Despite that goal, we still verify accounts ad hoc when we think it serves the public conversation & is in line with our policy. But this has led to frustration b/c our process remains opaque & inconsistent with our intended pause. This is far from ideal & we still intend to fix

You inbred racist red neck. The thing is your mom and dad are brother and sister. That's called inbreeding and the result are scumbags like you.

This is the most confounding part of your thread. What constitutes ad hoc? I have a podcast where I interview public & private figures, and often need to speak to verified religion reporters in public, but since I'm not verified, my tweets may not be visible to them.

Well, your use of profanity in a civil discourse tells me many things about you.

No it doesn't, you're just too fucking dumb to come up with an actually response so you hide behind that bullshit civility defense.

My podcast was highlighted in Newsweek, Splinter News, and elsewhere prior to the verification process being shut down. It has a journalistic element and is contributing to the #Exvangelical conversation - that hashtag has 435k impressions today.

Blake Chastain @brchastain · 25m

To elaborate, #Exvangelical (and @exvangelicalpod, my show) focuses on stories of those who left fundamentalist evangelicalism. This is of paramount importance in this political/social climate, when evangelicals have so much sway in our government.
