

Thanks for your continued support of organizations like ours and your continued efforts to reduce fraudulent, misleading, fly by night companies from misleading potential business owners.

As a business owner (IBO), and being one who is skeptical and cautious about so called opportunities, I feel that the disclosure of income of average IBO's and the larger earners is an acceptable practice. Per FTC guidelines, average income is always disclosed with the opportunity to build a business as large as you want based on your own efforts, which is stressed.

The ability to return your startup materials and any products purchased seems more than acceptable, rather than creating a waiting period to get involved in your own business. The first few days of being in business tend to be very productive for most and sets a trend for future growth.

Giving references of 10 people, seems to me to be an invasion of privacy to those involved. As any business would, only POSITIVE references would be given, so it kind of defeats what is trying to be accomplished anyhow. New business owners are generally introduced to more than ten people in a very short time, which gives them the opportunity to one on one ask questions and get information on actual experiences.

Because of the individual nature of our business, including information on lawsuits unrelated to myself and my specific business, seems unnecessary and could possibly have a negative effect on my business. My character should in no way be affected by the actions of other individual business owners who have been less than honest in their dealings or who have been attacked by a litigious person seeking some form of gain or retribution.

Thank you again for your involvement with companies like ours that have only one goal. To offer an opportunity to people without a lot of capital to go into business for themselves and hopefully prosper in the Land of Opportunity, like nowhere else on earth.
