Let's think this through... (Lesson 6: Page 6 of 6)

Jessica, 18 years old, lives in Birdtown inside the Qualla Boundry. One Saturday afternoon she and her cousin drive to the mall in Asheville to do some shopping. While walking through the parking lot, a guy in a white van pulls up and feeds them a line:

"Hey, I install home theaters for a local electronics store, and the warehouse accidently put a pair of $2,000 speakers in my van this morning. There's no record of them, and if I take them back my manager will just go sell them and pocket the money. But I'd rather sell them to you right now for just $500....."

This is actually a fairly common scam in larger cities that is primarily targeted to young people who appear to have extra spending money. The guy is no stereo installer and the speakers are not in his van by mistake. He's actually selling a pair of cheap, knock off speakers that are aren't worth anything close to $500. Do business with this guy and you'll be stuck with a pair of junk speakers and no way to ever get your money back.

HELP!

If you or anyone you know is a victim of a money scam contact your local, state, or EBCI tribal authorities immediately.
