To Whom It May Concern:

Thank you for taking time to review my concerns for the new FTC rules for Business Opportunity Rule, 16 CFR Part 437. I have been around the Quixtar Business since it's inception and was involve with Amway prior to then. Below are my concerns:

There is no need for any of these rules except for one that was not noted. This would be that all business of this nature would need to be registered and approved by the FTC. If the FTC has approved the company then all a person would have to do is their own due diligence to confirm this is the business for them. This would eliminate the proposed time consuming rules that would slow down the process to do business.

We cannot baby people; they need to be responsible for their actions. When someone takes a job they need to ask the correct questions to make sure the new job is not a sweatshop and the company treats their people fairly. It needs to be the persons responsibility to do this with a business venture too.

One rule that should be added is to not let lawyers and judges make an anthill into a molehill. They are the ones who messed it for everyone. Too many people cry wolf when they are the ones who knew what they were getting into and then decided they did not want to do it and expected all their money back. I wish we could do this with education. How many people go to school and get out in the job market and there are no jobs to be found in what they study.

Please do not complicate this business with new rules that will slow down the individual business owner's process. Make it the main companies responsibility to get registered with the FTC and the proposed new business owners to do their homework.

Thank you again for your time.
