

Sirs/Madam:

With this great American company, I have been able to now see clearly to embrace the American Dream. Without it I'd be another statistic who couldn't even get near home ownership, put kids in college, plan properly for retirement, have opportunity for investment. All of what I have mentioned is gradually becoming a reality.

The impact of your ruling would be limiting any class of people leaving them very few choices available to them. After all it's why we work everyday isn't it...for all the things we dream about. You'd be tying the hands of the people building the business and denying the dream for thousands of people who'd have this wonderful business shared with them. Any and all information that any person would need is currently public information as with any other company/business. Why would my financial details be necessary anyway if the person determines they'd like to pursue the opportunity? As a person comes to this country aka "the land of opportunity" to grab hold of a solid chance to build wealth, create opportunity, develop legacy why should they be/feel limited? Even by my income?

Just like anything else, if all details like client references, independent business owner info, factual records, lawsuits of any kind, product details, are needed - all references are available to the individual by the company any time the person needs details.

As far as reasonable regulation suggestions - have faith that if the persons that have been presented the opportunity find that there is a problem, give them a means to report the impropriety else give them room to build their future.

-Regards
