"Sweatproof," as descriptive of leather, implies a quality of imperviousness to the penetration of perspiration and to the adverse or deteriorating action of perspiration. While leather is sometimes coated with lacquer to prevent penetrability by perspiration, such treatment is but temporary and would be effective only so long as the lacquered surface remained intact. There is no leather watch strap known to the trade that could be accurately or properly designated as "Sweatproof."

The word "glass" as universally understood for thousands of years by the trade and the public, is an amorphous substance, usually transparent or translucent, consisting ordinarily of a mixture of silicates, as sand, fused together, and in some instances containing borates, phosphates, and other inorganic matter. There is a plastic product on the market trade-marked "Vinylite," made of petroleum, coal, and salt with special chemicals producing a synthetic resin resembling glass in appearance but which in fact is not glass. An article made of such organic substance Vinylite and marketed under a trade name containing the word "glass," or the term "glas," or other designation connoting glass, is misbranded in that it imports or implies to a substantial portion of the buying public that such product is made of inorganic silica glass or material containing glass in some form.

Cambridge Straps, Inc., in the sale and distribution of its wrist watch straps or other commodities in commerce, agreed to cease and desist from:

(a) The use of the word "Sweatproof" in its advertising matter, on its tags, labels, mounting cards, or in any other way as descriptive of its wrist watch straps; and from the use of any other words or representations of similar implication, the effect of which tends or may tend to convey the belief to purchasers that any wrist watch straps or other leather products offered for sale and sold by it have been rendered impervious to the penetration of perspiration and to the adverse or deteriorating action of perspiration.

(b) The use of fictitious price tags or labels indicating that its wrist watch straps sell or are intended to be sold for 75 cents, $1, and $1.50; or in any other way, directly or by implication, representing that its various types of straps or other articles of merchandise have regular values and customarily sell for sums in excess of the prices actually charged therefor.

(c) The use, either with or without contradictory explanation, of the word "glass" or other glass connoting term, either alone or in connection with the word "Misto" or with any other word or words, or in any way as a trade name or designation for, or as descriptive of Vinylite or similar products, so as to import or imply, or the effect of which tends or may tend to convey the belief that such products are glass or contain glass or are fabricated from fibers of glass, that is to say, inorganic silica glass, as the term "glass" is ordinarily understood and accepted by the trade and the public. (Nov. 7, 1941.)

3258. Wrist Watch Straps—Composition.—S. & B. Lederer Co., a corporation, engaged in the manufacture of novelties, including wrist watch straps, and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce as set forth therein.

The word "glass" as universally understood for thousands of years by the trade and the public, is an amorphous substance, usually transparent or translucent, consisting ordinarily of a mixture of silicates, as sand, fused together, and in some cases, containing borates, phosphates, and other inorganic matter. There is a plastic product on the market trade-marked "Vinylite," made of petroleum, coal, and salt with special chemicals producing a synthetic resin resembling glass in appearance but which in fact is not glass. An article made of such organic substance Vinylite and marketed under a trade name containing the word "glass," or the term "glas," or other designation connoting glass, is misbranded in that it imports or implies to a substantial portion of the buying public that such product is made of inorganic silica glass or material containing glass in some form.

S. & B. Lederer Co., in the sale and distribution of its wrist watch straps or other commodities in commerce, agreed forthwith to cease and desist from the use, either with or without contradictory explanation, of the word "glass," or the syllable "glas," or any other glass connoting term to denominate, designate, or describe a product which is not composed of glass; or the use thereof or of any other word, term or syllable of similar import, as part of a trade-name or designation such as "Nu-Glass," "Glass-Band," "Glass Craft," "Flex Glass," "Glass Swagger," "Stretch Glass," or "Glas-Las-Tic" for, or as descriptive of, Vinylite or similar products, so as to import or imply, or the effect of which tends or may tend to convey the belief that such products are glass or contain glass or are fabricated from fibers of glass, that is to say, inorganic silica glass, as the term "Glass" is ordinarily understood and accepted by the trade and the public. (Nov. 12, 1941.)

3259. Wrist Watch Straps—Composition.—Bruner-Ritter, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the sale and distribution of wrist watch straps in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce as set forth therein.

The word "glass" as universally understood for thousands of years by the trade and the public, is an amorphous substance, usually transparent or translucent, consisting ordinarily of a mixture of silicates, as sand, fused together, and in some cases containing borates, phosphates, and other inorganic matter. There is a plastic product on the market trade-marked "Vinylite" made of petroleum, coal, and salt with special chemicals producing a synthetic resin resembling glass in appearance but which in fact is not glass. An article made of such organic substance Vinylite and marketed under a trade name containing the word "glass," or the term "glas," or other designation connoting glass, is misbranded in that it imports or implies to a substantial portion of the buying public that such product is made of inorganic silica glass or material containing glass in some form.

Bruner-Ritter, Inc., in the sale and distribution of its wrist watch straps or other commodities in commerce, agreed forthwith to cease and desist from the use, either with or without contradictory explanation, of the word "glass" or other glass connoting term, either alone or in connection with the word "Misto" or with any other word or words, or in any way as a trade name or designation for, or as descriptive of Vinylite or similar products, so as to import or imply, or the effect of which tends or may tend to convey the belief that such products are glass or contain glass or are fabricated from fibers of glass, that is to say, inorganic silica glass, as the term "glass" is ordinarily understood and accepted by the trade and the public. (Nov. 12, 1941.)

Frank Lamorelle, trading as "Landon School," in connection with the offering for sale, sale, or distribution of his courses of instruction in commerce, as commerce is defined by the Federal Trade Commission Act, agreed to cease and desist forthwith from stating or representing in his advertising or printed matter or in any other way that the "picture chart method of teaching" is an exclusive feature of the Landon School, or that the said School is the only school which uses the picture chart method of instruction. The said individual also agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing that enrollments which may be accepted by the Landon School are limited to only an exclusive or select number, when in fact, no such limitation actually prevails as to either the number or the qualifications of students who are accepted by the said school. (Nov. 14, 1941.)

(a) Representing, directly or by implication, that such garments are purchased or obtained from the Customs Service of the United States Treasury Department unless each and every article or item thereof is in fact obtained from the source as represented; or from any other misleading claim or representation concerning the source or agency from or through which such products are obtained, which has the capacity, tendency or effect of misleading or deceiving the purchasing or consuming public;

(b) Advertising, selling or offering for sale used, worn, or secondhand fur garments unless in all advertising pertaining thereto and also by means of labels or tags attached thereto the fact be clearly indicated that such garments are used, worn or secondhand. (Nov. 14, 1941.)

A hide known as kip is obtained from a semimature steer or cow and classed as cattle hide but never as calfskin. There is a sharp distinction between cattle hides and calfskins, as these terms are understood by both the trade and the general public. Calfskins are more plump in proportion to weight and thickness and have a finer and more even grain than kips, or cattle hides. A product made of kip or cattle hide and labeled or designated "calf" or "calfskin" is misbranded in that it imports or implies to the buying public that such product is actually made of calfskin.

Alligator leather is made from the raw skins of alligators obtained from tropical America, has a distinctive appearance and also an unusual surface durability, and requires a slow and expensive finishing process, demanding a higher price than ordinary leather. A product made of calfskin or cowhide grained to resemble alligator skin and labeled or designated "Alligator" is misbranded in that it misleads and deceives purchasers as to the true nature and quality of the product so described.

In the jewelry trade the mark "1/90-10K" means and is understood to mean that 1/90 of the total weight of an article so marked is composed of 10 carat gold, or that the entire article has 4.5 parts fine gold per one thousand parts. The term "Rolled Gold" as now used refers to "filled gold," which, according to the standards set up by the Department of Commerce of the United States, means and is understood to mean that the article so marked has a coating of gold of not less than 10-carat fineness, and that the weight of such gold is not less than one-twentieth the weight of the entire article.

Max Gershberg and Sol Lasko, and each of them, in the sale and distribution of their wrist watch straps or other merchandise in commerce as defined by said act, agreed forthwith to cease and desist from:

(a) Branding, labeling, or otherwise designating as "Calf" or "Calfskin," either with or without the word "Genuine" as descriptive of a product which is not in fact composed of calfskin as understood and accepted by the trade and the public.

(b) Branding, labeling, or otherwise describing as "Alligator" or as "Antique Alligator," or the use of any other alligator connoting term, as descriptive of a product which is not in fact composed of real alligator skin as the same is known to the public and the trade.

(c) Branding, labeling, or otherwise marking its metal buckles or other articles with the term "1/90-10Kt." when in fact the gold content of the entire article is less than 4.5 parts fine gold per one thousand parts; or using in its advertising or as a stamp or marking for a product the term "Gold Rolled" unless such article has a coating of not less than 10-carat fineness and unless the weight of such gold is at least 1/20 the weight of the entire article.

(d) Labeling or otherwise describing articles which have been merely gold electroplated with terminology that indicates the presence of substantial quantities of gold, or representing as "Gold Plate" an article, the gold content of which is too minute or the coating of which is too thin to merit such description.

(e) Representing a wrist watch strap or other merchandise to be "Custom Made" or "Custom Built" unless and until such wrist watch strap or other merchandise is actually made upon the specific order of the customer who buys it.

(f) The use of fictitious price tags or labels indicating that its wrist watch straps sell or are intended to be sold for 50 cents, 75 cents, $1,

$1.25, and $1.50; or in any other way, directly or by implication, representing that its various types of straps or other articles of merchandise have regular values and customarily sell for sums in excess of the prices actually charged therefor. (Nov. 17, 1941.)

3282. Cellulose Acetate Plastic Plates—Composition.—Ivan T. Johnson Co., Inc., a corporation, engaged as national distributor for Doane Products Corp., of Meriden, Conn., in the sale and distribution, in interstate commerce, of cellulose acetate plastic plates for use in lighting fixtures, in competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce as set forth therein.

The word "glass" as universally understood for thousands of years by the trade and the public is an amorphous substance, usually transparent or translucent, consisting ordinarily of a mixture of silicates, as sand, fused together, and in some cases containing borates, phosphates, and other inorganic matter. As used in the lighting industry, the word "Louver" denotes a series of baffles so arranged that the light may be seen without the direct rays striking the eye. There is a louver product on the market of laminated cellulose acetate plastic sheeting which resembles glass but which in fact is not glass. An article made of such organic substance and marketed under a trade name containing the word "glass," or the term "glas," or other designation connoting glass, is misbranded in that it imports or implies to a substantial portion of the buying public that such product is made of inorganic silica glass or material containing glass in some form.

Ivan T. Johnson Co., Inc., in connection with its sale and distribution of cellulose acetate plastic plates for use in lighting fixtures or other merchandise in commerce as defined by the Federal Trade Commission Act, agreed forthwith to cease and desist from the use of the word "glass," or of the syllable "glas," or any other glass-connoting term to denominate, designate or describe a product which is not actually composed of glass; or the use thereof or of any other word, term, or syllable of similar import, as part of a trade name or designation such as "Louverglas" for, or as descriptive of, plastic or other products which are not in fact glass, so as to import or imply, or the effect of which tends or may tend to convey the belief that such products are glass or contain glass or are fabricated from fibers of glass, that is to say, inorganic silica glass as the term "glass" is ordinarily understood and accepted by the Trade and the public. (Nov. 28, 1941.)

Johnson Co., Inc., in competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce as set forth therein.

The word "glass" as universally understood for thousands of years by the trade and the public, is an amorphous substance, usually transparent or translucent, consisting ordinarily of a mixture of silicates, as sand, fused together, and in some cases containing borates, phosphates, and other inorganic matter. As used in the lighting industry, the word "Louver" denotes a series of baffles so arranged that the light may be seen without the direct rays striking the eye. There is on the market a louver product made for said corporation of cellulose acetate plastic sheeting, which resembles glass but which in fact is not glass. An article made of such organic substance and marketed under a trade name containing the word "glass," or the term "glas," or other designation connoting glass, is misbranded in that it imports or implies to a substantial portion of the buying public that such product is made of inorganic silica glass or material containing glass in some form.

Doane Products Corp., in connection with the sale and distribution of its plastic material for use in lighting fixtures or other merchandise in commerce as defined by the Federal Trade Commission Act, agreed forthwith to cease and desist from the use, or permitting the use by its distributors of the word "glass," or of the syllables "glas," or any other glass-connoting term to denominate, designate, or describe a product which is not actually composed of glass; or the use thereof or of any other word, term, or syllable of similar import, as part of a trade name or designation such as "louverglas" for, or as descriptive of, plastic or other products which are not in fact glass, so as to import or imply, or the effect of which tends or may tend to convey the belief that such products are glass or contain glass or are fabricated from fibers of glass, that is to say, inorganic silica glass as the term "glass" is ordinarily understood and accepted by the trade and public. (Nov. 28, 1941.)

sist from the alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce as set forth therein.

Garden City Publishing Co., Inc. in connection with the sale and distribution of its book, "High School—Self Taught," or any similar publication, in commerce as defined by said act, agreed it will forthwith cease and desist from:

(a) Characterizing, describing, or referring to said book, or the text or contents thereof, as comprising or containing a "high school education," or a "complete," "authoritative," or "modern" 4-year course, high school or otherwise; or representing in any way whatsoever that such book embraces or is equivalent to "4 years of high school study" or of "high school work," or "six courses a year for 4 years";

(b) Representing, by statement or by inference, that such book contains the "materials" or the "essentials" of a 4-year high school course, or "every subject, every fact that a high school might have given you," or "the information regularly contained in 24 complete high school courses," or "exactly what you need in 24 high school subjects"; or in any other manner asserting, importing, or implying that the reading of, or even a most intensive study of, said volume will or can of itself equip the student with the schooling, training, mental discipline, and detailed information afforded by a 4-year high school or similar course of instruction.

(c) Representing that said volume contains "24 complete subjects" or any "complete" subject, or "all that you missed—and more" by reason of not having finished school; or that such "miracle of condensation" confers upon the reader a "liberal education," or anything more than a slight or superficial acquaintance with subjects taught in high school.

(d) Representing that "15 or 20 minutes a day" or a "few minutes a day" spent with such book will give the reader a high-school education, or enable him to acquire "an authoritative understanding" of, or to "master," "any subject" selected; or that any amount of time whatsoever, confined to said volume, will accomplish such ends.

(e) Representing that "in a few weeks" one may acquire by means of said book "the same knowledge you would expect to spend months to learn in an ordinary school"; or that "in a very short time," or at all, one can, by the reading of such volume, have a "surprising command" of English or mathematics or history or literature or any of "the other important subjects" essential for an "educated" person or a "successful" person.

(h) Representing that for a reader of such book, the actual effort of acquiring an educational status comparable to that of a high school graduate, or the attainment of the financial, social, and cultural successes above indicated, is so negligible as to be "more fun than bridge or the movies" or any like pastime or social diversion.

(i) Use of the term "high school graduate" as applied to specified business qualifications, Government reports, or the earnings of those who have "finished" high school, in any manner connoting or suggesting that the reader of such book will thereby attain the status, standing, prestige, or dignity of a high-school graduate.

(l) Representing, directly or inferentially, that a short quiz, referred to as "self testing examinations" and consisting of questions with their corresponding answers, is the equivalent of, or will meet the requirements of, the tests exacted of a 4-year high-school student.

(m) Asserting that the offer of such book is "the greatest educational bargain in all history," or by similar extravagant expressions, representing to an unsophisticated public that said offer is astoundingly advantageous from a monetary standpoint.

In the cotton duck or canvas products industry and trade the weight of a duck or canvas product indicates the weight on a square-yard basis of the original grey goods used in the manufacture thereof and does not include the weight of any material used therein as a so-called waterproof treatment. Commercial Standards CS 28-32, effective January 1, 1932, as adopted by representative manufacturers, distributors, and users of cotton fabric tents, tarpaulins, and covers, read in part as follows:

"Waterproof-treated goods.—Since the practice of indefinite and misleading markings and descriptions of 'waterproof-treated' fabric tents, tarpaulins, and covers by their finished weight works and injustice and is misleading to the buying public, the industry desires to eliminate this practice and arrange in lieu thereof a definite standard method of marking which will be clear to both buyer and seller."

"Waterproof-treated or untreated cotton fabric tents, tarpaulins, and covers shall be marked with a printed tag or stencil to show the original grey goods weight on a square-yard basis. Such ounce weight designation on the fabric shall be carried to the nearest $\frac{1}{100}$ ounce * * *."

BENJAMIN JAFFE v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 7510—F. T. C. Dock. 3662

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. Nov. 14, 1941)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—APPELLATE PROCEDURE AND PROCEEDINGS—PRIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS—WHERE DECISION OF SAME ISSUES IN, AND INSTANT PETITIONER PRESIDENT OF DEFENDANT CORPORATION THEREIN.

Where every question raised by petitioner seeking to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission essential to the validity of the order was decided in a former case wherein an order was directed against a corporation of which petitioner was president, the order in the instant case would be affirmed not because the former case was res judicata but because the reasoning employed and conclusions reached were applicable and controlling in the instant case. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45.

(The syllabus, with substituted caption, is taken from 123 F. (2d) 814)

On petition to review order of Commission, order affirmed, etc.

[815] Mr. Benjamin F. Morrison, of Chicago Ill., for petitioner.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, chief counsel, and Mr. Martin A. Morrison, asst. chief counsel, both of Washington, D. C., for respondent.

Before EVANS and MAJOR, Circuit Judges, and LINDLEY, District Judge.

MAJOR, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission, entered September 5, 1940, under the authority of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 45). Petitioner was engaged in the sale of a variety of merchandise to customers located in a great number of states. The plan of disposal contemplated that it would be done by petitioner's customers in accordance with the plan submitted and provided by petitioner. Such plan included, among other things, push or punch cards. That petitioner's plan for the disposal of its merchandise involved a game of chance or lottery was found by the Commission and is not disputed.

Respondent asserts that every issue presented in the instant case was decided by this court in Chicago Silk Co. v. F. T. C., 90 F. (2d) 689 [25 F. T. C. 1692]. Petitioner argues that this case is not res adjudicata of the case now before us. That, however, is not the question. The fact is that in the Chicago Silk Company case the order was directed against a corporation of which the petitioner in the instant case was president. Petitioner fails to point out any distinction between this case and that one except to argue that there must be a difference, or there would have been no occasion for respondent initiating the instant proceeding. What purpose respondent had in instituting the present action, when it had an order in the other case directed against the corporation and its officers, including the instant petitioner as president, is of no concern.

We are satisfied that every question raised by the petitioner in the instant case essential to the validity of the Commission's order was decided in the former case. Under such circumstances, a discussion of the points argued by petitioner would serve no useful purpose. The Commission's order in the instant case is affirmed, not because the former case is res adjudicata, but because the reasoning employed and conclusions reached are applicable and controlling here.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

This Court is of the opinion:

(1) That the statute under which the Federal Trade Commission's complaint was issued against plaintiff (15 U. S. C. A. secs. 14, 21) gives to the Commission in the first instance and to the appropriate United States Circuit Court of Appeals on petition to review any order to cease and desist which may be entered by the Commission, exclusive jurisdiction to determine every question raised by plaintiff's complaint and motion.

(2) That therefore this Court is without jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit and has no power to grant the relief which plaintiff seeks. (Compare: Meyers, et al. v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 303 U. S. 41; Newport News Building & Dry Dock Company v. Schauflyer, et al., 303 U. S. 54; Anniston Manufacturing Co. v. Davis, 301 U. S. 337, 345-346).

DECREE

This cause coming on to be heard at this term of Court upon the plaintiff's Complaint for Injunction and other Relief, upon plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction and for Temporary Injunction and upon defendant's Motion to Dismiss said complaint, said matters by agreement of counsel having been heard on the same date, and the Court being of the opinion that it is without jurisdiction to entertain this action because of the conclusions of law separately stated and filed herewith:

It is adjudged, ordered, and decreed that plaintiff's said motion be, and the same hereby is, denied, that defendants' said motion be, and

No. 7755—F. T. C. Dock. 3924

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. Nov. 26, 1941)

Order, dismissing, pursuant to stipulation of counsel, petition for review of order of Commission in Docket 3924, 33 F. T. C. 58, 65, requiring respondents, their representatives, etc., in connection with the offer, etc., in commerce, of rug and carpet cleaning machines, to cease and desist from representing that their rug and carpet washer will restore the original color, or destroy germs in rugs and carpets, etc., and from misrepresenting profits of operators of their said rug and carpet washer, as in order in detail set forth.

ORDER

Pursuant to stipulation of counsel, it is ordered that the petition for review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission, entered on June 11, 1941, in this cause, be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

¹ Plaintiff's "Complaint for Injunction and Other Relief," as respects the prayer thereof that order or notice of rule issue, requested that the defendants therein be directed to appear and "show cause, if any they have, why they should not be ordered, required, and directed:

"1. To dismiss forthwith their complaint against the plaintiff herein.

"2. To grant and allow to the plaintiff the right to be heard orally upon the plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendants' complaint, and plaintiff's motion to vacate defendants' order of June 21, 1940. [Said order, as set forth in the complaint, denying plaintiff's motion to dismiss without hearing, was followed by a later one permitting the filing of briefs but not oral argument, and final order denying the motion without prejudice to renewal upon final argument on the merits].

"3. To furnish to plaintiff forthwith, or within a reasonable time to be fixed by this Court, an adequate and complete bill of particulars, and specifications of defendants' charges against plaintiff.

"4. To desist and refrain from holding or conducting any hearings on or under their complaint against plaintiff for at least thirty days from and after the time when defendants shall have furnished plaintiff with an adequate and complete bill of particulars or specifications of their charges against plaintiff.

"5. To dismiss their complaint against plaintiff if they shall fail, neglect, or refuse to furnish to plaintiff an adequate and complete bill of particulars or specifications of their charges against plaintiff within 30 days after having been ordered so to do by this Court."

Commission's motion to dismiss was based on the ground (1) that the Court was without jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit; (2) that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed; and (3) that plaintiff had a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law.

SCIENTIFIC MANUFACTURING CO., INC. ET AL. v.
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ¹

No. 7756—F. T. C. Dock. 3874

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit. Dec. 19, 1941)

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT—SECTION 5—“UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE ACTS OR PRACTICES IN COMMERCE”—WHEELER-LEA AMENDMENT—COMPETITION.

The Federal Trade Commission Act was amended by adding a denouncement of “unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce” for purpose of clothing Federal Trade Commission with jurisdiction to act in respect of unfair acts or practices in commerce regardless of their effect upon competition, and effect of amendment was to so broaden commission’s jurisdiction as to enable commission to act where only public interest was adversely affected by the unfair practices. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a), and as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a).

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT—SECTION 5—“UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE ACTS OR PRACTICES IN COMMERCE”—WHEELER-LEA AMENDMENT—COMPETITION—PERFORMANCE IN TRADE AFFECTED.

Under amendment to Federal Trade Commission Act by adding a denouncement of “unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce”, the Federal Trade Commission’s intervention is limited to acts or practices in the affected trade, the restrainable acts or practices in commerce continuing to be such as are performed or perpetrated in the trade affected by the offenses, whether or not there is competition. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a), and as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a).

FINDINGS OF COMMISSION—APPELLATE PROCEDURE AND PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—WHERE SUPPORTED BY.

Under statute, the findings of Federal Trade Commission as to facts, if supported by testimony, are conclusive, and courts are bound to accept them as such. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS OR PRACTICES—DISPARAGEMENT—PUBLICATIONS—WHERE PUBLISHER NOT MATERIALLY INTERESTED IN TRADE AFFECTED—ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSILS.

The Federal Trade Commission could not enjoin sale and distribution in interstate commerce of pamphlets concerning the use of aluminum cooking utensils to effect that use of aluminum for cooking purposes was dangerous, where publishers of pamphlets were not engaged or materially interested in cooking utensil trade. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—DISPARAGEMENT—PUBLICATIONS—TRADE INVOLVED—IF SELLER, ETC., OF MATTER NOT INTERESTED IN FINANCIALLY.

The publication, sale, and distribution of matter concerning an article of trade by a person not engaged or financially interested in commerce in that trade is not an "unfair or deceptive act or practice" within contemplation of Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, if the published matter, even though unfounded or untrue, represents the publisher's honest opinion or belief. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a), and as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a).

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS OR PRACTICES—DISPARAGEMENT—TRADE INVOLVED—IF SELLER, ETC., OF MATTER NOT INTERESTED IN FINANCIALLY.

The Federal Trade Commission's interpretation of amendment to Federal Trade Commission Act, which added a denouncement of "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce", as authorizing Commission to enjoin sale and distribution of pamphlets concerning use of aluminum cooking utensils, published by publishers who are not engaged or materially interested in cooking utensil trade, would be rejected, since such interpretation would threaten validity of amendment under constitutional inhibition of abridgment of "freedom of speech and of press". Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a), and as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a) ; U. S. C. A., Const. Amend. 1.

METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—DISPARAGEMENT—PUBLICATIONS—TRADE INVOLVED—IF SELLER, ETC., NOT INTERESTED IN FINANCIALLY—EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

Although Congress did not intend to authorize Federal Trade Commission to foreclose expression of honest opinion in course of one's business of voicing opinion, such opinion may become material to jurisdiction of the commission and enjoined by it if, wanting in proof or basis in fact, it is utilized in the trade to mislead or deceive the public or to harm a competitor. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

[641] Before MARIS, JONES, and GOODRICH, Circuit Judges.

JONES, Circuit Judge:

This matter is here on petition to review¹ a cease and desist order entered by the Federal Trade Commission against the present petitioners (respondents below).

The facts whereon the Commission acted are not in dispute. The petitioner, Scientific Manufacturing Company, Inc., is a Pennsylvania corporation having its place of business in Scranton, Pennsylvania, which is also the place of residence of Force, the other petitioner, who, with members of his immediate family, owns all of the capital stock of the company. Force, as president of the company, controls and directs its activities and practices. Among the latter are the publication and sale of pamphlets containing two articles² written by Force in intended exposition of alleged dangers to health from poisoning which, according to him, attend the use of aluminum utensils in the preparation or storage of food for human consumption.

The Commission found that Force and his company sold and distributed many of the pamphlets throughout the United States "to the public and to various manufacturers, distributors, dealers and salesmen of cooking and storage utensils made of materials other than and competitive with utensils made of aluminum."³ Neither Force nor his company was engaged in any way or interested materially in the manufacture, sale or distribution of cooking utensils of any sort. As indicated by the Commission's findings, the petitioners' course of trade in interstate commerce was limited to the sale and distribution of the pamphlets. This activity was motivated by a zeal on the part of Force, who is a graduate pharmacist and chemist of some twenty-odd years' experience, to propagate his own unorthodox ideas and theories by independently disseminating what, unquestionably, he believes to be the truth concerning the effect of aluminum metals upon foods. The Commission further found that the statements and representations respecting aluminum utensils, as contained in the pamphlets, were "false, misleading and disparaging"⁴; that they serve to "mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public with the false and erroneous belief that cooking utensils made from aluminum are * * * harmful and are dangerous to the consumers of food prepared or stored" therein; and that the present petitioners through their sale and distribution of the [642] pamphlets supply an "instrumentality by means of which uninformed or unscrupulous manufacturers, distributors, dealers and salesmen may deceive or mislead members of the purchasing public and induce them to purchase utensils made from materials other than aluminum."

² The pamphlet articles, which are entitled "Poisons Formed by Aluminum Cooking Utensils" and "Are You Heading for the 'Last Round-up'?", represent, as the Commission correctly summarized, "that aluminum is a poisonous metal and that the use of aluminum utensils for the preparation, cooking or storage of food is unsafe, deleterious, disease producing, poisonous, death dealing and otherwise dangerous to health because of the aluminum imparted to foods during such process and the resulting absorption and accumulation of such metal in the system of the consumer of foods so prepared, cooked or stored; and further that aluminum utensils are manufactured of a soft metal, that such utensils easily become corroded and pitted when used for cooking and tend to provide lodgment for food particles which operate as culture media for bacteria and spores, both poisonous and otherwise."

On this factual basis, the Commission concluded that the acts and practices of the present petitioners were "to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act." The cease and desist order thereupon ensued.⁵

(1) The petitioners assail the order on the grounds that the Commission was without jurisdiction under the facts of the instant case because the petitioners had no material interest in or connection with the manufacture, sale, or distribution of cooking utensils of any kind; that (2) the publication and sale of pamphlets containing statements which, even though unfounded or untrue, express the honest belief of the publisher are not unfair or deceptive acts or practices as contemplated by Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended; and that (3) the Commission's order abridges the peti-

⁴ On this issue of scientific fact, the Commission heard only the witness Force (who represented himself) for the one side and, in opposition thereto, five witnesses who were closely associated with or employed by the Aluminum Company of America or affiliates.

⁵ The Commission's order, in material part, is as follows:

"It is ordered that the respondents' Scientific Manufacturing Company, Inc., and its officers, and Howard J. Force, individually and as president of the Scientific Manufacturing Company, Inc., and their respective representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of pamphlets in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from;

"(1) Representing that the use of food prepared or kept in aluminum utensils is dangerous to the health of the consumer;

"(2) Representing that the preparation or storage of food in aluminum utensils causes the formation of poisons;

"(3) Representing that the preparation, cooking or storage of food in aluminum utensils imparts aluminum in quantities sufficient to cause injury to the health of the consumer, or that the aluminum so imparted has a cumulative effect upon the system of the consumer;

"(4) Representing that aluminum utensils easily corrode or pit and thereby provide lodgment for bacteria and spores, both poisonous and otherwise;

"(5) Representing that the consumption of food prepared or stored in aluminum containers will cause cancer, Bright's Disease, diabetes, liver trouble, indigestion, constipation, ulcers, carbuncles, nervousness, poisoning, or any other disease or ailment of the human body;

"(6) Making or causing the making of any false statements or representations with respect to the effect that the consumption of food prepared, cooked or stored in such utensils might have, or has had, on the health of the consumer or consumers of such foods, which statements unfairly disparage the quality value or use of aluminum cooking or storage utensils."

tioners' freedom of speech and of press in violation of the First Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

The Commission contends that its jurisdiction in the circumstances shown derives from the amendment of March 21, 1938 (c. 49 Sec. 5 (a), 52 Stat. 111, 15 U.S.C.A. §45 (a)) which enlarged the original Federal Trade Commission Act by adding thereto a denouncement of "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce" and by correspondingly empowering and directing the Commission to prevent the use of such acts or practices. From this, the Commission argues that the petitioners, being commercially engaged in an interstate business (the sale and distribution of pamphlets) are amenable to the Commission's interdictions when any of their acts or practices are found by the Commission to be unfair or deceptive in respect of some article of commerce in an unrelated trade and notwithstanding such acts or practices are neither unfair nor deceptive in respect of the petitioners' trade in interstate commerce. As a corollary of the Commission's argument, if the subject matter of the petitioners' pamphlets were contained in an article in a newspaper, magazine or book of interstate circulation, such publication would be equally restrainable at the instance of the Commission. Obviously, a grant of power so vast is not to be accorded an administrative body except upon plain legislative direction within constitutional bounds. This brings us then to the matter of congressional intent for first consideration.

As originally enacted in 1914, the Federal Trade Commission Act declared "unfair methods of competition in commerce" to be unlawful and empowered the Feder[643]al Trade Commission to prevent the use of such methods. Thenceforth, a train of litigated cases^o delineated a wide and varied range for the exercise of the Commission's jurisdiction but always, it is believed, in matters involving unfair trade or commercial acts or practices for the advantage of the offender over competitors and to the detriment of the public. The presence of the public interest was essential to an exercise of the Commission's jurisdiction. Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 280 U. S. 19, 27 [13 F. T. C. 581].

Then came the decision in Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 283 U. S. 643, 654, where the Supreme Court held that "one of the facts necessary to support [the Commission's] jurisdiction to make the final order to cease and desist, is the existence of competition;" etc. It will be remembered that the proscription in the original Act was limited to "unfair methods of competition in commerce". In the presence of this jurisdictional requirement, it became apparent that there could be instances of unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce injurious to the public which the Commission was without jurisdiction to prevent. Such was the case where the offender had a monopoly (i. e., no competitors) or where all competitors in a particular trade made use of the same practices. Moreover, even where competition did actually exist, although obscure, it was time-consuming and expensive for the Commission to develop the essential fact of competition. It was for the purpose of clothing the Commission with jurisdiction to act in respect of unfair acts or practices in commerce regardless of their effect upon competition that the amendment of 1938 was offered and enacted.⁷ True enough, as the Commission argues, the effect of the amendment was to so broaden the Commission's jurisdiction as to enable it to act where only the public interest was adversely affected by the unfair practices. None the less, it was still the unfair acts of traders in the affected commerce that the Commission was empowered to enjoin. The public interest to be served is no different under the amendment than it was under the original Act. The change effected by the amendment lay in the fact that the Commission could thenceforth prevent unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce which in[644]juriously affected the public interest alone, while under the original Act the Commission's power to safeguard the public against unfair trade practices depended upon whether the objectionable acts or practices affected competition. But the restrainable acts or practices in commerce continued to be such as are performed or perpetrated in the trade affected by the offenses,⁸ whether or not there is competition. In short, the Commission's intervention is limited to acts or practices in the affected trade. If the amendment were given any broader scope, the Act would relate to far more than trade practices and the Commission would become the absolute arbiter of the truth of all printed matter moving in interstate commerce, even where scholars in the particular field of knowledge were in wide disagreement. "The findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive."⁹ The courts are bound to accept them as such. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U. S. 112, 117 [25 F. T. C. 1715, 1719]; Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U. S. 67, 73 [18 F. T. C. 669].

It follows from what we have said that, the present petitioners not being engaged or materially interested in the cooking utensil trade, the Commission was without power to enjoin their sale and distribution of the pamphlets which they published concerning the use of aluminum cooking utensils and, further, that the publication, sale, and distribution of matter concerning an article of trade by a person not engaged or financially interested in commerce in that trade is not an unfair or deceptive act or practice within the contemplation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, if the published matter, even though unfounded or untrue, represents the publisher's honest opinion or belief.

In the view we thus take of the intent of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended, no question of abridgment of the petitioners' freedom of speech or of press arises. However, we may say that the constitutional inhibition of any such abridgment, which the Commission's interpretation of the amendment to the statute at once involves, would so seriously threaten its validity as to justify rejection of the Commission's contention. Blodgett v. Holden, 275 U. S. 142, 148; United States v. Standard Brewery, 251 U. S. 210, 220; United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U. S. 366, 407-408; and United States v. Jin Fuey Moy, 241 U. S. 394, 401.

The petitioner Force dealt in opinions and no more. Nor does the Commission alter their category by tabulating them statements of fact. They are theories or ideas, false, it may well be, but sincerely held none the less, and that, too, in a field of knowledge where even experts at times must be content with approximations to verity. To the situation here presented the words of Mr. Justice Holmes are apposite,—“Certitude is not the test of certainty. We have been cocksure of many things that were not so. * * * But while one’s experience thus makes certain preferences dogmatic for oneself, recognition of how they came to be so leaves one able to see that others, poor souls, may be equally dogmatic about something else.”¹⁰ Surely Congress did not intend to authorize the Federal Trade Commission to foreclose expression of honest opinion in the course of one’s business of voicing opinion. The same opinion, however, may become material to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission and enjoined by it if, wanting in proof or basis in fact, it is utilized in [645] the trade to mislead or deceive the public or to harm a competitor. Cf. Perma-Maid Company, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 121 F. (2d) 282 (C. C. A. 6) [33 F. T. C. 1803].

RULES OF PRACTICE OF COMMISSION—EFFECT.

Rules adopted by the Federal Trade Commission for purpose of carrying out provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act have the force and effect of law. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 6 (g), 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 46 (g).

Where candy manufacturer was notified of hearing on Federal Trade Commission’s complaint charging manufacturer with violating Federal Trade Commission Act and received an excerpt from commission’s rules of practice respecting pleading, and manufacturer, before testimony was taken, filed answer admitting material allegations of fact in complaint and waiving further hearing as to such facts, a cease and desist order entered by commission upon complaint and answer was valid, even if no testimony was taken. CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—SCOPE—COMPLAINT—LOTTERY MERCHANDISING—MANUFACTURER'S ASSORTMENTS SO PACKED AS TO INVOLVE, IN SALE TO CONSUMER—PROHIBITION WHERE DIRECT SALE TO PUBLIC NOT ALLEGED.

A provision in a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission directing a candy manufacturer to cease selling or otherwise disposing of any merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme was within scope of commission's complaint charging manufacturer with violating Federal Trade Commission Act by selling to wholesalers and retailers assortments of candy so packed as to involve use of games of chance when sold to consumers, although there was no allegation in complaint that manufacturer sold to the public. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—EXTENT OF ORDER—LOTTERY MERCHANDISING—MANUFACTURER'S ASSORTMENTS SO PACKED AS TO INVOLVE IN SALE TO CONSUMER—IF GAMBLING DEVICE'S USE COMPLETELY PROHIBITED ALSO.

In proceedings against a candy manufacturer charged with violating the Federal Trade Commission Act by selling to wholesalers and retailers assortments of candy so packed as to involve use of gambling devices when candy was sold to consumers, it was competent for the Federal Trade Commission to embrace in its cease and desist order a complete prohibition against use of gambling devices in selling candy, whether at wholesale or retail. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—EXTENT—LOTTERY MERCHANDISING—MANUFACTURER'S ASSORTMENT SO PACKED AS TO INVOLVE IN SALE TO CONSUMER—ASSORTMENTS, ETC., SUCH THAT SALES OF GOODS TO BE OR WHICH "MAY" BE MADE, BY CHANCE, PROHIBITED.

Under a provision in a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission directing a candy manufacturer to cease supplying to, or placing in hands of others, candy or other merchandise so packed or assembled that sales of candy or merchandise to the public were to be made "or may be made" by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme, use of quoted language was not prejudicial against manufacturer as rendering manufacturer liable for acts of others. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—EXTENT—LOTTERY MERCHANDISING—MANUFACTURER'S ASSORTMENT SO PACKED AS TO INVOLVE IN SALE TO CONSUMER—ASSORTMENTS, ETC., SUCH THAT SALES OF GOODS TO BE OR WHICH "MAY" BE MADE, BY CHANCE, PROHIBITED—AS PROSPECTIVE AND INVOLVING PRACTICES TO WHICH MANUFACTURER A PARTY, ETC.

Prohibitions in a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission directing a candy manufacturer to cease supplying to or placing in hands of others candy so packed that sales thereof might be made by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme were prospective in operation, and prohibitions prohibited only those practices which manufacturer had in some way made itself a party to and assisted in carrying out. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

[105] Before FOSTER, HUTCHESON, and HOLMES, Circuit Judges.

HUTCHESON, Circuit Judge:

Petitioners are engaged in the manufacture of candy and its sale and distribution to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers in various parts of the United States, in competition with other individuals, partnerships and corporations, engaged in the candy business. This petition to set aside as invalid, a cease and desist order of the commission,¹ or in the alternative, to modify it, presents three grounds for doing so. The ground for setting it aside as invalid is that it was entered, not after a hearing and on evidence, but upon the complaint and answer. The modifications sought are, (1) to strike from it, as not within the scope of the complaint or the findings, paragraph 4 thereof, and (2) to strike the words "or may be made" from paragraph 1, because susceptible of the construction that petitioners could be held accountable for acts done by others with which they had nothing to do. (Italics supplied.)

The complaint in a careful and detailed way, sets out the facts as to the complained of activities of the petitioners and charges that they constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, within the prohibitions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.² The gist of the wrongful practices complained of, is the selling to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of games of chance, gift enterprises or lottery schemes, when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

¹ "(1) Supplying to or placing in the hands of others, candy or any other merchandise, so packed or assembled that sales of such candy or other merchandise to the public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme;

"(2) Supplying to or placing in the hands of others, candy or any other merchandise, together with punch boards, push or pull cards, or other lottery devices which said punch boards, push or pull cards or other lottery devices are to be used, or may be used, in selling or distributing such candy or other merchandise to the public;

"(3) Supplying to or placing in the hands of others, punch boards, push or pull cards or other lottery devices either with assortments of candy or other merchandise or separately, which said punch boards, push or pull cards or other lottery devices are to be used, or may be used, in selling or distributing such candy or other merchandise to the public;

"(4) Selling or otherwise disposing of any merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme."

² 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

A hearing was fixed for May 31, 1940, a notice was given containing, among other things, an excerpt from the rules of practice of the commission. "If respondent desires to waive hearing on the allegations of fact set forth in the complaint and not to contest the facts, the answer may consist of a statement that respondent admits all the material allegations of fact charged in the complaint to be true. Respondent by such answer shall be deemed to have waived a hearing on the allegations of fact set forth in said complaint and to have authorized the Commission, without further evidence, or other intervening procedure, to find such facts to be true, and if in the judgment of the Commission such facts admitted constitute a violation of law or laws as charged in the complaint, to make and serve findings as to the facts and an order to cease and desist from such violations."

[106] The matter was set for the taking of testimony, but before any testimony was taken petitioners filed answer. "Come now the respondents, Joe B. Hill and C. O. McAfee, individually and trading as McAfee Candy Co. and Liberty Candy Co., and answering the complaint in this proceeding state that they admit all of the material allegations of fact set forth in said complaint and waive all intervening procedure and further hearing as to said facts." Thereafter, in faithful accord with the allegations of the complaint, the commission made the findings and issued the order complained of. Here, pointing out that they are based upon the admissions of the answer, the commission insists that there is no merit in the attack on them or on the order as a whole. It consists too that the attempt to modify the order is no better based, for operating not by way of penalty for past performance, but prospectively, Standard Container Manufacturers' Assn. v. Federal Trade Commission, 119 F. (2d) 262 [32 F. T. C. 1879] clause 4 is reasonably within the scope of the complaint and findings, and the words "or may be made" as used in clause 1, are not reasonably subject to the construction petitioners would place on them.

We agree with the commission. The statute gives it express authority "to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act."⁸ These rules have the force and effect of law. National Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 104 F. (2d) 999, 1003 [29 F. T. C. 1557, 1563]; Hughes v. Federal Trade Commission, 62 F. (2d) 362 [20 F. T. C. 734]. They were faithfully followed and complied with here. But these rules aside, it is fundamental that judicial admissions are proof possessing the highest possible probative value. Indeed, facts judicially admitted are facts established not only beyond the need of evidence to prove them, but beyond the power of evidence to controvert them. A fact admitted by answer is no longer a fact in issue. Considered as a whole then, the order stands as valid beyond dispute.

The attack upon clause 4 as prohibiting petitioners from doing that which they are not even charged with, and the effort to excise from clause 1, the words "or may be made," are not, we think, any better based. While the complaint does allege that petitioners are manufacturers of and sell assortments of candy to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, and there is no allegation that they sell to the public, the complained of paragraph of the order is yet within the scope of the complaint, which was aimed at preventing the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lottery or chance. It was entirely competent for the commission to embrace in its cease and desist order, a complete prohibition against doing the thing complained of, the use of gambling devices in selling candy, whether at wholesale or at retail, and no abuse of discretion, or injury to petitioners can be found in the complained of paragraph. Federal Trade Commission v. Wallace, 75 F. (2d) 733 [20 F. T. C. 713]; Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U. S. 67 [18 F. T. C. 669]; Hershey Chocolate Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 121 F. (2d) 968 [33 F. T. C. 1798]; Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293; Standard Container Manufacturers' Association v. Federal Trade Commission, 119 F. (2d) 262 [32 F. T. C. 1879]; N. L. R. B. v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426.

Finally, we think the complaint of the use in paragraph 1 of, and the effort to strike from it, the words "or may be made," is without substance, because based upon an apprehension having no sound basis. In the first place, as we have pointed out, the prohibitions are prospective, not retrospective, and they may be made effective only in a proceeding to punish their violation. In any such proceeding it would be unreasonable to hold as petitioners claim might be held, that the words used would make petitioners liable for schemes or practices of persons to who they sold with which petitioners had nothing to do. It is our view that those decisions which declare that the order is not subject to the construction which petitioners fear,⁴ are more soundly based than those on which petitioners rely.⁵ These latter, we think, as a result of yielding to an unfounded apprehension, have the effect of leaving a loop[107]hole for evasion which is certainly closed and no more than closed, by the use of the words in controversy. For we think they must be construed as intending to prohibit and as prohibiting only those practices which petitioners have in some way, made themselves a party to, in some way assisted in carrying out. We find no error in the judgment. It is affirmed.

Before EVANS, MAJOR, and KERNER, Circuit Judges.

KERNER, Circuit Judge:

Petitioner asks us to review and set aside a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission on the ground that there is no competent evidence to support the findings of the Commission.

The order was based upon a complaint issued by the Commission alleging in substance that petitioner is engaged in the sale and distribution of blankets, radios, cig[352]rettes, candy, and other articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the Union in competition with other individuals, partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of similar merchandise; that in the sale and distribution of his merchandise petitioner furnishes devices (described in the complaint) which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises or lottery schemes, by which the merchandise is sold and distributed to the consumers; the dealers or purchasers to whom petitioner furnishes the devices use them in selling and distributing his merchandise for the purpose of conducting lotteries in connection with the disposition of the merchandise, which has the tendency of inducing purchasers to purchase petitioner's merchandise in preference to that offered for sale and sold by petitioner's competitors; that the use of such methods is a practice contrary to the established public policy of the Federal Government and in violation of the criminal laws, and has a tendency to, and does, unfairly divert trade to petitioner from his competitors who do not use such methods; and that such methods are to the prejudice of the public and of petitioner's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. section 45.

Petitioner answered the complaint and after the matter involved in this appeal had been heard, upon the complaint and answer, the testimony of witnesses and supporting documentary evidence, the Commission made findings as to the facts and issued the order¹ now being reviewed.

Petitioner contends that the record fails to support the Commission's findings that petitioner's method of selling punchboards together with merchandise affects competition, affects interstate commerce, constitutes an unfair method, and is contrary to public policy.

By the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. section 46g, the Commission is empowered to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act. These rules have the force and effect of law. National Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 104 F. (2d) 999 [29 F. T. C. 1557] and Hill v. Federal Trade Commission, decided December 23, 1941, 124 F. (2d) 104 (C. C. A. 5th) [this volume, ante, p. 1800]. The Commission's findings of fact cover every fact alleged in the complaint and are within the issues tendered. Under the Commission's Rules of Practice, where an alleged fact is left without denial, any issue with respect to such allegation is foreclosed by the pleadings. National Candy Co. case, supra, 1003. A fact admitted by answer is no longer a fact in issue. Hill case, supra.

¹ (1) Supplying to or placing in the hands of others any merchandise together with punchboards, push or pull cards or other lottery devices, which said punchboards, push or pull cards or other lottery devices are to be used, or may be used, in selling or distributing such merchandise to the public;

(2) Supplying to or placing in the hands of others, punchboards, push or pull cards, or other lottery devices, either with assortments of merchandise or separately, which said punchboards, push or pull cards, or other lottery devices, are to be used, or may be used, in selling or distributing such merchandise to the public;

(3) Selling or otherwise disposing of any merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme.

A reading of petitioner's answer discloses that he admits he sold his merchandise in competition with others engaged in selling like merchandise in interstate commerce, that in the sale and distribution thereof he furnishes devices involving the use of games and lottery schemes, and that his purchasers use the devices for the purpose of conducting lotteries in disposing of his merchandise. The statute condemns any method of competition in interstate commerce which is contrary to public policy. Ostler Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 106 F. (2d) 962, 965 [29 F. T. C. 1584]. The use of a sales method which involves an element of chance is contrary to public policy, Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel & Bro., 291 U. S. 304, 313 [18 F. T. C. 648], and such method is an injury to the public, National Candy Co., supra, 1006, and injures competitors, Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 258 U. S. 483, 494 [4 F. T. C. 610] and International Art Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 109 F. (2d) 393, 397 [30 F. T. C. 1635].

Petitioner also complains of the use of the words "or may be used" in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the order. A like complaint was made in the National Candy and [353] Hill cases, supra, but was rejected. We think the conclusions reached in those cases were right.

The petition to set aside the order is denied and the order of the Federal Trade Commission is affirmed.

Before SWAN, AUGUSTUS N. HAND, and FRANK, Circuit Judges.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission directing the petitioners which, for convenience, we shall speak of as Rigaud and Fougera, to cease and desist from specified acts of alleged unfair competition.

Rigaud is a New York corporation engaged in compounding perfumes and cosmetics which it sells solely to Fougera, another New York Corporation. Some of the merchandise thus sold by Rigaud is delivered to Fougera in New York, while some is shipped to the latter's customers on its order. The goods Fougera has so purchased it sells throughout the United States. The various ingredients used to make up the perfumes are combined by Rigaud with one another and with domestic alcohol at its place of business at 79 Bedford Street, New York City. When the ingredients are thus compounded they are bottled and packaged for sale. Some of Rigaud's officers and five of its eight directors reside in Paris and to a considerable extent direct the business policy of the company, but Rigaud does not maintain any office there as a corporation.

There was evidence before the Commission tending to show that the public has a preference for perfumes manufactured or compounded in France. It is established that Rigaud compounded all the perfumes it sold in the City of New York and made them from ingredients both domestic and imported.

In spite of this, it used labels and cartons for its perfumes on which was printed:

I Rigaud

On letterheads, statements, invoices and other business stationery Rigaud and Fougere placed the following:

[591] These inscriptions on labels, cartons, and stationery were found by the Commission to have indicated a French origin for the perfume itself, and not merely for the ingredients contained in it. They were found to have a tendency to mislead the public and to have unfairly diverted trade to Rigaud and Fougera from their competitors. During the times embraced in the proceeding before the Commission Rigaud was not strictly a French concern even though some of its officers lived in France and essential oils used in the perfumes compounded in America were imported from France.

In view of the foregoing, the Commission made an order directing Rigaud and Fougera to cease and desist from the following:

“(1) Representing, through the use of the term ‘Paris,’ or ‘Paris, France’ or any other terms, words, symbols, or picturizations indicative of French or other foreign origin of such products, or in any manner that perfumes which are made or compounded in United States are made or compounded in France or in any other foreign country; Provided, however, That the country of origin of the various ingredients thereof may be stated when immediately accompanied by a statement that such products are made or compounded in the United States.

“(2) Using any French or other foreign terms or words, except as provided in paragraph (3) hereof, to designate, describe, or in any way refer to perfumes made or compounded in the United States, unless the English translation or equivalent thereof appears as conspicuously and in immediate conjunction therewith.

“(3) Using the terms ‘Un Air Embaume,’ ‘Rigaud,’ ‘Igora,’ or any other French or other foreign words or terms as brand or trade names for perfumes made or compounded in the United States without clearly and conspicuously stating in immediate connection and conjunction therewith that such products are made or compounded in the United States.”

We think the order is too broad. The proceeding against Rigaud and Fougera was calculated to correct abuses which at best were trifling and but for the broad discretion lodged in the Commission we should regard as hardly worth serious consideration. It must, however, be remembered that the ingredients of the perfumes were mainly French and that the business to a great extent has been supervised by French directors and stockholders. It is notorious that French names are commonly used to describe perfumes and for some reason seem to be favorites with the trade. It is doubtless permissible to forbid the use of words which indicate a French origin and manufacture when strictissimi juris there is none, but we can see no reason for proscribing the use of all French words when designating the perfumes or for the rather fantastic requirement of the order that the price of retention must be an accompanying English translation. It is enough to insist upon the abandonment of the words “Paris” or “Paris, France” unless they are limited as, in clause 1 of the order. We think the most the Commission should require is that Rigaud and Fougera cease and desist from the acts embraced in clauses 1 and 3. Fioret Sales Co. Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 100 F. (2d) 358 (C. C. A. 2) [27 F. T. C. 1702; decree as resettled, 28 F. T. C. 1955].

The order should be modified by the elimination of clause 2. As thus modified, the order is confirmed and enforcement thereof is granted.

[665] Before GARDNER, SANBORN, and WOODROUGH, Circuit Judges.

WOODROUGH, Circuit Judge:

Douglas Candy Company petitions for review of a cease and desist order issued against it by the Federal Trade Commission in accordance with findings and conclusions entered after full hearing on the complaint, answer, evidence and briefs.

The findings and conclusions, in which the Candy Company is designated respondent, were as follows:

"Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Missouri, and having its principal place of business in the city of St. Joseph, in said State.

"Respondent, for some time last past, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture and sale of candy, and its distribution to wholesale and retail dealers, and jobbers, and causes its said product, when sold, to be shipped from its principal place of business to purchasers thereof located in various states of the United States.

"Respondent, in the conduct of its business as set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, [666] has been, and now is, in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy in commerce between and among various states of the United States.

"Respondent, in the sale and distribution of its merchandise as described in paragraph 2 hereof, has furnished and furnishes to the purchasers thereof various devices and plans of merchandising same which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes, by means of which said merchandise is sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer wholly by lot or chance. Typical of the methods used by the respondent are the following:

"(a) One of respondent's assortments consists of a number of candy bars, together with a device commonly called a 'push card.' This push card bears the caption:

Below this heading are ranged one hundred partially perforated disks, for which pushes are sold at five cents each; over each disk appears a feminine name and concealed beneath the disk is a number which is not disclosed until the disk is pushed out; the number revealed entitles the purchaser of the push to the amount of candy indicated in the above-described caption.

“(b) Another of respondent’s combinations consists of a number of candy bars, together with a device commonly called a ‘punchboard,’ which bears the following caption :

(with illustrations of two ball players and the additional words) :

Below this caption are ranged three hundred covered tubes, concealed within each of which is a slip of paper bearing certain printed words or phrases which are not disclosed until the cover is punched and the slip is withdrawn; these punches are sold at 5 cents each, and each purchaser is entitled to one bar of candy, but the purchaser who punches out a slip containing words or phrases which correspond with one of the five specifically named awards appearing in the caption, receives the number of bars there indicated, without additional cost.

Under this caption are ranged three hundred covered tubes, concealed within each of which is a slip of paper bearing certain printed words or phrases which are not disclosed until the cover is punched and the slip is withdrawn. Each of these punches is sold for 5 cents, and each purchaser is entitled to one bar of candy, but the purchaser punching out a slip containing words or phrases which corresponds with one of the six specifically named awards appearing in the caption receives the number of bars there indicated, without additional cost.

“Respondent’s salesman has urged the use of respondent’s ‘boards’ because they assist in the sale of the candy. The use of said boards does, in fact, promote such sales.

“Respondent, by its sales methods hereinbefore described, places in the hands of others various devices to be used in the distribution of its merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, or lottery scheme, and by the use of such devices said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumer wholly by lot or chance, and respondent’s said sales methods are [667] contrary to the established public policy of the Government of the United States.

“During all of the time herein mentioned, respondent has been in competition with other manufacturers and distributors of candy who are engaged in commerce between and among various states of the United States, and who are unwilling to use, and do not use, in the distribution of their merchandise, any method involving a game of chance, gift enterprise, or lottery scheme; and as a result of respondent’s said methods, trade has been unfairly diverted from such competitors to the respondent.

CONCLUSION.

“The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent’s competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.”

The cease and desist order complained of is as follows:

“It is ordered that the respondent, Douglas Candy Co., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy or any other merchandise in commerce as ‘commerce’ is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling or distributing candy or any other merchandise so packed or assembled that sales of such candy or other merchandise to the public are to be made or may be made by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, or lottery scheme;

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of others push or pull cards, punchboards, or other lottery devices either with assortments of candy or other merchandise or separately, which said push or pull cards, punchboards or other lottery devices are to be used or may be used in selling or distributing said candy or other merchandise to the public;

3. Selling or otherwise disposing of any merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme.

It is further ordered that the respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order."

The candy company, petitioner herein, does not seriously (or at least persuasively) contend that the findings of the Commission are not sustained by the evidence and its admission, or that the cease and desist order issued against it is not "drawn to conform to the language approved by the courts." It says that it frankly admitted in its answer that it had formerly used such boards as were shown in evidence and the record shows that it offered no evidence that it had ever discontinued such use. Neither did it specify in its very extended answer any particular date when it claims to have decided to, or when it claims that it did, discontinue to use the devices particularly described in the complaint as those which petitioner "has been or is using in the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance." But the gist of the contention in this court is that the petitioner became apprised by holdings of the Commission and the courts on cases appealed "that the use of punchboards generally, where they were a part of a scheme to sell the concern's own candy, would be held to be unfair trade practice," and that it had accordingly adopted a new punchboard method, free from offense against the act, which it had described in its answer. The gist of the distinction between the devices particularly described in the complaint against the candy company and those which the company described with great elaboration in its answer is that the former carried legends and directions to the effect that the candy on which the chance to win was given was Douglas candy, whereas the new devices were entirely blank as to the make of the candy and the name Douglas nowhere appeared thereon. Petitioner complains here that the Commission did not make specific findings in respect to the new method and did not prohibit the new method with particularity in the cease and desist order. It is argued that the complaint and findings "refer only to the old type of punchboard" and petitioner says it might conclude on advice of counsel that the cease and desist order was intended to "refer only to the same type of board" which it had previously used, but petitioner would incur "hazard of being prosecuted." It urges that legal technicalities be overlooked and that this court pass upon the [668] "new type of punchboard which in no way refers to the Douglas Candy Company by name," and hold it to be beyond the power of the Commission to prohibit.

There is no merit in the contention that the Commission did not pass upon and indicate the intent of its order with respect to petitioner's alleged "new type of device" used for selling its candy. The complaint charged that the accused "distributes and has distributed various push cards and punchboards for use in the sale and distribution of its candy to the consuming public by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme" and it was expressly asserted that the particular descriptions given in the complaint did not include all of the details. In the light of petitioner's answer, setting up an alleged new method, the Commission received in evidence on the hearing Exhibit 6, a punchboard or push board for selling candy bars which exemplifies all petitioner's claimed novelty of method. The device carries no reference to Douglas Candy Company or its product and refers only to "bars" to be given in amounts dependent upon chance. The Commission described the device exemplified by Exhibit 6 and its use by the company with particularity in its findings, and found such use to be typical of the company's methods. Manifestly, therefore, the cease and desist order forbids it.

As to petitioner's argument that its use of the devices which do not bear its name ought not to be prohibited as unfair competition. Conceding as it must, in the light of Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel & Bros., 291 U. S. 304 [18 F. T. C. 684], that the advantages it took of the element of chance by use of its old boards resulted in unfair competition within section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 45, when its devices carried its name and specified its candies, petitioner argues that a different result should follow on the omission of its name from the devices. It is pointed out that the retailer is now left entirely free to make his "pay-off" to the players in any make of candy, so that whatever advantage there may be in stimulating sales may now inure to all candy bar producers alike. The argument is elaborated not without ingenuity and if it could be believed that the petitioner is distributing its devices for the common stimulation of the candy bar trade in general, with no special advantage to itself, it might well follow that nothing but the gambling laws could be invoked against it. But it was in evidence that salesmen from the company called on retail dealers when soliciting orders for Douglas candy and urged them to use the punchboards to augment their sales. Bearing in mind that competing companies refrain entirely from making any use of methods involving a game of chance, or lottery scheme, or any method contrary to public policy, we cannot doubt that the real intent and the inevitable effect of petitioner's method and practices is to connect up its customers to some extent at least with its methods. There was satisfactory proof that even under the system of petitioner where its devices were plainly marked "Douglas bars only," its dealers could and sometimes did pay off in candy bars of other makes. Liberality astonishing to conventional traders often marks the operations of games of chance. But the retailer who has his price and profit set up adjusted to make his money out of the Douglas candy sold by use of the Douglas devices could pretty safely be relied on, by and large and in the main, to pass out the candy that comes with the device, and there is no doubt that the petitioner carries on its business in that reasonable expectation. The essence of all of petitioner's unfair methods of competition by its use of gambling devices for selling its make of candy was sufficiently alleged in the complaint and established by the admissions and evidence. The Commission properly embraced them all in its cease and desist order. Hill, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 9849, 5 Cir., decided December 23, 1941, 124 F. (2d) 104 [34 F. T. Before MAJOR, KERNER, and MINTON, Circuit Judges; MINTON dis- senting.

MAJOR, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition for review of a cease and desist order, entered by the Federal Trade Commission, April 19, 1941. It is directed at petitioner's medicinal product, “D. D. D. Prescription,” an external liquid application for the relief of itching. The controversy revolves largely around petitioner's advertising in newspapers, periodicals, and by radio of the medicinal qualities of the product, which the Commis- sion charged, found, and now contends was false and misleading, and calculated to deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public.

There is no dispute but that the product affords relief for itching. There is a dispute as to the extent of the relief and whether it is merely temporary or permanent. Two doctors, both specialists in the field of dermatology, testified before the Commission, one for the Commis- sion and the other for petitioner. The Commission's doctor appraised the value of petitioner's product in a limited manner, while the peti- tioner's doctor ascribed a beneficial attribute of wider scope.

Itching is defined by one of the medical witnesses as follows:

“A peculiar stimulation of the cutaneous nerve terminals which is referred to the central brain as a sensation which is unpleasant to the organism, and demanding certain physical response, such as scratching or rubbing.”

Petitioner's product acts as an anesthetic on the nerve terminals and prevents transmission to the brain of the unpleasant, and sometimes distressing, sensation caused by itch. The medical testimony seems to be agreed that itching in itself is not a disease but is the result or symptom of a disease. The Commission admits, and so found, that petitioner's product has some value as an antipruritic, antiseptic, and astringent with possible mild germicidal properties, but finds that the representations made by petitioner are grossly exaggerated, misleading and untrue.

Inasmuch as the Commission's findings and order depend largely upon petitioner's advertising matter used in connection with the sale and distribution of its product, it appears essential to set forth typical illustrations of such matter:

Stop Itching

For the itching of skin irritations such as rashes, hives, and insect bites, as well as minor cases of ivy and oak poisoning, D. D. D. Liquid, ordinary strength, is recommended as an effective and ideal remedy.

Such advertising was found by the Commission to contain false, deceptive, and misleading statements and representations as to the therapeutic value of petitioner's product, with the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public, and, as a result thereof, they are induced to purchase the product. Upon such findings, petitioner was ordered to cease and desist from representing, directly or through inference—

“(a) That respondent’s preparation D. D. D. Prescription is a cure or remedy for eczema, or that it has any therapeutic value in the treatment thereof in excess of affording temporary relief from the symptom of itching.

“(b) That respondent’s preparation, D. D. D. Prescription is a cure or remedy for pimples or hives, or that it has any therapeutic value in the treatment thereof, in excess of affording temporary relief from the symptom of itching.

“(c) That respondent’s preparation has any therapeutic value in the treatment of any disorder of the skin caused by internal or systemic conditions, in excess of affording temporary relief from the symptoms of itching.

“(d) That said preparation has any therapeutic value in the treatment of blotches or rashes appearing on the skin, when due to systemic or constitutional conditions.

“(e) That respondent’s preparation has any therapeutic value in the treatment of athlete’s foot, insect bites, and cases of ivy and oak poisoning, in excess of that afforded by the temporary alleviation of the symptom of itching, or that afforded by the use of an antipruritic, astringent, antiseptic, and mildly germicidal agent.

“(f) Through the use of the words ‘and other externally caused skin eruptions,’ or other words or phrases of similar import or meaning in connection with diseases or conditions which may be of a systematic or internal origin, that such diseases and conditions are, in fact, solely of external origin or that respondent’s preparation has therapeutic value in the treatment of such diseases and conditions regardless of their origin.

“(g) Through the use of the words ‘stop itching’ or other words or phrases of similar import or meaning, that respondent’s preparation will either permanently or temporarily eliminate the disease or condition causing the symptom of itching or has any therapeutic value in excess of that afforded by the temporary alleviation of the symptom of itching, or that afforded by the use of an antipruritic, astringent, antiseptic, and mildly germicidal agent.”

Petitioner strenuously insists that it has made no false or deceptive statements concerning its product and it is, therefore, ordered to cease and desist from doing that which it has not done. The soundness of this contention must be appraised by keeping in mind that the product is not a remedy or cure for any disease, and that its beneficial qualities are limited solely to the relief which it affords to the itching skin. It will be noted that the phrase "and other externally caused skin eruptions" often appears. Of course, this is a plain implication that the diseases enumerated in connection with this phrase are externally caused when, as a matter of fact, they are usually of internal origin. That this is a misstatement is practically conceded by petitioner's medical expert. The Commission contends that the phrase "for quick relief from the itching of eczema, blotches, pimples, athlete's foot, scales, rashes, etc.," is a representation that the product is a remedy for the diseases or ailments thus named. Petitioner argues this phrase can only refer to itching, and that there is no implication the product is a remedy or relief for such diseases. We think there is merit in petitioner's contention that this and similar statements, when carefully scrutinized, may be thus construed. The weakness of this position, however, lies in the fact that such representations are made to the public, who, we assume, are not, as a whole, experts in grammatical construction. Their education in parsing a sentence has either been neglected or forgotten. We agree with the Commission that this statement is deceptive and calculated to be deceiving to a substantial portion of the public.

[682] Another statement even more deceptive, is: "It's time to realize that D. D. D. Prescription will stop the misery of itching skin in a Jiffy! Try it for hives, eczema, winter rash and other externally caused skin itching." Here again is a representation that hives, eczema and winter rash are of external origin. It comes near being a plain representation that the product is a remedy for such diseases. Also, the word "Stop" carries with it an implication that the product is a remedy or cure and affords permanent relief.

Another statement which we think is grossly exaggerated is "For the itching of skin irritations such as rashes, hives, * * * D. D. D. Liquid, ordinary strength, is recommended as an effective and ideal remedy." This language carries the implication that the product is a remedy or cure for the named conditions.

The illustrations to which we have referred are typical and there is no occasion to refer to others. We are convinced that the meaning attributable to such statements by the Commission is justified. Especially is this true when they are considered in connection with the testimony of the Commission's expert medical witness and with the conceded fact that the efficacy of petitioner's product is limited to the relief of a symptom rather than the disease giving rise thereto.

It must be kept in mind that the false, unfair or deceptive acts defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act need not be such as would constitute fraud, as that term is ordinarily understood in law. As was said in F. T. C. v. Algoma Company, 291 U. S. 67, 81 [18 F. T. C. 669, 679]:

“* * * Indeed there is a kind of fraud, as courts of equity have long perceived, in clinging to a benefit which is the product of misrepresentation, however innocently made. (Citing cases.) That is the respondents' plight today, no matter what their motives may have been when they began. They must extricate themselves from it by purging their business methods of a capacity to deceive.”

We think that this pronouncement is peculiarly appropriate to the instant situation.

Petitioner complains that the Commission erroneously found as false the statements contained in petitioner's advertisements—“Doctor Dennis' original formula” and “Original formula of Doctor Dennis.” The Commission makes no contention that these isolated statements are false—in fact, petitioner completely established their verity. These statements, however, were merely part of an advertisement which was found to be false, and which we think the Commission had a right to consider in its entirety. Furthermore, there is nothing in the order which restrains petitioner from making such statements.

We are also of the view that the word “temporary” as used in Paragraphs 1 (a), (b), (c), (e), and (g) of the Commission's order should be eliminated. We see no reason why petitioner should not be permitted to represent its product as a relief for itching. It does not cure either the itch or its cause, but it does afford relief. One of the definitions given by Webster for the word “relief” is “lessens evil, pain, etc.” The words “relief from itching” could, in our minds, carry no implication to the public that the product was a permanent cure either for the symptom or the disease. The word “temporary” carries an uncertain meaning. As the Commission's doctor stated: “It might mean a few minutes, or an hour or so.” To require its use would serve no purpose in the protection of the public, but might limit petitioner in truthfully representing its product.

The Commission's order is modified accordingly, and, as so modified, is affirmed, and the Commission may present a form of decree in conformity with our conclusion.

MINTON, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

In my opinion, the word “temporary” should remain in the order of the Commission. The representation is that petitioner's product relieves itching. Permanently? Certainly not. There is no dispute in the evidence that it does not relieve permanently. The evidence is that the relief lasts just as long as the nerves in the vicinity of the application are anesthetized. “Temporary” describes that condition. Webster defines “temporary” as meaning “Lasting for a time only, not permanent, transitory, as temporary relief.”

Unless the effect of petitioner's product is limited by the word “temporary” the relief given is not accurately described. I do not believe the word “relief” means permanent relief alone, but I do think that without the modifying word "temporary" used with the word "relief," you do [683] not accurately describe the relief petitioner's product gives. It seems to me to work no hardship upon a business concern that wants to be fair in its dealings with the public to require it so to construct the wording of its advertisements as to describe accurately the virtues of its product. That is all the Commission's order does in this case. It simply divorces petitioner's representation of a product for temporary relief from words that might very easily mislead the public into believing they were representations as to cure and permanency. I think the Board's order as drawn is reasonable and supported by substantial evidence, and should be affirmed as written.

FRESH GROWN PRESERVE CORPORATION ET AL. v.
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 51—F. T. C. Dock. 3682

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit. Feb. 16, 1942)

COMMISSION ACTION AND JURISDICTION—VEHICLES OF UNFAIR COMPETITION, ETC.—
MISBRANDING OR MISLABELING—KIND OF PRODUCT—"FALSE ADVERTISING" UNDER SECTION 12 (a)—WHETHER LIMITATION.

The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction to prevent unfair competition by means of false labeling and misbranding, regardless of the kind of the product, and even though such methods of unfair competition may not fall within statutory definition of false advertisement for which violator may be liable to criminal prosecution. Federal Trade Commission Act, secs. 5, 5 (c), 12-15 (a), 15 U. S. C. A., secs. 45, 45 (c), 52-55 (a).

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT—SECTION 5—"UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION"—
WHEELER-LEA AMENDMENT—"UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE ACTS OR PRACTICES", ETC.—
EFFECT.

The amendment to Federal Trade Commission Act, making "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce" unlawful, was not intended to modify previous provision of act declaring "unfair methods of competition in commerce" unlawful, but rather enlarged the scope of Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction. Federal Trade Commission Act, secs. 5, 12-15 (a), 15 U. S. C. A., secs. 45, 52-55 (a).

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT—SECTION 5—"UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION"—
WHEELER-LEA AMENDMENT—"FALSE ADVERTISING"—DEFINITION UNDER SECTION 12 (A)—EFFECT.

The definition of false advertisement contained in Federal Trade Commission Act is relevant only in criminal prosecutions for violation of provisions of the act with respect to the advertising of food, drugs, cosmetics, etc., and is not applicable in a proceeding to enjoin the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce. Federal Trade Commission Act, secs. 5, 5 (c), 12-15 (a), 15 U. S. C. A., secs. 45, 45 (c), 52-55 (a).

EVIDENCE—EXCLUSION—“FAIR HEARING”—STANDARDS—MANUFACTURING PRACTICE—“PRESERVES”—USE PECTIN—ADMISSIBILITY.

In proceeding to restrain distributors from labeling and advertising their products as “preserves” or “pure preserves,” unless they contained a fruit content in proportion to sugar of at least 45 to 55 by weight, evidence that the use of pectin in the manufacture of preserves rendered the standard adopted by the commission unacceptable was admissible, and the exclusion of such evidence prevented a “fair hearing” and required that case be sent back to commission for a finding as to a standard after giving distributors an opportunity to introduce relevant evidence on the subject. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (c), 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (c).

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—MISREPRESENTATION—STANDARDS—COMPOSITION OF PRODUCT—GOVERNMENT REGULATIONS—IF NOT THEN IN EFFECT—“PRESERVES”.

It was immaterial that at the time Federal Trade Commission issued order, directing distributors to cease and desist from labeling or advertising their products as “preserves” or “pure preserves” unless they contained a fruit content in proportion to sugar of at least 45 to 55 by weight, there was in effect a Department of Agriculture regulation, establishing a standard content for preserves, where such regulation was not in effect during the time of alleged violation by distributors of the Federal Trade Commission Act and there was no proof that distributors had failed to comply with such regulation since its promulgation. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (c), 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (c).

[918] Before SWAN, AUGUSTUS N. HAND, and CHASE, Circuit Judges.

CHASE, Circuit Judge:

This petition, under 15 U. S. C. A. section 45 (c), puts in issue for purposes of review an order made by the Federal Trade Commission requiring the petitioners to cease and desist from labeling, marking or advertising their products as “preserves,” or “pure preserves” unless they contain a fruit content in proportion to sugar of at least 45 to 55 by weight; from representing that their products, not having such proportions, are “preserves” or “pure preserves”; and from representing that their products are composed of named fruits when in fact they contain a mixture of fruits other than those stated. The pertinent part of the order appears in the margin.¹

The order was made after hearing and report by a trial examiner on a complaint by the Commission. The complaint charged that all the petitioners were selling and distributing in interstate commerce to wholesale and retail dealers various kinds of fruit "preserves" which were represented by the petitioners to be "pure fruit preserves" by means of labels, tags and markers attached to the jars and containers in which the preserves were packed; that the preserves were not preserves or "pure fruit preserves" within the popular meaning of those words in that they did not have a fruit content of at least 45 pounds of fruit to 55 pounds of sugar; and that such products contained mixtures of fruits other than as represented by the petitioners. It was further charged that the petitioners also made such false representations by means of advertising and sales literature. And it was alleged that, as a direct result of such conduct by the petitioners, trade had been unfairly diverted to the petitioners from their competitors which injured competition in interstate commerce in violation of the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act. (15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45.)

The petitioners answered the complaint by admitting that they were engaged in interstate commerce in selling fruit preserves in competition with others so engaged; that they labeled their products "pure fruit preserves"; and denied that they did any advertising. They admitted that the terms "fruit preserves" and "pure fruit preserves" were synonymous in the trade but denied that they were commonly understood to mean a product made from at least 45 pounds of fruit to 55 pounds of sugar; and denied the allegation that their products were not fruit preserves or pure fruit preserves within the popular meaning and acceptance of those terms. They denied that a fruit preserve was known and understood by the trade and purchasing public as a product prepared or manufactured in the above proportion of fruit to sugar; that their products contained any mixture of fruits other than as specified; and also denied generally any violation of the Act.

(2) Representing, in any manner, whatsoever, that a product which contains a fruit content in a proportion of less than 45 pounds of clean, sound fruit to 55 pounds of sugar is a pure preserve or a preserve, or is anything other than an imitation or substandard preserve;

(3) Representing, in any manner whatsoever, that respondent's products are composed of certain specified fruits when in fact, such products contain a mixture of fruits other than those represented."

Two affirmative defenses were alleged. The first of them appears to have been [919] abandoned and will be disregarded. The second was to the effect that the alleged acts of the petitioners are not, if proved, violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act but that they at most call for proceedings against the petitioners only under the Food and Drug Act. (21 U. S. C. A. sec. 1 et seq.)

The evidence introduced was sufficient to support findings which the Commission made to the effect that all the material allegations in the complaint, except as to advertising, were proved; and the petitioners now rely (1) upon error in the exclusion of evidence, and the curtailment of the cross examination of witnesses who testified as to the existence of a standard formula of not less than 45 pounds of fruit to 55 pounds of sugar in the manufacture of fruit preserves; (2) upon failure of evidence of advertising; and (3) upon the affirmative defense that if their conduct subjects them to any proceedings at all, such proceedings must be under the provisions of the Food and Drug Acts.

We will deal with this affirmative defense first. It is based on the contention that, as the definition of "false advertisement" in section 15 (a) of the Act [15 U. S. C. A. 55 (a)] excludes labeling, and petitioners have at most but labeled their products, they cannot by so doing have violated the Federal Trade Commission Act. If they are right, of course the Commission had no jurisdiction. This argument, however, fails to take due account of two things. One is that the petitioners' conduct as found by the Commissioner amounted to unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of section 5 of the Act (15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45) and the other, that the definition of false advertisement in section 15 is expressly limited to that term as used in sections 12, 13, and 14. The courts have repeatedly upheld the jurisdiction of the Commission to prevent unfair competition by means of false labeling and misbranding regardless of the kind of the product. F. T. C. v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 258 U. S. 483 [4 F. T. C. 610]; Royal Baking Powder Co. v. F. T. C., 281 Fed. 744 (C. C. A. 2) [4 F. T. C. 614]; F. T. C. v. Morrissey, 47 F. (2d) 101 (C. C. A. 7) [14 F. T. C. 716]; F. T. C. v. Good-Grape Co., 45 F. (2d) 70 (C. C. A. 6) [14 F. T. C. 695]. The last three of the cited cases dealt with unfair competition in the sale of food products. Since the Wheeler-Lea amendment of March 21, 1938, we have three times upheld this jurisdiction of the Commission. Fioret Sales Co. Inc. v. F. T. C., 100 F. (2d) 358 [27 F. T. C. 1702]; Justin Haynes & Co. Inc. v. F. T. C., 105 F. (2d) 988 [29 F. T. C. 1578]; Parfums Corday, Inc. v. F. T. C., 120 F. (2d) 808 [33 F. T. C. 1797]. One of these cases dealt with a drug and the other with cosmetics. See also, Federal Trade Commission v. Kay, 35 F. (2d) 160 (C. C. A. 7), another drug case [13 F. T. C. 575].

The amendment to section 5 (15 U. S. C. A. 45) of the act did not modify the term "unfair methods of competition in commerce," but made unlawful what were called "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce," and by so doing enlarged instead of lessened the scope of the jurisdiction of the Commission. The additions found in sections 12 to 15 inclusive were also to give the Commission greater control over the advertising of food, drugs, cosmetics, and the like by providing for criminal action as well as injunction; and only in proceedings under such sections is the definition of false advertisement in section 15 relevant, not in a proceeding like this under section 5.

The only proof of advertising was the interstate sending by the petitioners of price lists to their customers in the wholesale and retail trade describing their products as pure fruit preserves, and the representations to like effect by salesmen to such customers. We need not now decide whether that was advertising in violation of sections 12 to 15 inclusive. Like false labeling, it may have been deceptive and have amounted to unfair competition under section 5, and we need now be concerned with nothing more.

But whether anything the petitioners did was deceptive and in violation of section 5 depends basically upon whether the proceedings which resulted in the finding that there was a known standard for the manufacture of fruit preserves, were conducted without harmful error. We do not think they were and consequently there must be a remand to the Commission for findings after hearings which do afford the petitioners a fair opportunity to develop all the pertinent facts. Fashion Originators Guild v. F. T. C., 114 F. (2d) 80, 83 [31 F. T. C. 1837].

During the hearings before the examiner the petitioners attempted to make it appear that the addition of pectin during the manufacture of preserves, a practice [920] which has prevailed for years in both commercial and domestic preserve making, changed the requirement for a fixed proportion of sugar to fruit, and made it impossible fairly to arrive at the standard the Commission found to have been established. A Dr. Osborn who had testified to this standard had stated on direct examination that some pectin was added in the commercial manufacture of preserves and that the usual domestic practice was to use a cup of fruit to a cup of sugar. On cross examination the attempt to examine him regarding the home use of a pectin product sold under the trade name of "Certo" was blocked by objections the examiner sustained. The purpose was to show that the recipe widely distributed with this product called for the use of less fruit in proportion to sugar than he had previously testified was used in the home. Similar efforts to show that the standard the Commission found was by no means to be accepted as such because of the varying use of added pectin were made during the examination of witnesses Wallace, Kirkpatrick and Hader and were frustrated in the same way. The evidence which the petitioners tried to place before the examiner was all relevant and of great importance in deciding what was really the most important issue. This cutting off the right of the petitioners to make clear what the decisive facts were prevented a fair hearing and makes it necessary to send the case back to the Commission for a finding as to a standard after giving the petitioners an opportunity to introduce for consideration whatever material and relevant evidence on that subject they may offer.

It is immaterial that the Department of Agriculture did promulgate a regulation on September 5, 1940, which was in effect when the Commission issued this cease and desist order on September 20, 1940, establishing for preserves or jams a standard content, with stated optional variations, of not less than 45 parts of fruit ingredients by weight to 55 parts by weight of optional saccharine ingredients. That was not an effective standard during the time of the alleged violations by the petitioners of the Federal Trade Commission Act and there is no proof that the petitioners have failed to comply with the regulation since it was promulgated.

Cause remanded for proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Before SWAN, AUGUSTUS N. HAND, and C. E. CLARK, Circuit Judges.

Per Curiam:

Notwithstanding their claims in the petition to review, petitioners do not directly attack the Commission's basic finding—supported by quite credible testimony—that they had persisted in advertising themselves in catalogues, circulars, and customers' discount cards as wholesalers of jewelry, selling at wholesale prices, whereas actually their business and prices were retail. An order must therefore issue, and we are not disposed to make emendations in the one framed by the Commission in order possibly to soften the blow, but more probably to breed trouble by creating new ambiguities or at least illusory hopes in the petitioner's minds.

Petitioners are not wholesalers or jobbers and only deceive their customers as to their prices when they so claim. Nor is the phrase "industrial jobbers" less misleading, or saved by the fact that they look for their customers among industrial workers, with the help of industrial personnel offices. That they entered into a stipulation with the Commission a year earlier wherein their business was inadvertently described as "industrial jobbing" cannot protect them, for the stipulation by its terms was not to prevent proceedings in the event of fresh deception—even if we overlook the Commission's claims that the stipulation was not in evidence and that no law makes such an agreement into a formal order or res judicata.

The Commission, under the facts disclosed and put in issue by the complaint, was not required to add the words "when such is not the fact" to the order against claims of wholesaling. When and if petitioners bona fide enter upon a different form of business, they will not be restricted by an order directly applicable to a different situation; petitioners' persistence, notwithstanding even their stipulation, hardly indicates a need to anticipate that change. The ban on the representation that the business had continued for more than fifty years was also justified. Apart from the question whether petitioners could claim continuity, despite an intermediate bankruptcy, with a business originated by the father of one of them, it is patent that here they seek the mantle of an old wholesale house as part of the same scheme of deception. No objection is made to the order forbidding the sale of synthetic stones as real.

The order of the Commission is affirmed and an enforcement order of this Court will be entered.

JOSEPH A. PIUMA v. UNITED STATES¹

No. 9934—F. T. C. Dock. 2229

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit. March 9, 1942)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—VIOLATION—PENALTY PROCEEDINGS—FAILURE TO PETITION REVIEW SEASONABLY—ADMISSIONS—APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT ON.

Where Federal Trade Commission's order requiring defendant to cease and desist from making certain representations regarding defendant's product became final because of defendant's failure to petition for a review within time prescribed by Federal Trade Commission Act, and in action by the United States to recover civil penalties prescribed by the act for violation of the order, defendant admitted all material allegations of the complaint, and there being no issue as to any material fact, court granted motion for summary judgment, the appeal from such judgment was "frivolous". Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a, c, g, 1) as [602] amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a, c, g, 1); Federal Rules of Civil [602] Procedure, rule 56, 23 U. S. C. A. following section 723c.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—APPELLATE PROCEDURE AND PROCEEDINGS—FAILURE TO PETITION REVIEW SEASONABLY—FINDINGS OF COMMISSION—REVIEW.

Where Federal Trade Commission's order requiring defendant to cease and desist from making certain representations regarding defendant's product became final because of defendant's failure to petition for a review within time prescribed by Federal Trade Commission Act, findings of facts by the commission essential to its jurisdiction were not open to review. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a, c, g, 1) as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a, c, g, 1).

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—VIOLATION—PENALTY PROCEEDINGS—MISREPRESENTATION—QUALITIES OF PRODUCT—MEDICINAL PREPARATIONS—"GLENDAJE" "GLAND TONIC"—ADVERTISEMENT AFTER ORDER FINAL.

Where cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission required defendant to refrain from representing that his product "Glendaje" was a gland tonic, and that preparation was best gland remedy known, and order became final upon defendant's failure to petition for a review within time prescribed by Federal Trade Commission Act, subsequent advertisements by defendant of his product as a "gland tablet," and that it was "one of best gland remedies known" constituted violations of the order, authorizing Federal Government to recover civil penalties prescribed by the act. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a, c, g, 1) as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a, c, g, 1).

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—VIOLATION—PENALTY PROCEEDINGS—STATUTORY AUTHORITY—IF ORDER PRIOR TO BUT VIOLATION AFTER.

The award of civil penalties to the United States for violation of Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order was not void as "ex post facto" Canepa & Castruccio, of Los Angeles, Cal. (Mr. Horace W. Danforth, of Los Angeles, Cal., of counsel), for appellant.

Mr. Wm. Fleet Palmer, United States attorney, and Mr. James L. Crawford, and Mr. John M. Gault, assistant United States attorneys, all of Los Angeles, Cal., for appellee.

Before DENMAN, MATHEWS, and STEPHENS, Circuit Judges.

MATHEWS, Circuit Judge:

On April 6, 1937, in a proceeding under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45, the Commission ordered appellant, Joseph A. Piuma, to cease and desist from directly or indirectly representing that Glendage—a nostrum sold and distributed by appellant in interstate commerce—(1) is a gland tonic; (2) will restore vigorous health; (3) is the best gland remedy known; (4) constitutes a remedy for glands; (5) is the last word in modern science in gland remedies, and stimulates all the glands to healthy activity; (6) is entirely unlike other so-called gland remedies; (7) stands superior as a tonic; (8) is a remedy for cases of nervousness, overwork, lack of vim, and lack of vigor; (9) will return one to the full vigor of manhood or womanhood; (10) is a competent and effective treatment or corrective for use in remedying the ailments and conditions hereinabove mentioned. The order was served on appellant on April 10, 1937. No petition to review it was ever filed. It therefore became final on May 20, 1938,¹ and was at all times thereafter in full force and effect.

On April 24, 1940, appellee, the United States, brought an action against appellant under § 5 (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended by § 3 of the Act of March 21, 1938, c. 49, 52 Stat. 111, 15 U. S. [603] C. A. § (45).² The complaint charged thirteen violations of the order, in that, between September 15, 1938, and January 30, 1940, appellant had published thirteen newspaper advertisements, each of which was substantially as follows:

"Money-Back Gland Tablet Calls for Trial. Every cent will be refunded if results from Glendage are unsatisfactory. That's how sure we are that we have one of the best gland tablets known. Thousands of tests have proven this to our full satisfaction. You, too, may prove it without risking a penny. Glendage, in convenient tablet form, is the private prescription of Jos. A. Piuma, Graduate Pharmacist. It contains the extracts from the glands of healthy animals and its purpose is to help stimulate all the glands to healthy activity. You will be surprised at its invigorating action. Vigorous health is necessary for success in all activity today. Asthma, Diabetes, Rheumatism, Constant Tiredness, Low Blood Pressure, Prostate Gland Trouble, Nervousness, and others are ailments frequently caused by gland disorders. You owe it to yourself and family to try this new gland tablet. It is a real gland product and carries an unlimited money-back guarantee if it does not give complete satisfaction. 30-day treatment, $3.00."

Answering, appellant admitted all material allegations of the complaint. There being no issue as to any material fact, appellee moved for a summary judgment.³ The motion was granted and judgment was entered in appellee's favor for $3,250 ($250 for each violation of the Commission's order) and for costs. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The appeal is a frivolous one. Facts warranting the judgment were alleged in the complaint and admitted in the answer. Thus, instead of a defense, the answer was, in effect, a confession of judgment. There was and is no basis for an appeal.

The answer stated appellant's conclusion that the Commission had no jurisdiction to make the order, but stated no facts warranting the conclusion. Instead, it admitted facts showing the conclusion to be unwarranted and false. The complaint alleged and the answer admitted that the Commission issued its complaint and notice of hearing on September 5, 1934, and caused the same to be served on appellant on September 10, 1934; that appellant answered the Commission's complaint on October 2, 1934; and that, after a hearing at which evidence was received in support of the Commission's charges (no evidence being offered by appellant), the Commission made its report, stating its findings as to the facts, and thereupon made the order first hereinabove mentioned. Copies, admitted to be true copies, of the Commission's complaint and report are attached to and made part of appellee's complaint. Therefrom it appears that the Commission charged and found all facts⁴ essential to its jurisdiction. Its findings are not here open to review.

²"Any person * * * who violates an order of the Commission to cease and desist after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States."

³Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (28 U. S. C. A. following § 723c), Rule 56.

The answer stated appellant's conclusion that his admitted publication of the thirteen above mentioned newspaper advertisements did not constitute a violation of the order—a conclusion which a reading of the advertisements shows to be false. Each advertisement was, in substance and effect, a representation that Glendage constitutes a remedy for glands. Thus, in each of the thirteen publications, appellant made at least one of the representations from which the order required him to cease and desist.

Because the Commission's order was prior to the enactment of § 5 (1) of the Fed[604]eral Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45 (1), under which this action was brought, appellant contends that "the award of penalties was ex post facto and constitutionally void." There is nothing in the point; for, although the order was prior, appellant's violations of the order were subsequent to the enactment.

Other contentions made by appellant are so devoid of merit as to require no discussion.

Judgment affirmed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. RALADAM CO.¹

No. 826—F. T. C. Dock. 2406

(Supreme Court of the United States. Apr. 27, 1942)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—PRIOR PROCEEDINGS—SUPREME COURT ADJUDICATIONS—PARTIES—IF IDENTICAL BUT WITH DIFFERING FACTS AND RECORD.

Where United States Supreme Court determined that findings and proof were insufficient to justify enforcement of cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission, such reasons were not controlling in subsequent proceeding between same parties but presented different facts and different record for consideration. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—MISREPRESENTATION—BASIS FOR—DECEPTIVE CAPACITY AND TENDENCY—COMPETITIVE EFFECT—FAT REDUCING PREPARATION.

The Federal Trade Commission's findings that seller of fat-reducing remedy had made misleading and deceptive statements to further sales, that the product had many active rivals, and that the misstatements had tendency and capacity to induce people to purchase seller's product to exclusion of products of competitors were adequate basis for cease and desist order. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—UNFAIR METHOD OF COMPETITION—CRITERIA—COMPETITIVE EFFECT—LOSSES RESULTING—SHOWING OF.

To justify cease and desist order against unfair method of competition, it is not necessary that the evidence show specifically that losses to any particular trader or traders arise from the allegedly unfair [967] competitor's success in capturing part of the market. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT—SCOPE—PREVENTIVE PURPOSE.

One of the objects of the Federal Trade Commission Act is to prevent potential injury by stopping unfair methods of competition in their incipency. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

"B. To authorize and direct the Federal Trade Commission, by its attorneys, to prosecute said rule to show cause for and on behalf of the Court.

"C. To take evidence, by one or more members of the Court, upon the question whether or not petitioner has violated the Court's said decree, or in lieu thereof to refer the matter to the Federal Trade Commission as special master to take such evidence for the Court, by one of the Federal Trade Commission's Trial Examiners, and to report thereon to the Court with the evidence taken.

"D. Alternatively, if the Court should be of the opinion that its said decree of March 25, 1936, is not, in its present form, a decree upon which a contempt proceeding can be maintained, then and in that event, to amend said decree by adding thereto an appropriate and specific command to petitioner forthwith and henceforth to obey and comply with the aforesaid order to cease and desist, and to take such other action as the Court may deem necessary, suitable and proper to compel petitioner to obey and comply with the said order to cease and desist."

EVIDENCE—INFERENCE—MISREPRESENTATION—COMPETITIVE EFFECT—IF GOODS MISREPRESENTED COMPETITIVE WITH OTHER.

Where the Federal Trade Commission finds that misleading and deceptive statements were made with reference to the quality of merchandise in active competition with other merchandise, it is authorized to infer that trade will be diverted from the competitors who do not engage in such unfair methods. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. , 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—MISREPRESENTATION—COMPETITIVE EFFECT—IF GOODS MISREPRESENTED COMPETITIVE WITH OTHER—OBESITY REMEDY.

Evidence sustained finding of Federal Trade Commission that seller's misleading and deceptive statements regarding preparation used in treatment of obesity injured or tended to injure business of competitors and justified cease and desist order. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—PRIOR PROCEEDINGS—SUPREME COURT ADJUDICATIONS—RES JUDICATA—WHETHER ISSUES, ON HOLDING INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE AND FINDINGS, AND REFUSAL COURT BELOW TO PERMIT OFFER ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE.

The United States Supreme Court decision that evidence and findings of Federal Trade Commission were insufficient to justify cease and desist order against seller of preparation used in treatment of obesity, and refusal of Circuit Court of Appeals to permit commission to offer additional evidence with respect to competitors and injury to competition, did not make issues presented in subsequent proceeding by the commission against the seller "res judicata" and decision on merits of subsequent proceeding was appropriate. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45.

On Writ of Certiorari by the Commission to review judgment of Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit setting aside Commission's cease and desist order against respondent Raladam Co., judgment of court below reversed with directions.²

Mr. Robert L. Stern, of Washington, D. C., for petitioner.

Mr. Rockwell T. Gust, of Detroit, Mich., for respondent.

[149] Mr. Justice BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Circuit Court of Appeals set aside a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission upon the ground that certain findings were not supported by evidence. 123 F. (2d) 34. The refusal of the court to enforce the Commission's order rested in part upon an interpretation of this Court's decision in a prior controversy between the same parties. Fed. Trade Comm. v. Raladam Co., 283 U. S. 643. Because of the importance of questions raised, we granted certiorari.

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. § 45, declares unfair methods of competition in commerce to be unlawful; empowers the Commission to prevent such methods; and authorizes the Commission after hearings and findings of fact to issue orders requiring violators "to cease and desist from using such method of competition." In 1929, the Commission, after hearings, found that the Raladam Company had used unfair methods of competition in selling a preparation called Marmola by making misleading and deceptive statements concerning its qualities as a remedy for overweight. The Commission issued a cease and desist order which the Circuit Court of Appeals vacated. 42 F. (2d) 430. This Court affirmed the Court of Appeals' judgment saying that there was "neither finding nor evidence from which the conclusion legitimately can be drawn that these advertisement substan[968]tially injured or tended * * * to injure the business of any competitor or of competitors generally, whether legitimate or not. * * * It is impossible to say whether, as a result of respondent's advertisements, any business was diverted, or was likely to be diverted, from others engaged in like trade, or whether competitors, identified or unidentified, were injured in their business, or were likely to be injured, or, indeed, whether any other anti-obesity remedies were sold or offered for sale in competition, or were of such a character as naturally to come into any real competition, with respondent's preparation in the interstate market." Fed. Trade Comm. v. Raladam Co., supra, 652-653. It is clear that the reasons for refusing to enforce the Commission's order are grounded upon the inadequacy of the findings and proof as revealed in the particular record [151] then before this Court. Hence, these reasons are not controlling in this case, arising as it does out of different proceedings and presenting different facts and a different record for our consideration.

In 1935, the Commission instituted the present proceedings against Raladam, charging unfair methods of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Hearings were held and much evidence was heard concerning Raladam's trade methods since the date of the earlier cease and desist order. This time the Commission found with meticulous particularity that Raladam had made many misleading and deceptive statements to further sales of Marmola; that Marmola had many active rivals for the trade of those who were interested in fat-reducing remedies; that Raladam's misleading statements had the "tendency and capacity" to induce people "to purchase and use respondent's * * * preparation or medicine for reducing purposes * * * in preference to and to the exclusion of the products of competitors, * * * and to divert trade to respondent from such competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of medicines, preparations, systems, methods, books of instruction, and other articles and means designed, intended and used for the purpose of reducing weight."

These findings were an adequate basis for the Commission's order. The court below, however, was of the opinion that there was no substantial evidence to support the finding that the alleged unfair methods "substantially injured or tended to injure the business of any competitor." The evidence shows that sales of Marmola to the consuming public are made at retail drug stores throughout the country; that Raladam distributes Marmola both to wholesalers and retailers; that the wholesalers and retailers who sell Marmola also sell numerous other remedies for taking off fat; that the essential fat-reducing element in Marmola is desiccated thyroid, which is also an [152] element in some of the other remedies sold to the public with or without doctors' prescriptions; that many books of instruction on methods of reducing weight are sold in interstate commerce; and that the gross sales of Marmola were from $350,000 to $400,000 a year. From this and other evidence the Commission concluded that numerous antifat remedies were offered for sale in the same market as Marmola, and that Marmola was in active competition with them for the favor of the remedy purchasing public.

It is not necessary that the evidence show specifically that losses to any particular trader or traders arise from Raladam's success in capturing part of the market. One of the objects of the Act creating the Federal Trade Commission was to prevent potential injury by stopping unfair methods of competition in their incipiency. Fashion Guild v. Trade Commn., 312 U. S. 457, 466. And when the Commission finds as it did here that misleading and deceptive statements were made with reference to the quality of merchandise in active competition with other merchandise it is also authorized to infer that trade will be diverted from competitors who do not engage in such "unfair methods." Federal Trade Comm. v. Winsted Co., 258 U. S. 483, 493. The findings of the Commission in this case should have been sustained against the attack made upon them.

Raladam contends here as it did before the Commission and the Circuit Court of Appeals that the judgment of this Court [969] in the first case makes the issues here in controversy res judicata, and therefore bars these proceedings. It also contends that the denial by this Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals in the earlier proceedings of the Commission's motion to offer additional evidence with respect to competitors and injury to competition should have a like effect. We think these contentions are without merit, and therefore agree with the court below in [153] its determination that a decision on the merits was appropriate.

The respondent has not sought in this Court to sustain the judgment of the court below on any other ground. Accordingly, the judgment is reversed with directions that the order of the Federal Trade Commission be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

4. Representing in any manner that fabrics or products offered for sale or sold by it contain silk in greater quantity than is actually the case;

And it is hereby further ordered, adjudged, and decreed, That the petitioner herein shall, within ninety (90) days after the entry of this decree, file with the Federal Trade Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this decree.

Without prejudice to the right of the United States, as provided in section 5 (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, to prosecute suits to recover civil penalties for violations of the said order to cease and desist hereby modified and affirmed, this Court retains jurisdiction of this cause to enter such further orders herein from time to time as may become necessary effectively to enforce compliance in every respect with this decree and to prevent evasion thereof.

MORETRENCH CORPORATION v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 2—F. T. C. Dock. 3262

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit. May 4, 1942)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—DISPARAGEMENT—GOOD FAITH—WELL-POINTS.

Evidence sustained finding that advertisement of well-point used in draining wet places preparatory to building or engineering operations, grossly understated the unobstructed water-passing screen areas of competing products as compared with the advertised well-point, justifying cease and desist order, although apparently misstatement was due to mistake, and put forward in good faith.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—DISPARAGEMENT—TRADE UNDERSTANDINGS—WELL-POINTS—"BACKWASH".

Evidence sustained finding that advertisement of well-point used in draining wet places, preparatory to building or engineering operations, disparaging competitors' products for their failure to prevent "backwash" of jetted water forced through well-point in order to sink it were misleading, justifying cease and desist order, where it appeared the trade differed as to the value of preventing "backwash."

¹ Reported in 127 F. (2d) 792. For case before Commission, see 28 F. T. C. 297.

FINDINGS OF COMMISSION—IF SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

Findings of the Federal Trade Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive as to the facts.

METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—MISREPRESENTATION—COMPARATIVE MERITS—ATTRIBUTED QUOTED STATEMENTS—WELL-POINTS.

The use of quoted statement attributed to "experienced contractors" that advertised well-point was as good as any five others, and never clogged, was properly forbidden by cease and desist order, even though unlikely to mislead buyers of such machinery.

METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—ENDORSEMENTS AND TESTIMONIALS—ATTRIBUTED QUOTED MATTER—USE AFTER FALSITY KNOWN.

In the use of testimonials, attributed to satisfied customers, literal truthfulness should be insisted upon, and it is no excuse for a statement after it is known to be false, that it is put forward as a quotation.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—PUBLIC INTEREST—MISREPRESENTATION—COMPARATIVE MERITS OF PRODUCT—WHERE ISSUE PRESSED BY COMPETITORS—WELL-POINTS.

Where manufacturer of systems of pumps, piping, and well-points used to drain wet places preparatory to building or engineering operations, went to considerable expense to defend its right to use certain statements comparing its product with competing products in advertising, and competitors considered matter of sufficient importance to instigate a proceeding before Federal Trade Commission to prevent such advertising, there was sufficient "public interest" in the controversy as would justify commission's action in ordering manufacturer to cease and desist from alleged unfair trade practices. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (b), as amended, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (b).

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 127 F. (2d) 792)

On petition to review cease and desist order of Commission, order, as modified by Commission, affirmed.

Mr. Samuel J. Reid, of New York City, and McCole & Reid, of New York City, for petitioner.

Mr. Cyrus B. Austin, special attorney, and Mr. W. T. Kelley, chief counsel, both of Washington, D. C., for Commission.

[793] Before L. HAND, SWAN, and CHASE, Circuit Judges.

L. HAND, Circuit Judge:

The Moretrench Corp. complains of an order of the Federal Trade Commission which found that certain statements occurring in its advertising were false, and which ordered it to "cease and desist" from repeating them in the future. The Commission now concedes that its original order should be modified, and the only question before us is whether as modified it finds support in the findings, and whether the evidence supports the findings. To an understanding of this question, some account of the Moretrench Corp.'s business is necessary. It makes, sells, and installs systems of pumps, piping and well-points which are used to drain wet places preparatory to building or engineering operations. The well-points about which this controversy turns are the means by which the water is sucked up which the piping discharges away from the locus in quo. The Moretrench well-point is a metal nozzle about three and a half feet long, made up of an inner solid pipe surrounded by seven longitudinal metal rods, which are enclosed by a copper screen of wide mesh and heavy wire. Outside of this screen is a screen of fine wire and small mesh, and outside of the fine screen is a third screen of the same size wire and mesh as the first. The fine screen is thus held between the two coarse screens; it is known as the "water-passing screen." In operation, the lower end of the well-point is sunk into the ground and the water is sucked through the three screens, whence it passes up between the metal rods outside the solid pipe, and is carried away through the piping. To sink the well-point into position, water is "jetted" through the hollow pipe, at the bottom of which is a rubber ball arranged as a valve to open when water is forced through it, and to close when water is sucked into it. All well-points have such a valve but the Moretrench has an added valve set between the screen and the solid pipe so as to close during "jetting," and to prevent all "jetting" water from flowing up ("backwashing") into the draining space.

The Moretrench Corp. put out an advertising pamphlet in which it compared its system with that of its competitors, of which only two are in question here: the Complete and the Griffin. The pamphlet contained photographs of its screen and of a section of its well-point, together with photographs of the screen of other makers; also a photograph of five well-points side by side in elevation, including its own, the Complete and the Griffin. Below the last photograph was a table professing to give statistics as to the well-points shown, in the first line of which was the legend: "Unobstructed water-passing screen area in square inches." The Moretrench well-point was credited with 350 inches, the Complete with 40, and the Griffin with 85. The Commission has found that this statement was untrue and has directed its discontinuance. The second statement which it forbade was that the Complete and Griffin well-points "have only a limited use as jetting points, because they lack a valve to prevent back waste of the jetting water, and cannot wash the jetted hole out as thoroughly as it should be done to get the best service with the water pressure available." On another page of the Moretrench pamphlet appeared photographs of its well-point and another of the Complete, while both were "jetting"; below was the statement that the Complete well-point "back-wasted nearly all of the jetting pressure." The third statement forbidden is that a Moretrench well-point was equal or superior to five of any other well-points; the fourth, that it never "clogs"; the fifth, that "contractors all over the world testify" that the cost of its operation is always fifty percent lower than that of competitors'.

The Complete well-point is made of a hollow pipe like the Moretrench, but instead of being circular in section its outer surface is fluted. When the fine screen is wrapped outside the pipe, it necessarily touches it only at the outer turns of the flutings, leaving vertical grooves for draining the water between pipe and screen. Around the outside of the fine screen is wrapped a perforated casing against the inside of which the inner screen fits snugly when the well-point is delivered, but from which it backs away a little in use, except [794] where the casing holds it close to the outer turns of the flutings. The Griffin well-point has an inner pipe whose outer surface is circular in section like the Moretrench; and in order to make a draining space between it and the screen, a convoluted perforated sheet of metal is interposed between the two, which presents a surface to the fine screen like the flutings of the Complete well-point except for the perforations. Around this sheet the fine screen is wrapped, making vertical draining passages between the two; and also between the pipe and the inner side of sheet, for so much of the water as passes through the perforations. Around the fine screen is finally wrapped a perforated casing like that in the Complete. As in the case of the Complete well-point, the fine screen when delivered fits snugly against the inside of the casing, but in use it backs off a little except where it is held against a convolution of the inner sheet. Neither well-point has a second valve to stop the "backwash" during "jetting."

The first question is as to the meaning of the phrase: "Unobstructed water-passing screen area." The witnesses for the Moretrench Corp. understood this to mean the whole area of the fine screen so far as the inner and outer coarse screens did not block it off. They therefore subtracted from its gross area the aggregate area of the points at which the coarse screens touched it, and that of the solder spots by which the two edges of the outer coarse screen were held together. The Commission did not accept this definition; it thought it misleading to disregard the size of the mesh of the fine screen, since a screen can drain water only through its openings. However, it was content arguendo to accept the experts' definition, because it concluded that they did not apply it consistently to the Complete and Griffin well-points. They had computed the unobstructed area as though the fine screens remained in service snugly pressed against the inner surface of the casings as they were when delivered. This was a very natural mistake, and except for it the conclusion would have been right; perhaps the Moretrench Corp. did not know that the fine screen backed away; in any event there is no reason to suppose that the advertisement was not put forward in good faith.

However, as we have said, the fine screen does back away (this becomes apparent upon an examination of the physical exhibits), and it is not disputed that—when dealing with such slowly moving water as passes through the screens when the pumps are sucking—the separation is enough to eliminate any blockage by the casings, except where the fine screen is held fast against the flutings or convolutions. If the “unobstructed water-passing screen areas” of either the Complete, or the Griffin, well-point be computed upon that basis, the advertisement allowed them much too little. It does not indeed appear how great that understatement was, and it would be difficult if not impossible to estimate it with accuracy, for the fine screen will not back away from the casing uniformly everywhere. Perhaps it was for this reason, that the Commission made no attempt to find what were the unblocked areas of the Complete and Griffin well-points, contenting itself with merely finding that the advertisement was misleading, as it unquestionably was, if it be read as referring to the well-points after they have been in service. It seems to us clear that it should be so read; buyers would obviously only care about the operation of the well-point, not about its condition upon delivery. We conclude therefore that the first part of the order was justified and it is affirmed pro tanto, as modified.

The second question is of the effect of not introducing a second valve to prevent “backwash.” The second valve does do just that, and the Commission now concedes that the Moretrench Corp. should be allowed to proclaim the advantages of its own construction; for this reason its order only forbids “disparaging” the Complete or Griffin well-points because they do not prevent “backwash.” Apparently the trade differs as to the value of this feature; particularly in the case of a pointed well-point, like the Complete and the Griffin; some people believe it to be an advantage to have some of the “jetting” water flow back into the draining space and out through the holes in the side of the point. They think that it “lubricates” the surrounding soil and makes it easier to sink the well-point. Moreover, they believe that the “backwash” helps clear the screen as it sinks, and that it is otherwise likely to become clogged. There was testimony to that effect which the Commission might accept, as it did in preference to the contrary testimony of the Moretrench Corp.’s experts. On the record we doubt [795] whether we should have concluded that the “disparaging” statements were misleading; but since our office ends as soon as we find substantial support for the finding, this part of the order must also be affirmed.

The next statement challenged is that one Moretrench well-point is as good as any five others and never clogs. This was part of an insignificant advertisement which appeared over five years ago and had been discontinued before the complaint was filed. It was put in quotes and followed by the words: "say experienced contractors." It is not apparent how it is important now to forbid its repetition. Nevertheless, the Commission thought it otherwise, took evidence upon the issue, found that it was untrue—which literally it was—and now presses this part of the order. The only point which can be made against it is that it was put forward as an opinion of others, and not as emanating from the Moretrench Corp. itself. It is extremely hard to believe that any buyers of such machinery could be misled by anything which was patently no more than the exuberant enthusiasm of a satisfied customer, but in such matters we understand that we are to insist upon the most literal truthfulness. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U. S. 112, 116 [25 F. T. C. 1715]. Nor is it an excuse for a statement after it is known to be false, that it is put forward as a quotation. United States v. John J. Fulton Co., 33 F. (2d) 506, 507 (C. C. A. 9).

The last of the misleading statements is that "contractors all over the world testify" that operating cost of the Moretrench system is fifty percent lower than that of any other. This was part of the same obscure advertisement we have just mentioned, and of another, equally obscure, published 13 months later. Literally speaking, it was of course untrue; contractors "all over the world" did not testify as they were quoted. As this was the only part found to have been false, it is again hard to imagine how anyone reading it could have understood it as more than puffing; yet for the reasons we have just given, if the Commission saw fit to take notice of it, we may not interfere.

The final complaint is that the "proceeding" before the Commission does not "appear" to have been "to the interest of the public" (sec. 45 (b) of Title 15, U. S. Code). Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 280 U. S. 19 [13 F. T. C. 581], did indeed decide that the public interest in the controversy was a justiciable issue, and that it had no interest in the proceeding there at bar. The dispute concerned the use of a trade-mark which the respondent Klesner had adopted out of spite against its owner, Sammons; and the discussion left it not altogether clear why the public had no interest in its settlement. One might perhaps infer that if the only interest at stake is that customers shall get goods from the seller of whom they supposed they are buying, it is not enough, provided the quality is as good as what they think they are receiving; but it seems clear from what the court has said later that this is not so. Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Co., 288 U. S. 212, 216, 217 [17 F. T. C. 664]; Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Co., 291 U. S. 67, 78 [18 F. T. C. 669]. In the last case Cardozo, J., went indeed so far as to say: "the public is entitled to get what it chooses, though the choice may be dictated by caprice or by fashion or perhaps by ignorance." It would seem, therefore, that Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, supra (280 U. S. 19) is to be put down as deciding that the court may consider whether the controversy is not in general too trivial to justify the attention of the Commission. If so, it is doubtful whether today the same answer would be given; and even if it would, the result is the same in the case at bar for the interest here was not necessarily trivial. Certainly the Moretrench Corp. did not think it so, else it would not have gone to the trouble and expense which it did; nor did its competitors think so for it was they that stirred up the proceeding. True, one might suppose that the customers were of a kind not to be influenced by such advertising; but once more, the attitude of the manufacturers proves the opposite. If the controversy concerned only such statements as the third, fourth and fifth, it would indeed be hard to resist the argument that the whole affair was too tenuous for even that minimum which will justify the Commission's action. But for the reasons we have just given, we cannot say that the public has no interest in the truth about those features of the well-points with which the [795] first and second statements were concerned. That interest was enough to support the proceeding.

Order affirmed, as modified by the Commission.

HASKELITE MANUFACTURING CORPORATION v.
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 7832—F. T. C. Dock. 4442

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. May 7, 1942)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—EXTENT—PREVENTIVE ADEQUACY.

Where manufacturer had been dealing unfairly, the Federal Trade Commission had authority to prescribe reasonable requirements for the manufacturer to meet in the interest of fair dealing, which requirements would act as guarantees against a recurrence of past unfair and deceptive acts. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a), 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a).

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—EXTENT—PREVENTIVE ADEQUACY—MISREPRESENTATION—COMPOSITION OF PRODUCT—TRAYS—WHERE PAPER SURFACE IN SIMULATION OF WOOD—DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENT BY LEGEND ON ARTICLE OR CARTON.

Where complaint of Federal Trade Commission charged manufacturer with unfair and deceptive practices with regard to marketing of trays as all wooden structures when surface was paper and manufacturer had been found guilty, commission's order requiring manufacturer to desist from selling trays having surfaces of paper which simulate wood without clearly disclosing, by legend printed upon the trays or upon cartons, that surfaces were made of paper, was justified and did not place an unfair burden upon the manufacturer. Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5 (a), 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 45 (a).

On petition to review cease and desist order of Commission, petition denied, and order of enforcement directed.

Mr. John Harrington, of Chicago, Ill., for petitioner.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, chief counsel, Mr. Joseph J. Smith, Jr., assistant chief counsel, and Mr. Eldon P. Schrup and Mr. James W. Nichol, special attorneys, all of Washington, D. C., for Commission.

Before EVANS, KERNER, and MINTON, Circuit Judges.

MINTON, Circuit Judge.

This petition seeks to review a paragraph of a cease and desist order entered by the respondent Commission against the petitioner.

The petitioner is engaged in the manufacture and sale to dealers of a line of buffet or lap trays. Some of the trays are made of wood, and some are made with a hardwood core and surface with a processed paper to simulate walnut and Mexican capomo wood. It was charged in the complaint that the petitioner had advertised its synthetic product as manufactured of hardwood and of hardwood surface, whereas in truth and in fact the surface was made of processed, lithographed paper, so as to stimulate walnut and Mexican capomo; that such practices were unfair and deceptive within the meaning of section 5 (a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. (15 U. S. C. A. 45 (a).) After a hearing, an order was issued against petitioner, directing that it cease and desist from:

(1) Representing that trays made in part of paper are made entirely of wood;

(2) Using the words "wood," "hardwood," "walnut," or "capomo," or any other word descriptive of wood, to designate or describe trays having paper surfaces, unless there appear in immediate connection or conjunction with such words other words clearly indicating that the surfaces of such trays are made of paper;

(3) Selling or distributing trays having surfaces of paper which simulates wood, without clearly disclosing by means of legends imprinted upon such trays or upon the individual cartons in which said trays are packed and sold at retail to the ultimate consumer, that such surfaces are made of paper.

The petitioner objected to paragraph 3 of the order, contending that it goes beyond the practices complained of by the Commission and testified to by the witnesses, and that it has no relation to advertising or [766] representation. In this we think the petitioner is mistaken.

The gravamen of the complaint is the unfair and deceptive acts and practices with regard to the marketing of the trays as all wood structures when the surface was paper. The petitioner has been found guilty of such practices, as evidenced by the first two paragraphs of the order, against which the petitioner makes no complaint. It has therefore been found guilty of the deceptive practices and acts alleged in the complaint.

It was the duty of the petitioner to deal fairly, and it had been dealing unfairly. Under such circumstances, we think the Commission had authority to prescribe reasonable requirements for the petitioner to meet in the interest of fair dealing, which requirements would act as guarantees against a recurrence of the past unfair and deceptive acts. National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426, 61 S. Ct. 693, 85 L. Ed. 930; Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 54 S. Ct. 396, 78 L. Ed. 804; Hill v. Federal Trade Commission, 124 F. (2d) 104 [this volume, ante, p. 1800]; Hershey Chocolate Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 121 F. (2d) 968 [33 F. T. C. 1798].

The requirements of paragraph 3 were calculated to aid in dispelling for the future the unfair and deceptive practices of the past, and place no unfair burden upon the petitioner; and they are well within the power of the respondent Commission.

The process used by the petitioner to simulate woods does great credit to the ingenuity of the petitioner, and is so skillfully carried out that the physical exhibits shown us in court were distinguishable from the real wooden trays only after the most careful scrutiny. The trays themselves were the best evidence of the possibility of confusion. Without some warning, the trays of themselves are almost certain to deceive the buying public. The Commission had a right to consider this fact, so forcefully apparent upon an examination of the physical exhibits. We think this is all paragraph three of the Commission's order attempts to meet.

The petition to review is denied. The Commission is entitled to the enforcement of its order. It is directed to present a proposed order of enforcement to this court, a copy of which shall be given to opposing counsel at least 72 hours before presentation to this court.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—EXTENT—LOTTERY MERCHANDISING—SELLING, ETC., ASSORTMENTS SO PACKED, ETC., THAT SALES TO PUBLIC "ARE TO BE MADE OR MAY BE MADE BY MEANS OF GAME OF CHANCE," ETC.—WHETHER TOO BROAD.

A cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission requiring petitioner to cease and desist from "selling, or distributing any merchandise so packed and assembled that sales of such merchandise to public are to be made or may be made by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, or lottery scheme", was too broad, and would be modified by striking therefrom the phrase "or may be made."

Before GARRECHT, MATHEWS, and STEPHENS, Circuit Judges.

MATHEWS, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission. Petitioner's brief specifies as error,¹ not the entire order, but only so much thereof as requires petitioner to cease and desist from:

"(1) Selling or distributing any merchandise so packed and assembled that sales of said merchandise to the public are to be made or may be made by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise or lottery scheme."

Other paragraphs of the order—paragraphs (2), (3) and (4)—are not here challenged. As to paragraph (1), petitioner's only objection is to the phrase "or may be made." This phrase, petitioner contends, makes the order too broad. Supporting petitioner's contention are: Helen Ardelle, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 9 Cir., 101 F. (2d) 718 [28 F. T. C. 1894]; Federal Trade Commission v. A. McLean & Son, 7 Cir., 84 F. (2d) 910 [22 F. T. C. 1149]; Federal Trade Commission v. Charles N. Miller Co., 1 Cir., 97 F. (2d) 563 [27 F. T. C. 1678]; Sweets Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 2 Cir., 109 F. (2d) 296 [30 F. T. C. 1625]. Opposed are: National Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir., 104 F. (2d) 999 [29 F. T. C. 1557];² Ostler Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 10 Cir., 106 F. (2d) 962 [29 F. T. C. 1584]; Hill v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir., 124 F. We are asked by the Commission to overrule our decision in Helen Ardelle, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra. This we decline to do; for, although some courts have refused to follow it,³ we still believe our decision was correct.

² Overruling Federal Trade Commission v. A. McLean & Son, supra.

³ National Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Ostler Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Hill v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Kritzik v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.

The order is modified by striking from paragraph (1) thereof the phrase "or may be made." As thus modified, the order is affirmed.

FREDERICK A. CLARKE v. FEDERAL TRADE
COMMISSION¹

No. 9948—F. T. C. Docket. 3660

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit. May 29, 1942)

DISTRICT COURT—ORDERS TO TESTIFY BEFORE COMMISSION—WHETHER "FINAL DECISION"—EFFECT.

A District Court order, requiring one, charged by Federal Trade Commission with unfair and deceptive practices in advertising a drug, to testify before commission's trial examiner as to proportions of different ingredients in such drug, was not void, but at most erroneous, and hence was a "final decision," reviewable only on direct appeal and not subject to "collateral attack," nor reviewable on appeal from subsequent order adjudging accused in contempt for refusal to answer such questions. Federal Trade Commission Act, secs. 5, 9, 15 U. S. C. A., secs. 45, 49; Jud. Code, sec. 128, 28 U. S. C. A., sec. 225.

DISTRICT COURT—ORDERS TO TESTIFY BEFORE COMMISSION—REFUSAL TO OBEY—CONTEMPT.

A defendant who refused to obey a District Court order to testify before trial examiner was properly held in "contempt."

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 128 F. (2d) 542.)

On appeal from order by District Court adjudging defendant Clarke in contempt of order requiring him, in proceeding by Commission against him for unfair and deceptive practices in commerce in the advertising of a drug, to answer questions as to proportions of different ingredients thereof, order affirmed.²

Mr. Oliver O. Clark and Mr. Robert A. Smith, both of Los Angeles Cal., for appellant.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, chief counsel, Mr. Martin A. Morrison, and Mr. Joseph J. Smith, Jr., assistant chief counsels, Mr. Merle P. Lyon, and Mr. James W. Nichol, special attorneys, all of Washington D. C., for Commission.

¹ Reported in 128 F. (2d) 542. For decision of court below, not reported in Federal Reporter, see 33 F. T. C. 1812.

² Complaint in question, now pending, in the matter of Frederick A. Clarke, trading as Bonquet Laboratories, Docket 3660, which issued on December 8, 1938, alleged that respondent disseminated false and misleading advertisements in connection with the offer and sale of his so-called "Bonquet Blood Building Tablets," also known as "Bonquet Tablets" or "Bonquet Hemo-Tabs," which he falsely represented as a food which would regenerate the blood and was scientifically processed so as to have and retain vitamins A, B, E, and G, and which, as represented by him, would accomplish various valuable results, when in fact it was not a food, but a drug, and would not accomplish the results claimed therefor, and was without significant value in any anemic condition.

Before HANEY, STEPHENS, and HEALY, Circuit Judges.

HEALY, Circuit Judge:

The Federal Trade Commission issued a formal complaint charging appellant with unfair and deceptive practices in commerce¹ in the advertising of a drug called Boncquet Tablets. Appellant answered the complaint and appeared at the hearing in response to a subpoena, but declined to answer any questions put to him. Thereupon the Commission, proceeding under § 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 USCA § 49,² obtained from the district court an order requiring him to answer all relevant and material questions. Appellant appeared before the Commission's trial examiner in response to the order, but upon being questioned in that connection he refused to state the quantitative analysis or proportions of the various ingredients used in the manufacture of his tablets, contending that the information was a trade secret which he was not obliged to reveal.

Subsequently there was a contempt proceeding in the district court pursuant to an order to show cause; and after notice and hearing the court again directed appellant to appear as a witness in the proceeding and specifically to answer the question "What are the proportions of the different ingredients in the product Boncquet Tablets?" On the resumption of the hearing before the examiner, appellant appeared but declined to answer the question. Thereupon, on application of the Commission, the district court ordered appellant to show cause why he should not be adjudged in contempt; and after hearing he was held in contempt of the previous orders and was committed until he should purge himself [543] thereof. From this order adjudging him in contempt appellant prosecutes this appeal, alleging that the court was in error in requiring him to testify concerning the proportions of the ingredients used in his compound.

At the outset the query presents itself whether, upon this appeal from the order adjudging him in contempt, the appellant may question the propriety of the order requiring him to testify. If the latter order was itself appealable—that is to say, if it was a "final decision" within the meaning of § 128 of the Judicial Code, USCA § 226³—then it is reviewable only upon direct appeal. It may not be attacked collaterally for mere error or reviewed upon an appeal from the

² The pertinent part of the statute is as follows:

"Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any corporation or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before the commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof."

subsequent order adjudging the party in contempt. 5 C. I. S. § 1496, p. 153; 17 C. J. S. § 14, p. 19; Howat v. Kansas, 258 U. S. 181, 189-190; Brougham v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., 2 Cir., 205 Fed. 857, 860; Brotherhood of Railway & S. S. Clerks v. Texas N. O. R. Co. (D. C. Tex.), 24 F. (2d) 426, 427. Cf. Beauchamp v. United States, 9 Cir., 76 F. (2d) 663, 668. Of course, if the order directing appellant to answer the question was void, it could safely be disregarded and would be open to collateral attack. Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S. 713; Alemite Mfg. Corp. v. Staff, 2 Cir., 42 F. (2d) 832, 833; Beauchamp v. United States, supra. But the order was not void. At most it was erroneous. The Commission had jurisdiction of the subject matter of the investigation. The court had jurisdiction over appellant personally and had statutory authority to order him to testify in the proceeding before the Commission.

In judicial inquiries generally, it has been thought that an order directing a party or a witness to testify or to produce documents in interlocutory, hence not appealable. The party or the witness has no alternative but to obey or be held in contempt. Upon commitment for contempt a right of review for the first times arises. Alexander v. United States, 201 U. S. 117. Cf. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43; Wilson v. United States, 221 U. S. 361. This principle, or rule of policy as it may with propriety be called is elaborately discussed in Cobbledick v. United States, 309 U. S. 323, where it was held that an order denying motions to quash subpoenas directing persons to appear and produce documents before a grand jury was not a final decision.

But in situations analogous to the present a different rule is applied. A number of cases have arisen under § 12 of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. A. § 12, which, like § 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act,⁴ authorizes a proceeding in the district court to compel contumacious witnesses to make disclosures before the Commission. In this class of cases the order of the district court directing the witness to answer is final and reviewable. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447; Harriman v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 211 U. S. 407; Ellis v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 237 U. S. 434. In Cobbledick v. United States, supra, the court took note of these decisions, expressing the opinion that there is sufficient justification for treating them differently from those "arising out of court proceedings unrelated to any administrative agency." The court thought that a proceeding under a statute of this type may be likened to "an independent suit in equity in which appeal will lie from an injunction without the necessity of waiting for disobedience," Cobbledick v. United States, supra, p. 330. It is, of course, settled law that the propriety of an injunction can not be tested by appeal from a subsequent judgment in contempt. Howat v. Kansas, supra; Brougham v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., supra; Brotherhood of Railway & S. S. Clerks v. Texas N. O. R. Co. (D. C. Tex.), 24 F. (2d) 426, 427.

Since the order requiring appellant to make the disclosure was a final decision, it may be reviewed only on direct appeal. "Errors must be corrected by appeal and not by disobedience," Brougham v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., 2 Cir., 205 Fed. 857. Appellant confessedly refused to obey the order, so there was no error in holding him in contempt of it.

PHILIP HARRY KOOLISH; ET AL., TRADING AS STANDARD DISTRIBUTING COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 7814—F. T. C. Dock. 4135

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. June 9, 1942)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—SPECIFIC LOSSES—SHOWING OF INDIVIDUAL.

To justify cease and desist order against unfair method of competition, it is not necessary that the evidence show specifically that losses to any particular trader arise from allegedly unfair competitor's success in capturing part of the market. Federal Trade Commission Act, Sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT—SCOPE—PREVENTIVE PURPOSE.

One of the objects of the Federal Trade Commission Act is to prevent potential injury by stopping unfair methods of competition in their incipiency.

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—METHODS, ACTS AND PRACTICES—LOTTERY MERCHANDISE—SUPPLYING, WITH GOODS, MEANS OF, TO BUYER-CUSTOMERS—COMPETITIVE EFFECT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence sustained finding of Federal Trade Commission that petitioners' placing in hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in sale of merchandise by furnishing them with push cards and pull cards to be used in distribution of merchandise tended to injure business of competitors, and justified cease and desist order.

[65] Before SPARKS, KERNER, and MINTON, Circuit Judges.

SPARKS, Circuit Judge.

We are asked to review and set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission relating to the use of push cards and pull cards in the distribution of merchandise. Petitioners vigorously deny the right of the Commission to enter the order for the reason that, they assert, no element of chance enters into the sale of merchandise by themselves, and there is no showing of injury to competition, essential to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

The plan of operation here used differs from the one studied by us in Chicago Silk Co. v. F. T. C., 90 F. (2d) 689, in that whereas in that case, the money for the purchase of the goods was transmitted after collection by the push card method, here, petitioners sell their merchandise to their customers who have received the push or pull cards which they may or may not use for its final distribution. In other words, petitioners contend in effect that they are insulated against the charge of using the cards in their distribution of goods by the fact that there is no lottery or chance in their sale of the goods; that their customers receive exactly what is described in their order; and petitioners have no control of the mode of distribution after the goods leave their hands. They deny injury to competition, asserting that "distribution is not a commercial distribution over retail counters where it might compete with other sales but is a private distribution among the purchaser's friends, relatives, fellow employees, fellow lodge or club members, and the like and the customer is not under any commitment with the shipper so to distribute the merchandise."

The Commission found, and we find evidence in the record to support its finding, that petitioners supplied to and placed in the hands of others, means of conducting lotteries in the sale of merchandise, and that the use of the plan of sale and distribution was a practice contrary to the established public policy of the United States; that in the sale and distribution of their various articles of merchandise petitioners were in competition with many other persons, firms, and corporations who sell and distribute like merchandise; that many persons are attracted by the sales plan and the element of chance involved therein and are thereby induced to buy and sell petitioners' merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale by competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; and that the use of the method has a tendency and capacity to, and does unfairly divert to petitioners from their said competitors substantial trade in commerce among the various states, and as a result, substantial injury has been done to competition.

The Supreme Court has recently ruled that, "It is not necessary that the evidence show specifically that losses to any particular trader or traders arise from Raladam's (the alleged unfair competitor) success in capturing part of the market. One of the objects of the Act creating the Federal Trade Commission was to prevent potential injury by stopping unfair methods of competition in their incipiency." F. T. C. v. Raladam Co., April 27, 1942. In view of that ruling, and the rulings of this court in Chicago Silk Co., supra, certiorari denied, 302 U. S. 753; Kritzik v. F. T. C., 125 F. (2d) 351; and Bazelon, et al.

v. F. T. C., 7698, decided by this court January 13, 1942, without opinion, we are convinced that the cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission was within its authority to issue, and that no good purpose would be served by further discussion by us of the methods here employed by petitioners or the Commission's motives in taking the action here complained of, which questions petitioners seek to raise.

The order of the Federal Trade Commission is affirmed, and petitioners are hereby ordered to comply with it.

TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 7821—F. T. C. Dock. 3092

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. June 26, 1942)

Motion by petitioners for leave to adduce additional evidence denied without prejudice to renewal at time of hearing on the merits, in proceeding on petition to review order of Commission in Scientific Apparatus Makers of America, et al., Docket 3092, 33 F. T. C. 1130, 1151, requiring respondent Association members, their officers, etc., to cease and desist from entering into, etc., any understanding, etc., to restrict, etc., competition in the sale or distribution in commerce of prepared tracing papers, blueprint papers, etc., through practices there set out, and requiring respondent Association, the Surveying-Drafting-Coaters Section of Scientific Apparatus Makers of America, its manager, etc., to cease and desist from aiding and assisting the members of said Association in carrying out acts and practices set forth and performing any service or function in furtherance thereof.

Mr. Howard P. Beckett and Mr. Richard W. Thorington, both of Philadelphia Pa., for petitioners.

Mr. J. J. Smith, Jr., assistant chief counsel, of Washington D. C., for the Commission.

ORDER

Order of the Court denied, without opinion, said motion, which was based, as gathered from the petition for leave to adduce additional evidence and the Commission's answer opposing the same, on the grounds, among others, that the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 and the maximum price regulations established by the Price Administrator thereunder, along with present condition of economic scarcity with rising prices, placed petitioners in the position in which they were unable to increase their prices without violating said Act and regulations, or to maintain existing prices without risk of prosecution by the Commission for alleged violation of its order.¹ (Statement by Editor.)

As to any such conflict referred to, it quotes from a letter dated June 4, 1942, by the general counsel of the Office of Price Administration in which it was stated that it is not the policy of that Office nor the effect of said Price Control Act to sanction the establishment of uniform prices agreed upon to eliminate price competition; that such competition has a sound deflationary effect which can contribute to the implementation of the anti-inflationary program of said Office, and of the Congress as expressed in the Act; and that the Act and regulations thereunder, and the Commission's order in question, are parallel and complementary and not in any way inconsistent or conflicting.

As respects petitioner's apprehension, it set forth that the Commission is competent to determine whether evidence in a given situation warrants corrective action, but that in any case it will be for the court of appeals, in the event of affirmance and institution of contempt proceedings by the Commission, and for the district court, in event of penalty proceedings, to determine whether or not the order has been violated and, if so, the penalty to be imposed.

RESTRAINING AND INJUNCTIVE ORDERS OF THE COURTS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 13 OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. WILLIAM F. KOCH, LOUIS G. KOCH, AND KOCH LABORATORIES, INC.

Civil Action No. 3387

(District Court, Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division.
May 22, 1942)

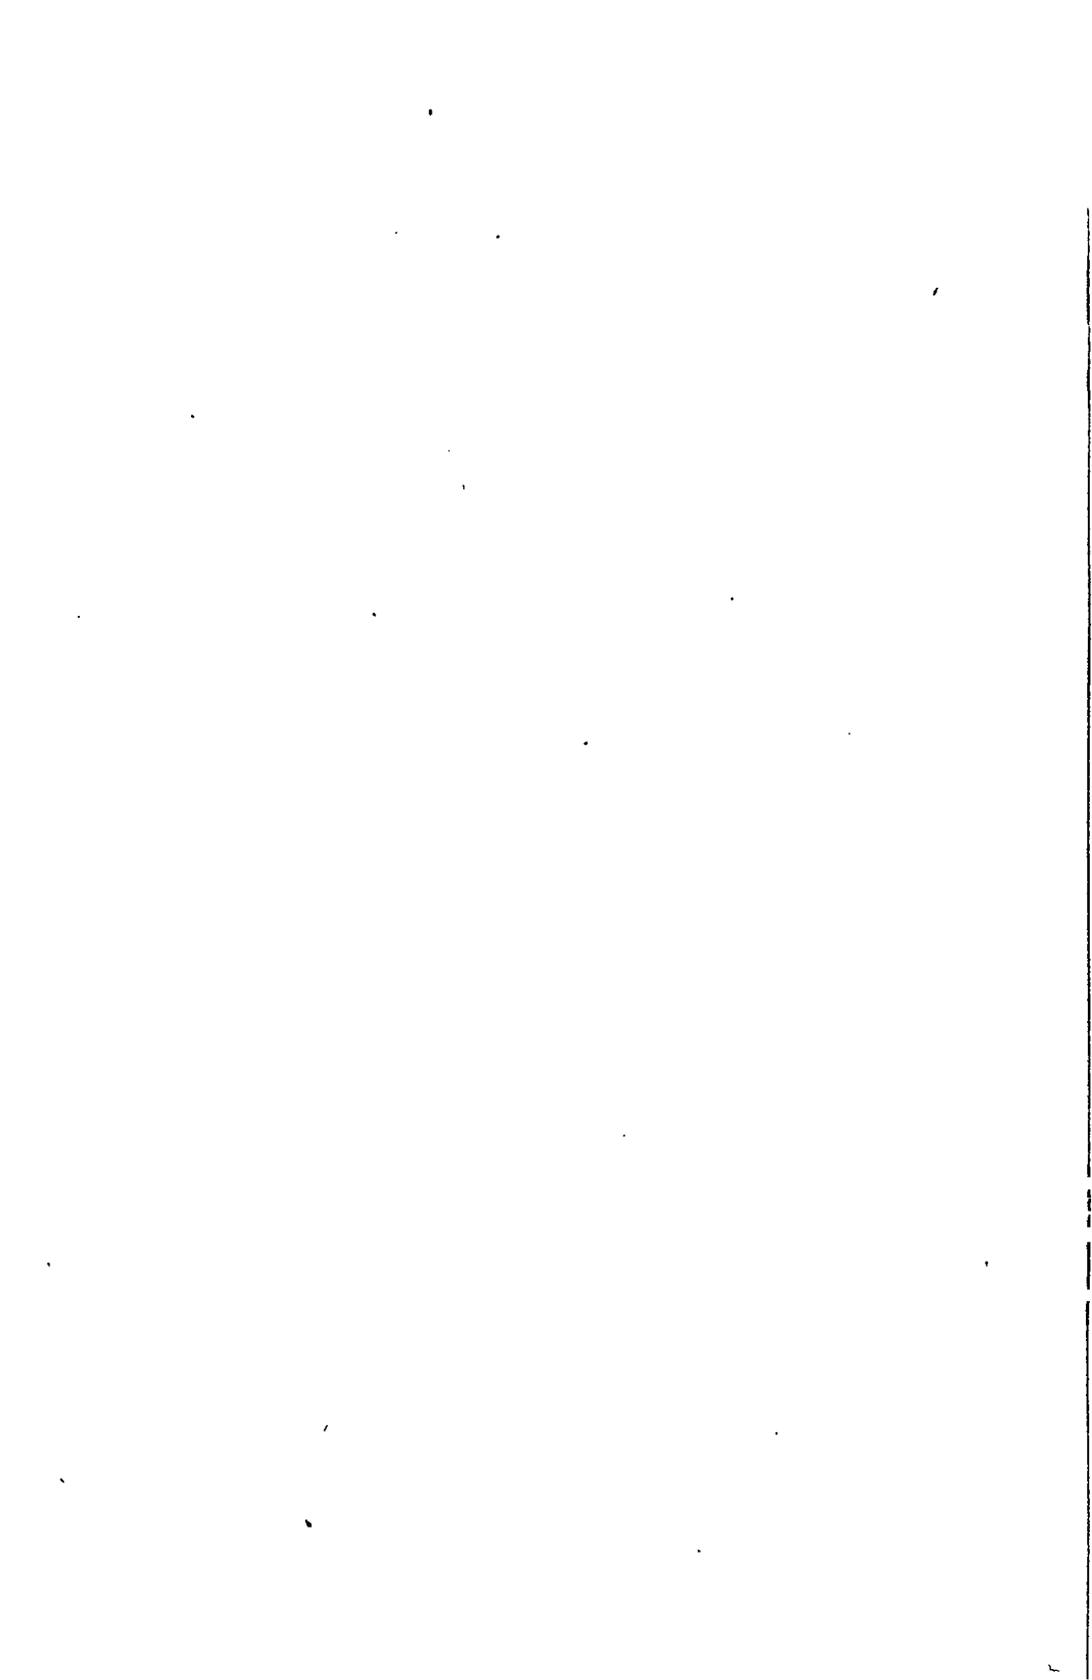

Temporary restraining order by District Judge Ernest P. O'Brien requiring defendants to cease disseminating false advertisements concerning their medical preparations "Glyoxylyde", "B-Q" and "Malonide Ketene Solution", as more fully set forth below.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, and Mr. L. E. Creel, Jr., Special Attorney, both of Washington, D. C., for the Commission.

Voorhies, Long, Ryan and McNair, of Detroit, Mich., and Mr. Richard Steel, of New York City, and Mr. William Henry Gallegher, of Detroit, Mich., for defendants.

As a result of a proceeding filed in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division, Judge O'Brien, on May 22, 1942, granted a temporary restraining order requiring William F. Koch, Louis G. Koch and Koch Laboratories, Inc., of Detroit, to cease disseminating false advertisements concerning certain medical preparations which they made and offered and sold under the designations "Glyoxylyde", "B-Q" and "Malonide Ketene Solution", and which, as charged in the complaint issued by the Commission in the Matter of Koch Laboratories, Inc., et al., Docket 4772, on June 13, 1942, they represented in their advertisements as adequate treatments, as the case might be, for numerous ailments and conditions including cancer, leprosy, thrombosis, epilepsy, diabetes, arthritis, the degenerative diseases, and all infections and allergies; when in fact, as alleged in said complaint, such preparations possessed no therapeutic value and would benefit no disease. (Statement by editor).¹

PENALTY PROCEEDINGS ¹

Civil penalties amounting to $4,000 were collected within the period embraced by volume 34, i. e., November 1, 1941, to June 30, 1942, as the following cases, in which alleged violations of cease and desist orders had been certified to the Attorney General, were disposed of:

United States v. Midwest Studios, Inc.; United States District Court for the District of Oregon; judgment entered for $1,500 and satisfied January 14, 1942.

The Commission had ordered Midwest Studios, Inc., et al., their representatives, etc., in connection with the offer, etc., in interstate commerce of colored or tinted photographs or colored enlargements thereof having a photographic base, to cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or in any manner, that colored or tinted pictures, photographs, or photographic enlargements are hand-painted or are paintings.

2. Using the terms "free hand painted portrait," "oil painting," or the word "painting," either alone or in conjunction with any other terms or words or in any way to designate, describe or refer to colored or tinted pictures, photographs or photographic enlargements or other pictures produced from a photographic base or impression.

3. Misrepresenting that any specified sum is the actual cost of "handling" a picture, "wrapping," or "parcel post," or the "painter's time," or otherwise misrepresenting the actual cost of either materials or delivery.

4. Representing that a picture similar to same displayed will be delivered unless the picture so delivered is of the same kind, quality, design, and workmanship.

5. Representing that respondents are conducting any special or advertising campaign in any particular place or locality for the purpose of obtaining special exhibitors, or otherwise, unless such cam-

¹ During the period covered by this volume, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in Joseph A. Piuma v. United States, 126 F. (2d) 601, reported ante at page 1837, unaniously affirmed the judgment of the District Court for the Northern District of California in United States v. Piuma, reported in 40 Fed. Supp. 119, 33 F. T. C. 1827, in which that court imposed civil penalties amounting to $3250 upon defendant Piuma for violation of the Commission's order in Docket 2229, 24 F. T. C. 939, requiring said defendant or respondent to cease and desist from representing his medicinal preparation or nostrum "glendage" as a gland tonic, which will restore vigorous health, etc., as in said order set forth.

Shortly after the close of the period covered by this volume, on July 14, 1942, judgment was entered in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York in the case of United States v. Gynex Corp. (Bureau of Hygiene), and civil penalty collected in the amount of $500, for violation of Commission's order in Docket 3042, 24 F. T. C. 1193.

paign or such special offer is in fact then being conducted or made in such locality for such purpose.

6. Representing that said pictures are being, or will be, sold only to a limited number of customers, or otherwise misrepresenting any material fact concerning the terms and conditions of sale, or the extent to which the sale of such pictures is limited.

7. Misrepresenting through the use of a "draw," or drawing contest, or through the use of "lucky" blanks, slips, coupons, or certificates, or through the use of any other device, plan or scheme, or through any introductory or advertising offer, or otherwise, that any customer thereby would obtain a financial advantage or would be entitled to receive any picture free or would receive a substantial discount or reduction in the price of any picture or pictures.

8. Concealing from or failing to disclose to customers upon initial contact that the finished picture when delivered will be so shaped and designed that it can only be used in a specially designed, odd style of frame which can be obtained from Midwest Studios only.

9. Representing to customers in any manner that suitable frames for pictures may be purchased elsewhere unless such odd design of frame can in fact be readily purchased in the customary marts of trade.

10. Representing as the customary or regular prices or values of frames prices, and values which are in excess of the prices at which frames are regularly and customarily sold in the normal and usual course of business.

11. Obtaining promissory notes which recite that there is an outstanding "balance due on portrait," or otherwise misrepresenting that any sum or balance is due on a picture, when in fact the purchaser has previously paid the full prescribed contract price for said picture.

12. Retaining the original photograph loaned to respondent for use in making its picture, or retaining the pictures made by it therefrom, after full payment has been made therefor, unless all of the terms and conditions upon which said original photograph or said picture made by respondent is to be retained in connection with the purchase and payment for a frame, or for any other purpose, are fully and adequately revealed to the purchaser at the time the original photograph is obtained from such purchaser.²

United States v. Carl E. Koch, et al.; United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois; judgment for $2,500 entered and satisfied April 24, 1942, including injunction in terms of the cease and desist order.

Carl E. Koch, et al., trading as Co-Operative Buyers' Service, etc., their representatives, etc., in connection with the offering, etc., of beauty and barber supply products in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia were ordered forthwith to cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through use of the trade name "Co-Operative Buyers' Service," or of any other name of like import and meaning, or through any other means or device, or in any other manner, that the business conducted by the respondents is that of a cooperative.

2. Representing that such products are sold at cost prices or at prices substantially less than those at which products of equal grade and quality may be purchased from others or under a plan eliminating the profits and other charges of middlemen with resultant savings to the purchasers.

3. Representing that respondents maintain branches in San Francisco, Calif., and Paris, France, or in any other place in which they do not maintain such branch.

4. Representing, through listing and offering for sale well-known or trade-marked products of others who refuse to sell to respondent which they do not have on hand and are unable to purchase in the regular channels of trade, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that respondents are able to service and fill orders for such products unless and until they have on hand, or can secure through the normal channels of trade, a sufficient quantity of such products to be able to service and fill a normal number of orders or demands for such products;

5. Substituting products of a different grade and quality for well-known or trade-marked products;

6. Using trade or brand names, or cartons, packages, bottles, designs, labels, and slogans, in connection with the sale of respondents' products, which simulate and imitate those long used in connection with the manufacture, sale, and distribution of well-known or trade-marked competing products through similarity of letters, sound, or appearance, or in any other manner, or which have the tendency and capacity to confuse and deceive the purchasing public in relation to the origin, identity, or quality of the products so designated and described;

7. Representing that the respondent corporation is the manufacturer of any of said products, or that purchasers therefrom deal direct with the manufacturer;

8. Representing that the respondent corporation is an importer, or that any substantial portion of the products offered for sale by it is of foreign origin.

9. Representing that merchandise will be given free, or without additional charge to purchasers of designated quantities of respondents' products, or that offers of designated products are limited as to time or quantity, or any other respect, when such is not the fact.

10. Representing through use of purported special sale prices which are in fact respondents' regular prices, or through any other means or device, that such products have regular retail values or prices, and are customarily sold for sums in excess of the prices charged for such products by respondents.

11. Representing that such products are of exactly the same or substantially the same nature, quality, and substance as well-known or trade-marked competing products when such is not the fact.

12. Circulating, representing, or publishing, or causing to be circulated, represented, or published in the trade, any false or deceptive or misleading statement respecting or concerning the business methods of competitors, or the character or integrity of the managements of competitors.³
