select a prize-winning name or number and thus obtain an article of merchandise of a greater value than the amount paid. The various articles of merchandise are thus distributed to the purchasing public wholly by lot or chance, and the amount which the customer pays for a chance is also determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes his representatives with additional printed instructions or suggestions for using said push cards. One of said printed instructions bears the following legend, to wit:

INSTRUCTIONS: There are 45 mixed numbers in this card, printed from 1 upwards. Numbers under 25 pay what number calls for. All numbers over 25 pay only 25¢. When card is completely sold, open large seal at top, and person selecting name under seal, and person selling this card, each receive a Moss DeLuxe Card Table, with 2 Bilt-In Combination Ash Trays and Coasters. Tables with 4 Bilt-In Combination Ash Trays and Coasters can be had, if desired, for 50¢ extra per table.

TOTAL $10.00

Respondent furnishes or sells various push cards for use in the sale and distribution of his merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme. Said push cards are similar and vary in detail, but the above described plan or method is illustrative of the principle involved.

PAR. 3. The persons to whom respondent furnishes the said push cards use the same in purchasing, selling, and distributing respondent's merchandise in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of his merchandise, and the sale of such merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an article of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. Many persons, firms, and corporations who sell or distribute merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof, in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does, divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of his business, as hereinabove described, respondent has included within one of his trade names, Manufacturers Sales Company, under which to carry on a part of his business, the word "Manufacturers." Respondent has also used and is using the word "factories" within the phrase "associated factories," and the word "manufacturers" within the phrase "manufacturers and distributors," in conjunction with, or separate from, his said trade names, with which to describe his said business. Respondent has used continuously for some time last past, and is now using, said trade name containing the word "Manufacturers," and has likewise used the words "associated factories" and "manufacturers and distributors," in soliciting the sale of and selling his products in commerce as hereinabove described. Respondent has caused his said trade name, Manufacturers Sales Company, and the words "associated factories" and "manufacturers and distributors" to appear on his letterheads, envelopes, catalogs, circulars, and other matter. All of said printed matter has been, and is, distributed in and among the various States to customers and prospective customers of the respondent. Such statements and designations serve as representations that respondent owns, operates, or controls the factory or mill wherein the products which he sells are manufactured, and that the respondent is associated with others in the manufacture of his said products.

In truth and in fact, said respondent does not, either independently or in association with others, make or manufacture the products sold by him, nor has he ever made or manufactured said products, either independently or in association with others. Respondent does not own or operate, or directly and absolutely control, or have any interest in any mill or factory wherein the products sold by him are made or manufactured. Respondent has, at all times referred to herein, filled, and now fills, orders received by him with products made or manufactured in factories or mills which he does not own, operate, or control.

PAR. 6. There is a preference on the part of certain purchasers or prospective purchasers located in different States of the United States and in the District of Columbia for buying said products and like or similar products directly from the manufacturer or mill producing the same. There is an impression and belief existing among certain of said purchasers or prospective purchasers of said products that a saving of the middleman's profit may be obtained, that a more uniform line of goods may be purchased, and that an advantage is obtained by purchasing goods directly from a manufacturer or a mill operator. Said purchasers or prospective purchasers also believe that more reliance can be placed on a manufacturer or mill operator with regard to carrying out of contracts than can be placed upon one not a manufacturer or mill operator, and that dealing with a manufacturer or mill operator is preferable and more advantageous to the purchaser than is dealing with one not a manufacturer or mill operator. The use by the respondent of the words "manufacturers," "manufacturers and distributors," and "associated factories," as described hereinabove, has a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers by causing them to believe that the respondent, independently or in association with others, actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, the factories or mills in which the products sold by respondent are made or manufactured, or that respondent himself makes or manufactures his products, and to purchase respondent's products on account of such beliefs. The aforesaid representations by respondent have a tendency and capacity to, and do, unfairly divert trade to respondent from individuals, partnerships and corporations who are actually manufacturing products like or similar to the products of respondent, or who sell and distribute like or similar products, both of which classes sell their respective products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and who do not represent themselves to be manufacturers or mill operators when they are not such in fact.

PAR. 7. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on February 10, 1938, issued, and thereafter served, its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent Thomas R. Moss, individually, and trading as Okeena Novelty Company and Manufacturers' Sales Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and substitute therefor a substitute answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is an individual trading under the names and styles of Okeena Novelty Company and Manufacturers' Sales Company, with his principal office and place of business located on West Court Street, in the city of Dyersburg, Tenn. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in offering for sale and selling radios, bridge sets, mixers, dishes, grill sets, and other articles of merchandise, to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. He causes and has caused said merchandise when sold to be shipped or transported from his place of business in the State of Tennessee into and through the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia to purchasers thereof at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of like and similar articles of merchandise, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Findings

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing his merchandise through interstate commerce, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises or lottery schemes, by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance. The method and sales plan adopted and used by respondent was, and is, substantially as follows:

Respondent causes and has caused to be distributed to the purchasing public, through the United States mails in interstate commerce, certain advertising literature, including, among other things, push cards, order blanks, advertisements containing illustrations of his merchandise, and circulars explaining respondent's plan of selling said merchandise and of allotting it as premiums or prizes to the operators of the push cards. Said push cards bear a number of feminine names, with a blank space opposite each for writing in the name of the customer. Said push cards have a corresponding number of partially perforated discs, on each of which is printed one of the feminine names printed alphabetically elsewhere on the cards. Concealed within each disc is a number, which is disclosed when the disc is pushed or separated from the card. The push cards have a master seal, concealed within which is one of the feminine names appearing elsewhere on the said cards. The push cards bear printed legends or instructions, one of which is as follows:

Findings

26 F. T. C.

Sales of respondent's products by means of said push cards are made in accordance with the specified legends or instructions. Said articles of merchandise sold and distributed by respondent vary in value, but each of said articles of merchandise is of greater value than the cost of a single push from said push cards. The purchasing public is thus induced and persuaded to purchase pushes from said cards in the hope that they may select a prize-winning name or number and thus obtain an article of merchandise of a greater value than the amount paid. The various articles of merchandise are thus distributed to the purchasing public wholly by lot or chance, and the amount which the customer pays for a chance is also determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes his representatives with additional printed instructions or suggestions for using said push cards. One of said printed instructions bears the following legend, to wit:

INSTRUCTIONS: There are 45 mixed numbers in this card, printed from 1 upwards. Numbers under 25 pay what numbers call for. All numbers over 25 pay only 25¢. When card is completely sold, open large seal at top, and person selecting name under seal, and person selling this card, each receive a Moss DeLuxe Card Table, with 2 Bilt-In Combination Ash Trays and Coasters. Tables with 4 Bilt-In Combination Ash Trays and Coasters can be had, if desired, for 50¢ extra per table.

Respondent furnishes or sells various push cards for use in the sale and distribution of his merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme. Said push cards are similar, varying only in detail, and the above described plan or method is illustrative of the principle involved.

PAR. 3. The persons to whom respondent furnishes the said push cards use the same in purchasing, selling, and distributing respondent's merchandise in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of his merchandise, and the sale of such merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an article of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. Many persons, firms, and corporations who sell or distribute merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above found, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof, in the manner above found, and are thereby induced to buy and sell respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does, unfairly divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of his business, as hereinabove described, respondent has included within one of his trade names, Manufacturers' Sales Company, under which to carry on a part of his business, the word "Manufacturers'." Respondent has also used and is using the word "factories" within the phrase "associated factories," and the word "manufacturers" within the phrase "manufacturers and distributors," in conjunction with, or separate from, his said trade names, with which to describe his said business. Respondent has used continuously for some time last past, and is now using, said trade name containing the word "Manufacturers'," and has likewise used, and is now using, the words "associated factories" and "manufacturers and distributors," in soliciting the sale of and selling his products in commerce as hereinabove found. Respondent has caused his said trade name, Manufacturers' Sales Company, and the words "associated factories" and "manufacturers and distributors" to appear on his letterheads, envelopes, catalogs, circulars, and other matter. All of said printed matter has been, and is, distributed in and among the various States of the United States to customers and prospective customers of the respondent. Such statements and designations serve as representations that respondent owns, operates, or controls the factory or mill wherein the products which he sells are manufactured, and that the respondent is associated with others in the manufacture of his said products.

In truth and in fact, said respondent does not, either independently or in association with others, make or manufacture the products sold by him, nor has he ever made or manufactured said products, either independently or in association with others. Respondent does not own or operate, or directly and absolutely control, or have any interest in any mill or factory wherein the products sold by him are made or manufactured. Respondent has, at all times found herein, filled, and now fills, orders received by him with products made or manufactured in factories or mills which he does not own, operate, or control.

PAR. 6. There is a preference on the part of certain purchasers and prospective purchasers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia for buying said products and like or similar products directly from the manufacturer or mill producing the same. There is an impression and belief existing among certain of said purchasers and prospective purchasers of said products that a saving of the middleman's profit may be obtained, that a more uniform line of goods may be purchased, and that an advantage is obtained by purchasing goods directly from a manufacturer or mill operator. Said purchasers and prospective purchasers also believe that more reliance can be placed on a manufacturer or mill operator with regard to carrying out of contracts than can be placed upon one not a manufacturer or mill operator, and that dealing with a manufacturer or mill operator is preferable and more advantageous to the purchaser than is dealing with one not a manufacturer or mill operator. The use by the respondent of the words "manufacturers," "manufacturers and distributors," and "associated factories," as found hereinabove, has a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive, and has misled and deceived, purchasers by causing them to believe that the respondent, independently or in association with others, actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, the factories or mills in which the products sold by respondent are made or manufactured, or that respondent himself makes or manufactures his products, and to purchase respondent's products on account of such beliefs. The aforesaid representations by respondent have a tendency and capacity to, and do, unfairly divert trade to respondent from individuals, partnerships, and corporations who are actually manufacturing products like or similar to the products of respondent, or who sell and distribute like or similar products, both of which classes sell their respective products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and who do not represent themselves to be manufacturers or mill operators when they are not such in fact.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Thomas R. Moss, individually and trading as Okeena Novelty Company, and Manufacturers' Sales Company, are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer of respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Thomas R. Moss, individually, and trading as Okeena Novelty Company and Manufacturers' Sales Company, or trading under any other name, his agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of radios, bridge sets, mixers, dishes, grill sets, or any other article of merchandise, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Supplying to or placing in the hands of others, push or pull cards, punchboards or other lottery devices, for the purpose of enabling such persons to dispose of or sell such or similar products by the use thereof;
2. Mailing, shipping or transporting to his agents or to distributors or to members of the public, push or pull cards, punchboards or other lottery devices so prepared or printed as to enable said persons to sell or distribute such or similar products by the use thereof;
3. Selling or otherwise disposing of such or similar products by the use of push or pull cards, punchboards or other lottery devices;
4. Representing, through the use of the word "manufacturers" in his trade names or in any other printed matter, or through the use of the word "factories" or through the use of any words or terms of similar import and meaning, or through any other means or devices or in any manner, that said respondent is the manufacturer of the products sold by him, unless and until respondent actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, a manufacturing plant wherein said products are manufactured by him.

It is further ordered, That, within 60 days from the date of the service of this order upon said respondent, he shall file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which this order has been complied with.

JACOB STEIN, TRADING AS CLIMAX RUBBER COMPANY

COMPLAINT, MODIFIED FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914¹

Docket 2303. Complaint, Feb. 20, 1935—Decision, Apr. 13, 1938¹

Where an individual engaged in offer and sale of certain rubber, sanitary, and waterproof specialties, including infant bibs, baby pants, and crib sheets; in describing same in certain advertisements, pamphlets, and booklets—

- (a) Represented that they were antiseptic and actually killed bacteria and germs, facts being that while they did have antiseptic properties and combatted growth of germs and bacteria which came in direct contact with them under normal conditions of use, and had power to inhibit to a large extent growth and activity of bacteria brought in such contact, and to kill many such germs and bacteria, they did not actually thus kill all germs and bacteria;
- (b) Represented that said products were antiaacid and neutralized perspiration and other body wastes and completely deodorized all odors, facts being that while they had property of neutralizing, to a substantial extent, odor of such wastes when brought in close contact with them under normal conditions of use and had deodorant properties in combatting obnoxious odors developing from fermentation or putrification of such wastes when brought in such contact as aforesaid, they were not completely effective so as to deodorize and neutralize all such odors;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasing public into erroneous and mistaken beliefs that said products actually killed all germs and bacteria and were completely effective in neutralizing odors as aforesaid, and would completely deodorize all such odors, irrespective of their origin or character, and into purchase of substantial quantities of said products in and on account of such erroneous and mistaken beliefs, induced as aforesaid, and with result of furnishing to dealers in its said products means and instrumentality whereby they might misrepresent true nature and character of same and extent to which they were effective in use, and increase sale thereof to purchasing public thereby, and with tendency and capacity unfairly to divert trade to him from competitors who do not make use of any such misleading statements and representations with respect to nature and effectiveness in use of their respective competitive products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Climax Rubber Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said Act of Congress, and in violation of the Act of Congress approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act," and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business as such, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn in the State of New York. Respondent has been and is engaged in offering for sale and selling to dealers therein and to other persons located at various places in the several States of the United States certain sanitary and waterproof specialties, including infant bibs, baby pants, and crib sheets. Respondent, when said products are sold, causes the same to be transported from its said place of business in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, at their respective places of business, and there is now and has been for more than 1 year last past a course of trade and commerce by the said respondent in such products between and among the States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is in competition with other persons, firms, associations, or corporations who are likewise engaged in offering for sale and selling the same, like, or competitive products in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and within the District of Columbia.

² Count II of the complaint, charging the methods, acts, and practices alleged as in violation of the standards of fair competition of the Sanitary and Waterproof Specialties Manufacturing Industry, and particularly in violation of Article VI, Sec. 3, of the Code for such industry, and as in violation of Sec. 3 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and as unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning and intent of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, was dismissed in the original order to cease and desist under Count I, in 22 F. T. C. 24, at 32, and is accordingly not republished at this time.

PAR. 2. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, and in connection with and aid of so offering for sale and selling its said products, and as an inducement to the purchase thereof, advertises said products above specifically mentioned upon labels thereon, in printed advertisements and otherwise as being made of rubber that has antiseptic and antiaacid properties and powers, which actually kill bacteria and neutralize perspiration and other body wastes, completely deodorizing all odors. In truth and in fact, said rubber and said articles made therefrom do not have antiseptic and antiaacid properties and powers which actually kill bacteria and neutralize perspiration and other body wastes, completely deodorizing all odors. Said rubber and said articles made therefrom do not have any antiseptic or antiaacid qualities of value, nor have they qualities and powers to neutralize acid perspiration.

PAR. 3. The use by respondent of said method and the false and misleading statements and representations so made by respondent have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said statements and representations are true, and to induce the public in and because of such erroneous belief to purchase respondent's said products. Said false and misleading representations so made by respondent furnish to dealers in respondent's said products the means of misleading and deceiving the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said statements are true, and to induce the public in and because of such erroneous belief to purchase respondent's said products. Said false and misleading representations so made by respondent have the tendency and capacity to divert trade from the aforesaid competitors of respondent to the respondent and to dealers in respondent's said products.

PAR. 4. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on February 20, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Jacob Stein, an individual trading under the name and style of Climax Rubber Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs and oral argument of counsel in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the Commission, on January 16, 1936, having duly considered the matter, found that the proceeding was in the interest of the public and made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion therefrom and issued its order to cease and desist. Subsequently, the Commission reopened the case and testimony and other evidence in support of the complaint were introduced by Edward W. Thomerson, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition thereto by Nathaniel P. Phillips, attorney for the respondent, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and a stipulation as to the facts, in addition to all the testimony and other evidence already received in the entire proceeding, was entered into subject to the approval of the Commission and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission and said stipulation was approved by the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final consideration by the Commission on said complaint, answer thereto, all the testimony and other evidence and the aforesaid stipulation as to the facts, and the Commission having duly considered the record finds that the proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its modified findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom:

MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual trading under the name and style of Climax Rubber Company, with his office and principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, in the State of New York. Respondent has been, and is, engaged in offering for sale and selling to dealers therein and to other persons located at various places in the several States of the United States certain rubber sanitary and waterproof specialties, including infant bibs, baby pants, and crib sheets. Respondent, when said products are sold, causes the same to be transported from his said place of business in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, at their respective places of business, and there is now and has been for more than 1 year last past a course of trade and commerce by the said respondent in such products between and among the States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent is in competition with other persons, firms, associations, and corporations who are likewise engaged in offering for sale and selling the same, like, or competitive products in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and within the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described herein, and for the purpose of promoting and inducing the sale and distribution of his aforesaid various rubber sanitary and waterproof specialties, the respondent has made use of certain advertising pamphlets and booklets wherein are used statements and representations purporting to be descriptive of said products and their effectiveness in use. In said pamphlets and booklets the respondent has stated and represented that said products are antiseptic and antiacid, and that they actually kill bacteria and germs, neutralize perspiration and other body wastes, and completely deodorize all odors. Such statements not only serve as representations that said products are antiseptic and antiacid and will kill bacteria and germs; that said products neutralize perspiration and other body wastes; and that said products completely deodorize all odors; but they have the capacity and tendency to confuse members of the purchasing public as to the extent to which said products are in fact antiseptic in character, the extent to which said products kill bacteria and germs, and the extent to which said products neutralize the odor from perspiration and other body wastes. Such purchasers may, on account of said tendency and capacity, be led to erroneously and mistakenly believe that said products actually kill all germs and bacteria and are completely effective in neutralizing the odors of perspiration, urine, and other body wastes, and will completely deodorize all odors irrespective of origin or character.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, said products do have antiseptic properties and do combat the growth of germs and bacteria which come in direct contact with said products under normal conditions of use. Said products do have the power to inhibit, to a large extent, the growth and activity of bacteria brought in direct contact with them and to kill many such germs and bacteria. Said products do not, however, actually kill all germs and bacteria coming in direct contact with them. Said products are not completely effective so as to deodorize or neutralize all odors of perspiration, urine, or other body wastes. Said products do have the property of neutralizing to a substantial extent the odor of perspiration, urine, and other body wastes when such wastes are brought in close contact with said products under normal conditions of use. While such products do not completely deodorize all odors, they do have deodorant properties in that said products combat the obnoxious odors developing from the fermentation or putrefication of urine, perspiration, and other wastes when said wastes are brought in close contact with said products under normal conditions of use.

PAR. 4. The use by the respondent of said misleading statements and representations as to the nature, character, and effectiveness of said products in use, has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that said products actually kill all germs and bacteria and are completely effective in neutralizing the odors of perspiration, urine, and other body wastes, and will completely deodorize all odors irrespective of origin or character, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's products in and on account of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced as aforesaid. Said misleading statements and representations made by the respondent also furnish to dealers in respondent's products a means and instrumentality whereby said dealers may misrepresent the true nature and character of said products and the extent to which they are effective in use and to increase the sales of respondent's products to the purchasing public on account of such misrepresentations. The aforesaid representations so made by the respondent have the tendency and capacity to unfairly divert trade to the respondent and to dealers in his products from respondent's competitors who do not make use of any misleading statements and representations with respect to the nature and effectiveness in use of their respective competitive products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Jacob Stein, trading as Climax Rubber Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

Whereas, The Commission heard this proceeding upon the record and upon briefs and oral argument of counsel for the Commission and for the respondent and on January 16, 1936 made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent had violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and issued its order to cease and desist based thereon; and

Whereas, The Commission on February 12, 1936 reopened the case for the purpose of receiving further testimony and other evidence; and

Whereas, Such testimony and other evidence were introduced by Nathaniel Phillips, attorney for the respondent, and Edward W. Thomerson, attorney for the Commission, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it; and

Whereas, A stipulation as to certain facts was entered into between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Commission, and the respondent, which stipulation has been approved by the Commission; and

Whereas, The Commission has on this date modified its said findings as to the facts and has duly considered the entire record herein and being now fully advised in the premises;

It is ordered, That the order to cease and desist issued on January 16, 1936 be, and the same is hereby, modified so as to read as follows:

It is ordered, That the respondent, Jacob Stein, trading and doing business under the name of Climax Rubber Company, or under any other name, his agents, representatives, servants, and employees, in connection with the sale and distribution of rubber sanitary and waterproof specialties, including infant's bibs, baby pants, and crib sheets, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly:

1. That said products actually kill all germs and bacteria, provided, however, that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that said products have antiseptic properties and combat the growth of germs and bacteria;

2. That said products are completely effective in neutralizing all odors of perspiration, urine, and other body wastes, or that said products completely deodorize all odors, provided the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that said products combat obnoxious odors developing from the fermentation or putrefaction of urine, perspiration, or other body wastes.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after the service upon him of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
MARCELLE CANDIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2913. Complaint, Aug. 29, 1936—Decision, Apr. 13, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "draw" or "deal" candy, including assortments composed of number of half-pound trays, number of one-pound boxes; and punchboard or push card with punches or pushes divided into sections, through use of which boards or cards said candy was sold to ultimate consumer-purchaser under scheme by which, in accordance with explanatory statement thereon displayed, purchaser of one of 5-cent chances received, or failed to receive, one of said trays, in accordance with chance selection, or failure to select, one of various designated, concealed numbers, as announced on card or board, and received, by punching or pushing last number in section, one of pound boxes, and thus secured, by lot or chance and in event of correct selection for tray, merchandise exceeding 5-cent cost of chance—

Sold said assortments and cards or boards to wholesale dealers and jobbers, so assembled and packed that they could be and were used and displayed by numerous retail dealer buyers, for distribution to purchasing public by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement, and with knowledge that majority of said assortments, as thus packaged by it, were to be, and could be, thus resold to public by lot or chance by said retail dealers, in violation of public policy; in competition with other manufacturers and dealers, many of whom regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling and injurious to candy industry as merchandising chance or lottery instead of candy, and some of whom refuse, for reasons set forth, to sell candy so packed that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result of supplying to and placing in the hands of retail merchants means of violating the laws of the several States in sale and distribution of such "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, preferentially purchased by consumers because of gambling feature connected with sale thereof, and which, in providing means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teach and encourage gambling among children, comprising substantial number of purchasers and consumers of such candy, and sale of which in same market with "straight" goods is followed by marked decrease in sales of latter, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with other, and with effect of unfairly diverting from such refusing competitors, thereby put to competitive disadvantage, trade to it and others using similar methods, by reason of retailers' purchase of such candy from it and such others as more salable under "draw" or "deal" method:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

Mr. Ernest P. Rogers of Hirsch & Smith, of Atlanta, Ga., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Marcelle Candies, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Marcelle Candies, Inc., is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Georgia, with its principal office and place of business located at 223 Peachtree Street, N. W. Atlanta, Ga. The respondent is now and for more than 1 year last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Atlanta, Ga., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candies between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candies so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

(a) Several of the said assortments manufactured and distributed by respondents are composed of a number of half-pound trays of candy and a number of 1 pound boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard" or "push card" with the punches or pushes divided into sections. The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said "punch-board" or "push card" in the following manner: Sales are 5 cents each, and when a punch or push is made from said "punchboard" or "push card" a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches or pushes there are on the board or card but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board or card bears a statement or statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers as to which numbers receive the half-pound trays of candy and a statement or statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that the last punch or push in each section receives one of the one pound boxes of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the half-pound trays of candy or by punching or pushing the last number in a section receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching or pushing a number from the board or card. The trays and boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a tray or box of candy receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers on said board or card are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular punch or push separated from the board or card. The trays and boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches or pushes from said board or card wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a tray or box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

Findings

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 29, 1936, issued and served its complaint upon the respondent, Marcelle Candies, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski and Henry C. Lank, attorneys for the Commission, and in opposition thereto by Ernest P. Rogers, attorney for the respondent, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it. The said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint (brief in opposition thereto having been waived, and oral argument not having been requested), and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent Marcelle Candies, Inc., is a corporation, organized and operating under the laws of the State of Georgia, with its principal office and place of business located at 223 Peachtree Street, N. W., Atlanta, Ga. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located in the States in the southeastern part of the United States, including, among others, the States of Florida, Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Louisiana. It causes its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Atlanta, Ga., to purchasers thereof in the State of Georgia and in such other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In so carrying on said business, respondent is, and has been, engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. The gross annual volume of respondent's business is approximately $200,000.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has sold in commerce between and among the States of the United States to wholesale dealers and jobbers, various packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. The said assortments were described by an official of the respondent called as a witness at the instance of the Commission, and are described in the circular distributed by the respondent which was offered as an exhibit. One of said assortments is hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the method used by the respondent, but this description does not include all of the assortments, nor the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of half pound trays of candy, and a number of 1 pound boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard" or a "push card," with the punches or pushes divided into sections. The said trays and packages of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said "punchboard" or "push card" in the following manner:

Sales are 5 cents each and when a punch or push is made from said punchboard or push card, a number is disclosed. The numbers begin at 1 and continue to the number of punches or pushes there are on the board or card, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board or card bears a statement or statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers as to which numbers receive the half pound trays of candy and a statement or statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that the last punch or push in each section receives two of the 1-pound boxes of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the half pound trays of candy or by punching or pushing the last number in a section receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching or pushing a number from the board or card. The trays and boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a tray or box of candy receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers on said board or card are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made, and the particular punch or push separated from the board or card. The trays of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches or pushes from said board or card wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature as described in paragraph 2 above are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without any lot or chance feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" merchandise. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish the various types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell the same to retail dealers. Numerous retail dealers purchase the said assortments from wholesale dealers and jobbers, and the majority of such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed by the respondent, and the candy contained in the majority of said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public by means of said push cards or punch boards in the manner hereinbefore described.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent to wholesale dealers and jobbers are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are, and have been, used, and may be used, by retail dealers for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement.

In the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers of the assortments of candy hereinbefore described, respondent had knowledge that the majority of said assortments were to be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packaged such candy in the way and manner described so that, without alteration, addition thereto, or rearrangement thereof, it would be, and could be, resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers. Such packing and distribution is contrary to public policy.

Consumers prefer to purchase the "draw" or "deal" candy, because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

26 F. T. C.

PAR. 6. There are, in the United States, many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" merchandise in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of "straight" merchandise have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "draw" or "deal" assortments have appeared in their market. This decrease in the sale of "straight" merchandise is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "draw" or "deal" candy.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise. Many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and as injurious to the candy industry, because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery, instead of candy. The sale and distribution of candy, by respondent in assortments as hereinabove found supplies to and places in the hands of retail merchants a means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons, some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a competitive disadvantage. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "draw" or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is unfairly diverted from said competitors to respondent and others using similar methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Marcelle Candies, Inc., are to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

spondent having been waived and oral argument not having been requested); and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Marcelle Candies, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers packages or assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public;

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a punchboard or push card for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling the said candy to the public at retail;

4. Furnishing to dealers a device commonly called a punchboard or push card, together with packages or assortments of candy, or separately, which punchboard or push card is to be used, or may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public.

It is further ordered, That the respondent Marcelle Candies, Inc., shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied and is complying with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3257. Complaint, Nov. 1, 1937—Decision, Apr. 13, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of perfumery and toilet articles to purchasing and consuming public—

- (a) Represented through word "Factory" on letterheads and invoices, and otherwise, that it was manufacturer of products offered and sold by it, facts being it neither made nor compounded same, nor owned, operated nor controlled a factory or mill so doing; with capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers into erroneous belief that in buying such products from it they were dealing with manufacturer thereof and thereby saving middleman's profit and obtaining other advantages;
- (b) Displayed word "Paris" on its merchandise and on labels of packaged products, and represented through matter appearing on letterheads and labels of products and in other ways, that they originated in, or were imported from, France, facts being it had no Paris place of business and its said products were made and compounded in United States; with tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers into erroneous belief that in buying same they were purchasing perfumes or toilet articles made or compounded in France and imported therefrom, such as long in great demand among trade and consuming public and considered superior by many to the domestic product, and purchased in preference thereto;
- (c) Represented that its said products had values greatly in excess of their actual retail selling prices and values, through price-marks placed thereon which were greatly in excess of such actual prices and values and in no sense represented either, with result that members of purchasing public were led into erroneous and mistaken belief that said products' actual values and selling prices were stamped or marked thereon, in accordance with custom of marking or stamping such actual retail price or value on commodities, as understood and relied on by public as indication of quality to extent of purchasing merchandise in substantial volume in dependence thereon;

With effect of misleading substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that such representations were true and into purchase of substantial quantities of said products as result thereof, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from competitor manufacturers and distributors who do not misrepresent status or nature of their respective businesses, the origin of their products, or prices at which same are sold, or otherwise publish untrue claims therefor, in their advertisement, sale and distribution of competitive products in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Dermay Perfumers, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Dermay Perfumers, Inc., is a corporation, organized in 1924 and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business is at 347 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Respondent is now, and since the date of incorporation has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumery and toilet articles to the purchasing and consuming public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent now causes, and since the date of its incorporation has caused, its products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade in perfumery and toilet articles, by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is, and since 1924 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumery and toilet articles in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. During the time respondent has been in business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, it has represented, and still represents, by means of certain printed matter appearing on its letterheads and invoices, and in various other ways, that it is the manufacturer of the products which it offers for sale and sells.

On its letterheads and invoices the following appears:

Dermay, Inc.,
PERFUMERS
General Offices and Factory
625 West 43rd Street
New York, N. Y.

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

In truth and in fact, the respondent does not manufacture or compound the products which it offers for sale and sells, nor does it own and operate, or directly and absolutely control a factory or mill wherein its said products are manufactured or compounded.

It is a common belief among the purchasing public that such merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price and that other advantages can be secured by so purchasing. The representations made by respondent, as alleged herein, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers of respondent's products into the erroneous belief that when they purchase said products from respondent they are dealing with the manufacturer of said products and thereby are saving the middleman's profit and obtaining other advantages.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, the respondent has represented and still represents, by means of printed matter appearing on its letterheads, the labels attached to its products, and in other ways, that certain of its products originate in or are imported from France, and that it has a place of business in Paris, France. The word "Paris" appears on its letterheads and on the labels affixed to its packaged products.

In truth and in fact the respondent's products do not originate in and are not imported from France nor does it have a place of business in Paris, France. Its products are manufactured and compounded in the United States of America.

Perfumes and certain toilet articles of French origin have for many years enjoyed widespread popularity and goodwill and have been very much in demand among the trade and consuming public throughout the United States. Many persons believe that perfumes and certain toilet articles manufactured in France are superior in quality and in many other ways to perfumes and toilet articles manufactured and compounded in the United States and prefer to purchase perfumes and certain toilet articles of French origin in preference to perfumes and toilet articles manufactured or compounded in the United States. The aforesaid representations of the respondent have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers into the erroneous belief that when they purchase respondent's products they are purchasing products which were, in fact, manufactured or compounded in France and imported into the United States.

PAR. 4. By price marks placed upon certain of its said products, respondent represents to customers and prospective customers that said products have values greatly in excess of the actual retail selling prices and in excess of the actual values thereof.

Complaint

The price marks placed upon said products, as aforesaid, are greatly in excess of the actual retail selling prices of said products and are in excess of the true and actual values thereof and in no sense represent either the true values or true selling prices of the products so marked but are greatly in excess of the prices at which the same are sold or intended to be sold in the usual course of trade.

The public generally understands the custom of marking or stamping the actual retail price or value on various commodities and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped on commodities and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom. As a result of the respondent's representations, members of the purchasing public are led to erroneously and mistakenly believe that the actual value and selling price of respondent's products are the prices stamped or marked thereon when, in fact, the prices so stamped or marked are fictitious and in no sense represent the actual selling price or value of the products referred to.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled, a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said respondent's products as a result of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of perfumes and toilet articles who do not misrepresent the status or nature of their respective businesses, the origin of their products, or the price at which their products are sold, or otherwise publish claims for their products which are untrue. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors and as a result thereof, substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on November 1, 1937, issued, and on November 3, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Dermal Perfumers, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs having been waived and oral argument not having been requested, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Dermal Perfumers, Inc., is a corporation, organized in 1924 and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business are at 347 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Respondent is now, and since the date of incorporation has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumery and toilet articles to the purchasing and consuming public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent now causes, and since the date of its incorporation has caused, its products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a course of trade in perfumery and toilet articles, by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is, and since 1924 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumery and toilet articles in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Findings

PAR. 2. During the time respondent has been in business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, it has represented, and still represents, by means of certain printed matter appearing on its letterheads and invoices, and in various other ways, that it is the manufacturer of the products which it offers for sale and sells.

On its letterheads and invoices the following appears:

Dermay, Inc.,
PERFUMERS
General Offices and Factory
625 West 43rd Street
New York, N. Y.

The respondent does not manufacture or compound the products which it offers for sale and sells, nor does it own and operate, or directly and absolutely control a factory or mill wherein its said products are manufactured or compounded.

It is a common belief among the purchasing public that such merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price and that other advantages can be secured by so purchasing. The representations made by respondent, as alleged herein, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers of respondent's products into the erroneous belief that when they purchase said products from respondent they are dealing with the manufacturer of said products and thereby are saving the middleman's profit and obtaining other advantages.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, the respondent has represented and still represents, by means of printed matter appearing on its letterheads, the labels attached to its products, and in other ways, that certain of its products originate in or are imported from France, and that it has a place of business in Paris, France. The word "Paris" appears on its letterheads and on the labels affixed to its packaged products.

The respondent's products do not originate in and are not imported from France nor does it have a place of business in Paris, France. Its products are manufactured and compounded in the United States of America.

Perfumes and certain toilet articles of French origin have for many years enjoyed widespread popularity and goodwill and have been very much in demand among the trade and consuming public throughout the United States. Many persons believe that perfumes and certain toilet articles manufactured in France are superior in quality and in many other ways to perfumes and toilet articles manufactured and compounded in the United States and prefer to purchase perfumes and certain toilet articles of French origin in preference to perfumes and toilet articles manufactured or compounded in the United States. The aforesaid representations of the respondent have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers into the erroneous belief that when they purchase respondent's products they are purchasing products which were, in fact, manufactured or compounded in France and imported into the United States.

PAR. 4. By price marks placed upon certain of its said products, respondent represents to customers and prospective customers that said products have values greatly in excess of the actual retail selling prices and in excess of the actual values thereof.

The price marks placed upon said products, as aforesaid, are greatly in excess of the actual retail selling prices of said products and are in excess of the true and actual values thereof and in no sense represent either the true values or true selling prices of the products so marked but are greatly in excess of the prices at which the same are sold or intended to be sold in the usual course of trade.

The public generally understands the custom of marking or stamping the actual retail price or value on various commodities, and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped on commodities and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom. As a result of the respondent's representations, members of the purchasing public are led to erroneously and mistakenly believe that the actual value and selling price of respondent's products are the prices stamped or marked thereon when, in fact, the prices so stamped or marked are fictitious and in no sense represent the actual selling price or value of the products referred to.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and has misled, a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said respondent's products as a result of such erroneous belief.

There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of perfumes and toilet articles who do not misrepresent the status or nature of their respective businesses, the origin of their products, or the price at which their products are sold, or otherwise publish claims for their products which are untrue, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute perfumes and toilet articles in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been, and is now being, unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Dermay Perfumers, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and states that it waives hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act;

It is ordered, That the respondent, Dermay Perfumers, Inc., a corporation, its agents, representatives and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of perfumes and other toilet articles in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the word "Factory," or through the use of any word or term of similar import and meaning, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that said respondent is the manufacturer of the products sold by it, unless and until it actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, a manufacturing plant wherein said products are manufactured by it;

2. Representing, through the use of the word "Paris," or through the use of any word or term, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that it has a place of business in Paris, France, and that its perfumes and other toilet articles compounded, bottled and packaged in the United States are made or compounded in France, or in any other foreign country, or that they are imported products;

3. Representing, through the use of fictitious price marks, or through the use of any other means or device, or in any manner, that its perfumes and toilet articles have retail values or prices which are in excess of the prices at which said perfumes, and toilet articles are actually and customarily offered for sale and sold to the ultimate purchaser.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPANY

OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3286. Complaint, Dec. 22, 1937—Decision, Apr. 13, 1938

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of hosiery through house-to-house canvassers, principally, in the various States and in the District of Columbia—

(a) Represented himself to be the manufacturer thereof, through inclusion of word "Knitting" in his trade name and display thereof on his letterheads, order blanks, and in advertising matter in various magazines and otherwise, facts being he did not make same, nor own and operate nor directly and absolutely control any mill and factory in which same was made, but purchased said products from various hosiery manufacturers;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers thereof into false and erroneous belief that in buying from him they were dealing with manufacturer and thereby gaining an advantage in price by saving middleman's profit and in other ways; and

(b) Represented, in advertising for distributors in the "Agents Wanted" columns of various magazines of interstate circulation, and through form letters and otherwise, and to the purchasing public generally, that his said hosiery was proof against spots, splashes, and snagging, facts being it was neither spot, splash, nor snag proof;

(c) Represented, as aforesaid, that said hosiery was composed wholly of silk, facts being it was not composed wholly of silk, as long definitely and specifically understood by substantial number of purchasing public, as meaning product of cocoon of silkworm, employed for many years in manufacture of various articles of wearing apparel, considered, when thus made, of superior quality, and in great public demand, and commonly thus described and thus understood, as and when made wholly therefrom; and

(d) Represented, as aforesaid, that he furnished his distributors with free sample outfits, facts being he did not thus furnish such outfits to his canvassers, but such outfits were paid for by them in cash and by services rendered;

With effect of misleading retailers, distributors, and substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true and into purchase of substantial quantities of such hosiery because of said erroneous belief, and of unfairly diverting trade to him from competitor manufacturers and distributors of hosiery who do not misrepresent character or type of business in which engaged, quality, nature, and composition of their products, nor inducements offered to prospective distributors, in advertising, selling and distributing their said products among various States and in the District of Columbia:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. DeWitt T. Puckett for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Alfred Boehm, an individual, doing business as Lynx Knitting Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Alfred Boehm, is an individual doing business as Lynx Knitting Company. His office and place of business are at 5-7 White Street, New York, N. Y. He is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of hosiery, principally through house-to-house canvassers, in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

When orders are received by respondent, his said products are shipped from his place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade in commerce, in said hosiery, sold and distributed by respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and at all times mentioned herein has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of hosiery in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent has represented and now represents himself to be the manufacturer of the hosiery he offers for sale and sells. Said representation is made by respondent through use of the word "Knitting" in his trade name which appears on his letterheads, order blanks, in advertising matter appearing in various magazines, and through other means.

In truth and in fact, the respondent does not manufacture the hosiery he offers for sale and sells, nor does he own and operate or directly and absolutely control the mill or factory in which said hosiery is manufactured. Respondent purchases said hosiery from Golden Belt Manufacturing Company, Durham, N. C., Great American Knitting Mills, Bechtelsville, Pa., Newnan Hosiery Company, Newnan, Ga., Best Made Hosiery Company, Quakertown, Pa., and other hosiery manufacturers.

PAR. 3. It is the common belief among wholesalers, retailers, and the purchasing public, that a superior grade of merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price, and that other advantages can be secured by dealing direct with the manufacturer. The representations made by respondent, as alleged in paragraph 2 hereof, have the tendency and capacity to deceive and mislead the purchasers of respondent's hosiery into the false and erroneous beliefs that when they purchase said hosiery from respondent they are dealing with the manufacturer of said hosiery and are thereby gaining an advantage in price by saving the middleman's profit and are gaining other advantages.

PAR. 4. Respondent's said hosiery is offered for sale and sold chiefly through house-to-house canvassers. As an inducement to persons to become his distributors and offer his said hose for sale, and to the purchasing public to buy said hosiery, the respondent has advertised and is now advertising in the "Agents Wanted" columns of various magazines having an interstate circulation, through form letters, and in various other ways, as follows:

LYNX HOSE ONCE BOUGHT ALWAYS SOUGHT—RINGLESS—SPLASH PROOF—ANTI-SNAG PROCESS.

These unusual features create immediate interest, quick sales and satisfied customers. 14 years of square dealing with our customers and salespeople. Wonderful line of men's and women's hosiery. New "anti-snag" silk hose * * * They are also rain and splash-proof.

The rain may splash on these hose but there will be no spots on them.

* * * You can get samples of Lynx guaranteed hose free of cost to you * * *

None of our ladies' silk hose contain any rayon, celanese or any artificial silk of any kind.

By means of the foregoing statements, the respondent represents to distributors, prospective distributors, and the purchasing public generally that his said hosiery is proof against spots, splashes and snagging; that said hosiery is composed wholly of silk; and that he furnishes his distributors with free sample outfits. In truth and in fact, respondent's said hosiery is not spot, splash or snag proof; it is not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but is composed in part of a material or materials other than silk. Respondent does not in fact furnish free sample outfits to his canvassers but said outfits are paid for by the said canvassers in cash and by services rendered.

PAR. 5. The word "silk" has long had to the minds of a substantial number of the purchasing public, and still has, a very definite and specific meaning, i. e., the product of the cocoon of the silk worm. Said product is now, and for many years has been, employed in the manufacture of various articles of wearing apparel including hosiery. Wearing apparel manufactured from silk is regarded generally as apparel of a superior quality and is in great public demand. At all times mentioned herein, the term "silk" has been commonly used to describe articles of wearing apparel manufactured wholly from silk and as a result thereof the purchasing public has come to understand that the apparel so described is manufactured wholly from silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm.

PAR. 6. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and does mislead retailers, distributors, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said hosiery because of such erroneous beliefs.

There are, among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of hosiery who do not misrepresent the character or type of business in which they are engaged, the quality, nature, and composition of their products, nor the inducements offered to prospective distributors, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute hosiery in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been, and is now being, unfairly diverted to respondent from said competitors. Thereby substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 7. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on December 22, 1937, issued, and

Findings

on December 23, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Alfred Boehm, an individual, doing business under the trade name Lynx Knitting Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs having been waived and oral argument not having been requested, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Alfred Boehm, is an individual doing business under the trade name Lynx Knitting Company. His office and place of business are at 5-7 White Street, New York, N. Y. He is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of hosiery, principally through house-to-house canvassers, in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

When orders are received by respondent, his said products are shipped from his place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade in said hosiery sold and distributed by respondent, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and at all times mentioned herein has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with partnerships and corporations likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of hosiery in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent has represented and now represents himself to be the manufacturer of the hosiery he offers for sale and sells. Said representation is made by respondent through use of the word "Knitting" in his trade name which appears on his letterheads, order blanks, in advertising matter appearing in various magazines, and through other means.

In truth and in fact, the respondent does not manufacture the hosiery he offers for sale and sells, nor does he own and operate or directly and absolutely control any mill or factory in which said hosiery is manufactured. Respondent purchases said hosiery at wholesale from Golden Belt Manufacturing Company, Durham, N. C., Great American Knitting Mills, Bechtelsville, Pa., Newnan Hosiery Company, Newnan, Ga., Best Made Hosiery Company, Quakertown, Pa., and other hosiery manufacturers.

PAR. 3. It is the common belief among wholesalers, retailers, and the purchasing public, that a superior grade of merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price, and that other advantages can be secured by dealing direct with the manufacturer. The representations made by respondent, as alleged in paragraph 2 hereof, have the tendency and capacity to deceive and mislead the purchasers of respondent's hosiery into the false and erroneous beliefs that when they purchase said hosiery from respondent they are dealing with the manufacturer of said hosiery and are thereby gaining an advantage in price by saving the middleman's profit and are gaining other advantages.

PAR. 4. Respondent's said hosiery is offered for sale and sold chiefly through house-to-house canvassers. As an inducement to persons to become his distributors and offer his said hose for sale, and to the purchasing public to buy said hosiery, the respondent has advertised and is now advertising in the "Agents Wanted" columns of various magazines having an interstate circulation, through form letters, and in various other ways, as follows:

LYNX HOSE ONCE BOUGHT ALWAYS SOUGHT
RINGLESS—SPLASH PROOF—ANTI-SNAG PROCESS

These unusual features create immediate interest, quick sales and satisfied customers. 14 years of square dealing with our customers and salespeople.

Wonderful line of men's and women's hosiery. Large variety of styles and colors. Liberal commission. Prompt delivery. Free outfit with sample hose starts you off. Write us at once.

New "anti-snag" silk hose * * * They are also rain and splash-proof.

The rain may splash on these hose but there will be no spots on them.

* * * You can get samples of Lynx guaranteed hose free of cost to you * * *.

None of our ladies' silk hose contain any rayon, celanese or any artificial silk of any kind.

Conclusion

By means of the foregoing statements, the respondent represents to distributors, prospective distributors, and the purchasing public generally that his said hosiery is proof against spots, splashes and snagging; that said hosiery is composed wholly of silk; and that he furnishes his distributors with free sample outfits. Such representations are false, misleading, and deceptive. In truth and in fact, respondent's said hosiery is not spot, splash, or snag proof. It is not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but is composed in part of a material or materials other than silk. Respondent does not in fact furnish free sample outfits to his canvassers but said outfits are paid for by the said canvassers in cash and by services rendered.

PAR. 5. The word "silk" has long had to the minds of a substantial number of the purchasing public, and still has, a very definite and specific meaning, i. e., the product of the cocoon of the silkworm. Said product is now, and for many years has been, employed in the manufacture of various articles of wearing apparel including hosiery. Wearing apparel manufactured from silk is regarded generally as apparel of a superior quality and is in great public demand. At all times mentioned herein, the term "silk" has been commonly used to describe articles of wearing apparel manufactured wholly from silk and as a result thereof the purchasing public has come to understand that the apparel so described is manufactured wholly from silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm.

PAR. 6. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and does mislead retailers, distributors and a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said hosiery because of such erroneous beliefs.

There are, among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in Paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of hosiery who do not misrepresent the character or type of business in which they are engaged, the quality, nature and composition of their products, nor the inducements offered to prospective distributors, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute hosiery in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been, and is now being unfairly diverted to respondent from said competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Alfred Boehm, an individual, doing business under the trade name Lynx Knitting Company, are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and states that he waives hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Alfred Boehm, an individual, doing business under the trade name Lynx Knitting Company, or under any other trade name, his agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of hosiery in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the word "Knitting" in his trade name or through the use of any word or term of similar import and meaning, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that said respondent is the manufacturer of the products sold by him, unless and until he actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, a manufacturing plant wherein said products are manufactured by him;

2. Representing that said hosiery is proof against spots, splashes and snagging;

3. Representing that he furnishes his distributors or agents with free samples or outfits, when in fact said samples or outfits are paid for by the distributors in money or in services;

4. The use of the word "silk," or any other word or words of similar import and meaning, to describe or designate hosiery which is not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, unless, in the case of hosiery composed in part of silk and in part of rayon or material or materials other than silk, there is used in immediate connection and conjunction therewith, and in letters of at least equal size and conspicuousness, a word or words accurately describing the fiber, material or materials from which said hosiery was actually made; and provided, that the fiber or material content of such hosiery be accurately disclosed by designating each constituent fiber or material thereof, in the order of its predominance by weight, beginning with the largest single constituent.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

12. Used and engaged and continue to use and engage in other acts, cooperative and concerted action, coercive methods and policies, in promoting, establishing, and carrying out said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies of said respondent members, acting through and by means of respondent association, its members, officers, and agents, for the purpose of suppressing and preventing competition and restricting and restraining the sale of fireworks in trade and commerce between, among, in and with the several States of the United States.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

Whereas, The Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit, on January 19, 1938, issue its complaint herein charging that respondent herein was and had been using unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas, This Commission having reason to believe that the respondent herein is engaged in business other than as described in said complaint and has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its said complaint, and it appearing to said Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest;

Now, therefore, Acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, a corporation, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

28 F. T. C.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal place of business at 811 Commerce Building, Kansas City, Mo. Respondent also maintains places of business in various other cities and States one of which said places of business is located at Denver, Colo. Respondent is now and for more than 1 year last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and bakery products and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Kansas City, Mo., and from its place of business in Denver, Colo., to purchasers thereof in the States of Missouri and Colorado and in various other States of the United States, at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy and bakery products between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and bakery products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers certain assortments of candy and bakery products so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said assortments are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all-inclusive of the various assortments, nor does it include all of the details of the several plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy and bakery products by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of small bars of candy and a number of large bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card, and the assortment is distributed to the purchasing public in the following manner:

Sales are 5 cents each and each purchaser is entitled to one push from said card. When a push is made from said card a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of pushes there are on the card, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The card bears statements informing prospective purchasers that all numbers, with the exception of 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and the last number pushed, entitle the purchasers thereof to a 5-cent bar of candy, being one of the smaller bars of the assortment, and that the aforementioned numbers entitle the purchasers thereof to a large bar of candy. The large bars of candy are worth more than 5 cents each and the person who obtains one of the numbers calling for a large bar of candy receives the same without additional charge. The numbers on said cards are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular push separated from the card. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procure one of the specified numbers, thus procure the said large bars of candy wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment consists of a number of boxes of assorted candy and an additional article of merchandise, together with a device commonly called a punchboard. Said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner:

The sales are 5 cents each and when a punch is made from the board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing prospective purchasers that certain specified numbers entitle the purchasers thereof to receive a box of candy. The punches on the board are arranged in 12 sections and the purchaser of the last punch in each section receives a pound box of candy and the purchaser of the last punch on the board receives both a pound box of candy and an additional article of merchandise. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number in one of the sections, or the last number on the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy, or a box of candy and an additional article of merchandise, receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from the board wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another assortment consists of a number of packages of assorted chocolate and vanilla wafers and other bakery products, together with a device commonly called a punchboard. Said wafers are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner:

Purchasers punching numbers ending in "0" receive the same without charge. For certain other numbers the purchasers thereof pay 1 cent, 2 cents, 3 cents, 4 cents, or 5 cents. When a punch is made from the board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears statements or legends informing prospective purchasers that certain specified numbers entitle the purchasers thereof to receive a 7½-ounce package of said wafers. The punches on the board are arranged in 12 sections and the purchaser of the last punch in each section receives a 7½-ounce package of wafers. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for a package of wafers or by punching the last number in a section receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The numbers are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The retail value of the said packages of wafers is greater than any of the designated prices of said punches. The packages of wafers are thus distributed to the purchasers of said punches from the board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Retail dealers who purchase respondent's said candy and bakery products, directly or indirectly, expose and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others a means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, and said sales plans have the tendency and capacity to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy and bakery products offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy and bakery products to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to secure a larger piece of candy, or box of candy, or a package of bakery products. The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy and bakery products and the sale of same by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy and bakery products trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy and bakery products in competition with the respondent as above alleged are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy and bakery products so packed and assembled as above described or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, or any other method of sale that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, candy and bakery products are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and bakery products and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described and are thereby induced to purchase said candy and bakery products so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy and bakery products offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has a tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from said candy and bakery products trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful, to lessen competition in said candy and bakery products trade, to tend to create a monopoly of said candy and bakery products trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy and bakery products as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy and bakery products trade. The use of said methods by respondent has a tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

after served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On March 12, 1938, the Commission issued its amended and supplemental complaint, to which the respondent filed in the office of the Commission an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence, and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended and supplemental complaint and answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal place of business at 811 Commerce Building, Kansas City, Mo. Respondent also maintains places of business in various other cities and states, one of which said places of business is located at Denver, Colo. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and bakery products and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers. Respondent causes, and has caused, its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Kansas City, Mo., and from its place of business in Denver, Colo., to purchasers thereof in the States of Missouri and Colorado and in various other States of the United States, at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy and bakery products between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and bakery products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers, jobbers and retail dealers certain assortments of candy and bakery products so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said assortments are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all-inclusive of the various assortments, nor does it include all of the details of the several plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy and bakery products by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of small bars of candy and a number of large bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card, and the assortment is distributed to the purchasing public in the following manner:

Sales are 5 cents each and each purchaser is entitled to one push from said card. When a push is made from said card a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of pushes there are on the card, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The card bears statements informing prospective purchasers that all numbers, with the exception of 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 and the last number pushed, entitle the purchasers thereof to a five cent bar of candy, being one of the smaller bars of the assortment, and that the aforementioned numbers entitle the purchasers thereof to a large bar of candy. The large bars of candy are worth more than 5 cents each and the person who obtains one of the numbers calling for a large bar of candy receives the same without additional charge. The numbers on said cards are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular push separated from the card. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procure one of the specified numbers, thus procure the said large bars of candy wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment consists of a number of boxes of assorted candy and an additional article of merchandise, together with a device commonly called a punchboard. Said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punch board in the following manner:

The sales are 5 cents each and when a punch is made from the board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing prospective purchasers that certain specified numbers entitle the purchasers thereof to receive a box of candy. The punches on the board are arranged in 12 sections and the purchaser of the last punch in each section receives a pound box of candy and the purchaser of the last punch on the board receives both a pound box of candy and an additional article of merchandise. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number in one of the sections, or the last number on the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy, or a box of candy and an additional article of merchandise, receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from the board wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another assortment consists of a number of packages of assorted chocolate and vanilla wafers and other bakery products, together with a device commonly called a punchboard. Said wafers are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner:

Purchasers punching numbers ending in "0" receive the same without charge. For certain other numbers the purchasers thereof pay 1 cent, 2 cents, 3 cents, 4 cents or 5 cents. When a punch is made from the board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears statements or legends informing prospective purchasers that certain specified numbers entitle the purchasers thereof to receive a 7½-ounce package of said wafers. The punches on the board are arranged in twelve sections and the purchaser of the last punch in each section receives a 7½-ounce package of wafers. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for a package of wafers or by punching the last number in a section receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The numbers are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The retail value of the said packages of wafers is greater than any of the designated prices of said punches. The packages of wafers are thus distributed to the purchasers of said punches from the board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Retail dealers who purchase respondent's said candy and bakery products, directly or indirectly, expose and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others a means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove described, and said sales plans have the tendency and capacity to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy and bakery products offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy and bakery products to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to secure a larger piece of candy, or box of candy, or a package of bakery products. The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy and bakery products and the sale of same by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy and bakery products trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy and bakery products in competition with the respondent, as above found, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy and bakery products so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, or any other method of sale that is contrary to public policy and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, candy and bakery products are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and bakery products and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy and bakery products so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy and bakery products offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has a tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to unfairly divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from said candy and bakery products trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful, to lessen competition in said candy and bakery products trade, to create a monopoly of said candy and bakery products trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy and bakery products as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy and bakery products trade.

26 F. T. C.

The use of said methods by respondent has a tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid methods, acts and practices of respondent, Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, a corporation, are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove found, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission and the answer of the respondent, Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, a corporation, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of candies and bakery products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing candies or bakery products so packed and assembled that sales of such candies or bakery products to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers, assortments of candies or bakery products which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution to the public of such candies or bakery products contained in said assortments;

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers, assortments of candies or bakery products, together with a punchboard, push or pull card, or other lottery device, for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling such candies or bakery products to the public, at retail;

Order

4. Supplying to or placing in the hands of dealers, a punchboard, push or pull card, or other lottery device, either with assortments of candies or bakery products, or separately, which punchboard, push or pull card, or other lottery device, is to be used, or may be used, in distributing or selling such candies or bakery products to the public, or which punchboard, push or pull card, or other lottery device, bears legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candies or bakery products contained in said assortments are being sold to the public by lot or chance in accordance with a sales plan which constitute a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, a corporation, shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

THE E. R. PAGE COMPANY, INC.

OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3334. Complaint, Feb. 12, 1938—Decision, Apr. 18, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of an internal and external treatment for piles; in offering same through letters, circulars, leaflets, advertisements in newspapers, and periodicals, and otherwise—

Represented that said treatments or remedies were competent and effective for said ailment and that use thereof, as directed, would end suffering and pains incident thereto and remove or eliminate causes thereof and heal and cure same, facts being that while said preparations would temporarily remove pain and other conditions attendant upon said ailment in some cases thereof, they would not end such suffering or pain nor remove or eliminate cause or causes of said condition, nor act as permanent remedy therefor;

With effect of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations and implications were true, and that said preparations would do more than temporarily remove pain and other conditions attendant upon said condition, and end tortures and pains incident thereto and remove cause of said ailment and cure same, and of causing substantial portion of purchasing public, because of such erroneous and mistaken beliefs, to buy said products or preparations, and of thereby diverting unfairly to it substantial trade from its competitors, who truthfully represent their products and preparations:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Nash & Donnelly, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The E. R. Page Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The E. R. Page Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business located at 233 L. Page Building, in the City of Marshall, State of Michigan.

Respondent is now, and has been for several years past, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling an internal and external treatment for piles designated as "Page Pile Treatment," "Page Combination Treatment," and "Page Internal Combination Pile Treatment."

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as hereinbefore described, respondent has caused said products, when sold, to be transported from its said place of business in the State of Michigan to the purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of Michigan, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of said business, respondent has been, and is now, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia of products used and useful for the treatment of piles.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, respondent has offered for sale, and sold, by means of letters, circulars, leaflets, advertisements in newspapers, and magazines and otherwise, and has caused false, deceptive, and misleading statements and representations to appear in said letters, circulars, leaflets, and advertisements for the purpose of inducing those who are suffering from piles to purchase respondent's products.

PAR. 4. In offering for sale and selling its products as aforesaid for use in the treatment of piles, respondent, among others, has made the following statements and representations:

Learn for yourself how soothing it is and what a world of difference it makes if you do not have to put up with those excruciating pains and that terrible itching which usually comes on at bedtime.

I am glad to send it (Page Pile Treatment) as I am sure that it will start you on the way to quick and lasting relief from the tormenting pains and irritations of this serious ailment.

Of course, this trial cannot be expected to bring you more than temporary results. But it will show you what the Page Treatment is like and how it acts to banish pain, itching and bleeding.

Please do not delay taking action to get rid of your suffering.

You want to stop the terrible pain and itching, the annoyance, the bother, and cruelty of piles without the expense of an operation.

You want to feel that the treatment you use will really afford such relief that you have no further expense or trouble.

You could not have made a better start toward permanent relief from the suffering you have endured from piles than to use the treatment I sent you recently.

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

I want you to continue this treatment until you have every reason to believe that there will be no return of the misery.

Experience shows that while the first treatment usually produces astonishing results, two or three treatments and occasionally more are necessary to justify feeling of positive recovery.

I know what joy would be yours if you could say to yourself and write to me that your pile suffering was a thing of the past. I want to help you to reach this happy condition just as I have helped so many others who have literally flooded me with their letters of gratitude.

Continue your treatment for pile irritation until you feel sure the effects will be lasting. A mistake that many people make is to assume that when the symptoms are gone they are gone forever. Occasionally that may be the case, but, as a rule, it is only the beginning of lasting relief.

This tried and proven treatment which has banished suffering from pile victims in every nook and corner of the land is a logical, scientific method for attacking the underlying causes of piles because it has an internal and three-fold action.

I want you to give it (the treatment) a fair opportunity to complete the good work it has begun for you by bringing lasting relief from pile miseries.

Here is the one big fact I want you to see clearly. It is far better to trust a good, dependable, old proven treatment with a clean record of almost half a century back of it than to ruin your best chance by using something you know very little about. Real and final relief may come slowly, but it pays best in the long run. It would indeed be a remarkable treatment that could reach and relieve every case in the same time and manner. I cannot believe that any victim is content to suffer the tortures and annoyances of piles in any form. Surely you want to be relieved of the suffering and be done with it finally and forever if possible.

Would you like to know and be SURE about a REAL method of direct treatment that very likely many of your own friends and neighbors have used—and from it found new, quick relief from the burning torture of PILES?

PAR. 5. By the means and in the manner aforesaid, respondent represents and implies that said products are competent and effective remedies and treatments for piles; that the use of said products in the manner directed will end pile torture and the pains incident to piles, will remove or eliminate the cause of piles, and will heal and cure piles.

In truth and fact said products are not competent and effective remedies and treatments for piles; the use of said products in the manner directed will not end pile torture or the pain incident to piles, nor will they remove or eliminate the cause of piles, nor will they heal or cure piles.

PAR. 6. Among the competitors of respondent in said commerce are many who sell products used and useful for the purposes for which respondent's products are offered for sale and sold, who do not, in any manner, misrepresent the efficacy of their said products.

Findings

PAR. 7. The acts, practices, and methods of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the representations and implications made and used by respondent as aforesaid are true, and that said products of respondent are competent and effective remedies and treatments for piles, that said products will end the torture and pain incident thereto, will remove the cause of piles, and will end and cure piles; and they cause a substantial portion of the purchasing public, because of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs, to purchase respondent's products. As a consequence thereof, substantial trade in said commerce has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors who truthfully represent their products, to the injury of such competition and to the public.

PAR. 8. The acts, practices, and methods of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of An Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on February 12, 1938, issued, and on the 14th day of February 1938, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, The E. R. Page Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of the said act. After the issuance of the said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs having been waived and oral argument not having been requested, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The E. R. Page Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business located at 233 L. Page Building, in the city of Marshall, State of Michigan.

Respondent is now, and has been for several years past, engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing an internal and external treatment for piles designated as "Page Pile Treatment," "Page Combination Treatment," and "Page Internal Combination Pile Treatment."

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as hereinbefore described, respondent has caused said products, when sold, to be transported from its said place of business in the State of Michigan to the purchasers thereof located in various parts of the United States, other than the State of Michigan, and the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has been, and is now, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia of preparations used and useful for the treatment of piles.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, respondent has offered for sale, and sold, by means of letters, circulars, leaflets, advertisements in newspapers, and magazines and otherwise, and has caused false, deceptive, and misleading statements and representations to appear in said letters, circulars, leaflets, and advertisements for the purpose of inducing those who are suffering from piles to purchase respondent's preparations.

PAR. 4. In offering for sale and selling its preparations, as aforesaid, for use in the treatment of piles, respondent, among others, has made the following statements and representations:

Learn for yourself how soothing it is and what a world of difference it makes if you do not have to put up with those excruciating pains and that terrible itching which usually comes on at bedtime.

I am glad to send it (Page Pile Treatment) as I am sure that it will start you on the way to quick and lasting relief from the tormenting pains and irritations of this serious ailment.

Of course, this trial cannot be expected to bring you more than temporary results. But it will show you what the Page Treatment is like and how it acts to banish pain, itching and bleeding.

Please do not delay taking action to get rid of your suffering.

Findings

You want to stop the terrible pain and itching, the annoyance, the bother and cruelty of piles without the expense of an operation.

You want to feel that the treatment you use will really afford such relief that you have no further expense or trouble.

You could not have made a better start toward permanent relief from the suffering you have endured from piles than to use the treatment I sent you recently.

I want you to continue this treatment until you have every reason to believe that there will be no return of the misery.

Experience shows that while the first treatment usually produces astonishing results, two or three treatments and occasionally more are necessary to justify feeling of positive recovery.

I know what joy would be yours if you could say to yourself and write to me that your pile suffering was a thing of the past. I want to help you to reach this happy condition just as I have helped so many others who have literally flooded me with their letters of gratitude.

Continue your treatment for pile irritation until you feel sure the effects will be lasting. A mistake that many people make is to assume that when the symptoms are gone they are gone forever. Occasionally that may be the case, but, as a rule, it is only the beginning of lasting relief.

This tried and proven treatment which has banished suffering from pile victims in every nook and corner of the land is a logical, scientific method for attacking the underlying causes of piles because it has an internal and three-fold action.

I want you to give it (the treatment) a fair opportunity to complete the good work it has begun for you by bringing lasting relief from pile miseries.

Here is the one big fact I want you to see clearly. It is far better to trust a good, dependable, old proven treatment with a clean record of almost half a century back of it than to ruin your best chance by using something you know very little about. Real and final relief may come slowly, but it pays best in the long run. Would you like to know and be SURE about a REAL method of direct treatment that very likely many of your own friends and neighbors have used—and from it found new, quick relief from the burning torture of PILES?

PAR. 5. By the means and in the manner aforesaid, respondent represented and implied that said preparations were competent and effective remedies and treatments for piles; that the use of said preparations in the manner directed would end pile torture and the pains incident to piles, would remove or eliminate the cause or causes of piles, and would heal and cure piles.

While said preparations will temporarily remove pain, itching, and bleeding in some cases of piles, they will not end pile torture or the pain incident to piles, nor will they remove or eliminate the cause or causes of piles, nor will they heal or cure piles, nor will they act as a permanent remedy for such conditions.

PAR. 6. Among the competitors of respondent in said commerce are many who sell products and preparations used and useful for the purposes for which respondent's preparations were and are offered for sale and sold, who do not, in any manner, misrepresent the efficacy of said products or preparations.

PAR. 7. The acts, practices, and methods of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the representations and implications made and used by respondent, as aforesaid, are true and that said preparations will do more than temporarily remove pain, itching, and bleeding in some cases of piles, and that said preparations will end the tortures and pain incident to piles, will remove the cause of piles and will end and cure piles. Such acts, practices and misrepresentations caused, and cause, a substantial portion of the purchasing public, because of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs, to purchase respondent's products or preparations. As a consequence thereof, substantial trade in said commerce has been diverted unfairly to the respondent from its competitors who truthfully represent their products and preparations.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, The E. R. Page Company, Inc., are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and do constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on the 30th day of March 1938, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commissions Act;

It is ordered, That the respondent, The E. R. Page Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its preparations now designated as "Page Pile Treatment," "Page Combination Treatment," and "Page Internal Combination Pile Treatment," or any other preparations of like or similar ingredients or possessing like

Docket 3060. Complaint, Feb. 16, 1937—Decision, Apr. 20, 1938

Where a corporation and certain individuals, theretofore partners, and officers thereof and in control of its sales policy and business practices; engaged in sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in radio and television and in sale and distribution of equipment for radio and television to members of the public in various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution of such courses of study in same and allied fields or in other subjects, and in sale and distribution of similar equipment as aforesaid—

- (a) Commonly placed the advertising of their said courses under the "Help Wanted" heading in the classified section of newspapers of general interstate circulation, with request that the person replying write newspaper in which advertisement appeared, and thereby contacted, through their agents, persons seeking employment in particular field dealt in, and told those replying that they were selling courses of study and equipment and informed them that they would secure jobs or positions upon completion of course of instruction offered;
- (b) Represented through their aforesaid advertising media, that there existed a shortage of radio television operators and that several young men were to be selected and trained for positions in radio television at expense of those offering the course until actually employed, and that payment of $100 of total cost of course was deferred until enrollee should have finished same and secured a television job paying a salary of $125 a month or better, facts being there was no such shortage, they did not select or restrict number of their students, none of the students were trained at their expense, but students paid for course at rate of $10 a month, and statement as to deferring $100 of total cost, as above set forth, had capacity and tendency to mislead student into belief that jobs were available in field in question;
- (c) Represented that they operated wide-spread employment agency, through which students were placed in paying positions upon graduation, and that they owned or operated a huge laboratory in which radio and television equipment was made in great quantities, and operated radio television broadcasting stations wherein their pupils were given opportunity for graduate residence study, and that aforesaid individual officers were engineers of certain television broadcasting stations, facts being they did not operate such an agency through which students were placed as aforesaid, nor such a laboratory, very few positions are available in field in question, in which there are currently practically no commercial positions available, and they did not operate broadcasting stations affording their pupils opportunity for graduate residence training; and
- (d) Depicted on letterheads used by them and in other advertising literature, picture of a large building in Chicago, of which at one time they occupied two floors, and represented on said letterheads that they were engineers of certain television broadcasting stations, facts being that, while one of their number was designer and erecting engineer of said stations, they were not engineers thereof, as aforesaid;

With capacity and tendency to mislead a substantial portion of student public into erroneous belief that such representations were true and to cause them to enroll as students on account thereof, and with result that trade was unfairly diverted to them from competitors engaged as hereinbefore set forth, and who do not misrepresent or otherwise publish untrue claims concerning their courses in advertising, selling and distributing same in commerce; to the substantial injury of such competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Karl Stecher for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, U. A. Sanabria, R. B. Fullerton, and A. H. Zamotany, as individuals and officers of the American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, and as copartners, trading as American Television Institute and as Sanabria Television Laboratories, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, American Television Institute, Inc., is a corporation, organized in 1936, doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois. Respondents U. A. Sanabria, R. B. Fullerton, and A. H. Zamotany, are copartners, trading as American Television Institute, and as Sanabria Television Laboratories. Said individuals are also president, vice president, and treasurer, respectively, of the above-named corporation, and manage and direct its sales policies and business practices. The principal office and place of business of all respondents is at 433 East Erie Street, Chicago, Ill.

Respondents are now, and have been for several months last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in radio and television to members of the public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents now cause, and during the time herein mentioned have caused, their correspondence courses, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in Chicago, Ill., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been, at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce, by the respondents, in said correspondence courses, between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

Respondents are now, and at all times herein mentioned have been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, copartnerships, and individuals, engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in the same and allied fields, or in other subjects, in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The respondents, in soliciting the sale of and selling their correspondence courses, now circulate in and among the various States of the United States and during all the time herein mentioned have circulated certain statements and representations purporting to describe the nature and extent of respondents' business and of their courses, and the advantages to be realized by students of their courses of instruction, in newspapers, periodicals, booklets, circulars, and general business correspondence, and through agents to pupils and prospective pupils. Such statements and representations serve as representations on the part of respondent that several young men are to be selected and trained for positions in radio television at respondents' expense until actually employed; that a 70-lesson course is offered, collection of the tuition fee being deferred until a job is secured for the student at $125 per month, or better; that respondents operate a wide-spread employment agency through which students are placed in paying positions upon graduation; that there is a shortage of radio television operators; that respondents own or operate a huge laboratory in which radio and television equipment is manufactured in great quantities; that respondents operate radio television broadcasting stations wherein respondents' pupils are given the opportunity for graduate residence study, and that the individual respondents are engineers of certain radio stations.

Respondents make many other similar statements and representations with respect to the size and importance of respondents' place of business and the position occupied in the radio television world of the officers of the American Television Institute, Inc.

The aforesaid representations are grossly exaggerated, misleading and untrue. In truth and in fact the respondents do not select, or restrict the number of their pupils, and said pupils are not trained at respondents' expense. A 70-lesson course is not offered and the tuition fee is not deferred until a job is secured for the pupil at $125 per month or more. Respondents do not operate an employment agency through which their students are placed in employment upon graduation. There is no shortage of radio television operators. Respondents do not manufacture radio television equipment in great quantities, and they do not own or operate any radio or television broadcasting stations. The individual respondents are not engineers of any radio broadcasting station. The statements made in their advertising with respect to the size of their business and the positions occupied in the radio television world of the present officers of the American Television Institute, Inc., are untrue.

PAR. 3. The use by respondents of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and has and does mislead a substantial portion of the student public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and to cause them to enroll as students of respondents on account of such erroneous beliefs. There are among the competitors of respondents, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations, engaged in the sale of correspondence courses in radio television, and allied fields, who do not misrepresent the size and nature of their business in any way or otherwise publish claims for their courses which are untrue, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute their correspondence courses among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such competitors, thereby substantial injury is being and has been done by respondents to competition in commerce, as herein set out.

PAR. 4. The above-alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said act, the Federal Trade Commission on February 16, 1937, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, U. A. Sanabria, R. B. Fullerton, and A. H. Zamotany, as individuals and officers of American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, and as copartners trading as American Television Institute, and Sanabria Television Laboratories, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, W. T. Kelley, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, and S. R. Rabinoff, counsel for respondents, executed a stipulation as to the facts, wherein it was agreed that the statement of facts therein recited might be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint or in opposition thereto, and that the Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it might draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts was subsequently approved by the Commission and was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answers thereto and said stipulation as to the facts, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, American Television Institute, Inc., is a corporation organized in 1936 and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois. Respondents, U. A. Sanabria, R. B. Fullerton, and A. H. Zamotany, were copartners trading as American Television Institute and as Sanabria Television Laboratories from prior to February 1935, until the year 1936 when the respondent corporation was formed and succeeded to the business of the partnerships. Said individuals are also president, vice-president, and treasurer, respectively, of the above-named corporation, and manage, direct and control its sales policies and business practices. The principal office and place of business of all respondents is at 433 East Erie Street, Chicago, Ill.

Respondents are, and were, engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in radio and television and in the sale and distribution of equipment for radio and television to members of the public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents now cause, and during the times herein mentioned have caused, their correspondence courses and equipment, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in Chicago, Ill., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States, other than the State of Illinois, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondents in said correspondence courses and equipment between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondents are now, and at all times herein mentioned have been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, copartnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in the same and allied fields, or in other subjects, and in the sale and distribution of similar equipment, in commerce among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The respondents, their agents and representatives, have advertised the said correspondence courses in newspapers having a general interstate circulation. The newspaper advertising was commonly placed in the classified section under the "Help Wanted" heading. Such advertisements contained a request that persons answering them write the newspaper in which the advertisement appeared. Persons who sought employment in the particular fields with which said advertisements dealt, replied to them as directed and said replies were collected by agents or representatives of the respondents who thereafter contacted the said persons and fixed the time and place for an interview. At these interviews the persons who had answered said advertisements were told that the respondents were selling courses of study and equipment. The persons so contacted were, however, informed that they would secure jobs or positions upon completion of the course of instruction offered by respondents.

Respondents further represented, in substance, through their advertising media above described, that several young men were to be selected and trained for positions in radio television at respondents' expense until actually employed; that a 70-lesson course was being offered for the price of $287, payable $10 at the time of enrollment, and the balance in monthly instalments of $10 each except that payment of $100 of said amount was deferred until the enrollee should have finished respondents' course and secured a television job paying a salary of $125 per month or better; that respondents operated a widespread employment agency through which students were placed in paying positions upon graduation; that there existed a shortage of radio television operators; that respondents owned or operated a huge laboratory in which radio and television equipment was manufactured in great quantities; that respondents operated radio television broadcasting stations wherein respondents' pupils were given the opportunity for graduate residence study, and that the individual respondents were engineers of certain television stations.

In fact, respondents did not select or restrict the number of their students. None of said students were trained at respondents' expense but paid for the courses at the rate of $10 per month. The statement that the collection of a portion of the tuition fee was deferred until a television job was secured by the student at $125 per month had the capacity and tendency to mislead the student into believing that jobs were available in the field of television. Respondents did not operate a widespread employment agency through which students were placed in paying position upon graduation. In fact, very few positions are available in the field of television. Up to now there has been no shortage of radio television operators. There are now practically no commercial positions available in the field of television. The respondents' representation that they operated radio television broadcasting stations wherein their pupils were given the opportunity for graduate residence training was not true, although there are now in respondents' laboratory a large number of television receiving and transmitting sets which are being used by respondents in the graduate residence training of their students.

PAR. 3. On letterheads used by respondents and in other advertising literature appeared a picture of a large building in Chicago, Ill., known as the American Furniture Mart. The respondents at one time occupied two floors of that building, although no mention was made of that fact on the advertising matter and letterheads. Respondents' place of business is no longer located in said building, but at 433 Erie Street in Chicago, Ill. Such letterheads also bore representations that individual respondents were engineers of certain television broadcasting stations when, as a matter of fact, they were not. However, respondent U. A. Sanabria was the designer and erecting engineer of the said stations. Since respondents have moved their place of business from the American Furniture Mart building they have not used such stationery.

PAR. 4. The use by respondents of the representations hereinabove set forth has had the capacity and tendency to mislead a substantial portion of the student public into the erroneous belief that such representations were true and to cause them to enroll as students of respondents on account of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondents mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the sale of correspondence courses of radio television and allied fields and other fields who do not misrepresent or otherwise publish claims concerning their courses which are untrue, and who advertise, sell and distribute their correspondence courses in commerce among and between the various States of the United States. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such competitors; thereby substantial injury is done to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 5. Respondents for more than 1 year last past have not made any of the statements or representations above referred to. Since May 1, 1937, they have been selling the same course and equipment for the original sum of $287 without any deferred charges. While in the early stages of development of respondents' business, respondents did have a small laboratory wherein they manufactured a nominal quantity of television equipment, today, respondents have a large television laboratory wherein they manufacture a large quantity of television equipment for sale throughout the country.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, U. A. Sanabria, R. B. Fullerton, and A. H. Zamotany, as individuals and officers of The American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, and as copartners trading as American Television Institute and Sanabria Television Laboratories, as herein alleged, are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answers of the respondents and a stipulation as to the facts executed by W. T. Kelley, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, and S. R. Rabinoff, counsel for respondents, the filing of briefs having been waived, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That respondents, American Television Institute, Inc., a corporation, and its officers, U. A. Sanabria, R. B. Fullerton, and A. H. Zamotany, individually and as copartners trading as American Television Institute and Sanabria Television Laboratories, their respective representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of their correspondence courses of study and instruction in radio and television and in the sale and distribution of equipment for radio and television in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist from—

1. Representing in any manner that a limited number of persons are to be selected and trained for positions in radio television;

2. Representing in any manner that students are trained at respondents' expense;

3. Representing in any manner that anyone other than the student himself pays for his course of training;

4. Representing through advertisements in classified advertising pages of newspapers, magazines, advertising literature or in any other manner under such headings as "Help Wanted" or "Men Wanted" or in any other manner that respondents are offering employment or that employment will be offered to persons who answer said advertisements;

5. Representing that all or any part of the tuition fee for the course of instruction is deferred until a television job is secured;

6. Representing that respondents operate a widespread employment agency or that students are placed in paying positions upon graduation;

7. Representing that there is a shortage of radio television operators;

8. Representing that they operate radio television broadcasting stations;

9. Representing in any manner that their place of business is larger or that they have greater business facilities than actually is the case;

10. Representing that any of said respondents or their agents, servants or employees are engineers of television broadcasting stations;

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

JUSTIN HAYNES & COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2743. Complaint, Mar. 13, 1936—Decision, Apr. 21, 1938

- Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of a medicated ointment for relief of pain and discomfort of colds, muscular aches, etc.—
- (a) Sold said preparation under name "Aspirub," and in representations on containers and cartons thereof, and in newspaper advertisements, leaflets and broadsides, and by radio broadcasts, as case might be, stressed aspirin content thereof through such statements as "The First Rub containing aspirin for direct external use," "NEW CONVENIENT WAY TO USE ASPIRIN," "I hated to dose myself with aspirin. Now I get relief more conveniently with ASPIRUB," and "You don't swallow ASPIRUB, there is no internal dosing, no upsetting your stomach," etc., and "contains aspirin because it has been proven that aspirin is one of the few medicines that can be absorbed through the skin; it is a scientific new way to use aspirin by applying it to the spot where the pain is; faster than ever;" facts being aspirin is not absorbable through the skin into the body in sufficient quantities to be of any therapeutic value;
- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, that said "medicated ointment provides symptomatic relief for such common ills where home medication is indicated," and that it was "Soothing to muscular aches, pains, and soreness as caused by colds, sprains, and exposure. * * * Calming to coughs due to colds and minor throat irritations," "New, better cold treatment that combines 7 of the finest cold medicines with aspirin, acts lightning-quick in relieving the pain and discomfort of chest colds, head colds, sore throats," etc., "* * * the new quicker relief from this constant danger (the common cold). ASPIRUB is fortified with penetrating aspirin," etc., "* * * derived from two ingredients, Aspirin and Pine Oil;" facts being that said last-named ingredient is obsolete in treatment of colds and no longer generally prescribed, certain other ingredients were of no benefit whatever, but merely added to give a pleasant odor, preparation in question provided little, if any, symptomatic relief, was of little value in treatment of neuralgic symptoms, etc., does not kill colds quickly, contain seven of the finest cold medicines, had no effect whatever on causative factors of colds and similar ailments, etc., and aforesaid statements were false; and
- (c) Represented that said preparation accomplished beneficial results attributed thereto through being absorbable, through such statements as "you RUB it on. And ASPIRUB is not SUPERFICIAL. ASPIRUB penetrates into that sore spot, as the skin absorbs its medication," etc., and that it contained aspirin, as above set forth, because it had been proven that it was one of the few medicines that could be "absorbed through the skin," and was a "scientific new way to use aspirin by applying it to the spot where the pain is," and "Rub this powerful yet harmless Aspirub on throat and chest and in a few minutes its mighty penetrating powers start to allay the inflammation," etc., and "penetrates the skin and reaches the nerve endings where it reduces pain;" facts being only an insignificant amount of said Aspirub could be absorbed through the skin into the body and only an infinitesimal amount thereof reach the pain perceiving center of the central nervous system and not in sufficient amount for relief of pain, and that skin would not absorb said preparation to any substantial extent, so as to have any beneficial value by reason thereof, and it did not represent a new way to use aspirin nor a new method or way of taking same, or function as represented, but depended for beneficial effects, in common with many other preparations, on action as an irritant;

With effect of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true, and that said preparation had a substantial therapeutic value in treatment of afflictions and ailments for which recommended, as above indicated, and with result that public purchased substantial volume of said product, acting in such mistaken and erroneous belief, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution of like and similar products or other preparations designed and used for similar purposes, and which they truthfully represented as to efficacy and therapeutic and curative value:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. John H. Glaccum of Munn, Anderson & Liddy, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Justin Haynes & Co., Inc., has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Justin Haynes & Co., Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 347 Fifth Avenue, in the city of New York, within the State of New York. Said respondent is now and for more than 1 year last past has been engaged in the sale of a medical preparation containing, among other ingredients, Aspirin, under the brand name "Aspirub," and the distribution thereof between and among the various States of the United States. It causes said medical preparation, known as "Aspirub," when sold by it to be transported to the purchasers thereof located in the State of New York and various other States of the United States. There is now and has been for a long time, to wit, more than 1 year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said "Aspirub" between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of its said business, said respondent is now and for a long time, to wit, for more than 1 year last past, has been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with various other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of aspirin and of other medical preparations containing aspirin.

PAR. 2. The preparation sold and distributed by said respondent under the name of "Aspirub" is a salve or ointment for external use which contains various medicinal ingredients and is put up in jars containing one and one-half ounces of the ointment each. Each jar of said salve or ointment contains 1½ percent aspirin.

PAR. 3. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 1, has been and now is engaged in advertising on a national scale as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of said "Aspirub."

Said respondent in its said advertisement of the product known as "Aspirub" and sold by it, has made and is now making various false, deceptive, and misleading statements concerning said product. Among the said statements which said respondent has used and is now using in its advertisements in newspapers and on the labels pasted on the jars of "Aspirub" and on the cartons containing said jars of "Aspirub" are statements to the effect that due to its aspirin content "Aspirub" has great therapeutic value, and that "Aspirub" is the new way of taking aspirin, whereas in truth and in fact said "Aspirub" because of its negligible aspirin content has no therapeutic value as aspirin and in truth and in fact aspirin cannot be absorbed into the body through the skin.

Respondent in its said advertising has and is creating upon the public the impression that the use of its product "Aspirub" has and will accomplish all of the beneficial therapeutic effects of aspirin and because it is applied externally will avoid the hazards of aspirin used internally, whereas in truth and in fact said "Aspirub" has no beneficial therapeutic effect because of its negligible aspirin content and because of the fact that aspirin is not absorbed through the skin, and in truth and in fact "Aspirub" does not have the functional value of aspirin.

PAR. 4. The use by the said respondent, Justin Haynes & Company, Inc., of the foregoing false, deceptive and misleading representations alleged to be used by the said respondent in paragraph 3 hereof, have had and do now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Aspirub" is in truth and in fact the safest, newest, most beneficial and most effective way to use aspirin, and has thereby induced and does now induce the consuming public and especially the users of aspirin, acting in said erroneous belief, to purchase "Aspirub" in preference to aspirin offered for sale in tablet or powder form for internal consumption, which is the generally accepted way for taking aspirin, by manufacturers, retail dealers, and distributors. As a result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondent, trade is diverted to respondent from such manufacturers, retail dealers, and distributors of aspirin in tablet or powder form for internal consumption and thereby injury has been done and is being done by the respondent.

PAR. 5 Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondent contained in its advertising have resulted in injury to respondent's competitors and to retail dealers and in prejudice to the buying public and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission on March 13, 1936, issued, and on March 14, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Justin Haynes & Co., Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by S. Brogdyne Teu, II, attorney for the Commission and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by John H. Glaccum, attorney for respondent, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceedings regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel for the Commission and counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

NEW CONVENIENT WAY TO USE ASPIRIN.

The following is representative of the statements and representations made by the respondent in its radio broadcasts:

The headlines of today's papers scream with war! Diplomats are redoubling their efforts to localize it or prevent it entirely. Meanwhile, another war, one in which we all are involved, is being fought with success. This is the war against the common cold. Medical science now has produced ASPIRUB—A-S-P-I-R-U-B—the new quicker relief from this constant danger. ASPIRUB is fortified with penetrating aspirin, combined with seven other well-known ingredients for colds. You don't swallow ASPIRUB, there is no internal dosing, no upsetting your stomach—you RUB it on. And ASPIRUB is not SUPERFICIAL. ASPIRUB penetrates into that sore spot, as the skin absorbs its medication. ASPIRUB is antiseptic, inflammation-reducing. At the first sign of a head cold snuff a little ASPIRUB into your nostrils. The vapors last. Your head clears almost instantly, you breathe easier. Rub ASPIRUB on a congested chest or sore throat—it will help to loosen tightness and bring relief. Fine for muscular aches, too.

The respondent has made other claims and representations regarding the merits of its compound, among them being the following: "Rheumatic pains, neuritis, neuralgia, simple colds, sore throat, and nasal congestion are among the ailments whose symptoms have been successfully treated by Aspirub; the rich volatile medicines in Aspirub carry the aspirin in permanent solution and increase its powers to penetrate quickly to the source of pain or irritation; Aspirub is antiseptic and healing; Aspirub contains aspirin because it has been proven that aspirin is one of the few medicines that can be absorbed through the skin; it is a scientific new way to use aspirin by applying it to the spot where the pain is; faster than ever tough old colds are killed with Aspirub; rub this powerful yet harmless Aspirub on throat and chest and in a few minutes its mighty penetrating powers start to allay the inflammation—start to break up the congestion; just rub it on, no dosing, no gagging, checks colds like magic, and Aspirub penetrates the skin and reaches the nerve endings where it reduces pain and lessens congestion.

PAR. 5. The qualitative and quantitative composition of the respondent's preparation is as follows:

Aspirin.....	1.5%
Pine Oil.....	13.0%
Methyl Salicylate.....	2.0%
Camphor.....	3.0%
Menthol.....	2.0%
Oil of Eucalyptus.....	.5%
Oil of Lavender.....	1.0%
Oil of Spearmint.....	1.0%
White Petrolatum (Petroleum Jelly).....	76.0%
Total.....	100.0%

PAR. 6. Aspirin has been prescribed by the medical profession for several years for the alleviation of pain incident to certain ailments and afflictions of the human body, particularly in reducing the threshold of pain in the treatment of rheumatic fever. The normal dosage of aspirin for a normal person is five grains, however, as high as 120 grains may be given a person within a comparatively short time in the treatment of rheumatic fever.

Aspirin is a common name for acetyl salicylic acid. This particular acid, along with a large group of other organic salicylates, is not absorbable through the skin into the human body in sufficient quantities to be of any therapeutic or curative value. Further, this group of compounds are centrally acting, as contrasted with peripherally acting analgesics. Centrally acting analgesics are medicines that must first be taken into the blood stream and by it transmitted to the brain or central nervous system. When they reach the brain and act, a nervous impulse is transmitted to the area of pain or injury.

The purpose, if any, which the respondent's compound serves in the treatment of the various afflictions and conditions of the human body for which it is recommended, is that of an irritant. There are many irritants upon the market today. They are not, per se, of therapeutic or curative value. Almost without exception their application is accompanied by rubbing. The counter irritation set up by the rubbing primarily accomplishes the therapeutic effect or curative action.

The respondent's product, Aspirub, contains in a 1½-ounce jar, 10.4 grains of aspirin. Based on the testimony it is found that if a whole jar of respondent's preparation were applied as directed by respondent, there would be absorbed into the human body not over 10 percent of the total aspirin content of the jar, or 1.04 grains of aspirin. If 10.4 grains of aspirin were taken internally there would be an absorption of at least 90 percent of the aspirin content, or 9.36 grains of aspirin.

From the directions contained in leaflets enclosed in the containers in which respondent's preparation is packed and sold, it is found that the dosage of Aspirub varies from a small quantity applied every few hours in the treatment of nasal congestion, to small quantities "about the size of a pea" in the treatment of coughs due to colds. One witness testified that in using the respondent's compound he applied to the painful area just enough to cover the end of a finger tip.

The constituent of respondent's compound that is stressed most in the advertisements of same, is the aspirin. On the basis of the above calculations of the absorption of aspirin by external and internal application, it is found that the insignificant amount of the aspirin in respondent's compound which is absorbed into the human body when applied dermally is not sufficient to warrant a legitimate use by the respondent of the trade name Aspirub.

Upon entering the human body the small amount of aspirin which can be absorbed by dermal application, begins to break down first into the various salicylates and later, organic ions. The aspirin absorbed into the human body thus immediately changes into other organic substances before it reaches the blood stream. The infinitesimal amount of aspirin absorbed by dermal application is further diluted upon being taken into the blood stream.

From the testimony of expert pharmacologists, it is found when aspirin is taken internally it passes through the stomach into the intestines before breaking down into its component parts. Upon reaching the intestines and breaking down into the various constituents, it is then taken into the blood stream and transmitted to the pain perceiving center of the brain or central nervous system. The pain perceiving center then sends an impulse toward the injured or diseased part of the human body, resulting in relief of pain or discomfort.

Pharmacologists further testified that pine oil is obsolete in the treatment of colds and no longer is generally prescribed by the medical profession, and that oil of lavender and oil of spearmint in the respondent's preparation were of no benefit whatsoever and were merely present for the purpose of giving the preparation a pleasant odor.

The evidence clearly establishes the fact that the aforesaid representations made by respondent are false and deceptive. The respondent's compound will provide little, if any, symptomatic relief from ills where home medication is indicated. It does not tend to relieve pain and discomfort of colds. It is of little or no therapeutic value for muscular aches, pains and soreness, and it is of little value in the treatment of neuralgic symptoms common to coughs, colds and minor throat irritations. It does not kill colds quickly, and it will not check colds like magic. It does not contain seven of the finest cold medicines and will not act lightning-quick in relieving the pain and discomfort of head colds, chest colds and sore throat. It will not check tightness in the chest or make breathing more normal, and it is not the quickest acting of cold medicines. Respondent's preparation has no effect whatever on the causative factors of colds and similar ailments.

The respondent's preparation is for external use. Only an insignificant amount of Aspirub can be absorbed through the skin into the body. Upon reaching the blood stream Aspirub is broken down into its various constituent elements and greatly diluted by the blood. As a result, only an infinitesimal amount of the Aspirub originally absorbed reaches the pain perceiving center of the central nervous system. The amount reaching that center is so minute that no impulse sufficient for the relief of pain is sent out from the center.

Pharmacologists further testified that recent scientific tests have not established that the respondent's compound is one of a few medicines which can penetrate the skin; that the aspirin in respondent's preparation is not held in permanent solution; that the oils claimed to be in respondent's preparation do not, under the circumstances in which the preparation is used, volatilize and increase its power to penetrate quickly to the source of pain or irritation; that the skin will not absorb respondent's preparation to any substantial extent so as to have any beneficial value by reason thereof; and that said preparation is not antiseptic or curative. Aspirub when applied by dermal application will not reach the nerve endings and reduce pain. Aspirub is not a new way to use aspirin, nor is it a new method or way of taking aspirin.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the representations set forth above and appearing in its advertising literature, newspaper advertisements and radio broadcasts, has had and now has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that the said representations are true and that respondent's preparation has a substantial therapeutic and curative value in the treatment of the afflictions and ailments of the human body for which it is recommended. Acting under the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading statements and representations herein referred to, the public has purchased a substantial volume of the respondent's products with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution or in the sale and distribution of like and similar products, or other preparations designed, intended and used for similar purposes, who truthfully represent the efficacy, therapeutic and curative value of their respective products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Justin Haynes Company, Inc., are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence taken before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral argument before the Commission, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Justin Haynes & Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a preparation now designated as "Aspirub," or any other preparation containing substantially the same ingredients, or possessing the same or similar properties whether sold under the name "Aspirub" or under any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or through implication:

its preparation, or through any other means, or in any other manner, that the said preparation is Aspirin.

2. Representing that said preparation has any of the merits of, or accomplishes to any substantial extent the beneficial therapeutic effects of Aspirin.

3. Representing that said preparation has any substantial therapeutic or curative value other than as an irritant.

4. Representing that said preparation is absorbable into the human body through the skin in an amount sufficient to produce any beneficial therapeutic effect by reason thereof.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
CLINE MUSIC COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2944. Complaint, Oct. 15, 1936—Decision, Apr. 21, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of pianos and other musical instruments—

(a) Represented, through "stock ads" sent to it by piano companies and inserted by it in newspapers, and through salesmen in dealing with prospective purchasers contacted by it through means of said advertisements, that it was offering used or repossessed pianos on which a balance was due, and on which payments, for one reason or another, as variously assigned by its salesmen, had been discontinued by prior purchasers, and that it would sacrifice said instruments or store them with reliable parties, rather than incur expense of returning pianos, and offered said instruments, in accordance with such representations, as repossessed, used, or secondhand;

Facts being that real purpose of such advertisements was not to sell any particular piano offered, but to contact prospective customer, said various representations were false, and it did not have any particular used or repossessed instruments, as represented, in aforesaid locality, and pianos sold were cheap, new instruments.

(b) Exhibited and sold pianos on which were stamped or burned retail price at which, purportedly, instrument was to be sold, and represented, in offering and selling product in question, that such purported prices were regular or customary retail prices for the particular products;

Facts being said supposed prices, thus burned or stamped on the particular instruments by the manufacturers from whom said corporation purchased same, were not and never had been the actual retail selling prices thereof, but were highly excessive, false, and misleading, and none of said pianos were ever sold for any such prices, thus stamped on said cheap instruments in accordance with practice of few, but not highest grade manufacturers;

With tendency and capacity, through use of such "come on" or "blind" ads, and fictitious and exaggerated pretended retail prices and representations, to cause members of purchasing public to form erroneous belief that it was offering high-class, used and repossessed pianos at a sacrifice or for balance alleged to be due thereon, rather than incur expense of returning same to factory, and with result that various members of public, acting in such erroneous beliefs, and induced by said various misrepresentations, bought said pianos, and with capacity and tendency thereby unfairly to divert trade to it from competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce pianos truthfully advertised and represented; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Marshall Morgan for the Commission.

Mr. Curry Carter, of Staunton, Va., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Cline Music Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Cline Music Company, Inc., is a corporation duly organized, created, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Virginia, with its principal place of business located at 126 West Beverly Street, in the city of Staunton, Va. It is now and has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of selling and distributing pianos to members of the purchasing public as herein set out.

PAR. 2. The respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, caused and causes said pianos when sold by it to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Staunton, Va., to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Virginia, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said pianos sold and distributed by said respondent between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, engaged in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar products in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as hereinabove described, respondent, in offering for sale and selling its said pianos in interstate commerce, caused and causes advertisements and advertising matters concerning said pianos to be inserted in various periodicals having a wide circulation in various States of the United States. In such advertisements and advertising matter the following statements and representations have been and are made:

FOR SALE—PIANOS, WE learn we must take back from two customers who have moved to this vicinity, their pianos on account of inability to finish payments. To return these pianos, would be very expensive. Will sacrifice them for balances due, or store them with reliable parties until sold. Both pianos are almost new. Terms if desired. One Baby Grand; One Midget upright; full 88 note keyboards. If interested, write to * * *.

In answer to inquiries from members of the purchasing public concerning the pianos so advertised and offered for sale, respondent in its usual course of business transports its pianos from its place of business to the inquiring person and exhibits said pianos to the inquiring person and offers the same for sale to said person, each piano having a price burned or stamped on its sounding board, said price so stamped or burned purporting to be the regular retail price of the piano.

The statements contained in the above set out advertising matter together with the price marks stamped or burned on the said pianos are intended to and do serve as representations on the part of the respondent that:

(a) The pianos referred to in said advertisements and exhibited to the prospective purchaser are of high quality and superior workmanship.

(b) They were originally sold at and for prices closely approximating the prices stamped or burned thereon.

(c) Said pianos had been repossessed and that prices at which said pianos were actually offered for sale are sacrificed prices made for the purpose of eliminating shipping and other repossession charges.

In truth and in fact said pianos were not instruments which had been sold for prices approximating the prices burned or stamped thereon and which had been repossessed by respondent. Said instruments were not being sacrificed for balances due, but the said pianos were new instruments of inferior quality, and the prices asked therefore were not in fact sacrifice prices. The retail prices so stamped or burned on said pianos are and were many times in excess of the actual selling price of the said pianos by the retailer to the consuming public, and are and were many times in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or branded, as aforesaid, are false and fictitious, and in no sense represent either the true value or the true selling price of the pianos so marked. The prices stamped or marked on said pianos were not and are not the prices at which the same were or are expected or intended to be sold, but were and are greatly in excess of the prices at which the same were sold or intended to be sold in the usual course of trade.

PAR. 5. Over a period of many years manufacturers have, in many trades, formed the custom of marking or stamping on the article or item of manufacture, or on the container thereof, the retail price at which said manufacturers suggest the retailer should sell the item or articles to the ultimate consumer purchaser. This suggested retail price, so stamped or marked, is intended to represent the cost of the manufacture of the article plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer and retailer, and consequently to represent the approximate retail sale value of the item. The retail price so stamped or marked is intended by the manufacturer to be indicative of the quality and character of the products and the process of manufacture. The public generally understands the custom herein detailed and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom. For many years a substantial portion of the purchasing public has expressed, and has had, a marked preference for pianos of high quality and workmanship that are produced by the manufacturer with the intent and design of selling said pianos for prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products manufactured from inferior materials and by inferior workmanship. Said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked or stamped the suggested retail prices on said products as an indication of the superior quality and character of such pianos and their resulting higher value. Whenever a genuinely superior product, so stamped or marked with the retail price thereof, is offered for sale at a substantially reduced price, the general purchasing public has been led to believe, and does believe, that in purchasing said product it is securing a bargain not ordinarily obtainable in the usual course of trade. The purchasing public has a preference for purchasing genuinely superior products sold at less than the customary retail value thereof, over ordinary products sold for the regular price which is lower than the normal retail price of the superior product in the customary course of trade.

PAR. 6. The effect of the false and misleading representations, hereinabove set out, together with the false and fictitious price markings, herein set out, on the part of the respondent, in the sale and offering for sale of pianos, as hereinabove referred to, is to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the consuming public in the several States of the United States by inducing them to believe:

1. That the pianos were and are superior products and had been sold by the manufacturer thereof to the respondent with the intent and purpose that said pianos would be originally sold at retail at a price closely approximating the price stamped thereon:

2. That the pianos so offered for sale and sold were ones that had been repossessed on account of the failure or inability of the purchasers to meet the payments thereon, and that such pianos were being sacrificed for balances due.

3. That the price burned or stamped on the back of said pianos was the usual or customary price at which the said pianos were sold or intended to be sold in the course of the regular retail trade; and that such pianos were made of superior workmanship and materials.

PAR. 7. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent have a tendency and capacity to unfairly divert a substantial volume of trade from competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses, which competitors rightfully and truthfully represent the material, merit, and value of their products and which said competitors do not in any wise misrepresent the material, merit, and value of such products. Thereby, substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. Said acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission on October 15, 1936, issued and thereafter served its original complaint in this proceeding on respondent, Cline Music Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Marshall Morgan, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Curry Carter, attorney for the respondent, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes these its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Cline Music Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at 126 West Beverley Street in the city of Staunton, Va. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the business of selling and distributing pianos and other musical instruments.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has offered its said products for sale and has sold and transported and caused the same to be transported in commerce among the several States, of the United States direct from its aforesaid place of business in the city of Staunton, Va., to customers located at points in States of the United States other than the State of Virginia.

In the course and conduct of such selling, respondent has been, and now is, engaged in competition with corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals offering for sale and selling in like commerce, pianos and musical instruments.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in connection with the sale and distribution of its pianos as aforesaid, has advertised the same in papers having interstate circulation. In said advertisements respondent has represented that it was taking back from two customers in "this vicinity" two pianos "almost new," on which customers were unable to complete payments, and that these pianos would be sacrificed for "the balance due" on them rather than incur the expense of returning them. Typical of these advertisements was the following inserted by respondent in the "Bristol News Bulletin," a daily paper published at Bristol, Va.-Tenn., on January 6, 1936:

"FOR SALE—PIANOS, WE learn we must take back from two customers who have moved to this vicinity, their pianos on account of their inability to finish payments. To return these pianos would be very expensive. Will sacrifice them for balances due, or store them with reliable parties until sold. Both pianos are almost new. Terms if desired. One Baby Grand, One Midget upright; full 88 note keyboards. If interested, write to * * *."

Other advertisements, almost identical in wording, were run by the respondent in the "Bristol Herald Courier" of November 19 and December 11, 1935. In a further advertisement inserted by respondent in the February 1, 1936 issue of the "Bristol News Bulletin," describing two small-size nationally known pianos "we have in your vicinity," it was stated: "* * * Rather than reship to the factory, we would like to sell these to responsible parties for balances due * * *."

Findings

28 F. T. C.

Three out of four advertisements inserted by respondent in Bristol papers announced and explained that it was necessary for respondent to "take back" two pianos from customers "who have moved to this vicinity" because of their "inability to finish payments," and a fourth advertisement referred to two small-sized pianos "we have in your vicinity." All advertisements were so worded as to emphasize in the mind of the prospective customer the idea that the company was anxious to avoid the expense of moving these pianos from that vicinity and would for this reason sacrifice the instruments for balances due.

The "Bristol Herald Courier" is a daily morning paper and the "News Bulletin," a daily afternoon paper, each published by the Bristol Publishing Corporation at Bristol, Va. These two papers circulate in eastern Tennessee, western North Carolina, southwestern Virginia, and southeastern Kentucky. Advertising matter inserted in these Bristol papers will reach all four of these States. When persons living in the vicinity of Bristol answered these advertisements they received a card from an agent of respondent acknowledging the inquiry to the advertisement and advising that he would be "in your vicinity" in the near future with a very unusual proposition.

Various persons living in the State of Tennessee answered these advertisements and eventually bought pianos as a result of the contacts obtained by respondent through these advertisements.

PAR. 4. Respondent's agents in sales talks followed out the representation made in the advertisements that the pianos were repossessed or used instruments. One purchaser was told that the piano in question had been used by a couple that "broke up," and that it was being sold for the sum due on it. This customer understood that the piano was offered in pursuance of these advertisements and corresponded to the pianos mentioned in the advertisements. The outside appearance of the piano was that of a new piano. There were no marks or scratches on it.

Another customer in Tennessee who answered one of respondent's advertisements was told that pianos shown her were "slightly used" and that a particular one the agent was showing her was being sold at a sacrifice "rather than take it back to the company." This customer understood she would get the benefit of the reduction in price because the piano had been used. She thought it was a used piano in splendid condition.

Still another Tennessee customer who answered one of respondent's advertisements was given to understand that the piano the agent was showing her had been bought by a newly married couple who were divorcing and they didn't have any more use for it. The couple had owned it but a short time and the company was taking it back.

PAR. 5. The advertisements run by respondent in newspapers were "stock ads" sent to respondent by piano companies. The advertisements were used by respondent company and its agents to obtain contacts with prospective purchasers. The real purpose of the advertisements was not to sell any two particular pianos but to get the attention of the customer, to get a contact. The important thing was to locate prospective customers and contact them. The ads were primarily inserted for selling pianos. These ads are known to the advertising men as "come-on" advertisements and "blind ads." A "come-on" advertisement is defined in the record as an advertisement "inserted to bring in customers." A "blind" ad is defined in the record as one that would lead a prospective purchaser to believe that he was getting a piano that had been partially paid for and he does not get that kind of a piano.

In the view of one large New York manufacturer, the "come-on" ads are misleading in that "they do not represent repossessed pianos but are merely bait to get prospects." Another large New York manufacturer terms these "blind ads," those which do not state the truth; one that is "misleading and gets a prospective customer by not telling the truth." This type of advertising is "used by certain types of manufacturers, not the higher grade of manufacturers."

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the representations made by respondent company in its advertisements and by salesmen who contacted customers by the use of such advertisements were false, deceptive, and misleading in that the advertisements run by respondent were employed for the purpose of obtaining initial contacts with prospective customers and not for the purpose of selling any particular used or repossessed piano. The respondent did not have and has not had at Bristol, Tenn., or in the vicinity of Bristol, or at any place or locality reached and served by daily papers published at Bristol, any two particular repossessed and used pianos, and at least three out of four of the pianos sold by respondent to parties living at Bristol, Tenn., sold through the use of respondent's advertisements, were cheap, new pianos.

The inference or impression sought to be conveyed by respondent in its advertisements, and by respondent's salesmen after obtaining contacts through such advertisements, was that because the pianos had been used, had belonged to someone else, and would have to be reclaimed, they would thereby be sold at a reduction and could be bought at a bargain. Neither the respondent nor any of its salesmen could state where or from whom any piano had been repossessed. Respondent was unable to "run these pianos down, to get the actual facts as to just whether they were brand new pianos, and whether they were repossessed pianos, or whether they were obsolete pianos." Efforts to locate in the vicinity of Bristol any piano that belonged to Cline Music Company, or its agents, were unsuccessful. Respondent company does not own or operate a "factory" to which a piano could have been returned.

The pianos sold to Mr. W. H. Williams, Mrs. W. G. Dutton, and Mr. Robert Speer could not be identified by respondent as having been repossessed at any of several points in Virginia served by the "Bristol Herald Courier," nor did respondent ever identify any such pianos as having been repossessed at Bristol or in the vicinity of Bristol, and no salesmen for respondent could give the name of any person living in that vicinity who formerly owned one of the pianos figuring in this record.

Respondent's salesmen preferred to sell new pianos as they get a commission on those, and endeavored to get in touch with customers to sell them new pianos. The piano sold to Mrs. W. G. Dutton looked new but looked like it might possibly have been demonstrated. The piano sold to Mrs. Rucker looked brand new. The piano showed to and bought by Mr. Williams looked brand new. The outside appearance of the piano sold to Robert Speer was that of a new piano.

PAR. 7. Respondent, in further connection with the sale and the offering for sale of its pianos, exhibited and sold pianos on which were stamped or burned a retail price at which the piano was to be sold. This alleged retail sales price was burned into or stamped on the lid that raises in front of the player of the instrument or on the back part of the piano. About 50 percent of the pianos handled by respondent company have contained this burned-in price mark. These constitute the cheaper grades. The prices are and were burned or stamped on the piano by certain manufacturers from whom respondent company buys and has bought its pianos. All pianos figuring in the present case bear such a stamp. The practice of so burning or stamping prices on pianos originated during the World War. These prices were stamped or burned on the instrument at a time when prices were high and labor was scarce. Some of the manufacturers are still using these World War prices, prices which they used 23 years ago.

The so-called stamped or burned-in price on respondent's pianos is not, and never has been, the actual retail selling price for such pianos and neither respondent nor any of its sales representatives have ever sold any of respondent's pianos for such prices. This stamping or burning of the price on pianos is not a common practice in the industry, being done by few companies, not by the highest-grade manufacturers.

Findings

The customary mark-up price on a piano for the dealer is approximately 100 percent of the invoice. The manufacturer sells to a dealer at a given figure and the dealer expects to double that in his retail price. Out of this retail price will also come the dealer's expenses.

Where a Melville Clark piano shipped from Chicago, Ill., to Bristol, Va., with a price of $425 burned on the board, was invoiced to the dealer for $97, such stamped or burned-in price would represent an excessive mark-up.

In the light of the foregoing rule that the dealer's resale price is double that of the invoice to him, it is ascertained that all of the pianos sold by respondent as disclosed in this record bore excessive suggested retail prices stamped or burned on them, as the following table discloses:

Purchaser	Make, style, and number of piano	Burned-in-board price	Invoice price to dealer	Dealer's retail sales price
Robert Speer and Wife.....	Wurlitzer Co., Melville Clark, Upright Mahogany Style 39, No. 140668.	$425. 00	$97. 00	$230. 00
W. G. Dutton and Wife.....	Story & Clark Spinnet Mahogany Style C, No. 135188.	525. 00	145. 00	285. 00
W. H. Williams and Wife.....	Wurlitzer Co., Melville Clark Style Grand Mahogany, No. 136229.	750. 00	167. 50	495. 00

W. G. Dutton and Wife.....	27%	54%	50%	No.
W. H. Williams and Wife.....	22%	66%	33%	Yes.
Mrs. Julia C. Rucker.....	22%	52%	43%	Yes.

It is disclosed from the above table that even had the pianos sold by respondent actually been used or repossessed pianos as claimed, and resold as such, three out of four of such pianos were resold for prices well above the retail sales prices of the pianos new, that is, well above the figure representing double the invoice price to the dealer. In only one instance does the record disclose or intimate any previous sale or use of any piano.

The prices that were burned in or stamped on the pianos sold by the respondent were adopted and employed by sales representatives of respondent in their sales talks to customers.

The agent selling the piano to Mrs. W. H. Williams represented to her that the price on the piano in raised numbers, namely $750, was the price of the instrument. If this piano had been, in fact, a second-hand piano, it would follow that it was resold for $160 more than the customary price of a new piano, that is, for $160 more than the invoice price to the dealer, doubled.

The factory price appearing on the "slightly used" piano sold to Mrs. Julia Rucker was $425. Respondent's agent assured her that this was the factory price and that, because it had been sold to respondent as a used piano, it was being resold at a reduction. This piano was invoiced to the respondent for $97 and was sold (or allegedly resold) by respondent for $225. Assuming that this one piano out of four appearing in the record was actually a used piano, it follows that it was resold by respondent for $31 more than the regular price of the piano brand-new, that is, for $31 more than the amount of the invoice doubled.

The agent selling the piano to Robert Speer and wife showed them a price of $425 that was burned or stamped on the back of the piano, and these purchasers understood from the agent that this sum represented the real selling price of the piano. Assuming that this piano was a used piano as represented, the piano was resold for $36 in excess of the invoice price, doubled, and the burned-in retail price on the board of the piano is nearly five times the amount of the invoice.

Respondent's sales agents frankly admitted that they adopted and employed in their sales talks to customers these burned-in or stamped prices on instruments sold by them. This price stamped on or burned into the piano the agent would show to a customer. The customer was told this was the retail price; that this was the stamped price put on by the factory; that this was the general retail price of the piano as sold in various places. Respondent's agents did not and do not know of any instance where respondent or anyone else ever sold a piano, old or new, for the price stamped or burned on the board.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact, the prices stamped upon or burned on the pianos sold by respondent in commerce do not represent and have not represented the actual or proper retail sales prices for said pianos, but are and were, on the contrary, false and fictitious prices at which respondent's said pianos are not and never were sold or intended to be sold.

PAR. 9. The various statements and representations made by respondent through the medium of newspaper advertising, mail matter, and sales talks of its agents or sales representatives, in selling and offering for sale its pianos in the respective States of the United States, as shown in paragraphs 3 to 7 herein, are false, deceptive and misleading. Respondent did not have and has not had at any time at Bristol, Tenn., or in the vicinity thereof, any two particular repossessed pianos. The purpose of respondent's said advertising was not to sell to anyone at Bristol, Tenn., or in that vicinity, used or repossessed pianos, but, on the contrary, the admitted purpose of respondent's newspaper advertising was to make contacts with prospective new customers with a view to selling them new pianos.

The pianos sold by respondent were in at least three instances cheap new pianos and the representations of respondent's sales representatives that such instruments were used or repossessed pianos were false, deceptive and misleading.

The retail selling prices burned in or stamped on all of the pianos sold by respondent were and are fictitious and highly excessive, false and misleading. Respondent does not sell and never has sold pianos for any such prices. Respondent, through its various sales representatives, has, nevertheless, adopted and employed these false and fictitious retail prices in connection with the sale and the offering for sale of its pianos, and has falsely and deceptively represented that such prices were and are the correct and proper retail sales prices of its said pianos.

PAR. 10. There are among the competitors of respondent, as referred to hereinbefore, corporations, partnerships, firms, and persons who are engaged in the sale of pianos in commerce and who truthfully represent their products and honestly vend the same.

PAR. 11. The use of the aforesaid false and misleading representations and practices on the part of respondent in the sale and offering of its pianos for sale has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to cause members of the purchasing public to form the erroneous belief that respondent was offering high-class used and repossessed pianos at a sacrifice price or for the balance alleged to be due on them, rather than incur the expense of returning the pianos to the factory. Acting under such erroneous beliefs, induced by the various misrepresentations of the respondent as herein detailed, various members of the public have purchased respondent's pianos. The aforesaid representations and practices on the part of respondent have, and have had, the capacity and tendency unfairly to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce pianos which are truthfully advertised and represented. Thereby, substantial injury has been done and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Cline Music Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the said respondent, Cline Music Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, servants, employees, or agents, individual, or corporate, in connection with the advertising, describing, offering for sale, and sale in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, of pianos or other musical instruments, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that respondent has, and is offering for sale at any particular place, locality, or community, or in the vicinity thereof, as indicated by, or may be fairly inferred from, respondent's advertising or sales talks in connection therewith, any used or repossessed piano or other musical instrument on which a balance is stated to be due, unless and until respondent, or a duly accredited agent or representative of respondent, actually has, and is offering for sale at such place, locality, or community, or in the said vicinity thereof, such used or repossessed piano, or other musical instrument, on which there is a balance due respondent as alleged and represented;

2. Representing that pianos or other musical instruments are used, second-hand, or repossessed unless such pianos or other musical instruments are, in fact, used, second-hand, or repossessed instruments;

3. Representing, through fictitious prices stamped or burned upon or affixed to pianos or other musical instruments, or by sales talks, or through other means or device, or in any manner, that said prices so stamped, burned, or affixed are the regular or customary retail prices for such products;

Order

4. Representing, as the customary or regular retail prices for pianos or other musical instruments, prices which are, in fact, fictitious and greatly in excess of the prices at which said products are regularly and customarily offered for sale and sold at retail.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form with which it has complied with this order.

VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3188. Complaint, July 24, 1937—Decision, Apr. 21, 1938¹

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of its "Lavoptik" preparation, to consumers in other States, in competition with others engaged in offer and sale in like commerce of similar preparations and preparations used for same and similar purposes; in advertising its said products,—

- (a) Made such representations and statements as that "6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it", and that it is "Advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists"; and
- (b) Made such statements and representations, among others, as that "A daily eye bath" with it "will be a constant protection to your eyes from the incessant strain that modern living places upon them," and that it "will bring eye strength," and that it "heals";

Notwithstanding fact said preparation, composed of a boric base combined in distilled water with camphor, sodium chloride and hydrastine hydrochloride, was not a cure for diseases of the eye or impaired vision;

With capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous beliefs that "eyesight specialists" meant graduate medical doctors who specialized in treatment of the diseases and ailments of the eye, and that "a daily eye bath" with said preparation, as above set forth, would prevent eye strain, and that it would make weak eyes strong and would cure or remedy permanently diseases of the eyes and impaired vision, to the prejudice of the public and competitors, and with capacity and tendency unfairly to divert to it trade of latter, engaged in selling in interstate commerce preparations truthfully advertised and represented and used for same purposes for which it recommended its said product: to their substantial injury in commerce:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lavoptik Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota. Respondent's plant, office, and principal place of business is located at Michigan Avenue and Seventh Street, St. Paul, Minn. Said respondent is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing or compounding, advertising, selling, and distributing a lotion, or eye wash, commonly known and designated as "Lavoptik Eye Wash." It now causes, and for more than 1 year last past has caused, said preparation, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in St. Paul, Minn., to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of Minnesota, others located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of eye lotions and eye washes, and other preparations similar to that sold by respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, in soliciting the sale of and selling its product, designated as "Lavoptik Eye Wash," respondent now represents, and for more than 1 year last past has represented, in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, letters, wrappers, radio broadcasts, and other forms of advertising media having an interstate circulation, and in a booklet entitled "How to Safeguard Your Eyes," which it issues, ships and distributes in large number to the public generally throughout the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, through its distributors, sales branches, and sales people, as follows:

INFLAMED EYES? Bathe them with Lavoptik. Prompt Relief. Use also for granulated eyelids, tired, sore, strained, itching, sticky, burning, irritated, watery eyes. 6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it.

IRRITATED EYELIDS? Bathe them with Lavoptik, prompt relief.

EYES SORE? TIRED? Here's Relief Instantly! Bathe eyes with Lavoptik. Burning, inflammation, watery, tired, strained feeling, or itching vanishes at once. Wonderful, too, for granulated eyelids. Soothes, cools, heals. No harmful drugs. Advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists.

of soothing, healing Lavoptik in your bathroom medicine cabinet, and go through the restful "Eyecup Drill" (as explained by the picture on this page) every evening and morning. Your eyes will not only feel better, but will be healthier and more efficient.

Four Important Suggestions:

(1) Give the eyes of babies and small children careful attention. In treating them, moisten a little cotton in Lavoptik and bathe the edges of the lids and drop a liberal amount into the eyes after the lower lid is pulled down.

(2) After driving, exposure to dust, heat or wind, or after you leave a smoke-laden room, a Lavoptik eye bath will instantly refresh those dry, tired eyes.

(3) If you use LAVOPTIK before going out, you will enjoy that happy, refreshed feeling of knowing your eyes look their best.

(4) In the morning, if your eyes are stiff and heavy, you will be astonished how much a Lavoptik eye bath will help them.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, the preparation "Lavoptik Eye Wash" has not been endorsed and approved by 6,000 graduate medical doctor eyesight specialists, or eye specialists, and said preparation, "Lavoptik," is not a cure for diseases of the eye or impaired vision, and will not strengthen the nerves of the eye, nor relieve eye strain, conjunctivitis, and other diseases of the eye, and will not make eyes healthier and more efficient, but is merely an eye wash composed of a boric acid base in distilled water with camphor, sodium chloride, and hydrastine hydrochloride, which can in no way influence the delicate nerves of the eye, or heal diseases of the eye.

PAR. 4. The representations of respondent as aforesaid are false and grossly exaggerated and have had and do have a capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that respondent's product, designated "Lavoptik," is different from other eye lotions or eye washes, and that the preparation has been endorsed by 6,000 graduate medical doctors, especially trained in the treatment of the eyes; that said preparation has the property to heal and rejuvenate strained and impaired eyesight, and is an effective treatment for all forms of defective eyesight, no matter from what cause. The said representations of respondent have had and do have the capacity and tendency to induce members of the public to buy and use said preparation because of erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade unfairly from competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of eye lotions and eye washes similar to the preparation sold by respondent in commerce in and among the various States of the United States, and deceives the public and injures competitors, and places in the hands of others the means whereby the public are deceived, and competitors are injured. There are among competitors of respondent many who sell and distribute in commerce similar lotions and eye washes and preparations for the treatment of the eyes, who do not misrepresent the properties, the qualities, or the therapeutic virtues, functions, or effects of their said competing products.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission on the 24th day of July 1937, issued, and on the 26th day of July 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon said respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. On August 11, 1937, the respondent filed its answer in this proceeding. Thereafter, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts, signed and executed by the respondent by its counsel, Monte Appel, and W. T. Kelley, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as the facts in this proceeding, and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto, and that the said Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, answer, and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Lavoptik Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal office and place of business located at Michigan Avenue and Seventh Street, St. Paul, Minn. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the business of selling and distributing a preparation designated "Lavoptik."

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., in response to orders received, has offered its said preparation for sale, and has sold and transported, and caused the same to be transported, in commerce among the several States of the United States, direct from its aforesaid place of business in St. Paul, Minn., to consumers located at points in the several States of the United States other than the State of Minnesota, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of such selling, respondent has been, and now is engaged in competition with corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals offering for sale and selling, in like commerce, similar preparations and preparations used for the same and similar purposes.

PAR. 3. The preparation "Lavoptik" is composed of a boric base, combined in distilled water with camphor, sodium chloride, and hydrastine hydrochloride, and is not a cure for diseases of the eye or impaired vision.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, as hereinbefore described, the respondent made, published, or caused to be published the following statements, claims, and representations to induce the purchase of its product:

INFLAMED EYES? Bathe them with Lavoptik. Prompt Relief. Use also for granulated eyelids, tired, sore, strained, itching, sticky, burning, irritated, watery eyes. 6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it.

IRRITATED EYELIDS? Bathe them with Lavoptik, prompt relief.

EYES SORE? TIRED? Here's Relief Instantly! Bathe eyes with Lavoptik. Burning, inflammation, watery, tired, strained feelings, or itching vanishes at once. Wonderful, too, for granulated eyelids. Soothes, cools, heals. No harmful drugs. Advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists.

* * * Lavoptik will bring eye strength and eye comfort.

A daily eye bath with Lavoptik will be a constant protection to your eyes from the incessant strain that modern living places upon them. Keep a bottle of soothing, healing Lavoptik in your bathroom medicine cabinet, and go through the restful "Eyecup Drill" (as explained by the picture on this page) every evening and morning. Your eyes will not only feel better, but will be healthier and more efficient.

Four Important Suggestions:

(1) Give the eyes of babies and small children careful attention. In treating them, moisten a little cotton in Lavoptik and bathe the edges of the lids and drop a liberal amount into the eyes after the lower lid is pulled down.

(2) After driving, exposure to dust, heat or wind, or after you leave a smoke-laden room, a Lavoptik eye bath will instantly refresh those dry, tired eyes.

(3) If you use LAVOPTIK before going out, you will enjoy that happy, refreshed feeling of knowing your eyes look their best.

(4) In the morning, if your eyes are stiff and heavy, you will be astonished how much a Lavoptik eye bath will help them.

The representations of respondent set out above that "6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it" and that it is "advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists," have the capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that "eyesight specialists" means graduate medical doctors who specialize in the treatment of diseases and ailments of the eye.

The representation of respondent, set out above, that "a daily eye bath with Lavoptik will be a constant protection to your eyes from the incessant strain that modern living places upon them," has the capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that a daily eye bath with Lavoptik will prevent eye strain.

The representation of respondent, set out above, that "Lavoptik will bring eye strength," has the capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that Lavoptik will make weak eyes strong.

The representation of respondent, set out above, that Lavoptik "heals" has the capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that Lavoptik will cure or permanently remedy diseases of the eyes and impaired vision.

PAR. 5. The representations of respondent, set out above, that "6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it," that it is "advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists," and that "a daily eye bath with Lavoptik will be a constant protection to your eyes from the incessant strain that modern living places upon them." that "Lavoptik will bring eye strength," that Lavoptik "heals" are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors. The practice, on the part of the respondent of using these representations has had, and has, the capacity and tendency unfairly to divert to respondent the trade of competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce preparations which are truthfully advertised and represented and which are used for the same purposes for which the respondent recommends its product. Thereby substantial injury has been done, and is being done by respondent to competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, and the agreed stipulation of facts entered into between the respondent herein, Lavoptik Company, Inc., and W. T. Kelley, chief counsel for the Commission, which provides, among other things, that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon the respondent herein findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon and an order disposing of the proceeding, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., its officers, representatives and employees, in connection with the sale or offering for sale by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of a preparation now designated as Lavoptik or any other preparation of substantially similar ingredients or effect, whether designated by that name or some other name, forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through any means whatsoever, that said preparation is endorsed or recommended by any designated number of eyesight specialists for any purpose, unless and until said preparation is in fact endorsed or recommended by said number of graduate doctors of medicine who specialize in the treatment of the eyes.

2. Representing, directly or by inference, that said preparation restores strength to the eyesight; that the use of said preparation will be a constant protection to the eyes; that the said preparation is a cure or permanent remedy for or will heal any diseases of the eye.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it shall have complied with this order.

Stephens, an individual, trading under the firm name and style of Tested Specialties Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Gus Stephens, is an individual trading under the firm name and style of Tested Specialties Company, with his offices and principal place of business located at 809 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past engaged at said location in the selling and distributing of a medicine or alleged remedy for use in the treatment of sick or ailing dogs, cats, foxes, and all fur bearing animals. Said medicine or alleged remedy is sold under the trade name of "On-the-Nose." Said medicine or alleged remedy is put up in containers and is to be applied by rubbing on the noses or lips of said animals. Respondent sells said product to individuals, pet shops, drug stores, and other stores.

In the course and conduct of said business, respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported said product when so sold from said city of Chicago in the State of Illinois to said individuals, pet shops, drug stores, and other stores, many of whom are located in various States other than the State of Illinois. There is now, and has been during all of the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in said product so sold by said respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is now, and has been during all of the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition in said commerce with various corporations, firms, and individuals selling or offering for sale, to the general public compounds, medicines, and remedies used and sold for the same purposes as those of respondent's said product. Among the competitors of the respondent are many who do not make false and misleading representations in connection with the sale of their products.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling said product, has advertised and now advertises the same in newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals of interstate circulation and in pamphlets, on stationery and in printed testimonials and other printed matter sent through the United States mails, and on the labels attached to the containers of said product. In and through the advertising media above described, respondent has made and is making expressly or by implication the following representations:

That the use of "On-the-Nose" in the treatment of said animals is effective against distemper, is working miracles every day, saving thousands of dogs doomed by so-called incurable afflictions, cures coughs and colds, builds up resistance against infectious diseases, is a general conditioner and a preventative of diseases, is efficacious as a dewormer and that he maintains laboratories and factories where such medicine or alleged remedy is made in Canada and the United States.

PAR. 4. The representations described and set forth in paragraph 3 above are false and misleading, in that the use of "On-the-Nose" when used as a medicine or remedy for said animals has no therapeutic value or effect in cases of distemper, is not a tonic, powerful or otherwise, does not build resistance to disease, has not saved the lives of thousands or any number of dogs, is not a general conditioner and is not a preventative of disease in any of said animals, is not efficacious in the deworming of dogs or in the deworming of other animals, nor in the treatment of colds in dogs or other animals, and laboratories and factories for the purpose of preparing and manufacturing the product "On-the-Nose" are not maintained in the United States or Canada by respondent.

PAR. 5. Said statements and representations set forth in paragraph 3 so made by respondent have and have had, the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that said statements and representations are true, and because of such erroneous belief, to purchase respondent's said product, thereby unfairly diverting substantial trade in said commerce to the respondent from his said competitors to their injury and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on August 28, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Gus

Stephens, trading under the firm name and style of Tested Specialties Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Floyd O. Collins, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Gus Stephens, respondent, before William R. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, brief in support of the complaint, the respondent having waived filing of a brief and having not requested oral argument; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Gus Stephens is an individual trading under the firm name and style of Tested Specialties Company, with his principal place of business located in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois.

The respondent has been engaged for several years in the sale and distribution in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia of a product designated "On-the-Nose." Said product is sold and recommended by respondent as a treatment for dogs, cats, and other animals suffering from distemper, coughs, colds and various other diseases and ailments. Respondent causes said product when sold to be shipped from his place of business in Chicago, Ill., to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois. Respondent's annual sales of said preparations "On-the-Nose" amount to several thousand dollars. Respondent maintains and has for several years last past maintained a course of trade in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia in said product "On-the-Nose."

PAR. 2. There are numerous other individuals, corporations, firms and partnerships engaged in selling and distributing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia other medicines and preparations which are sold and recommended for dogs, cats and other animals suffering from distemper, coughs, colds and various other diseases and ailments, which individuals, corporations, firms and partnerships do not misrepresent the efficacy of the medicines and preparations sold by them, and do not misrepresent their business status. Respondent, Gus Stephens, is in active and substantial competition with these individuals, corporations, firms and partnerships in the sale and distribution of his product "On-the-Nose" in such commerce.

PAR. 3. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of the product, "On-the-Nose," respondent has widely advertised said product in advertisements inserted in magazines and other periodicals of general circulation throughout the United States. Respondent has also printed folders, literature, circular letters and other advertising matter and circulated same throughout the several States of the United States, to customers and prospective customers.

In all of the advertisements and advertising material hereinabove mentioned, the respondent has caused the trade name, Tested Specialties Company, and the name of the product, "On-the-Nose," to be prominently and conspicuously displayed with such statements as:

In treating DISTEMPER, "ON-THE-NOSE" has achieved almost miraculous results.

Before you take YOUR DOG to any show, administer "ON-THE-NOSE" as a precaution against Distemper or other contagious animal diseases.

A powerful tonic and conditioner. Builds resistance to disease. "ON-THE-NOSE" is working near miracles every day—saving thousands of dogs doomed by so-called "incurable" afflictions.

Don't Take Chances WITH DISTEMPER—On-The-Nose is mildly purgative. It is a good vermifuge. Administer ON-THE-NOSE at the first sign of a cold, sniffles, listlessness, watery eyes, lost appetite and similar disorders.

"On-The-Nose" is recommended by veterinarians, kennelmen and dog fanciers everywhere as a quick-acting, valuable aid in fighting Distemper, as a general tonic, and as a conditioner for building up resistance against the more serious animal afflictions.

On the letterhead used by respondent the following statement appears:

Originators and manufacturers of "ON-THE-NOSE"

PAR. 4. The statements above set out together with many similar statements appearing in respondent's advertising and literature purport to be descriptive of the preparation "On-the-Nose." Through the use of these statements and other similar statements, respondent represents: (1) that said preparation is an effective treatment and competent and adequate remedy and cure for distemper in dogs and other animals; (2) that said preparation is an effective treatment and competent and adequate remedy and cure for dogs, cats and other animals suffering with coughs and colds; (3) that said product is efficacious as a curative and preventive of diseases or ailments from which dogs and other animals suffer; (4) that said preparation is a vermifuge; (5) that respondent maintains laboratories where said preparation is manufactured or compounded.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact said preparation is not an effective treatment or competent and adequate remedy or cure for dogs, cats or any other animal suffering from distemper, coughs, colds or any other ailment or disease. Said preparation is not efficacious either as a curative or preventive of diseases or ailments from which dogs and other animals suffer. Said preparation is not a vermifuge and is not effective in any respect when used as a dewormer. Said preparation contains 15 percent metallic mercury, 3 percent Benzoin, and 82 percent lard. Said preparation is nothing more than a mild laxative and would not be effective as a laxative unless given in a dose larger than prescribed by respondent. Respondent does not maintain and never has maintained a laboratory or laboratories either in Canada or the United States where said preparation is manufactured or compounded.

PAR. 6. The various statements and misrepresentations made by respondent in describing the preparation "On-the-Nose" and the effectiveness of said preparation when used had, and now have, a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true and that said preparation is efficacious as a remedy or cure for the ailments and diseases represented and into the purchase of a substantial quantity of respondent's product on account of such belief induced by the respondent's representations as above set out. As a result thereof, trade has been diverted unfairly to respondent from individuals, corporations, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing their products which are prepared, compounded and sold for substantially the same purpose for which respondent's product is advertised and sold and who truthfully advertise their respective products and the efficacy thereof when used.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Colonial Mills, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Colonial Mills, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 469 Seventh Avenue in the city of New York, in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing silk, rayon, and other fabrics. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such goods to garment manufacturers and other customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes, and during the time above mentioned has caused, its said goods, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York City to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said goods, so sold by it, between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of silk, rayon, and other fabrics in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 herein, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling certain of its products to garment manufacturers, supplied its said customers with labels and tags which said customers did, and do, attach to the garments manufactured by them from said products. The said labels and tags bear the following language:

This garment is made of
SATIN AMOROSA
PURE DYE
With Crown Rayon Yarn

The words "Satin Amorosa Pure Dye" were, and are, printed in large, conspicuous, white letters on a dark, fanciful background, while the words "With Crown Rayon Yarn" were and are, printed below in much smaller and less conspicuous type. The said respondent also furnished its customers with cloth labels to be sewn, and which were sewn, by such customers to garments made by them from fabrics purchased from respondent. These cloth labels carried the following words:

Amora
Crepe
Pure Dye
of Celanese Yarn

In soliciting the sale of, and selling, said products, respondent caused, and now causes, advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers and other periodicals having an interstate circulation, wherein such products of respondents were, and are, described and referred to as "Satin Amorosa."

The foregoing statements and representations made by the respondent, as in this paragraph set out, serve as representations to members of the purchasing public and to garment manufacturers that such products so advertised and offered for sale were, and are, silk products. The representations hereinabove set forth are, and were, grossly false and misleading in that said products so represented, designated and referred to are not, and were not, composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but are, and were, composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the mind of the garment manufacturers and consuming public generally a definite and specific meaning, to wit, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm. Silk products for many years have held, and still hold, great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms has been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Dress goods and other items of wearing apparel designated, described and referred to as "satin," "pure dye" and "crepe" have been for a long time, and at the present time still are, associated in the public mind with the fabric made from the cocoon of the silkworm, commonly known and understood by the public generally as "silk."

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 herein corporations, individuals, partnerships and firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of silk, rayon and other fabrics who do not misrepresent the kind of goods manufactured and offered for sale by them.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are, and were, true and to cause them to purchase said products as a result of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. The use by respondent of the representations aforesaid has unfairly diverted, and does unfairly divert, trade in said commerce to the respondent from its said competitors, and thereby substantial injury is being, and has been done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's said competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on October 8, 1937, issued, and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Colonial Mills, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer, and to substitute in lieu thereof an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission, on the said complaint and the substitute answer, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

It sells, and has sold and distributed, such fabrics to garment manufacturers and other customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes, and during the time above mentioned has caused, its said fabrics, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a course of trade and

PAR. 2. Respondent, in selling and delivering certain of its products to garment manufacturers, in the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 herein, has supplied its said customers with certain labels and tags which said customers attach to the garments manufactured by them from said products. The said labels and tags bear the following language:

This garment is made of
SATIN AMOROSA
PURE DYE

The words "Satin Amorosa" and "Pure Dye" were, and are, printed in large, conspicuous, white letters on a dark, fanciful background, while the words "With Crown Rayon Yarn" were, and are, printed in much smaller type. The representations hereinabove set forth are false and misleading in that said products so represented, designated and referred to are not, and were not, composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but are, and were, composed of materials other than silk.

Order

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the minds of the garment manufacturers and consuming public generally a definite and specific meaning, to wit, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm. Silk products for many years have held, and still hold, great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 herein, corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of rayon and other fabrics who do not misrepresent the kind of goods manufactured and offered for sale by them.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true, and to cause them to purchase said products as a result of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. Through respondent's use of the aforesaid misrepresentations in the manner set forth, trade has been diverted unfairly to respondent and its customers from its competitors and their respective customers who do not use the same or similar misrepresentations in connection with the sale of their respective products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent company, Colonial Mills, Inc., are to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on March 11, 1938, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF

UNIVERSAL HANDKERCHIEF MFG. COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3270. Complaint, Nov. 22, 1937—Decision, Apr. 22, 1938

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of packaged handkerchiefs to jobbers—

- (a) Displayed on letterheads, cartons, invoices, order blanks, and other printed matter circulated through the various states to customers and prospective customers, corporate or trade name containing letters "Mfg.," and represented thereby that it was the manufacturer of the products sold by it, and in certain of said advertising that it was the "largest manufacturer of packaged handkerchiefs in the United States," and "World's largest makers of one quality handkerchiefs," with factories in certain New Jersey cities;

Facts being it neither owned a factory nor operated nor controlled any factories making handkerchiefs, but purchased cloth from various cotton textile factories and delivered same to certain manufacturers, who made said cloth into handkerchiefs in accordance with its specifications as to spinning, cutting, number of stitches making hem, and dampening, and delivered finished articles to it for packaging in its own place of business and for resale as above set forth; and

- (b) Falsely represented that handkerchiefs sold by it were laundered before packaging for resale, or were "laundered soft" or "laundered soft finish";

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true and with result that substantial number of such public purchased considerable volume of its said articles as and for purchases made directly from the manufacturer thereof, preferred by substantial portion of wholesale and retail buyers as offering, in their belief, closer prices, better quality, and other advantages not had by dealing through jobber, packager, selling agency, middleman, or otherwise, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors likewise engaged in sale and distribution of handkerchiefs, and who truthfully advertised and represented nature and character of their business;

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Joseph C. Fehr for the Commission.

Foster & Sorin, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., is a corporation organized and existing by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, having its principal office and place of business located at 309 Fifth Avenue, in the city of New York, in the State of New York. Respondent is now, and has been for more than 1 year last past, engaged in the business of selling and distributing packaged handkerchiefs in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said handkerchiefs, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of New York to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in the States of the United States other than the State of New York. Respondent has at all times maintained a constant current of trade in said handkerchiefs, sold and distributed by it in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is now, and has been for more than 1 year, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with firms, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing handkerchiefs in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course of the operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of handkerchiefs sold by it, respondent now uses, and at all times herein referred to has used, its corporate name containing the letters "Mfg." in soliciting the sale of and selling its said handkerchiefs. It has caused said corporate name containing the letters "Mfg." to be prominently and conspicuously displayed on its letter-heads, display cartons, invoices, order blanks and other printed matter circulated throughout the various States of the United States to customers and prospective customers. Certain of said advertising matter also carried and now carries statements such as:

Largest Manufacturers of Packaged Handkerchiefs in the United States
World's Largest Makers of One Quality Handkerchiefs

Factories, Passaic, N. J., Ellenville, N. Y.

Made and Guaranteed by Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., Makers of Handkerchiefs

and the containers of certain of respondent's said handkerchiefs bore and now bear the words "laundered soft" or "laundered soft finish."

The statements hereinabove set out serve as representations on the part of respondent to customers, prospective customers, and to the public generally, that respondent is a manufacturer of handkerchiefs and operates factories at Passaic, N. J., and Ellenville, N. Y., and that its said handkerchiefs are laundered by respondent before packaging for resale.

PAR. 5. Respondent did not and does not now make or manufacture its said handkerchiefs. It did not and does not now actually own and operate, or directly and absolutely control a plant or factory at Passaic, N. J., or Ellenville, N. Y., or elsewhere in which said handkerchiefs are made or manufactured. Respondent sells, and fills its orders with, handkerchiefs made or manufactured by others and then purchased by it. Respondent's handkerchiefs are not laundered before packaging so as to be properly represented as such.

PAR. 6. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail purchasers of handkerchiefs have expressed, and have, a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of handkerchiefs being purchased. Such purchasers believe that they secure closer prices, superior quality, and other advantages, in dealing direct with the manufacturer rather than a jobber, packager, selling agency, or middleman, or anyone else.

PAR. 7. Many of the respondent's competitors who distribute and sell handkerchiefs do not manufacture the handkerchiefs sold by them and do not in any way represent that they are the manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 8. The false and misleading representations made by the respondent as set out in paragraph 4 hereof were and are calculated to, and had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true. As a consequence of such mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced as aforesaid, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of the handkerchiefs sold by the respondent with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing handkerchiefs, who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 9. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on November 22, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of said respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts, executed by the respondent and W. T. Kelley, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto; and that the Commission might proceed upon said statement of facts to make and issue its report stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it might draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of arguments or the filing of briefs. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, answer, and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., a corporation, was organized in January 1936, under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business is located at 309 Fifth Avenue, in the Borough of Manhattan, city, county and State of New York. The name of the respondent corporation was changed to "Universal Handkerchief Co., Inc." by the filing of a certificate of change of name by the respondent in the office of the secretary of state of the State of New York, on the 24th day of January 1938.

PAR. 2. Respondent has been for more than 1 year last past engaged in the business of selling and distributing packaged handkerchiefs in interstate commerce. In the operation of its said business, respondent causes said handkerchiefs, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of New York to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in the States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent has at all times maintained a course of trade in said handkerchiefs, sold and distributed by it in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent does a substantial business in both interstate and intrastate commerce. Said handkerchiefs are sold by the respondent through its salesmen throughout the United States to jobbers and respondent makes no direct sales to retailers or ultimate purchasers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is now, and has been for more than 1 year, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with firms, partnerships, and individuals also engaged in the business of selling and distributing handkerchiefs in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course of the operation of said business, respondent, until the change of its name, used in its corporate name the letters "Mfg." It has heretofore caused said corporate name containing the letters "Mfg." to be displayed on its letterheads, display cartons, invoices, order blanks, and other printed matter circulated throughout the various States of the United States to customers and prospective customers. Certain of said advertising matter also carried and now carries statements such as:

*Largest Manufacturers of Packaged Handkerchiefs in the United States
World's Largest Makers of One Quality Handkerchiefs*

Factories, Passaic, N. J., Ellenville, N. Y.

Made and Guaranteed by Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., Makers of Handkerchiefs.

Certain of said containers and advertising matter also bore, and now bear, the words "laundered soft" or "laundered soft finish."

The statements hereinabove set out serve as representations on the part of respondent to customers, prospective customers and to the public generally, that respondent is a manufacturer of handkerchiefs; that it operates factories at Passaic, N. J., and Ellenville, N. Y., or elsewhere; that it is the largest manufacturer of packaged handkerchiefs in the United States; that it is the world's largest maker of one quality handkerchiefs, and that the handkerchiefs sold by it are laundered before packaging for resale.

PAR. 5. Respondent did not, and does not, own a factory, nor does it operate or control any factories producing or manufacturing handkerchiefs. Respondent purchases cotton cloth from various cotton textile factories, which cloth it then delivers to certain handkerchief manufacturers who manufacture said cloth into handkerchiefs according to specifications submitted by respondent as to splitting, cutting, the number of stitches making the hem, and dampening. The finished handkerchiefs thus delivered to the respondent by the manufacturers are then packaged by respondent in its own place of business, for resale and shipment to jobbers of dry goods, in various parts of the United States.

PAR. 6. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail purchasers of handkerchiefs have expressed, and have, a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of handkerchiefs being purchased. Such purchasers believe that they secure closer prices, superior quality, and other advantages, in dealing direct with the manufacturer rather than a jobber, packager, selling agency, or middleman, or anyone else.

PAR. 7. There are, among respondent's competitors, many vendors and distributors of packaged handkerchiefs who do not manufacture the handkerchiefs sold by them, and who do not in any way represent that they are the manufacturers thereof, and who do not represent themselves to be the largest manufacturers of packaged handkerchiefs in the United States, and the world's largest makers of one quality handkerchiefs, and that their handkerchiefs are laundered before packaging.

PAR. 8. The misleading and deceptive representations made by the respondent as set out herein had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true. As a consequence of such mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced as aforesaid, a substantial number of the public have purchased a considerable volume of the handkerchiefs sold by the respondent with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors also engaged in the business of selling and distributing handkerchiefs, who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, and the agreed stipulation of facts entered into between the respondent herein, and W. T. Kelley, chief counsel for the Commission, which provides, among other things, that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon the respondent herein findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon and an order disposing of the proceeding, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Universal Handkerchief Mfg. Co., Inc., a corporation, its agents, representatives, and employees in connection with the sale or offering for sale of handkerchiefs in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the letters "Mfg." in its corporate or trade name, or through the use of any words or terms of similar import or meaning, or through any other means or device, or in any other manner, that said respondent is the manufacturer of the products sold by it, unless or until such time as said respondent actually owns, operates, or directly and absolutely controls a manufacturing plant wherein said products are manufactured by it.

2. Representing that the handkerchiefs sold and distributed by respondent are "laundered soft" or "laundered soft finish" until and unless the handkerchiefs sold and distributed by respondent are in fact laundered.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent shall, within 60 days from the date of the service upon it of this order, file with this Commission a report in writing, setting forth the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
NELLE K. WING, TRADING AS THE DEPEW CHEMICAL COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3350. Complaint, Mar. 4, 1938—Decision, Apr. 25, 1938

Where an individual engaged in distribution and sale of certain preparations for the eye, under designation "Sano-See A" and "Sano-See B," or "Doctor DePew's Famous Eye Prescription"; in advertising same in newspapers, periodicals, and trade journals of general circulation throughout the United States, and through printed matter, advertising folders, letters, and literature circulated to customers and prospective customers throughout the several States—

(a) Represented that said preparations would preserve or improve eyesight and keep the eyes in a clean or healthy condition, and that they might be safely used by everyone, through such statements as "* * * promotes the circulation of the blood," "* * * an eye treatment and should not be compared with eye washes," "* * * occasional use * * * will keep the eyes in a clean, healthy condition," etc., "Every member of the family may safely use," etc., "The best known home treatment for almost all eye complaints"; and

(b) Represented that said preparations were remedies or competent and effective treatments for or would cure or promote the cure of ulcer of the cornea, trachoma, dimmed vision, spots before the eyes, and a number of others; Facts being that the two products involved, long known to science in the treatment of mild cases of inflammation of the eye, when not caused by or associated with any systemic or diseased condition, would not improve or preserve eyesight and were not beneficial in treatment of all or any of the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions named, but might actually aggravate same and cause permanent injury, and through their tendency to improve, temporarily, inflamed appearance without actually affecting causes thereof, bring about dangerous delay in the prompt consultation of an oculist for treatment of a serious disease;

With tendency and capacity to mislead substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true, and that said products would in truth accomplish results claimed, and with effect of thereby inducing a number of the purchasing public to buy substantial volume of said products, and of unfairly diverting trade from competitors, many of whom manufacture, distribute, and sell various products designed, intended, and sold to cure, relieve, or treat various diseases, ailments, etc., of the human eye, as hereinabove set forth, and who do not in any way misrepresent the quality or character of their respective products or their effectiveness when used;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Nelle K. Wing, trading and doing business as The DePew Chemical Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Nelle K. Wing, is an individual doing business under the trade name of The DePew Chemical Company. Respondent's principal place of business is located at 2417 Linwood Boulevard, Kansas City, Mo. Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in the business of distributing and selling in commerce, as herein later set out, certain medical products designated as "Sano-See A" and "Sano-See B," or "Dr. DePew's Famous Eye Prescription."

PAR. 2. Said respondent being engaged in business as aforesaid causes said medical products when sold to be transported from her office and principal place of business in the State of Missouri to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Missouri and in the District of Columbia. There is now and has been at all times mentioned herein a course of trade in commerce in said products so prepared, distributed, and sold by the respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of her said business, the respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with corporations and firms likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling eye medicines and eye washes or other similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course of the operation of said business and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase said medicinal products, respondent has caused advertising to be inserted in newspapers, periodicals, and trade journals of general circulation throughout the United States; has printed and circulated to customers and prospective customers throughout the several States, through the use of the United States mails and otherwise, advertising folders, letters and literature. In all said advertisements and advertising literature the respondent has made such statements as the following:

Sano-See promotes the circulation of the blood. It helps scavengers carry away the destroyed cells and other foreign matter; it helps the builders repair the structure; it brings the warriors into action to ward off or drive out disease.

If you suffer from dim or blurred vision, granulated or inflamed lids, spots, scums, smarting, burning, or watering—just your name and address will bring you, all charges prepaid, a $1.00 treatment of Dr. DePew's Famous Eye Prescription. No matter how long you have suffered * * * try this treatment without risk.

Your eye sight, it's preservation and improvement through the use of Sano-See.

Sano-See is an eye treatment and should not be compared with eye washes * * *

The occasional use of Sano-See will keep the eyes in a clean, healthy condition and help them to retain their natural strength and sparkle.

Every member of the family may safely use Sano-See. The best known home treatment for almost all eye complaints.

It simply assists nature by stimulation of the blood supply and by its soothing, healing and eliminating properties of overcoming the conditions that are the cause of so large a proportion of eye troubles * * * It helps overcome these conditions and to eliminate from the eye the conditions that cause them.

All of said statements, together with many similar statements, appearing in respondent's advertising literature purport to be descriptive of respondent's products and their effectiveness in treating or curing many of the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions of the human eye. In all of her advertising literature respondent represents, through statements and representations hereinabove set out and other statements of similar import, nature, and effect that her various products, to wit: Sano-See A and Sano-See B, or Dr. DePew's Famous Eye Prescription, will prevent and cure, or are beneficial in the treatment of many of the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions which may be present or exist in the human eye.

Respondent further advertises that her products above referred to will preserve and improve eyesight; that the use of Sano-See will keep the eyes in a clean, healthy condition, and help them retain their natural strength and sparkle.

Among the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions named by the respondent in said advertising literature as diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions which the use of said above-named products will prevent and cure, or are beneficial in the treatment of, are the following: Ulcer of the cornea, iritis, ptergium, pterygium, interstitial keratitis, trachoma, dimmed or blurred vision, granulated eyelids, spots before the eyes, and smarting, burning, or watering of the eyes.

PAR. 5. The representations made by respondent with respect to the nature and effect of her products when used are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact, the use of respondent's products will not improve or preserve eyesight, nor are they beneficial in the treatment of all or any, of the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions hereinabove named. On the contrary, these products may actually aggravate some of the diseases hereinbefore named, and cause permanent injury to the eyes. In addition, these products may have a tendency to improve temporarily an inflamed appearance of the eye without actually affecting the causes of said inflammation and thus cause dangerous delay in the proper consultation of an oculist for the treatment of a serious disease. Both of respondent's products are simple remedies, long known to science in the treatment of mild cases of inflammation of the eyelids. Sano-See A is a solution of zine sulphate in water, and Sano-See B is a solution in water of boric acid, adrenalin solution, and glycerine.

PAR. 6. There are among respondent's competitors many who manufacture, distribute, and sell various products designed, intended, and sold for the use of curing, relieving, or treating the various diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions of the human eye hereinbefore named and who do not in any way misrepresent the quality or character of their respective products or their effectiveness when used.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in designating or describing her products and the effectiveness of said products for curing, treating, or relieving the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions of the human eye hereinabove named, in offering for sale and selling her products were and are calculated to, and have, a tendency and capacity to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true and that said products will in truth accomplish the results claimed. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the acts and representations of the respondent as hereinabove detailed, a number of the purchasing public has purchased a substantial volume of the respondent's products with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors referred to in paragraph 6 hereof. As a result thereof injury has been done and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been and are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid and constitute unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on the 4th day of March 1938, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Nelle K. Wing, trading as The DePew Chemical Company, charging her with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On April 1, 1938, the respondent filed her answer, in which answer she admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that she waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon her findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the matter, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

Where an individual engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of two chemical automotive compounds, under designations "Hytense" and "Hypower," purportedly as gasoline power intensifier and saver, and as motor compression seal; in soliciting sale of said products through pamphlets and advertisements in newspapers and periodicals, and through descriptive circulars—

- (a) Represented that said "Hytense" was a gasoline saver and that it reduced motor knock, increased combustion and mileage, removed and prevented carbon, and lubricated the upper cylinders, and did not contain anything harmful to the motor, and would not form sediment, and included in advertising thereof facsimile of a so-called "Certificate of Merit" covering product in question, and set forth possible earnings of agents in sale thereof as "up to 400 percent profit"; and
- (b) Represented that said "Hypower" saved or rebuilt the motor, lasted 5,000 to 10,000 miles, sealed the rings, increased compression, reduced oil pumping, and saved oil and gasoline and rebuilt worn or scored cylinder walls and pistons, and reduced friction and wear, and likewise referred, in support of said representations, to said so-called "Certificate of Merit";

Facts being claims for aforesaid respective products were false in that they did not accomplish said various results, and possible earnings of agents as above set forth were fictitious and greatly exaggerated; and

Facts being giver of said certificates or seals of approval did not operate a laboratory for purpose of making tests of manufactured articles, and did not and had not made such tests, and said certificates were false and misleading in all essential respects, in that they were not result of scientific, independent, and impartial tests by competent persons, but were prepared

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs., and Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents Curtiss and Newman, respectively, have been, and are, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, is an individual trading under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs., having his office and principal place of business at 1126 North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill. The respondent, Morris E. Newman, is an individual trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, having his office and principal place of business at 2024 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

PAR. 2. Respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, sole trader under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs., for more than 2 years last past has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia of certain chemical automotive compounds, one designated as "Hytense," and represented as a gasoline power intensifier and saver, and a second called "Hypower" and represented as a motor compression seal.

Said respondent causes said products, when sold, to be shipped and transported in interstate commerce from his place of business in the State of Illinois, to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois. Respondent has at all times named herein maintained a course of trade and commerce in said products, "Hytense" and "Hypower," between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent Curtiss, in the course and conduct of his said business, has been, for more than 2 years last past, and is now, engaged in competition with other individuals, corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of his said business, as hereinabove described, respondent Curtiss in soliciting the sale of, and in selling his products, "Hytense" and "Hypower," by pamphlets, advertisements inserted in newspapers, periodicals, and magazines, descriptive circulars, and otherwise, has made, and is now making, extravagant, deceptive, misleading, and false statements and representations regarding the value, efficacy and effect of his said products and the results that are achieved by using them. Among such statements used by said respondent in the advertising of his product "Hytense" in periodicals and magazines are the following:

MYSTERIOUS NEW CHEMICAL INCREASES MILEAGE

Approved by Automobile Test Labs. Tests show this secret combination of high gasoline intensifying, carbon removing, and lubricating chemicals increases auto mileage tremendously—makes high powered quick starting non-carbon fuel. Guaranteed trial offer. 500% profit. Write today.

CHEMICAL PRODUCTS MFG., 1126 N. Clark, Chicago

In circulars, pamphlets, and other advertising matter sent to prospective agents and purchasers, respondent Curtiss expands and particularizes the said claims made in his periodical advertising, stating in effect that "Hytense" is a gasoline saver, will reduce motor knock and gasoline consumption, increase combustion and mileage, removes and prevents carbon formation, lubricates upper cylinders, and is guaranteed not to contain anything harmful to motors, and that it will not form sediment. There is included in said circulars, pamphlets and other advertising matter a facsimile of a so-called "Certificate of Merit" issued by said respondent Newman, trading under the name and style of Automotive Test Laboratories of America which is set forth with more particularity in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact the representations of said respondent Curtiss, and each of them, and said respondent's advertisements and representations in pamphlets, circulars, newspapers, magazines, and other advertising matter, concerning the product "Hytense," as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, are extravagant, misleading and false in the following respects:

Said product "Hytense" will not increase power or mileage; does not remove or prevent the formation of carbon; does not produce an antiknock gasoline; does produce and leave a sediment, and by the production of sulphuric acid may injure the engine. Further, the claims of possible earnings of agents, "500 percent profit," are fictitious and greatly exaggerated.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of his said business, as hereinabove described, said respondent Curtiss in soliciting the sale of and in selling his said product "Hypower," a vermiculite composition made up in a tablet form intended for placement in the cylinders through the spark plug openings, makes the following representations in the label on said product:

HYPOWER—SAVE THE SURFACE—SAVE THE MOTOR
LASTS 10,000 MILES

Increases compression.

Seals the rings, reduces oil pumping, saves oil and gasoline.

Rebuilds worn or scored cylinder walls and pistons.

Stops piston slaps.

Increases power.

Reduces friction and wear.

In advertisements in various specialty salesmen magazines and in circulars distributed to agents and prospective purchasers, representations are made by said respondent Curtiss as follows:

Hypower—It Rebuilds Your Motor While you Drive.

One Treatment Lasts 5,000 to 10,000 miles. Strange new sensational product offers you up to 400% profit.

A list of 10 claimed benefits to be derived from the use of "Hypower" is set out in said advertisements covering the said claims made on the label described herein, and also that the product contains nothing to harm the motor. All said advertisements feature and emphasize a "Certificate of Merit" issued by the said respondent Newman trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories, in approval of claims made for the product, as set forth with more particularity in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact the representations of said respondent Curtiss in pamphlets, circulars, newspapers, magazines and other advertising matter, and each of them, as set forth in paragraph 6 hereof, concerning the product "Hypower," are extravagant, false, and misleading in the following respects:

Said product "Hypower" will not save the motor or rebuild the motor. It will not last 5,000 to 10,000 miles. It does not increase compression, seal the rings, reduce oil pumping, or save oil and gasoline. It does not rebuild worn or scored cylinder walls and pistons or stop piston slaps. It does not increase power or reduce friction and wear. The claims of possible earnings of agents—"up to 400 percent profit," are greatly exaggerated.

PAR. 8. Said respondent Morris E. Newman, trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, is now and for more than 2 years last past has been, engaged in the business of preparing, printing and selling so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" to manufacturers of various products to be used by said manufacturers in advertising their products sold in interstate commerce.

Respondent causes his said "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval," when sold, to be transported from his place of business in the State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois.

In the course and conduct of his said business said respondent Newman represents to said manufacturers generally that the said Automotive Test Laboratories of America is a nationally recognized institution engaged in the business of testing various manufactured products submitted to it by its customers when in truth and in fact said respondent does not operate a laboratory for the purpose of making tests of manufactured articles nor does he make such tests.

PAR. 9. Said respondent Curtiss and said respondent Newman have entered into a combination and conspiracy with each other to falsely and misleadingly advertise and misrepresent the said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" manufactured and sold by the said respondent Curtiss in his said business as aforesaid. Pursuant to said conspiracy, said respondents have performed the following acts, to wit:

Respondent Newman, in the name of the said Automotive Test Laboratories of America, issued a so-called "Certificate of Merit" for the said product "Hytense" manufactured by said respondent Curtiss certifying that the said product "Hytense" had been tested in the laboratory of the said Automotive Test Laboratories of America and was thereby awarded the official "Seal of Approval." Said certificate contained the following statement:

Hytense, a gasoline intensifying, carbon preventive and heating resisting cylinder lubricant to increase combustion, lubrication, mileage and power. Provides easier starting in cold weather. Contains no acids, will not harm the motor is soluble in gasoline, kerosene, or distillate. No sediment.

Said respondent Newman, in the name of the Automotive Test Laboratories of America, also issued a so-called "Certificate of Merit" for the said product "Hypower" manufactured by said respondent Curtiss, certifying that said product "Hypower" had been tested in the laboratories of the said Automotive Test Laboratories of America, and had been awarded the official "Seal of Approval." Said certificate contained the following statement:

HYPOWER, for use in motor and placed in same through spark plug openings. Stops oil pumping by the rings, seals the rings and valves, stops piston slap, increases compression and provides a builder for worn pistons and cylinders. Contains nothing to harm the motor or any part of same.

Said "Certificates of Merit" are false and misleading in all essential respects in that they are not the result of scientific, independent, and impartial tests by competent persons, but were prepared from false and misleading information furnished by said respondent Curtiss to said respondent Newman for the purpose of assisting and aiding said respondent Curtiss in falsely and misleadingly advertising and promoting the sale of his said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" manufactured and sold by him as aforesaid.

Said respondent Curtiss applied for, received, and used the said "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" for said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" in the sale of said products, as hereinbefore described, with full knowledge of the fact that said respondent Newman did not make an independent, impartial, and scientific test of said products.

PAR. 10. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and misrepresentations made by said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mfrs., and respondent Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America in the manner described herein in paragraphs 4 to 9 inclusive, in designating and describing the said products "Hytense" and "Hypower," and the results to be obtained from the use of said products in offering for sale and selling said products, have had, and still have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said statements and representations are true. As a direct consequence of said mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by said acts and representations of said respondents, as hereinabove set out, a substantial number of the purchasing public have purchased said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to said respondent Curtiss from competitors engaged in the business of distributing or selling products designed for similar usage who truthfully advertise and represent the properties and effects of their respective products and the results that may be expected to be obtained from the purchase or use thereof. As a result thereof, injury has been, and is now being, done by the said respondents to commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 11. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondents have been, and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and said respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said acts, practices and representations constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on February 9, 1938, issued, and subsequently served, its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, individually and as sole trader under the name and style of Chemical Products, Mnfrs. and Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act.

After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of separate answers by the respondents, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted the motion of the respondents, Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs. to withdraw his original answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence, and all other intervening procedure, which substituted answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission, a similar answer having been theretofore filed in the office of the Commission by the respondent, Morris E. Newman, individually, and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America; and thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission, on the said complaint and the several answers and substitute answers of the respondents, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, is an individual trading under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs., having his office and principal place of business at 1126 North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill. The respondent, Morris E. Newman, is an individual trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, having his office and principal place of business at 2024 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

PAR. 2. Respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, sole trader under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs., for more than 2 years last past has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia of certain chemical automotive compounds, one designated as "Hytense," and represented as a gasoline power intensifier and saver, and a second called "Hypower" and represented as a motor compression seal.

Said respondent causes said products, when sold, to be shipped and transported in interstate commerce from his place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois. Respondent has at all times named herein maintained a course of trade and commerce in said products, "Hytense" and "Hypower," between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, in the course and conduct of his said business, has been, for more than 2 years last past, and is now, engaged in competition with other individuals, corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of his said business, as hereinabove described, respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling his products, "Hytense" and "Hypower," by pamphlets, advertisements inserted in newspapers, periodicals, and magazines, descriptive circulars, and otherwise, has made, and is now making, extravagant, deceptive, misleading, and false statements and representations regarding the value, efficacy, and effect of his said products and the results that are achieved by using them. Among such statements used by said respondent in the advertising of his product "Hytense" in periodicals and magazines are the following:

MYSTERIOUS NEW CHEMICAL INCREASES MILEAGE

Approved by Automobile Test Labs. Tests show this secret combination of high gasoline intensifying, carbon removing, and lubricating chemicals increases auto mileage tremendously—makes high powered quick starting non-carbon fuel. Guaranteed trial offer. 500% profit. Write today.

CHEMICAL PRODUCTS MFG., 1126 N. Clark, Chicago

In circulars, pamphlets, and other advertising matter sent to prospective agents and purchasers, respondent Ralph C. Curtiss expands and particularizes the said claims made in his periodical advertising, stating in effect that "Hytense" is a gasoline saver, will reduce motor knock and gasoline consumption, increase combustion and mileage, remove and prevent carbon formation, lubricate upper cylinders, and is guaranteed not to contain anything harmful to motors, and that it will not form sediment. There is included in said circulars, pamphlets, and other advertising matter a facsimile of a so-called "Certificate of Merit" issued by said respondent Morris E. Newman, trading under the name and style of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, which is set forth with more particularity in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact the representations of said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, and each of them, and said respondent's advertisements and representations in pamphlets, circulars, newspapers, magazines, and other advertising matter, concerning the product "Hytense," as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, are extravagant, misleading, and false in the following respects:

Said product "Hytense" will not increase power or mileage; does not remove or prevent the formation of carbon; does not produce an antiknock gasoline; does produce and leave a sediment, and by the production of sulphuric acid may injure the engine. The claims of possible earnings of agents are fictitious and greatly exaggerated.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of his said business, as hereinabove described, said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, in soliciting the sale of and in selling his said product "Hypower," a vermiculite composition made up in a tablet form intended for placement in the cylinders through the spark plug openings, makes the following representations in the label on said product:

HYPOWER—SAVE THE SURFACE—SAVE THE MOTOR
LASTS 10,000 MILES

- Increases compression.
- Seals the the rings, reduces oil pumping, saves oil and gasoline.
- Rebuilds worn or scored cylinder walls and pistons.
- Stops piston slaps.
- Increases power.
- Reduces friction and wear.

In advertisements in various specialty salesmen magazines and in circulars distributed to agents and prospective purchasers, representations are made by said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss as follows:

- Hypower—It Rebuilds Your Motor While you Drive.
- One Treatment Lasts 5,000 to 10,000 miles.
- Strange new sensational product offers you up to 400% profit.

A list of 10 claimed benefits to be derived from the use of "Hypower" is set out in said advertisements covering the said claims made on the label described herein, and also that the product contains nothing to harm the motor. All said advertisements feature and emphasize a "Certificate of Merit" issued by the said respondent Morris E. Newman, trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories, in approval of claims made for the product, as set forth with more particularity in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact the representations of said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss in pamphlets, circulars, newspapers, magazines, and other advertising matter, and each of them, as set forth in paragraph 6 hereof, concerning the product "Hypower," are extravagant, false, and misleading in the following respects:

Said product "Hypower" will not save the motor or rebuild the motor. It will not last 5,000 to 10,000 miles. It does not increase compression, seal the rings, reduce oil pumping, or save oil and gasoline. It does not rebuild worn or scored cylinder walls and pistons or stop piston slaps. It does not increase power or reduce friction and wear. The claims of possible earnings of agents—"up to 400% profit," are greatly exaggerated.

PAR. 8. Said respondent Morris E. Newman, trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, is now, and for more than 2 years last past has been, engaged in the business of preparing, printing, and selling so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" to manufacturers of various products to be used by said manufacturers in advertising their products sold in interstate commerce.

Findings

Respondent causes his said "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval," when sold, to be transported from his place of business in the State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois.

In the course and conduct of his said business said respondent Morris E. Newman represents to said manufacturers generally that the said Automotive Test Laboratories of America is a nationally recognized institution engaged in the business of testing various manufactured products submitted to it by its customers, when in truth and in fact said respondent does not operate a laboratory for the purpose of making tests of manufactured articles, nor does he make such tests.

PAR. 9. Said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss and said respondent Morris E. Newman have entered into a combination and conspiracy with each other to falsely and misleadingly advertise and misrepresent the said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" manufactured and sold by the said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss in his said business as aforesaid. Pursuant to said conspiracy, said respondents have performed the following acts, to wit:

Respondent Morris E. Newman, in the name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, issued a so-called "Certificate of Merit" for the said product "Hytense," manufactured by said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, certifying that the said product "Hytense" had been tested in the laboratory of said Automotive Test Laboratories of America, and was thereby awarded the official "Seal of Approval." Said certificate contained the following statement:

Hytense, a gasoline intensifying, carbon preventive and heating resisting cylinder lubricant to increase combustion, lubrication, mileage, and power. Provides easier starting in cold weather. Contains no acids, will not harm the motor, is a soluble in gasoline, kerosene, or distillate. No sediment.

Said respondent Morris E. Newman, in the name of the Automotive Test Laboratories of America, also issued a so-called "Certificate of Merit" for the said product "Hypower" manufactured by said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, certifying that said product "Hypower" had been tested in the laboratories of the said Automotive Test Laboratories of America, and had been awarded the official "Seal of Approval." Said certificate contained the following statement:

HYPOWER, for use in motor and placed in same through spark plug openings. Stops oil pumping by the rings, seals the rings and valves, stops piston slap, increases compression and provides a builder for worn pistons and cylinders. Contains nothing to harm the motor or any part of same.

Said "Certificates of Merit" are false and misleading in all essential respects in that they are not the result of scientific, independent, and impartial tests by competent persons, but were prepared from false and misleading information furnished by said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss to said respondent Morris E. Newman for the purpose of assisting and aiding said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss in falsely and misleadingly advertising and promoting the sale of his said products "Hytense" and "Hypower," manufactured and sold by him as aforesaid.

Said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss applied for, received, and used the said "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" for said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" in the sale of said products, as hereinbefore described, with full knowledge of the fact that said respondent Morris E. Newman did not make an independent, impartial, and scientific test of said products.

PAR. 10. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and misrepresentations made by said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss, alias C. A. Davis, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Chemical Products, Mnfrs., and respondent Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, in the manner described herein in paragraphs 4 to 9 inclusive, in designating and describing the said products "Hytense" and "Hypower," and the results to be obtained from the use of said products in offering for sale and selling said products, have had, and still have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said statements and representations are true. As a direct consequence of said mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by said acts and representations of said respondents, as hereinabove set out, a substantial number of the purchasing public have purchased said products "Hytense" and "Hypower" with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to said respondent Ralph C. Curtiss from competitors engaged in the business of distributing or selling products designed for similar usage who truthfully advertise and represent the properties and effects of their respective products and the results that may be expected to be obtained from the purchase or use thereof. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being, done by the said respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents Ralph C. Curtiss and Morris E. Newman have been, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and said respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

IN THE MATTER OF

WALDO W. TOWNSLEY, DOING BUSINESS AS SERVAL-SYSTEM

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 3197. Complaint, Aug. 6, 1937—Decision, Apr. 29, 1938

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of bookkeeping system known as "Serval-System," designed primarily for farmers and consisting of a card system for items of expense and income, a pocket adding machine, a cardboard file and a cabinet, together with instructions for use, and price-marked to sell for $7.50, regular price, or $5.75, special price; in connection with a plan of selling said systems in group lots to so-called distributors or territorial supervisors, usually farmers, for resale to ultimate purchaser, under contracts covering territory assigned to supervisor, maximum number of systems he undertook to purchase, and total amount of cash deposit paid on number of sets contracted for—

- (a) Represented, directly and through agents, that said systems were easy to sell, and that he had sold a large number thereof in the community and displayed signed orders of a number of farmers with whom prospect was acquainted, and bank deposit slips indicating sizeable accounts in local banks as result of sale of systems locally, and falsely represented that local bankers and business men had endorsed said system and, in support of such representation, displayed one of systems containing advertisements from a number of the local bankers and business men; facts being systems were not easy to sell, sales made to farmers in prospect's community, evidenced as aforesaid, were not made at either the regular or special price as prospect was led to believe, but at substantially lower prices, and bank deposits, evidenced as aforesaid, were not made as a result of such sales but from funds obtained by him from other sources, and said systems were not thus endorsed;
- (b) Represented that he was in search of a local distributor to supervise sales of such systems in certain territories and that supervisor was not required to put up any cash or required to do any selling, and that he would organize and train sales forces to do the actual selling, and that all supervisor was required to do was to take in the money, pay the salesmen their commissions, deduct his own share, and send the balance to him; facts being any member of any community could become his local distributor if he had sufficient capital to make required advance payment on required number of systems when contract was signed, at which time supervisor was required to advance a cash deposit of 50 cents on each system contracted for, on basis of estimate as to probable number that could be sold in designated territory, he did not actually grant any exclusive territory if other sales could be made to other distributors therein, and representations that supervisor was not required to do any actual selling, etc., as above set forth, were false, and said individual, once contract was signed and cash deposit or initial payment specified made, left community, without training any sales force, never to return, and so-called supervisor was left to dispose of said systems in any manner possible; and

(c) Represented that a new plan had been devised whereby prospect could be paid a greater commission on each sale of system than was formerly the case, but that in order to make same possible, he, the vendor, had been required to make cash advance of 50 cents per set to printing company to have specified number of said systems printed at one time and placed in their warehouse subject to call, and that it would therefore be necessary for supervisor to reimburse him, the said vendor, for such cash advance made, amounting, at very least, to $402, and at most, usually, to $1,206, and that after contract had been undertaken and cash deposit paid over, supervisor was entitled to order from printer number of sets contracted for, upon the payment of the additional sum of $1.70 per set to the printer; facts being that while said individual did have contract with printing company for printing sets, as orders were placed, he made no cash advance or deposit thereon, and printer's bill for printing sets was paid by supervisor when he received same;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and with effect of misleading and deceiving substantial number of purchasing public into erroneous beliefs that such representations were true and into purchasing a substantial number of said sets, acting in such mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by said false and misleading statements and representations, and with effect that trade was unfairly diverted to him from competitors engaged in sale and distribution, or in manufacture, sale and distribution of bookkeeping sets, card indexing systems, and cost accounting systems in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. DeWitt T. Puckett for the Commission.

Mr. Waldo P. Johnson, of Kansas City, Mo., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Waldo W. Townsley, an individual, doing business as Serval-System, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Waldo W. Townsley, is an individual doing business as the Serval-System. His business address is P. O. Box #3005 Kansas City, Mo. His home address is 627 South Dearborn Street, Iowa City, Iowa.

Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of a bookkeeping system to the purchasing public located in various States of the United States. Respondent now causes, and at all times since he has been in said business has caused, his said products when sold by him, to be shipped from Kansas City, Mo., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States. There is now, and has been at all times since respondent has been in business, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in bookkeeping systems between and among the various States of the United States.

Respondent is now, and at all times mentioned herein has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of bookkeeping systems in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of a bookkeeping system known as the "Serval-System." It is designed primarily for farmers' use and consists of a card system for items of expense and income, a pocket adding machine, a cardboard file and a cabinet, together with instructions for using the system. The system is price-marked to sell for $7.50, regular price, or for $5.75, special price. Until about the beginning of 1936, the respondent sold said system direct to the user; however, during the past year or more, he has been selling said system to so-called distributors or territorial supervisors for resale to the ultimate purchaser. With these said territorial supervisors, respondent enters into a written contract which specifies, among other things, the territory assigned to the supervisor, the maximum number of Serval Systems allotted to the supervisor which he is privileged to demand upon the payment of the balance of the purchase price, and the total amount of the cash deposit paid by said supervisor on said allotment of Serval sets at the time the contract is signed and the sale is made.

PAR. 3. Respondent's sales method is to contact a prospective distributor or territorial supervisor, usually a farmer, and convince said prospect that the Serval-System is something every farmer should have. He then proceeds to sell the said prospect on the idea that it is a proposition out of which he can make some money in his spare time.

As an inducement to prospects to enter into the said written contract to become respondent's distributors or territorial supervisors and to purchase a specified number of the Serval-Systems, the respondent, in person or through his agents, has represented, and still represents, to prospects, among other things, that the Serval-Systems are easy to sell and that he has sold a large number of said systems in the community, displaying to the prospect the signed orders of a number of farmers with whom the prospect is acquainted and also displaying to the prospect bank deposit slips indicating sizeable bank accounts in the local banks as a result of the sale of the systems locally. Respondent also represents to the prospect that the local bankers and business men have indorsed the Serval-System and in support of this representation, respondent displays to the prospect one of the systems containing advertisements from a number of the local bankers and business men.

In truth and in fact, the said Serval-Systems are not easy to sell and the sales made to farmers in the prospect's community, evidenced by signed orders displayed to the prospect, are not made at the regular or special marked price, as the prospect is led to believe, but at prices substantially lower than said regular or special marked price, although the prospect is not apprized of that fact. The bank deposits, evidenced by deposit slips exhibited to the said prospect, are not made as a result of sales of the Serval-System, as the prospect is led to believe, but are made from funds obtained by respondent from other sources. Furthermore, the representation that the system has been indorsed by local bankers and business men is untrue.

PAR. 4. As a further inducement to said prospects to become respondent's distributors, respondent has represented and still represents to prospects, that he is in search of a local representative or distributor to supervise sales of the Serval-Systems in certain territories; that said supervisor is not required to put up any cash and is not required to do any actual selling; that the respondent will organize and train sales forces to do the actual selling and all the supervisor is required to do is take in the money, pay the salesmen their commissions, take out his share, and send the balance to the respondent.

The representation that respondent is in search of a local distributor or representative for a designated territory or community is untrue, in that any member of any community can become respondent's representative or supervisor if he has capital sufficient to make the advance payment on the required number of respondent's Serval-Systems at the time the contract is signed. The representations that the supervisor is not required to do any actual selling and that the respondent will organize and train sales forces is untrue. Once the contract between respondent and the supervisor is signed and the amount of cash deposit or initial payment specified in the contract is paid over to the respondent, said respondent leaves the community without training any sales force, never to return, and the so-called supervisor is left to dispose of the Serval-Systems in any manner possible. The representation that the supervisor is not required to put up any cash is untrue. At the time the aforementioned contract is signed between respondent and his territorial supervisor, said supervisor is required to advance a cash deposit of 50 cents on each Serval-System contracted for, the number of systems being arrived at by estimating the probable number that can be sold in the designated territory.

PAR. 5. As the final step in respondent's sales method and as a further inducement to the prospect to sign the aforementioned contract and purchase a specified number of the Serval-Systems, the respondent calls on the prospect a second time and represents to him that a new plan has been devised whereby the prospect can be paid a greater commission on each sale of the Serval-Systems, but that in order to make this new plan possible respondent has been required to make a cash advance to a printing company to have a specified number of the Serval-Systems made up at one time and placed in their warehouse, subject to call from the supervisor, and it will therefore be necessary for the said supervisor to reimburse the respondent for the said cash advance made. The minimum amount to be advanced is $402, and the maximum amount is usually $1,206. After the contract is entered into and the cash deposit is paid over to the respondent, the said supervisor is then entitled to order from the printer the number of sets called for in his said contract upon the payment of the additional sum of $1.70 per set.

In truth and in fact, respondent's representation that he has contracted with the printer for a large number of Serval sets upon which he has made a cash advance of 50 cents per set is untrue. Respondent has a contract with the printing company to make up the sets as orders are placed for them, but respondent makes no cash advance or deposit upon the sets. The printer is paid for said sets when they are shipped out to the supervisors.

PAR. 6. The use by respondent of the representations set out above has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled a substantial number of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said bookkeeping sets as a result of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of bookkeeping sets, card indexing systems, and cost accounting systems, who do not misrepresent the manner in which sales of their commodities are made to the public or the prices at which their products are sold, and who do not, in any manner, publish claims in promoting the sale of their products, which are untrue, who likewise sell and distribute their products among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors and as a result thereof, substantial injury is being, and has been done, by respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 7. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on August 6, 1937, issued, and on August 14, 1937, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Waldo W. Townsley, an individual, doing business as Serval-System, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, no briefs having been filed and no oral argument having been requested, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Waldo W. Townsley, is an individual doing business under the trade name Serval-System. His business address is P. O. Box No. 3005, Kansas City, Mo. His home address is 627 South Dearborn Street, Iowa City, Iowa.

Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of a bookkeeping system to the purchasing public located in various States of the United States. Respondent now causes, and at all times since he has been in said business has caused, his said products, when sold by him, to be shipped from Kansas City, Mo., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Missouri. There is now, and has been at all times since respondent has been in business, a course of trade and commerce by the respondent in such bookkeeping systems between and among the various States of the United States.

Respondent is now, and at all times mentioned herein has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with partnerships and corporations likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of bookkeeping systems in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of a bookkeeping system known as a "Serval-System." It is designed primarily for farmers' uses and consists of a card system for items of expense and income, a pocket adding machine, a cardboard file and a cabinet, together with instructions for using the system. The system is price-marked to sell for $7.50, regular price, or for $5.75, special price. Until about the beginning of 1936, the respondent sold said system direct to the user. During the past year or more, he has been selling, and is now selling, said system in group lots to so-called distributors or territorial supervisors for resale to the ultimate purchaser. With these said territorial supervisors, respondent enters into written contracts which specify, among other things, the territory assigned to the supervisor, the maximum number of Serval-Systems he agrees to purchase, and the total amount of the cash deposit paid by said supervisor on the number of Serval sets contracted for.

PAR. 3. Respondent's sales method is to contact a prospective distributor or territorial supervisor, usually a farmer, and convince said prospect that the Serval-System is something every farmer should have. He then proceeds to sell the prospect on the idea that it is a proposition out of which he can make some money in his spare time.

As an inducement to prospects to enter into the said written contracts to become respondent's distributors or territorial supervisors and to purchase a specified number of the Serval-Systems, the respondent, in person and through his agents, has represented, and still represents, to prospects, among other things, that the Serval-Systems are easy to sell and that he has sold a large number of them in the community, displaying to the prospect the signed orders of a number of farmers with whom the prospect is acquainted and also displaying bank deposit slips indicating sizeable bank accounts in the local banks as a result of the sale of the systems locally.

Respondent also represents to the prospect that the local bankers and business men have indorsed the Serval-System and in support of this representation, respondent displays one of the systems containing advertisements from a number of the local bankers and business men.

As a further inducement to said prospects to become respondent's distributors, respondent has represented, and still represents, that he is in search of a local representative or distributor to supervise sales of the Serval-Systems in certain territories; that said supervisor is not required to put up any cash and is not required to do any actual selling; but that the respondent will organize and train sales forces to do the actual selling and all the supervisor is required to do is take in the money, pay the salesmen their commissions, take out his share, and send the balance to the respondent.

As a final step in respondent's sales method and as a further inducement to the prospect to sign the aforementioned contract and purchase a specified number of the Serval-Systems, the respondent represents to the prospect that a new plan has been devised whereby the prospect can be paid a greater commission on each sale of the Serval-System than was formerly the case but that in order to make this new plan possible respondent has been required to make a cash advance of 50 cents per set to a printing company to have a specified number of the Serval-Systems printed at one time and placed in their warehouse, subject to call from the supervisor, and it will therefore be necessary for the said supervisor to reimburse the respondent for the said cash advance made. The minimum amount to be advanced is $402, and the maximum amount is usually $1,206. After the contract is entered into and the cash deposit is paid over to the respondent, the said supervisor is then entitled to order from the printer the number of sets called for in his said contract upon the payment of the additional sum of $1.70 per set to the printer.

PAR. 4. The said Serval-Systems are not easy to sell and the sales made to farmers in the prospect's community, evidenced by signed orders displayed to the prospect, are not made at either the regular or the special price, as the prospect is led to believe, but at prices substantially lower than either said regular or special price, although the prospect is not apprized of that fact. The bank deposits, evidenced by deposit slips exhibited to the said prospect, are not made as a result of sales of the Serval-System in a nearby community, as the prospect is led to believe, but are made from funds obtained by respondent from other sources. Furthermore, the representation that the system has been indorsed by local bankers and business men is untrue.

The representation that respondent is in search of a local distributor or representative for a designated territory or community is untrue, in that any member of any community can become respondent's representative or supervisor if he has capital sufficient to make the advance payment on the required number of respondent's Serval-Systems at the time the contract is signed. Respondent does not actually grant any exclusive territory to such distributors, if other sales can be made to other distributors in the same territory. The representations that the supervisor is not required to do any actual selling and that the respondent will organize and train sales forces are untrue. Once the contract between respondent and the supervisor is signed and the amount of cash deposit or initial payment specified in the contract is paid over to the respondent, said respondent leaves the community without training any sales force, never to return, and the so-called supervisor is left to dispose of the Serval-Systems in any manner possible. The representation that the supervisor is not required to put up any cash is untrue. At the time the aforementioned contract is signed between respondent and his territorial supervisor, said supervisor is required to advance a cash deposit of 50 cents on each Serval-System contracted for, the number of systems being arrived at by estimating the probable number that can be sold in the designated territory.

The respondent's representation that he has contracted with the printer for a large number of Serval sets upon which he has made a cash advance of 50 cents per set is untrue. Respondent has a contract with the printing company to make up the sets as orders are placed for them, but respondent makes no cash advance or deposit upon the sets. The printer's bill for printing the sets is paid by the supervisors when they receive the sets.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations described above has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled a substantial number of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations are true. Acting under such mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading statements and representations above referred to, the public has purchased a substantial number of said bookkeeping sets with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from his competitors likewise engaged in the sale and distribution, and in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, of bookkeeping sets, card indexing systems, and cost accounting systems, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Order

26 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Waldo W. Townsley, an individual, doing business under the trade name Serval-System, are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on March 21, 1938, whereby respondent admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Waldo W. Townsley, an individual, doing business under the trade name Serval-System, or under any other trade name, his agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a book-keeping system now designated a Serval-System, whether sold under that name or under any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, in any manner whatsoever:

1. That said bookkeeping system is easy to sell;
2. That large numbers of sets of said system have been sold in any given community unless such is the fact;
3. That the system is indorsed by local banks and business concerns;
4. That the respondent is in search of a local representative or territorial distributor to supervise the sale of said systems in a given territory;
5. That no cash outlay is required by so-called local representatives or territorial supervisors;
6. That the so-called local representatives or territorial distributors are required to do no selling; and that their only duty is to handle the money, supervise and pay the salesmen;
7. That respondent will organize and train sales forces to sell the sets under the supervision of a so-called local representative or territorial supervisor;

1223

Order

8. That greater commissions are obtainable if a cash advance sufficient to cover cost of printing the systems contracted for is made by the so-called local representative or territorial distributor.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondent Newman, has been, and is, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The said respondent, Morris E. Newman, is an individual trading under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, having his office and principal place of business in the rear of Greer College, an automotive trade school located at 2024 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Said respondent, for more than two years last past, has been, and is now, engaged in the business of preparing, printing and selling so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" to manufacturers of various products to be used by said manufacturers in advertising their products sold in interstate commerce. Said respondent causes his said "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval," when sold, to be transported from his said place of business in the State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in the several States of the United States other than the State of Illinois.

Said respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, has been, for more than two years last past, and is now, in competition with other individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of testing automotive and other products and devices and in preparing, printing and selling printed matter and labels containing approval of products, after they have been scientifically tested, to manufacturers of various products to be used by said manufacturers in advertising their products sold in interstate commerce.

PAR. 2. In the course of his said business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms and corporations to purchase his said "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" to be used in advertising their respective products, respondent makes the following representations in letters sent to prospective customers:

Would you be interested in learning how our organization could help your men sell your automotive product with reduced sales resistance? And this at very small cost to you. Countless manufacturers and sales organizations are now using our "Certificate of Merit" and "Seal of Approval." How about you?

The enclosed facsimile of our "Certificate of Merit" and "Seal of Approval" should interest you, as it has over three hundred nationally known manufacturers of automotive products. Bolster up your sales by breaking down sales resistance; give your men, agents, salesmen something to talk about, instill confidence in the product through an unbiased testimonial; the result will be additional business.

Can refer you to anyone of over hundreds of satisfied users who will gladly attest to our claims.

You should be interested in learning how more than 400 nationally known automotive manufacturers are using our "Certificate of Merit" and "Seal of Approval" as an aid to better merchandising. Recognized throughout the United States by the vast automotive trade, sales resistance can best be met through the service offered you, and your men will welcome such cooperation.

Furthermore, said respondent in issuing said "Certificates of Merit" habitually and customarily types in said Certificates the claims made by the various manufacturers and not the result of scientific, impartial tests conducted by respondent. Respondent habitually and customarily solicits and accepts suggestions made by the various manufacturers as to the contents and wording of said "Certificates of Merit," and makes changes in the Certificates to correspond with the wishes and requests of said manufacturers; without investigation of, or regard to, the truth or falsity of the statements.

PAR. 3. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business engages in the following false and misleading representations, acts and practices:

1. Uses the word "Laboratories" in his trade name, which appears in his trade name, which appears in his letterheads, advertising cards and correspondence, when in truth and in fact he does not own or operate any laboratories but only occupies office space in the rear of said Greer College; carries on his letterheads, lithographed pictures of scientists and scientific equipment to imply and suggest that he has a laboratory, when in fact he does not have a laboratory and does not employ any technicians.

2. Represents that he makes independent, impartial and scientific tests of products submitted to him for tests in a laboratory containing apparatus necessary for testing products involved in each case, when in truth and in fact he does not make independent, impartial or scientific tests, but issues fictitious "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" and mails the same to individuals and firms throughout the United States.

3. Refers to himself in his correspondence with prospective customers, and in other advertising matter, as a "safety engineer," when in truth and in fact he is not an engineer of any kind.

4. Refers to himself in his correspondence with prospective customers, and in other advertising matter, as the president of his organization, when in fact his organization is nothing more than a trade name used by respondent as an individual and is not a corporation or incorporated; and refers to his laboratory and engineering department, and represents that he has in his employ laboratory engineers and equipment; makes a practice of having various individuals sign the so-called "Certificates of Merit" as "Laboratory Engineers," when in truth and in fact respondent does not have an engineering department, laboratory or laboratory engineers.

5. Lists in his advertising and letterheads a Consultant Advisory Board of eleven men, with their respective official titles, whom he holds out and represents to be assistants and consultants to assist respondent in conducting tests, when in truth and in fact some of them have never given consent to the use of their names, and none of them have ever received anything to test.

6. Represents in correspondence with prospective customers, and in his advertising matter, that his organization is the only one of its kind in the country, and is comparable to the Good Housekeeping Institute, and is recognized today as the adopted standard in the automotive, chemical and accessories field; uses on personal cards and letterheads the picture of the seven story building belonging to the Greer College with the words "7 floors of modern test automotive equipment," when in truth and in fact said respondent's organization has no standing whatever in the field of testing automotive products and accessories, and respondent's organization occupies only one small room of the building belonging to Greer College and his apparatus consists of a filing cabinet and a few pieces of furniture.

7. Represents in correspondence with prospective customers that he receives on an average from 200 to 300 letters of inquiry per month from manufacturers of some products, when as a matter of fact respondent never received any such number of inquiries per month.

8. Represents in correspondence with prospective customers that he has received several inquiries relative to the products he is seeking to test, when as a matter of fact no such inquiries have been received.

PAR. 4. The use by said respondent of each and all of the false and misleading statements, representations and practices in the manner hereinabove described in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this complaint has had, and still has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive manufacturers and distributors of automotive products and others regarding the status, character and organization of said respondent, and the value, truth, impartiality and scientific character of the "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" issued by said respondent. As a direct consequence of the said false, misleading statements and representations and the deceptive acts and practices of said respondent, as hereinabove set forth, and the erroneous and mistaken beliefs induced thereby, manufacturers and distributors of automotive products and others have been induced to have their products tested by respondent and to purchase the so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" issued by him to their detriment and injury, as well as to the detriment and injury of the purchasing public, and to the detriment and injury of competitors who do not and will not use such false and fictitious certificates, and to the injury of legitimate, scientific testing laboratories engaged in the business of testing automotive and other products and devices, and in the sale of printed matter containing approval of products after they have been scientifically tested to manufacturers of various products used by said manufacturers in advertising their products sold in interstate commerce.

The issuance by respondent of his false and misleading so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" furnishes dishonest customers with vehicles for misbranding and falsely and misleadingly advertising articles moving in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and thus to deceive and exploit the purchasing public, and the use of such deceptive, misleading, and false certificates has tended to result and has resulted, in unfairly diverting trade to the respondent from competitors engaged in the testing of automotive and other products who truthfully advertise their laboratories and equipment and the value of their tests and certificates, and who conduct their tests in an impartial and scientific manner; and also in unfairly diverting trade from manufacturers and distributors of automotive and other products who will not and do not use false and fictitious certificates to competitors who will, and do, use the so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" issued by the respondent.

As a result thereof injury has been, and is now being done, by the respondent to commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. The foregoing said acts, practices and representations constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on February 9, 1938 issued, and on February 10, 1938 served, its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance and service of said complaint, the respondent filed an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and stated that he waived hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint and the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission on March 18, 1938. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

Furthermore, said respondent in issuing said "Certificates of Merit," habitually and customarily types in said Certificates the claims made by the various manufacturers and not the result of scientific, impartial tests conducted by respondent. Respondent habitually and customarily solicits and accepts suggestions made by the various manufacturers as to the contents and wording of said "Certificates of Merit," and makes changes in the Certificates to correspond with the wishes and requests of said manufacturers, without investigation of, or regard to, the truth or falsity of the statements.

5. Lists in his advertising and letterheads a Consultant Advisory Board of 11 men, with their respective official titles, whom he holds out and represents to be assistants and consultants to assist respondent in conducting tests, when in truth and in fact some of them have never given consent to the use of their names, and none of them have ever received anything to test.

Order

The issuance by respondent of his false and misleading so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" furnishes dishonest customers with vehicles for misbranding and falsely and misleadingly advertising articles moving in commerce between and among the various states of the United States and thus to deceive and exploit the purchasing public, and the use of such deceptive, misleading and false certificates has tended to result, and has resulted, in unfairly diverting trade to the respondent from competitors engaged in the testing of automotive and other products who truthfully advertise their laboratories and equipment and the value of their tests and certificates, and who conduct their tests in an impartial and scientific manner; and also in unfairly diverting trade from manufacturers and distributors of automotive and other products who will not and do not use false and fictitious certificates to competitors who will, and do, use the so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" issued by the respondent.

As a result thereof substantial injury has been, and is now being done, by the respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The foregoing acts and practices of the respondent, Morris E. Newman, individually and as sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test Laboratories of America, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and states that he waives hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent Morris E. Newman, individually and as a sole trader under the style and name of Automotive Test

Laboratories of America, or under any other trade name, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" or in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a so-called testing service for automotive or other products or writings purporting to evidence the result of tests, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the respondent makes independent, impartial, and scientific tests of automotive and other products submitted to him for tests, unless such is the fact;

2. That the respondent is a safety engineer and president of an organization operating or controlling a laboratory or engineering department equipped with the necessary apparatus, and manned by trained scientists and technicians, for testing automotive and other products, unless such are the facts;

3. That respondent has a Consultant Advisory Board of 11 men to assist him in conducting tests; that he receives on an average from 200 to 300 letters of inquiry per month from manufacturers of automotive and other products; and that he has received several inquiries relative to the products he is seeking to test, unless such are the facts;

4. That respondent's organization is the only one of its kind in the country, and is comparable to the Good Housekeeping Institute, and is recognized today as the adopted standard in the automotive, chemical, and accessories field, unless such are the facts;

It is further ordered, That the respondent do forthwith cease and desist from:

(a) Using on his letterheads, personal cards, or otherwise the word "Laboratories," pictures of purported scientists and scientific equipment, or the picture of the seven-story building occupied by Greer College, either alone or in conjunction with the words "7 floors of modern test automotive equipment," unless and until respondent in fact conducts a scientific laboratory and employs trained scientists and technicians, and unless and until respondent has some actual connection with the said Greer College as owner or employee or otherwise through which he actually uses all the facilities and equipment of said Greer College in said business.

(b) Preparing and issuing to sellers of automotive or other products in said commerce so-called "Certificates of Merit" and "Seals of Approval" or other instruments in writing purportedly showing the result of tests conducted by the respondent, unless and until respondent owns, operates or controls a laboratory and employs trained scientists and technicians and is equipped to test and does test such automotive and other products in the manner and with the methods used by recognized scientific laboratories.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that West Penn Distilling Co., Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its office and principal place of business in the city of New Kensington, in said State. It is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been, engaged in the business of a wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than 1 year last past has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than 1 year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined in Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the production of gin does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on November 9, 1935, issued, and on November 12, 1935, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, West Penn Distilling Co., Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its office and principal place of business in the city of New Kensington, in said State. For more than 1 year prior to May 22, 1936, and subsequent to the issuance of the complaint herein, the respondent was engaged in business as a wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in a course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it caused its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there was a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, was redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits did not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined in Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had, and still has, a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that such whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages were manufactured by it through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash. As a matter of fact, respondent was not a distiller, did not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the production of gin did not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent did not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous beverages were manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There were and are now among the competitors of respondent, engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, were then and are now calculated to have and do have a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent were manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and were then and are now calculated to have and do have the capacity and tendency to induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not, by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are distillers.

PAR. 6. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "distilled gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, West Penn Distilling Co., Inc., are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondent, West Penn Distilling Co., Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced, by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place, or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Central Pattern & Foundry Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Central Pattern & Foundry Company, is now and for several years last past, has been a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Chicago and State aforesaid.

Complaint

It has been for several years last past and now is engaged in the production of aluminum and other castings and in the sale and distribution of such products in commerce between the State of Illinois and the various other States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

It causes its products when sold to be transported from said place of business to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and in the District of Columbia.

Such purchasers consist of manufacturers of various kinds who use aluminum in the fabrication of their particular products, foundries of various kinds, and others selling castings of various metals.

In the course and conduct of its business, the said respondent, Central Pattern & Foundry Company has been, and now is, in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of aluminum and other castings.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, Central Pattern & Foundry Company, in soliciting orders for its aforesaid products has distributed circular letters among customers and prospective customers, including customers of its competitors hereinafter described in paragraph 3 hereof, wherein it has offered and offers for sale clean, smooth aluminum castings at a price as low as 23 cents per pound using only "new ingot metals."

In truth and in fact, the words "new ingot metals" have signified and meant for many years to the trade, and now signify and mean to it, that castings so described have been, were and are, made from virgin ingots. The products offered for sale and sold by respondent, described and designated as "new ingot metals," have not been and are not made from virgin ingots, have not been and are not "new ingot metals" as understood by the trade or the consuming public, but have been and are made from secondary or so-called No. 2 of grade No. 12 remelted metals and alloys.

PAR. 3. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce in competition with respondent, new ingot metals or castings made from virgin ingots, or virgin ingot metals and also from secondary or so-called No. 2 of grade No. 12 remelted metals and alloys who truthfully advertise, describe, and represent such products.

PAR. 4. The practice of respondent described in paragraph 2 hereof has had and has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, has misled and deceived and does mislead and deceive the trade and purchasing public into the belief that the aforesaid representation and statement of respondent in paragraph 2 hereof regarding the use exclusively in its aluminum castings of "new ingot metals" has been and is true and into the purchase of respondent's said products in reliance on such erroneous belief.

The aforesaid practice of the respondent also has had and has the capacity and tendency to and does, unfairly divert trade to respondent from its competitors mentioned in paragraph 3 hereof who truthfully represent, advertise, and describe their products, and as a result thereof, respondent has been and is doing substantial injury to such competitors in the course of such competition.

PAR. 5. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission, on October 21, 1936, issued, and on October 23, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Central Pattern & Foundry Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it. No testimony or other evidence was introduced by the respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint. The said testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint (no brief having been filed by respondent and no oral argument having been requested); and the Commission having duly considered the matter, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Central Pattern & Foundry Company, is an Illinois corporation organized in March 1929. Its principal office and place of business are at 3737 South Sacramento Avenue, Chicago, Ill. It is engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of aluminum, brass and bronze castings, and wood and metal patterns, which are sold to manufacturers generally throughout the United States. Respondent's products are manufactured from ingot metals made to specifications, virgin ingots, gates, sprues, and mismachined or scrapped castings. Respondent's dollar volume of business for 1936 was approximately three-quarters of a million dollars.

When orders are received for respondent's said products, it causes them to be shipped from its said place of business in Chicago, Ill., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois. The respondent now maintains, and for several years last past has maintained, a course of trade in said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

At all times since respondent entered into said business, it has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution or in the sale and distribution, of aluminum and other metal castings in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The ore from which aluminum is taken is called bauxite. It is dug out of the ground, usually by open mining. After bauxite is mined, it is reduced to alumina, which is generally done by a chemical process. The alumina is then reduced to aluminum by an electrolytic process. The aluminum is then remelted and made into convenient shapes and forms which are called ingots.

Aluminum is a metal, and is divided generally in two classifications, viz., primary or virgin aluminum and secondary aluminum. Primary or virgin aluminum is the metal obtained by an electrolytic treatment of alumina and is the best quality aluminum. It is generally higher in price than secondary aluminum and comes nearer to meeting specifications than does secondary aluminum. Secondary aluminum is that which has lost its original identity as to source, and is obtained by remelting used parts and waste, such as gates, sprues or mismachined, and scrapped castings. Secondary aluminum usually contains impurities, such as copper and zinc, and lacks the elasticity of the primary metal.

Both classifications of aluminum are used in the manufacture of aluminum castings. Castings are generally manufactured according to specifications, such as the S. A. E. or A. S. T. M. specifications. In some instances, the purchaser specifies that only primary or virgin metal be used. In other instances, however, the purchaser does not specify which classification of the metal is to be used, but leaves the matter to the discretion of the manufacturer.

Conclusion

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as described herein, the respondent distributed a circular letter among customers and prospective customers, in which it offered for sale "clean, smooth aluminum castings at a price as low as 23 cents per pound, using only new ingot metals." Respondent used virgin ingots, misrun or mismachined, and scrapped castings, in the fabrication of its said products.

There is no specific classification in the castings industry such as "new ingot metals." However, based upon the testimony of foundrymen, sales managers, salesmen, purchasing agents, and executive officers of manufacturers of castings of various kinds, the Commission finds that the expression "new ingot metals," when used to describe aluminum and other castings means virgin or unused metals, and that castings so described are manufactured from only primary or virgin metal.

PAR. 4. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein, in describing its aluminum castings, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead, and does mislead, members of the trade and a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that respondent uses only primary or virgin metal in the fabrication of its products, which are represented as "new ingot metals," and as a result of such erroneous belief, into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's said products.

There are, among the competitors of respondent as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of aluminum and other castings who do not misrepresent the type or classification of metal used in the fabrication of their products, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute aluminum and other castings in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been, and is now being diverted unfairly to respondent from said competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Central Pattern & Foundry Company, are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

IN THE MATTER OF
COLONIAL DAMES, INC., AND COLONIAL DAMES COMPANY, LTD.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3104. Complaint, June 7, 1937¹—Decision, May 16, 1938

Where two corporations engaged in manufacture and sale and sale and distribution, from Hollywood, of a certain line of preparations for use in the care, treatment, and beautification of the skin—

- (a) Included words "Colonial Dames" in their respective corporate names and made use thereof in listing, identifying and describing their said businesses, and in trade names of said various preparations and made use thereof in identifying and describing their various preparations in advertisements in newspapers, pamphlets, radio broadcasts, etc., and as a trade name on the packages and containers in which sold, and referred to the "Head," "Chief Chemist," or "Famous Beauty Consultant" of their "Colonial Dames Laboratories," in connection with sale of their said products, and more particularly in connection with radio advertising thereof, and in conveying to prospective purchasers among the consuming public various messages, creeds, and representations;

Notwithstanding fact their said preparations were not produced, approved, sponsored or recommended by, or in any manner connected with or related to, any of several patriotic, historical and social organizations with national or more or less wide-spread ramifications and chapters, and history and membership running back for many years, and so named or identified, and none of which had ever engaged in manufacture or sale of cosmetics or any other preparation or product of commerce;

With effect of misleading and deceiving a substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said preparations were produced, approved, sponsored, endorsed, or recommended by one or more of such societies; and

- (b) Represented in advertising their said products in newspapers, circulated in various parts of the United States and through pamphlets, etc., and radio broadcasts, that the "Beauty Wash," included in their aforesaid line and sold under said trade name, would have an instant beautifying effect on the skin, and that it worked like magic in banishing stubborn blackheads, etc., and, while not a chemical bleach, would gently bleach the skin with whitening action derived from the natural elements from which made;

Facts being it did not have said effects or tone sallow skins and effect was merely to cleanse and not to bleach, and it was not the answer to stubborn blackheads, etc.;

- (c) Represented, as aforesaid, that the "Massage Cream," included in its said line and sold under aforesaid designation, was a superlative tissue cream and quickly banished, by reason of almond oil content, all traces of dryness and sluggishness, increased circulation of fresh, pure blood, etc., and thereby rebuilt and youthified from within and thus worked with nature instead of against it, etc.;

Facts being chief benefits derived from use of said preparation were due to massage rather than to action of its ingredients, and it did not banish all traces of dryness, increase circulation, rebuild, or youthify from within, etc.; and

(d) Represented that its "Beautifier" remained always on the surface and prevented pore clogging and actually builded beauty into the skin, and that its said "Beauty Aids" acted on a different principle from most cosmetics, through working according to accepted laws of nature instead of attempting the impossible feat of rubbing in youth and beauty;

Facts being preparation in question was beneficial chiefly as a powder base and did not prevent pore clogging nor "actually build beauty into the skin," nor act on a different principle as above claimed;

With effect of misleading a substantial portion of purchasing public and causing prospective purchasers to believe that said false and misleading representations were true and that said preparation had the efficacy and usefulness in the care, treatment, and beautification of the skin represented and implied by them, and of causing a substantial portion of purchasing public to buy their said preparations in aforesaid erroneous beliefs, and of thereby unlawfully and unfairly diverting trade to them from competitors engaged in sale of preparations recommended for use in connection with care, treatment and beautification of the skin, and truthfully and accurately represented:

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Marshall Morgan for the Commission.

Alvord & Alvord, of Washington, D. C., for respondents.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Colonial Dames, Inc., and Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., corporations, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Colonial Dames, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, but having its principal office and place of business located at 4652 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif. Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business also located at 4652 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif. Said companies, located at the same Hollywood address, as above stated, are owned and controlled by the same parties in interest, who direct the activities and control the policies of each. Said Colonial Dames, Inc., and Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., hereinafter referred to as respondents, are now, and for several years last past have been engaged in the manufacture, in their laboratory, and in the sale and distribution of certain preparations for use in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin, and cause said preparations, when sold, to be transported from their said place of business in the city of Hollywood, State of California, into and across the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia, to the purchasers thereof located at various points in said several States other than the State of California, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, the respondents are and have been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia with other corporations, and with associations, partnerships and individuals engaged in said commerce in the sale and distribution of preparations for the care, treatment and beautification of the skin. Among the competitors of the respondents in said commerce are many who truthfully represent the efficacy and usefulness of their products when used in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin and who do not engage in the acts, practices and methods used and employed by the respondents as herein-after alleged.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business of respondents, the words "Colonial Dames" appear as a part of the corporate name of each company and are uniformly employed and used by respondents in advertising in newspapers, pamphlets, booklets, circulars, and in radio broadcasts as a trade name to indicate and identify the business conducted by respondents, and in describing the qualities and characteristics of their said preparations, and as a trade-mark on packages and containers to brand and identify the goods sold by them.

The business place of respondents located at 4652 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif., as aforesaid, is listed in the telephone directory as "Colonial Dames Corporation," and in connection therewith a local establishment for the sale of respondents' cosmetic products, designated as "Colonial Dames Charm Shop," is operated at the same address. The "corporation" and the "Charm Shop," located at the same address, as aforesaid, are listed under the same telephone number. Cosmetic products of the respondents are labeled as sold by "Colonial Dames Co." and the words "Colonial Dames" coupled with a design depicting two dancing figures in colonial costume appear as a trade mark on products sold by respondents in commerce.

PAR. 3. Respondents in the course and conduct of their business in said commerce, as aforesaid, refer to their preparations generally as Colonial Dames Beauty Aids, and sell, among others, preparations designated as Colonial Dames Beauty Wash, Colonial Dames Massage Cream, and Colonial Dames Beautifier, and advertise said products in newspapers circulated in various parts of the United States, through pamphlets, booklets and circulars distributed among prospective purchasers in various parts of the United States and through radio broadcasts, in all of which they make and cause to be made many statements concerning the efficacy and usefulness of their said preparations in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin.

Among the statements so made, distributed and circulated and typical of those used by the respondents in offering for sale and selling their said preparations in said commerce are the following:

Colonial Dames "Beauty Wash." Frankly, it is a luxury—but luxury or not, you will delight in its instant beautifying effect on your skin. It works magic in banishing stubborn blackheads, toning sallow skins, whitening and refining texture. Leaves the skin immaculately clean and just like velvet!

While Colonial Dames Beauty Wash does gently bleach the skin, please remember that it is NOT a chemical bleach. Its gentle whitening action is derived solely from the natural elements from which it is made.

Beauty Wash provides the answer to stubborn blackheads, sallow and discolored skin problems! * * * just try it, and see how quickly pores yield all clogging impurities * * * Almond meal and buttermilk were beauty standbys in our grandmother's day. They are combined with science's latest innovations to form this dainty, effective beauty aid.

They find that a five-minute nightly facial with Colonial Dames Massage Cream quickly banishes all traces of dryness or sluggishness, leaving the skin freshly stimulated and vibrant. Made with almond oil, it is * * * a superlative tissue cream.

Colonial Dames Massage Cream and other exquisite Colonial Dames preparations occupy the spotlight of favor in film circles.

Colonial Dames Massage Cream lubricates, softens and increases the circulation of fresh pure blood to every tiniest cell and tissue of the skin, thereby rebuilding and youthifying from WITHIN * * * Thus, you may be sure of a fresh, youthful skin by working WITH nature, instead of AGAINST.

Colonial Dames Massage Cream, for instance, is used nightly as cleanser and tissue cream. A definite improvement in skin texture is apparent even after a few applications.

Colonial Dames Massage Cream cleanses far more thoroughly than most of the so-called cleansing creams, because it is made with almond oil, and as a tissue cream, it works perfectly with Nature to rejuvenate the inner tissues. Applied according to the ritual of beauty, it is more than a skin food—more than a cleanser—it is TRUE SKIN REJUVENATOR.

It is the purpose of Colonial Dames Massage Cream and the nightly facial treatment to reestablish normal circulation so that EVERY tiny cell is adequately nourished.

Complaint

26 F. T. C.

Colonial Dames Massage Cream is more than a cleanser—it is a TISSUE CREAM as well.

Colonial Dames Massage Cream drives directly to the cause of all beauty imperfections and rids the skin of those enemies. The results are direct and immediate.

COLONIAL DAMES MASSAGE CREAM reactivates the tissues from WITHIN, stimulates cell structure, restores lubricating oils, exercises the muscles and brings a surge of rich red blood to supply needed nourishment and purge out toxic impurities the natural way.

COLONIAL DAMES MASSAGE CREAM CORRECTS AND PREVENTS faulty skin texture by REMOVING THE CAUSE! Physicians prescribe this fine cream as a super-cleanser for the correction of stubborn blemishes! * * * COLONIAL DAMES MASSAGE CREAM is a cosmetic NECESSITY.

It (Colonial Dames Massage Cream) is a complete, normalizing treatment—and complexion blemishes, which are abnormal, quickly disappear.

Also, because Colonial Dames Beautifier remains always on the surface, it prevents pore clogging.

Colonial Dames Beautifier actually builds beauty into the skin.

Colonial Dames Beauty Aids today combine these same fine ingredients, unspoiled by modern byproducts or commercialism.

Effective because they act on a different principle from most cosmetics. Instead of attempting the impossible feat of “rubbing in youth and beauty” entirely from the outside, Colonial Dames Beauty Aids work according to the accepted laws of nature.

In further connection with the sale of their said products, respondents, particularly in connection with radio advertising, convey to prospective purchasers among the consuming public various messages, creeds and representations from the “head,” “chief chemist” or “famous beauty consultant” of the “Colonial Dames Laboratories.”

PAR. 4. Respondents, in the course and conduct of their business in said commerce, and by the means and in the manner aforesaid, represent and imply that their said preparation “Colonial Dames Beauty Wash” when used as directed has an instant beautifying effect on the skin; that “it works like magic” in banishing stubborn blackheads, toning sallow skins, and in whitening the skin and refining its texture; that it is a competent and effective corrective or treatment in eliminating stubborn blackheads and restoring the natural color to sallow and discolored skins, and in removing quickly all clogging impurities from the pores of the skin.

In truth and in fact, the preparation “Colonial Dames Beauty Wash,” when used as directed by the respondents or otherwise, does not have an instant beautifying effect on the skin; it does not work like magic or otherwise in banishing stubborn blackheads, toning sallow skins and in whitening the skin and refining its texture; it is not a competent and effective corrective or treatment in eliminating stubborn blackheads, restoring natural color to sallow and discolored skins and in removing quickly all clogged impurities from the pores of the skin.

PAR. 5. Respondents, in the course and conduct of their business in said commerce, and by means and in the manner aforesaid, represent and imply that their said preparation "Colonial Dames Massage Cream," when used as directed, will quickly banish all traces of dryness and sluggishness and leave the skin freshly stimulated and vibrant; that it increases the circulation of fresh pure blood to every tiniest cell and tissue of the skin, rebuilding and youthifying from within; that it will reestablish normal circulation so that every tiny cell is adequately nourished; that it drives directly to the cause of all beauty imperfections and rids the skin of those "enemies," producing direct and immediate results; that it corrects and prevents faulty skin texture by removing the cause; that it is a complete, normalizing treatment and causes complexion blemishes quickly to disappear; that it is a tissue cream and rejuvenates the inner tissues and is a true skin rejuvenator; that it stimulates cell structure, reactivates tissues from within, and brings a surge of rich red blood to supply needed nourishment; that it is a super cleanser for the correction of stubborn blemishes of the skin; purges out toxic impurities in a natural way, and is a cosmetic necessity; that it is composed in part of almond oil and that almond oil is superior to other vegetable oils for use in a massage cream, and that because of its almond oil content said preparation is superior to most massage creams.

In truth and in fact, the preparation "Colonial Dames Massage Cream," when used as directed by the respondents or otherwise, will not quickly banish all traces of dryness and sluggishness and leave the skin freshly stimulated and vibrant; it will not increase the circulation of fresh pure blood to every tiniest cell and tissue of the skin and rebuild and youthify from within; it will not reestablish normal circulation so that every tiny cell is adequately nourished; it does not drive directly to the cause of all beauty imperfections and rid the skin of those "enemies" and does not produce direct and immediate results; it does not correct and prevent faulty skin texture by removing the cause thereof; it does not cause complexion blemishes quickly to disappear; it is not a tissue cream and does not rejuvenate the inner tissues and it is not a true skin rejuvenator; it does not stimulate cell structure, reactivate tissues from within or bring a surge of rich red blood to supply needed nourishment; it is not a super cleanser for the correction of stubborn blemishes of the skin; it does not purge out toxic impurities in a natural way nor is it a cosmetic necessity; almond oil constitutes only a small portion of the total oils used in said preparation and it is not a superior oil for use in such creams nor does it render said preparation superior to most massage creams.

PAR. 6. Respondents in the course and conduct of their business in said commerce, and by the means and in the manner aforesaid, represent and imply that their said preparation "Colonial Dames Beautifier," when used as directed, remains always on the surface of the skin and thereby prevents the pores of the skin from becoming clogged, and that it actually builds beauty into the skin. Respondents represent and imply that their other preparations, referred to as "Colonial Dames Beauty Aids," contain the same fine ingredients found in said beauty wash, massage cream, and beautifier, and that they act on a principle different from most cosmetics, and work according to the accepted laws of nature.

In truth and in fact, said preparation "Colonial Dames Beautifier," when used as directed by the respondents or otherwise, does not remain always on the surface of the skin, does not prevent the pores of the skin from becoming clogged and does not actually build beauty into the skin; nor do said "Colonial Dames Beauty Aids" act on a principle different from most cosmetics, nor do they work according to the accepted laws of nature, PAR. 7. On or about April 8, 1891, there was organized in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., a patriotic, educational and historical society under the name "The Pennsylvania Society of the Colonial Dames of America". This society was formed for the purposes, among others, of collecting and preserving manuscripts, relics, etc., of colonial days, the restoration and preservation of historical buildings, the collection and diffusion of information concerning the colonies and colonial days, the stimulation of patriotism, and to secure the organization of similar societies with like purposes and aims in the several States of the United States.

Since the organization of the Pennsylvania Society of the Colonial Dames of America, as aforesaid, similar societies with the same purposes and aims have been organized in, and incorporated under the laws of several of the States of the United States and the District of Columbia. There now exist forty-one such State societies, each of which is incorporated under the laws of the respective State where organized, and one such society incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia. These forty-two societies have formed a federation under the name "The National Society of the Colonial Dames of America," which has and maintains offices and headquarters in the City of Washington in the District of Columbia from which are directed the general activities of the various member State societies.

During the year 1891 there was organized in the State of New York a patriotic and historical society under the name "The Colonial Dames of America." This society is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York and has chapters located in many of the cities of the several States of the United States.

For many years there has been organized and in existence in the United States a patriotic and historical society under the name "The Colonial Dames of the Seventeenth Century."

The purposes and aims of the society "The Colonial Dames of America" and of the society "The Colonial Dames of the Seventeenth Century" are generally of the same nature as those of the member State societies of the federation "The National Society of the Colonial Dames of America."

The membership of the aforementioned societies is limited and is confined to women, the majority of whom are active and prominent in national, State, and municipal social and civic affairs.

For more than 20 years last past, because of the activities of these several societies, more particularly the member societies of the federation "The National Societies of the Colonial Dames of America," and of the activities and prominence of their members, in carrying out the purposes and aims of the said societies, the words "Colonial Dames" have been associated by the public generally with these societies to such an extent that their use in connection with articles of trade and commerce, to identify, designate and describe such articles, causes the public generally to believe that such articles, so identified, designated, and described, are produced, approved, sponsored, endorsed, or recommended by one or more such societies.

Respondent's said preparations are not produced, approved, sponsored, endorsed or recommended by, or in any manner connected with or related to, any of said societies.

PAR. 8. The representations and implications of the respondents as aforesaid concerning the efficacy and usefulness of their said preparations in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin are false and misleading and have had, and do have, the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public and cause prospective purchasers to believe that said false and misleading representations and implications are true, and that said preparations have the efficacy and usefulness in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin as represented and implied by the respondents. The use by the respondents of the words "Colonial Dames" in their respective corporate names, and in identifying and designating the business conducted by them and in describing their said preparations in advertisements, in newspapers, pamphlets, books, circulars and in radio broadcasts, and as a trade-mark on the packages and containers in which said preparations are sold, as hereinabove alleged, has a tendency and capacity to, and does, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public and cause prospective purchasers erroneously to believe that said preparations are produced, approved, sponsored, endorsed, or recommended by one or more of the societies hereinabove described. Said erroneous beliefs cause a substantial portion of the purchasing public to purchase respondents' said preparations, thereby unlawfully and unfairly diverting trade to the respondents from their said competitors who truthfully represent their products, to the substantial injury of said competitors in said commerce and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 9. The acts, practices, and methods of the respondents, as hereinabove alleged, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' said competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission on April 12, 1937, issued and served its original complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., a corporation stated to be trading as Colonial Dames, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act, and thereafter on June 7, 1937, issued and served its amended complaint upon the respondents, Colonial Dames, Inc., and Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., corporations, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaints and the filing of respondents' respective answers thereto, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts filed and executed by the respondents through their counsel, Alvord & Alvord, and by W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, might be taken as the facts in this proceeding in connection with any further testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaints, or in opposition thereto, and that the Commission might proceed upon said stipulation of facts and other evidence to be or which might be taken hereafter to make its report stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it might reasonably draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaints, answers and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission, having considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes these its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Colonial Dames, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, but having its principal office and place of business located at 4652 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif. Respondent, Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business also located at 4652 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif.

Respondent, Colonial Dames, Inc., is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of certain preparations designated as "Colonial Dames Beautifier" and "Colonial Dames Beauty Wash" for use in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin, and causes and has caused said preparations when sold to be transported from its said place of business in the city of Hollywood, State of California, into and across the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia to the purchasers thereof located at the various points in the said several States other than the State of California and in the District of Columbia. For some time respondent Colonial Dames, Inc., was engaged in the sale and distribution, in similar manner, of a certain preparation designated as "Colonial Dames Massage Cream." Respondent has discontinued the manufacture and sale of this product and states that it does not intend resuming the same.

Respondent, Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., makes some sales abroad and some interstate sales by mail. Such transactions are of small magnitude and importance, however. The business of said respondent, Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., consists principally of manufacturing cosmetics in its laboratories and selling the same in intrastate commerce to respondent, Colonial Dames, Inc.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent, Colonial Dames, Inc., is and has been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia with other corporations, partnerships and individuals engaged in said commerce in the sale and distribution of preparations for the care, treatment and beautification of the skin. Respondent, Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., is and has been engaged in such competition to the extent of the interstate business done by it, as above stated.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business of respondents and of respondents' predecessors in the manufacture and sale of cosmetics, the words "Colonial Dames" appear and have appeared for many years as a part of the name for each company or firm and are or have been employed and used for many years by respondents and respondents' predecessors as aforesaid in advertising in newspapers, pamphlets, booklets, circulars, and more recently in radio broadcasts, as a trade name to indicate and identify the business conducted by respondents and respondents' predecessors and in describing the qualities and characteristics of their said preparations and as a trade mark on packages and containers to brand and identify the goods sold by them.

Respondents' principal place of business, located at 4652 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, California, as aforesaid, is listed in the telephone directory as "Colonial Dames Corporation" and in connection therewith a local establishment for the sale of respondents' cosmetic products designated as "Colonial Dames Charm Shop" is operated at the same address. The "Corporation" and the "Charm Shop," located at the same address as aforesaid, are listed under the same telephone number. Cosmetic products of the respondents are labeled as sold by "Colonial Dames Company" and the words "Colonial Dames" coupled with a design depicting two dancing figures in colonial costume appear as a trade mark on products sold by respondents in commerce.

In further connection with the sale of their said products, respondents, particularly in connection with radio advertising, have conveyed to prospective purchasers among the consuming public various messages, creeds and representations from the "Head," "Chief Chemist" or "Famous Beauty Consultant" of the "Colonial Dames Laboratories," maintained and operated by Colonial Dames Company, Ltd.

PAR. 4. Respondent, Colonial Dames, Inc., advertises and has advertised its said products in newspapers circulated in various parts of the United States, through pamphlets, booklets and circulars distributed among the prospective purchasers in various parts of the United States and through radio broadcasts, in all of which it makes and causes to be made many statements concerning the efficacy and usefulness of said preparations in the care, treatment, and beautification of the skin.

In the course and conduct of its business as hereinabove described, respondent, Colonial Dames, Inc., to induce the purchase of its products, has made, published, or caused to be published, various statements, claims and representations with respect to the efficacy and usefulness of its said preparations in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin. Typical of said statements, claims and representations, among others, are the following:

(1) That Colonial Dames Beauty Wash will have an instant beautifying effect on the skin—works like magic in banishing stubborn blackheads, toning sallow skins, whitening and refining texture, and leaving the skin immaculately clean and just like velvet; (2) That Colonial Dames Beauty Wash, while not a chemical bleach, will gently bleach the skin, its whitening action being derived from the natural elements from which it is made.

Typical of representations made with respect to respondents' Colonial Dames Massage Cream are the following:

(1) That Colonial Dames Massage Cream is a superlative tissue cream and, being made with almond oil, quickly banishes all traces of dryness or sluggishness, leaving the skin freshly stimulated and vibrant; (2) That it softens and increases the circulation of fresh pure blood to every tiniest cell and tissue of the skin, thereby rebuilding and youthifying from within, thus working with nature instead of against it; (3) That it works perfectly with nature to rejuvenate the inner tissues—is more than a skin food and cleanser—is a true skin rejuvenator; that the purpose of said cream and nightly facial treatment therewith is to reestablish normal circulation so that every tiny cell is adequately nourished; that it is more than a cleanser—is a tissue cream as well; that it drives directly at the cause of all beauty imperfections and rids the skin of those enemies; that it reactivates the tissues from within stimulates cell structure, restores lubricating oils, exercises the muscles and brings a surge of rich red blood to supply needed nourishment and purge out toxic impurities the natural way; that it cures and prevents faulty skin texture by removing the cause; that it is a complete normalizing treatment; that it will cause complexion blemishes to quickly disappear.

Further representations are:

That respondents' Colonial Dames Beautifier remains always on the surface preventing pore clogging and actually building beauty into the skin; that respondents' beauty aids act on a different principle from most cosmetics and are effective because instead of attempting the impossible feat of "rubbing in youth and beauty" entirely from the outside, Colonial Dames Beauty Aids work according to the accepted laws of nature.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact the said statements and representations made by respondents as aforesaid with respect to the efficacy and usefulness of their said preparations in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin were and are false, deceptive, and misleading in the following, among other, particulars:

The chief benefits derived from the use of Colonial Dames Massage Cream are due to massage rather than to the action of its ingredients;

According to the weight of scientific authority, Colonial Dames Beauty Wash does not banish stubborn blackheads, or tone sallow skins. Colonial Dames Massage Cream does not banish all traces of dryness or sluggishness, increase the circulation of fresh pure blood to every tiniest cell or tissue, or rebuild or youthify from within, or rejuvenate the inner tissues, or reestablish normal circulation, or drive directly at the cause of all beauty imperfections, or reactivate the tissues from within, or stimulate cell structure, or correct and prevent faulty skin texture;

The effect of Colonial Dames Beauty Wash upon the skin is merely to cleanse and not to bleach, and is not the "answer" to stubborn blackheads and sallow and discolored skin problems;

Colonial Dames Beautifier is beneficial chiefly as a powder base and does not prevent pore clogging nor "Actually build beauty into the skin"; does not act on a different principle from most cosmetics.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of respondents referred to in paragraph 1 hereof those who manufacture and sell in commerce products like or similar to those sold by respondents and who do not make false, misleading or extravagant claims or representations concerning such products but advertise and represent the same fairly and accurately.

PAR. 7. The National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, with headquarters at Dumbarton House, Washington, D. C., is a federation or organization of incorporated societies of 40 States of the United States and the District of Columbia. The society is principally historical and patriotic. Among its definite aims are to commemorate the history of the Original Thirteen Colonies and to teach their lessons of patriotism to the citizens of the future.

The total membership of the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America was 434 in 1894, 2,050 in 1896, 5,579 in 1906, 8,128 in 1916, 9,595 in 1925 and 11,603 in 1935. The California organization affiliated with The National Society of the Colonial Dames of America was initiated in 1896. It had a membership of 115 in 1904, 169 in 1914, 172 in 1925 and 235 in 1935. The population of the State of California in 1930 was 5,677,251.

PAR. 8. During the year 1891, there was organized in the State of New York a patriotic and historical society under the name "The Colonial Dames of America." This organization now has chapters located in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington, Paris (France), San Francisco, Shreveport (Louisiana), Nashville, Dallas, Danville (Kentucky), Rome (Italy) and London (England). The total membership of this society amounted to 350 in 1889 and to 4,000 in 1935, many of whom were resident abroad. The work done by the society is confined principally to the territory of the thirteen original American colonies.

PAR. 9. In May 1896, there was incorporated in the State of New York a social and patriotic organization known as "Colonial Daughters of the Seventeenth Century." This organization has auxiliary chapters in New York and various other States of the United States, and the present organization includes in its membership ladies living in the various States of the United States. The total membership of this society is unknown.

Respondents' said preparations are not produced, approved, sponsored or recommended by, or in any manner connected with or related to, any of said societies, and none of said societies is now, or ever has been, engaged in the manufacture or sale of cosmetics or of any other preparation or product of commerce.

PAR. 10. The words "Colonial Dames" have been and are frequently used and understood by the public generally to describe and designate American ladies of the Colonial period and were so used and understood prior to the organization of any of the societies above mentioned.

The term "Colonial Dame" is also occasionally used to describe a descendant of an American personage of the Colonial period whether or not such descendant is a member of one of the above mentioned societies.

PAR. 11. The trade mark "Colonial Dames" was registered by respondents' predecessors in the State of California in 1906 and with the United States Patent Office in 1922.

PAR. 12. For many years subsequent to 1886 the marketing and distribution of the products of respondents' predecessors were confined to the Pacific Coast. At the present time, approximately 45 percent of the sales of respondents' products are made in California and an additional 30 percent in the States of Washington and Oregon. The words "Colonial Dames" are, and for many years have been, associated in the minds of people on the Pacific Coast and elsewhere with the products of respondents and their predecessors.

PAR. 13. The use by respondents of the hereinbefore enumerated false and misleading representations in connection with the offering for sale and the sale of respondents' said products has had and does have the tendency and capacity to and does mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public and causes prospective purchasers to believe that said false and misleading representations are true and that said preparations have the efficacy and usefulness in the care, treatment and beautification of the skin as represented and implied by the respondents. The use by respondents of the words "Colonial Dames" in their respective corporate names, and in identifying and describing their said preparations in advertisements, in newspapers, pamphlets, books, circulars and radio broadcasts, and as a trade name on the packages and containers in which said preparations are sold as hereinabove described, has a tendency and capacity to, and does, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public and causes prospective purchasers erroneously to believe that said preparations are produced, approved, sponsored, endorsed, or recommended by one or more of the societies hereinabove described. Said erroneous beliefs induced by the various misrepresentations of the respondents as herein detailed, cause and have caused a substantial portion of the purchasing public to purchase respondents' said preparations, thereby unlawfully and unfairly diverting trade to respondents from competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce preparations which are recommended for use in connection with the care, treatment and beautification of the skin and which are truthfully and accurately represented.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents as herein alleged are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

charges stated in the complaint or in opposition thereto, and that the Commission may proceed upon said stipulation of facts and other evidence to be or which may be taken hereafter to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it may reasonably draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and to enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs, the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the said respondents, Colonial Dames, Inc., and Colonial Dames Company, Ltd., corporations, their officers, servants, employees, or agents, individual or corporate, in connection with the advertising, describing, offering for sale and sale in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of preparations used or to be used in the care, treatment, and beautification of the skin, do forthwith cease and desist from:

2. Representing that the chief benefits derived from the use of Colonial Dames Massage Cream are due to the action of its ingredients rather than to massage;

3. Representing that Colonial Dames Massage Cream banishes all traces of dryness or sluggishness, increases the circulation of fresh pure blood to every tiniest cell or tissue of the skin, thereby rebuilding and youthifying from within; reestablishes a normal circulation and drives directly at the cause of all beauty imperfections, and rids the skin of those enemies; reactivates or rejuvenates the tissues from within; stimulates cell structure and brings a surge of rich red blood to supply needed nourishment and purge out toxic impurities; or cures and prevents faulty skin texture and actually builds beauty into the skin;

4. Representing that the effect of Colonial Dames Beauty Wash upon the skin is that of a bleach and not merely a cleansing agency;

5. Representing that according to the weight of scientific authority Colonial Dames Beauty Wash banishes stubborn blackheads and tones sallow skins;

6. Representing that Colonial Dames Beautifier prevents pore clogging and actually builds beauty into the skin; that it acts on a different principle from most cosmetics; and from making other representations of similar tenor or import or any other or further representations concerning the efficacy and usefulness of respondents' said preparations in the care, treatment, and beautification of the skin unless and until said representations are true in fact;

TARPON SPRINGS SPONGE EXCHANGE, INC., ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3024. Complaint, Dec. 29, 1936—Decision, May 18, 1938¹

Where a stockholder membership corporation engaged in maintaining and conducting a sponge exchange for the use and benefit of its stockholder members and such others as might be granted permits in buying, storing, and selling sponges in the community involved, in which (1) over 80 percent of all domestic wool sponges were produced, (2) substantially all such products bought and sold passed through exchange in question, (3) over 90 percent of population was directly dependent upon sponge industry, and (4) the financial situation was precarious because of condition of said industry and community's almost complete dependence thereon; and the active members of said exchange, packers and distributors of sponges, engaged in buying same on said exchange and selling such sponges to wholesale and retail dealers located in the various States and the District of Columbia and in foreign countries, in competition with one another and with others in such sale and distribution, and constituting the source from which the majority of the regularly established wholesale and retail dealers throughout the United States were required to procure wool sponges in order to offer and be able to sell a line thereof produced in the United States, and confronted by a condition in which such packers found themselves greatly overstocked, with their stock heavily mortgaged, collections of outstanding accounts slow, and their financial credit about exhausted—

- (a) Entered into, adopted and carried out a resolution, following a general meeting in said community of all interested parties in the industry to consider, as stated, ways and means in connection with aforesaid problems, under which resolution it was provided that catch of sponges then stored in exchange should be sold promptly by a certain date, and that new catch of wool sponges to be brought in should not be offered for sale for a specified period exceeding 3 months, and that buyers should not be permitted to purchase any such sponges, directly or indirectly, outside of exchange, except for fill-in orders from one buyer to another, and that any buyer violating such agreement should be fined from $750 to $2,500, depending on amount bought; and

(b) Entered into and adopted a concurrent resolution, under provisions of which they promised not to allow their boats to sell, during aforesaid period, any of their wool sponges, excepting those then stored in exchange and being prepared for sale, and also boats then out and supplied by them; and Where said various individuals and concerns, packers and distributors, and "operators" and "independent boat owners," as above set forth, following adoption of such resolutions and closing of exchange for sale of wool sponges—

(c) Concertedly refused, during period of time thus provided for, to buy or sell such sponges in or through such exchange, though making sales from one packer to another for purpose of filling orders on hand for wool sponges from persons outside the State;

With intent and effect of preventing further decline in and increasing prices of such sponges (assertedly theretofore below cost of production), both on exchange and elsewhere, and with intent of permitting said packers to unload their surplus stocks, collect outstanding accounts, and make adjustments accordingly, and with result that they were able to and did dispose of between 40 and 50 percent of their then stocks, and normal flow of sponges from producer through exchange to consumers in other States, District of Columbia, and in foreign countries was stopped completely during aforesaid period, and price thereof to dealers and public generally was increased, and competition in interstate sale thereof was suppressed and hindered through closing exchange as aforesaid:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange, Inc., a corporation (hereinafter referred to as respondent Exchange), and certain of its members, as hereinafter set forth (hereinafter designated as respondent packer members); and James S. Smitzes, Inc., A. L. Tarapina, John Fassol, George Cladakis, W. F. Ferguson, Nic Macrenaris, Anastacios Kotis, Diamandis Leonis, Michael Gonatos, and Vasilio Christon (hereinafter referred to as respondent boat operators and independent boat owners), have been, and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act; and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect, as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Exchange is a stockholder-membership corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla. It is engaged in the business of conducting a Sponge Exchange for the service of its stockholder-members and others in buying, storing, and selling sponges. It has a membership of approximately 25 individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations. The members of said respondent Exchange are packers and distributors of sponges, and are engaged in the sale of said sponges to wholesale and retail dealers located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Florida. They cause said sponges, when sold, to be transported from the State of Florida to the purchasers thereof, at their respective points of location. There has been, and now is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said sponges between the members of said respondent Exchange, located in the State of Florida, and dealers in said sponges located at points throughout other States of the United States. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, in selling and offering for sale sponges in commerce, as herein set out, the members of respondent Exchange are in competition with each other, except for the matters and things herein alleged, and are in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

The respondent Exchange operates what is generally known as a Sponge Exchange, where the producers of such sponges unload their catch into a storage room, and where the packers and distributors purchase said sponges from the producers through the Exchange, and from where said sponges are thereafter sold and shipped in commerce by such packers and distributors, as hereinbefore set out. Tarpon Springs, Fla., is noted throughout the country and in many sections of the world as the sponge-producing center of America. The sponges bought and sold through respondent Exchange are regarded by the trade and purchasing public of the United States as the best commercial domestic sponges that can be procured. Practically all of the sponges marketed at Tarpon Springs, Fla., are sold through the respondent Exchange. The sheepswool sponge, often designated as a wool sponge, is in great demand by industries throughout the United States, and is the most valuable sponge on the American market for commercial purposes. Virtually all of the sheepswool sponges produced in the United States are produced near Tarpon Springs, Fla., and are sold through the respondent Exchange. A majority of the regularly established wholesale and retail dealers of wool sponges throughout the United States are required to procure their sponges from the members of respondent Exchange in order to offer a line of domestic wool sponges.

While the membership of the respondent Exchange consists of approximately 25 persons, firms, and corporations, the following-named respondents are the active members, all of whom are either packers or distributors:

Mary J. Bouchlas, trading as Rock Island Sponge Company, with her principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

John Diamandis and Peter J. Cardulis, partners, trading as Diamandis & Cardulis, with their principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

N. G. Arfaras, an individual, with his principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Nick Philippou and John Kourematis, partners, trading as Tropical Sponge Company, with their principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Schroeder & Tremayne, Inc., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal place of business located at 500 North Commercial Street, St. Louis, Mo.

John Fassol and P. Saclarides, partners, trading as Fassol and Saclarides, with their principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Certain respondents hereinafter designated as "respondent boat operators" are: James S. Smitzes, Inc., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.; A. L. Tarapina, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; John Fassol, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; George Cladakis, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; W. F. Ferguson, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; and Nic Macrenaris, of Tarpon Springs, Fla. All respondent boat operators are engaged in the business known to the trade as "boat operators," and finance sponge-fishing expeditions for a percentage of the proceeds.

The respondents Anastacios Kotis, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; Diamandis Leonis, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; Michale Gonatos, of Tarpon Springs, Fla., and Vasilio Christon, of Tarpon Springs, Fla., are independent boat owners, and are hereinafter so designated, and are engaged in the business of procuring sponges, storing and selling them through the respondent Exchange. The respondents listed herein as "boat operators" are likewise interested in, and engaged in, the sale of the sponges procured by them through the said Sponge Exchange.

Only packers who own stock in the respondent Exchange, and others who, by payment of certain fees, enjoy the same rights in this regard as stockholders, are permitted to make purchases in the Sponge Exchange. Practically all of the sponge fishermen or producers of wool sponges in the United States make their sales through the said Sponge Exchange.

PAR. 2. On or about January 25, 1935, all of the respondents named herein united in a common course of action, and combined, conspired, and confederated together, cooperatively, for the purpose of restraining and preventing interstate trade in wool sponges, and of increasing the price of wool sponges in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Pursuant to said concert of action, conspiracy, and confederation, and in furtherance thereof, the said respondents did the following acts and things:

1. The respondent packer members of the respondent Exchange (excepting the respondent Schroeder & Tremayne, Inc.), at a meeting of the said Exchange, by a certain resolution, which was signed by said respondent members, agreed, among other things, that all purchases of wool sponges, in or outside the Exchange, would be discontinued from February 15, 1935, to May 1, 1935. Said resolution, so passed and agreed to by the said respondent members, is in words and figures as follows:

Resolved further that said buyers shall not be permitted to buy any Wool Sponges, directly or indirectly, OUTSIDE of the Exchange, except for 'Fill-in-orders' from ONE BUYER to ANOTHER

Resolved further that any buyer violating this agreement shall be subject to the following fines

1. Buyers, who according to the last statistics, bought over $50,000.00 worth shall be fined $2,000.00
2. Buyers, who according to the last statistics, bought between $15,000.00 and $50,000.00 worth shall be fined $1,000.00
3. Buyers, who bought less than $15,000.00 shall be fined $750.00

The adoption of the said resolution moved by Geo. M. Smitzes and seconded by N. G. Arfaras and subject to a wired adherence by the northern firms of James H. PAR. 4. The purpose, result, and effect of the combination, conspiracy, and agreements hereinabove set forth, and the acts and practices performed thereunder by said respondents, have been, and were, during the period from February 15, 1935, to May 3, 1935, unduly and unreasonably to restrain commerce, among and between the various States of the United States, in sponges; and to increase substantially the price of wool sponges to the wholesale dealers, retail dealers, and to the consuming public, by prohibiting the respondent boat operators and respondent independent boat owners from selling sponges during said period of time; by interrupting and prohibiting commerce, as herein set out, in wool sponges during said period of time; and by preventing wholesale dealers and retail dealers in wool sponges throughout the United States from purchasing their requirements of domestic wool sponges in commerce, as herein set out, from the sources of supply.

The foregoing alleged acts and practices of respondents were in undue restraint of competition and trade in commerce, as herein set out, and are, and were, to the prejudice of the public interest, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act the Federal Trade Commission, on the 29th day of December 1936, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange, Inc., a corporation, Mary J. Bouchlas, trading as Rock Island Sponge Company, John Diamandis and Peter J. Cardulis, partners trading as Diamandis and Cardulis, N. G. Arfaras, an individual, Sponge Producers' Corporation, a corporation, Charles Simeon and Charles Halipilias, partners trading as Simeon and Halipilias, Sponge Fishing Company, a corporation, Diamandis Diamandis and Cristos Psilakas, partners trading as Industrial Florida Sponge Company, Albert Block and Sons, Inc., a corporation, D. an individual, W. F. Ferguson, an individual, Nic Macrenaris, an individual, Anastacios Kotis, an individual, Diamandis Leonis, an individual, Michael Gonatos, an individual, and Vasilio Christon, an individual, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Astor Hogg, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by William L. Hill and Henry H. Morgan, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission upon the said complaint, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Karl Stecher, counsel for the Commission, and William L. Hill, counsel for respondents, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent Exchange, is a stockholder membership corporation organized in 1909, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla. It is engaged in the business of maintaining and conducting a sponge exchange for the use and benefit of its stockholder members and such others as may be granted permits, in buying, storing, and selling sponges. There are in all approximately 25 members of the respondent exchange. All of the active members are packers and distributors of sponges and are engaged in buying sponges on the Exchange and selling said sponges to wholesale and retail dealers located in the various States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and foreign countries. They cause said sponges, when sold, to be transported from the State of Florida to purchasers thereof located outside of the State of Florida. There has been, and is now, a course of trade and commerce in said sponges between the members of the respondent Exchange located at Tarpon Springs, Fla., and dealers in said sponges located at points throughout other States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and foreign countries. In the purchase and sale and offering for sale of said sponges in commerce as herein set out, the members of the respondent Exchange are in competition with each other, except as such competition was restricted and suppressed by the acts and practices hereinafter set out, and are in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of sponges in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Respondent Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange, Inc., built a structure, rectangular in shape, more or less open on one side and with stalls around the other three sides, all opening on the court in the middle. These stalls are rented out to boat captains to store their catches of sponges until such time as they are ready for sale. Practically all sponges brought into Tarpon Springs are stored in this Exchange and are there offered for sale. On sale days the various boat captains bring their sponges out of the stalls and place them in the court in piles, where they are sold at auction. All bids are secretly made by the bidder handing in a slip of paper on which his bid is listed. The captain of the ship is free to accept or reject any bid made.

After they are purchased at the Exchange the sponges are taken by the packer to his warehouse and are there prepared for shipment to purchasers in various parts of the United States outside of Florida and in foreign countries.

The sponges produced in the United States come under four general classifications, to wit: wool sponges, also known as sheep's wool sponges; yellow sponges; wire sponges; and grass sponges. By far the most important, both from the standpoint of quality and from the standpoint of quantity, is the wool sponge, this species far exceeding in value and in quantity all other varieties combined. Wool sponges are considered the best domestic sponges for the automobile-washing trade and for what is known as the paint industry. Practically all of the wool sponges produced in the United States come from the waters of the Gulf of Mexico adjacent to Tarpon Springs, Fla., or Key West, Fla. Tarpon Springs, Fla., is the largest and most important sponge-producing center in the United States. Upwards of 80 percent of all sponges produced in the United States come from Tarpon Springs. The wool sponges produced at Tarpon Springs have the reputation of being the finest wool sponges produced anywhere. Over 90 percent of the population of Tarpon Springs is directly dependent upon the sponge industry.

The majority of the regularly established wholesale and retail dealers throughout the United States are required to procure wool sponges from the members of the respondent Exchange in order to offer and be able to sell a line of wool sponges produced in the United States. There is no other way for these wholesalers and retailers throughout the United States to obtain an adequate supply of domestic wool sponges, except directly or indirectly through the members of the respondent Exchange, for over 80 percent of all domestic wool sponges are produced at Tarpon Springs and practically all sponges bought and sold in Tarpon Springs pass through the Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange.

While the membership of the respondent Exchange consists of approximately 25 persons, firms, and corporations, the following-named respondents herein referred to as respondent packer members are the active members, all of whom are either packers or distributors of sponges and have their places of business in Tarpon Springs, Fla.:

Mary J. Bouchlas, trading as Rock Island Sponge Company, with her principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Em. Macrenaris, an individual, with his principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Schroeder & Tremayne, Inc., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal place of business located at 300 North Commercial Street, St. Louis, Mo.

John Fassol and P. Saclarides, partners, trading as Fassol & Saclarides, with their principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Respondents, James S. Smitzes, Inc., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida with its principal place of business located at Tarpon Springs, Fla.; A. L. Tarapina of Tarpon Springs, Fla., John Fassol of Tarpon Springs, Fla., George Cladakis of Tarpon Springs, Fla., W. F. Ferguson of Tarpon Springs, Fla., and Nic Macrenaris of Tarpon Springs, Fla., are known to the sponge trade at Tarpon Springs, Fla., as "Boat Operators." Such so-called "Boat Operators" are engaged in the financing and advancing funds and supplies to those actually engaged in sponge fishing expeditions, and for such financing and advancing of such funds and supplies the respondent "Boat Operators" receive a percentage of the proceeds arising from the sale of the sponges gathered in such sponge fishing expeditions. Respondent "Boat Operators" have a direct interest in the sale of such sponges in the Exchange after they have been procured by the actual fishers, and when the sponges (which the respondent "Boat Operators" have aided in procuring by financing the expeditions) are sold on the Exchange the receipts for the sale of such sponges are in usual practice and as a general thing paid over to the respondent "Boat Operators," after which said respondent "Boat Operators" distribute such funds, upon a share basis, to those who took part in the gathering of such sponges, less the percentage of the proceeds to which the respondent "Boat Operators" are entitled under their agreement with the sponge fishers made before the sponge expeditions embarked.

The respondents, Anastacios Kotis of Tarpon Springs, Fla., Diamandis Leonis of Tarpon Springs, Fla., Michael Gonatos of Tarpon Springs, Fla., and Vasilio Christon of Tarpon Springs, Fla., are known to the sponge trade at Tarpon Springs, Fla., as "Independent Boat Owners," and are hereinafter so designated, and they are engaged in the business of procuring or fishing sponges from the Gulf of Mexico and storing and selling them at and through the respondent Exchange.

The respondent "Boat Operators" and respondent "Independent Boat Owners" are, and were at all times mentioned herein, fully aware of the fact that when the sponges are brought to the Exchange and sold through the Exchange, such sponges are within a reasonable time thereafter, in the vast majority of instances, sold and transported in commerce by the buyers of such sponges to customers located in the various States of the United States, and that the regular channel of commerce in sponges brought to Tarpon Springs is from the producers through the Exchange to the packers and from the packers on to the buyers and users throughout the various parts of the United States and of the world.

Only packers who own stock in the respondent Exchange and have been elected to membership therein, and such others as may be able to secure a permit, upon payment of a stipulated fee, are permitted to make purchases on or at the Exchange. Practically all of the wool sponges passing through Tarpon Springs are sold through the Exchange.

PAR. 2. The sponge industry at Tarpon Springs had been in a relatively chaotic and unsatisfactory condition for some time prior to 1934, due to a greatly lessened demand for sponges. During the year 1934, the production of wool sponges at Tarpon Springs was considerably greater than for each of the preceding 3 years, without a corresponding increase in the demand for such sponges.

At the end of the year 1934, respondent packers found themselves greatly overstocked, with between $500,000 and $600,000 worth of sponges on hand in their warehouses. A considerable portion of this stock was heavily mortgaged. Collections of outstanding accounts were slow, and the packers had about exhausted their financial credit. The entire community of Tarpon Springs was in a precarious financial situation because of the condition of the sponge fishing industry, on which it is almost wholly dependent.

With the sponge industry in this situation, with an additional large stock of sponges on hand in the Exchange unsold, and with more sponges being fished for, a general meeting of all interested parties in the sponge industry was called for January 10, 1935, and was held in the Greek schoolhouse in Tarpon Springs, because there was insufficient room in the Exchange. Mr. George Emmanuel, president of the Exchange, presided. He stated that some way had to be found to dispose of the more than $100,000 worth of sponges in storage at the Exchange, and some arrangement made about payment for the same, as the buyers were unable to provide cash, due to slow returns of outstanding accounts. Mr. Emmanuel asked the operators if they could carry 40 percent, provided 60 percent was paid in cash by the packers. A final agreement was reached under the terms of which 60 percent cash would be paid and accepted, with a 60-day extension of credit for the remaining 40 percent. Mr. Emmanuel then asked the fishing boat captains (producers) if they would promise the Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange not to sell any further wool catches, excepting what was then in the Exchange, until after Easter, or about May 1, 1935. A vote was taken which showed that all present were in favor of carrying out such agreement. It was further agreed that sales should be made until the entire stock of wool sponges in the Exchange was disposed of, making the last sale February 5, 1935.

In furtherance of the same aims and purposes, a meeting was held at the Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange on January 25, 1935, at which the following resolution was adopted:

The Stockholders of the Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange, this day January 25th, 1935, in meeting assembled and having the best interests of the Sponge Industry in mind,

RESOLVED that it is to the best interest of the industry that the catch of Sponges now stored in the Exchange be sold on the Exchange between this date and Febry 15th allowing thereby ample time for such Hookboats, as are now out, to bring the catch in and that the new catch of sponges to be brought in shall not be offered for sale until after May First, the Exchange however, remaining open for all sales of Yellow, Grass, and Wire between the dates mentioned.

RESOLVED further that said buyers shall not be permitted to buy any Wool Sponges, directly or indirectly, OUTSIDE of the Exchange, except for "FILL-IN-ORDERS" from ONE BUYER to ANOTHER.

RESOLVED further that any buyer violating this agreement shall be subjected to the following fines:

1. Buyers, who according to the last statistics, bought over $50,000 worth shall be fined $2,500.00
2. Buyers who bought between $15,000.00 and $50,000.00 according to the last statistics shall be fined $1,000.00.
3. Buyers who bought less than $15,000—shall be fined $750.00.

The adoption of the said resolution was moved by Geo. M. Smitzes and seconded by N. G. Arfaras and is subject to a wired adherence by the Northern firms of James H. Rhodes & Co., American Sponge & Chamois Co., Schroeder & Tremayne and Greek-American Sponge Co.

Following the passage and adoption of the above and foregoing resolution the respondent member Schroeder & Tremayne, Inc., approved and ratified the said resolution by agreeing to the terms of said resolution.

On January 25, 1935, the respondent "Boat Operators," James S. Smitzes, Inc., A. L. Tarapina, John Fassol, George Cladakis and W. F. Ferguson, and the respondent "Independent Boat Owners," Nic Macrenaris, Anastacios Kotis, Diamandis Leonis, Michael Gonatos and Vasilio Christon at a meeting in Tarpon Springs, Fla., adopted and signed a resolution which is in words and figures as follows:

BE IT RESOLVED by the operators of the sponge boats of the city of Tarpon Springs, Florida, that we promise not to allow any of our boats to sell any of their wool sponges, excepting those sponges now stored in the Sponge Exchange and being prepared for sale, before May First, 1935, it being understood at the same time that such hookboats as are now out, and who may be supplied by us, shall have the right to dispose of their catch by February 15th.

Be it further resolved that the independent boat owners shall join with us in this resolution.

PAR. 3. Following the adoption of the foregoing resolutions and agreements, with the respondent Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange, Inc., assenting and cooperating, the said Exchange was closed for the purchase or sale of wool or sheep's wool sponges from February 16, 1935, to May 2, 1935, both dates inclusive, and the respondents during said period of time by combination, agreement, and concerted action refused to buy or sell wool sponges in or through said Exchange during said period of time. Respondent packers did, however, make various sales from one packer to another for the purpose of filling orders which they had for wool sponges from persons outside of the State of Florida.

PAR. 4. Due to the large stocks of sponges on hand in Tarpon Springs and to the slowness of the demand, the prices of wool sponges were going downward. Respondents testified these prices were lower than the cost of production, but presented no documentary evidence in substantiation of such contention.

The purpose of closing the Exchange for the sale of wool sponges was to prevent a further decline in the prices of wool sponges, both on the Exchange and elsewhere, and to increase such prices if possible. The effect of closing the Exchange for the sale of wool sponges is shown in the following table:

Prices of wool sponges per bunch

	Jan. 1- Jan. 31	Feb. 1- Feb. 15	May 3- May 31
Large.....	$8.83	$6.66	$10.08
Small and medium.....	1.83	1.63	1.98
Large rags.....	5.60	3.80	6.28
Small rags.....	1.22	1.18	1.62

A further purpose of the closing of the Exchange was to permit the respondent packers to unload their surplus stocks on hand, make collections of outstanding accounts, and adjust themselves accordingly. During the period the Exchange was closed, respondent packers were able to and did dispose of between 40 percent and 50 percent of the stocks of sponges they had on hand.

PAR. 5. The effect of the combination, conspiracy, and agreements hereinabove set forth, and the acts and practices performed thereunder by respondents during the period from February 16, 1935, to May 2, 1935, both dates inclusive, was to stop completely the normal flow of sponges from the producers through the Tarpon Springs Sponge Exchange to the consumers in other States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and in foreign countries, and to increase the price of wool sponges to dealers and to the public generally. The closing of the Exchange under the said resolution had the effect of, and did, suppress and hinder competition in the interstate sale of wool sponges.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as hereinabove named, are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. A. McLEAN & SON
ET AL.¹

Nos. 5796, 5797

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. February 8, 1938)

CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS—CIVIL—COMMISSION'S STANDING AS PRIVATE PARTY TO MAINTAIN.

The Federal Trade Commission, an agency of the Government, representing no private interest of its own, but acting solely in the public interest, has no such standing as a private party as enables it to maintain proceedings for civil contempt for violation of its orders.

PUBLIC INTEREST ALONE AS UNDERLYING COMMISSION'S ACTION.

Under the statute creating the Federal Trade Commission, the Commission acts in the public interest alone (Federal Trade Commission Act, Sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45).

CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS—WHETHER CIVIL OR CRIMINAL—DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO BE ADVISED AT INCEPTION.

The party against whom proceedings in contempt are attempted to be had is entitled to know from the outset whether the proceedings against him are civil or criminal in their nature.

CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS—WHERE ANCILLARY TO ORDER ENFORCEMENT AND REIMBURSEMENT CLAIMS AS IN CIVIL—AS PRECLUDING CONTINUANCE AS FOR CRIMINAL.

Where the Federal Trade Commission filed contempt petitions as ancillary to original proceedings for enforcement of an order, thus indicating that it sought relief in civil proceedings, and filed a brief in support of that position, claiming relief as an injured party, to be reimbursed for costs incurred as a result of the violation of the order, stating that the proceeding was for civil contempt and was not punitive, it is not entitled to permission to continue prosecution of the proceedings as in criminal contempt, as the respondent and the court were entitled to know the theory on which it relied.

On two original petitions by the Commission for rules to show cause why A. McLean & Son and M. J. Holloway & Co. should not be adjudged in contempt, motions to dismiss granted, and petitions dismissed.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, Mr. Martin A. Morrison, Mr. Henry C. Lank, and Mr. James W. Nichol, all of Washington, D. C., for petitioner.

Mr. Irvin H. Fathchild, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

Before EVANS and SPARKS, Circuit Judges, and LINDLEY, District Judge.

¹ Reported in 94 F. (2d) 802.

SPARKS, Circuit Judge.

The Federal Trade Commission has filed a petition for a rule against McLean & Son, a corporation, and one against M. J. Holloway & Co., a corporation, to show cause why each should not be adjudged in contempt of this court for violation of a decree entered by this court July 1, 1936. That decree was entered pursuant to application of the Commission for enforcement of its order against both respondents to cease and desist from certain practices theretofore found by the Commission to constitute unfair and forbidden methods of competition. See Federal Trade Commission v. McLean and Son, 84 F. (2d) 910.

[803] The petition presented in each case was filed under the same title and number as the original proceeding, and was filed as a part of that proceeding. The prayer of each petition is as follows:

"Wherefore, Federal Trade Commission prays that said (respondent) be ordered to show cause why it should not be adjudged in contempt of this court, in having so disobeyed said decree of this court so made and entered on the first day of July 1936."

Respondents filed answers in the nature of motions to dismiss the petitions for rule to show cause on the grounds that:

1. The object of the petitions for contempt is necessarily punitive and not compensatory, and accordingly should have been presented as an independent petition and not as supplemental proceedings in the original cause.

2. The petitions set forth only the pleader's conclusions in support of the charge, and not sufficient allegations of fact as to the subject matter alleged to violate the court's order.

3. The verification of the petitions is insufficient, not being by persons having personal knowledge of the facts, and purporting to be upon affiant's belief.

4. There was no contempt of the court's order, as indicated by certain facts set forth by respondents.

In reply to respondents' motions to dismiss, petitioner, the Commission, stated that its proceeding was one for civil contempt, and that it was a part of a proceeding based upon section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U. S. C. A. section 45) which provides for a civil proceeding only and for a decree in the nature of an injunction; that it was not punitive; that it was wholly remedial, being prosecuted in the public interest; and that it was ancillary to the main case and in aid of the enforcement of the decree of this court. It further urged that the assessment of a fine would not indicate that the proceeding was criminal since a fine is as much an incident of civil contempt as of criminal, the difference between the two being that in civil contempt the fine must bear a relation to the injury sustained by the complaining party. In its petitions for rules to show cause, the Commission made no allegation of injury to itself and no request for fines payable to it in compensation for expense incurred as a result of respondents' alleged contempts. However, in its brief in opposition to the motions to dismiss, to show that it was entitled to such fines, it made the following statement:

"The Government, under the decree of this court, represents the interests of the Government and of the public. The Government has borne the expense of a nation-wide investigation to ascertain the facts which constitute the company's violations of the decree herein, and it pays all salaries and other expenses incident to the prosecution of this proceeding. The public is, as a matter of law, injured by such violations. The Government is entitled to a fine which bears a reasonable relation to all these injuries. The amount may not be calculated with accuracy, but the court may reasonably approximate it in fixing a fine in a substantial sum.

"The cash outlay required of the Government in its investigations and in the prosecution of the pending petition may not be ascertained with certainty; but it manifestly is a substantial sum.

"That violations of the decree injure the public may not be doubted or denied. Respondent's total sales are so great that such injuries to the public, when expressed in dollars, must be a substantial sum. A proceeding in civil contempt is ancillary to the case in which the decree was entered. It depends upon and is coexistent with the right to enforce such decree."

The Commission thus asserted its right, as a party injured by violation of a decree in its favor, to the remedy or relief afforded by means of civil contempt proceedings. As we studied the questions presented by the petitions and briefs filed prior to the hearing, and by the oral argument on hearing of the motions to dismiss, we concluded that the Commission was not entitled to the relief sought, by the means sought. It appeared that the question of the right of an administrative board, an agency of the Government, created principally for the purpose of regulating competition, to invoke rights customarily accorded to private litigants, had not previously been raised nor settled. Since the procedure followed was that employed in proceedings for civil contempt, according to the rules laid down in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, and the Commission treated it as such in its petition and briefs, we concluded that the first question before us was whether the Commission was entitled to institute [804] proceedings for civil contempt as a part of its civil proceedings against the respondents which had culminated in an order of this court to enforce the cease and desist order of the Commission. Having found that the protection of private rights was emphasized throughout the cases relating to contempt proceedings as their principal purpose,¹ we became convinced that the Commission, an agency of the Government, representing no private interest of its own, but acting solely in the public interest, had no such standing as a private party that it could utilize procedure intended to safeguard the rights and interests of private parties. That the Commission does act in the public interest alone we think there can be no question. Section 5 of the act creating it so provides (15 U. S. C. A. section 45). See also Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 280 U. S. 19; Flynn and Emrich Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 52 F. (2d) 836.

The Commission now appears to acquiesce in the conclusion that civil contempt proceedings are not appropriate to the proceeding here involved, as indicated by a supplemental brief filed herein, seventeen days after hearing of the cause, wherein it urges its right to prosecute proceedings for criminal contempt in its own name. It now states: "Counsel for the Commission respectfully submit that the petition herein presents an element of civil contempt, although it also presents a larger and more important element of criminal contempt—a criminal element that goes to the inherent power of this Court to vindicate its own dignity and rightful power * * * The only practical change will be that the fine will be punitive, and there may be fine or imprisonment, or both, with no limits except the sound discretion of this Court."

In support of its contention that the court should now consider its petition as one for criminal contempt, the Commission relies upon four cases, each of which was prosecuted by it in its own name: In the Matter of Leavitt, reported in Statutes and Decisions pertaining to the Federal Trade Commission, page 582; a second proceeding against the same party, not reported; Federal Trade Commission v. Hoboken White Lead and Color Works, 67 F. (2d) 551; and Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Ass'n., 88 F. (2d) 1009. We note that the Hoboken Works case does not appear to have been prosecuted as a part of the original proceedings. No docket number is given in the published report. The question of the form of the proceedings does not appear to have been raised, and the court treated it as a proceeding for criminal contempt, and imposed a punitive fine. In the Pacific States Association case, it appears that a separate proceeding was had, as indicated by the fact that the original order was entered in cause No. 4217, while the fines for contempt were imposed in cause No. 8227. We consider this fact of importance for the reason that it has been generally held that the party against whom such proceedings are attempted to be had is entitled to know from the outset whether the proceedings against him are civil or criminal in their nature. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit discussed this in McCann v. N. Y. Stock Exchange, 80 F. (2d) 211, 214, an appeal from an order fining appellant for contempt of court. In reversing the order, the court said:

"An essential element of proceedings in the nature of civil contempt is that some private interest shall appear." State v. Verage, 177 Wis. 295 at 317.

"The punishment is to secure to the adverse party the right which the court has awarded to him." Bessette v. Conkey, 104 U. S. 324.

" * * * Nor can we affirm it as punishment for a criminal contempt. The lower federal courts have not been very clear about the proper practice in such applications since Gompers v. Buck's Stove and Range Co., 221 [805] U. S. 418. It has been their custom to determine their character, whether civil or criminal, by resort to a number of elements, some purely formal, some substantial; such as the title of the proceeding, whether costs were demanded, whether the parties were examined, who conducted the prosecution. * * * The result of all this has been most unsatisfactory and has defeated its own purpose, which was to advise the respondent at the outset of the nature of the application * * *. Criminal prosecutions, that is, those which result in a punishment, vindictive as opposed to remedial, are prosecuted either by the United States or by the court to assert its authority * * *. But the judge may prefer to use the attorney of a party, who will indeed ordinarily be his only means of information when the contempt is not in his presence. There is no reason why he should not do so, and every reason why he should; but obviously the situation may in that event be equivocal, for the respondent will often find it hard to tell whether the prosecution is not a remedial move in the suit, undertaken on behalf of the client. This can be made plain if the judge enters an order in limine, directing the attorney to prosecute the respondent criminally on behalf of the court, and if the papers supporting the process contain a copy of this order or allege its contents correctly. We think that unless this is done the prosecution must be deemed to be civil and will support no other than a remedial punishment."

The Commission apparently has in mind this right of the respondents to be apprised of the nature of the proceedings against them when it states: "A technical change of the case upon the docket of this court is all that respondent might reasonably ask, and it would be of no advantage to respondent. The parties would remain the same and the subject matter and rights and liabilities of the parties would remain the same." We cannot agree with this contention. There may be a very considerable difference between the incidents resultant upon a finding of contempt in a civil proceeding from those of a criminal proceeding. The Supreme Court said, in U. S. v. Goldman, 277 U. S. 229, "The only substantial difference between such a proceeding for criminal contempt and a criminal prosecution is that in the one the act complained of is the violation of a decree and in the other the violation of a law * * * "These contempts are infractions of the law, visited with punishment as such. If such acts are not criminal, we are in error as to the most fundamental characteristic of crimes as that word has been understood in English speech * * *"

We think that not only the respondent, but also the court is entitled to know from the original petition and briefs in support thereof just what theory the petitioner relies upon for the relief sought in his petition. By filing the petitions here involved as ancillary to the original proceedings, the Commission indicated that it sought relief in civil proceedings. Thereafter when respondents filed their motions to dismiss, it filed its brief in support of that position, claiming relief as an injured party, to be reimbursed for costs incurred as a result of the violation of the order, stating, "This is a proceeding for 'civil contempt.' * * * It is not punitive. It is wholly remedial * * * (It) is ancillary to the main case and is in aid of the enforcement of the decree of this court made and entered therein." We are convinced that the Commission has no right now to demand permission to continue prosecution of the proceedings as in criminal contempt. Nor do the facts disclosed by the petitions for rule to show cause, and the suggestions filed in opposition thereto, show such deliberate intent to violate the order of the court that we feel impelled to prosecute a proceeding on our own motion to punish respondents for contempt of our order.

Respondents' motions to dismiss the petitions for rules to show cause why they should not be held in contempt for violations of the order of this court are granted, and the petitions are hereby dismissed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. FAIRYFOOT PRODUCTS COMPANY¹

No. 5426

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. February 11, 1938)

CONTEMPT ADJUDICATIONS—COERCIVE, ETC., PREREQUISITES OF ORDER OR DECREE.

A court cannot adjudge one to be in contempt for violating court order or decree, unless it lawfully restrains alleged contemnor from doing acts complained of by its coercive force, acting directly on the person.

CONTEMPT ADJUDICATIONS—ORDER OF AFFIRMANCE AS NOT ENFORCEMENT DECREE EQUIVALENT.

A general order, affirming Federal Trade Commission's "cease and desist" order, is not equivalent to decree of enforcement, so that violation thereof does not constitute contempt of court (Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45).

ENFORCEMENT DECREES—AS PROPERLY INJUNCTIVE IN NATURE AND FORM, ETC.

A decree of enforcement of Federal Trade Commission's "cease and desist" order should be in general nature and form of injunction decree definitely fixing duties of party against whom such order was issued.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 94 F.
(2d) 844)

On petition by Commission for rule to show cause why Fairyfoot Products Company should not be adjudged in contempt for violating order or decree affirming cease and desist order of Commission, respondent's motion to dismiss sustained, and petition dismissed.

Mr. Harris F. Williams and Mr. Robert C. Baumgartner, both of Chicago, Ill., for Fairyfoot Products Co.

[845] Mr. W. T. Kelley, Mr. Martin A. Morrison, Mr. Robert N. McMillen, and Mr. J. W. Nichol, all of Washington, D. C., for Federal Trade Commission.

Before EVANS, MAJOR, and TREANOR, Circuit Judges.

TREANOR, Circuit Judge.

In cause No. 5426, entitled Fairyfoot Products Co., a corporation, petitioner, v. Federal Trade Commission, respondent, the petitioner sought a review of a "cease and desist" order of the Federal Trade Commission. This court concluded that the "cease and desist" order was a proper one and stated its decision in the following language: "The order of the Commission is affirmed."²

² Fairyfoot Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (C. C. A. 7th Circuit), 80 F. (2d) 684.

The Federal Trade Commission now files its petition praying that a rule issue against the Fairyfoot Products Co. to show cause why it should not be adjudged in contempt for an alleged violation of the aforesaid order or decree.

The Fairyfoot Products Co., the respondent in the instant proceedings, has filed its motion to dismiss the petition for a rule to show cause and in support of its motion to dismiss urges the following grounds:

“(1) It is not shown or claimed that any order or decree of this honorable court has been violated.

“(2) The final order or decree entered by this court on December 23, 1935, was merely one of affirmance and not an order or decree of enforcement, and that affirmance was in accord with the opinion of this court, (Fairyfoot Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 80 F. (2d) 684, at 687).”

It is elementary that a court is without power to adjudge one to be in contempt for violation of a court order or decree unless the alleged contemnor has violated a judicial decree, or order, which by its coercive force, acting directly upon the person, lawfully restrains the alleged contemnor from doing the acts complained of.

Under the terms of the Federal Trade Commission Act the circuit court of appeals possesses a twofold function. At the request of one against whom the “cease and desist” order has been directed it has the power to review the proceedings of the Commission to determine whether the order should be affirmed, modified, or set aside. The effect of affirmance is to adjudicate the validity of the order of the Commission and to decree its effectiveness in the sense that disobedience of it by the one against whom it is directed would constitute an unlawful act. But it does not follow that the unlawful act of disobedience can be made the basis of a contempt proceeding in this court, even though the order of affirmance of this court, in a sense, gives legal vitality to the order of the Federal Trade Commission. For the lawfulness of the order of the Commission derives ultimately from the Act of Congress and not from this court’s adjudication of its lawfulness.

Also by the terms of the Federal Trade Commission Act the circuit court of appeals has the power to enforce valid orders of the Commission. In respect to this power of enforcement the act does not purport to grant any new power to the Circuit Court of Appeals, but assumes the existence of the equity power of coercion and obviously contemplates the use of this power. Consequently, Federal courts have concluded that the decree of enforcement “should be along the lines adopted by courts of equity generally in hearing suits for injunction."³

The language of authorization to the Commission to apply for enforcement of its order does not prescribe or authorize any particular type of enforcement procedure, and apparently it was the intention of Congress that the circuit court of appeals should utilize the usual practice adopted by courts of equity in hearing suits for injunction and formulating decrees therein.

Different circuit courts of appeals have had to decide what method of procedure should be followed after the Federal Trade Commission has entered an order with which it alleges the respondent is not complying; and when the respondent has had no opportunity to present evidence that it is not violating the order, and when no [846] proof has been taken before the Commission on that question.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society,⁴ the following facts appeared: The Federal Trade Commission after duly entering an order "to cease and desist" filed its petition in the Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, for an order of enforcement of the previously entered order. In the petition there was an allegation that the respondent had failed and neglected to obey the "cease and desist" order. The respondent answered with a denial that it had failed and neglected to obey the order and the petitioner moved to strike out all of the answer relating to such denial. It was the opinion of this court that it could not act upon the merits of the application for the enforcement of the Commission's order until it should be established as a fact that the respondent had failed or neglected "to obey such order of the Commission."⁵ Consequently, the motion to strike out was overruled for the reason that the answer of denial of failure and neglect to obey the Commission's order made a proper issue of fact. Yet it is clear from the provisions of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act that the question of "failure or neglect to obey the order of the Commission" will not be an issue in a proceeding in this court based upon a petition by an aggrieved party to set aside an order to "cease and desist." In fact in the original proceedings in cause No. 5426 this court entered an order of ³ L. B. Silver Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6) 292 Fed. 752; Butterick Co. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 F. (2d) 910 (certiorari denied 287 U. S. 602).

⁵ "Enforcement of orders. If such person, partnership, or corporation fails or neglects to obey such order of the commission while the same is in effect, the commission may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, within any circuit where the method of competition in question was used or where such person, partnership, or corporation resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of its orders affirmance of the Commission's order although there was no suggestion of any violation of the "cease and desist" order, and when it appeared that the petitioner in fact had desisted from the objectionable practices long prior to the issuance of the "cease and desist" order.

The necessary conclusion from the decisions of this circuit, and we believe from a proper construction of section 5, is that a general order of affirmance is not equivalent to a decree of enforcement; and that a decree of enforcement should be of the general nature and form of a decree of injunction, definitely fixing the duties of the party against whom the "cease and desist" order has been issued.

Nothing that has been said in this opinion is intended to question, or restrict, the wide discretion of the circuit court of appeals to determine in one proceeding the various questions which section 5 authorizes the aggrieved party and the Commission to present to the circuit court of appeals.

In Q. R. S. Music Co. v. Federal Trade Commission,⁶ the petitioner asked this court to set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission asked for an order of enforcement. This court disposed of all the issues presented and made the following order: "Petitioner's petition is denied. The application of respondent for an enforcement order is granted. The clerk will enter an order identical with the one entered by the Commission." The legal effect of denial of petitioner's petition was to affirm the order of the Commission. This court did not consider such affirmance the equivalent of an enforcement decree, but, on the contrary, felt that it was necessary not only to formally grant the application for an enforcement order, but to specifically direct the clerk to enter an original order of this court identical with the one entered by the Commission.

We conclude that the entry of general affirmance by this court in cause No. 5426 was not in legal effect an enforcement decree of this court embodying the prohibitions of the "cease and desist" order of the Commission and enjoining the petitioner from violating the injunctive order of this court.

The motion of the respondent herein, Fairyfoot Products Co., to dismiss the petition of the Federal Trade Commission for rule to show cause is sustained, and the petition is dismissed.

TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 205

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit. May 2, 1938)

ANTI-TRUST LAWS AND SHERMAN ANTI-TRUST ACT—COLLECTIVE SCOPE OF FORMER.

Anti-trust laws regulate monopolistic practices which are repugnant to decent business morality, which are injurious to competitors and to consumers, and which are economically wasteful, but which do not jeopardize to an appreciable degree the very existence of competition (Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A. secs. 1-7, 15 note).

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—RECEIPT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED BY RECIPIENT—INHIBITION'S VALIDITY, ABSENT COMPETITIVE INJURY OR DESTRUCTION.

Injury to or destruction of competition required to make price discrimination illegal was unnecessary to render illegal receipt of brokerage by one who had rendered no services (15 U. S. C. A. sec. 13 (a, c)).

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—PAYMENT BY SELLER TO BUYER, HIS AGENT, ETC., OR CONTROLLED INTERMEDIARY, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED.

The statute relating to payment or acceptance of commissions, brokerage, or other compensation prohibits payment of brokerage by seller to buyer or to his agent or representative or controlled intermediary except for services rendered (15 U. S. C. A. sec. 13 (c)).

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—RECEIPT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED—WHERE COMMISSIONS PAID TO AND PASSED ON BY BUYERS' BROKERAGE COMPANY BALANCED IN PART ONLY BY COMPANY'S CHARGED VALUE OF MARKETING SERVICE.

Where commissions received by brokerage company from sellers for disposing of their products were paid by brokerage company to buyers, for whom brokerage company furnished a combined marketing information and purchasing service, and buyers in about 86 percent. of transactions received as commissions no more than amount paid to company for market information service, payment of commissions to buyers violated statute prohibiting payment or receipt of commissions except for services rendered.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—RECEIPT OR PAYMENT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED—CONSTRUCTION, IN GENERAL.

In construing statute, court was required, if possible, to accord significance and effect to every part thereof.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—PAYMENT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED.

The portion of price discrimination statute describing persons to whom it was unlawful to pay brokerage fees except for services rendered was not separable into constituent parts and that clause therefore stood in its entirety or fell altogether.

An intermediary in a commercial transaction is entitled to nothing more than appropriate compensation by one in whose interest he serves, and one acting in such capacity may not receive fees from seller when he is under contract and does in fact turn over fees to buyer.

TRADE REGULATION—DUE PROCESS.

The Fifth Amendment guaranteeing due process does not prohibit governmental regulation for public welfare, but merely demands that law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious and that the means selected shall have a real and substantial relation to objects sought to be obtained (U. S. C. A. Const. Amend. 5).

INTERSTATE COMMERCE—REGULATION—IN GENERAL.

[688] Congress, under power to regulate commerce, may enact all appropriate legislation for its protection and advancement and may adopt measures to promote its growth and insure its safety.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE—REGULATION—PROTECTION.

The power of Congress to regulate commerce may be exercised to protect interstate commerce from dangers which threaten it.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE—REGULATION—PROTECTION—PRACTICES CALCULATED TO OBSTRUCT OR BURDEN.

A practice threatening to obstruct or unduly burden freedom of interstate commerce is within regulatory powers of Congress under commerce clause and may be met by legislation (U. S. C. A. Const. art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 3).

INTERSTATE COMMERCE—REGULATION—FIFTH AMENDMENT.

The right of freedom or liberty of contract guaranteed by Fifth Amendment does not proscribe exercise by Congress of power to regulate commerce in derogation of that right.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—PAYMENT OR RECEIPT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED—INHIBITION'S OBJECTIVE.

One of main objectives of statute prohibiting payment or receipt of commissions in sales transactions, except for services rendered, was to force price discriminations out into the open where they would be subject to scrutiny of those interested, particularly competing buyers.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—PAYMENT OR RECEIPT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED—FIFTH AMENDMENT.

The statute prohibiting payment or receipt of commissions in sales transactions, except for services rendered, did not violate Fifth Amendment on ground that it deprived brokerage company and its customers of right to make ordinary contracts for disposition of property and services without due process of law.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE, ETC.—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—COMMISSIONS OR BROKERAGE—PAYMENT, ABSENT SERVICE RENDERED BY RECIPIENT—INHIBITION'S VALIDITY.

Congress was authorized to prohibit, on ground that it was unfair, practice of paying commissions in sales transactions to persons who had rendered no services in connection therewith.

Petition by Biddle Purchasing Co. and others to review and set aside order of Commission entered against named petitioner and its officers and agents, directing them to cease and desist from practices found by Commission to violate section 2 (c) of Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act (15 U. Before MANTON, L. HAND, and SWAN, Circuit Judges.

MANTON, Circuit Judge:

Complaint was issued by the Federal Trade Commission, charging petitioners with violating the provisions of the Clayton Act as amended by § 2 (c) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 13 (c)). Petitioner, Biddle Purchasing Co., is in the brokerage business as herein described. Some of the petitioners are buyers while others are sellers of commodities bought and sold in interstate commerce through the Biddle Co. as brokers. The sellers were charged with unlawfully paying brokerage fees to the Biddle Co. for the use of buyers of the commodities in interstate commerce.

The order appealed from provides that the Biddle Co., "its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the purchase or sale of commodities in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from: (1) Receiving or accepting any fee or commission, as brokerage or as an allowance in lieu thereof, from any seller of commodities, which fee or [689] commission is intended to be paid over to the purchaser of such commodities, or which is to be applied for the use and benefit of such purchaser; (2) Paying or granting to any purchaser of commodities any fee or commission received or accepted by said Biddle Purchasing Company, as brokerage or an allowance in lieu thereof, from the seller of such commodities."

The Commission found that those of the petitioners who were sellers violated § 2 (c) of the Robinson-Patman Act by paying brokerage fees to petitioner, Biddle Co., with knowledge of the fact that the fees were intended to be and were being paid over by said Biddle

Co. to its buyers; that the buyers were violating the statute by receiving and accepting brokerage fees paid by the sellers in connection with the purchase of commodities by said buyers, through the Biddle Co.; and that the latter was violating the statute by accepting such fees and transmitting them to the buyers.

Section 2 (c) of the Robinson-Patman Act provides that "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein, where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid."

Biddle Co.'s business method was to obtain subscribers to its combined market information and purchasing service charging therefor from $25 to $50 per month. It provides a trade information and purchasing service for wholesalers and jobbers throughout the country. It also is engaged in selling the products of numerous manufacturers, canners and packers to the concerns for whom it supplies market information and purchasing service. Biddle Co. has written contracts with the buyers. With the sellers oral contracts to dispose of their products were made under which the commissions were paid to Biddle which in turn paid them over to the buyer of the particular commodity. In about 86 percent of these transactions the buyers received back as commissions no more than the amount they had paid to the Biddle Co. for its market information service, but in 14 percent the commissions exceeded that sum and this excess was paid to the buyers. Large numbers of buyers subscribe to its service. It has sold for many sellers. The Biddle Co. is not controlled by or affiliated with either buyers or sellers through stock ownership, but is an independent corporation. This method of transacting business, with the remission of the selling commissions to the buyers, in effect, gives the buyer a discount on his purchase.

The regulation of competition results in a competitive etiquette, in standards of business conduct, in a plane of competition. Trusts were forbidden because they stifled competition and tended to create monopoly. The prohibitions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act set a plane of monopolistic conduct rather than a plane of competition. Anti-trust laws regulate monopolistic practices which are repugnant to decent business morality, which are injurious to competitors and to consumers, which are economically wasteful but which do not jeopardize to an appreciable degree the very existence of competition. Both types of practice must be included in the legal plane of competition; both are types of regulation which enforce each other; both are animated by a common objective notwithstanding the differences of their intermediate ends. Monopolistic purpose and intent (Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375) are illustrated by decisions as in Standard Oil Company case (221 U. S. 1) where the Oil Company was engaged in local price cutting and espionage, established bogus independents, and granted rebates to preferred customers and exacted rebates and preferences from railroads, all for the purpose of suppressing competition. And the American Tobacco Co. (see 221 U. S. 106) employed fighting brands for the same purpose. The United States International Harvester Co., D. C. (214 Fed. 987, appeal dismissed 248 U. S. 587; 274 U. S. 693) [690] closed the channel of trade to competitors by tying up all the main retail outlets with exclusive dealing contracts. It is reasonably clear that most of these methods violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act only when they were a part of a scheme to stifle competition and to obtain control of an industry.

Resale price maintenance has received fuller consideration than any of the other selling devices challenged under the anti-trust laws. Agreements maintaining resale prices have been condemned as a restraint of trade. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373; Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490. And as an unfair method of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act see: F. T. C. v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 441; J. W. Kobi Co. v. F. T. C., 23 F. (2d) 41 (C. C. A. 2). The injury, if any, resulting from price maintenance is suffered not by the competitors of the producer but by the retailer and the ultimate consumer. The courts draw the distinction between price maintenance by agreement and price maintenance by refusing to deal. U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300; Cf. Frey & Sons Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U. S. 208.

Thus the rules governing the maintenance of prices must be included in any discussion of unfair competition, although the problem is somewhat different from other trade practices. But the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, singled out two practices for special treatment, price discrimination and exclusive dealing and other tying agreements. Section 2 forbids discriminations in price not based upon differences in grade, quality, quantity or cost of transportation which substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. The section outlaws unfair discriminations which substantially lessen competition or lead to monopoly. It does not compel a one price sales policy. It does not forbid sales below cost in the absence of discrimination. Porto Rican Amer. Tob. Co. v. American Tob. Co., 30 F. (2d) 234 (C. C. A. 2).

The amendment in § 2 (a) has for its purpose making discrimination in prices unlawful "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them."

It is argued that § 2 (c), 15 U. S. C. A. § 13 (a), under which this proceeding is brought, is to be construed in the light of § 2 (a), and that so construed, the payment or receipt of the brokerage is illegal only when it has such effect upon competition as is provided in § 2 (a). The argument is that the receipt of brokerage here would be illegal only if it restricts competition or restrains trade or injures a competitor. But no complaint is made against Biddle Co. or the other petitioners for this reason. The complaint here is under the provisions of § 2 (c) and not § 2 (a) of the statute. The validity of the order entered is dependent entirely upon the legality of § 2 (c). Section 2 (c) contains no classification provision nor is there anything in it which would justify the conclusion that it would not be uniformly applied. It in no way supports the theory that the relative size of businesses coming within its purview or other differing plans of organization determine the question as to whether or not violations of the statute occur.

Petitioners say that if § 2 (c) is construed to prohibit the payment or receipt of brokerage irrespective of a finding of injurious effect on competition, then § 2 (c) deprives petitioners of their right to make usual and ordinary contracts for the disposition of property and services without due process of law contrary to the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution U. S. C. A. Const. Amend. 5. While the Biddle Co. was disassociated in ownership and management from either buyers or sellers, direct and indirect control can be exercised by buyers or sellers over a broker in transactions of purchase and sale by means other than participation in the broker's ownership and management. In the purchasing transactions which the Biddle Co. executes for its buyers, it is the agent and representative of the buyers and [691] is therefore to that extent subject to their control. The fact that the buyers do not own some or all of the stock of the Biddle Co. does not negative the fact that the Biddle Co. is under their control when so employed.

Biddle Co.'s vice-president testified that its entire income is derived from the monthly service charges.

"Everything we get in buying, we turn back to our clients. We are not dependent on sales. We are dependent on getting orders from people. They are important to us, because it is through the placing of their orders that we get the touch of the market that is so necessary, but we have no immediate interest as regards immediate income from that source."

By the terms of the contract, the buyer "employs Biddle Purchasing Co. of New York to purchase such material as they may order from time to time within reasonable credit limits and agrees to pay Biddle Purchasing Co. for such services $——."

Such is the contract of employment which makes the Biddle Company a purchasing agent for the buyers.

It is clear that the statute prohibits payment of brokerage by the seller to the buyer or his agent or representative or controlled intermediary except for services rendered. Congress intended to prohibit such payments as an unfair trade practice. The report of the House and Senate Conference Committee, submitted in referring the bill in its present form, interprets the section as having this meaning.¹ It is manifest that the words "except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods" prohibits payments which were made here to the buyers.

It is argued that the Biddle Co. is a true intermediary and that under the statute it can represent and collect compensation from both buyer and seller. The Commission, on the other hand, argues that the statute does not permit such an arrangement. We need not decide that question since the evidence shows that Biddle Co. receives its compensation solely from the buyers. What it receives from the sellers is not retained by it but merely passed on to the buyers or credited to their account.

Congress must have intended that payments by sellers should not be made to buyers through any one acting as agent for the buyer. Significance and effect must, if possible, be accorded to every part of the act. United States v. Lexington Mill & Elevator Co., 232 U. S. 399. In the last phrase of the section "either to the other party" etc., the description of the persons to whom it is unlawful to pay brokerage fees is not separable into constituent parts, and hence this clause stands in its entirety or falls altogether. It may not be said that payments to buyers are in any different category than those to agents or those who act for or under the control of the buyers. If buyers' agents or intermediaries are excepted for services rendered, so too are the buyers themselves. The intent of Congress must be recognized and applied and this may best be given effect by a construction of the phrase "except for services rendered" that will harmonize with the remainder of the section. As the House and Senate Committees said, the intermediary is entitled to nothing more than "appropriate compensation by the one in whose interest he so serves," and one who acts in such capacity may not receive fees from the seller when he is under contract and does in fact turn over such fees to the buyer. Cf. Lehigh Valley R. R. v. United States, 243 U. S. 444; Union Pac. R. Co., v. Updike Grain Co., 222 U. S. 215; I. C. C. v. Peavey & Co., 222 U. S. 42. Indeed, the brokerage fees by the sellers to the Biddle Company could not be made in good faith as compensation for services rendered, since the fees are intend[692]ed for the buyers and are immediately transmitted to them.

The Fifth Amendment of the Constitution, U. S. C. A. Const. Amend. 5, does not prohibit governmental regulation for the public welfare. The guaranty of due process merely demands that the law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary or capricious and that the means selected shall have a real and substantial relation to the objects sought to be obtained. Nebia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502. Congress has the power to regulate commerce and this gives it power to enact "all appropriate legislation for its protection and advancement * * * to adopt measures to promote its growth and insure its safety, protect, control, and restrain." U. S. C. A. Const. art. 1 § 8, cl. 3. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Ry. & S. S. Clerks, 281 U. S. 548. It may be exercised to protect interstate commerce from dangers which threaten it. Ky. Whip & Collar Co. v. Ill. Central R. R. Co., 299 U. S. 334; N. L. R. B. v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U. S. 1, 37. A practice which threatens to obstruct or unduly burden the freedom of interstate commerce is within the regulatory powers of Congress under the commerce clause. If Congress decides the fact of danger, it may meet it by legislation. Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495.

The right of freedom or liberty of contract guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution does not proscribe the exercise by Congress of its power to regulate commerce in derogation of that right. Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, 280 U. S. 420. As said in Nebia v. New York, supra: "Legislation concerning sales of goods, and incidentally affecting prices, have repeatedly been held valid. In this class fall laws forbidding unfair competition by the charging of lower prices in one locality than those exacted in another, by giving trade inducements to purchasers, and by other forms of price discrimination. The public policy with respect to free competition has engendered state and federal statutes prohibiting monopolies, which have been upheld."

Congress may have had in mind that one of the principal evils inherent in the payment of brokerage fees by the seller to the buyer directly or through an intermediary, is the fact that this practice makes it possible for the seller to discriminate in price without seeming to do so. If a price discount is given as a brokerage payment to a controlled intermediary, it may be and often is concealed from other customers of the seller. One of the main objectives of § 2 (c) was to force price discriminations out into the open where they would be subject to the scrutiny of those interested, particularly competing buyers. See: Trunz Pork Stores v. Wallace, 70 F. (2d) 688 (C. C. A. 2). The order entered is responsive to and justified by the findings of the Commission and satisfies the requirements of due process.

Petitioners refer to Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minn. (274 U. S. 1), which recognizes the distinction between prohibition and regulation. The rule of that case is not inconsistent with the principle here announced. Section 2 (c) was clearly intended to restore equality of opportunity in business by strengthening the anti-trust laws through protecting trade and commerce against unfair practices and unlawful price discrimination. The power of Congress to define this trade practice and declare it to be unfair cannot be doubted. F. T. C. v. Keppel & Bro., 291 U. S. 304.

Petition denied.

SWAN, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

For reasons which may be briefly stated, I am unable to concur in the opinion of the court.

For an agreed monthly subscription price the Biddle Purchasing Company supplies a market informational and purchasing service to some 2,400 subscribers (wholesalers and distributors). The Biddle Company keeps in touch with about 5,000 producers and gets prices and other market information which it transmits to its subscribers. When a subscriber desires to make a purchase he informs Biddle Company of his need, and the price he wants to pay, and Biddle Company sends the order to one of the producers who ships and bills the goods direct to the subscriber. The seller pays Biddle Company a brokerage commission on the sale and [693] this is credited to the subscriber in reduction of the subscription price agreed to be paid for Biddle Company's service. About 14 percent of the subscribers receive cash remittances after their subscriptions have been completely paid for by the crediting of commissions.

The Commission has found that Biddle Company does not act for the sellers but only for its subscribers. In my opinion this finding can not be sustained. Biddle Company performs a regular brokerage service for the sellers and receives the same fee as they pay other brokers for a similar service. The fact that in many instances Biddle Company selects the seller, since the subscriber frequently does not designate from whom to buy, shows clearly that Biddle Company performs a service for the seller. It performs a further service in bringing the seller's products and prices to the attention of the subscribers, even though no sale immediately results. Biddle Company also performs a service for the buyer by supplying market information in addition to the purchasing service when an order is placed. Unless the statute forbids it, there could be no objection to the Biddle Company getting the customary brokerage from the seller and also a fee from the buyer, since the parties know that it is to be compensated by both. In other words, if Biddle Company kept the commissions paid by the sellers, the statute would not forbid it. It would be within the exception "for services rendered." Section 1 (c) of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act (49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. A. § 13 (c)), though ungrammatically phrased, expresses the intention to forbid a seller from paying a brokerage fee to a buyer or his agent unless the payee renders some service to the seller. Its object is to prevent unfair competitive conditions which are created when a buyer gets a lower price than competitors in the guise of a commission paid to the buyer or to some agent or dummy. In my opinion it was not intended to eliminate such a business as the Biddle Company does for 86 percent of its subscribers. Their goods cost them as much as their competitors would pay for the same goods. In addition, they pay something to Biddle Company for the service it renders them. In effect the arrangement is that the Biddle Company will charge for its informational and purchasing service the difference between what it collects from sellers as brokerage on orders placed by the subscriber, and the monthly subscription price. This means that different subscribers pay different sums for the Biddle service and the less they order through the Biddle Company the more they pay for informational and purchasing service, but I see nothing in the statute forbidding that. Only when the Biddle Company pays over brokerage fees in excess of the subscriber's subscription price does the buyer get a discriminatory rebate which gives him an advantage over a competitor who does not take the Biddle service. It seems to me that the statute should be construed to forbid Biddle Company's method of doing business only with respect to the 14 percent of its customers who really get a price reduction on the goods through the commissions paid Biddle Company by the sellers. Such a construction will save a legitimate and useful business which has existed for half a century, and one which I do not believe Congress intended to outlaw by the statute in question.

I think the order of the Commission should be vacated except in so far as it forbids the Biddle Company from paying over to a subscriber any excess of commissions above the subscription price of the service.

RUBBER COMPANY ¹

No. 756.

(Supreme Court. Argued April 25, 1938. Decided May 16, 1938)

PRICE DISCRIMINATION—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—ROBINSON-PATMAN AMENDING ACT—WHERE ILLEGALITY CLEAR UNDER SUBSEQUENT AMENDING PROVISIONS AND SUBSEQUENT VOLUNTARY ABANDONMENT AND CONTRACT CANCELLATION—WHETHER THEREAFTER CEASE AND DESIST ORDER UNDER ORIGINAL PROVISIONS MOOT ON APPEAL.

A proceeding to review "cease and desist" order of the Federal Trade Commission against manufacturer's discrimination in prices between purchasers in violation of the Clayton Act did not become moot when, because Clayton Act had been so amended as to make such discrimination clearly illegal, manufacturer voluntarily abandoned such discrimination and canceled contracts made pursuant thereto; and hence circuit court of appeals should proceed to determine validity of order under original statute. (Clayton Act, Secs. 2, 11, 15 U. S. C. A., Secs. 13, 21; Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, Secs. 1, 2, 15 U. S. C. A., Secs. 13, 21a).

PRICE DISCRIMINATION—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2—ROBINSON-PATMAN AMENDING ACT—PRIOR ORDERS OF COMMISSION—EFFECT.

The statute amending the Clayton Act manifests intent that orders of the Federal Trade Commission entered before its passage should remain in effect.

A "cease and desist" order by Federal Trade Commission against manufacturer's sale of tires at discriminatory prices in violation of Clayton Act was not affected when, while proceeding to review such order was pending, Clayton Act was so amended as to make such discrimination clearly illegal.

Mr. William B. Cockley and Mr. Grover Higgins on brief for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In September, 1933, the Federal Trade Commission charged respondent, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, with the violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. 13) in selling tires, tubes, etc., to Sears, Roebuck & Company at discriminatory prices. Respondent, invoking the first proviso in Section 2,¹ contended that its contracts with Sears, Roebuck & Company for sales involving lower net prices than those charged to independent dealers were made because of the great difference in the quantities sold. After hearing, the Commission ruled that it did not consider a difference in [864] price to be on account of quantity unless it was based on a difference in cost and was reasonably related to and approximately no more than that difference. In March 1936, the Commission issued an order requiring respondent to desist from discriminations in prices as described.

Pending the hearing in the circuit court of appeals of respondent's petition for review, the Congress amended Section 2 of the Clayton Act. Act of June 19, 1936, c. 592, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. A. § 13. The first proviso was amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered."

Thereupon, respondent informed the circuit court of appeals that in view of this provision respondent had ceased to manufacture tires for Sears, Roebuck & Company under the terms of its existing

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodities sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition."

contract; that, to dispose of the stock on hand, the parties had made a new price arrangement designed to conform to the new law; and that within the year all transactions between re[259]spondent and Sears, Roebuck & Company ceased and obligations were terminated by mutual releases. 6 Cir., 92 F. (2d) 677, 679.

Considering that there was no controversy between the parties as to the illegal character of respondent's practices under the amended act, the circuit court of appeals concluded that the case had become moot. In that view the court set aside the order of the Commission and remanded the case "but without direction to the Commission to dismiss the complaint and without prejudice to its filing a supplemental complaint in the original proceeding if under Section 2 of the amendatory act this may now be done" as to which the court expressed no opinion. Id., p. 681.

Both the Commission and the respondent contended below, and contend here, that the case has not become moot. While they disagree in their reasoning, they come to the same conclusion upon this point, and both ask that the case be remanded to the circuit court of appeals with directions to determine it upon the merits. We think that their conclusion is correct and that the remand should be made.

Section 11 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 21) provides that whenever the Commission has reason to believe that any person is violating or has violated the provisions of the act, and upon hearing so finds, the Commission shall issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations. In case of failure to obey its order, the Commission may apply to the circuit court of appeals for enforcement. And anyone required to cease and desist from a violation charged may seek review in the circuit court of appeals, praying that the order be set aside. The provisions of the act of June 19, 1936, show clearly that the orders of the Commission entered before its passage are to remain in effect. Section 2 of that act provides that nothing therein contained shall "affect [260] rights of action arising, or litigation pending, or orders of the Federal Trade Commission issued and in effect or pending on review, based on section 2 of said act of October 15, 1914, [Section 13 of this title] prior to the effective date of this amendatory act [June 15, 1936]."

Discontinuance of the practice which the Commission found to constitute a violation of the act did not render the controversy moot. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S. 290, 309, 310; Southern Pacific Company v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 433, 452; Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 514-516; National Labor Relations Board v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, 303 U. S. 261; Guarantee Veterinary Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 285

Fed. 853, 859, 860; Chamber of Commerce v. Federal Trade Commission, 13 F. (2d) 673, 686, 687. The Commission, reciting its findings and the conclusion that respondent had violated the act, required respondent to cease and desist from the particular discriminations which the order described. That is a continuing order. Its efficacy, if valid, was not affected by the subsequent passage or the provisions of the amendatory act. As a continuing or[865]der, the Commission may take proceedings for its enforcement if it is disobeyed. But under the statute respondent was entitled to seek review of the order and to have it set aside if found to be invalid. The question which both parties sought to have the circuit court of appeals decide was whether respondent's conduct was a violation of the original statute. Upon the conclusion that it was such a violation, the Commission based its order. Neither the transactions subsequent to that order nor the passage of the amendatory act deprived the respondent of its right to challenge the order and to have its validity determined or the Commission of its right to have its order maintained if validly made.

The decree of the circuit court of appeals is reversed and the cause is remanded to that court for a determination of the merits.

It is so ordered.

Mr. Justice STONE, Mr. Justice CARDOZO, and Mr. Justice REED took no part in the consideration and decision of this case.
