

Constituent Support for the FTC's Noncompete Rule

Alabama | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 billion in increased wages over the next decade, including for Alabama:

Alabama Covered Workers	Increase in Total Annual AL Worker Earnings	Increase in Average Annual AL Worker Earnings

	"I am an Emmy-nominated Executive Producer who worked in broadcast news beginning in 2013. In 2015 I was pressured to sign a talent contract, even though I never had a role in front of a camera. The contract had many penalties and clauses meant to keep my wages low and keep me from seeking employment elsewhere. The terms stated that I could not take a job in television news for one year after the expiration of the contract. There was no buy-out clause and no exceptions made in the case that I was terminated. These practices serve only as a tool for controlling employees and keeping their wages low. The policy of my employer was that no one was allowed more than a 2% raise year to year, regardless of performance. The only options were accept the meager increase or leave your job and "sit out" for one year. No consideration was offered in my contract for signing the non-compete other than "employment with the Company"...My skills were so valuable that the company acknowledged going to one of the three other stations within the same market would have been bad for my employer. Yet instead of paying more than the other stations in the market, they relied on strong-arm tactics and oppressive terms in contracts to retain my employment. These policies have real world consequences." -David
	"I am an equine veterinarian that was recently fired due to refusing to accept not getting paid overtime for emergency work. This company moved to my hometown where I lived and my family has land and my wife runs her own business. With the noncompete, I was forced to stay at my job for the least commission rate in the country and take on extra call without say. I couldn't leave because that means I couldn't work in the area that I lived. So I just accepted the terms. Now that I am fired, the noncompete still stands: I can't work from my own farm, and have to travel 50 miles away to work, where nobody knows who I am and it's hard to get business since I am not able to get to their farm quickly in case of emergency. The area I live in is desperate need for an equine veterinarian so it's depriving the local community of good care for their horse...Meanwhile, my big company previous employer is working as a monopoly with high prices and won't even come to the area that I live for emergencies. While they are making more than ever, my family is suffering and I will likely lose the farm that has been in the family for generations, even after selling everything. In conclusion, the noncompete clause forces decreased labor wages and unjust working conditions, a monopoly of the big companies, and deprives the community of good quality workers." -Zachary.

	"I worked for a company as a speaker and an executive coach for 11 years. They force everyone that wants to work with them to sign a 2 year non- compete agreement. I left the company in 2021 and literally moved to South America to be able to avoid being sued over the non-compete. Non-compete agreements should definitely be illegal. They harm people in more ways than you know and only serve to create states of indentured servitude to avoid legal and financial consequences...." -Jay
	"Physicians MUST not have non competes. That's how you keep patients safe. Physicians who can easily leave a hospital that is not safe for patients, makes all patients safer. Physicians that can leave one hospital for another nearby, makes all hospitals safer. When you have non competes, physicians move to other communities. Having noncompetes for physicians creates physician shortages in smaller towns. Physicians who sacrificed their twenties and thirties to care for Americans should not be penalized by being amongst the only professions to still have non compete clauses. I imagine you want the best care for yourself and your family- that is physician led care. Physicians are leaving medicine in droves. Do better. Keep physicians practicing the art of medicine that only residency trained physicians can do." -Neha
	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I am a 21 year old who was previously a mechanical engineer. Once I had graduated and was getting job offers I quickly found out that non [competes] were the industry standard. I utterly refuse to participate in an industry that would want such control over my life. I me and my student debt struggle to keep my grandfather's farm afloat but I'd rather die on my feet than live on my knees." -Brian

Constituent First Name	Comment Highlights
Matthew	"I am a small business owner , but I previously worked for two private companies. I did not have to sign contracts at either company that included non- compete clauses, and I do not have non-compete clauses built into contracts for my employees. I firmly believe they are anti-competitive and stifle entrepreneurship, and they keep individuals from pursuing opportunities to make more money and advance in their careers. Quite frankly, that doesn't seem in line with American ideals of freedom and self-determination. My wife has a full time job in the medical industry, but she is also a fitness instructor part-time. She recently left a gym with no intentions to train again, but she has decided to seek employment elsewhere again. But, she signed a contract at her previous gym that includes a non-compete clause for three years. To keep this comment short and to the point, I am firmly in favor of the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete clauses."
Nancy	"I feel very strongly that non-compete agreements do not in any way help or protect the workers who are earning the money for the business owner. Non- competes are there only for the benefit of the company and not the employee. Asking someone to sign one in order to get a job should be against the law. Some people have very specialized skills and may not be able to find a job equal in pay or benefits if they had to take a job outside their field or skill level. Even those who work minimum wage jobs flipping burgers or cleaning buildings would have a difficult time finding another job if they had to sign a non- compete."
Jason	"Please eliminate the non-compete clause. Companies are using this to limit the ability of good employees in a bad situation to leave and find work with other companies in the same industry."
Martin	" Non-completes are predatory anti-market policies and should be abolished immediately. They have contributed to the death of small businesses in the form of private practices as providers in the area cannot leave a major corporate entity without leaving town, removing the opportunity to start, or join a small business in the area. As a result, the patient suffers. Non-competes artificially strangle wages from hard working health care employees , by forcing a decision to relocate in order to find better work conditions. The opportunity cost this poses is sometimes hard to justify with a simple wage increase elsewhere. As student who is about to apply to medical school, I know that the healthcare system in America is not perfect. This proposal excites me because it is a definitive step in the right direction towards improving the quality of the system for providers and therefore patients. Non-competes do nothing, but hurt patients by limiting providers. This is especially apparent in places where I have lived - rural areas that are currently bleeding for providers."

Christine	"Please ban the non-compete options! This rule is so unfair! Imagine this scenario: a woman takes a job in a place for her partner. But then they divorce. The woman then is forced to stay in her current job by the non-complete rule because if she tries to quit, she would only be allowed to work HOURS away, and divorce decrees often stipulate that a parent cannot move the child away. So then she is forced to either give up her employment or give up her children or stay in a job that isn't working for her. It is also contributes to pay disparities - we know that women continue to be underpaid for the same job as men, and if she is trying to leave for better pay, she can't because she is stuck at the job, allowing the employer to exploit her for lower wages than she could get if she worked at a place across town. This whole existence of non-compete clause literally creates a legal monopoly of the medical system over the employees and has effects such as described above that contribute to horribly sexist outcomes. The hospitals may tell you it will drive up wages, and to some extent it will - but that is free market. It shouldn't be a drop in the bucket though for healthcare costs! Multiple studies have reported that physician pay is less than 10% of healthcare costs. instead, those massive costs are from the big corporations squeezing patients and physicians liar money that are driving those costs. Please do the right thing and vote the fairness in employment, allow medical providers to leave a bad work situation without having to also sell their house, move their family, maybe give-up their children."
Paul	"The lobbying action from the American hospital association is precisely the sort of spineless anti-competitive action that is eroding the fundamental fabric of this nation. Doctors and nurses and all of the associated ancillary staff do not traffic in "trade secrets." There is no moral justification to exempt health care workers from the non-compete ban."
Annie	"I think it is fair that the worker has the freedom to work for any other employer without any restrictions. The worker was employed based on his/her educational and professional skills so it's not like the employer is the owner of the employees" resourcefulness. Unless the company paid fully for your education and skills training the employee cannot be restricted to move on to another company or doing his/her own business."
Cody	"I fully support the decision to ban the practice of Non-Compete clauses. To take away the workers' choice to seek better employment, especially under the guise of protecting trade secrets, breaks the labor model that allows workers to find better paying jobs. This practice only serves to benefit employers by keeping wages low and eliminating outside competition. Non-compete clauses may also be entered into by workers who do not understand or are unable to refuse the clause, thereby trapping them into a position where they do not have bargaining power to advocate for better wages and working conditions. I fully support the FTC in ending non-compete clauses as these clauses only serve to weaken the American public and strengthen corporate America."
Rashon	"I think the new proposed rule would be an improvement on helping workers across America even if your in a at-will state, there's has been some challenges in the state I reside with my former employer because of the situations I going through

	with my former employer I didn't know when I was being hired that I signed a non compete agreement and I've been unemployed for 3months and haven't successful in finding a new job because I believe in that clause is stopping it, so I endorse the new proposed rule if it would be a start to helping workers all over America against employers"
Andre	"Finally! way to go.... Thank you!"
Edward	"I agree that non compete should be illegal."
Will	"There is no good reason why physicians, nurses, and other healthcare workers should have an exemption to this rule banning non-compete practices. As a pediatric resident physician, I've worked with supervising pediatricians unable to change practices in hopes of better working conditions or a closer geography to home or schooling because of how overreaching their noncompete clauses were."
Dion	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners , and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements. One of the most sinister things companies do with noncompetes is hang your job over your head, threatening your livelihood and the livelihood of your family if you do not sign. They use your own job as the consideration for the contract, especially in "at-will" work states. Not only do they do this with noncompetes but they do it with NDAs and will more than likely use the NDA as a workaround to the noncompete, should this ban go into effect. Businesses use these contracts, and threaten their employees with them in order to protect the business from the free market. I think it would be pertinent to also add language to the ban that covers agreements such as NDAs. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Bradley	"Non competes in medicine make no sense. Hospitals aren't supplying physicians with "trade secrets" that need to be kept from competitors, the physicians bring the value themselves. Physicians are already subjected to anti-poaching clauses in their contracts that protect employers (as much as is needed) in the case a physician leaves a practice. By allowing non-competes to exist, you hurt patients by 1) Reducing physician mobility to move to underserved areas near their current practice, and 2) Reducing continuity of care; by forcing physicians to move far from their current practice, patients will not have the choice to maintain a patient physician relationship with their doc. Hospital groups will surely argue that they make huge investments into their physicians that needs to be recouped, but that is rarely true. Hospitals want to prevent physicians from being paid what they're actually worth by restricting how they can be employed."

R	"I fully support banning non-compete clauses. These have caused undue restraints on competition wider the guise of trade secrets. In my experience, it was not protecting any trade secret and just restricting competition that later effected my career and ability to grow. Further, the vague language prohibited any sort of competition or contact and was only time bound for a 2 year period. While I was fortunate, others are not and I have seen this particular non- compete negatively impact former coworkers. Leave these behind and invalidate existing ones so employees can enjoy a truly free market system like employers!"
Anna	"Non competes need to be banned!!!! It's ridiculous."
Sarah	"I am a parent of an outstanding veterinarian who was president of her vet class all 4 years and who has worked for over 5 years at a clinic that was bought by a corporation. It totally destroyed the practice and now she is having to drive much further each day to work out a 2 year non compete! I strongly recommend eliminating these non competes to help the vet industry be more competitive and not hold good vets to practices that have become miserable places to work."
Shannon	"It is my professional belief that non-competes typically create a hostile and unfair hiring market for those of us who wish to employee or contract individuals with a specific skill set. Throughout my career I have contracted services and employed numerous professionals who have had their careers and lives placed on hold and often negatively impacted by the conditions and control of a non-compete. Too often individuals are required to sign the non- compete in order to qualify for a position (especially in management). Then upon leaving (for whatever reason) they are bound by the conditions of the non-compete. Quite (Alen that individual does not hold any proprietary information, nor do they have "trade secrets" but simply a gift for building client relations, or are skilled at conflict resolution, or have a unique customer service skill set that people seek for their industry. The non-compete prevents them from utilizing those skills in any related industry without threat of retaliation and/or litigation. Way too often I have personally witnessed individuals be threatened with personal retaliation via litigation or threat of litigation in order to prevent them from bettering themselves. The person bound by non- compete cannot accept a job that is offered to them due to non-compete, which would otherwise have been a perfect career step that most professionals benefit from. People should be entitled to make a living and when you work in a specific trade you learn that trade and sharpen those trade skills then are told you cannot use that skill to survive, feed your family or better yourself for a time period. Most of the time those skills are due to hard work and talent not some "trade secret" the previous company should hold power over. It is my professional opinion that non-competes should be banned or at the very least limited to use only in cases that an employee or contract individual actual hold some classified or top-secret knowledge. Non-competes should not hold back hard-working talented individuals who simply work hard and offer a better skill set than other individuals. It is my hope the FTC will review and make a decision to stop allowing misuse of con-compete agreements."
BRENDON	"I am writing to express my strong disagreement with the American Hospital Association's (AHA) proposal to exempt physicians from the new regulation

	prohibiting noncompete agreements. As an advocate for safeguarding workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption highly disconcerting. Noncompete agreements are frequently employed by businesses to restrict their employees mobility, making it challenging for workers to depart unfavorable job conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other worker, should have the freedom to seek better job prospects without the fear of legal repercussions. Granting physicians an exemption from the noncompete policy would solely benefit hospital corporations while hurting workers. It would enable these corporations to maintain a firm grip on their employees and restrict competition, potentially resulting in lower salaries, fewer benefits, and overall poorer working conditions for physicians. Eliminating noncompete clauses would enhance patient access to healthcare as hospitals and corporations could no longer constrain where physicians can work. I urge the FTC to reject the AIA's proposal and uphold the noncompete policy for all workers, including physicians. It is crucial to safeguard workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned MD/PhD Trainee (6th year)."
Erik	"Non-compete clauses in veterinary medicine are a serious problem. Many practices include them in contracts, which makes accepting a first job a challenge for a new veterinarian. They often feel "trapped" in those jobs. It stifles competition and, when they have been challenged in court, my understanding is that they don't often hold up. Your employer should not have any control over you once you sever employment with them."
Michael	"Approve eliminating non compete clauses."
Heidi	"Non compete agreements are anti worker and only serve to make life difficult for worker. Thank you for banning them. I have friends who have had problems over diem."
Sean	"This is a fantastic proposed rule. I have been in software sales for 15 years and have always had a non compete. I had to the $2,000 confirming I would be covered when I changed companies and the prior company threatened a lawsuit over the non-compete. Being able to change companies to grow without the worry of this type of legal action is best for everyone. Non-disclosure and confidential agreements can cover anything concerning [to] the business."
Bob	"Non competes are almost always abused by companies, in any industry in which they are used in. Companies leverage them to force workers into unenviable states or prevent them from seeking employment in adjacent companies, even though the fear of spreading company secrets is often unfounded"
Jeffrey	"I agree with the proposed rule to eliminate the non-compete clause in contracts. It unduly burdens employees, especially those who are very specialized, such as medical doctors."
Rozalyn	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."

Stacy	"Please ban employers as well as purchasers of a business from imposing this restrictive and archaic clause as part of any agreement. I have been personally affected by a Noncompete Clause as part of the purchase agreement when I sold my insurance in 2019. Since then, I have been prevented from finding work in the only industry I had spent my working life in. I felt backed into a corner and somewhat forced to sell my business due to staffing issues. The only viable purchase option I had available to me at that time was a larger bank that also had an insurance agency in-house. They were the big guy, I was the little guy. They had deep pockets and I surely did not. And they knew they had the leverage on the sale and they used that to include in the purchase agreement a restrictive Noncompete Clause. I was never comfortable with the idea of having a Noncompete. I just wanted to no longer have ties to my business and to get out of it so that I wasn't financially drowning in debt from the purchase of the business. But it was made clear to me that, if I didn't agree to the Noncompete, the sale of my business to this entity was moot...Noncompete(s have) prevented me from being able to efficiently and effectively work in the insurance industry both in the area where I lived and maintained my business (Western New York) and in my new state of residence (Alabama). I have lost out on numerous opportunities in the insurance industry both in New York and Alabama as a result of being subject to a Noncompete Clause. And I think enough is enough. While I have a 5-year Noncompete Clause (which is ridiculous), I was not compensated the equivalent amount of five years of salary to compensate me for the opportunities that were available to me but that I was not able to embrace. To a large degree, it has been professionally and financially devastating...That is the situation I find myself in. Not only did I have to sign one of these clauses, but I have had it reviewed by professional colleagues since then. They have all advised that I should have an attorney look at it and potentially "fight" it to get out from underneath it. The biggest problem with that is the fact that I know I cannot financially afford to do that while the other party easily can."
Shannon	"Non-compete clauses are repressive and unfairly harm middle class Americans under these rules. This would raise worker wages which would in turn boost the economy. Please make non-compete clauses illegal."
Michaela	"I appreciate the ability to be able to comment and put my input out there to be heard. I started a job [starting] in Jan 2022 and had to sign a one year non-compete. I left that job Feb 2023, due to management referring to me as a 'bitch' to my face during my yearly evaluation, even though I haven't done anything to her to feel that way, while the owner sat there and didn't speak up. I wasn't going to be disrespected in my workplace so I chose to walk away. My noncompete prevents me from contacting my clients to be able to that I left. I am in no means wanting to taken clientele from my last job, but my clients who have trusted me this last year have no idea what's happened. I am not the type to jump from job to job, I loved my clients I got to service. They trusted me with a very intimate (Brazilian) service and it's really bothers me I had to walk away from clients who trusted me, and I had gained a relationship with the past year and act like I don't care about them. I'm worried those people who trusted in me will think I didn't care about them or didn't want them to swap over with me because I didn't want them as a client anymore. There's a lot of disruptions that clients could think since I cannot reach out to the client. I take pride in my job, and take it very serious and I don't want this false

J	"I am against non-compete clauses, especially for low income workers. I think many companies just copy a standard employment contract that includes die non-compete clause even though it is not necessary. They are too lazy to delete that part, feeling like more is better. I can see where sonic sensitive industries might feel the need for such a clause, but it should be well thought out, not standard for every employee and should not be longer than 1 year. If the company has such a clause, if they lay the employee off, the clause should be voided. My son interviewed with a company who offered him a job, but he declined because of the unreasonable non-compete clause. They said he could not work within 250 miles of any of their customers for 5 years. These customers were all over the United States, effectively stopping him from doing his chosen work anywhere in the US. When he tried to have the term reduced to 1 year, they declined, so he did not take the job. I retired after 22 years with one company. I have no idea whether I signed a non-compete clause when I was hired or not. I needed the job so I signed every paper they put in front of me. I think this may be the case for many people. Companies complain that they don't want people taking trade secrets or pricing to another company, but I'm sure they would be more than willing to benefit from such information if a person who had it started working for them. I am glad you are looking at this issue. I think that on the whole non-compete clauses are totally unfair to the worker and should be abolished."
Michael	"I had an employer try to enforce a non-compete before with threat of legal action. Luckily I had read the contract and had a manager sign me out of the clause. The threat of a lawsuit disappeared. After that I refused to sign non competes and certainly missed out on some good opportunities. The clauses are not welcome in a capitalist free market economy. I strongly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as proposed in Matter No. P201200."
Ted	"Non complete clauses destroy innovation & encourage corporate theft & control of both ideas & people Imagine schools telling students they must forget what they learned & cannot attend "rival" schools (does rival school mean 1 that get funding from the same state or the save federal govt?). "Markets" should be the exchange of ideas not the privatization of them."
Nimit	"I am part of the medical field as a physician. Over the years, I have seen a progressive imbalance favoring employers. This imbalance pertains to many facets of an employee's job, most notably pay and benefits, which have not kept up with inflation even prior to the recent drastic rise in inflation. These issues are further accentuated in smaller/rural towns where the choices of employers may be limited."

Blake	"I believe that all non competes put people in a position to be stuck or scared to move forward and makes it nearly impossible to live the American Dream. I currently left a job that is not even considered a profession and we have to sign a non compete and non solicit. It states that I have to wait 6 months to get back into that type of work and I have to wait a year before I'm legally allowed to reach out to customers that I got on my own. I worked in Transportation and provided solutions on getting product moved from point A to point B. Anyone can do it. I had a 6 figure income and now if I decide to start my own business and do the same as they did, then I get punished by law. imagine having bills to pay and have to provide to a family and also having bigger dreams than sitting in an office for 8 hours a day. Imagine living in an "At Will" State and you get fired for or laid off. You now have no income to match what you were making and your means of living because most of the people who work in this field do not have college degrees and are under a non compete. Essentially a non compete makes it to where people are "stuck" at their company once they start =icing good money and they are unable go anywhere else or try to start their own business or practice in fear that legal action could be taken from your former employer. Some may even say it breeds dishonesty, because I have known of people breaking these agreements as well. Non competes should not be enforceable. People should be free to work wherever they please and also be able to work for whoever they want to."
Austin	"Good Afternoon Commission, Myself and my fellow employees are hoping and praying that this rule will pass and will free us from our non-competes. We all feel we were duped at the time we were strongly encouraged to sign, however, since that time we have found that our employer has ceased any, and all methods of incentivizing us after decades of loyal service. Prior to our no compete things were much different. Our employer, who prior to our noncompete agreement, truly seems to value our hard work and dedication has since become a very much a "because I said so" boss. More and more freedoms continue to be rescinded, and more and more unreasonable requirements are being made of us tenured employees. We were in a very specialized and skilled industry, and our employer knows that we will all have to start new careers if we decide to leave our current positions. It honestly feels like a trap and its turned what once felt an excellent opportunity into a cage that keeps getting smaller and smaller. We do not want to leave our positions, but it is more than clear. Our employer takes advantage of the fact that we cannot seek employment in our field , for at least two years, unless we pick up a new trade, skills, or a whole new career path. Please consider this when making your decision and vote to resend are not going to eat at an allowed capitalism and competition to remain free. Thank you so much for your consideration."

Steve	"Non-Compete Clauses are nothing more than legally sanctioned BLACKMAIL to threaten employees away from getting better paying jobs! This must be abolished!"
George	"My experience as a professional sales person is that non-compete agreements restrict opportunity for my talents to capitalize on new opportunities for my family. I am specifically in the Insulation industry and had to take a year away from my industry to get out from under a restrictive Non Compete agreement with a distributor. I am now with a manufacturer of insulation and I am being pursued by a distributor, but the distributor will not extend a formal offer unless my current employer provides written documentation that they will not enforce my Non compete agreement. These two companies do not compete with one another and in fact the distributor is a customer of the manufacturer I work for and still this document restricts companies from seeking and hiring talent simply because the agreement exists, not because harm can be caused. This opportunity represents a potential 50% increase in income for my family and I may be denied that opportunity for the existence of a document that is not related to the two companies. Customer lists are not protected information since nearly everyone can be found on Google and qualified quickly through Facebook or Instagram for their professional affiliations. A ban on Non Compete agreements would be a blessing to my family."
Mobeen	"A rule that should truly not exist. It should be unethical to enforce a noncompete clause"
Jackson	"It is refreshing to see proposals that continue to focus on the rights of laborers. Any negative effects of this rule are far outweighed by the benefits of a fair and open market."
Angela	"I'm in favor of banning non compete clauses."
John	"I totally support a ban on non compete agreements. My former employer is trying their best to prevent me from working and supporting myself I quite them without notice after 20 years due to poor management and horrible working conditions. I haven't been in compliance from day one of leaving. I work outside of the geographical areas to make sure I'm in compliance. I have never called on a current customer nor do I have any confidential information. The things they accuse me of are not factual at all. It's horrid me they threaded in 2016 to fire me if I didn't sign it. They offered me no compensation for signing a non compete other employees were offered cash payments to sign. Branch managers we're told to sign or be fired
William	"I think noncompete agreements are unfair to the worker. They should be banned it takes all rights away from the workers."

Jacob	"I work for one of the largest media corporations . As talent at a local tv station, they force us to sign contracts and non competes that limit my income and upward mobility in my field of work. The non compete is for 2 years. If I wanted to change jobs, I have to NOT work in media within that market for 2 years. it's the field I love. It's not fair to workers. They can terminate the contract at any time. It's not fair."
Justin	"Non-compete Clauses need to go!"
N.	"Please change the wording to include even non profit hospitals and ALL physicians . 1- Noncompetes exacerbate clinician shortages and access to care, as physicians are forced to decide between cutting back clinically or leaving the workforce vs. staying at jobs that are not a good fit. Noncompetes help employers evade market forces that would 2- necessitate change and take leverage away from clinicians. They make it difficult to speak out about patient care issues, unfair or unsafe working conditions, etc., without worrying about having to relocate if fired. A single physician leaving a hospital to practice elsewhere in the same 3- city does not significantly hurt a system financially. If many physicians leave the same institution simultaneously, this indicates a bigger issue with the employer that needs to be addressed. The current FTC proposal wording doesn't apply to nonprofit hospitals & 4- needs to be modified to include all hospital systems. Given most US hospital systems are 'nonprofit' (despite the same business model as for profits), this will hurt independent physicians and for-profit hospitals. It will also fail to eliminate noncompetes for most physicians who currently have them. N Shah, MD"
John	"The onerous practice of insisting on a non-compete as a condition of employment has on multiple occasions in my career affected my career mobility and ability to improve my location and pay. It's essentially a form of modern serfdom and Un-American . It exists for dysfunctional, competitively impotent companies to retain talent undeservedly and at a discount."
Todd	"All employees should be protected by this rule without exceptions. More specifically, physicians need non compete protection to insure access to quality healthcare for all Americans. A free and open labor market benefits patients."
Jay	"I hope the non compete becomes obsolete. I'm in the radio industry and there were always times I could not take other radio jobs because of the non compete I was asked to sign when I was hired at that radio job. My non compete was stated as 75 air miles from our city limits. I had to leave the market entirely and come back a year later. The non compete was 75 air miles and 6 months."
Deidre	"I am an advertising account executive for a large media corporation. My non compete is 6 months. That means I have to sit out of my career field for 6 months or stay employed under reduced compensation, toxic management, every changing comp plans that continue to reduce commissions because my choice is to put up with it or lose 6 months in an industry I've worked in for 11 years. They are holding my career hostage. I feel trapped and can't better my situation because of this."

Darshana	"I fully support banning non compete clause from the contract"
Jeb	"I completely support this. Either non competes need to be banned or companies need to pay employees their full salary for the duration of the non- compete regardless of their employment status. If information is so valuable, pay for it."
Steve	"I have been subjected to non compete clauses the majority of my professional career and in my opinion they penalize the employee severely. The employer always has the deep pockets to pursue the employee in the legal system. In my opinion the employee receives nothing in return for signing away his or her rights to change jobs within the industry. I am in the insurance industry."
Gerrick	"I have worked in upper management in several small and medium-size businesses over the years . I am currently a contractor in a service-oriented business. It is my view that Non-Compete Agreements stifle innovation and restrict free trade. These agreements are contrary to a free market economy and are utilized by companies to prevent fair competition. There are already large barriers to entry in most businesses and by restricting the mobility of work and workers these barriers further discourage entrepreneurship, innovation, and market growth. While it is not often I can say I am in favor of more regulations, this rule clearly provides for improvement in Free Trade and will allow for further growth of individuals and small businesses."
Demetrius	"I think it would be an exceptional rule to ban this clause because it does more harm than good. It allows companies to dictates the employee's decision on other opportunities. It limits the competitive nature of wages. It allows room for intimidation and unfair practices of a company and also give the company room to block and deter negotiations"
Gregory	"I am for the elimination of non-compete agreements. Not only do they restrict competition but they also give employers less incentive to take measures to retain their staff. It creates a sense of entitlement with the employer with them knowing you can't use your current skills to find another job in your field of expertise."
Celeste	"I believe removing non-competes will benefits both the United States industries and its workers. There have been multiple times in my career where I have seen a better way to do business and wanted to start a company or join a company that aligned with my views and I was unable to do either because of my non-compete. I have had to walk away from larger pay and higher titles in the industry that I love because of my non-compete, which has a direct impact on my family's total income, which has trickle down effects on the members of my family. I support removing the non-competes and urge you to continue with the process"

	"I'm a Community Family Medicine physician in Kenai. The Medical field has become so difficult work in and tolerate full time. It has become a business with all of the profit margins and cost cutting measures associated with large corporations. It's exhausting and frustrating and so often a fight just to get patients the care they need....Non-compete clauses force physicians out of a town or city, which so often leads to moving out of the state. Alaska can't afford to lose anymore physicians." -Joanna G.
	"As a small business owner and employer, I do not use nor agree with non-complete agreements. If my former employer had one, and if I had signed it not realizing what the future might hold, I would not have been able to go out on my own and open my own competing business." -Paula L.
	"I fully support this rule: non-compete clauses made it far more difficult for seasonal workers in Ketchikan to move between seasonal jobs because one of the major employers in Ketchikan forced employees, without explanation or warning, to sign a non-compete clause that forbade moving to any hospitality work anywhere in Southeast Alaska for two years after working for them." -T. M.
	"I believe that non-competes are an unfair and damaging business practice. As a veterinarian I have experienced the negative impact of non-competes. They restrict not only my ability to change jobs to escape a toxic work environment, but also my ability to provide care for patients I have seen working at a different hospital....Every patient I have ever seen has now become part of my noncompete. The far-reaching scope of this document is ridiculously unfair for everyone from patients to people who may have been assistants or nurses or cleaned the building that I previously worked in. Non-competes should be banned due to their massive impact on so many people including the person involved in the contract." -Emily C.

Mukul	"I support this is new rule as a Pediatric Intensivist physician . I would love to see this apply to all hospitals, including not for profit."
Darian	"When working in any industry I should have the freedom to go elsewhere if my current employment is not satisfactory. This creates a competitive workplace and is good for economic growth. My work history and experience are relevant in the hiring process which means I should be able to work within the trade/knowledge I know and have been working under."
Brad	"I am writing in support of the ban on non-compete clauses in employment contracts. Already, employers have their hands in far too much of our personal lives, from what activities we are allowed to participate in outside of work hours to style choices to medical choices...Employers have the power to make employees' lives miserable at work and in many cases the only way to escape is to resign. Non-compete clauses force employees to stay in jobs in which they are unhappy, if they are unable to afford not getting paid for however long....To the plight of the many who are stuck in such situations, I send my support of this measure in hopes that you will hear the voices of the workers over the financial interests that oppose this measure."
X	"Please do away with these non competes.... This is not freedom, but corporate greed. The company knows you can not go anywhere so they can treat the employees like garbage. The former company I worked for was purchased by another tech company who was our competitor.... The company gave us a non-compete to sign. We all signed it thinking we were getting a better opportunity. Instead...the incentives for our job have been taken away...they tried to reduce commissions and not pay commissions on some things...We have been cussed at, and physically assaulted....What this non compete has done has taken away our dreams, and turned them into nightmares. It is a free ticket for employers to treat their employees as garbage....I had another company I could work for. In a way they are in a similar trade. I was a perfect fit. But as soon as they found out where I worked all communication stopped....This is not about trade secrets. This is about holding people hostage. I cannot work for anyone else in my trade. The company will sue me. I am forced to work in a toxic environment....If I want to change careers I have to go work for half the income in any other industry. This is not freedom. Please I beg, as a human being, do away with non competes. Even if the FTC cannot make non competes illegal. Please work with Congress to create a law to end this."

Jim	"I think this is an exceptional change as it will promote true competition and care for employees. Non-competes favor the employer by a large margin and take advantage of the employee from a stance of financial manipulation. Care and fair treatment of employees will grow because they now will not be held hostage by greed and employer self-seeking motivation....it would promote and develop the intrinsic value of the employee through their efforts and learning, just because you learn a skill at an employer doesn't mean they have total control over the use of that skill. Being bound by a non-compete literally is a form of slavery as your worth and ability is held in bondage by the employer for their own gain. Non-compete agreements are archaic and are a murmur of our history of the wealthy exploiting the non-wealthy."
Tonya	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. As a physician, I have seen their negative impacts on my colleagues, friends, trainees, and their patients. It creates undue burden on the physician to control them instead of creating healthy work environments and strips patients' choice and continuity away...if the physician feels so stuck in toxic work areas - it affects their mental health which again directly affects patient satisfaction, outcomes, and safety."
Jon	"I am one of only 3 outpatient pulmonologists that serve the state of Alaska's general population. I have a non-compete clause entered as part of my current contract that would potentially expose me to legal risk should I decide to terminate my current contract and work on my own. As this state has not been able to attract and retain pulmonologists, I think these type of non-compete clause are to the general detriment of patients and should be abolished, especially in areas with poor access to skilled workers where such clauses hurt the general population."
Renae	"I had to sign a non-compete agreement as a Nurse Practitioner providing family medicine in a town that serves 15,000 (or not get the job). The geographic limitation of the agreement essentially required me to move away if I left this job at least 90 minutes away - forcing me to rent/sell my home and/or relocate my family. I did choose to leave this job and accepted a position in a town 45 minutes away...They still sued me, feeling even this was a violation of the non-compete. They had large pockets and aggressive lawyers I had to get a lawyer and settle even though I didn't work as a NP. Another thing to consider - the document itself gives ability to employers to retaliate (even when an employee does everything right), threaten employees, and pay lower than competitive/community standard salaries. In my case, I choose to leave this job because they refused to renew my contract with a salary that was equal to the community standard - informing me that I would accept the salary they offered and if I didn't, I had a non-compete (implied threat of suit and then they did sue). Another result of this situation, is many of my patients did not receive health care in the 1-year non-compete phase, negatively impacting their health and well-being."
Ryan	"Removing a non-compete clause is a double edge situation. On the one hand, you have potential proprietary knowledge, knowledge of process/procedures, means & methods, and various other fundamental secrets that give a competitive advantage to the business. On the other hand, allowing restriction-free employment will enable movement into different positions otherwise locked out....Overall, I could see the benefits of removing non-compete clauses since they are tough to defend legally. Fiscal savings from wasted attorney fees could also be factored into the socioeconomic impact study of forgoing non-compete clauses. I support this proposed change.

Michael	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. For example, non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."
Leigh	"I strongly oppose noncompete clauses. The noncompete clause gives too much power to companies and owners and too little choice and freedom to workers. A noncompete clause allows employers to mistreat and underpay workers because they know the workers have no option to quit and find other work. Additionally, company owners generally have more financial freedom than workers and the noncompete clause puts more burden on workers who already have less freedom. Noncompete clauses are a passive form of slavery and undermine the freedom guaranteed in the United States."
Guy	"Non-compete contracts are almost always a way to rip off common workers and keep wages low. Please get rid of them and help to level a vastly uneven playing field."
Susan	"Non-compete clauses never should have been allowed in the first place. It is totally unfair to workers who already have odds stacked against them. Ban all non-compete clause immediately!"
John	"I believe that corporations' use of the non-compete clause creates a distortion of the labor market by limiting worker mobility. It thwarts any ability of the labor market to seek a fair wage level within a particular industry and job sector, while mis-allocating returns on production between labor costs and profits. I support the proposed ban on non-compete clauses in employment contracts."
Emily	"Working people need a break. Not corporations...I support banning non- compete clauses which stifle people, wages, and creativity."
John	"Any non-compete employment clause is as anti-capitalist, un-American, & undemocratic as any nihilist strategy can be!"

Sarah	"I support this rule limiting employer's ability to require/use/enforce noncompete clauses in contracts."
Kirsa	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing in support of banning noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. Particularly in our current economy, stifling job mobility and smothering job satisfaction will only make matters worse. A worker-driven market will ultimately be the most sustainable and productive market. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Heather	" Physicians should not be excluded. Every human being should be allowed to leave an unhealthy work environment and not have to uproot their family to do so."
Emily	"I agree with the elimination of non-compete clauses from employee contracts. I am a physician in a specialized field, which means that a standard non-compete clause would force me to move further than just the written radius, but functionally to the next metro area possibly hundreds of miles away....Further, alternative clauses such as 'no solicit' language can be used to prevent physicians from actively recruiting patients to their new practice. Non-compete clauses hold people in bad jobs and allow employers to abuse their employees by limiting their alternative employment options. Patients also suffer when their physicians are trapped in contracts."

	"I am a physician. I want to take care of patients. I want to work in my hometown taking care of the people that take care of me. Hospitals and corporations want to profit off of me in any way possible and limit any competition, I am not being greedy I just want to be able to move jobs and not have to uproot my family and leave my hometown if my employer becomes unreasonable or inhibits my ability to take good care of my patients. This is a simple decision of do you favor the profits of incredibly profitable corporations/hospitals or do you want to give physicians the right to work in the communities that they are called to work in. I was born in Phoenix, raised in Phoenix, educated in Phoenix, I plan to serve the city of Phoenix but my employer offers a non-compete with the exact mileage of the greater Phoenix area, this is corruption. Please make the right choice, my patients are counting on you." - Christopher
	"Non-competes have gotten out of control. It effectively removes any bargaining power that I have as an employee, as I am banned from accepting a better offer from a competitor. They are too broad, as well, making it so that I effectively cannot take a job anywhere else in my industry (semiconductors). I believe this is an incredibly anticompetitive practice. The very name confirms this. While non-competes may have been used responsibly in the past for high-level executives to protect trade secrets, the practice has grown into a way to limit worker rights and bargaining power, eliminating fair competition from the labor market. Employers could not use the tool responsibly, so it must be taken away. The positives of eliminating non-competes in terms of higher wages and greater innovation will be an enormous boon to workers and the economy, and bring the American ideal of anyone being able to make whatever they want of themselves closer to reality." - Gavin
	"I am a veterinarian and like many of my colleagues, have been negatively affected by non compete clauses. I was taken advantage of as a new grad and convinced to sign a contract for a 60 mile non compete at what became a very hostile work environment. I had to move 3 hours to get a new job. This was also the only vet practice within this radius. Non competes do nothing to help job retention and do everything to help fuel the rural veterinarian shortage by driving colleagues out of rural areas." - Paige

"I am a gastroenterologist and am stuck in a non compete for a company who was bought by private equity. I have not been granted partnership or offered shares in the company even after multiple promises. I am underpaid and over worked and am being threatened that I have to leave the city completely due to non compete if I would like to work in my field. I have affiliation with medical school, I hold community events for cancer awareness, and give back as much as I can to society in any way I can. Non competes specially for someone in my situation are unfair and one sided. This is not the American way. Fully in support of No non competes!"

Gautam	"Physicians should be included in the proposed regulations invalidating non-competes. The American hospital association is trying to exclude Physicians so they can continue to restrict physician practices and limit them to legacy hospitals. This has an adverse impact to quality of care, patient outcomes and cost. Since about 2010 onward there has been enormous hospital mergers and acquisitions and consolidation which has driven up costs for patients, taxpayers and insurers without any discernable improvement in outcomes. Physicians are patient advocates. In healthcare, Non-competes are used as a tool to suppress Physicians voice in advocating for patient care over or instead of the bottom line. It is used as a tool to fighter doctors such that if doctors speak out against poor patient care conditions they can be fired and left without an ability to see patients and maintain their livelihoods in their city. This has a net negative impact to patient care, outcomes, cost. When the pandemic hit doctors were called upon to provide free services when nurses were being paid surpluses and hospitals and PE backed mega practices were demanding extra payments to manage covid patients. Physicians put their lives on the line out of a duty to serve during the pandemic. Now is time to provide physicians with the basic human decency of being allowed to practice their craft and advocate ate for patients without fear that a non- compete can allow an employer to leverage termination against a physician having to uproot the lives of themselves and their loved ones. The most egregious part of Non-competes against Physicians is that there is nothing proprietary that the hospitals or practices provide that the physicians can take. It is in fact the Physicians that have the trained expertise that benefits the hospitals and practices. Invalidating non- competes for physicians is not about a money grab its about allowing people who have dedicated their lives to helping people freedom to help people and save lives without being forced to do so in a setting that is not conducive to a healthy physician patient relationship. Those who oppose this like the large hospital systems, the AHA and large PE backed healthcare practices do so because this would erode thick unfair ability to grow in size and limit fair competition in healthcare and support their egregiously high priced cost of care that adversely impacts patients and the public."

Brooke	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. I have been directly affected by this policy in a negative way, being unable to leave a job and company culture that was toxic and ineffective. My non compete is for 9 months and within a 50 mile radius which covers the entire metro area of where I live. There are over 100 competitor companies in my market, many of whom are doing the work of home health in a way that better aligns and serves the needs of our customers. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements. "
Robert	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of the effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. The evidence is clear that noncompete agreements hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Oday	"Non-compete really hurts individuals abilities to work and start a new job or business, make people move repeatedly to start away from previous jobs!"
Jeffery	"It doesn't make any sense to exempt non-profits from this rule. If banning non-compete in the for-profit sector will lead to more competition and higher employment, then it's important we get these benefits in the non-profit sector as well."
Thomas	"As this rule applies to physicians, the change will be extremely welcomed as currently the ability for physicians to mobilize to underserved areas, to compete in a market place for salary and benefits and to practice in an environment of their choice, not restricted by corporations is extremely limited and markedly worse than a few years ago now that over 75% of physicians in the US are employed."
Mitchell	"Early on in my career, I was prevented by a non-compete from getting a job that I wanted. I was lucky enough to have an employer that agreed to not enforce this non-compete. Without a willing employer, I wouldn't have grown in my career the way that I needed to. This is a phenomenal rule. Please carry through with it!"
H	"I am very supportive of the proposal to ban non-compete clauses for several reasons. We live in a small city and my husband works as a physician. The major healthcare system in this town forces all its physicians to sign non-compete clauses. Therefore, if a physician no longer wishes to be employed by the health system for any myriad of reasons, they almost certainly have to relocate from the city in order to find meaningful employment, and/or have multiple hour- long commutes to find work in a city where the non-compete clause isn't valid. It's

	majorly disruptive to the lives and families who work in medicine in this town. Secondly, I believe people should be able to pursue employment at ANY opportunity and at ANY time that is best suited to their skills, talents, and abilities. Non-compete clauses do nothing to benefit workers and everything to benefit employers. At the end of the day, the constitution was intended to guarantee the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It seems like non-compete clauses are in direct violation of the pursuit of freedom of employment and the happiness that results from being able to accept the best position that is a fit for your individual circumstances."
Janet	"I am a veterinary internal medicine specialist practicing in Arizona. Specialty practices are found only in Phoenix and Tucson. I joined a large, privately owned multi-specialty practice located in North Phoenix in 2019. I signed a contract with a required 2 year, 20 mile non-compete. The practice was sold to Compassion First in 2019 and which was subsequently purchased by NVA. In 2021 I was approached two separate groups of veterinary specialists that were contemplating creating a new practices in the Phoenix area and was asked to join them. I had decided to leave the practice that I was working at for multiple reasons, so I was very interested in the new opportunities that were being presented. The first group had purchased properties in the east valley and the west valley for their new practices - both were inside my non-compete. The second group wanted me to commit to joining them before they purchased property, but they were unable to find a suitable location outside of my non-compete and ultimately they chose not to build a new practice in Arizona. I contacted an employment attorney to discuss my contract. In Arizona, non-competes in medical practice are strictly enforced. My attorney was able to find one case in which a non-compete was found to be too restrictive but the case was in the courts for more than 2 years before a decision was reached. I was advised by my attorney that based on legal precedent in Arizona, it was unlikely that I would be able to reduce my non-compete, and I was unwilling to accept a position inside of my non-compete. I was unwilling to continue working at the NVA owned practice where I had been since 2019. Every specialty practice in the Phoenix Valley is inside my non-compete. After seriously considering a relocation to Albuquerque, New Mexico so that I could continue to practice as an internal medicine specialist as close to my family as possible, a position opened in Tucson which I accepted. I would have loved to have been able to work with the group of specialists in Phoenix. Ultimately, that practice did not develop because the group of specialists (2 internists, 2 cardiologists, 2 surgeons, a radiologist) were unable to get around our non-competes to create what would have been an amazing practice. I am happy to be in Tucson, but I am very disappointed that an arbitrary 2 year time frame and 20 mile radius of non-compete prevented that opportunity from becoming a reality. Restrictive non-competes imposed on veterinarians don't prevent competition. Clients are loyal to their DOCTOR, not the PRACTICE, and they will follow the doctor to their new place of business if they choose. I am happy to be in Tucson, and I work for a corporation that has again, an arbitrary time frame and distance non-compete. If I choose to leave this practice, I will be unable to remain in Tucson and practice as an internal medicine specialist. I would love to see non-competes go the way of the dodo - there is no benefit to anyone, certainly not the people seeking healthcare for their pets."

Vinay	"The non compete clause is unlawful and needs to be eliminated it has prevented me from seeking other jobs in the area"
Eileen	"Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this proposed rule. As a physician practicing in a rural and underserved area who loves what I do and who would like all of my patients to have physicians and nurses who work there do so because they want to be there rather than being trapped there, I fully support noncompete clauses. I have seen too many abusive workplaces keep humanistic healthcare workers only because the worker doesn't want to move 50 miles away to break free from their noncompete clause because then their child has to change schools. These healthcare workers often become disillusioned and burned out, and eventually leave the community all together. I implore the administration to have this apply to the so-called not-for-profit/nonprofit organizations as well, as it is well documented that these organizations often make hefty profits and adopt this nomenclature for tax purposes, rather than for being committed to mission-oriented work."
Mahmoud	"I'm against non-compete clause since it's not fair and limiting As a trainee in my final year of medical training, I'm looking at contracts now and in some contracts, they way the non-compete is worded will literally force you to leave the entire state. So in a scenario where a physician can't move and yet they don't like their work environment, they will be forced to stay in that environment to avoid any legal consequences however that will affect patients' care and lead to burn out."
Gary	"This law should have passed years ago. You can't prevent a person from making a living and supporting their family. It's not fair that in states where employers can fire a person at will and then the person can't find a job close to their family due to the non compete"
Michael	"My last employer denied me severance because I would not sign new non-compete paperwork that was written to get around my state supreme court's protections against denying a person gainful employment. I didn't sign and lost a few thousand dollars as I had been there six years. I put myself through school, I trained myself and they want to bar me from using my skills and education, that which they were only really renting from me."
Anita	"This is so essential to healthcare workers especially for nonprofit hospitals. The executives and administration is paid high salaries while the doctors and nurses are overworked and underpaid. That has to change."
Joshua	"This is such an important step towards workers freedom and I fully support! Corporations shouldn't be allowed to control worker's rights. Please ban non-compete clauses."

Adam	"I strongly support the rule banning non compete clauses. These are used to control and manipulate employees."
Monster	"Abolish this stupid law."
Dawn	"Continue in your endeavors to find the truth and obtain justice."
Kari	"As a 1099 worker in a very specialized business, the business owner has demanded I sign a non compete agreement barring me from working for any business such as hers within 10 miles of her business. The biggest majority of businesses in my field are within 10 miles of hers. It also states I am to tell her where I'm working if I ever leave her facility, which I see as an invasion of my privacy. If I no longer work for her she has no right to demand I tell her where I'm working She operates a very small business with less than 10 persons working on the property at a given time. The terms of the contract are vague In stating that I am not allowed to work for ANY business in direct competition with her for a year if I leave. I feel like these contracts read more like she owns me and I am an indentured servant. I agree with the FTC. These contract force workers to sign u dear duress and fear of losing income and the ability to increase their income. I agree with doing away with them. They are exploiting the low wage workers by sto to control them thru fear of losing their jobs. A business owner doesn't own their workers"
Christopher	"The economic strength of the United States of America flows directly from the economic freedoms of its citizens. Employers and employees negotiate compensation in many ways. Contract (union or individual) or individual at-will employment. The proliferation of non-compete clauses is an extension of employers' desire to reap the benefits of at-will employment while transferring the downsides to the employee. Yeah, we all want free ice cream and a pony. The proliferation of non-compete clauses to sectors where there is no concern of protecting proprietary information is a reversal of economic freedoms that ultimately make the United States a prosperous country. Non-compete clauses should be starkly limited or banned outright except in very limited cases to enhance and preserve economic prosperity for all Americans of all income levels."
Christopher	"Non competes stifle free Enterprise and personal liberties. There's also generally no reciprocity of protection nor a fair trade for noncompetes"
Wylie	"Non-compete agreements disproportionately affect the individual employee. hi highly-needed professions where there are healthcare shortages, clinicians are coerced into staying in roles that aren't the right fit for them due to these archaic policies, threatened by the prospect of having to leave their geographic region, uprooting their families and disrupting their social network. It shouldn't be this way. Just because we are high earners doesn't mean that we don't have the same needs as others: to establish in communities, work to build them up, and commit our live to the welfare of others. That becomes increasingly difficult to do when the only alternative to leaving a role that is one geographic region is making you fearful that you have to leave the region in order to still practice."

Natascha	"Please BAN non compete agreements!! I was offered a new job making double my salary but my non compete is blocking me from getting this promotion. This would be such a change for my family and the economy. Please help!!!"
Greg	"I support this action to abolish noncompete clauses. A close friend of mine is a healthcare small business owner and struggles in growing his practice due to a noncompete clause. It hinders work stream and personnel expansion. Please move forward with this action and restore the uninhibited entrepreneur spirit and wage equity. Thank you"
Natasha	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I am a radio broadcaster who's opportunities to work or be heard on other platforms outside of terrestrial radio such as streaming services has been hindered by my non-compete agreement. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Larry	"I support the non-compete ban. It will serve employees and employers in the long run."
Michael	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200" I fully support abolishing non competes. I've been working in the same industry for almost fifteen years and a few years ago my company asked us to sign the most cumbersome noncompete I've seen in my career. When I sought legal counsel I was advised not to sign it. As a result, I've been retaliated against and passed over for promotional opportunities within my organization. In fact, in a recent attempt to get promoted, the decision maker asked me one question the entire interview before eventually choosing another candidate. My company has used the non competes to prevent movement and scare other companies away. For example, even though I'm not under a noncomete, a recent startup in our industry has refused to interview me because of litigation in other States. So, not only am I prevented from moving up in my company, I'm prevented from moving out and using my skills to make a living."
Michael	"I've been in the medical sales business for several years and have worked for some reputable companies. Twice in my career non-compete agreements have been used to either prevent me from moving for opportunities to advance my career. In one example, the company downsized and I was impacted. Within a day, I had a new offer to continue earning a living to support my family but my organization at the time threatened to enforce the non-compete. I paid for a law

	firm assist me but my organization refused to negotiate and delayed several days which caused the new company to withdraw the offer. In another situation, after already working for years in the organization, we were asked to sign a non-compete for a small payment of a few thousand dollars. When I had a law firm review the non-compete I was advised not to sign for a variety of reasons. The non-compete was so broad that it would prevent anyone who signed from working for any organization, using any customer knowledge or relationships. When I declined to sign I was reminded that I would be the front runner for future promotions and that a signed non-compete would be a condition of promotion in the future. Note, promotion includes things such as title changes of any kind to include title changes that take place as a result of merit and performance. Please let me know if you would like a copy of the fifteen page non-compete I was asked to sign. Finally, in my case, I have been overlooked for every promotion since I declined to sign, despite having reviews that frequently exceed expectations and sales performance often in the top 30% of performance."
Amy	"I am in support of this ban! In any profession, no one should be forced to work 5 miles away (especially in small towns) to avoid competition to a previous employer. all businesses have competition everywhere, just make your business better to stand out rather than punishing a previous employee. I would also like to see a future ban on non-solicitation agreements. Humans have free will and are not the property of a business."
Ashok	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, As with even good ideas, over a period of time they are mangled and misused and start hurting the very people they were supposed to protect. California grew its economy by getting rid of non compete clauses. It has simply become a tool today for some to dictate what others can do or not do. There may be legitimate reasons for organizations to need this, but they are few and far between. They remaining are based on conjecture, hypothetical situations and misstatement of facts. It needs to go. One can argue there could be some exceptions, but then people will find loopholes and drive a truck through the gap. Just get rid of it all together. And I can assure, no corporation or organization is going to go out of business or bankrupt because of this. They will need to learn to retain workers the right way and not through the might of their lawyers. I do not think want to see all boilerplate language, the right thing is obvious Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
rashmi	"Non compete clauses very detrimental to medicine. I work in an HPSA area. And even there, that big hospitals are enforcing the non compete clause. This is resulting in hardship for the physicians and for the patients. Patients are unable to see a primary care physician in timely manner at this time.. even the specialist care is hard to come by, and you cannot get into a specialist for two or three months."

William	"See attached file(s) Unfortunately, I was a victim of a restrictive covenant or no compete clause that was adjudicated: I lost in District Court but overturned on appeal. I am a surgical specialist (colorectal surgeon) and although I suffered hardship, the real hardship was faced by many patients who suddenly and without explanation had lost their surgeon, some in the midst of treatment. My opponent/plaintiff (former associate of 6 years) petitioned the state Supreme Court to review the Appeals Court decision- this petition was declined by the state Supreme Court and the Appellate decision stood and I was able to return to work, but only after nearly 3 years of proceedings that forced me out of the metropolitan area I had served for nearly 7 years and a significant amount of money spent on attorneys fees & court costs. Essentially, the District court did not properly take into account the potential public injury as my leaving left only I colorectal surgeon to manage a population of 700,000. The plaintiff argued that the number of colorectal surgeons for this population has never been established- this is true. However, the exact number required is not necessary to decide the case (according to the Appellate Court), one must merely recognize that ONE surgeon is not enough for a population of 700,000 in a state with only 5 total colorectal surgeons (at the time). Plaintiff complained that after he ran me off he could not vacation or take any time off - that's true. It is also said I resigned my position, walked away to start my own competing practice- this is true. What was left out was that Plaintiff had the office staff direct ALL new patient traffic to him and away from me. The net result was that my practice (and practice income) dwindled away and I was unable to pay half of the overhead (as demanded by contract) - I was being forced out of the practice, squeezed out because of this secret arrangement to cut off patient access and thus starve me out. The staff admitted that this had occurred, plaintiff also admitted as much in court, but claimed it was HIS practice, HIS patients and HIS right to do anything he wanted with these patients- as if they were cattle or a commercial product (widget). Apparently this case is being used to teach courses in law school with the bottom line being that the District court ruling did not take into account the potential for public injury in deciding the case. The Appellate court corrected the situation and the state Supreme Court puts its stamp of approval on it by refusing any further review of the case. Although I am glad we prevailed in the public courts (thank god for the higher courts!), allowing restrictive covenants or no-compete clauses in the medical profession is the PROBLEM and eliminating these clauses (as 9 states have done among physicians) is the SOLUTION. I cannot speak for other industries, but I agree with the FTC's proposal to completely eliminate these clauses and restrictive covenants in the medical field when it comes to physicians and other medical professionals. The potential for harm to the general public is real - this must be recognized and remedied. I have attached several files, which include a 2003 survey of American Colorectal Surgeons that reveals the devastating consequences to colorectal surgeons and their careers. The American College of Surgeons (ACS) (the largest umbrella organization of surgeons in the USA- 80,000 members) agrees as the mission of the ACS refers to improving the lives of the surgical patient. The ACS Board of Regents drafted and accepted a "Statement on Principles- 49" in 2005, which states that "Any restrictive covenant that interferes with the uninterrupted delivery of qualified surgical care to patients is considered unethical". Well of course we

Trina	"This practice of having hairdressers and other skilled and non skilled labor sign non complete clauses is so un American, I am horrified it is even legal! We no longer live in the 12th century where the Lord of the Manor can dictate the path of our lives. Or do we? Labor itself has been decimated since Reagan in favor of corporations, which btw NO ONE except the very wealthy believe are people. They never go to jail do they? Why is Labor in this country always on the back foot when it comes to fair wages, safety regulations and now apparently the dignity of work itself? Americans are sick to death of the land of the rich, the home of the richer while the little guy gets creamed time and again. How is this free or fair? Get rid of non competes at this level, they are an obscenity and prove how much power the average worker has lost over the past 50 years! It is a disgrace and indication of how far the average citizens lifestyle and rights have fallen. It should not exist and anyone with any sense of ethics knows this!"
Kevin	"The non-compete laws unfairly punish the working class and small businesses who have lost so much already to corporate greed already. America desperately needs any alternatives to offset the growing inequality and economic exploitation that has plagued the nation over the last several decades. We need more reform to address these issues, not less. Thank you"
Shelly	"I am a Dermatology Nurse Practitioner in Arizona. I am currently in the middle of a lawsuit against me regarding a non-compete. To sum up the history: I moved to Arizona from NY in 2018. Prior to my move I was hired by a small Dermatology practice called Arizona Dermatology Group. Around December 20th of 2021 I was told by my employer that he sold the practice to a National Company and if I did not sign the contract by January 1st I would be out of a job. I signed a three year contract. I felt like I was sold on the black market. I was pushed to see a lot of patients and was not supported by the new company. They fired two doctors in this short of a notice as well who were my closest colleges because they were not board certified in dermatology. There was a lack of communication and presence at our office from the new company. Many many things transpired I

	could go on about, But I knew I could not be a part of any longer. I felt I had enough cause to break my contract. I left 9 months into my contract with the new company. I opened a business with two other partners and the National company accused me of many lies and they filed an injunction on me. I was out of work for three weeks until I went to court, sat on the stand and they had no proof of their accusations and the judge ruled me to go back to work. They are now suing me for damages. I believe they are trying to "smoke us out" because they know I don't have the money to fight. I am stressed and it is costing me a lot of money and hardship. My partners and I have yet to make a paycheck from our new business due to the costs of not only starting up all over again but because of the lawyer fees. This company not only hired my replacement before I left the company, they also have hired other doctors and PA's as well. If there is any hardship it is on me and my partners. We just want to have a practice and do what we love best, not just for money. If the company is losing patients or suffering damages, it is because of their own doing. It is not because one NP left. I am frustrated, My marriage is going through a good test due to the stress of the unknown and the fact that I was the sole bread winner in my household. I have enough money in my savings to live another 6 months maybe before I will have to go and find another job with another employer. I am going broke and I will be forced to move if this continues. I offered to just work with them but they refuse. They are just using me to prove a point and I think this should just be illegal. They want to be the biggest and one and only practice in the area. I just want to be happy, have my own business and not feel like I am owned. Please rule to push through this through. There is such a lack of providers in my specialty as well as other in my area and these non competes and restrictive covenants are doing people in our communities an injustice. We are here to take care of people and it should be their right to choose who they trust and want to take care of them. I am willing to share any of the documentation I have to help push this through."
Jacki	"I support this 100%"
R	"Non-compete clauses only limit physicians in their ability to care for patients .. eliminate this clause to help improve patient care and allow physicians to practice where they want."
Andrea	"As a practicing physician who works for a large healthcare institution in a metropolitan area, I firmly support ELIMINATION of non-compete clauses in my contract. These clauses severely limit my ability to change jobs or negotiate better options in my local community."
Bethany	"This is a very personal issue for me. I am a primary care physician who is currently unable to work in the town I live in because of a non-compete. My town is in desperate need (as most of the country is) of more primary care access and as much as I would like to be able to fill that community need I cannot because of a non-compete with my former employer! I am here, the need is here. I find non-competes to be financially and personally detrimental to everyone involved."

Daniel	"Non competes hurt physicians. Almost all of our training comes BEFORE we are employed. We pay for it, and our drowned in loans. Our employers provide us with no useful training, and non competes prevent many physicians from working in areas that are desperate for doctors. Doctors need to not be shackled with non-competes in order to best serve our patients"
Daniel	"As a physician, I support the abolishment of non-compete clauses in employment contracts."
Jeff	"PLEASE get rid of all non-compete agreements in all employment packages! It limits employee wages and immobilizes career focused professionals. The only person that benefit from non-competes are the businesses that require them for employment."
Scott	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 This letter is written as a comment to the proposed FTC regulation prohibiting non-competition agreements. The proposed rule should have an exception for agreements between owners of a business who decide that, as a condition of going into business together, they will not compete with the business for some period of time after departing the business. Departing the business would mean no longer being or acting as any one of the following: a direct or indirect or beneficial owner, employee, officer, director, manager or consultant. Such an agreement is often needed and wanted by each owner, because they do not want to conunit time, effort, and money to the new business, only to see their business partner depart and compete, thus eroding the value jointly created, so each owner is willing to promise, mutually, not to compete for some reasonable time after they have departed. This promise can be included in any agreement—oral, shareholders agreement, bylaws approved by the owners, operating agreement of an LLC, or other governing documents of the entity. Businesses come in all forms (corporation, limited liability companies, etc.), so this exception should not be limited to any specific form of entity. Ownership, likewise, can be an ownership interest as shareholder, member, or investor who has convertible debt. I see no reason why an owner should be denied this exception just because the owner has a relatively small ownership percentage—that does not change the reliance of the owner in making the commitment to devote to the business. The exception should not be limited to a sale of the ownership interest. The person might not sell the interest, keep it, but decide to work on a different project that does not compete with the business. So, the exemption proposed in the rule for a person who owns 25% or more of a business at the time the non-compete provisions is agreed to and who is selling that interest, is too narrow; the exemption I am proposing should apply to anyone who has any ownership in the business of any size at the time the noncompete is agreed to. Entirceability should be subject to a court of competent jurisdiction, who may decide whether the ownership interest is too small to constitute sufficient consideration for the promise; but the Rule need not address that."
David	"I agree with rescinding non-compete clauses. They hurt workers and reduce competition. They create situations for people where they have to choose between their mental and physical well-being or their ability to support themselves and their families. Do away with these things."

Suneet	"Non compete clauses in physician contracts limit patient access to care and cause devastating effects on both patients and physicians. If a physician wants to change jobs because of issues at their current job, he or she has to literally uproot their life to a new location a certain number of miles away. That physician's patients are stuck scrambling to find a new doctor. With the current physician shortage, that patient usually has to wait at least 3 months to establish with a new doctor. That physician's children usually have to go to a new school and make new friends. That physician has to make new friends and find a new social circle. All of this just because there is a non compete clause in their contract. At a time when physician burnout is at an all time high and there is a shortage of doctors all over the nation, the most intelligent thing to do would be to ban non compete clauses to allow more patient access to care from physicians and allow more physician autonomy."
Avraham	" Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will help me personally, as I work in the patent and IP field and am forbidden from working in the field for 2 years if I leave my current job. This hostage situation should not be legal, and restricts me from seeking a higher paying job in this field. Don't give up the fight, you have millions of hard working Americans supporting your "radical" idea that workers should have freedom. Stand fast!"
Bruce	"I am fully in favor of eliminating non-compete clauses. All they do is limit an employee's ability to provide for him/herself and their family in the most advantageous manner. It causes wages to be held artificially low because employers know their staff cannot go to work for a competitor without risking being sued. The sooner the NPRM can be implemented, the better."
Theresa	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I was required to sign a 5 year non compete after leaving a security company. It was excessive and as a single mom, my earning power was limited. Non competes only help the employer not the employees. It is time to give any employee a level playing field to earn a wage. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Brian	"As one of the 30 million Americans currently under a non- compete agreement I fully endorse this proposed rule change. My experience of being "forced" into signing a non-compete is not uncommon. I currently feel as though the individual employee's options are severely and unfairly limited when entering into such agreements. Most employees don't know their rights, the legal ramifications of such agreements, and how to navigate out of them. It is an unfair advantage for most companies in an attempt to control employees and make them even more dependent on their employment."

Derek	"I ask that you include physicians in any rules banning non compete clauses in employment contracts. With the increasing corporatization of medicine, physicians often find themselves stuck in a job or contract that keeps them from choosing the best jobs for themselves. Please include us in any new rules. Thank you."
Charles	"I applaud the FTC for addressing non-competes. In health care non-competes lead to reduced job mobility and often reduced access to medical care for patients as physicians and other clinicians leaving a practice must relocate to another geographic area to work. Non-competes can limit the patient's ability to retain care from the physician of their choice and may lead to unnecessary interruptions in treatment. In the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, unfortunately non-profit health systems are excluded. As many hospital systems are classified as not for profit, this rule may hence lead to unintended consequences. Large non-profit hospital systems currently have a competitive advantage over small independent practices which are steadily declining (AMA 2020 Physician Practice Benchmark Survey). Keeping non-competes for non-profits but not for other employers would provide an unfair advantage against physician-owned practices who employ the same labor force. Non-competes should be universally banned across employer types in the health care market to ensure an appropriate balance without introducing an unfair advantage to any party. The resultant gains in physician mobility without geographic restriction are poised to minimize gaps in access to patient care."
Randy	"The noncompete clause should 100% be illegal. The fact that a company can force you to not work in an industry or an area after you leave scares people into staying with that company. For example, in medicine, we are not supposed to abandon our patients, yet non-complete Pete causes force us to do just that when we leave one facility. we are not allowed to join any companies near that facility or any company with a certain number of employees within. Patients should be able to choose where, and who they receive care with, and employees should be able to choose who they work for without fear of retaliation or lawsuits . Noncompete clause scare employees into not speaking up against issues because if they were to get terminated, they then need to seek employment far away from their house often. Please make sure that your ban of noncompete clauses also includes changing of contracts that would be noncompete clauses de facto by employers. PROTECT the employees!"
Walter	"I strongly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as proposed in Matter No. P201200. The ability of employees to move between jobs is key to access in upward mobility in the modern work place. Non-Compete clauses in employment restrict this access for employees while employees have limited or no security in their employment."

Anna	"I am a veterinarian in a small town in Arizona. I foolishly signed a non-compete for 3 years, 10 miles when I started my last job. It kept me in a miserable, abusive workplace for years longer than I would have stayed without the non-compete. I got lucky because the clinic actually lost my signed contract. No signed contract, no non-compete. I didn't realize they had lost the contract until I had spent years longer than I would have otherwise. Non-competes are predatory and keep professionals in miserable, abusive, toxic work environments. They are also anti-competition by their very nature. The FTC needs to look out for employees and get rid of non-competes!"
John	"Non-competes are unfair and need to be banned"
Nicole	"I'm an executive in the PBM industry. Organization like Abarca Health lie and tell you if you decide to resign they'll release you from your 2 year non compete. On my last day of employment they refused to release me from my non compete. I'm being held hostage from finding employment in the only industry I have skill/knowledge/experience. Abarca utilizes non competes to target specific ex employees and prevent them from putting tbod on the table. Abarca is in the bottom 4% of Pharmacy Benefit Management organizations. What trade secrets or proprietary informational could they have that the top 3 PBM's ESI, CVS and Optum want? None! They're not competitive or a risk to other PBM's. Most of their clients are based in Puerto Rico. As an organization they haven't been competitive in winning US based business. Please take away their power to hold ex employees hostage because we could no longer accept the toxic culture their leadership team created."
Michal	"It is despicable that employers would deploy a limited tool originally designed to constrain top executives against their entire workforce to block them from taking advantage of better offers or improved working conditions at a different company. Executives are amply compensated, have options to relocate, or litigate, or can wait out the non-compete period, but to use a non-compete against an hourly worker at near minimum wage? They have virtually no options, and no recourse. This is absolutely unfair leverage. The FTC is clearly in the right on this, and acting as our Government is supposed to act; protecting the interests and rights of its citizens against labor exploitation."
R	"non-compete clauses are very detrimental to physicians as well as their patients. has doctors, we are at the mercy of corporate medicines and the corporations of which we work under, and have very limited say or power in any changes of our contracts. if we ever decide to leave a job many of us have to relocate to a new town and lose all continuity for our patients which makes them feel abandoned. this has nothing to do with the physician but everything to do with the non-compete clause. this should absolutely be removed from all contracts to help improve patient care and patient outcomes which should be the primary goal of medicine."
Stewart	"I am a physician anesthesiologist. I was forced to sign a contract with Envision Healthcare, that included a broad non-compete clause. The Hospital I work at for

	the past 13 years gave an exclusive contract to Envision Healthcare for anesthesia services. I was told if I did not sign, I could no longer work at the hospital. Prior to this, the anesthesiologists were individual practitioners and had various contracts with the different insurance companies. One of the reasons the hospital wanted an exclusive contract was so that all of the anesthesiologists would be "in-network" with all of the insurance companies. Now, Envision is able to negotiate with insurance companies as basically the only provider for anesthesia in Phoenix or for most of the hospitals in Phoenix. As a result they get higher rates than we used to get as individual practitioners, but we don't reap the benefits. We were satisfied with lower rates because we captured all of the income. Now a corporation is added and they have to make a profit. The public in turn has to pay higher insurance premiums because their insurance costs more. Because Envision has so many contracts in Phoenix and a non-compete clause, I would have to sell my house and move if I wanted to continue working without being an Envision employee. The irony is that Envision never got in network with all of the insurance companies. In fact Unitedhealthcare is suing Envision and Envision is counter-suing Unitedhealthcare!"
Karen	"I support the non-compete clause rule. Charters were created to foster innovation and create more ideas for everyone. Now they are run as for-profit businesses to the detriment of all children. Charters should have the same accountability and structure as actual public schools, because in fact they are public schools that take advantage of tax payer funds for their own and their owners benefit. These owners can make millions of dollars off tax payers, and should be required to follow the same rules as district public schools. They MUST be run as a non-profit, as well as be prevented from requiring non-compete agreements. As an elected school board member, it's ridiculous to me that we have so many separate systems of education now, and they are creating huge inequities in our communities. We all know what happens when we think separate can be equal. Educating children is not a business! Thank you."
Donovan	"Non-competes definitely need to be banned -- they're by definition -anti-competitive and mostly at the expense of workers."
David	"I am in favor of prohibiting employers from using non-compete clauses with workers."
Josh	"I am a physician. Non-compete clauses need to go away. They are contrary to free market economics. They weaken the power of labor, favoring the power of owners. A physician or other healthcare provider does not possess sensitive industry trade secrets or proprietary information - what is the justification for a non-compete clause aside from avarice or the exercising of control. Mostly what they seem to do is result in money being paid to lawyers. I have heard terrible stories of what people have to go through because of non-compete clauses. I had a friend join an older surgeon in practice, and after the older surgeon died his wife tried to force him to buy the practice, citing his non-compete clause. My friend hired a lawyer that wisely told him that it would be more expensive to fight it than to just pay her some money to go away, so he gave her tens of thousands of dollars to which she was really not at all entitled, all because of a non-compete. Ridiculous."

Kyle	"This rule should have been made years again. I have avoided starting my own company for years because of a Non compete. I am finally doing it and am in constant fear that I'm going to get sued to working in an industry I've been in for over a decade. Thank you for this!"
Mary	"We as physicians are tired of being exploited by corporations backed by private equity that have monopolized healthcare in a for profit system, and at the detriment of patient care and outcomes. We do not want to be excluded from any FTC rule, and insist on being included in the proposed FTC non- compete proposal. Please don't let groups like the AFIA, that include not a single physician on their board and represent the for profit health system, drive the narrative that physicians don't deserve equity too. Non-competes are unethical, unconstitutional, and only gain to benefit the hospital CEOs and their funders that make millions to billions in profits annually."
Kinan	"Physicians should be included."
Karen	"I support the removal of the non competes and strongly urge that physicians be included in this. We deserve the same protections as others. Please don't let the hospitals restrict our ability to switch jobs."
Austin	"Non competes have drastically changed my career outlook. Back in '21 I was looking to pursue a new opportunity at a new company with an increase in compensation by 25% (same industry). Upon notifying my current employer, I was met with backlash, threatening remarks, and blackmail My current company threatened me, another employee, and a former employee, who is a close friend, with a $50,000 dollar lawsuit. I was told by my current employer that he would stop any contract or any job offer and would take legal action if I chose not to stay with his company."
Jan	"This an unfair rule."
Zaffar	"Non-compete clause should never be any contract. It takes away an individual's freedom to be able to work at a place of his or her chasing. It is a fundamental right of a worker to be happy at his job place. We should help and support people to start their own work rather than intimidating with non- compete clauses. Thank you"
Jason	"Please ban noncompete clauses. They make it difficult for professionals, seeking better compensation, as well as better work, life balance, they unfairly support, corporations, and cause families to be uprooted. I strongly support banning noncompete clauses as a physician and father."
Apral	"I am a pharmacist and the company I work for has a noncompete that I had to negotiate from a broad stance to a specific field in pharmacy. However, I am a licensed professional and should not be stifled by noncompete to flourish in the health care field."

Glenn	"I am currently working under a non-compete. My employer forced all current employees to sign a new agreement or else our pay raises would not go into place. The agreement had made it difficult to leave my role and join other companies within my industry. I truly enjoy what I do and would be able to make more money and advance my career by leaving. I am fearful to leave, as they have sued others and made life very hard for them. I strongly believe the FTC should take action to allow Americans to freely make decisions. I understand a non solicit and value that companies deserve protection. Take a look at the attached non-compete and think about how it would intimidate someone. Thank you for considering this important topic!"
Seda	"Non-compete clauses need to be banned!"
Ryan	"Please make non-compete agreement illegal. My husband has worked for the same company for 15 years and has no plans to go anywhere, but he's the breadwinner for our family and he works in a niche industry. Should he lose his job, the non-compete clause they are essentially forcing him to sign as a condition of continued employment would make him practically unemployable in the United States for 12 months. The fact his company is in the process of being bought out by a private equity firm adds to our anxiety. We have a 4 year old son. My husband had surgery for cancer 6 months ago. We own our own home, both have college degrees, and a fair start on our retirement. Losing his income for 12 months would result in the depletion of our savings and and have ramifications for our family for many years to come. I shudder to think how much worse it could be for people in less fortunate circumstances."
Neil	"As a physician for the past 15 years, I have multiple experiences with non-competes and I can assure everyone that they are very harmful for the individual physician and their family, the physician's patients, and also the community in general. The only entity that benefits from the non-compete is the healthcare organization. My firsthand experience includes having to leave my practice in a rural underserved area of Arizona and not being able to stay with my wife and young children in a city I had grown up in and my and my wife's family both lived, and therefore had to uproot my family away from our relatives and parents because of a non-compete. Additionally, my patients therefore could not receive the specialty treatment I was providing them. All because the hospital system I was working for enforced my non-compete. This had devastating effects on multiple levels, and therefore I am imploring you to end all non-competes. Specifically, all physician non-competes should be banned. Additionally this should apply to both for-profit and not-for-profit institutions as it is a universal problem that affects physicians and the communities they serve/work/live in."
Dorian	"Non compete clauses serve a single purpose: to unfairly indenture working class individuals and prevent them from changing employers when working conditions are unfairly burdensome. I am a physician in a state where non-competes are

	routinely used. If I want to find a position that treats me with respect I have to essentially relocate to a different state. I deserve better, my family deserves better, my patients deserve better. I should be able to share and market my services as I see fit. Non compete agreements are used wherever employers can leverage them in. The government needs to put a stop to them."
Sara	"As a pediatrician in a suburban area for over 20 years, the non-compete clause as a private practitioner/biz owner, and as a corporate employee, have been a source of stress. If my job doesn't work out, or I have other professional or family goals, I'm expected to move cities or work on the other side of town?! These clauses for me always seemed vindictive and punitive in nature, and very limiting as a physician. I can understand why they were there, but I feel it hurts way more employees/employers than it helps nowadays. I've seen many more physicians suffer because of non-competes than were helped. It can force an employee to stay at an employment they don't want to be a part of or not wanted there."
ANTHONY	"With these agreements, one has to keep their new job very secret at a firm who could exersize them. These laws are clearly abusive and unconstitutional, and anti-competitive. It also amounts to collusion and might violate RICO. This needs to happen ASAP"
Elizabeth	"We, as a nation, need to say no to non-compete clauses. They stifle creativity, innovation, and progress in our country. They chain individuals and their families to lower wages and poor working conditions."
Reena	"I'm a physician and strongly support a ban on non-competes. I see from my colleagues how much it limits patient care and ability to practice medicine, especially at a time when we are dealing with physician shortages and patient access concerns. Does shouldn't be forced to move to a different community miles away just because they switch to another organization. It's not fair to them or the patients established with them. I feel very fortunate to work for an ethical non-profit organization that doesn't have non-competes, but I had to search long and hard to have a job like this, which are few and far between. I'm grateful to be able to work both a primary and side job seeing patients in my community. I really hope does around the country will get the same ability to care for patients as I do. Thank you for your advocacy on this issue."
Charles	"As a healthcare small business owner, I struggle with noncompete clauses. I tip-toe around my non-compete with my previous company and that absolutely hinders my ability to grow and expand as I know I could. The noncompete prevents me from hiring folks that can help my small business survive and prevents me from pursuing work stream opportunities that I'm not even sure directly violate the noncompete, but I fear being tied up in a legal battle should my previous employer take action. I believe that employers could invoke non-disclosure agreements for specific trade secrets but the blanket non- compete hinders the worker too greatly. Noncompete clauses hinder the entrepreneur spirit and stifle competition in the workforce."

Kelly	"As a CRNA I very much support the ban on non-compete clauses. The extended length of time and restrictions these impose worsen the healthcare provider shortage especially in rural care areas where practitioners are forced to move just to obtain employment."
Craig	"The entire concept of noncompete agreements is ridiculous. I personally had a company try to enforce a noncompete after I left to work for another company in the same space that didn't even compete with them. Noncompete are used as a scare tactic to keep the workforce in line. In my opinion, all forms of noncompete should be made illegal. Nondisclosure agreements, still protect employers from having their technology stolen. There is absolutely no reason for noncompete to exist."
Sarah	"Non compete clauses are the modern day equivalent of indentured servitude. They restrict a person to one employer whether they like it or not even under the most unacceptable employment conditions . What should the employee do if employment conditions are poor and the employer is unwilling to change those conditions, especially if the employer knows that they have the employee as a "hostage." They know if you have a wide enough noncompete radius you will never work for someone else until it's done. It's very pervasive and harmful to the free market. I would have moved jobs almost a year ago if I knew that I wasn't at risk of getting sued. Please consider that people are not lawyers. We commoners don't have the knowledge necessary to negotiate and compare the importance of a noncompete agreement. Not to mention that these large companies hire expensive and well trained lawyers just to control the agenda. When you come to the table to review the contract you cannot simply read it and sign it because most of the time the employer has written it skewed deeply in their favor. Most employers don't negotiate noncompete agreements and those I have tried to negotiate with have told me it's non negotiable but also non enforceable. How are these two things possible? Please consider this ban as a way to protect the common person from overreaching employers and attorneys. Yes slavery is illegal but if we keep locking our employees behind noncompete we too will be unable to find better opportunities."
SARAH	"I am a general dentist working in a group practice that has a 5 mile noncompete radius that basically trapped me out of my own hometown. The employer now treats me like they own me. The people in charge make demands of me and ask me to work through lunch basically because they think I don't have any other options.' would love to see the FTC ban noncompete agreements."
Alice	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. I am a practicing emergency physician in my 31st year of practice. I agree with AAEM which holds that noncompete clauses in emergency medicine contracts are unnecessary and inappropriate. These clauses were designed to protect business interests by preventing high-level executives and salespeople from taking one company's clients or sensitive and proprietary information to another competing company. However, these concerns do not apply to emergency medicine physicians for multiple reasons. First, emergency physicians do not have clients or private

	patient lists. We proudly treat every patient presenting to the emergency department regardless of the patient's status within the healthcare system. Second, the hospital or contract group provides no specialized training or proprietary information to emergency physicians. Emergency physicians do possess highly specialized information and skills; however, this specialized knowledge is obtained through rigorous study and training in medical school and emergency medicine residency programs, both of which are often paid for or subsidized by the federal or state government. In addition to serving no legitimate business purpose, noncompete clauses in emergency physician contracts hinder access to care and endanger patients. I support AAEM's opinion to remove the unfair non-compete clauses."
Katie	"Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses. They should be included in the ban. The only person hurt by these clauses are the physicians themselves. They often have to move or drive long distances to new employment simply because of a non-compete."
Lesley	"I support this, because it is the right thing to do toward helping people"
Sean	"I am completely in favor of forbidding noncompete agreements."
Roy	"As a physician I think this would be great for patients. If a someone's likes their physician, who is unhappy where they are working, the physician would be able to find another local job- instead of having to leave the area. In addition- this should help to decrease physician burnout for obvious reasons."
Casper	"I am a strong opponent to non-compete contracts. Which hinders growth and upward and lateral movement of business innovation and employee ability to better their life and surroundings. A business can use other means to keep client list and trade secrets kept instead of shackling service industry workers to low paying repetitive labor. Please do the correct thing and stop the use of these bullying contractual obligations that cripple our economy by hindering the masses. Have a great day and rest of your 2023."
John	"I support banning NPRM, it makes getting a better job harder!"
M	"Noncompetes hurt patient care. They only benefit the financial interests of an institution. Do we support patient care or corporate profits? End of story."
Laure	"I have been working in the same industry as a sales executive for almost 16 years. In 2021 I went to work for a company in the same industry and they asked me to sign a non-compete and confidentiality agreement, which I did without hesitation. After my transition, several of my clients including a large million-dollar account, followed me since we've developed a relationship and trust. My new employer had been wanting this account for many years but was never able to successfully get their business. Almost immediately, I started receiving orders even though my main responsibility was to manager, mentor and work with a group of sales representatives. My channel flourished, sales increased and to

	limit goals and bonuses the company changed the goals so they would be harder to obtain. I suppose no one like to pay out bonus money and are surprised when someone reaches a goal that they thought was unattainable. We continued to reach our goals and they continued having to pay bonuses to myself and my team. Three months prior to my termination I was asked to take a 30% cut in salary and told that my commissions/bonuses would be capped at a certain amount which of course was much less than I was making based on their original plan. When I refused, they decided to terminate my employment. Because of the non-compete agreement and my limited ability to find employment outside of my field it has affected my finances as well as my mental and emotional well-being. This behavior is manipulative and unethical. It ruins careers, families and perpetuates poverty. As the larger companies impose these rules it restricts growth as a country and limits solutions to everyone. It raises the unemployment rate and raises the number of people filing for bankruptcy. It gives these companies an unfair advantage by limiting competition. Looking at the bigger picture, because a non-compete agreement prevents terminated employees from starting a competing business, it also limits new jobs to thousands of Americans. In essence, I feel it contributes to a monopoly and give the proponents of non-compete agreements an unfair advantage by eliminating competition before it starts. Non-competes are not good for America, Americans or the economy."
Zoe	"Dear Federal Trade commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. As you know, non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. I have personally experienced this as a plastic surgeon who takes care of patients for cancer reconstruction, including breast cancer reconstruction. These patients develop long-term relationships with their care teams, and oftentimes due to other treatments such as radiation therapy and chemotherapy, breast reconstruction can span the course of 1-2 years. As a new graduate from residency I took a predatory job; when I left that position, the hospital whose patients I was treating wished me to continue caring for their patients and to continue our relationship. Unfortunately, due to a non-compete agreement, I was immediately unable to contact my patients, many of whom have later found me after emotional experiences with other surgeons after feeling initially abandoned in their care. In fact, one patient turned me into our state medical board for abandoning her - not knowing that I was unable to contact her due to my noncompete or else face very steep fines. While this was a challenging time in my life due to the sense of responsibility that I hold for my patients, it is nothing compared to a woman who is going through breast cancer treatment whose surgeon has been forced to break contact with her. The physician-patient relationship truly is sacred, and should be protected just as much as any other professional-client relationship. The economic impacts of this, in increasing competition in the marketplace in order to reduce healthcare costs, is of course a very 'common sense' argument to preventing physician noncompetes. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care - and protect the physician-patient relationship. Thank you for your attention to this important matter."

Vaida	"Non-compete clauses make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats workers, by allowing one's former employer to sue if one goes to work for another company in the same industry. They benefit employers, not workers - these clauses hold workers' wages down, while also stifling innovation and undermining the principles of free labor market. They have to go!"
Tania	"Non competition clauses denies people jobs in their area of expertise!! !!!!!"
Tania	"Former employers should have NO SAY in what job you take. They should pay you more to stay with them if they are concerned!,"
Michelle	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your work to ban non-compete clauses. I am an Instructional Designer/Developer (I design training programs and write the material for them). I've been in this profession for 20 years. Two years ago, my employer at the time sold my function to one of its vendors. Roughly 40 of us became employees of the vendor. I, along with many of my coworkers, had to sign non-compete clauses as part of our employment contracts. We had no choice; we were let go by the old company and most of us needed the job at the new company, so we signed. If I leave my employer, I cannot go to any of its competitors as an instructional designer. I would have to go in another role. I can't even go back to the company that sold my function to my current employer. This is in affect for two years after I leave. If I am offered a instructional designer position at another company, I am required (per the terms of the non-compete agreement) to let my current employer know, so they can advise the prospective new employer of the non-compete agreement I have with them. This is ridiculous. I came to my current employer with 20 years of experience; they did not train me. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Sage	"This would be a good things and I heavily support this! I am surprised these types of clauses are currently legal."
Ryan	"The medical profession has had a significant influx of corporate and private equity interests employing physicians and other medical professionals. With this has been a remarkable increase in noncompete clauses that are not focused on preventing patients being diverted to new practices, but instead to make it more difficult for professionals to change practices within their community and even in egregious examples large geographies. This is altogether a negative for patients and the communities they serve as well as the medical professionals. It disproportionately affects younger physicians and detracts from recruitment for our most talented youths to enter the medical field. I support any legislation that limits noncompete contracts. My understanding of tech and STEM fields have a similar effect with young talent switching careers to avoid non competes instead of building on valuable experience with their specialized fields."

Jason	"I am in favor in getting rid of Non-Competes given that they are typically vague and don't really help either the employer or the employee - only sometime harm the employee."
Brooke	"I strongly support the ban on non-compete contracts."
Kenyon	"Banning non competes would have an enormous positive effect on my profession of radiology. I'm worried many private equity groups and hospitals will lobby you to not enact this. Don't listen to them! They have NO standing. You're duty is to the people of America, not corporations!"
Brian	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I am physician independent Contractor in addiction recovery treatment. I would expand my practice except I have an over broad non compete that extends 50 miles from our current site. Ridiculous! Please end this madness I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Keith	"Non compete clauses in workers contracts should be banned. Such things as intellectual property and trade secrets can be justifiably protected without unfairly putting workers rights in jeopardy. They are anti-worker, anti-capitalistic and have been abused by most companies that use them."
Brian	"I am for abolishing the non compete agreements. I feel some what held back in my career as I can't afford to move to a competitor and have to take a year off of work before I did that. I was young and didn't really know what I signed when I signed it. It was mixed in with a lot of other papers I had to sign on my first day of work. I work as a product designer"
Rex	"I am fully in favor of a ban on non-compete agreements. These agreements, especially when paired with arbitration clauses, are anti-competitive and unduly burden workers who are either forced to go without work in their field (often for years) or are stuck at an employer who they would otherwise not want to work for, whether due to working conditions and environment or below-market wages."
Shawna	"See attached file(s) I started working for Safeguard Tucson as an administrative assistant in September 2018. The only job specific paperwork I signed was to say that I had read the employee handbook, which did not house a specific definition of NDA or non-compete in any which way for form. By December 2021 I was offered a salaried position as an Account Manager, which required me to sign the non-compete that I have attached. I didn't realize what I was doing at the time. After 6 months I had missed dinner with my family 4 out of 5 days a week working so many hours and not stopping for lunch, not to mention the stress levels were so high that my hair was literally falling out, I begged for assistance but did not receive what I needed to get the job done. After a long emotional struggle, I decided I had to leave, but this was my profession, my passion, my source of income for my family. I had to take the risk, and along with it came a big pay cut. How is it that after working for them for 3.5 years and never being subjected to an NDA or non-compete, that suddenly because I took the promotion to sales manager that I was suddenly a threat? I had access to ALL the same information about the company, same resources, same customers and same software. The only change was that I was salaried with commission. Well, I'm glad I took the risk and in September 2022 after 4 years at Safeguard I quit and landed a new job within my profession, but I had to change my name (on my emails and correspondence), not show my face at any expos or conferences, stop eLearning to further my career, work from home with some travel out of the city, and downgrade to a customer service representative title with half the pay. But the stress is gone, my hair is growing back and I'm home to have dinner with my family and partake in my kindergartener's school activities. Yes, I signed the stupid contract; it was my mistake, but I was not adequately informed about what my decision meant, naive, not educated enough to know what I was doing. I can guarantee that I'm not the only one and so far, I have gotten away with it, but for the next two years, I will always be watching my back waiting for BK to attack."

Leah	"I am subject to a non compete that I felt compelled to sign in order to get the job. I'm now 25 years working in the business and want to start my own company but am unable to do so with the current wording of my non compete Changing this would literally change my life. I am hopeful that this is passed and non competes are banned so that free enterprise and small business can flourish!"
Rachel	"I am an Emergency Medicine physician in Tucson, AZ, who is prevented from moonlighting at outside facilities by contract with my employer, a large healthcare conglomerate. I am writing in favor of banning non-compete clauses as this policy currently directly inhibits my ability to work and earn additional income outside of my current employment."
James	"I agree with this rule change 100%"
j	"I am in support of this proposed FTC rule. It is my experience that companies are taking full advantage of effective local monopolies they have upon their respective local labor markets. This is one increasingly common way that companies do so alongside other methods such as pre job-offer bait and switch schemes, and deceptive use of the words "up to", "competitive compensation" and "market rate" in reference to the offered wage of job listings. One specific example I have been informed of involves the national truck stop chain "Loves". Some (if not all) Mechanics are subjected to a non compete clause preventing them from working as a mechanic for 1 year after they leave the company. I am not aware of the exact wording of the contract itself, but was informed of this directly by one of their mechanics that would be directly subject to such a clause. In addition to supporting this proposed rule I also recommend some form of rule-making or new legislation that allows employer-employee disputes of this type to be settled in state small claims court or its federal equivalent on an optional basis. That is, Knot directly through the national labor board. Especially so for cases where the employer disregards the decisions and decision-making process of federal and/or state labor board rulings. More specifically clear cut cases of type of dispute should be frilly resolvable without the expensive need to hire an attorney. This should be an obviously necessary consideration when you take a moment to realize that the less powerful party to such a dispute would likely be without an income during some, if not the whole duration of court process. It should also be clear the chilling effect lack of money has on a person's ability to rectify this type of employment issue given the extensive expense that hiring a lawyer constitutes for the average American. As a related side note: I feel it is necessary to mention why it should be blatantly obvious that most companies in every city across the United States have a local monopoly on their respective labor markets based on simple reasoning skills, a high school level understanding of economics fundamentals, the preferences of both businesses and employees and a few government statistics. We will start with a few facts about workers and companies. 1) Businesses want to spend as little on employee wages as they can get away with. 2) Relatively few Potential Employees prefer to drive more than 30 minutes to 1 hour (15 to 50 miles of driving in no/low traffic conditions or about 30ish miles on average) away from their primary residence for work. 3) In practice the potential labor pool for a given company is further divided/restricted based on the chosen skills that the local populace has chosen to sharpen. (I.E. Mechanics do not typically have the required skills to be Registered Nurses and vice versa.) 4) The smaller the population of a town, the fewer employers it will have. 5) The median bank account balance is $5,300, according to a 2022 Federal Reserve's Survey of Consumer Finances (SCF) 6) The real median earnings of all workers aged 15 and over with earnings in 2020 was $41,535 according to the Government Census website 7) According to a report issued by the Small Business Administration (SBA) in 2019 America's 33 million small businesses only contribute 43% of the total GDP of America. Conversely, a comparatively tiny number of larger corporations (1% of all American companies according to the SBA) produce over 50% of America's products. This statistic makes clear the Massive Market influence Larger corporations have on a national and local scale. 8) according to a 2021 Housemethod article by Sam Wasson titled "Must-Know Moving Industry Statistics" the cost to move locally (-100 miles) were $1250 on average while the cost to move long distance (closer to 2000 miles) was $4890. If we compare the effects of the above 8 tendencies and statistics with the economic conditions for a monopolistically competitive market It can be easily seen that employers definitively trend towards having oligarchical control over their local employment pool at minimum. For rERENCE here is the 3 basic requirements for a monopolistically competitive market courtesy of the cliff notes website: First, the market has many firms, none of which is large. Second, there is free entry and exit into the market; there are no barriers to entry or exit. Third, each firm in the market produces a differentiated product. The small business statistics above indicate an extreme likelihood of one or more large firms having

Ravi	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, As a physician, I am writing to strongly support the proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses are detrimental to the health care system and are a major source of hardship for physicians. First and foremost, non-competes restrict healthy competition, which is essential to the proper functioning of the health care system. This can lead to higher prices, fewer choices, and decreased quality of care for patients. It also creates an anti-competitive environment that discourages innovation and the adoption of new technologies. In addition, non-competes give employers unfair leverage during contract negotiations. Physicians may be forced to accept lower pay and other unfavorable terms in exchange for a non-compete clause. This can lead to a situation where physicians are unable to move to another practice or hospital, even if it would be in their best interests. Non-competes also result in mandatory relocation of physician families, which can cause disruption and hardship for everyone involved. This can lead to decreased continuity of care and limit patient access to specialty care. In addition, it can cause a disruption in the physician's family life, leading to stress and financial burden. For all of these reasons, I strongly support the proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses. Doing so would create a healthier and more equitable health care system and would be beneficial for both physicians and patients."
M.	"Great idea. Do it."
Chinyere	"Doing away with non-competes for everyone - including PHYSICIANS, whether they've within the for-profit or non-profit institutions should be included. As a physician I have seen contracts with non-competes which encompass the entire STATE in which a hospital resides. With the current state of healthcare in America, doctors should be able to practice where they are happy/where they can make a difference without administrative handcuffs placed on them. Interestingly, within the hospital, many non-physicians (e.g. nurses) do not have this phrasing within their contracts. Physicians should not be excluded from this law."
Angie	"I'm strongly in favor of this rule change. Non-compete clauses are anticompetitive, and their use in healthcare is a serious public health concern given their impact on the talent pool of available providers. Employees shouldn't be forced to choose whether to stay in positions with subpar pay/conditions, uproot their families, or leave the profession. If employers want employees, they can compete fairly in the marketplace with attractive wages, benefits, and conditions."
Matt	"As a physician who has already given up a large portion of my younger years working for less than minimum wage, I would strongly encourage you to eliminate these for all physicians. I also believe they should not be allowed in academic or non-profit hospitals. It unnecessarily restricts physicians' ability to negotiate a fair wage with huge corporations in a system that is already rigged against us."

Tigress	"I am writing today to show support for banning non-compete clauses. I agree 100% with this assessment by Robert Reich: "A recent study found one in five workers without a college education subject to them, disproportionately women and people of color. Employers say they need non-compete agreements to protect trade secrets and investments they put into growing their businesses, including training workers. Rubbish. Employers in the states that already ban them (such as California) show no sign of being more reluctant to invest in their businesses or train workers. The real purpose of non-competes is to make it harder (or impossible) for workers to bargain with rival employers for better pay or working conditions." I am deeply concerned about the increasing impact of non-competes on low-wage earners and, thereby, already-exploited gender minorities and people of color. I support this ban and thank the FTC for adopting it."
Harry	"To Whom it May Concern, I am a career executive who has been in the water purification business for 35 years. I was asked to sign a non-compete prior to my past company's merger in order to obtain the severance package offered. Failure to do so would have resulted in non-payment of my earned severance. How can the USA hold up such a one-sided program (non-compete agreements) not allowing a person not to pursue their career expertise, thus preventing reengagement into the work force. Being back in the work force is the best thing for the economy as we all know. We hope the FTC is successful in eliminating this silly one-sided document."
fallin	"I agree with this ban on non-competes."
Kandarp	"I am in healthcare and truly believe all healthcare non-competes should be not allowed as it interferes with patients' access to care and continuity of care. We should not be putting our loved ones and family's health above corporate and hospital profits."
Srujal	"Patient care comes first and physicians have unique responsibility towards their patients. Trusting a physician with our health is the biggest risk a patient takes. Noncompetes are detrimental to this physician-patient relationship."
Catherine	"As an engineer, I totally support this rule. How am I supposed to be a free agent in the employment market if I am concerned about legal action from my current employer as I shop for a new employer that can benefit from my previous job experience?"
Cristian	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. These should not be allowed to be placed in contracts especially in the medical field. People are not taking trade secrets with them when they look to change jobs. Individuals are being forced to stay in a job when better opportunities are out there because of their non-compete."

Kirsten	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen our current circumstance of having a physician shortage and as a result directly impacts the health of the American people." I have personally been affected and stayed at a particular job for longer than I would have liked due to its proximity to my family. My dream of developing a much more robust and comprehensive practice for myself and my patients was thus put to the side, as the job I was in was dictated by my employer, which only had a very limited vision for the use of my many talents. It took me burning out, trying to put up with doing it their way, to finally say, "enough." I decided to finally leave the practice and at least for now have also left the practice of medicine."
Alex	"I agree with the proposed non-Compete clause rule many employers use this tactic to control industry wages and it's unfair since they did not pay for your education. From personal experience I was forced into a non-Compete agreement when my job was outsourced to India."
Dannell	"I agree with this 100%"
Terence	"I am an ICU physician who only works in the hospital. Most contracts have a non-compete, including my current one.. If I leave and I want to stay local in my underserved area, I have to pay a lot of money to my current hospital. These contracts ONLY help the hospital, but hurts the community. If I had to leave for whatever reason, I would be pretty much forced to leave the community. Who would then lose a physician."
Terence	"Non competes benefit no one except the employers. They hurt communities especially underserved ones because physicians will leave the community because of the noncompete. Hospital based and employed physicians do not have a patent portfolio that is carried forward. The noncompete is only to keep physicians at their hospital no matter what."
Joe	"I support the ban on non-compete clauses in employment contracts. Non-compete clauses serve to ensure that an employer's trade secrets and processes will not be taken by a former employee to one of its competitors. In effect, though, they serve to punish employees who may be seeking new opportunities. Many non-competes are too broad, and can severely limit an employee's ability to find work that utilizes the skill set that they have cultivated during their current employment. This exacerbates the power differential which is already tilted against workers by forcing them to remain at their current place of employment for fear of not being able to find other employment that would satisfy the terms of their non-compete agreement. Under this rule, employers still have tools to protect their trade secrets and client base, such as non-disclosure agreements and non-solicitation clauses. These give companies recourse in case former employees act improperly after securing new employment without stifling those employees freedom to move to a company that they feel is a better fit for them."

Cheryl	"Non compete clauses are just one more way that corporations make it harder for working people to make a living. The playing field is already uneven, w/out none complete clauses. I support the FTCs ban on non compete clauses!"
Eleanor	"Absolutely support the elimination at the federal level of employment non-competes. . . non-competes intimidate workers and limit their right to work options as well as contradict the tenets of free market capitalism (or do we only tout that when it benefits corporations and not individuals?). . . American workers need their government to more actively support their working rights, and prohibiting non-compete clauses is a great start."
Shane	"This ban would be fantastic and would directly impact my family in a real positive way. I truly hope and pray that this goes forward. Thank you."
Srekar	"The practice of implementing non-competes drives health care companies to consolidate, and leads to worse patient outcomes. I am in favor of removing non-competes not just in healthcare but broadly along most industries."
Jonathan	"I am in favor to ban employers from imposing non-competes on their workers. I am a healthcare provider working in a Private Practice group. I recently finished residency, bought a home where my wife and 4 children happily reside. I was happy in my position in my group when I was informed by the partners that I had to find a new Job. When I signed their contract only a few months earlier there was a "Non-Compete Clause" that states I would be forced to find a new job outside of the clauses 15 mile area for 2 years. They have multiple practice locations spanning the length of 30 miles east to west. This forces me to find new employment a considerable distance away from my home causing undue stress and hardship on myself and my family. I am in favor to ban employers from imposing non-competes on their workers. Thank you"
Laura	"I am a veterinarian and I strongly support ridding contacts of non-compete clauses. They can trap us in jobs that we'd leave otherwise because we aren't allowed to find work within a reasonable distance of our homes. Vets may have to move cities if they want to leave a position but find work that honors a non-compete. This practice allows for workplaces to become toxic, for hospitals to create environments that promote burn out and suicide, and despite terrible working conditions veterinarians can't seek work elsewhere without unreasonable barriers. Please end this toxic practice."
Adam	"I am a physician, and have see non-compete clauses hurt patient access to medical care, by not allowing physicians to change jobs freely. I am in favor of the proposed rule."
Rebecca	"Having it both ways is what I call it, like a guy who wants an open marriage but not for his wife; or a woman who demands that others respect her equality but

	won't get a job to support a marriage. Yeah, those who oppose doing away non-compete clauses want it all for themselves—unfairly. Unfairly. They want to hold all the cards all the time. Business wants to own its worker completely: his/her/their time (life-hours), body, brain and its productions forever. NONONO! If non-compete clauses ceased to exist, workers might get more respect and decent conditions from employers. No matter whether workers are hourly or salaried."
Brian	"I think the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) is a prudent policy decision that would've benefited me as a young man. Non-competes are over-used and abused even in industries where no specialized knowledge is required. As an example, after working for Volt workforce solutions as a call center tech support rep, I was barred from offering tech support to any other organization for a period of 2 years. I'm glad they didn't enforce this provision, because if they did, I would've never made it out of poverty. Navex Global was exceptionally litigious around their non-competes and they will make an example of folks, this rule will go a long way to "Free" a lot of abused Navex Employees who are afraid of being sued into oblivion."
Jacob	"The removal of noncompete clauses from employer employee contracts is essential. This change should be ubiquitous amongst professions. Physicians often fall victim to the power of large practices and hospital systems that ultimately can be deleterious to the effective practice of medicine. Whether it be through increasing quotas on production or directly influencing how care is delivered in order to increase profitability, large practice systems tend to stifle physician autonomy, and can be harmful to afforded care. The trend in medicine has been such that consolidation of practices into large hospital systems has decreased the negotiating leverage of physicians by reducing competition. The removal of noncompete clauses from physician contracts will be essential in leveling the playing field between employers and physicians to make sure that physicians are able to practice medicine in a safe and sustainable way."
Jason	"I am in favor of banning the non-compete clause for employees. I am currently under a restrictive non-complete that says I can't do the same work within 50 miles of my current employer (which has multiple branches all over the city) for a whole year after leaving my current employer for any reason (quitting or being let go). Being free from this restriction would make looking for another job in my profession a possibility if I were to choose to. And that would give me options that I do not have today. Thank you."
Jessica	"Please move forward with banning employers from imposing non-compete agreements on employees!!! Non-competes constitute an unfair method of competition and area violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. When imposed on medical professionals, this restricts patients' access to care."
Jamie	"Non-compete clauses are damaging for more reasons than merely suppression of wages. They can be tools wielded against employees to discourage them from union organizing, from making efforts to improve a workplace, and encourage workers to tolerate poor and unjust - even abusive - workplace treatment for fear that being fired or quitting will result in substantial loss of income. Not the loss of income a large proportion of the country would fear, but an ongoing loss for a year or more, in some cases. The only alternative for many workers would be finding a new type of profession, which may in turn mean either funding training in a new field or taking a pay cut to obtain an entry-level position. Non-compete clauses are one way corporations exert undue control and influence on employees, which is why I fully support the proposed rule."

C Emerson	"NON-COMPETE CLAUSES: I'll make this short!!! I've been trapped by non-compete clauses. Trapped in a bad situation that I could not leave!!! PLEASE!! I beg you! NON-COMPETE clauses need to go away, be burned at the stake, and be buried!"
Ron	"As an IT worker AND leader, I only see this as a net good. Please, please, please, pass this rule."
REBEKAH	"I support this!"
Aaron	"Non-competes are a way to limit local competition for staffing in a geographic area. The employee is caught in the middle between two competing companies, even though we should be left out of that competition. Employees are no longer "owned" by the company after termination of employment. Employees should have free range to be employed at any competing company if they offer better benefits or compensation, and not to be limited by a company that they just terminated employment with."
Nancy	"Noncompete must be ended. Plain and simple."
Nancy	"This is a direct result of a forced noncompete signature at an AZ salon. I was unable to find my hairdresser once she left Rolfs Salons due to the noncompete that was in place. Not OK. She had done my hair for 7 to 8 years. She wasn't even permitted to let me know that she was thinking about leaving. NOT OK. This has to end. There is no good reason in many fields of employment for this to be in place. Thank you."
Josh	"This Rule would stop all the abusive and bullying from large companies. This will help level the playing field for the small guy. Please get this passed ASAP."
Tamica	"This should have been done years ago. Why should an organization be able to treat someone horribly and when the employee leaves, they're not able to make a living doing what they did before? All that these agreements do is allow companies to get away with harassment and discrimination."
Jason	"As a health care professional for 22 years, I have personally seen money/production focused owner doctors, corporate controlled practices and unethical companies and their practitioners use non-compete clauses and restrictive covenant laden contracts to directly harm, "bully" or attempt to control

	more ethical and patient centered doctors. They are predatory and take advantage of younger doctors who are debt burdened, less legally savvy, and who are otherwise not in a position of strength in which to negotiate. Non-compete clauses have been used to keep practitioners in a position of weakness and to keep them limited in terms of their professional growth and further prevents them from finding greener pastures (if they find themselves in an unethical or otherwise compromised working environment). They should be retroactively banned from use and heavily scrutinized."
Umesh	"I support FTC banning non compete"
Robert	"To the FTC: I strongly support the commission's proposal to ban future non-compete clauses and void current clauses. Such provisions in employment contracts attempt to bind workers to an employer. This is patently unfair to Americans who have few enough opportunities to make a living as it is. Big corporations are all for giving lip service to the benefits of free enterprise, but in reality they do all they can to eliminate competition and limit the opportunities available to working people. I urge the commission to push this proposal across the finish line in the interests of fairness to American workers."
Susan	"Dear Sir or Madam, Non-compete clauses have always struck me as foolish, shortsighted, and generally unfair. If someone has invested time and energy in some form of work, why shouldn't they be able to continue working in that field? Even if a company has been sold, why does the new owner get to dictate the rest of the life (not just work life) of the person or people who created the opportunity for the new owner? And now it appears that non-compete clauses are being required of workers at all levels. How is this fair, just, or democratic? People are terribly worried these days, frightened about being able to earn a living and take care of their loved ones. Please take this opportunity to right just this one wrong. It is in your power, and we all would be so grateful if the FTC would lift this particular burden from the shoulders of working people. (We are fortunate as my husband works for himself these days. We want our neighbors throughout the country to be treated fairly and with respect.)"
Brian	"Thanks so much for bringing this important discussion to the front of innovation and career opportunities for employees. As someone who is currently under a non compete, it not only pigeon holes you when starting employment at the non-compete company as its a requirement to sign for employment but limits the types of positions an employee can have should they find the working environment of their current position is not ideal. As an employee, you never truly know what you're getting into prior to starting at a new company and if the company trajectory or team scope is outside of what you expected this compete prevents you from seeking other employment especially if the field you are in is specialized and the skills you have are really only applicable to that indication. It also has salary restrictions as the industry I am in is a specialized subset and therefore, to not compete with my current role, I would have to take a pay cut to go to another industry. Please continue pushing forward on this as it would help employees everywhere and appreciate all of your consideration on this!"

Baily	"I am very excited about this proposed rule. As someone currently with a non-compete in my contract, I agree that non-competes can stifle innovation and prevent workers from seeking higher wages. Too, I work in a particularly cutting-edge tech industry and signing a 2 year non-compete may prevent me and others like me from using my skills as best applicable to drive innovation and thus negatively impact the economy as a whole."
Shannon	"I support this action to abolish noncompete clauses. A close friend of mine is a healthcare small business owner and struggles in growing his practice due to a noncompete clause. It hinders work stream and personnel expansion. Please move forward with this action and restore the uninhibited entrepreneur spirit and wage equity. Thank you"
Christopher	"I am a hand surgeon. I practice in the outskirts of Tucson, AZ in the town of Oro Valley. I am the only hand surgeon that currently services the local hospital. I take care of nearly all the hand traumatic injuries and age related injuries in this area. Before I moved to this town, patients had to drive all the way into town to receive care for hand injuries. Although this may be speculating, it is likely that this additional burden negatively affected their care and increased the cost of care. For example, if someone were to present to the local community hospital with an injury to their hand, and there was no hand surgeon available, they would have to be transferred via emergency medical services to another hospital that offered coverage for this specialty. This would result in delays in the patient being seen by a surgeon and would add the cost of the medical transport (which is often in excess of $10,000). I provide a valuable service to this community and enjoy taking care of these patients. Unfortunately, with noncompete clauses and practices in their current form)), I can not leave my current job and still take care of this population. I would not be allowed to practice within 25 miles of my current office. This would leave this population of patients stranded, and without sub specialty surgical care - an unfortunate and unnecessary burden. As a doctor, I have an obligation to take care of my community - an obligation I fully embrace. Noncompete clauses give doctors limited options in scenarios where employers squeeze doctors with unreasonable work hours and demands. Please consider eliminating these outdated and unfair practices - if nothing more than to protect patients and their access to care. Thank you."
Eric	"Non compete agreements only benefit the company, not the employee or contractor. The company uses the employee or contractor's ideas to build better products or IP, and then forces that person who has helped them grow their company to be unemployable. Slavery, That is what it is."
Julie	"Noncompete clauses can keep parents in jobs that are mediocre just so they can stay close to home. I currently work 10 mi from home. we were bought by a private equity company and after seeing how the company truly is, the noncompete basically keeps me there since finding a good job outside the. I compete will add 1 hour plus to my drive and that is time everyday I do not want to loose with my kids. They are only young for a short time so I will have to deal with the mediocre ness w until they are older. Noncompetes also make it very difficult to negotiate wages, pto, benefits, etc since they know they have you pigeonholed."

Lindsey	"I support this action to abolish noncompete clauses. A close friends of mine is a healthcare small business owner and struggles in growing his practice due to a noneompete clause. It hinders work stream and personnel expansion. Please move forward with this action and restore the uninhibited entrepreneur spirit and wage equity. Thank you"
Contractor	"Here's a novel idea, maybe it will force ACTUAL employers to ACTUALLY HIRE EMPLOYEES instead of exploiting contractors and freelancers (called miscategorization of employees). I have been freelancing for 20+ years, and there are many companies who abuse the IRS rules, which robs the people who are building their companies of employment benefits, while robbing social security and medicare of funds, because they pay only so much to SO MANY DIFFERENT CONTRACTORS (meaning noone has to pay out to these funds which we all require whether later in life in retirement or earlier due to disability.) The reason you can't or would be ill-advised to report miscategorization of employment status is that it forces your name to be revealed to the company, which could dox you within your industry for future employment. COMPANIES SHOULD DEFINITELY NOT BE ALLOWED TO MAKE A NON-COMPETE FOR THE MANY CONTRACTORS THEY BRING IN. CONSEQUENCE OF THEIR CHEAPNESS."
Joshua	"I support banning non-compete clauses and I don't believe pre-existing contracts with non-competes should be grandfathered in. I am a nurse practitioner and I believe these are anti- consumer and more so anti worker. These should be outlawed."
Matthew	"Noncompete clauses have severely limited my career path in not changing jobs in any one market whereby I have been unhappy and under serving my community. I have had to sacrifice living in the city and states near family and friends because of this practice."
Kelsey	"I am a physician who supports abolishing non compete contracts."
Andrew	"Dear FTC, I am writing to express my strong support for legislative action against noncompete clauses for physicians. These clauses have become increasingly common in physician contracts, and they pose a serious threat to the health and well-being of patients, as well as to the autonomy of physicians. Noncompete clauses restrict physicians from practicing medicine in a certain geographic area or for a certain period of time after leaving a job. These clauses limit physicians' ability to seek better employment opportunities, and can prevent them from working in areas or positions where they are needed and is a good fit for their skills and experience. This, in turn, can lead to reduced access to care and lower quality of care for patients. Physicians are highly trained professionals who are committed to providing the best possible care for their patients. They should be free to use their knowledge and expertise to benefit the communities

	they serve, without being hampered by restrictive contracts that limit their ability to provide care where it is most needed. Moreover, noncompete clauses are not necessary to protect the legitimate interests of employers. There are other ways to protect confidential information and trade secrets, such as through non-solicitation agreements and non-disclosure agreements. Therefore, I urge you to take action to prohibit noncompete clauses for physicians in the United States. This will help to ensure that patients have access to high-quality care, and that physicians are free to pursue the careers that are best suited to their skills and expertise. Thank you for your attention to this important issue."
Savio	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Bri	"I would love the opportunity to be able to share whatever products I want with whomever I want. I currently work for a network marketing company that only allows me to share their products. If I want to share products from another network marketing company, I risk losing my account. I want the freedom to share whatever I want whenever I want and the ability to be able to have multiple streams of income in direct sales."
Linda	"No more non competes. Get rid of them!"
Franklin	"I've worked in my field now for over 10 years. My most valuable contribution to society would be furthering that field and helping other companies advance in the field. If the company I currently work for no longer wants to pay me a competitive wage, then they should not get to continue to benefit by locking my knowledge away from another company. This hurts the overall economy if I can not help with my knowledge at a new company. In the end, companies can choose who they want to do business with at any time, all employees should be able to as well."
Karyne	"I am writing in support of "Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200" proposal change to make non-compete between employer and worker illegal. There are several reasons I agree that non-competes are bad for society. As a physician, I have seen multiple colleagues stuck in a bad working environment with no voice to advocate for patients. The inability the advocate for patients is bad for the entire society, and has consequences to inflict the most vulnerable too."
Omar	"Physicians with noncompetes in their contracts are forced with the choice of uprooting themselves and their families each time they want to switch practice environments, and the daunting challenging of reestablishing a reputation and practice in a new location. Employers know this, and use it as leverage when physicians speak out against situations that are detrimental to patient care, inappropriate or illegal actions by their employers, or unreasonable/unsustainable working conditions. This can effectively hold physicians hostage at unfavorable

	working conditions for decades, while employers evade market forces that would necessitate change. It is hard to make the argument that a single physician leaving a large hospital system would significantly threaten the hospital system's business model. If many physicians want to leave simultaneously, this could affect a hospital system; however one would be forced to examine what the hospital system was doing wrong that so many physicians wanted to leave en block and not be a part of that hospital's mission. Arguably, this is exactly where market forces should come to play, and ultimately lead to hospital systems that better serve the needs of clinicians and patients. In a situation where physicians can't relocate geographically due to personal reasons, they are prevented from pursuing opportunities that are a better fit for them personally within their geographic locations (better pay, more flexibility, better hours, etc). When physicians are forced to work at jobs that aren't good fit, disillusionment with the field is growing at a time where clinician burnout is at an all time high. Therefore, many physicians are now electing to stop practicing medicine altogether rather than work at a job they don't enjoy, thus exacerbating the physician shortage and access to care nationally at a time where this is already a public health emergency. To be clear, there are nuances to this discussion and a blanket endorsement of the FTC proposal. As it is currently written many lawyers have stated that the FTC' proposal would not apply to nonprofit organizations. Given that the majority of the hospital systems in the country are classified as nonprofit in name despite the business model being the same as other healthcare entities, this would actively give nonprofit hospital systems an unfair advantage over independent physician practices and for-profit health systems. It is important to note that several of the hospital systems that produce the most in profits and pay their CEOs many millions a year are 'not for profit' in name. Therefore, this rule seems arbitrary, and if the FTC proposal was to have its intended consequence, noncompetes should be eliminated for both not for profit and for profit hospital systems. While it is hard to argue that a single physician leaving a hospital system would significantly affect the bottom line for a large hospital system, it is quite true that a single physician employed by a small independent physician practice could significantly hurt that independent practice by using the practice's resources to build a patient base and reputation, and then opening their own practice across the street. Given that the footprint of an individual practice is smaller than a hospital system, the argument that a physician wanting to leave that practice could still practice in the area without having to uproot their families is much more reasonable. Independent practices are a valuable player in the healthcare ecosystem, and preferred by many patients. Therefore, if a carveout in the FTC proposal is created in healthcare, it should be for independent practices, not for 'not for profit' healthcare systems, and be aimed at keeping independent physician practices viable"
R	"It would be of great benefit to society to get rid of the non-compete clause in employment agreements. It would allow the employees to take their skills and talents to a newer level and be more productive which will lead to better enhancements for the customers. A great proposal which I support whole heartedly."

Justin	"I am in favor of abolishing non-compete clauses."
Andrew	"Unfortunately, too many hospital systems and organizations use these means to trap physicians and limit their opportunities. This causes undue hardship not only on the physician in their career, but also families who are forced to move unnecessarily. I've seen this happen to many physician families who are part of a community that need to move for no other reason than a non-compete clause in their contract. Many of us who work for hospital systems, such as hospitalist, intensivists and even some specialists have no regular patients or clinic, so it's not like we are taking patients with us. Furthermore, our specialized skills have been acquired through our training prior to employment and not through the organization."
Christopher	"I am an emergency physician in southern Arizona. Noncompete clauses currently prevent me from working at local critical access hospitals, including Indian healthcare. This needs to stop."
Forrest	"I am an insurance agent who sells commercial truck insurance. A year ago, I was working for an insurance agency in a particular state, and quit after a year and a half due to a change in their business practices. I moved 1,000 miles away to Arizona and started my own truck insurance agency. I solicited no clients from the former agency, but instead did my own prospecting to find new clients. 4 months into my new business, I received a scathing letter from my former employer threatening to sue me. What's worse—my Uncle is the President of that company, and the one who wrote the letter. I remind all readers—I stole zero clients and moved 1,000 miles away. The non-compete they had me sign states that I cannot engage in the activities of an insurance agent for 18 months following termination of the contract. They are claiming the entire country to be off-limits. Our attorneys have been talking for the past 4 months. My wife and I are in our late 20's and looking to start a family. If I had gone across the street and opened an agency I would understand a bit more. If I had stolen a single client, I would also understand. But to completely forbid me from making a living is unreasonable. Non-competes should be banned except for in situations of sales of business and situations involving high-level proprietary information (such as the recipe for Coca Cola or the plans for a new type of military aircraft). This too shall pass. Hoping the FTC will do me a solid and pass this ruling."
Jay	"If a business owner sells a company and agrees to a non-compete, it is fair to assume they have been properly compensated and the new business is entitled to enforce said non-compete. As it applies to employment, no employee should be bound by a non-compete. If you want to retain your employees, provide them a working environment where they want to work."
Al	"Non-competes are anti-democratic, and make corporations Dictators"
Dheeraj	"This is a great rule. So companies cannot collude against an employee."

Ann	"Non-compete clauses hurt employees tremendously. Even as a physician, I could not switch groups in the same town until my old one went out of business. This is a very unfair business perk that prevents people from moving to better work situations."
Elias	"I am a CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER (TM) working in the securities industry. I work as a financial advisor and I am very supportive of this rule going into place. I also think it would greatly benefit the securities and advisory industry if the rule explicitly extended to "Non-Solicit" and "Non-Accept" clauses in addition to "Non-Compete" clauses. (When I refer to "financial advisors" this also generally extends to most financial professionals such as financial planners or brokers). The reason I say this is financial advisors are commonly functionally handcuffed to whatever (inn they initially build their business with through Non-Solicit agreements, which is primarily due to the nature of how advisors are commonly compensated. For example it is very common for financial advisors to receive a split of the revenue they generate as the bulk of their compensation package, so Non-Solicit agreements effectively keep advisors from switching firms due to losing most of their income by not being able to solicit former clients. I think this is both harmful for the financial advisor, but also for the consumer, since it effectively bars the financial advisor from seeking out a new finn that is potentially better for the end consumer. By eliminating "Non-Solicit" and "Non-accept" clauses in addition to "non-compete" clauses, financial representatives would also be better suited to act in their clients best interest. For example, if an advisor worked for a company that pushed for their advisors to sell or recommend securities based on profitability to the firm rather than suitability to the end consumer, the financial advisor would be put into a dilemma. The advisor would effectively have to decide between maintaining their current income or doing what is best for the client, due to the lack of being able to solicit their former client. So if the advisor goes to a new firm that allows the advisor to be more objective, the advisor would not be able to communicate that to the former client who would remain with the firm that is not serving their best interest. Non solicit agreements are also potentially harmful in that an advisor could potentially be fired or forced out of a firm, and then lose years worth of relationships overnight. A similar situation could also develop if a firm is changing ownership, resulting in a situation where the firm no longer acts in their clients best interest under new ownership. For reference the revenue split common to the financial services industry tends to range from 10-50% for the advisor, which presents a significant loss of income if an advisor has been with a particular finn for some number of years. (More information about this can be found in Charles Schab's annual compensation benchmarking study). Agreements in the advisory and securities industry also commonly unilaterally benefit the firm, rather than the advisor. The reason I believe this is that it is common for these clauses to be imposed without any legal consideration for the financial representative other than continued employment, even though the employee is also effectively unable to seek employment elsewhere while the agreement continues to have lasting effects firer years post employment. It is also not unheard of for these agreements to be imposed as an ultimatum where the financial representative is given some amount of time to sign the agreement or or be terminated from

	employment. Over time the se agreements only gain strength as financial professionals continue to build a book of business while employed with a specific finn. In summary I think the ruling would potentially greatly improve the securities industry, especially if it also extended to "Non-Solicit" and "Non-Accept" clauses due to the current lack in mobility for financial representatives due to these clauses, and that by eliminating them the end consumer would also benefit from the increased competition in the industry."
Bruce	"I work for a company that split into 2 new companies. They stated the "old" non-compete was still valid for 6 months after the split. Then they had us sign a new non-compete, non-disparage, non-solicit agreement. Anyone who didn't sign within 7 days was terminated. This agreement makes it virtually impossible to work in my field anywhere in the world and requires evidence that I have told prospective employers about the agreement. I'm a front-line supervisor and all my hourly operations team were required to sign as well. None of them have access to proprietary or confidential information. It is just a attempt to limit their mobility in the industry. This type of agreements have their place, but not to low wage, low skill employees. it's corporate hostage- taking."
Ashleigh	"I support the FTC proposed vile banning non-compete clauses. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. For example, non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them. Locum Tenens companies also use non-competes. If a physician leaves a company, they cannot often return to that geographical locale for 2 years or risk a 5 figure penalty."

Non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I ask that the FTC adopt the proposal to ban them."
Steven	"I fully support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Americans depend on medical doctors who often opt to work independently, and hospitals and other companies abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. This is

	nothing more than forced patient abandonment. When patients losing access to the physicians who know them best because a hospital fears competition, quality of care is compromised. As hired hands, these physicians are gagged from speaking out about patient safety and other concerns that may adversely affect patients health. This only increases the cost of medical care. Thwarting competition is itself an unhealthy practice. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them. People and doctors are counting on the FTCs integrity."

Please keep in mind that Legislators, lobbyists and their loved ones are not immune from the harmful consequences of these non-compete clauses for healthcare providers."

Lauren	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Contracts with non-compete clauses make it possible for hospitals and other institutions to limit the professional choices of those providing healthcare to patients. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from providing care for their patients outside of corporate employment are unethical; they are anti- competitive, and they are dangerous to patients. For example, when contracts with non-compete clauses hold sway patients may no longer have access to the physicians who know them best, and these contracts have a chilling effect on physicians' ability to speak out about their concerns for patient safety. This kind of situation also decreases competition, thereby increasing healthcare costs. To sum it up, non-compete clauses are bad for Americans. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."

	"I am a physician who has effectively been ruled out from living in every reasonably sized town in my state due to my non compete clause. It has hampered my ability to find a job that is fulfilling and rewarding. Please pass this legislation." - Robert
	"I am a general surgeon who practices in rural Arkansas. I was employed by the local and only hospital in my town. The CEO was fired and a new CEO hired. He did not treat me well and my working conditions quickly deteriorated. Due to my non-compete clause I would have to leave the town in order to continue to be able to work if I ended my employment with the local hospital. Non-compete clauses unfairly keep physicians tied to work places that can be malignant or hostile. I was able to leave my job and open my own solo practice in the town after the CEO agreed to dismiss the non-compete. If that had not happened I would either of had to be unemployed and make no money as a physician for 2 years or move my family to a new location. [...] Non-compete clauses are very detrimental to physicians and cause decrease in physician performance when you are forced to work in an unacceptable job just to be able to stay where you live. This country is facing enough of a physician shortage as it is that we don't need more leaving the work force due to unfair work contracts we are "forced" into signing. Thank you" - Kate
	"I absolutely think that non compete clauses are problematic and prevent yoga teachers from making a living teaching yoga. There is no way to make a living as a yoga teacher unless you own a studio or teach at multiple studios. I support the banning of non compete contracts in this industry. I left a studio in my area because the environment became to toxic and now I can't teach for 2 years in my area due to this contract." - Jasmine
	"As a single parent who works in the tax industry, noncompete clauses literally mean no chance to be able to earn a better life. My employer has a 2 year no compete in our contracts. Living in a rural area, that means absolutely no chance of changing jobs if I want to keep doing what I love to do. This also does not give room to honestly negotiate my contract because my employer knows I can't go anywhere else." - Rebecca

Cassidy	"I do not work under a non-compete but believe that non-compete clauses hinder people from pursuing a higher quality of life. They prevent skilled employees from accessing higher wages while employers increasingly profit"
Sarah	"I feel this should be banned- it is ridiculous to terminate an individual's contract if there are better opportunities available. I feel like it is caging and them terminating is punishment."
Seth	"I commented previously on the proposal web page. Need to also highlight the negative impact to patients because of noncompetes. Hospitals leverage noncompetes to lock physicians out of a geographic locations which adversely impacts patient care and continuity of care. Noncompetes traditionally are used where an employee could steal trade secrets. In medicine the physician brings the IP in the form of their medical training not the other way around. Noncompetes also allow hospitals to force conformity to hospital protocols which do not always align with what physicians think is best for the patient. When these discrepancies occur hospitals can fire a physician and still prevent diem from practicing in that community again removing an important patient advocate from the system. Physician noncompetes cost CMS money on a macro and micro scale. Hospitals and PE backed entities aggregate to limit systems in a geography then salary bands for physician roles quickly become narrower adversely impacting physicians. But as these systems grow larger they also negotiate higher rates and push billing practices that can be adverse to consumers and payors such as Medicaid and CMS. When physicians dissent they ate often reprimanded and can be threatened with termination if they persist. They also allow hospitals to push volume based expectations that limit quality of care in order to drive FFS revenue. (More visits to deal with the same number of problems). The pressence of noncompetes gives hospitals leverage to underpay physicians while driving up costs for Medicare and CMS. (One may look at the expanded use of trauma codes which are not susceptible to PA/UM review rules and the rate of trauma code utilization by HCA hospitals over the last 15-20 years. Once you segregate by either or both admitting and/or driving diagnosis the use of this code has gone up based upon hospital protocols of when to call a trauma code driving up costs to both CMS and patients)."
Seth	"Please do not exclude physicians or other healthcare workers from rulings and legislation that would prohibit or eliminate noncompete clauses."
Aaa	"Non compete should be removed as it forces physicians to accept unfair terms"
Brad	"Healthcare workers should have the same rights as everyone else. The fact that the American Hospital Association is attempting to exclude healthcare workers from the proposed overhaul of noncompete clauses should be evidence enough of what a major problem American hospital administrators and management companies have become. Please do the right thing and offer healthcare workers the same rights as the rest of the American work force."

Matthew	"Stop non-compete clause. An employer should not be able to own employees like slaves."
Todd	"I'm a resident physician graduating June 2023. If the AHA succeeds in getting a carve out to the proposed non complete plans, I'd likely start my own private practice as opposed to work for any hospital with a non compete clause. Clearly the AHA is financially motivated despite the nonsense they say (seems most large organizations of that sort are similar). I didn't get this far in training to be held hostage. Please tell the ABA to get lost. Thanks for listening."
Emily	"Physicians should not be excluded from the banning of non-compete clauses. Being a physician is our livelihood and we need the ability to change jobs without having to move to another city."
Jennifer	"It is very important to eliminate the non compete clause. This traps workers when they are not allowed to get another job in their industry."
Santana	"I have been held hostage by my non compete! I have a long standing commitment to my morals and ethics in my profession, this requires me to always ensure that my patients get the best care possible. Given past experience I have been shown that I do personally provide the best care for my patients. Unfortunately my work conditions are hostile, stressful, anxiety riddled and have caused over 30% turn over in the past year. I cannot relocate due to my child's required card, I also cannot work anywhere else due to the non compete. There are other providers in multiple areas but I cannot work for them due to my non compete. Even tho they have offers that put my current wage, benefits and schedule to shame. Please please end non competes. It's unfair, if employers were forced to abolish non competes that would also force their hand on better work conditions!!!"
Raj	"As a physician, the non compete clause puts our job tied up to the one health system and has to literally move to a new town or place as these health systems put various other clauses in addition to the non compete clause. Please remove or eliminate the non compete clause."
James	"IATSE, the stagecraft labor union requires the following oath, "...who has declared under oath that he or she will not continue to work in the craft of the local union to which he or she belongs...." This oath is being used to disallow me from being 'reinstated' to the local IATSE Local 204, which I was an active member of for 17 years. The refusal to let me be reinstated has cost me $1,000's AND costs the Local's client's $100's more per call, to bring in union members from out of state, to replace me on work calls. The NLRB listed this oath in support of the Local's position to return to reinstatement. Also stating, "I could

LorenLoren	"Non compete clauses should be deemed illegal. First, they restrict a worker's ability to change jobs or to negotiate benefits due to risk of possibly needing to completely uproot their family to find work. In some fields, such as medicine, an employee cannot find a job in a different department or a job with different duties/responsibilities as we spend years training in only one field. That means that a non compete would require the employee to move their family to a completely new region to practice. Second, this limits competition to the practices/businesses that have non competes in their contracts. Most importantly, in the field of medicine where there is currently a healthcare provider shortage, this decreases the amount of healthcare workers in communities as they are forced to move away when they leave a job or their contract ends. This causes a ripple effect in which the patients in these communities lose their access to physicians who have known and cared for them. This is all done only for the financial advantage of the administrators of hospitals and clinics. Please don't let the money of the elite sway your decision to put workers, employees, families, and patients first."
Joseph	"Please, if nothing good happens this year, let this be the one shining beacon."
Laura	"Non compete clauses are basically professional blackmail. They should be permanently banned."
Kevin	"The current environment with companies that can implement Non-Compete clauses on employees creates an environment that is costly only for the employee. Even executives at companies are put in situations where they may be unable to continue their earning capabilities without relocating, and sometimes that is impossible. It is incredibly unbalanced to limit an employee with specific training, skills, or talents from earning income in their field. I have experience where an employer advised AFTER I was hired that I was required to sign such a document. My former spouse was also subject to such an agreement that would not allow her to practice her skills within 50 miles which meant she would either have to move or stop her practice. Non-compete clauses also do not create loyalty within the company you are working for. They create fear of lawsuits because the big company always wins."
DeDe	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. -current coach at Orangetheory Fitness, several coaches work outside of the studio as Personal Trainers, Group Fitness Instructors, etc. They are trying to implement a non compete clause stating we can only work at orangetheory. This hinders coaches in the profession from making money as Orangetheory caps the ability to make money based on individuals in the class and has not given coaches a raise since inception. The non compete clause limits our ability to provide for families and overall livelihood. Many have to work outside of Orangetheory to pay for insurance, food, rent, etc. Coaches have a skillset and should be able to utilize their skillset outside of OTF."

Andrew	"Please make sure this rule goes into effect! Non-competes are abused to keep workers shackled down. This could bolster the working people tremendously. I hope you can enact it."
Anupama	"I as a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the corporate hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians. HI B doctors are exempted from non compete clause So why not exempt all doctors !"
Taylor	"Please protect patients and employed medical providers by supporting the removal of non-compete clauses in the healthcare industry. Nurses, doctors, PAs, PTs, etc. should have the freedom to care for our patients in the environment that best facilitates care. There is nothing therapeutic about forced employment. Patient care will continue to deteriorate and suffer due to non compete clauses."
Owen	"I am an Orthopaedic surgeon in Arkansas, and it is doubtful that I would leave my current position that I've been at for 20 years. If a different opportunity arose, I would at least like to be able to interview for a spot without concerns regarding my NC."
Aaron	"Companies are abusing this agreement. My Current employer, by direction of the board, is demanding an employee agreement be signed by everyone at director level or higher. It is 100% to the employers favor, with no severance or benefit to the employee for signing....only financial penalty if we break the agreement. This must stop."
M	"Strongly for this. I am in a simple sales role and I'm hindered by a very broad non-compete. Let the American people boost the economy and wages by allowing a free market."
Corbin	"Non-Competes have directly impacted my ability to pursue opportunities that would've provided me greater upward momentum. Companies should not have the right to restrict opportunities and/or pay of citizens period. People should be able to work wherever they can contribute the most. I hope to see this supported and moved forward."
Matthew	"Please oh Please stop this. I have had to liquidate both my 401ks because I have been terminated and restricted by non-competes and have no income to pay my mortgage. I want to kill myself for signing these contracts, but I had no other offers. My last one was for a contract position at the FDA at NCTR. I want to help people. I want to contribute to society. I am losing my retirement and sanity because of these horrible contract clauses. Please stop this madness. I hate myself because I felt I had no other option at the time. I have no job prospects in Arkansas because I fear I will get dragged into arbitration in Virginia. I can't afford that kind of travel or lawsuit. I have no savings or retirement funding. I am 42 years old. I have no preparedness for the future. I want to work, but I can't because I fear to look for another 9 months because of arbitration clauses. Even writing this plea is probably a violation of my contract, but I don't care anymore. Please use my story. Stop this madness. Please, I beg you. Please."

Leia	"This is excellent for people. These clauses should not exist! I live in an area where there are only two hospitals and this makes competitive wages almost non-existent."
Meghan	"Non-competes are, at baseline, unethical. Needy communities all over the country try to pull in healthcare providers. If there are issues, instead of trying to stay and either make a practice or join a separate practice, those extremely necessary providers have to leave. These non-competes generally don't hold up in court, either, so what is the point of having them in so many contracts? They should be outlawed, and systems and individuals who attempt to use them should be held accountable."
Michail	"Non-competes for physicians are detrimental to both physicians and patients. They are used by hospital systems (whose only goal is profit, regardless of non-profit status) to extort employed physicians so they can provide lower cost (and usually lower quality) care and abusive working conditions. The patients suffer even more since non-competes limit their access to healthcare - for example if a physician has to leave their practice to relocate, all their patients will have to find new physicians which is often quite challenging. The current iteration of the proposal somehow shields the not-for-profit hospitals from this exemption, which is a bit ridiculous as most of the hospital systems are classified as not-for-profit even though in reality their profits are disbursed to their leadership in the form of bonuses. In addition this inequality in application of the rules will harm smaller practices, who are more likely to provide care to underserved patients."
Kristen	"I'm a resident physician in the field of psychiatry. I have grave concerns about an exception for physicians negatively impacting patient care. Hospitals/health systems will tell you that non-competes protect their investment and prevent physicians from moving across town and taking patients with them. They will say the volatile healthcare hiring market cannot handle this change. However, non-competes allow inadequate and at times, unsafe, patient care to propagate with little recourse on the part of physicians. For example, if the clinical environment does not support safe and effective patient care, a non-compete gives these healthcare systems little incentive to improve these. Nursing, other staff, equipment and scheduling are all important clinical elements at stake. These could be improved with the bargaining power of a physician's legal ability to leave. It is often not feasible for a physician to uproot their families and move to another town. Moreover, some are so highly specialized that enforcing a non-

	compete effectively would mean forcing such a physician out of a state entirely, effectively decreasing access to care. Excluding physicians from this would be bad for physicians, bad for patient care, and bad for patients. Thank you for your consideration."
Traci	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. Recently a company in our state decided to shut its doors leaving no other comparable positions within the entire state. They maintained a non-compete clause with their employees. The services were specialized and the need remained although the company did not. Another business had to double their staff to accommodate the demand but was unable to utilize the workers with experience because of the contractual agreement. The response to the workers, when they inquired about release from the contracts since there were no available positions, was that they could move to another state or accept a position that was not comparable to their existing position or experience. The new positions since not specialized would also decrease their pay. Our state already struggles with improving access to healthcare, has a poorly educated workforce and the income is one of the lowest in the country. We need to keep any highly educated and skilled workers that we have. This contract did not only affect the individual workers but also the patients within the borders of our state. This was a lose-lose."
Richard	"I fully support doing away with non-competes. I am currently being financially held back due to a non-compete. Not only does it affect me, but it hurts the food companies in industries that require non-competes."
Kathy	"As a physician it only benefits my corporate employer and not the rural area where I live to have a non-compete agreement. If I change jobs I have to leave my community for years."
Deborah	"I believe this country was based on fair competition. We have let big companies block smaller companies from competition driving prices sky high such as Big Pharma and in our medical field. As a consumer we have been in prisoned by pricing that is now impossible for low income people to buy which forces them to rely solely on our government who can regulate the pricing for them. I believe with open competition the consumer will be able to choose more freely."
Avin	"As a physician who has had to move my practice and family 1100% support the abolishment of non-compete for all. It's stifles competition, allows for abusive practices and disrupts lives."
Genevieve	"I am 100% in agreement that NDA's do negatively impact the workforce and hope that the FTC revokes their use."
Aniket	"The aha comments on ftc are opposite to what reality is. The rule is used to cripple healthcare workers and physician to be compensated at market rates and be able to practice in a geographic area of their choice. This rule limits what healthcare workers are able to do and is especially made worse for area of need. The choice invariably remains either accept a lower pay or leave the market

	altogether. The rule allows the hospitals to bully the healthcare worker . This rule is very important for free trade which is right to all parties and as such has been improperly taken away from healthcare workers under the guise of free trade and this letter from AHA is further promulgating false narrative . Please donot remove the rule as is proposed by FTC ."
Karina	"I'm a resident physician graduating this academic year. I have grave concerns about an exception for physicians negatively impacting patient care. Corporations will tell you that non-competes protect their investment and prevent physicians from moving across town and taking patients with them. However, non-competes allow inadequate and at times, unsafe, patient care to propagate with little recourse on the part of physicians. Excluding physicians from this would be bad for physicians, bad for patient care, and bad for patients. Thank you for your consideration."
Joy	"Fully-trained physicians do not hold "trade secrets" specific to one particular corporate employer, and they should be free to move to a new employment situation if desired. Hospital employers take advantages of newly-graduated physicians with overwhelming educational debt from training, to tierce them into an employment agreement with a non-compete clause. Non-compete clauses limit physician-patient relationships to a branded healthcare entity. They stifle benefits and competition. In rural areas, non-compete agreements can leave thousands of patients without a physician when employment becomes untenable. The rising costs of healthcare has been clearly shown to be correlated with the rise of healthcare administrators and profits of insurance companies and pharma benefits managers, NOT with physician salaries or the salaries of other healthcare workers. Removing restrictive non-competes for a physicians is an essential piece of returning to a functioning healthcare system at a time when burnout and physician shortages are at all- time highs, and will benefit patients in urban and rural areas across the country."
Harvey	"I would like to voice my opinion concerning the non-compete clause. I ask that this not be posted. I work for a dental lab and I am currently under a non-compete clause that I feel should be illegal. The clause offers no way out except that I would move my family out of the state and work for a year or take up another employment in another field. I am currently 54 years of age and have worked at a dental lab since I was 19. I do not have job skills in another field of work. When I first went to work for my current employer there was no non-compete clause. I left this job after 17 years and went to work for another dental lab. I moved my family back to the area of my first employment partly so my wife could be close to her aging parents. When I came back I had to sign a non-

	compete clause, No way out. This non-compete doesn't offer any way out other than you work for another lab in another state or that you leave this field for a year. I am one of 36 Certified Dental Technicians in our state and I am not able to seek another dental lab job in this area. In September of 2022 I had over 34 years of experience and a CDT making $22.00 an hour. In October of 2022 I took a management position that I really didn't want but felt I was at a dead end. I would like to be able to have the Freedom to seek employment elsewhere and not have to change careers(I'm 54) or move to another state. Thank You"
Vijay	"It is essential to remove this non compete clause.. Employers are exploring the employees very much.. This for sure increase competition and good for growth."
Pratapji	"Considering patient physician relationship and continuity of care there should not be non compete clause."
Grant	"Hello! I'm in my mid-30's, have 2 kids, a wife, a dog...pretty middle class family. I have a degree in Economics & an MBA. Every career advancement opportunity I've experienced has been plagued by noncompetes. I certainly wasn't taking anything proprietary or using anything against anyone, and I've had to pass on opportunities that would have allowed me to take better care of my family, start saving for my daughters' colleges, pay off my own student loan debt & mortgage, generate more in tax revenue, etc. Noncompetes absolutely prevents ordinary competition. You could argue that maybe a small fraction of a percent of that prevention is necessary, but it's pretty obvious that 99% of it hampers mobility & competition, and protecting <1% at the cost of 99% just doesn't seem like we live in free society that promotes individual liberty & capitalism. I have many friends, colleagues, and family members, both left-leaning & right-leaning, from a wide array of industries, that are against noncompetes & think they are predatory. The scales are always tipped toward the enforcer, who has better resources & lawyers. I think society/law students years from now will look back on these & laugh, but it's frustrating living during this time where noncompetes thrive like this. it's a big mistake that damages families, mobility, and ordinary competition."
Tracy	"Please end non-compete clauses. It robs workers of their freedoms and prioritizes businesses and corporations over human beings trying to earn a living."
Pail	"I agree with eliminating non competes for medical personnel. Non competes exacerbate the shortage of clinicians and give employers unfair advantage."
Lauren	"I strongly support the ban of non-compete clauses. If you are good at what you do, an employer should not be able to limit your ability to continue this same work for another organization. Non-competes hidden within NDAs are very problematic. If the employee doesn't sign, they risk losing their current job. If they do sign, they lose the ability to prosper elsewhere. Non-competes benefit only the employer and steals the opportunity for employees to find better opportunities."

Chris	"First off, I am currently a suppressed employer due to an unethical, unenforceable non compete/ non solicit that I can't afford to tight against legall due to how the US judicial system is set up toward business suits. Whoever runs out of money loses. My current situation: our company sold in 2016, we had a two year non compete that was fixing to expire. So the company (Parfab industries and Trive) come to us and stated they had a bank issue they needed signatures for, and asked us to sign signature pages. When asked to provide the contract, they stated they didn't have time to get the paper work out and had to close the deal immediately and insinuated that reproccussion could come if an individual slowed down the bank deal. Three years later we finally get the details and there was very broad agreement in there that no one would sign without an attorney review. In US courts for business suits, who ever runs out of money first loses whether your right or wrong. Currently some of my friends / previous coworkers are in a lawsuit over this in Harris County Texas. ParFab vs. Tyler Farrar, Ryan Horton, Brian Rockwell, Christina Waller, BD Energy Systems. At a minimum, tue FTC should make a rule/ law to stop companies from hiding clauses within large legal documents. Negate every current one within the US and make companies give employees the opportunity to negotiate for the signature. Standardize the limits of these agreements, to where corporation won't be compelled incorporate in business friendly states such as Delaware. In closing, there are probably industries or practices such as government contractors and suppliers that need to have sonic type of confidentiality agreement in place. But in our case a construction company, non competes should be totally banned"
Rebecca	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. This practice should be illegal, because it is immoral. Non-competes could result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."

California | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 billion in increased wages over the next decade.

	"Good morning, I am a physician in private practice in the SF Bay Area of CA. Noncompetes aren't enforceable in CA. It's wonderful. I started as a solo doc, and have since grown and hired 4 additional OBGYN physicians to work with me, the first in 2014. We are a successful, thriving group because I run it in a fair, transparent way. If one of them had a better opportunity elsewhere and wanted to leave, I do not see why it would serve me that they would be forced to stay with me and also why I should have a say at all, outside of our contractual agreement of sufficient written notice. In the current climate, physicians are hating medicine. Our pay has been stagnant or dropping (in relation to cost of living, inflation, our skill set, the increasingly complicated field fo medicine). And in my area new grads in tech with a bachelors are making more than primary care physicians after the additional 4 years of medical school and 3 years of residency. Our country needs SMART, HARDWORKING physicians to care for our aging population, getting rid of the non-compete restrictions across the country is in the best interest of physician autonomy and just one tiny way to make the field of medicine more palatable for the next generation." - Sarah
	"My name is Peter, and I wholeheartedly support this new rule. As the founder of a company that now employs four engineers, I can say with confidence that it's thanks to California's rules against non-competes that have allowed me to start a company. If technology companies like Google/Alphabet, Microsoft, and Facebook/Meta were allowed to limit their employees on what they could work on after, they definitely would, and due to their sprawling scale, it would choke off a lot of competition. Having a lack of noncompetes have helped spur new enterprise and hire talented engineers to grow a thriving small business. I strongly encourage you to pass this rule." - Peter
	"I'm a retired union teacher. I feel very strongly that the FTC bans on non-compete clauses. These clauses affect workers conditions and are unfair. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. Banning the non-comete clauses pollicy will make it easier for workers to earn what they are worth. I urge you to ban the non-compete clauses." - Dorri

	"I completely support the proposal to eliminate non-compete clauses from employment contracts. As a recruiting and HR professional for 20 years, I personally experienced the negative impact of non-compete clauses. Employment opportunities were artificially limited for me. Competitors would have given me a higher offer since I would bring my knowledge of their competitors. As a recruiter, I could ethically honor my confidentiality agreements with a previous employer and still use the industry and competitive knowledge to the benefit of my new employer. These opportunities were not possible due to the non-compete. Also, as a recruiter, I know how candidates hate non-compete clauses. Getting rid of non-compete clauses would make hiring faster and more efficient.and result in better hires for the company." - Tricia
	"I am a worker in Software, who has signed a non-compete clause. Despite its purported unenforcability in my stale, CA, it has directly and indirectly harmed me. The goal, as I see it from my employers perspective, it to protect IP from crossing as easily to other companies. Barring actual theft, that IP is wholly equivalent to, "work experience". It harms me because I will not go work for a competitor company, simply because the hassle of possibly fighting corporate lawyers, or being involved in such a lawsuit if my new company defends me in court, is not something I want to deal with. It harms me indirectly, because competition for services I need can be similarly restricted and abused. Non-competes are used in the medical field, and as such, where a worker would do the same job at different hospitals, they may feel unable to change hospitals, like I wont work for a company doing the same thing my company does. Those trapped employees are subject to be overworked, which decreases the quality of my medical care. I am certain that companies abuse these clauses from my own experience." - Andrew
	"I am all for removing any prospect of a yoga studio or place of yoga employment (or independent contractor) saying I can't work there unless I sign an agreement saying I won't work teaching yoga elsewhere! How can a yoga teacher survive with this limitation imposed by the studio (or other facility). Please support yoga teachers by making this "non-compete" obsolete. Thank you!" - Dawn
	"I support the banning of non-Competes. I work in the aerospace industry as an mechanical engineer, and is a common practice here, the company will stipulate that you can not work for a competitor until after X number of years or that you cannot work X number of miles from the company. Many of the aerospace companies are located in clusters, so the non compete will prevent you from working on the same area. Why? They can be super broad, capturing massive industries or technologies They can include "lists of competitors that we can add to at any time" They apply to nearly everyone, not just those with sensitive information These contracts essentially would prevent you from working at companies with the exact skillset you grew." - Cesar

RHONDA	"NON-COMPETES WOULD HAVE KILLED MICKEY MOUSE AND SILICON VALLEY I am [...] a small business columnist, author, and advocate. I support the ban on non-compete agreements. My comments aim to highlight some of the adverse effects of non-compete agreements on new business formation and on small businesses. You've probably never heard of "Oswald the Rabbit," but that's the creature a young Walt Disney was working on at Universal Pictures in 1927. But he and his brother Roy had an itch to create animated pictures with sound, so they started their own company featuring a new delightful imp "Mickey Mouse." Fight bright young engineers were working for Shockley Semiconductor in 1957, when they realized that silicon would be a better basis for semiconductor chips than germanium (the element Shockley's founder was committed to). Those 'Traitorous Fight' left to form their own company, resulting in launching launch Silicon Valley. Many household-name tech companies are descendants of companies those original eight created. Fortunately for Walt and those brilliant engineers, California had rejected non-compete agreements in 1872. Had they been hamstrung by non-compete agreements, America would be a far less economically robust country. And I'd miss Mickey and my iPhone. It's not surprising that two of the country's biggest and most lucrative industries entertainment and tech - were able to flourish in California because innovative entrepreneurs and ambitious talents were and are able to create their own businesses. California has been a hotbed of entrepreneurial activity and one of America's leading economic powerhouses. And what the golden state proves is NON- COMPETES ARE NOT NECESSARY to protect businesses. In fact they are harmful. One could make a strong case that much of the economic vibrancy of California (now the fifth largest economy in the world) is directly due to prohibiting non-compete agreements. That's not true in the majority of US states, where non-compete agreements are enforceable. In many states, even a hairdresser, a house painter, or a lawyer might be limited from starting their own business in their own field. Allowing an employer to limit an employee from starting another business (or even getting a job) in their area of expertise is not only unnecessary, not only harmful to our economy, but is, in fact, a form of indentured servitude. Why should someone who takes a job at a fast food restaurant not be able to leave that job and go to another fast food restaurant. Or someone who works at a law firm not being able to set up their own law practice. Or someone who knows how to code not being able to start another tech firm? That's not fair. It's not smart. And it harms the American economy. It inhibits innovation, reduces entrepreneurship, suppresses wages. Indeed, a bizarre consequence of non-compete agreements results in barring those individuals who are most able to innovate from working in a field where they have the most experience, education, and expertise. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) is

	right in considering enacting a rule to ban such non-compete agreements throughout the country. Of course, some reasonable provisions to protect existing businesses could and should be allowed, such as protecting trade secrets, enforcing non-disclosure agreements, and not allowing 'poaching' of customers. Moreover, someone selling a business could be contractually barred from competing for a reasonable period of time. Those provisions exist in California currently. They are sufficient to protect existing businesses while allowing entrepreneurship to flourish and employees to move jobs. Here are some of the ways non-compete agreements hurt the growth and health of small businesses: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. They limit would-be entrepreneurs from starting new businesses. An employer can keep a talented employee from leaving and starting a more innovative or ambitious company. 2. They discourage or limit employees from joining startups, making it harder for new companies to compete and survive. 3. They make it harder for every small business to hire experienced employees. Existing employers can keep employees from taking jobs, even in very small businesses, even if they have the skill-set to fulfill job requirements. 4. They may tie up small businesses in legal disputes. 5. Non-competes reduce competition and innovation in the economy, reducing small business owners' choice of providers and tools. Non-competes offer little protection for small businesses, as the cost of enforcement — both in terms of legal fees and the negative consequences on company morale — makes them relatively ineffective for small companies. A ban on non-competes nationwide would spur entrepreneurship and innovation. It's good for small business. It's good for job creation. It's good for America. And frankly, it's just the right thing to do."
David	"Perhaps the Commission should specifically broaden the scope of the proposed rule to prohibit non-solicitation clauses as well, since these effectively restrict a former employee's ability to compete with his/her former employer. Of course, the employee would be precluded from using confidential information of the former employer in his/her solicitation activities."
Mona	"I support the FC's position on non-competitive clauses."
L.	"People should be able to change jobs without fear of being sued. I am totally against non-compete clauses."
Monir	"I am a Driven Brand franchisee owning 2 franchises and employing 14 individuals in California. Currently, my franchise agreement is for a term of 15 years. When I signed my agreement, which was over 517 pages long, it was a 'take it or leave it' situation in which I was forced to sign the agreement or walk away entirely. The contract, which was drafted by my franchisor's attorneys and is completely non-negotiable, included a non-compete clause which states that You must give notice, be in compliance with agreements, pay transfer fee, and execute a noncompete agreement and general release (if state law allows); transferee must meet our standards, complete our training program, pay initial advertising contribution, execute new franchise agreement or an assignment agreement, remodel Center to conform to new standards, and meet financial requirements; your Center must be open and operating; you or transferee pay any applicable thirdparty broker fees and costs. If transferring to a corporation you own, the transfer agreement must be satisfactory to us. These terms restrict my ability to start a new business or in any way use my experience to work in a similar industry. When my contract expires, I must renew for another 5 years, generally on significantly different terms than my original contract, or give up my franchise entirely. If I choose the latter, my noncompete clause makes it very difficult to use my experience to run and/or work for another business."

Allison	"I am writing as a primary care physician. I have had non-compete clauses in prior job contracts. These clauses can force physicians to stay in jobs where they are being overworked and mistreated leading to physician burn-out and shrinking of the primary care work-force. These are intended for a physician to not "steal" patients away from one practice and follow them to a nearby practice. Patients should have the freedom to see a physician in any location which they please. Physicians should be allowed to move and change jobs when needed. Our for-profit medical system is falling apart at the seams and non-compete clauses in physician contracts is yet another example of profits over care of our patients and our medical work-force."
Lori	"I support a ban on non-compete agreements."
Meiling	"That a business could possibly sue a former employee from moving on to a better paying job is beyond unfair to the worker. It forces the employee into servitude, almost like a sentence. My first reaction was literally OMG! because I couldn't believe this was a serious potential business rule if they want to use it. Ban the non-compete rule."
Scott	"Non-compete agreements are unfair to the labor and stifle competition. These agreements should be banned."
Ellen	"Employees should own what they learn they give their time and effort to their employer- but their ability to grow and retains knowledge is theirs and they should be able to use it in any way. To do otherwise is wasting human capital and ingenuity. Follow California's lead in their B & P Code 16600 and outlaw non-compete agreements. It works in the largest producing state in the nation- it can work nationwide."
Ravi	"I support repealing the non-compete clause as the FTC is trying to do."
Faraj	"Non-compete clause should stop. It is in favor of healthcare executives"
THUSHAN	"These non-compete clauses are stifling free and competitive labor markets and general economy. Strong support to go forward with this proposed rule."
David	"I am 100% in favor of banning all non-competes, except when selling a business. These agreements do nothing to protect trade secrets, because those can be protected through non-disclosure agreements. They are used only to keep from having to pay a high enough wage to keep an employee. Businesses should have to compete for employees the same way the compete for customers."

Michael	"I am writing in support of the "non-compete clause rule" proposed by the ETC. As background, I am a physician currently finishing fellowship training. I am writing specifically in regards to my experience with the current non-compete landscape and how it applies to physician contracts. In my home state (NC), it is common for physician non-compete clauses to prohibit practicing in the same specialty within a 20-30 mile radius or even within an entire county after leaving a position. These non-competes can last anywhere from 1-2 years. Given the broad prohibited area of practicing, it causes a very unbalanced and non-competitive landscape for physicians like myself. The biggest issue I have against these non-compete clauses is that the special skills we learn as a physician are obtained during our time in medical school, residency, and fellowship. The job itself is not giving any new skills/knowledge. As an example, if I join a private practice or hospital out of training, that employer doesn't teach me how to practice medicine within my specialty. At best they may teach me how to use a specific medical records system or some logistics about ordering supplies or utilizing support staff, but that information is neither novel or need be protected. How to order supplies or how to manage and run a practice can be easily learned by either my own research or from the many practice management consultants that exist. Moving to the next step, if I decide not to start my own practice and join an existing practice or hospital with certain goals of employment (i.e. partnership, being able to do certain procedures, or having a certain patient volume), then a non-compete becomes effectively anti-competitive in my ability to negotiate and grow as an employee in the future. For example, if a hospital system or practice offers me a job with the idea that I will see a certain patient volume, be able to practice in a specific location, or be able to perform certain aspects of medicine: but then in the end is unable to fulfill the goals that they recruited me with, I am bound by a non-compete and unable to effectively negotiate or leave. Even further, if a private practice offers a partnership opportunity but also has a broad non-compete, this places all negotiating power with the practice and not the employee. They can offer unfavorable partnership terms knowing that my only options are to take the unfavorable terms, to remain only as an employee, or to leave town and relocate. I do appreciate that non-compete clauses are in place to protect business interests of the employers, but in reality they do more harm than good in the field of medicine. They prevent physicians from leaving a practice and being able to continue continuity with their patients if the patients desire that. I would argue the practice of medicine and relationship with patients is more important than any individual business interest. They also protect practices from having to grow and improve. If I work for a practice that is behind the times and could use updated procedures or technology, if I try to recommend that practice to improve in a certain way they can say no knowing that I have no option to leave and do this on my own. If non-competes were not in place, physicians could have the negotiating power to say that we should do something better for patients, and if the practice doesn't agree that physician can go to a competitor or open their own practice to be able to do the things that would benefit patients better. This forces healthy competition among practices that ultimately benefits the patient. It requires practices to offer

	better and more cost effective care for their patients to remain competitive instead of purely dominating the marketplace by preventing others from creating healthy competition around them. Finally, getting rid of non-competes does not negate non-disclosure and non-solicitation clauses. Those will still prevent trade secrets from being disclosed and prevent a provider from leaving and soliciting patients and employees directly. However, if I perform services for a medical practice and another medical practice within the non-compete radius wants to offer me a more competitive offer to do the same services that I was previously trained, or if they want to allow me to do something that may benefit patients that I'm unable to do at my current job, there is no reason I shouldn't be able to take that offer to improve care for patients and improve my working situation. In short, in my experience non-compete clauses do far more harm to the overall practice of medicine than they do to help in protecting individual business interests. If you have any further questions about how non-compete clauses impact physicians specifically I would be more than happy to discuss further and help however I can. Thank you in advance for taking on this challenging issue and for your consideration of my comments. Attachments Non-compete letter"
Scott	"SUPPORT! This is long overdue. My brother was stuck in a job with his abusive boss because he had a non-compete. Please do this!"
Maddy	"This is a step in right direction!!"
Matt	"As a dermatologist I see the removal of non-compete clauses as a benefit for both physicians and our patients. Currently, most non-competes are structured in such a way that if a physician would like to leave the practice that they have a non-compete with, that physician would have to leave that city - uprooting their life and effectively abandoning their patients. These non-compete clauses have such a large radius of non-compete that it encompasses an entire city or region and are typically a year or longer in duration. These practices therefore have an unfair control over the employees allowing these practices to reduce wages and provide less benefits. Non-competes can also hinder patient care. Medicine is very individualized and some patients develop a strong relationship with that physician. If a physician feels that they are in an unfair situation at work and want to leave the practice, non-competes prevent that physician from changing to a practice nearby where patients could have continuity of care with that physician. Non-competes also stagnates growth/development of patient care and allows practices to potentially provide subpar care without a need to change as they would not have the competition to entice them to."
Gabriel	"There are 2 examples below. Another example: I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment

	opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations at the expense of the workers. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. Eliminating the noncompete clauses will help improve healthcare access for patients as hospitals and corporations can no longer restrict where physicians can work. I urge the FTC to reject the AHA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians. It is essential to protect workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned physician."
Luz	"Non-competes should definitely be banned. There is always all this talk about high need communities, or "healthcare deserts", even within large cities, but if a doctor works at one clinic/hospital, with non-compete clauses, it makes it impossible for a doctor to continue practicing on their community because of x-mile radius they aren't allowed to work in after they leave that clinic/hospital. As per usual, this only benefits companies/corporate rather than the people of this country. Additionally, it makes doctors have to uproot their families and move them far away since they can practice within the same region...and if they don't move their families away, they are spending much less time with family be of additional commute they now have to make. Bottom line, if you want doctors to stay in communities, non-competes must go, so they can keep practicing/treating patients. Hospitals/clinics argue that doctors would "steal" patients away, but with how our society diet and sedentary life is, there will always be more patients to serve than can actually be served be of physician shortages. (But again, non-competes are contributing to these shortages)"
Paul	"Agree with eliminating non-compete agreements. Should extend to all agreements not just tech jobs."
Behrad	"I fully support abolishing all non completes nationwide. Thank you"
Annie	"As a healthcare worker I support banning non-compete clauses. These clauses allow organizations to implement predatory practices that put staff and patients at risk because they prevent staff from leaving for safer organizations. As such , there is no pressure on the predatory organizations to do and be better"
H	"Pass this and support workers!"
Arthur	"I currently work for a company that has a non compete clause which is significantly hindering my earnings potential. I work as a consultant and they do not allow me to directly contract with companies that require consultants. It is relationships they introduce me to and all they do is collect 30% of whatever I make as a physician consultant. This stifles competition and locks people in contracts that they cannot get out off. My contract has a clause that prevents me from working with anyone for a whole year as such I can never get out of it since I need to earn a living. Please make non compete clauses obsolete."

Dori	"As a physician the end of non-compete clauses is an important step to improving access to qualified doctors for all."
Micah	"Non-compete clauses serve no real purpose but to allow employers to control their employees' careers, enforce worse working conditions, and prevent them from moving freely throughout their careers. Please ban non-compete agreements!"
Cecilia	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! Non-compete clauses make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats you, by allowing your former employer to sue you if you go to work for another company in the same industry. Banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by 5300 billion per year."
Margaret	"Count me as another physician who was badly hurt by a large hospital system denying me the ability to work anywhere near them. They used this clause when I started talking about the sexual harassment that I had witnessed. It was egregious overreach, and a ban on non-compete clauses would go a long way to leveling the playing field. Thank you."
Michael	"I pray that this Non-Compete Clause Rule will go into effect as soon as possible to protect fellow American workers from abuse. I am a self-employed federal contractor working with HUD. The contractor I was working with tied me into a Non-Compete Agreement which prohibited me from working on my own or for anyone else doing property inspections for HUD. I signed the agreement 2/19/2017 when I knew practically nothing about the industry and trusted that I was working for a reputable employer since it's the largest contractor with HUD. I later learned that he had been deceiving me and had been knowingly overcharging me commission fees, starving me for work to pay lower wages, not putting in auction contract bids for me, and cut me off from all of my assignments when I discussed my findings with him. Consequently, he kept me tied into the contract for an additional 17 months after he cancelled $40K worth of work and discontinued contact with me - the ultimate cancel culture. Keep in mind that I was a reliable contractor with a solid track record of great service and high level proficiency in my field. The contract was worded where I needed to cancel at least 30 days prior to my anniversary date of 2/19 if I wanted to contract with others, and then there is another 12 month probation. My jobs were deleted 9/1/2021 and I was stuck under this contract until 2/19/2023. Under this contract, if I performed any work for HUD, I would have to pay the contractor $100 per assignment based on HUD's records. Therefore, if I completed 250 assignments in that 17 month period, I would have to pay him $25,000 when the anniversary date ends. He abused his power, lied, conned, deceived, and defrauded me from the start but this contract protected his evil actions - once I learned the details of how he was defrauding me, I did not want to earn another dollar for his company. I immediately let HUD know, worked with various parties, including HUD officials, HUD OIG, FOIA, PA attorneys, CA attorneys, DC attorneys, and numerous

	professionals. I hired an attorney and still have not been able to obtain justice, yet. In addition to the fraud, the contractor was using a non-compete contract nationwide, and particularly in California where it is not allowed and no one has been able to help me obtain justice because of the complications of states with different rules regarding non-competes. Let's follow CA, OK, ND, and DC in banning these non-competes once and for all to free the American entrepreneur or worker looking for freedom and fairness. I believe this move will end a lot of corruption that has plagued American Contractors nationwide. All federal agencies operating out of DC should also ban these contracts since that is already the law. Thank you for caring to read about my experience - hopefully this adds to the volumes of evidence and support to repeal these restrictive contracts. God bless the USA."
Tom	"Eliminate non compete clauses. Many low-wage workers — including hairstylists, fast-food line cooks and security guards — are now burdened by them. And the limits they impose on labor mobility have become a drag on the American economy. The F.T.C. should listen to workers rather than bend to the will of corporations that are abusing them."
Bryan	"I strongly support this proposed rule change!"
robert	"I came to voice my opinion that Non-Compete agreements should be outlawed. They are abused by employers to unfairly control employees and should be abolished except in the rare case that sensitive IP is involved. About damn time too!"
Dave	"I fully support a ban on non-compete clauses. The idea that an employer can "own" your knowledge and experience directly countermands the right of self-determination and liberty this country was founded on. I forward to this rule change improving both general working conditions and the overall health of the US job market."
Paul	"Sample comment: I am an attorney working for 40 years in the area of bankruptcy, insolvency and financial distress. Corporations already wield so much power over individuals that working people have virtually no leverage or negotiating power. Non-compete clauses undermine individual working people's mobility within an industry and undermine their efforts to improve their wages. So I strongly support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth. Thank you for considering my comment."
Elizabeth	"I support a national ban on non-competes. This strangles competition and prevents employees from finding the best role for them, as they're subject to the whims of their prior employer."
Mike	"Non-compete agreements stifle progress and hold back workers. I fully support the non-compete clause rule. Study after study have demonstrated that the

	growth and development of key organizations in California, especially Silicon Valley, was possible because of California's ban on non-compete agreements. Good companies succeed by not limiting their employees from moving onto better positions or another company. Wages increase and growth is spread around as people move between jobs and bring their experiences with them. Relying on non-compete agreements to hold back employees doesn't help a company, and as my experience in California has demonstrated, being able to compete with top talent raises the bar for everyone. Non-compete agreements are used by poorly managed companies to prolong their death process and hurt regular Americans while propping up perceived shareholder value."
Elizabeth	"Please ban these clauses!! These kinds of contracts can be exploited by companies to keep employees in roles where they're underpaid and mistreated. Preventing this clauses would keep the market competitive and incentivize companies to treat their employees better!"
Rose	"I support the new rule banning non-compete agreements. These clauses, especially when used for non-executive roles, have the effect of limiting competition for workforce talent, and thus depressing wages. In many cases, they are "sprung" on workers and potential employees after a position has been accepted, and the employee is not compensated for agreeing to limit his or her future opportunities. Employers have many tools to protect against IP and trade secret theft, but non-competes are overbroad and anti-competitive. Non-compete agreements restrict competition, and reduce innovation, by not allowing the free movement of employees among competitor companies, and the creation of new businesses. They should be banned. I support the new rule."
Eileen	"Ban non competes. Sleazy CEOs are destroying our country."
Abbie	"Workers should be able to remain in their field of expertise and accept jobs with better pay."
Reba	"There are already limited resources for patients of all specialties in most areas so non-compete clauses further limit this access. Physicians may leave a setting for any number of valid reasons and to restrict them from practicing in an area where they already live and have their families established is not fair and not prudent for delivery of care. I respectfully ask that physicians not be forced to uproot their families because of limitations of where they can practice after leaving a job. There should not be a monopoly on the delivery of care. Thank you."
Sanjay	"Please remove non compete clauses from physician contracts. The non competes are used by private groups, for and non profit hospitals or healthcare systems to avoid competition and as some say represent forced servitude. There are innumerable examples of physicians tied down in unfavorable work situations since they are restricted by the non compete clauses. This adds to burnout and exploitation of physicians and undermines goals of freedom of employment opportunities for all."

A.	"I am in favor of banning noncompete clauses in all employment contracts and offers of employment."
Clayton	"The proliferation of non-compete agreements in the private sector is anathema to the idea of a competitive market. Such conditions of employment not only harm workers but damage the economy."
Natalie	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. It is highly desirable that workers are able to be successful and productive, both for the good of the worker and the nation, instead of being stifled by greedy and selfish employers."
Catherine	"After the COVID pandemic, our healthcare system has been hit hard. We need as many doctors, nurses, and other healthcare professionals as possible. Allowing healthcare organizations to impose non-competes will limit the ability of healthcare professionals to practice. I urge you to ensure that healthcare is included in the FTC's proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule and to pass it. Thank you."
Joel	"I strongly support the proposed rule prohibiting employer imposition of non-compete contractual provisions on individuals. However, I would recommend an additional limited exception for such provisions in a bona fide collective bargaining agreement ratified by vote of the bargaining unit employees. In such cases, the collective bargaining power of the employees is analogous to the economic position of the seller of a major portion of the business, for which the rule provides an exception. In collective bargaining situations, the interests of individual employees on all major issues concerning wages, hours and working conditions are subject to collective bargaining"

Merrill	"I SUPPORT THE BAN ON THE "NON-COMPETE CLAUSE RULE (NPRM) Although it is a exaggeration clear it is easy to understand that Today nobody supports "indentured servitude" any longer; so the idea of a "non-complete clause" is similar. Labor is a human resource and as an employee/worker, it is your right to tender your resignation for any reason. The employer also has the right to terminate your employment for just cause such as theft or violation of "company rules" that you have agreed to as a condition of employment. This is only just!"
Michele	"Reevaluating the situation I believe teachers should not be liable to any none compte agement."

Diana	"Please ban non-complete contracts! Non-compete clauses make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats you, by allowing your former employer to sue you if you go to work for another company in the same industry. The FTC estimates that banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by $300 billion per year."
Diana	"Ban exploitative noncompete agreements and ensure that workers can leave their job for a better offer."
Jessica	"Please ban all non-compete. Life, liberty and pursuit of happiness is at stake if we don't ban these."
Michelle	"The proposed non-compete rule would be such a welcome change. Looking forward to the FTC passing this new rule!"
Nathanael	"Please enact the rule barring employers from imposing non-competes on their employees! Non-compete clauses are anti- freedom and anti-worker."
Ryan	"Non-competes harm millions of workers and severely limit career options. People who have worked in one industry for years, and are heavily skilled in this area, are left with no options to continue their career in the same Industry, so now pay becomes an issue and people can become trapped. Americans should be free to work for a competitor, or any other company for that matter. Workers deserve freedom of choice."
George	"Corporate greed must be curbed. Non-compete clauses are part of this problem and must be eliminated"
Fred	"I was recently summoned by a company that purchased my former company Claiming that I am not allowed to work in an industry that I have been in for almost 30 years. I have been advised by my attorney that it is not enforceable in the state of California, so they filed in Arizona where the former company was based. If the FTC bans all Non-competes this would allow me to work and compete against these giant companies who have monopolized the market."
Steven	"Non-competes are an outrageous violation of workers' and human rights. They should be banned in all but the most narrowly defined circumstances. Anyone bound by a non-compete should receive full compensation from their prior employer for any period that they are not allowed to work under the terms of the non-compete."
Dace	"I worked in public health for many year in San Diego CA and I just retired and I am still an avid supporter of workers rights and I know how damaging a non-compete clause is. I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and hams working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"

Owen	"The free movement of labor benefits corporate America and the American economy as a whole. Non-compete clauses are a tragedy of the commons. While clauses may benefit individual companies, as a whole they damage companies ability to earn profits and grow. The success of Silicon Valley is in no small part due to non-complete causes. If California had enforced non-compete clauses, companies like Intel would not have existed. It's founders would not have been able to leave Fairchild https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Intel#Origins Intels predecessor, Fairchild Semi-conductor, would also not have existed, as its founders would have been bound up in non-competes with Shockley. See https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Traitorous_eight Non-compete are a tragedy of the commons. It benefits companies individually to use them, but in aggregate they stifle the flow of labor and information. Ending the legality of non-compete clauses will benefit all parties, including those companies currently using them."
Pat	"If workers have to wait for a set period of time this would mean they would be forced into another field that may not suit their skill set. This creates gaps in their resume and means they miss out on upgrades in the technologies used in their field. Expecting people to take a job that probably pays less but still keep up with industry changes is not fair to workers. It penalizes those who want to better their position in the workforce and only benefits the business management. The whole idea of Non-Compete came from business management that didn't want to compete with companies offering better wages or packages and trapping employees in their current jobs. Unfair and unethical."
Sarah	"I feel that non-compete agreements should be banned. Non-compete agreements benefit corporations and oppress workers and take away freedom."
Veronique	"Non-compete agreements should be illegal: they are an abuse of power over employees who sign them in good faith before being employed. They also stifle wages and limit job opportunities because they protect not the employees but, and exclusively, the employers -usually big employers. It is contrary to our Democratic and Capitalist tradition"
Christine	"I fully support this non-compete clause rule and want to make sure it also protects workers who have "retired" from a company but still need to work. My close friend's former employer has a contractual clause that will negate his pension entirely if he accepts employment in the same industry or in a related one. He is having a hard time finding a decent job now and it is a struggle. He jus retired last year but is only 54 and still needs to work, as his pension is meager. If he could work in the same industry, he would make a more liveable wage and with less stress and more joy. 100% please pass and include retirement and pension contracts. Thank you!"
Barbara	"RE: non-compete clause rule (NPRM): Ban NONcompete agreements."
A	"Hello, I'm writing in support of the proposal to ban non-compete contracts. I am well-versed in labor law (much of it from my own misfortunes!) and it's not hard to understand why non-compete contracts are anti-labor and anti-democratic. 1.

	Non-competes protect mega-companies that only exist because our cowardly congress doesn't enforce antitrust law in the first place 2. Non-competes restrict the movement of experienced and/or skilled labor, both recognized and not 3. Therefore non-competes are blackmailing dedicated workers for their freedom in exchange for the convenience of big companies' shareholders and bosses 4. while offering workers nothing in exchange but the chance to work, which can lead to worker apathy and mediocre work quality 5. and consequentially bottle up and kill the movement of skills and information that creates the innovation and self-determined economies that built this country before mega-companies bought and suffocated it. They're unfair, wasteful, and anti-democratic. You reading this at the FTC probably don't care about fairness or democracy, but those reading this public comment might care, and every branch at every level must act in favor of fairness and democracy to keep its legitimacy. Thanks for your time. -ac"
S	"STOP NON COMPETE CLAUSES THAT ARE UNFAIR. WORKERS ARE NOT SLAVES!"
Lori	"Noncompete clauses are abused and overused. Please ban the use of noncompete clauses. They prevent ordinary employees from earning a living and tie workers to employers even when the employee doesn't actually want to work for that firm anymore. Noncompetes reduce our economic competitiveness and give employers and firms too much power."
Tvetene	"Non-compete clauses give companies and employers undue control over the lives of people, restricting their freedom to say no to a bad deal. A free market such as ours is fundamentally based on the ability of people to make fair deals between each other and saying no when that deal is no longer fair. An employer should have no control over a person's life the second after they are no longer an employee. The concern corporations would use as an excuse is fear of an employee "switching sides" to a competitor bringing their trade secrets with them, and therefore non-compete clauses address this "accidental corporate espionage." This concern is already addressed by intellectual property laws, trade secret laws, and non-disclosure agreements that allow corporations and business owners to sue if their ideas, methods, and product designs are stolen. Unlike existing and documented ideas, an employer has no rights to the skills that an employee possesses: intellectual creativity, physical labor, public facing interaction, or a trade skill. If an employee is offered a better deal by a competitor and an employer is concerned about losing the employee, the onus is on the employer to then offer a better deal rather than getting to legally restrict their employee from leaving for a better deal."
David	"I'm a programmer working in California; every job I've had has put a non-complete clause in the employment agreement they've asked me to sign on my first day, and I'm very glad they aren't enforceable here. Non-compete clauses make it harder for workers to get a good salary, and to profit from skills that those workers have spent years developing; and it's very hard to avoid them if you get surprised by them on your first day at a new job. Also, most of the companies that I've worked at have been started by people working in related fields to what their

	previous company did; it's better for the country if new companies can be founded to develop ideas like that instead of having them bottled up in companies that either won't develop them at all or won't develop them well. I don't think it's a coincidence that Silicon Valley appeared in a state where noncompetes are unenforceable."
Matthew	"I am a physician. Non compete clauses benefit only employers and are, overly burdensome to the physician. Often MDs are expected to hold a geographic non compete. Employers know that a doctor cannot move their entire family just to change jobs. This makes future raises, benefits, and incentives for retention minimal. Often it can lead to the employer outright mistreating the physician or even impairing their ability to provide good medical care to their patients because they know the MD has no recourse. I wholeheartedly support the removal of non compete clauses from our profession."
Christine	"A non-compete I signed several years ago is preventing me from working with a previous client who was sold a software solution that doesn't meet their business needs. I could provide them a lower cost solution which is tailored to their business needs, but I am prevented from working in any of the 50 states and abroad with many large companies because they are customers of my former employer. This is both a bad situation for me trying to earn a living and for my former client trying to run their business."
Sean	"The Federal Trade Commission (FTC)'s Notice of Proposed Rulemaking prohibiting noncompete clauses appropriately limits terms which are inherently unfair to workers, may prevent individuals from providing for their families, and can result in harms to the business community by enabling abuse and unlawful conduct to endure longer than they would otherwise. Please find additional comments in the attached file, Sean Castillo Attachments Non-Compete Clause Rule"
Michael	"This is an AWESOME idea. As I'm sure the agency is aware, some states like California already have a long-standing statewide bans on non-competes, and California's economy and labor market has been more than fine. This would be a big win for smart government and the American economy."
Jinny	"There can be no exceptions to the law. Do not let the American hospital association dictate that doctors have to adhere to non-compete when no other profession will have to."
Joshua	"Highly support getting rid of noncompetes. This will help many people seek opportunity and raise wages."
Daniel	"I strongly support the proposed rule by the Federal Trade Commission to ban non-compete clauses in employment contracts. Non-compete agreements are often exploitative, limiting workers' ability to change jobs and pursue better opportunities, and stifle competition in labor markets. This ultimately harms both workers and consumers. By banning this practice, the FTC estimates that wages could increase by nearly $300 billion per year, and career opportunities could expand for approximately 30 million Americans. Additionally, non-compete clauses hinder innovation and business dynamism, further harming consumers. The proposed rule would promote greater economic liberty and healthy competition, and I urge the FTC to implement it as soon as possible."

Jennifer	"I support elimination of non-compete clauses. For all jobs. As a physician, it is important to prevent doctors who spent years honing their skills from being severely limited in their career options. A friend needed to live in a specific area for family reasons. When their employment at one group became unsupportive and untenable, they had to spend 2 years out of practice to wait out a non compete clause. This is an incredible waste of their skills - skills taxpayers helped to support through education grants from the ACGME. Please ensure the non compete elimination includes physicians. It should be a level playing field where possible. Thank you."
Allen	"Non competes impedes physician ability to work and serve their community and hold physicians hostage. It is bad for patients and the community."
Lucia	"I'm a physician. The AHA does NOT represent the physicians of this country. Nor do they have physicians' best interests in mind when they ask that physicians be excluded from this non-compete clause. Physicians are struggling and trapped by hospital non-compete clauses. It's contributing to physician burnout which is driving large numbers of physicians to leave medicine, worsening the national physician shortage crisis. Please protect the physicians of this country and keep them included in this non-compete clause!"
Megan	"Noncompetes allow employers to mistreat and underpay employees for threat of having to uproot their lives and relocate if choosing a better employment option for themselves. Shame on employers for thinking this practice should continue."
Daniel	" Hi FTC, I am 41 years old, and I am pursuing a doctoral degree in occupational therapy. I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Theresa	"Dear Federal Trade commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all hospital employees, including physicians. As you know, non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses were originally made to protect trade secrets and other confidential information, this is not applicable to the hospital system (outside of patient privacy, of course). Non-competes can be traced back to when former slave owners used them to keep freed slaves working for them and not to go to another owner. (https://www.nelp.org/publication/faq-on-non-compete-agreements/) Furthermore, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non- compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician leaves a job and is prohibited from treating patients

	within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients, which has already been impacted by the pandemic of COVID- 19. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare (which is already a problem in the US) and improve the overall quality of care. Thank you for your attention to this important matter.
Lynna	"Non competes are harmful so banning them would be great. Competition should be encouraged as it causes circumstances to become better for both employees and consumers."
Matthew	"Non-compete clauses are harmful to employees, go against the spirit of free market capitalism, and serve only to enrich large corporations without benefitting their workers. As an American citizen working in the tech sector, where these clauses are common, I fully support a ban on them."
Jennifer	"Please make the proposed order final as non compete clauses in contracts allow employers to exploit their bargaining power to limit opportunities and stifle competition. Workers' earnings can be increased by $300B save Americans $148B in annual health costs, and close racial and gender wage gaps. I am for the ban of non-compete disclosure agreements in employment contracts."
Phillip	"Non-complete agreements encourage monopolistic tendencies and restrict the people's freedom to pursue their own paths. I support the abolishment of such an immoral clause."
Ulderico	"There should be no exceptions for the ban of Non-Compete clauses and devices. It should be a complete ban. If exceptions happen to be necessary, then they have to be hilly compensated. No one should be unable to work and not being compensated for that."
Aleksandras	"As a physician practicing in the United States, non compete agreements are a constant fact of life and have affected my decisions throughout my career. I've been lucky to have worked in a large variety of hospitals and clinics, ranging from FQHCs, critical access hospitals, county Level 1 trauma centers, academic centers, and general community hospitals and surgery centers. Most physicians in our country are under some form of non-compete and it affects our ability to practice in the places where we think we could do most good. It would be fair to say that patient care is constantly affected by non- compete agreements, likely for the worse. Physicians need to be able to move freely to the facilities that allow them to practice at the top of their training and experience. We have a massive

	shortage of physicians and patients in many parts of the US have to travel long distances to access appropriate medical care. The state of non-compete agreements further damages our already incredibly strained healthcare system. Healthcare is a right, not a commodity, and thus should not be subject to the same regulations. I support eliminating non-compete agreements for medical personnel, in particular for physicians."
David	"Dear Federal Trade commission, Thank you for accepting comments on this critical issue. Please continue to stand firm on eliminating the abusive practice of non- compete clauses. I have personally lost of hundreds of thousands of dollars of income I could otherwise have expected due to the harmful (and entirely intentional) effect of them. Non-compete clauses are meant entirely to kill legitimate competition. All they do is help the powerful continue their domination. They have no place in a so-called free market. Thank you for the good work you are doing to level the playing field in this way!"
John	"Non compete clauses should be banned. What's a great way to make sure your employees don't work somewhere else? Pay them better than everywhere else. No one should be locked into a low wage."
Frederick	"I'm a computer networking consultant and have done tech and "white collar" work most of my life. The American economy is based on the concept of capitalism, which is supposed to be based on the notion of competition leading to better work and lower prices. This suggests non-compete clauses should have no place in the U.S. economy -- they do nothing but hold people's careers hostage. So I fully support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. Long overdue! The clauses hold down wages and undermine creativity and innovation. The ban should make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Pamelyn	"I respectfully request that noncompete clauses be removed from medical professional contracts. The goal would be to support and maintain physicians, nurses and mid level providers in their careers of service for the public good. The increasing challenges and stresses associated with for-profit management strategies gravely affect how quality of care and life work balance happens in medical provider jobs, and the extreme conditions of performance under COVID pandemic conditions has only made the above issues worse. Non compete clauses are particularly difficult for medical care providers in smaller towns and rural communities where health care resources are already strained. Not being able to choose an employer in the same area forces provider families to uproot children, disrupts family relationships and impacts ability to repay educational loans due to move-related expenses. For profit companies are making record profits based upon unfair labor market restrictions and noncompete clauses figure meaningfully an imbalance in the formula for medical care provider compensation and financial stability. Thank you."
Alexander	"Non-compete clauses area contributing factor to the "worker shortage" that management all over the U.S. is talking about. Invalidating previous non-compete clauses, as well as preventing new ones will enable employees to build valuable skills, maintain momentum, and continue to contribute economically using the skills they have built up. When employees are prevented from working, they are being removed from the labor pool. I am completely in favor of this proposed rule. If this is implemented, it will have the single largest impact on the American people, the economy, and more broadly - employee freedom in general since the implementation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Tired, skilled, but legally-bound employees all over the U.S. implore you: approve this proposal. You, yes you specifically, the one reading these words right now: by helping to do this, you specifically will help add tens of millions of Americans back into the labor pool, something we desperately need. Thank you for taking the time to read this, whoever you are. This proposal has received millions of eyes around the world, and we are very hopeful to see U.S. law finally changing in a way that may improve the lives of Americans, not just the wealthy."

Howard	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! As a long-time tech worker in the Silicon Valley software industry, I know that California's impressive creativity and additions to our society in all areas of intellectual property and creativity are partially but significantly due to California's ban on non-compete clauses in employment contracts. The high-tech, biotech, and entertainment industries feed off of the constant exchange of personnel and ideas among large, medium, small, and startup companies. It is high time for the entire nation to reap the benefits of eliminating these stifling and anti-competitive contracts."
John	"Non compete clauses hams care by by limiting physicians can practice"
Jim	"I fully support banning non-competes"
Olivia	"Non-compete clauses restrict competition and serve companies over workers. I support banning non-compete clauses and invalidating ones that were previously signed."
Curtis	"Non-compete agreements hurt physicians. Physicians who want to leave a medical group and are limited by a non-compete leave the communities in which they practice, taking their knowledge of and experience with that community with them to practice outside of their restrictions. Allowing this practice to continue limits access to healthcare by forcing physicians to relocate if they are not happy with their employment when staying put and working for someone else down the street would keep them active in giving care where it is needed."
Liz	"What is happening with noncompete clauses in the workplace is that they are being used to cover up abuse and illegal activity. Managers know that they haven't you sign a noncompete that you are less likely to report these behaviors because if you have to leave the company you can't work in your field. And if the United States believes in competition being healthy and a driver of innovation, these clauses should be abolished."

Duncan	"I work in a highly specialized field, literally 4 companies who do the work, if I am not allowed to work for the competition I will be destitute yet my company can fire me at will. How is that a fair exchange of labor?"
Justin	"I support the NPRM. Businesses that include non-compete clauses in employment contracts do so to stifle competition, preventing many employees from working elsewhere with better pay and benefits, or starting small businesses on their own. They can and have been used by vindictive bosses to try to punish workers after they left the company. This becomes especially insidious in industries or local economies where the company's market share approaches monopoly and/or monopsony. With NPRM, most non-compete clauses that are detrimental to competition and a healthy economy will be rescinded. This will remove barriers of changing companies or starting a business to countless Americans, allowing them to learn and try new ideas that were denied by their current or former employers."
Geo	"This is a very important rule to protect workers."
Andrea	"The AHA recently came out against including physicians and other professionals in the rules against non-competes. This is a one sided interest form a group representing hospitals, who have had massive profits at the expense of their patient and employees. hospitals have been running "just in time staffing," and skeleton crews in the name of profit, endangering their patients and burning out their nurses, support staff, and physicians. They have done this purely in the name of increasing profits and bonuses to the executives that do not provide anything toward the application of healthcare. These actions are enabled by non-competes trapping physicians and other professionals from leaving toxic workplaces for workplaces that actually put patient care and employee well being first. The AHA is in favor of non-competes because they stop physicians and other professionals from advocating for themselves. If they are worried about attracting workers, they should have to provide an attractive place to work as all other business have to do."
Philip	"I agree with this proposed rule change. I now live in California where Non-Compete clauses are generally not allowed. This works fine for both businesses and employees here in California the most populous state in the nation. I had previously lived in Massachusetts where Non-Compete clauses were allowed at the time and found them to be very restrictive in my industry. Employers can and will use them as a fear tactic to keep workers from leaving."
Timothy	"I urge the FCC to do everything in their power to force companies to cease employees non-compete agreements. It is a practice that borders on indentured servitude!"
Stephen	"I strongly support the FTC's proposed ban on noncompete agreements. My name is Stephen Cutie; I'm a PhD Bioengineer & former CCST science fellow in the California State Senate, born & raised in Miami, FL. Noncompete contracts are predatory employment practices that border on indentured servitude — they should be banned nationwide, as they already are among lawyers."

Michael	"The proposed rule sounds like a wonderful idea and an important step toward increasing economic justice."
Lindsay	"Please ban the use of noncompete clauses in future employment contracts and void such clauses in existing contracts. Thank you."
Lauren	"As a physician that wants to practice in a rural community this type of non-compete practice limits our ability to serve the towns we have built relationships with for good patient care. Please end this draconian rule of non-compete."
Austin	"Please ban non-compete clauses. Workers in general lack the sophistication to appreciate the gravity of non-competes. If they do understand their potential impact, they lack bargaining power to negotiate the terms. The cumulative effect of non-competes hampers innovation, contributes to the decline of the middle class, and effectuates a type of servitude for which this Nation long ago amended our Constitution to proscribe. My wife was a ballroom dance teacher for a studio that required a non-compete agreement as a condition of employment. After taking time off of work to have children, she wanted to return to work but needed flexibility due to childcare constraints. Her studio would not accommodate her schedule and the non-compete prevented her from teaching dance independently. She never worked again. Who knows what kind of business she could have started, who she would have impacted, and how her economic life would have unfolded had she been able to return to the workforce after having children. If a total ban is politically untenable, an effective compromise could be to ban all non-compete agreements for jobs with total annual compensation under $100,000 per year. Thank you."
Andrew	"Physicians have been raising concerns about noncompete agreements in the healthcare field for years, which can prevent them from leaving their jobs without fear of retribution or the inability to provide for themselves and their families. This can lead to a physician shortage, as many physicians are leaving the field due to frustration and burnout. Large hospital systems often require noncompete clauses that can force physicians to leave the geographic area in which they practice, eliminating market forces that would lead to better systems that served clinicians and patients. Noncompete clauses can also hold physicians hostage at unfavorable working conditions for decades, while employers evade market forces that would necessitate change. While it is hard to argue that a single physician leaving a large hospital system would significantly threaten the hospital system's business model, it is quite true that a single physician employed by a small independent physician practice could significantly hurt that independent practice. Therefore, if a carveout in the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) proposal is created in healthcare, it should be for independent practices, not for 'not for profit' healthcare systems, and be aimed at keeping independent physician practices viable. Many lawyers have stated that the FTC proposal would not apply to nonprofit organizations. Given that the majority of the hospital

	systems in the country are classified as nonprofit in name despite the business model being the same as other healthcare entities, this would actively give nonprofit hospital systems an unfair advantage over independent physician practices and for-profit health systems. Therefore, noncompete clauses should be eliminated for both not for profit and for-profit hospital systems. Ultimately, noncompete clauses at large healthcare employers are detrimental to our nation's long-term ability to maintain access to quality care, and should be outlawed. Physicians should be able to speak out about issues or leave their jobs without fear of retribution or the inability to provide for themselves and their families"
Timothy	"Non-compete clauses in medicine are absolutely hurting competition and patient care across the industry. Hospitals can pay less money to residents who can't leave for better jobs. And let's face it, these big hospital chains are run by accountants, not people who are focused on patient care any more than to use patient care as a marketing tool. Hospitals don't benefit medical professionals. Hospitals benefit their shareholders (non-profit or not - "non-profits" still pay their board members and CEO huge paychecks). Health care professionals need to be able to be free to speak out and be truthful and not fear being blacklisted from the market place. Making an employee sign a non-compete agreement that bars them from working within a large distance and making that non-compete clause effective even upon being fired or terminated effectively is a hammer to stop free speech. On the other hand we also have laws that don't make health care discipline records transparent to the public and future employers. That's dangerous also. So we need a package deal where medical professionals need to comply with the standard of care AND they are free to go to another employer for better wages or working conditions which also improves patient care. It's dangerous to underpay a medical professional AND expect them to perform to tough standards of care. The employers in health care are NOT providing training that is a trade secret. The training employers in health care are providing is required by laws to make employees meet or exceed the Standard of Care. Employers can't say, "You, employee, owe us because we're showing you how to treat patients properly." All patients have the right to expect that their medical professionals are able to provide appropriate care within the Standards that are expected in the community and legally."
Jamila	"The people of the U.S. need this to happen."
Sylvia	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovations, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth. No ex-employer should have that kind of hold on a worker to move on in the labor market."
Eric	"I am in support of this rule. I also wonder if this rule would apply to employers that prevent workers from doing similar types of work concurrently. As an example, I work as a doctor in a state hospital, and am barred from doing any clinical work with any other employer by my contract. This caps my income, prevents me from maximizing my productivity, and prevents me from providing clinical care outside of my normal work hours to other hospitals in need in my area. These sorts of employer rules are arcane and limit workers unnecessarily."

S	"I'm not an economist but I strongly suspect non-compete agreements result in less efficient markets, which in the long term would be a contributing factor to a less prosperous society. Assuming it's constitutional, I'd like to see this law pass."
Greg	"Ban non-compete Clause rule for most workers. The only workers that should have a non-compete clause in their contract are those workers who have trade secrets."
Jennifer	"The non-compete clause rule is an unfair way for employers to gain control over the workforce. It should not be allowed. Any existing non-compete clauses that are currently in use should be immediately invalidated. I once signed an employment contract with a non-compete clause. Fortunately when I left that job, it wasn't enforced, but it caused me a lot of stress because it was not fair to me. These clauses should not be allowed in 99% of all employment contracts. Today they are widespread in fields where it makes no sense, but is just a way for employers to keep wages low and prevent employees from moving to a different job."
Ariana	"Physicians are already at a disadvantage in the business of medicine. Non compete clauses are unethical and continue to give the upper hand to corporations. Individual physicians went into medicine to help people and now the hospitals and corporations are profiting from wage suppression and unhealthy working conditions for physicians. Physician burnout is at an all time high, in part due to lack of autonomy and ability leave toxic work environments. We cannot leave a toxic workplace without uprooting our family and support systems due to non compete clauses, if physicians are excluded from the FTC ruling, we will continue to see a physician shortage, continuing burnout and continued loss of life from physician suicide. Please consider physicians as a class of workers work protecting from predatory hiring practices."
Ann	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! I spent over 40 years working for the USDA Forest Service after spending 3 years in the private sector.in the late '70's, I never encountered a non-compete clause and think no one should ever have to! Good luck moving forward with your proposed ban. Thank you for considering my comment."
Nick	"Having Non-competes banned at the state level is key to Silicon Valley innovation; engineers are free to flow between companies. This is very good for workers!"
Matthew	"Non competes are used to bully and threaten workers from earning a living, even when they're usually not actually enforceable. Companies know this, but still try to force employees to sign them as a scare tactic. In other words, they area tool of oppression. The citizens of this country need protection from this evil. End the legality of non competes."

Sara	"I completely support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people. I have been lucky to only practice in the states that do not allow non-competes. I personally witnessed how disruptive they are both to patient care and the physician's well-being, and the ability to practice in a manner that they wish."
Daniel	"It is well-established that California's very old prohibition against non-competes has contributed significantly to our innovative industrial culture, and monopolization (which is supported by non-competes) is just there to increase concentration of wealth. Please proceed to outlaw such behavior. Thanks."
Natalie	"I strongly agree with and urge the Federal Trade Commission to adopt the new rule banning the use of non-compete clauses in employment contracts. I have worked in the financial services industry as a rank-and-file employee for over 30 years, primarily for large U.S. banks. Throughout my career, I have experienced the unilateral nature of employment contracts in which employers hold the vast majority of the power and routinely mandate that employees sign such contracts that contain non-compete clauses. At the same time, these employers are well aware that employees in our industry, specialize and will most likely continue to work in the same industry, often for our entire careers. Often for employees like me, the only way we can significantly improve our career opportunities and compensation, is by getting a new job at a higher salary and grade level with a competitor in the industry. Banning employees from working for a competitor is unfair, deceptive and causes harm to employees like me because essentially, we are forced to either: 1) choose to put up with compensation that lags inflation and the cost of living the longer we stay with a current employer (note: employers frequently give minimal, annual compensation increases to longstanding employees, who they consider "captive", but generally only reward new hires with the highest, most generous compensation to get them signed, hired and in the door), or 2) have no livelihood / no earnings because we are forced to comply with an employer's non-compete clause if we leave a job in the industry. Non-compete clauses, if they are allowed to continue to exist at all, should be restricted to the highest paid executives in a company such as a president, chairman and other "C-suite" executives. Routine use of non-compete clauses in employment contracts should be banned from all other employment contracts for all other employees in the U.S. C-suite employees and other senior executives, generally have very generous, custom employment contracts that give them lucrative annual compensation as well as "golden parachutes" if they leave, often receive multi-million dollar annual bonuses plus stock options, in addition to many other perks (housing, limousine service with driver, and access to private jets for travel, and much more). However, the vast majority of American workers like me have to work continuously our entire lives. We can't afford to be without a

	paying job. All employees should have free will to pursue a job at any employer that they wish, including to be able to improve the employees' standard of living. It's time to institute a national ban on non-compete clauses in employment contracts, similar to the state laws such as in California, that ban such non-compete clauses from employment contracts as illegal and unenforceable here. All American workers should be afforded similar protections nationwide. Thank you for taking action to protect American workers."
Neha	"I think it's a great idea to get rid of non-compete clauses. These types of clauses only serve to make it more difficult for skilled professionals to get fair pay for their work without uprooting their entire lives."
Ryan	"Dear FTC Commissioners, Please put an end, once and for all, to the Non-Compete Clause Rule, for the good of the country and employees everywhere."
Rena	"I am in favor of limiting the ability to add noncompete clauses for low-level workers. This harmful contract agreement makes it difficult for workers like hairdressers and dance teachers to find new jobs. Please eliminate this burden on people who want to work and have agency in their future."
Elizabeth	"In general I am against non-compete employment clauses. I can understand the use of a non-compete in areas related to trade secrets or in the area involving investment into highly specialized training that would take time to recoup training costs but these cases should be few and narrow in their scope. Limiting an employee's ability to work when and where they want puts way too much power in the employers hands and that power shift is not healthy or fair in a world that's already stacked against the working class."
Sabrina	"I highly support removing non compete language from employer contracts. As a single mom to three children, my income is pertinent to their education and survival. I just received a reduction in hours. I was reminded to honor the non complete clause. It is absurd I am expected to deliver the same results in less hours and not have the flexibility with my working hours to take on additional income to substitute the loss. I should never be denied the right to earn a living to provide for my family. I have spent years building knowledge and a credible reputation in my field of expertise. That's hard work needs to be honored and appreciated, not hindered or ignored."
Alicia Butcher	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 Non-compete clauses are NECESSARY for very few jobs of highly skilled and limited occupations; putting them into ordinary employment contracts is limiting the ability of workers to find jobs and change employers. It is UNAMERICAN to limit workers and job choices in this draconian way. They should, instead, have to be very well documented and reserved for very few limited jobs. Data can be obtained from any legal proceedings that tried to enforce these clauses after workers left a job, and whether the workers or the companies were successful in the suits."

Wayland	"Non compete clauses hurt the worker and the economy. They only function to protect the companies from competition which reduces the pressure to improve products, working conditions, and long term company viability."
Kate	"Non-competes are harmful to the economy, innovation and the workforce. I support the agency's efforts to make predatory non-competes void and unenforceable."
Hollie	"I believe that people will frequent and support the teacher as opposed to the studio. I agree wholeheartedly with a new law to take away noncompete contracts."
Marcy	"I strongly support this new rule barring noncompetes. This is a long past due reform. As a resident of California, I can attest that banning enforcement of noncompetes does not have a negative effect on the economy and allows for more worker mobility and advancement. Permitting companies to stop nurses and other essential workers from performing the job they spent years and thousands of dollars being trained and certified for actually endangers public health and our economy and leaves our country less prepared to deal with emergencies and crises. Please vote "yes" on this rule. Thank you."
Nicholas	"Non-competes harm physicians. We already move so frequently for training and non-competes hampers many specialists where jobs are hard to find and localized in metro areas due to level of care required. Many times changing jobs requires uprooting family and relocating to entire different places due to these non-competes trapping you between a less than ideal job or having to leave your hometown. This limits competition and can worsen physician burnout, satisfaction and ultimately patient care."
Sayeed	"The non-compete clause is unfair to employees. When organizations are allowed to buy their competitors to eliminate competition threat then how come, employees, are not permitted to join a competing firm?"
David	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements, I worked for years in Silicon Valley and every company I worked for required me to sign a non-compete agreement as part of my employment contract, This was standard language that had been prepared by the corporate legal staff. As an individual employee I did not have the resources to hire a lawyer or negotiate this language. The choice was either sign the contract or not take the job, because the next candidate would sign it. All the power was in favor of the corporations and gave an unnecessary amount of control to the hiring corporation over my ability to change jobs or start my own business in competition with these companies. This certainly does not improve an individual's chances to get ahead or move to a competitor for a higher salary. How can that be good for America's economy? Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."

James	"My former employer in California, Precious Metals Refinery, forces all of the employees in California to sign a non-Compete contract and bullies them with it. I finally realized after large scale wage theft from PMR and contacting an employment lawyer to find out what my rights are, I could have left years ago and not been subject to several illegal actions from this employer. I have a formal complaint into the California Labor Board, but this new law would have saved me years of stress, entrapment and intimidation by my fonner employer. I cannot get those years back. Please Pass this regulation."
David	"This is a good start. The entire idea that a giant multinational corporation and an employee are somehow on such footing that any contract could be negotiated between them is ludicrous, and we must dismantle it."
Rod	"Non compete clauses are antithetical to smart public policy, they ruin people's lives, and they are anti competitive in our so-called free market economy. They are largely not allowed in California and companies do just fine. Those who say they're necessary are fear mongering. I strongly support this proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule."
Cat	"Companies need to be responsible about retaining top talent. Forcing somebody into a noncompete is just saying that they can't live up to being a good company to work for. Company private intbrination fine keep that secret but if somebody can get a better job somewhere else and some thing else is willing to pay more for them than they should be able to do that."
Kimberly	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. As a physician I have directly felt their impact and saw how it impacted the patients I was no longer able to serve since I had to leave the community in order to leave my job. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people. I have personally been impacted by a noncompete clause and it led to burnout and me wanting to leave medicine altogether. The current rules do not favor physicians and patients. It is corporate bullying. Physicians cannot accrue 200,000 plus dollars in debt and be held to some crazy medical legal liability and then be treated like janitors by corporate healthcare companies."
John	"This rule should be put in place in it's absolute full force. I have been working in the mortgage industry for 25 years. I have Watched company after company use noncompete contracts to hold loan officers branch managers and other employees hostage year after year. One of the biggest tactics used by mortgage companies is to tie loan officers and managers up in lawsuits if they choose to leave and other employees decide to join them at their new company. All employees at all levels should have the right to choose where and who they wish to work with, period."

David	"The heart of American capitalism is a simple idea: open and fair competition that means that if companies want to win our business, they have to go out and they have to up their game; better prices and services; new ideas and products. That competition keeps the economy moving and keeps it growing. Fair competition is why capitalism has been the world's greatest force for prosperity and growth. By the same token, "competitive economy" means companies must do everything possible to compete for workers: offering higher wages, more flexible hours, better benefits. Employers use noncompete clauses to depress wages and lock in workers for no good reason. It's estimated that at least 30 million workers in the U.S. are subject to noncompete clauses that restrict their ability to move to a competing employer or start a competing business. Workers are unable to leverage a better job offer into higher wages. If the FTC estimates are correct, and that a ban on noncompetes would increase earnings over $250 billion annually, then it is absolutely imperative that FTC ban non-competes nationwide immediatly."
Nancy	"It is important to end non-complete clauses in their entirety, and return any and all burden of proof to enforce only truly top secret trade secrets to the employer who can prove their exclusivity claims. But otherwise, non-compete clauses will continue to be used by all employers to intimidate and harass against vulnerable employees, including as is cunently happening, against the most vulnerable and low-paid workers who are too afraid and know they can't afford legal counsel to fight an employer's threats so they just stay and stagnate their earning potential - and this in turn leads to widespread salary stagnation for all workers. I have been confronted by non-competes threats twice, with the first time when I was very young and still in college working to pay my way through school and I found it very scary to be bullied and in effect threatened by an employer. And had I not been in college and known a little more and been desperate to make more money to stay in college, I might have stayed at that job out of fear of his threats of retaliation if I left. At this point it's unconscionable to have any non-competes that an employer can claim they are entitled to use against employees who are merely trying to make a living - this gives employers/mangers too much discretion and they wield it as a blunt threat against any employee in all industries (even fast food industries!). Please end the use of all non-competes and if an employer believes they have been in fact harmed by a former employee, they should spend the money to prove it and have a deterrence against making false claims against employees who usually have much less money to protect themselves against employers' desire to suppress wages and control the workforce, so we will remain more vulnerable than we already are."
marilynn	"it is essential that we do away with having to sign a noncompete agreement when taking a job--non-compete agreements interfere with free enterprise-- they allow the employer an unfair advantage --because of noncompete agreements, employees feel bound to continue in jobs that are oppressive- -the agreements diminish the freedom and the rights of employees"

Jameson	"DO NOT exclude physicians. If it's inappropriate for other professions, it's inappropriate for physicians."
Jeremy	"I think this is a smart change. Workers should be granted full freedom to find and take a new position, regardless of the employer. The current restriction is uncompetitive"
William	"I support banning noncompete clauses. The company I work for recently had a competitor fire roughly 200 employees. Most were under non-compete so were out of luck for a job. Our competitor didn't want them, we did, but yet we couldn't hire them. That's ridiculous."
David	"I write to support the proposed rule making Currently, employers have little incentive to match market rates for employees while they remain in their current position. There are significant upsides to switching jobs [1]. Enforcing that employees are not able to switch suppresses wages and reduces the competition to ensure that the best talent is able to command their actual market rate. While my state of California bans non-compete clauses, contracts from other states are enforceable. I have seen colleagues with deep expertise and years of education be forced to work on unrelated projects at a medical device company, reducing the competition in the market place to bring AI-driven technologies to the market; a clear detrimental impact on interstate commerce. California companies have also shown that NDAs and other mechanisms to protect intellectual property are sufficient. All employers that I have interviewed with have extremely clear policies of potential or current employees never being asked to provide, nor freely providing IP covered by such an agreement. The market has factored in the cost of IP disputes and found theft not worth it. If an employer is providing valuable training to an employee, they are also still able to oblige the employee to return the value of the training if they leave prior to a certain date. This, as with retention bonuses, clearly defines the market value to the employer for the employee to stay. Henry	"The FTC should be applauded for implementing this rule, which will create procedural certainty in the country. The states of California, North Dakota, and Oklahoma ban non-compete agreements. This would also ban the boilerplate language often placed in employment agreements but not enforceable in the above states from being used to cloud the rights of people that work in these states. For items which are unique to a particular employer, the provisions in the regulation allowing non disclosure agreements or bars on soliciting former clients should be sufficient. As a worker I strongly support this regulation. I would like the same rights as Californians have to propagate throughout the nation."
Graham	"These non-compete clauses are terrible for workers, and should be banned. I live in California, which fortunately does not allow them, and our employers are not significantly harmed by not having them. Our markets work just fine without non-competes. They should be disallowed throughout the United States, so our workers can have long-term careers and freedom to get the best rate for their services. That's how it's supposed to work."

Sherrill	"Non-compete clauses are in restraint of trade, oppress workers and unions, and prevent creativity in industry. Strengthen our nation! Adopt this policy! Thank you!"
Chrs	"I am in favor of the Non-Complete Clause Rule moving forward. As a tax payer, I feel this rule represents the direction this country should be moving towards. Employers should not have the ability to request that non-complete clauses be included as a condition of employment under any circumstances."
Saurabh	"Support eradicating non-competes. They're destructive for free market and to individuals"
M.	"When there are rules that prevent workers from leaving one company and joining another within the same industry to increase their wages and quality, it is an unfair practice and effects lower income employees more than others. It definitely needs to be resinded! I personally know someone who was recently laid off from their employer and had to sign a non-compete to receive his severance. It prevents him from employment with competitors of his previous company."
Joseph	"I agree with the proposal to do away with non-competes. They keep wages and can make it difficult for a worker to change jobs (without moving out of the are) if a better opportunity comes along."
Brian	"Non compete clauses do nothing to help the employee who may want to start their own business and do a better job at it than their employer. Laws such as these unfairly favor large corporate entities which in turn raises prices all around. In medicine we are facing higher and higher costs due to smaller practices being eaten up by large hospital systems. This is bad for patients, bad for the economy, and bad for the country."
Brian	"In California, the world's 4th largest economy, and bellwether state, they do not enforce do not competes. In terms of healthcare, physicians and physician-run clinics provide CRITICAL ACCESS and hospitals trying to box them out creates hegemony, limits access, and raises prices. DO AWAY WITH NONCOMPETES AND STOP GIVING THE HOSPITALS A PASS and keeping costs high!"
Roberto	"Non-compete agreements are terrible, unfair, go against the most basic principles of personal freedom and free market. They allow companies with big lawyers to go after former employees that simply want to move on with their careers, they are a big obstacle to innovation, it's not a coincidence that the most innovative place in America is the Silicon Valley where these practices are basically illegal. Please ban this travesty which is the typical example of how big businesses rig the game in their favor while claiming they're for free market"

Megan	"I am writing on behalf of my sister in law. She is an underpaid worker who has done every job available to her from security to school bus aide. If this law is not passed there would be fewer protections for her than there already are. We see employer after employer take advantage of her and due to a genetic learning disability she has few resources to fight back in unfair situations. Giving her some protection through this law is better than what she has available to her now ."
Morgan	"Hello, I am writing to support elimination of non-compete clauses in employment agreements. I've lived in states that allow them, and in states that do not. I have also worked for multiple organizations that have used them. And, have at various times been a hiring manager that has had to deal with the repercussions of trying to hire others concerned about non-competes. What I've observed is that non-competes definitely harm the individual, but have little to no impact upon "protecting a companies IP". Rather, all they do is limit an employees ability to change jobs. I currently live in California. It has one of the most vibrant economies in the world. It bans non-competes. There are already various mechanisms to protect intellectual property (including non-recruiting clauses). Please vote in favor of eliminating non-competes. I have no doubt about that corporate America will lobby hard against this. But it is lobbying against because it knows it keeps its labor costs down, not because it protects IP/corporate secrets."
Glenn	"I support banning non-compete clauses! They are unfair, un-American and cruel. Please DO put an end to this ruthless business-over-people practice."
Kathy	"NPRM was successful in Silicon Valley. This would be a good thing for workers and the US economy."
Chris	"As a retired IT consultant I urge you to ban non-compete agreements or clauses in employment contracts. Constraints like these echo the early days of our country when indentured servitude and even slavery were common. The labor movement and federal regulations have freed workers from excessive employer control. There is no reason to reverse course. Personal autonomy should have more weight than corporate profits."
Wayne	"I am in favour of the ban on non-compete clause rule. Competition in the workplace ensures workers (employees, contractors, specialists, etc.) are fairly compensated for the duties they provide. Non-compete regulations can have a large impact on any industry as this can slow competition, slow industry service provider growth, and stall innovation. No employer should have the power to stop an individual from bettering themselves, or blocking fair competition in industry as a whole."
Robert	"I fully support the FTC's proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses for workers and to roll back previously signed non-compete agreements. Not only is this unfair to workers, particularly lower-paid workers, but it is a drain on the U.S. economy because it slows down the ability of workers to change jobs, make more money, and fully participate in the economy."

AG	"This is long overdue. The non-compete clause has to go. Thank you."
Michael	"The AHA is trying to obtain an exemption to new regulations that would specifically exempt physicians from the ban on noncompete clauses. There is no reason why noncompete clauses should apply to physicians. There is nothing proprietary about the work we do. Noncompete clauses should only be permitted if the physician will be paid at full salary for the duration of the noncompete. Otherwise, these clauses exist only to intimidate physicians and remove our ability to negotiate contracts. We served our country through the pandemic. Don't let hospitals abuse us with noncompete clauses."
Stuart	"I am a professional software engineer with 15 years of experience, working on self-driving cars. California is the center of innovation in the US and the world, in part because it has banned non-competes. It's time to help the rest of the country catch up, by banning non-competes everywhere."
Sheila	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements."
Casie	"I support the abolition of non-compete clauses."
Justin	"Physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule. They should not be exempt from this needed worker protection as it greatly limits their ability to negotiate their contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over physicians in the marketplace. There is a large increase in physician burnout and allowing the market place to be more free would allow physicians more freedom and flexibility. Additionally, the last time an exemption of this nature was granted by the lobbying from the American Hospital Association (Jung v AAMC 2004) resulted in decades of delay for improving resident physicians' ability for fair wages and benefits; this is still an active struggle today. Please do not make the same mistake again for physicians of today and the future."
Alex	"I'm strongly in favor of this rule broadly as written"
Kent	"In 2021 I accepted a full-time job at a large company in another state. The position was fully remote, which I intended to work at from my home state of California. The employment contract I was offered had an 18-month non-compete clause which was legal in that state, but not in California. I questioned this, but lacking sufficient time to decide and money/knowledge to consult with an employment lawyer, I accepted the position anyway...hoping that if I left my job one of the following would apply: - My employer would decline to press the non-compete clause against me, or would only enforce it narrowly similar to NDA-type - My residency and working physically in the state of California (where I also pay state income tax!) would effectively supersede to allow me to work for other

	employers. - The fact that short of actively and maliciously copying and sharing internal privileged company information, ifs extremely unlikely I could plausibly "compete" with my current employer at another employer (I barely understand the proprietary systems I work with!) - That any or all of the above factors would prevent an expensive, difficult, and distressing legal fight. Even if, optimistically, all of what I've said here is correct...the Non-Compete Clause has explicitly caused me harm. I have PTSD and am a survivor of abuse, and one classic abuse tactic is for the abuser to attempt to control their target for as long as possible. I have great anxiety and fear that, despite no ill will, intent, possibly even ability to harm my employer by working for a new company...that my employer would still have the power to impair my ability to survive, hundreds of miles away and for no other reason then they can and I lack the resources to protect myself. I'm not opposed to employers taking reasonable precautions regarding their NDAs and proprietary IP. Or, if they want to keep me on their payroll for 18 months after I leave but aren't working for them...I wouldn't like that as much as having my free choice, but it'd be more justifiable than: "you're not working here, we're not paying you, but also we still control you!" I even have anxiety over whether my employer could find out I wrote this, and retaliate against me for doing so. I know such action wouldn't be legal, and I'm not sure how likely it is, but it's still scary because if it did happen I again lack the resources / knowledge to defend myself. Even so, I've chosen to sign this with my real name because this issue is important enough to me to take that risk. Even such personal consequences would be a small price to pay, to Inc. to remove the burden of non-compete clauses. (And at least I could try to find a replacement job immediately, instead of in a year and a half!) Thank you so much for taking up this critical issue, you are working to make the country fairer and more reasonable, and I hope you don't underestimate the positive effect your ruling could have not only on workers currently under non-compete clauses...but for millions of future workers whom might suffer similar fides and uncertainty without your intervention!"
Andrew	"I support abolishing non-compete clauses, as they significantly detriment the worker's ability to capitalize their labor. Businesses should profit from the organization and efficient combination of capital with labor, not by hobbling individuals and their ability to seek gainful employment leveraging their established skills."
Caroline	"Please end the practice of allowing non-compete clauses for everyday jobs. It is crippling for people who are often only just getting by to begin with. A friend of mine - in her 60s - has had to move 100 miles from town because she was not allowed to work as a home-health aide by her former employer. she is only just getting by to begin with and this forced move has been financially and emotionally devastating for her. Thank you."
Andrew	"Non-complete clauses are obviously bad. Competition is vital to our economy, and these clauses unfairly limit workers ability to change jobs. They should be illegal."

David	"I work for an IT company low-level employee just above minimum wage and I had to sign one of these to get the job even though I don't know any knowledge above what someone could learn in 10 or 15 hours on YouTube yet I still had a sign this which makes it so I can't compete for competitive if they offered me better pay. A non-compete agreement is extra rules on the free market that do not favor the employee"
Paige	"I fully support the proposed rule to ban non-compete agreements, which not only trap workers and prevent them from seeking better working conditions but also stifle innovation and entrepreneurship. California's ban on such agreements has not negatively affected its economy; on the contrary, the state's economy is the fifth largest in the world (by GDP). A healthy capitalist economy is dependent upon competition, not monopolization. The proposed rule will encourage such competition and innovation."
Mrinali	"A ban on noncompetes is much needed. Hospitals should not receive an exception. I live in a state where noncompetes are forbidden including for physicians and by hospital employers and there is NO shortage of doctors. Elsewhere- noncompetes have stifled competition and forced physicians to move away, which is detrimental to continuity of care."
Suresh	"Good move and that will open up many opportunities to employees/workers with better pay and open up the doors for lot of innovation. A big relief to employees and this should be implemented soon. A big thank you!"
liliana	"I agree with banning non-compete agreements."
Carl	"Please eliminate the "Non-Compete Clause Rule." Thousands of low pay workers are being forced into ridiculous work commute situations that not only interfere with them making a living, but put tremendous strain on their lives and that of their families. This has got to stop! Please do the right thing for American! workers!@"
Jake	"I fully support the removal of non-compete clauses. As a software engineer, these clauses have regularly prevented competition and innovation while promoting the growth of monopolistic corporations which further inhibit innovation and an otherwise healthy market. Businesses should have to compete on a level playing field for both customers and talent. It is inherently anti-worker to prevent someone from changing jobs or starting their own business. It is anti-consumer to dramatically limit the capabilities of businesses due to an artificially small hiring pool. To promote a healthy, competitive market these non-compete clauses should not be allowed. As their name implies, they are anti-competition."
David	"Please end non competes. Workers are tied to lesser opportunities."
Karen	"I am in full support of removing non-compete agreements. They stifle competition and stop the free market from working as intended."

Ramy	"Non competes are simply inappropriate scare tactics. Legally unenforceable, they create drawn out legal battles that favor large conglomerates until they are examine under the weight of the law- after which they are found severely lacking in fairness and standing ..."
Barbara	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Kathleen	"I support the elimination of Non-Compete Clause Rules. Corporations benefit from their Employees contributions and have ROI on the onboarding costs in the work products of their employees. Employed AT THE WILL of the corporation, Employees should have equal WILL to Terminate that Employment, and remove to a new Employer, unencumbered . Is this not "the American Way??" I understand the issues around Competition but we have OTHER LAWS of Privacy and Non-Disclosure that more properly govern matters of ethical behavior in these areas. Unethical behaviors are the only possible rationale for Non-Compete Clause Rules - - and this is an insufficient basis for these dubious "legal" contracts - - -"
A T	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth. Workers should not be limited to take their employment to another or better job. If employers can lay someone off for any reason, then employees should have the option to leave and take any another job somewhere else."
Julio	"Non compete agreements hurt physicians and communities. Since large hospital own the majority of medical practices in an area, after working for them, a physician may have to leave the community to be able to find employment. After doing residency in NY, I had my first job in California and I was happy to know that non-compete clauses are not allowed. If the working conditions were not to be safe, I could go to another employer and, since I'm proud of the quality of care I deliver and of my work ethic, my patients (and the continuity of care by their family physician) will likely follow me."
Timothy	"I fully support the FTC's proposed rule to ban non-compete covenant clauses in employment contracts. I live in California, where such covenants have been banned for decades, and my state provides a good example of the lack of economic justification for such clauses: we have a dynamic economy, high wages, ample job mobility, and highly profitable, very large corporations all at the same time. Many employees bring substantial experience and education to their jobs, and it is a serious constraint on their freedom and earning potential to hamper their future employment in their fields of expertise in exchange for a paycheck. There is ample evidence that such non-compete covenants do suppress in-industry job moves and also wages (e.g. https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/Jors.12305). Non-compete covenants for those workers are like an overbroad prior restraint on the off- chance that an

	employee will steal company secrets and leave to use them in competition against the former employer. However, we have civil courts that can deal with those cases effectively after the fact. And the situation is even worse for entry level! low skill workers: often their jobs are highly structured with little space for employee-led innovation: non-compete covenants seem to only exist to protect poor management, hamper job mobility and therefore suppress wage growth. I would like to thank the FTC for proposing this rule that will surely both increase wages and the dynamism (and future profitability!) of the US economy."
Leonard	"Please do not exempt physicians from the non-compete clause. We go into high levels of debt during medical school and undergo multiple years of residency training with severely reduced pay during which debt accrues. As physicians are increasingly becoming employees in a hospital system, reducing job mobility severely damages our ability to pay off debt and takes advantage of us during our early career. Including us in a non compete clause will be beneficial for the American public; increasing physician hospital job mobility will help to retain physicians in the field of medicine and reduce physicians taking jobs in other sectors or retiring early."
Ron	"I am in favor of banning all non-compete clauses. I am currently a Partner in a big4 accounting firm. They mandate retirement at 60 and then also impose non-compete clauses. If you have been a career consultant, this severely limits your opportunity to gain additional employment. The non compete is very unfair in this case and should be banned. To be honest mandating retirement at 60 is also discriminatory. The big4 accounting firms want it both ways, they want to push out senior partners but then also limit them on gaining future employment."
Andrew	"I support the proposal to ban the use of non-competes for all the reasons cited in the proposal. Their usage has gone far beyond what is needed to allow businesses to profit from their investments and instead are deployed to unfairly stifle competition at the expense of the employee."
Melissa	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Michael	"I support the adoption of the non-compete clause rule. I perform highly specialized work in a large and lucrative industry with only a few major players. Not only do non-compete clauses stifle competition but they contribute to an atmosphere of fear among those subject to them. In my industry, one way the effects of non-compete clauses manifest is through a chilling of innovation. Additionally, the effects of non-compete clauses on worker's daily lives should they choose to leave an employer and become subject to them can be deeply disruptive. This results in reluctance to advocate for better treatment, reluctance to speak up when issues arise in the business, and a watering down of the talent pool as the best talent looks to other industries where non-compete clauses are not used. Non-compete clauses are bad for businesses and bad for talent. If a firm hasn't been managed well enough to handle competition, it should feel the effects of the market rather than artificially stifle a whole industry. Thank you."

Martin	"Non-Compete Clauses are inherently unfair to workers, so I wholeheartedly agree the FTC should ban them! It is unfair to allow these mechanisms, available only to the big and powerful, to cause so much hann to workers. I support the FTC's ban on Non-Compete Clauses!"
Martin	"End Non-Compete Clauses/arrangements! They only serve to shield the rich and powerful from the hard work or ordinary people. Stop all Non-Compete Clauses now!"
Kevin	"Ban noncompetes. This is an unfair practice that only exists to suppress wages, and is antithetical to the free market we value. Noncompete clauses force employees to either accept worse pay and conditions, or to uproot their families or endure longer commutes. Employees may suffer consequences from noncompetes even when they like their job- for example, if a medical group contracts with a hospital to provide physician staffing, but the physicians are bound by a noncompete clause, then the physicians may be forced to move to a different city if the hospital switches its staffing contract to a different medical group, negotiations which are outside of the individual employee's control. Let's value the broad impact these clauses have on individuals over the modest wage savings that they provide employers."
Donna	"I am writing to support the Non-Compete Clause Rule that would "ban employers from imposing noncompetes on their workers." I knew this was a practice applied to tech workers, for instance, who were privy to trade secrets, but until reading the New York Times piece, "The Great American Labor Trap, I was completely unaware of the prevalence of the practice throughout the labor market. After reading the information provided in the opinion piece and "FTC Proposes Rule to Ban Noncompete Clauses, Which Hurt Workers and Harm Competition," as well as thinking about my own lived experience and common sense, I fmd the practice abhorrent, cruel and costly. It clearly harms workers' ability to fmd steady work an accessible distance from their homes, results in lost wages, and most likely an increased reliance on goverrunent support Banning this practice will help workers fmd jobs in their fields, decrease their commute times and costs, likely lower child care costs, support employers paying higher wages, increase healthy competition among employers for good workers, and reduce worker stress. Disallowing noncompete clauses can result in more humane and more sensible business. Please adopt (and help enforce) the Non-Compete Clause Rule."
Ann	"I am absolutely against noncompetes. No one has the right to limit who I work for as a self-employed person. Nondisclosure of intellectual property agreements I think are fair if employers want to keep a trade secret or information about a specific project under wraps - I would not share that information. But noncompete? No way. I'm a worker for hire, not a permanent indentured servant."

Brianca	"I don't believe employers should be involved in our personal life, including where I work. I think we should get rid of non-compete agreements."
Janine	"Yes, please get rid of this. It's ridiculous to restrict physicians as to where they can practice especially when there is a shortage of doctors!!"
Christina	"Non-compete clauses have the power to subjugate entire industries of workers. These workers are not just numbers or profit machines, they are integral and should be able to have freedom over their own lives."
Matthew	"The FTC's proposed NPRM is welcomed but it does not go far enough; non-compete clauses should be banned without any exceptions whatsoever. There should be no doubt that such a contractual term is null and void and cannot ever be enforced for any reason. These contracts hold back innovation, reduce tax revenues, and undermine our ability to compete on equal footing in a world economy increasingly dominated by China. Competition is what creates vibrant products, technical innovation, and serves the national interest. Competition and associated profit motive is the spirit that drives the American economy. Why would we ever allow incumbent monopolists the power to engage in rent seeking behaviors that constrain wages, reduce innovation, and undermine American competitiveness to such an extent? There is a reason California leads the world in technical innovation despite its high taxes and expensive cost of living: among many other things, it simply bans non-competes as a matter of public policy. They cannot be enforced and everyone knows it. You can't recreate silicon valley in Massachusetts because, as smart as all the people there are and in spite of the excellent engineering talent available, noncompetes ensure there is not a free market for skilled labor. The simple fact of the matter is that noncompetes are not agreed to between equal parties. They are not agreed at all. It is a contract of adherence. As an individual, at some point you must accept this unconscionable term of employment or you must starve. There is no room for an equal negotiation. An engineer or scientist or accountant or any professional of any kind is handed a pile of papers on the first day of employment and told 'sign or you're fired'. That's what happens. These are not agreements in the first place. To the extent that they are ever agreed, it is under duress. There is no true benefit or consideration paid to the engineer or professional party entering into a noncompete. Not only do noncompetes stifle technological innovation and reduce productivity (by keeping workers stuck in one position at one company under threat), but they also serve to artificially reduce worker wages and therefore reduce taxable income writ large. These clauses increase dependency on welfare by reducing worker wages, reduce government revenue by suppressing the tax base, and undermine technical competitiveness or innovation by holding workers in positions that underpay them or do not represent the best use of their technical skill. There is simply no good reason for these 'agreements' to exist or to be enforceable. Ban them. Leave no exceptions. Let the market work without monopolist distortion. We need to be able to compete against China more effectively. Noncompetes are holding us back in so many ways. They must go. Matthew Ivan"

Paige	"Please void current and ban future non-compete clauses in employment contracts. They are unnecessary and unfair to individuals, and they impede the free movement of labor, which is a drag on business and the economy as a whole."
jenice	"People should be able to work anywhere they qualify to work."
Katherine	"It is a matter of fairness and freedom to pursue the best interests of the individual and their family!"
Dave	"Yes, please ban non-compete agreements. California has had them in forever and our economy is healthier for it."
ELIZABET	"As a physician, I fmd that no compete clauses hurt patients; if a competent doctor wishes to change the place of employment, their patients should be able to fmd them and follow them. This is a fair market practice and benefits patients. Placing a non compete clause means a physician has to move outside the area and can no longer see patients with whom they may have a long history. This creates monopolies by hospitals in certain regions which directly harms patients. If a hospital or practice wishes to retain employees, they should examine why someone would want to leave, not keep them hostage with a no compete clause."
James	"I am in favor of restricting the use of non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses are currently unenforceable in California due to longstanding state law that restricts their use. It is one of (although not the only) the reasons that 1, a software engineer, moved to California. I believe this is one of the reasons why California is such an outsized economic powerhouse in the tech industry: when employees are free to leave a deadbeat employer and either find a better employer or start their own company, it ultimately makes for a more efficient capitalistic market. May the best employer win!! This has been borne out over decades of tech innovation in California. Restricting an employee's ability to switch employers means that a deadbeat employer can limp on providing a substandard product, while other countries can then outcompete us. By restricting the use of non-competes on a national level, it will help give the entire country an economic boost that will both benefit our own citizens as well as make the country a stronger competitor on the global stage. From a humanitarian standpoint, it is simply inhumane to restrict the ability of an employee to freely gain employment at whatever job can best put food on the table and keep a roof over the head. The United States does not have a good social system compared to other countries. It's therefore extra important that employees be able to seek employment at whichever employer can pay the best."
David	"Currently employed as a registered Investment advisor I feel the noncompete rules, especially hurt our customers. Our employment contracts lock us into situations where we are unable to make change and creating conflict with living up to our fiduciary standards. RIA's should maintain the ability to at all times employ custodians that offer the best investment opportunities for the American public."

Nick	"Should you decide not to ban these clauses, it will be yet another sign that you are firmly in the pocket of corporate America, and have little to no desire to actually help the middle and lower class. It would further show you have little to no desire in maintaining America as a functioning country, and instead are willing to help turn out great country into a land of (even greater) impoverishment. Seems like an easy decision to me! Don't forget, history will not absolve you!"
Anthony	"I support the ban of non-compete clauses in labor agreements"
Matthew	"Non Compete says it all right in the name. It's opposed to competition. If Shockley electronics could have used non compete clauses to break fairchild semiconductors the entire silicon revolution and 20 years of explosive economic growth in the US would never have occurred. The very notion of a non compete clause is functionally insane in context with unemployment benefits and local laws requiring the unemployed to take the first job they are offered or risk losing benefits. It's destructive to the economy as a whole. And it's blatantly unamerican in every meaningful way. It robs people of agency and denies them the pursuit of happiness and success in their profession or trade. That it's taken this long to strike it down is a scathing indictment of the FTC and our leaders. You are a day late and a dollar short with this draft."
Sam	"Non Competes should extend to partnership agreements as long as it does not hurt the partnership. allow people to work more!"

Max	"Ending non-compete agreements is a very good idea. It has worked well here in California and it will work well everywhere else."
Igor	"Physicians support doing away with non-compete. Please support Physicians and eliminate non-compete. Thank you!"
Miriam	"Free enterprise is the foundation of our great country. Those business enterprises that service the public well shall be rewarded by staying in business. A non-compete only tips the scale to those business enterprises that do not perform well and should not be rewarded."
Daniel	"This has the potential to benefit so many workers by giving them significantly more freedom in advocating for themselves. I am strongly in favor of this."
Samantha	"They should totally get rid of this non compete clause. This is a capitalist society. If an employer is no longer paying an employee they have no rights to anything the employees does. Additionally there is no basis for this and it keeps wages lower, inhibits competition and slows growth . Why should companies dictate where you work after u leave or get fired? If someone starts a business they risk people copying their ideas but hospitals and other organizations get away with special rules. This inhibits patient care as well."

Kathleen	"I am writing to express my strong support for the Non-Compete Clause Rule. Employers may have legitimate fears that employees with knowledge of sensitive information may share such information with new employers. However, this contingency can be better handled with non-disclosure agreements pertaining to proprietary information. The employment contract between and employer and a worker should exist only until the worker stops working for that employer. Why should the employment system be rigged in favor of employers, allowing them to tell former workers what employment they might seek? This is an attempt by employers to both put pressure on employees to stay with them and to artificially limit the opportunities the employee would have if he/she decided to leave. A boss can tell a worker what to do or not do while the worker is employed by and compensated by the boss or the boss's organization. The ability of a boss to command a worker should properly end when the employment ends, aside from the above-mentioned exception regarding non-disclosure agreements. It is unfair to workers to allow former employers to have a say in where they work next. As an example, my dog's veterinarian objected to the way his previous employer (a veterinary practice) handled some aspects of the practice, and the practice fired him. It also refused to give the vet's clients information about where he could be found. It thus took some effort for current clients to even locate the (absolutely wonderful) vet. When we did find him at his new practice, we learned that the previous employer was trying to enforce a non-compete policy and therefore prevent him from practicing within some (rather large) distance from the initial business. Clearly this was not being done to protect any business secrets, unless maybe they had to do with improper procedures. The old employer was trying to interfere with the vet's ability to make a living simply out of spite or out of fear of what employer malfeasance might be brought to light; it was also probably hoping that the vet's existing clients would stay with the practice rather than searching for him. That former practice should have absolutely no right to interfere with this vet's future employment. And this happens to be in California, where I understand that non-compete clauses are not allowed Please do the right thing and approve this resolution."
Marjory	"Um in favor of the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule. The Federal Trade Commission estimated that 30 million US workers, many of them in low- wage jobs, would have better career opportunities with this rule in effect, and wages would rise by $300 billion a year. I urge you to approve the rule which will give needed support to the American worker. Thank you."
John	"End non competes for all especially physicians."
Jyotsna	"Having physicians and only physicians sign non compete agreements leaves us as the ONLY profession not able to find the best job for the best pay. This is just throwing gasoline onto the moral injury we deal with in every hospital system. It would be incredibly more productive to spend their lobbying dollars on improving physician pay. Please stop regulating physicians. We are not children"

Lee	"I work in the mortgage industry and rarely see the FTC get involved when there are serious overcharges of points and fees. In fact, as a compliance officer I have blown the whistle to the FTC on a company that was grossly overcharging borrowers and misrepresenting the charge on disclosures and the FTC has taken no action. It's so long overdue that these public agencies stop grifting on public tax revenues, by way of fat salaries, and actually do their job! At the very least they can live up to the American principle of "free enterprise" and keep these non-compete agreements out of employment contracts, which are always contracts of adhesion."
Jonathan	"How come a government executive can push contracts to a private company and then jump ship to a cushy million-dollar-a-year role, actively sabotaging their own country for personal gain without it affecting their own lucrative employment prospects, but a company can say that their employees just trying to pay rent aren't allowed to go ply the skillset they've developed for someone else in the exact market that they're employable in? Not to mention that a non- compete, if abused, gives a company ludicrous leverage over their own employees, whose only real ability to negotiate comes from their ability to leave for competitors. Non-competes are an abusive instrument in an already coercive system, and should be abolished."
Dr. Mha Atma S	"As a very concerned American citizen and taxpayer, I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. For decades, exploitative noncompete agreements have barred workers from pursuing better employment opportunities in the same industry, stifling wages, and preventing career advancement. Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes -- ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Hiroyasu	"Physicians with noncompetes in their contracts are forced with the choice of uprooting themselves and their families each time they want to switch practice environments, and the daunting challenging of reestablishing a reputation and practice in a new location. Employers know this, and use it as leverage when physicians speak out against situations that are detrimental to patient care, inappropriate or illegal actions by their employers, or unreasonable/unsustainable working conditions. This can effectively hold physicians hostage at unfavorable working conditions for decades, while employers evade market forces that would necessitate change"
Laurel	"As a California-licensed attorney representing startups and investors, the Sky-is-Falling rhetoric around this proposal in the national press is a bit surprising. Some of our clients might not have been able to quickly hire essential talent (or leave their own jobs to launch in the first place) without California's clear prohibition on non-competes. Despite banning noncompetes in most contexts

	since 1872, California still has hair salons, veterinary clinics, restaurants, hospitals... and of course, major high-tech industries with valuable patents, copyrights, and trade secrets. We are far from last in the nation in terms of innovation and business development. (Indeed, there is plenty of scholarship attributing California's long lead in startup formation in part to its longstanding ban on noncompetes). So I strongly support the FTC's proposal-- without a salary cap-- and also encourage the FTC to take more vigorous steps to close loopholes and forestall workarounds (such as disproportionate liquidated damages clauses in employment contracts and no-hire agreements with other employers) that could achieve the same chilling effect as noncompetes and would be the next go-to move for dominant firms seeking to have their cake and eat it too (by preventing employees from exercising their at-will right to quit and seek better opportunities, even as they hoard their own at-will freedom to fire employees without cause). Companies will still be able to rely on appropriately tailored confidentiality clauses and invention assignment agreements to protect truly valuable trade secrets and inventions.* I also encourage the FTC to look past rhetoric from industry associations and give some weight to the actual behavior of their members when assessing the credibility of testimony attempting to justify non-competes. For example, at one FTC forum, an in-house attorney from BAE Systems, Inc. spoke in favor of imposing noncompete clauses on senior employees. But BAE's actions belie its ghost-speaker's dire complaints: a quick websearch revealed that BAE has multiple facilities in California. So, apparently, BAE has substantial experience running a successful business in a state where noncompetes are unenforceable. Moreover, their website listed various open senior level positions in California for software engineers, floor manager, etc. that would involve access to sensitive information (and carry salaries well over the $100k threshold others have suggested as a cutoff for allowing noncompetes). How many other industry associations or businesses commenting on this proposal are taking similarly disingenuous positions? I suspect there may be more multinationals with a long and profitable history of adapting to California's embrace of free market competition who are not coming to this debate with clean hands. * (It may also be worth noting that California companies have not only had to get along without enforceable noncompetes; for a long time, California companies also had to clear higher hurdles to bring trade secret lawsuits than in other states, because under California's state trade secret law, plaintiffs cannot get discovery unless and until they define their trade secrets with "reasonable particularity." Since 2016, some plaintiffs have been able to pursue cases under the laxer standards of the federal Defend Trade Secrets Act instead, but the point stands that California managed to build successful industries without noncompetes, even back when litigating trade secret misappropriation required meeting high pleading standards.) Thank you for your important work to unleash entrepreneurial potential and unlock fair, competitive markets throughout the country. [Disclaimer: I speak only for myself, and my views may or may not represent those of my firm, clients, etc.]"
J..	"I am an anesthesiologist. Every job I've taken has included a non compete. From small (inns (ten) to my mega corporation now. I'm all locations, there are undeserved populations that should negate these. These non-compete create unnatural BARRIERS to EXIT. Which, any economist will tell you increases the costs to the system. The current physician and anesthesiologist shortage has shown the true market rates for anesthesiologists. With covid, being stretched to cover intensive care units and multiple retirements, my occupation is one of the shortest supply in our profession. We know how vital we are to patient care, patient lives, and stability of Publix health. However the non-compete are Depressing what the employers have to pay. Market rates for my profession now approach $500/hour. Yes, we are privileged, and we are aware but not spoiled since we work 50-60 hours a week, and 24 hours nonstop very regularly. But due to non-competes, I am being paid about $150/hour. So that percent drip, let's call it a MULTIPLE of three, is what is creating this unfair market. Please pass this ban. Thank you for listening."

S	"I was involved in a noncompete situation and had to pay the company hundreds of thousands of dollars to get out of it, along with thousands of dollars in legal fees. Please Do not limit peoples right to work. It's like slavery. Please also include partners of a business because even though I live in a non compete state, it does Not include partners."
Samuel	"This is a strategy being utilized by private equity to force physicians, who dedicate their lives and energy towards the care of patients, as well as their livelihood and passion. Consistently, it has been shown that private equity utilizes these mechanisms to facilitate and accelerate the replacement of physicians by nurse practitioners, who (believed) to be cheaper and (are definitely) less trained. This is resulting in lower quality of care and greater complications. Moreover, it does not in the long run, save more money, as evidenced by a recent study by Stanford medicine. NPs order more tests, refer more than MD/DOs and do not save the healthcare apparatus as a whole more money when practicing independently from MD/DO supervision. Bring the focus back onto patience, quality, healthcare, and the physicians who advocate and care for them. Thank you very much."
Allyce	"I am a very experienced employment attorney in the California, which has had a strong prohibition on employee non-compete agreements for many years. I believe it is a very important protection for all workers, especially those who have specialized skills, like tech workers. California's law has not hurt its economy since it has one of the most robust economies of any state in the United States."
Zachary	"This would be an incredible boon to workers and I can not advocate for this more highly. Worker autonomy is a central part of a functional and efficient economy."
Zachary	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations at the expense of the workers. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. Eliminating the noncompete clauses will help improve healthcare access for patients as hospitals and corporations can no longer restrict where physicians can work. I urge the FTC to reject the AHA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians. It is essential to protect workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned physician."

Elizabeth	"Non-compete clauses should be banned. If they aren't banned, then they should be regulated such that any non-compete limits should come with full remuneration for that time from the employer or business who wrote the non-compete clause into a contract."
Nathalie	"Non-compete clauses harm workers and harm the economy. Desirable talents are contractually chained to a company, which means their career field is more like a lawn. Predatory and low quality employers put these clauses in their contracts to ensure that employees will put up with a more inappropriate activity. Employers would be forced to treat their employees better if those employees could simply quit and find a competing job. Better companies in need of good, experienced workers find their hiring pools whittled away by these clauses. Protect American Commerce, and Protect the American: Ban Non- Compete Clauses."

Kay	"People have the right to leave an employment situation to seek a better one, and I'm frickin tired of corporations controlling our bodies. , Therefore, I fully support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and hams working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Karen	"My comment is in favor of the FTC rule to ban noncompete clauses. Given the tight labor market and how housing shortages are limiting people's ability to relocate, it makes no sense to further constrain job mobility. This is especially for people paid as hourly employees who do not have "trade secrets" or privileged information to share with a future employer."
Peter	"I support the proposed Non-compete Clause Rule but ask that it be extended from employers to cover franchisors as well. Most franchise agreements contain non-compete clauses which limit franchisees from competing post-tenmination or expiration of the franchise agreement. Even when the post-term non-compete is limited geographically (for example within twenty-five miles of the franchisee's location or any other franchise location is not uncommon) or temporally (for example one year after term is not uncommon), the franchisee as a practical matter cannot move twenty- five miles away nor wait one year to begin competing. Franchisees often are similar to employees in that the franchise is their job. Namely, they buy a franchise instead of becoming an employee and look to the franchise for their livelihood. But unlike employees they have invested capital, often significant capital into their franchise. In this regard franchisees with fixed costs are more in need of protection than employees. Franchisees to this day usually suffer from imbalances in the franchise relationship. Despite the F7C Franchise Rule, franchisees still are in an informational imbalance with their franchisors which know everything about their franchise system and businesses. Franchisees also suffer a power imbalance with their franchisors. The power is economic as well as legal based on one-sided adhesion contracts which are totally endemic in franchising. There are thousands of franchise systems, with new one coming and old one failing every year. But they all have very similar

	franchise agreements covering the same issues in the same franchisor oriented way. One such endemic clause is the non-compete clause. Through this clause, at the end of the term, a franchisee faces a Flobson's choice. Sign up lig another ten years as a franchisee even if making little or no money, or face a year of not engaging in the business for which the individual franchisee has spent the last ten years working. Moreover, the way most franchise agreements are written, the "renewal" will have to be under the "then current" version of the franchise agreement which may siphon off higher royalties and ad fees or change other terms less favorably to the franchisee. There is no justification for keeping a sandwich franchisee from opening up an independent franchise after having spent ten years using the trademarks and paying royalties to the franchisor. And if competition is the goal of the antitrust laws including the FTC Act, society will benefit from having another independent actor in the marketplace. This is perhaps even clearer in creating marketplace competition than allowing employees to be able to seek other work notwithstanding noncompete clauses. Franchisors have independent interests, often reflected in statutes, which can separately still be enforced but not the non-compete clause. These statutes provide for trademark and trade secret protections. Butth the Lanham Act may still be enforced against a competing former franchisee who must change her business name and marks. Likewise, the competing franchisee must abide by any genuine trade secrets in their new endeavor (although franchisors in my forty years of practice often overbroadly claim trade secrets where none really exist). Franchisees need the Commission's help and allowing sandwich maker, gym, and many more franchise business owners the ability to compete post termination or expiration of their franchise agreements should be included in this rule."

This from a career emergency physician with 35 years' experience, who served as a medical director of a large academic emergency department for 18 years and Chair of the academic department of a major California university for 20 years. The non-compete clauses, although ostensibly

	non-enforceable in California, nevertheless inhibit the ability of physicians to advocate for their patients and for safe emergency department practices. If such advocacy runs afoul of the current hospital or emergency department administration, the physician can be summarily fired without due process. Then the physician cannot, if subject to a non-compete clause, go to work for the hospital in the same city and must move his family and livelihood far away. This disrupts the community and harms patient care. Furthermore, the emergency physician does not have any magical trade secrets to use against their former employer, so the entire premise of non-compete clauses is moot."
Daniel	"I strongly support the ban on non-competes. As an emergency physician, I have watched as private equity has made significant inroads into medicine. As private equity firms have consumed contracts in emergency departments, they have cut wages, decreased staffing to unsafe levels, and have had a significant adverse effect on the quality of medicine practiced to increase profits. Non-compete clauses are just one of many tools they use to suppress wages and poor working conditions on the staff. A ban on non-compete clauses are a step in the right direction in improving hospital staffing and preventing physician shortages."
Shaughan	"I strongly support the abolition of non-compete clauses. It will restore fairness to the job market and increase the pace of innovation."
Seth	"Noncompetes are an unfair method of competition. The freedom to change jobs should be protected to ensure competition. Noncompetes deprive individuals from seeking higher wages and better working conditions. Noncompetes deprive businesses of a talent pool to expand. Ending noncompetes would promote greater innovation and healthy competition. Employers unfairly use their bargaining power to coerce employees into signing noncompetes and to stifle competition. Noncompetes constitute unfair methods of competition as they hurt workers and harm competition. The FTC should adopt the proposed rule to ban noncompete clauses in their final ruling."
Long	"I work as a physician and very welcome this proposal to ban the non compete clause. In post pandemic, the working condition of many hospitals have become unbearable and limiting the freedom to change jobs hamper our ability to advocate for the patients and changes to working conditions. The non compete clause makes zero sense in medicine since there is zero trade secrets involved in our work. All medicine knowledge are available publicly and can be obtained by anyone though some do require payments. Many of my colleagues and I thank you for this proposal."
Jared	"It seems to me there is no rationale for restricting where a non convicted person moves jobs to. It is reasonable that in some professions like law a lawyer will have restrictions on taking clients or discussing active cases when changing firms. But they may still leave one law firm to work for another. Surely allowing companies to impose restrictive obligations in an employee's contract concerning working for another company in the same field is not only anticompetitive but unethical."

Ben	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, Non-compete contracts suppress workers' income. This is the last thing needed. The "nonsupervisory workers" average weekly earnings were higher in 1968 than in 2022. Isn't it about time for a raise? Check the BLS graph here: https://data.bls.gov/timeseries/CES0500000031 The graph/table shows in December 1968 incomes were 325.76, in December 2022 they were 324.36. (in 1982-1984 dollars). Go to RealTime Inequality and see how much incomes increased for the lower-earning 50% of U.S. households, or for the working age adults, between 1976 and 2022. I see the working age adults increased their incomes from $19,700 to $25,400, up $5,700 or 29%. Now look at the incomes of the top 10%, the increase is from $154,600 to $427,400, up $272,800, or up 176%. This is why our economy is screwed up and people are so resentful. You must work to fix this mess. I write a blog, Economics Without Greed, Part Two. Take a look, please. Now I hope you lots of irate letters, and you get the message. I'm not irate, but I am disappointed. "
Ben	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, In 1968 weekly wage income was higher than in Dec. 2022, a 54 year period without a wage gain --- absolutely incredible. See the BLS page -- https://data.bls.gov/timeseries/CES0500000031 --- That's 54 years without a raise, while the Real GDP per capita increased from $20,337 in Q2 1968, to $60,422 in Q4 2022 -- it tripled. Wages are much too low, we have a crisis of affordability. The United Way charity reports in its ALICE report that about 40% of U.S. adults live with material hardship, which of course includes the officially poor section of U.S. adults. The U.S. Census conducts a series of Pulse Surveys and looking at the health section, Health Table 1, you can see that 62% of adult respondents report excessive worrying about paying their bills; and some report they cannot stop worrying, 54%. They also report "little interest or pleasure in doing things", and "feeling down, depressed, or hopeless." Look for yourselves, this is a disaster. You also might look at the Job Quality Index, Buffalo University, NYU, to see the bifurcation of wage pay for full-time workers. As of January 2023 53% of nonsupervisory workers, out of a total of 107 million workers (about 57 million), have an average annual income of just over $35,000, the other 47% have incomes of about $65,000. When you add on the part-time workers, about 18% of all workers, you get 84 million workers, around half of all workers with very low incomes. Or look at the Social Security Administration page on wage income, $37,586.03 is the median wage income for 2021 -- 84 million workers earn less than $37,586.03, and their average income is $16,511 per year. This is just above the incredibly low minimum wage income for a full-time year-round worker, $15,080. How can you support or help you family with less than $17,000 a year in income? See here -- https://www.ssa.gov/cgi-bin/netcomp.cgi?year=2021 Lastly, the average household income is between $144,000 and $163,000, depending on whether you look at the Joint Committee on Taxation figure or the BEA figure. The median household income is $70,758 per year. The median is half the average, which is indication of severe inequality. As you can abundantly see, wages are much too low. Do what you can to raise wages. End the Non-compete clause in contracts. Help the low-income adult workers."

Anita	"I am absolutely in favor of this and there should be no non competes anymore. I have never been employed somewhere with a no compete but I can see how harmful it is to a a working individual. It will make leaving a job much more difficult and it stifles creativity. Everyone needs to have the freedom to move around and employer also needs fresh sets of eyes to see things from a different perspective. Non competes creates stagnation."
N.	"The non-compete requirement for employment has nm its course as a benefit, it needs to be stopped."
Sandra	"I want this to be supported. I'm in CA and we know how valuable it is to be free of noncompetition clauses. Freedom is an American fundamental value."
Peter J	"I support the FTC proposal to outlaw all Non-Compete Clauses. They're already illegal in California. Non-Competes are legalized abuse."
Peter	"YES! Get rid of it! It's horrible and anti-American. Make companies compete. Thats how it should be."
Avery	"In Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act, the Commission is granted the authority to enforce provisions needed to prevent unfair competition in the economy. In translation, this has meant that employers have the right to make employees agree to non-competition terms. In the event that employers require their employees to adhere to such expectations, the employees are limited in their ability to work in their field/trade of choice. Said employee cannot leave the current company to work for another employer in the field, nor can they start their own business in the same market. While this is a valid concern for employers, and thus is understandable that the government has protections against unfair competitive economic practices, I believe such limitations are harmful to the workers themselves. The non-compete clause outlined here proposes an adjustment to Section 5 of the FTC Act: henceforth it is unlawful for employers to enter into non- compete contracts with their workers on account of it being limiting to economic activity. There has been a movement against trusts in this economy, as a major problem of the United States' past is that certain companies have monopolized their respective industries. This prevents healthy competition, meaning consumers have limited options as do employers in that field. This threatens the nature of democracy and free will that this nation holds so dear. I agree that the non- compete clause will mitigate the inequitable limitations placed on free and fair labor thus far. Broadly scoped contractual obligations are unfair to workers that feel inclined to agree to them. They also might negatively impact a worker who ultimately finds themselves in a less than ideal workplace, but is unable to transition to a new company or leverage better conditions in the organization they are effectively confined to via the non-competition contract they signed during the onboarding process."
Christopher	"Tuesday, April 18, 2023 Federal Trade Commission Office of the Secretary 600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW Suite CC-5610 (Annex C) Washington, DC 20580 Subject: Please Ban Anti- Worker Non-compete Clauses -- Non-Compete Clause

	Rule (NPRM) (Document ID: FTC-2023-0007-0001) To FTC Chair Lina Khan: I strongly urge the Federal Trade Commission to ban non-competes, a practice that suppresses wages and limits workers' options by preventing them from freely changing jobs, negotiating for better pay, or starting businesses on their own. Between 30 and 60 million Americans work in jobs where they are forced to sign "non-competes"—clauses in their contract that limit where they can work if they leave or are let go from their employment. This compels many workers to stay in jobs despite low wages, limited benefits, abusive management, coercive scheduling or other poor working conditions for fear they could not take their skills to new employment. It deprives them of the ability to seek exiting and remunerative opportunities for fear their employers will bring legal action against them. And it limits their ability for entrepreneurial pursuits such as leaving to start their own businesses. It is imperative our government act to balance the playing field rather than giving corporations all the power over workers and consumers. Again, I urge the Federal Trade Commission to ban non-competes. Thank you for your consideration of my comments. Please do NOT add my name to your mailing list. I will learn about future developments on this issue from other sources."
Amanda	"this is an essential change. physicians are often at the mercy of abusive companies with ridiculous non competes. forces moves, long commutes, and adds burden to an already stressful job."
Anthony	"Sirs: I f you believe in a free market, why in the name of God are you willing to not even contemplate getting rid of non-compete clauses in employment contracts? Isn't it time to let workers have their freedom?"
Renu	"I fully support a No compete clause. It has been used to as a way to control newer physicians as they cannot do anything to change their situation without moving into a different area, which is obviously even more difficult once they have a family/house."
n	"It is about time to eliminate the rule. Wages for workers will increase."
Rajeev	"This rule should be implemented as a basic right for physicians. In the current scenario, the service provided by Physicians. Is heavily controlled and monetized by big corporate hospitals like Kaiser Permanente who do not care about physician well-being. Corporate hospitals should be penalized for implementing noncompete clauses against doctors. The AMA should support physicians and help remove non compete clauses to help promote physician, well-being, and prevent corporate hospitals from monopolizing medical care. https://abenews.go.com/Health/noncompete-agreements-impact-doctors-patients/story?id=61790574"
Chris	"California's tech industry is a product of its non-compete clause rule. The rest of the country would do well to follow suit and allow workers to freely change jobs to allow for more innovation. Inunobility of workforce stifles economies in other countries, lets stop doing it here."

Jean Ann	"The non-compete clause nde should be outlawed. This law means the former employer controls the employee after the employee is no longer with the company. That by law, is controlling the economic future of of former employee, not to mention their healthcare options. In effect, it is a fonn of slavery."
Dave	"How can noncompetitive agreements be seen as capitalism. This is ridiculous and monopolistic"
Robert	"I'm a physician who was employed at a large non-profit hospital system in Reno Nevada. I was prohibited from providing patient care at another healthcare facility (DURING THE MIDDLE IF THE PANDEMIC) because of the do not compete clauses the non profit hospital hospital had in place. It boggles my mind that a non profit company would put these clauses above the patients and needs of their community during a time of crisis. Ban these harmful clauses, please."
Ryan	"Non compete clauses should not be allowed. They stifle innovation and decrease competition in the market place."
Armin	"Please follow through with the new proposed rule change to allow employees to have more freedom in where they can work!"
Madeline	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 Writing to share my opionion that I do not agree with non- copete clauses, and I do not think that they should be legally allowed."
Harmeet	"I support ban on non-compete. As a physican I can no longer open my own private practice and won't for big systems. I should not have to move just to switch jobs."
Mathew	"I am writing in support of eliminating non-compete clauses. I am a physician practicing in California, where non-competes are unenforceable. Having free movement of labor is good for workers and for the economy. It allows good employers to succeed and outcompete bad ones, especially since there are now only few employers in any area. When I talk to colleagues in other states, it's shocking how large labor monopsony looms. It's a consideration I discussed with resident physicians I train, warning them to be careful about tying your future heavily to a single employer since moving is so disruptive. Noncompetes also drive physicians out of the region permanently. Meanwhile, back in Sacramento where I practice, some people who left for local competitors have been re-recruited back to my group, which would not be possible had they left the area. Non-competes are bad for the economy and bad for workers. The only beneficiaries are companies who lack the dynamism to compete in a fair marketplace. In summary, I strongly support elimination of non-compete clauses."
Paul	"Please ban non-competes! Non-competes stifle innovation and competition between companies by artificially restricting the workforce. They give companies too much power over their employees and create an unfair market dynamic that prevents capitalism from working as effectively as it could. Non-competes are bad for workers and bad for competition and should not be allowed!"

Hafid	"Noncompete clauses are particularly damaging in health care. Over 300,000 healthcare workers left the field in 2021. The US is going to need more providers to fill vacated roles as well as needs due to our aging and growing population. Healthcare workers ought not be limited to a single employing entity."
Cesar	" Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements. On a personal note I was forced to sign such noncompete when I was studying for a tax preparer role with an H&R BLOCK subsidiary without knowing my rights. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Rene	"Removing non compete should happen. Companies are now monopolies making someone lose their profession due to non compete."
Stephen	"I'm writing to propose that the non-compete clause should be barred for non-profits as well as for-profit organizations. The non-compete clause is a burden on the employee, and the burden is equally great no matter who the employer is. We shouldn't decide that non-profit employers are more worthy of placing such a burden."
Mario E	"Companies are not slave owners that should be allowed to sue ex employees for switching jobs for better pay. This is completely contrary to freedom of choice in a democratic society. Should a worker stay for the company's benefit at the expense of his family?"
Joshua	" Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I live in California, where non-competes are mostly not allowed, but businesses still threaten employees with them. A friend went to school to be a nurse and ultimately went back to school for a career change after he was "blocked" by non-compete agreements preventing him from getting a better nursing job after he got his foot in the door with a very lousy company called Maxim. He wasn't aware that they wouldn't hold up in California courts, but he was still shut down by these unfair practices because they can get away with lying about them being valid. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements at the Federal level."

Matthew	"I'm a physician practicing in California. I worked for Sound Physicians throughout the pandemic, often working twice my required number of shifts in order help with surges. Despite that, and despite being in excellent standing, just after the pandemic, they terminated me and 77 others in order to enhance their profit. The tennination letter referenced multiple non-compete clauses which, if I had followed them, would have severely limited my capacity to work as a physician, even in the most underserved areas of the state. Thankfully, California already strictly limits these anti-competition clauses. Because of that, I was able to get a better job with a competitor. Other Americans deserve the same opportunity. Please ban this anti-competitive practice that stifles innovation and holds us all back."
Paul	"In general, doing away with non-compete clauses seems like a win for workers. I am a free lance worker and I have signed hundreds of NDAs over the years that have prohibited me from detailing the projects I've been a part of in my portfolio. Of course small businesses, particularly in the trades and manufacturing, will bear an outsized burden with increased worker mobility because of the relative cost and investment for smaller workforces. I guess they will have to find ways to increase their incentives to stay competitive with larger businesses that can more readily absorb the increased costs of doing business. Maybe there is a way to subsidize hiring & training for these smaller competitors? Maybe a windfall profits tax on large corporations?"
Maygin	"People should be free to go to work wherever they can make the best living. Whether that means more money, be treated with more respect or be able to have a better quality of life. They should not be held back because the company that they are currently working for has been able to engage in a practice that has basically cobbled them and now they are stuck without any means to better their lives."
David	"Do away with non-compete clauses. They hurt ordinary people for the benefit of the powerful"
David	"Non-Competes should not be allowed. I work in Escrow in California and there really is only one way to do Escrow. If I were not allowed to seek employment with mother Escrow Company for a period of time after leaving a position, that would be detrimental to my ability to earn a living and support my family."
max	"this needs to pass, it is absurd that an employer can dictate an employees future employer."
Riley	"The un-American non-compete rules need to be federally banned. Numerous case studies have demonstrated how it results in higher wages, which increases the quality of the American labor force."
Brandon	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncontpete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help trillions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across

	the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements. During my time in the mental health industry, I have had to sign two different non-competes that did not allow me to move on to more promising opportunities, and I had to reject them for fear of litigation. Both non-competes were for entry-level positions, and I feel they really prevented me from advancing myself. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Steven	"Please get rid of noncompetes! It was one of the reasons I left Indiana - so I could keep working as a medical provider since it was legally enforceable there and I couldn't get a job without 1.5+ commute each way (and for a paycut at that)!"
Kenneth	"The FTC should BAN exploitative non-compete agreements. They are harmful and unfair. Thank You"
Rajat	"Extremely simple idea: people like having more money, choices and freedom. Generations of Americans built a whole country on this notion. This country, built on that idea, currently stands as blatantly the most successful, incredible, and valuable political undertaking any human has ever aspired to. As a tech worker in California, I benefit immensely from anti-non-compete laws here. I get more choices, fewer headaches, produce more for an economy that currently supports previously unimaginably lavish lifestyles for hundreds of millions of people, and get more money in my pocket. My thesis is that Americans would like all this, and in fact America as a whole would benefit from these things being the standard for everyone. We are, all of us, united in the multi-generational, incredibly ambitious project of building America, a once-inconceivable civilization where most anyone could just start out or come in with what they've got, work hard, contribute, improve others' lives, and get a nice life for themselves and the folks they care about in turn. Noncompetes stifle this project by giving a class of folks whose interest conflicts with our country's immense productivity the ability to hold back the rest of us, to block some people from taking the steps we must take to generate and earn value. So I hope y'all choose to continue on the path of our people's mission and destiny of building America and, among other things, take this crucial step of ending the noncompete regime."
Mitul	"Please ban noncompete clauses. These clauses have dramatically affected the practice of medicine because doctors are forced to stay with practices/organizations that offer substandard care especially in rural America, otherwise they would have to move their entire families Private equity groups are trying to extend those clauses across states and state lines as they gobble up practices, increase the cost of medical care and decrease quality. Ultimately the patient suffers."
Torr	"I am writing to strongly endorse the NPRM that is currently being considered by the FTC. It is not only patently unfair to workers, it is obvious to me that it is used

	by employers to punish former employees merely looking out for their own best interests and career, but also stifles competition among other businesses who need talent and offer better opportunities and working environments for employees. As you well know, Californians already enjoy these protections and for that, I am grateful (despite not ever needing this protection personally), but the FTC should stop this disgrace to our workforce. Please, please do not listen to employers or their lobbyists who will no doubt argue that it is unfair to businesses or will force them to "close their doors", for in the latter argument, if they must close due to losing any employee, then they should look no further than their own work environment, management and/or compensation. I should add that I also STRONGLY support any and all existing laws against stealing intellectual property for any reason as this has nothing to do the NPRM."
Ryan	"As a worker recently strong-armed into signing a non-compete as a condition of employment. I worry for my future in my field. This proposed rule change helps ensure that I will not be subject to what amounts to forced unemployment, skill decay, and stunted professional growth due to corporate greed. This rule creates hope for competitive pay and stands to improve wages naturally, and thus spending power of the US populace. I am not a professional economist, but as I understand it, money flow is always the mark of a healthy economy. A large part of that flow in America would be the consumer market, but hamstrung wages often lead to people buying the cheapest possible option and those often tend to be of foreign make. As the average household buying power has been declining since the 60s, businesses have had to compete for the most bottom barrel production quality in an effort to reduce costs to the point where people are willing to buy things. With more buying power in the average workers hands, businesses will see more interest quality American products in stead of the cheapest disposable option from overseas."
Anne	"I strongly support your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Non-compete agreements stifle competition and depress wages. They are a modern version of involuntary servitude and have no place in a free market. That regulators have allowed these agreements to become routine for low wage workers (e.g. security guards and fast food workers) is a national disgrace. That they exist at all in a country that lionizes entrepreneurship is insupportable. Pre-emptively treating all employees as trade secret thieves is an appalling abuse of workers, especially given the legal remedies to address the theft of trade secrets. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
David	"I urge you to implement this rule as soon as possible. It redresses an imbalance of power that has benefited companies at the expense of workers, and it makes sense."
Nessa	"We doctors together stand against non compete clauses. Get rid of them ASAP."
Ian	"I am an architectural photographer who has been working with a specific company that had me sign a noncompete clause in my contract when I started working for them. It's been seven years and the company isn't as dominant in

	the market as the once were. I'm making less money than ever before and cannot move on to create my own business due to fear of being sued. Non compete clauses should be outlawed immediately"
Peter	"I thin' k non-compete clauses hinder workers from moving up and earning more money. I can understand protecting confidential information, but restricting workers to switch jobs in their field is just a matter of power and suppressing wages "
Michael	"These should be banned. You should be able to be employed by anyone Are we capitalist or are we socialist?"
Alexander	"Fantastic initiative that will liberate workers from the confining shackles of non-compete contractual clauses. Enthusiastically support"
Christopher	"In the Overview of the proposed Rule, the following is mentioned: "the fact that non-compete clauses limit a worker's ability to practice their trade" This is a valid observation, but is not addressed by the proposed Rule. The proposed Rule's writing very clearly states that non-compete agreements are only considered such if they are in place after the time of employment. However, this fails to address the issue of so-called "non-compete" clauses in active employment contracts which prohibit the employee from reasonably practicing their trade, nominally to prevent "conflict of interest". However, many people are employed by large conglomerates who have vertically or horizontally expanded so significantly that an employee is barred from participating in professional advancement, personal projects, or even their hobby. In such contractual agreements. In such agreements, it is often implied or explicitly stated that such limitations apply to non-commercial endeavors, which are not competing practically by definition. For example, it is not only common but expected for large Tech conglomerates to make liberal use of "open-source" software, as it is easy to validate for security, and free-to-use, often for commercial purposes. Similarly, the same Tech conglomerate may bar employees from any contributions to such open-source software projects. In this way, the Tech conglomerate abuses their right to prevent against conflicts of interest to prevent their employees from contributing to projects they care about, to prohibit the conglomerate from giving back to the communities they take from, and moreover hinder employees from practicing their trade or exercising their skills even in a noncommercial context. Furthermore, the expansion of such Tech conglomerates can rule out an unordinarily and unreasonably wide set of avenues for personal fulfillment of employees. For example, a company which sells portable Tech devices, and a suite of software on their marketplace for the devices, may then bar employees from participating outside of work in any field which is tangentially related to any product on the marketplace, as it could be reasonably posed as competition. Thus, an Electrical Engineer for a company which primarily produces devices is barred from contributing to public software projects, making private software projects for or not for profit, serving as a Fitness instructor (as the Tech conglomerate may offer a first party remote fitness instruction application in the future), advising friends on unrelated projects, participating in

	Tech communities, producing any media whatsoever, and more nonsensical restrictions. This is a gross overreach by employers, and quite thoroughly tramples employees abilities to develop their trade, perform fulfilling hobbies, get feedback from others about personal, non-commercial projects, and express their enthusiasm for any element of business which their employer does or may conduct in the future, regardless of breadth of business conduct. It is ridiculous for a company which spans half a dozen sectors to bar an employee from any behavior which could conflict with future endeavors in any of those sectors or any sector the company could "reasonably" expand to. If the Tech conglomerate releases a single first-party game, then they may bar every employee across the entirety of the company from ever participating in the development of a game which would see the light of day during or after their employment, regardless of the field the employee works in. This means a sales worker at a phone company would be prohibited from community programming experiences, as the conglomerate could reasonably see any and all software work as a conflict. This sweeping classification of conflicts of interest across all verticals of a conglomerate or otherwise expanded corporation suppress the creativity, fulfillment, professional development, and first Amendment right to freedom of speech and expression under the guise of IP protection and non-compete. This issue very finely and cleanly falls under the ill effects of non-compete clauses and yet appears wholly unaddressed in the proposed Rule. The Rule should be amended to restrict the scope of non-compete (otherwise called anti conflict-of-interest) contractual agreements during active employment which extend beyond the scope of work which the employee provides for the employer, and serve only to suppress future competition by means of severely limiting an employee's networking and professional development opportunities, or wholly stifling them altogether."
Rob	"As a member of the working class, not the nesting-yacht rich who can afford a non-compete clause, I urge you to PASS THIS RULE."
Mark	"This proposed rule is long-overdue. The use of non-competes has reached levels where they are now used by default for the sole purpose of restraining employee mobility. There are legitimate employer concerns about the protection of confidential information and intellectual property, and the right to be free from loss of business resulting from a former employee's solicitation of the company's clients. Each of these legitimate concerns can be protected against through reasonable restrictions in employment agreements or employee handbooks. None of these protections requires the more draconian measure of prohibiting a worker from going to work for a competitor. There may be unique (and very limited) circumstances where a non-compete may be appropriate, and I would point the Commission to the way non-competes are handled in California as an example of a fair and prudent approach. But the default assumption should be that an employee's right to work for any other company should not be restrained, and reasonable employer concerns can and should be addressed through other measures and contract provisions beyond a non-compete."
Barbara	"I strongly urge the FTC ban non-compete clauses."

Ian	"As a supporter of fair competition and worker mobility, I fully endorse the proposed rule by the FTC. Non-compete clauses can stifle innovation and limit career opportunities for workers, which ultimately harms the economy and society as a whole. This rule is a step in the right direction towards protecting the rights and freedoms of workers while promoting a healthy and competitive business environment."
Cyrus	"Physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule. They should not be exempt from this needed worker protection as it greatly limits their ability to negotiate their contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over physicians in the marketplace. There is a large increase in physician burnout and allowing the market place to be more free would allow physicians more freedom and flexibility. Additionally, the last time an exemption of this nature was granted by the lobbying from the American Hospital Association (Jung v AAMC 2004) resulted in decades of delay for improving resident physicians' ability for fair wages and benefits; this is still an active struggle today. Please do not make the same mistake again for physicians of today and the future."
Ralph	"I am a physician (MD) in California practicing Nephrology, the AHA and corporate interests' goal of placing an exception to healthcare worker noncompete is a poisonous and evil venture, do not give in to them."
Alvin	"Ban non-compete clauses"
Kevin	"Please enact this legislation I have been subject to many forced, non negotiable noncompete agreements in my 20+ year career in technology and telecommunication sales and sales management. This has negatively affected my career and compensation while adding stress and anxiety to my life. Specifically, on multiple occasions I have been blind sided and handed non compete agreements on my first day of employment, Essentially being told that my first day is my last day if I do not sign the non compete agreement. I have had situations where I worked for a company that was sold, and on the first day of the acquisition, I was forced to sign a noncompete. This has not happened to me once but multiple times. I have had to disclose non compete agreements to potential future employers only to have those prospective employers completely vanish / back out of pursuing me for their open roles because I was potentially bound by a non- compete....even though I reside in California where there are various protections regarding noncompetes Again, please enact this legislation"
Forrest	"As a physician, I am writing to strongly support the proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses in employment contracts. Non-compete agreements limit our ability to seek employment and provide the best possible care to our patients. They also harm our ability to pursue our careers and innovate in the medical field. Physicians, like all other workers, should have the freedom to practice in the location of their choice without fear of legal retribution from their former employers. Non-compete clauses limit our mobility and can prevent us from practicing in underserved areas where our skills are desperately needed."

	Furthermore, non-compete agreements suppress wages and limit our ability to negotiate for fair compensation. This ultimately harms the patients we serve by reducing the quality of care we can provide. I understand that the American Hospital Association is attempting to get physicians excluded from the proposed rule, but I strongly believe that this would be a mistake. All workers, including physicians, deserve the freedom to pursue their careers without being unfairly restricted by non-compete clauses. In conclusion, I urge the Federal Trade Commission to implement the proposed rule banning non-compete clauses, including for physicians. Doing so will promote competition, innovation, and access to quality healthcare for all Americans. Thank you for considering my views on this important issue."
Mohamed	"All non compete rules should be banned as they stop nonnal employees to not be able to work with competitors if the NDA says so."
Lorna	"I enthusiastically SUPPORT the proposed rule to ban employers from requiring employees to sign non-compete agreements. Thank you, FCC!!!"
Ana	"I am in full support of a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements for healthcare professionals and obstetricians and gynecologists in the United States. The shortage of these medical professionals is a critical issue in the country, and non-compete agreements only exacerbate the problem by limiting access to experienced and specialized healthcare providers. I am voicing my opinion through the lens of obstetrician and gynecologist (OB/GYN). Non-compete agreements harm maternal and prenatal health in several ways. For example, they can prevent patients from seeing their preferred obstetrician or gynecologist or require patients to travel long distances to receive care. This is particularly concerning for pregnant women who need regular prenatal care to ensure a healthy pregnancy and delivery. In addition, non- compete agreements can negatively impact the quality of care provided to patients by restricting access to experienced healthcare professionals. With maternal mortality rates on the rise in the United States *, it is more important than ever to ensure that women have access to high- quality obstetrical and gynecological care throughout their pregnancy and beyond. A ban on non-compete agreements would help address the shortage of obstetricians and gynecologists in the country by allowing these professionals to work more flexibly, particularly in underserved communities. Black and American Indian and Alaska Native (AIAN) women have higher rates of pregnancy-related death compared to White women . Their pregnancy-related mortality rates are about two to three higher, compared to the rate for White women (Black and AIAN rates are 41.4 and 26.5, respectively, vs. 13.7 for White women per 100,000 live births). These disparities increase by maternal age. A ban on non-complete would increase patient access to care and improve maternal and prenatal health outcomes. Furthermore, a ban on non-compete agreements would promote innovation in obstetrics and gynecology by encouraging competition and allowing healthcare providers to freely share their ideas and collaborate with others. This could lead to new and better treatments for a range of maternal and prenatal health conditions. In conclusion, a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements for obstetricians and gynecologists

	is a crucial step towards improving maternal and prenatal health outcomes in the United States. By increasing access to experienced and specialized healthcare professionals and promoting innovation in the field, we can help ensure that all women receive the high-quality care they deserve during one of the most important times of their lives. * From the CDC and the National Center for Health Statistics: "In 2021, 1,205 women died of maternal causes in the United States compared with 861 in 2020 and 754 in 2019. The maternal mortality rate for 2021 was 32.9 deaths per 100,000 live births, compared with a rate of 23.8 in 2020 and 20.1 in 2019."  "Racial Disparities in Maternal and Infant Health: Current Status and Efforts to Address Them." https://www.kff.org/racial-equity-and-health-policy/issue-brief/racial-disparities-in-maternal-and-infant-health-current-status-and-efforts-to-address-them%"
Mark	"I've worked in the IT industry for over 40 years, the sales side, and the extensive use of non-compete clauses, or some version thereof, are targeted specifically at the causes and outcomes cited in the proposed rule change. I am 100% in support of the proposal to eliminate this practice and believe that it will go far to alleviate a host of concerns in my industry alone."
Richard	"Please ban non-complete clauses. They are a tool used by companies to control their work force by limiting pay and options for job opportunities. The very idea of a non-complete clause is the antithesis of a free market capitalistic society. They allow companies to lazily control their workforce through fear rather than inspiring them through competition and innovation. True leaders don't force loyalty, they manifest it by their example."

Lori	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. Hello, I have never written into the FTC to comment before. I am an MD- I graduated from Medical School in 2007, completed my internal medicine residency in 2010 and my hematology/oncology fellowship in 2013. Following fellowship, I joined a private hematology/bone marrow transplant practice in Denver Colorado, in order to be closer to family and get help raising my three children. In Denver, there are only two hematology/bone marrow transplant clinical practices- one is private and one is at the University. After starting at the private practice, I realized almost immediately that it was a bad fit- the partners were all older men, there was a paternalistic, old fashioned approach to medicine, and contrary to their promises, I could not pursue research in their group. Unfortunately, my contract with the private practice included a non-compete clause, essentially banning me from employment within a 15 mile radius for 2 years. I hired a lawyer and was told that it was a solid non-compete, and that if I tried to work for the University I would likely be sued. I was trained as a hematology/bone marrow transplant specialist and had nowhere else to go. Due to the non-compete, our family of five was essentially compelled to leave Denver- both sets of grandparents lived there and my children would have had tons of support. I am now faculty at Stanford University in California. All of this is due to a ridiculous non-compete clause and the fear that it generated for me and my family. These are predatory relics from the past. I am a highly educated physician and was totally unprepared to deal with this- how can you possibly expect young people and the general work force to navigate these insane and totally unfair legal clauses? PLEASE, PLEASE, PLEASE OVERTURN THE TERRIBLY UNJUST AND INHUMANE NON-COMPETE CLAUSE. I don't want anyone to experience what I did- it makes me feel awful just thinking about it."

Michael	"Please ban blanket non-compete clauses. Most workers do not take trade secrets with them to new jobs. Non-compete clauses punish workers who look for better working conditions and higher pay at other companies. Please stand up for hard-working Americans, not the faceless corporate interests which care only about profit and shareholder return."
Beth	"The FTC's Non-compete clause rule is a move to support individual's freedom instead of supporting corporations who more and more frequently are enslaving people for the corporations own needs and controlling the US citizens with ties and agreements with the US government because of the power of big money."
Nadir	"Non competes 100% stifle innovation"
David	"I believe this change is one important step forward in making us more competitive as a nation. Especially in the current environment where competition is on a global scale against far less constrained countries and economies, and when technology is enabling rapid turnover in almost every vertical and opening the door for entrepreneurs that are the ones most likely to accelerate innovation. If I, as employee, leave a company and go create a breakthrough that competes directly with my former employer, there is nothing that stops that employer from acquiring me. Most large incumbents have "innovation" arms that create very small, incremental gains but tend never to disrupt. I always advocated that my past company build a venture arm that partnered with startups in the same or adjacent spaces that we could foster (without meddling to their detriment) and support through to an exit with our acquisition at a fair but discounted price. We were a $5B company and I was advocating for a $5 - $10M fund annually, but they wanted to do it all in-house, like that was going to work! Even if some come up with really good reasons why this shouldn't be done, I'd say nothing is permanent and we could run a one to two decade experiment to see if this doesn't increase competition and accelerate innovation and growth versus other economies, understanding that it'll is just one piece of a number of other policy changes that could be made to increase competition and disrupt the too-powerful and stodgy incumbents."
Priti	"Noncompete clause needs to be removed from physician contracts as it hinders freedom to practice and serve patients, forcing physicians to work in places that they do not prefer and prevents patients from accessing services from competent physicians who wish to care for them. It is often misused tool by employers (especially corporate type) to manipulate and threaten physicians and affects morale of physicians and ultimately affects patient care adversely."

bruce	"I fully support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, and applaud the Commission for recognizing and proposing to deal with these widespread and harmful restrictions. My comments regard Section 910.1(0, the exception from the proposed Rule for the franchisor-franchisee relationship, which I believe is harmful and unnecessary and should be removed from the final Rule. I have submitted my complete comments as an attachment. Attachments non-compete comment"
Rajan	"I strongly support the proposed ban on non-compete agreements. As presently constituted, these are significantly hampering our economic competitiveness as well as individuals' wage-earning potential."
Hazem	"I was an Director of Engineering at Honeywell living in CA. In October 2020, my position was eliminated. I was offered severance pay contingent on signing a non-compete. This non-compete has very restrictive clauses that prevented me for being able to get a job. It also prevents me for life from ever recommending people that I have ever worked with at Honeywell. I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Darrell	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses result in economic monopolies. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and hann working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Kenneth	"Please prevent non-compete clauses! Labor is a product and we have the right to a free market too!"
Bryn	"I am a freelance professional novelist and short story writer with seventeen years' worth of experience in the field of traditional publishing, where the equivalent to a non-compete generally takes two forms. For short fiction, it is a period of exclusivity (generally ranging from three months to, at the extreme end, eighteen months) during which the writer is barred from reprinting the story anywhere else, usually with an exception carved out for Year's Best anthologies. For novels, it is an option clause that gives the current publisher an exclusive first submission of the author's next work; the specifics of the exclusivity vary and are often a point of negotiation for the author's agent, as they can be anything from "Author's next novel- length work in this series" to "Author's next novel-length work in this genre" to "Author's next novel-length work" (of any sort whatsoever). The option clause usually mandate certain spans of time: for example, one of my current contracts specifies that Publisher will have thirty days to consider the proposal, and if they make an offer, thirty days in which to negotiate, after which point, if an agreement cannot be reached, I am free to submit the work elsewhere

	-- but it also specifies that this process will not conunence sooner than thirty days after Publisher's acceptance of the final book covered by this contract. The short story exclusivity is rarely a problem except when (as in the case of the eighteen months cited above) it runs excessively long. The option clause for a novel, however, does have a negative effect. Because of the delay imposed by waiting for the final book of the current contract to be accepted, then even if I am highly productive, the option clause potentially bars me from selling a new work yet (if the clause is worded too broadly), thereby slowing down my career: I can't submit a new proposal to any other publisher until my current one passes on or fails to make an acceptable offer for that pitch -- a process which contractually will take up to sixty days once I can actually submit the proposal to them. In practice, it often takes far longer. The pressure of courtesy towards an editor with whom one is already working means that authors and agents are encouraged to wait for a reply, even if more than thirty days have elapsed, lest they leave ill will in their wake. The ill will matters a great deal because the field of fiction publishers has been steadily shrinking; there are only about five large houses left, and so alienating one is a massive blow to one's publishing prospects. Some years ago, I spent five months waiting for my then-current editor to reject a proposal I had sent her -- a delay that significantly affected my forward progress with both that concept and my novel publishing career in general, leaving me scrambling to arrange a new proposal lest I wind up not publishing anything at all for an extended period of time. And even the sixty-day delay serves increasingly little purpose as the field of traditional publishing shifts: agents are now saying publicly that authors should not expect to continue working with the same editor and publisher for more than one or perhaps two books. Option clauses are locking authors into behaviors crafted in the days of extended professional relationships, while the other side fails to hold up the implicit bargain of that continued partnership. They are likely not as detrimental to the careers of novelists as the sort of non-compete often envisioned when that term comes up, but I believe they have indeed become detrimental."
Diem	"This is discrimination against physicians"
Khanh	"I agree with banning non-compete for all specialties."
Tran	"We should ban non-compete"
Sheldon	"Ban non-compete clauses. Not only do they stifle workers and industries, but also the whole economy. Many thanks for stopping it."
Rohit	"Please ban non competes. They are unfair to entrepreneurs and give too much power to companies."
Mauricio	"As a semi-retired doctor who lives in the United States and practiced medicine outside of the country, I strongly support a nationwide ban on non- compete agreements for healthcare workers and doctors in the U.S. In the country where I practiced, such agreements do not exist, and I saw firsthand the benefits of a system that promotes fair competition and enhances healthcare workers mobility."

	Non-compete agreements limit healthcare workers' ability to advance their careers and pursue new opportunities. This can ultimately harm patient outcomes and impede healthcare innovation and professional career advancement. In addition, these agreements can make it more difficult for small private practices to hire doctors and nurses, reducing patient access to care. Healthcare workers should have the ability to pursue the best opportunities for their careers, without fear of being restricted by non-compete agreements. This can ultimately lead to a more vibrant healthcare industry, with more diverse perspectives and innovative solutions to healthcare challenges. A ban on non-compete agreements would increase patient access to care and improve clinical outcomes, too. Overall, as a semi-retired doctor who practiced medicine outside of the United States, I believe that a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements would be a positive step for the American healthcare industry. By promoting fair competition, enhancing healthcare workers' ability to advance their careers and pursue new opportunities, and encouraging entrepreneurship and innovation, such a ban could lead to better patient outcomes, greater innovation, and a more vibrant healthcare industry in the United States."
Rick and Sharon	"People argue, mostly the Republican and Libertarian Parties, that the market place should set wages, well, non-compete labor contracts are 180 degrees removed from that argument, because non-compete clauses add downward pressure to next job wage negotiations. We support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! Support true market forces setting wages. Non-compete interferes with one to one wage negotiations where no union is involved."
David	"I am an independent contractor who was forced to sign a non-compete clause as part of a contract. These are terrible clauses. My employer included a 12-month extension of this clause to all clients in the industry following my termination of employment. Although the terms were broad and likely not enforceable in court, I have chosen not to engage in additional work until the expiration of this agreement due to the threat of litigation. That threat extends beyond the 12-month period because of the statute of limitations for enforcement. So a contract that I held for about a year can have an impact on my ability to do work under threat of litigation for multiple years. If you are going to limit this proposed rule, please make sure that it applies to all independent contractors."
Ray	"The FTC estimates that the Non-Compete Clause Rule would: Increase workers' earnings by nearly $300 billion per year, save consumers up to $148 billion annually on health care costs, and double the number of companies founded by a former worker in the same industry. In the US, worker's pay and rights are eroded by corporate greed and the lobbying of laws to weaken unions. For too long now, workers have been exploited by Non-Compete Clauses. It's bad enough that corporations, through free trade agreements, ship the world to exploit workers through low wages and long work hours in countries where governments permit it. We don't need US workers being used to ensure company profits. Yes, labor will always be the most costly issue for capital and that's simply

	natural. Capital needs labor even in an age of automation and A.I. Labor needs to be respected and heard, not exploited. Only then will labor greatly benefit a company. Make sure the new rule is approved and remains enforced."
Bethany	"I fully support a ban on non competes at the federal level. I myself work in a state where non competes are unenforceable, which has allowed me flexibility and growth throughout my career. As a physician, I have heard countless stories from my colleagues regarding how harmful these non competes are. I know a surgeon who was forced to take a 15% pay cut at the beginning of the pandemic. If he would have refused, he would have faced moving his wife and four kids during an unpredictable and unprecedented time when, especially for kids, stability was needed to maintain basic mental health. I know a specialized radiologist whose employer has lost out on contracts to the competing entity in her region. She may lose her job due to lack of productivity. This would mean having to move her 13 year old son hours away from the oncologist and rehabilitation specialists who have treated his medulloblastoma, or stay and wait out a non compete, but lose the health insurance tied to her job that is needed for her son to survive. The current field for this is certainly not level. Even if a non compete is not enforceable or there's a loophole, who has the deeper pockets? Not the individual, but the corporation that wrote the non compete in the first place. A contract is supposed to be a mutual agreement that protects the interests of both parties. However, the employee does not have the bargaining power or leverage to negotiate away a clause that clearly only benefits the employer. The employer then has less incentive to ensure a better product, in this instance: healthcare. The physicians are actually offering the product, the service which requires a unique blend of skills. If the physician is not receiving the resources necessary from their employer to continue to provide that product or service, the employer is able to push out the physician without worrying about losing the paying patient and also without worrying about having to actually improve the resources needed from the employer to maintain or improve the quality of the healthcare. Some argue that non competes are necessary to protect business interests related to recruiting and retaining specialized roles in any industry. This is simply not true and is a fallback position that again allows employers to avoid creative innovation. In the state in which I work, again where non competes are not enforceable at the state level, I have seen many other recruitment techniques used: for example, sign on bonuses that are forgiven proportionally after a defined number of years of employment, or relocation or student loan repayment assistance. These are carrots that serve as a basis for a more mutually beneficial relationship for all than the stick of a non compete. Essentially, the name says it all: non compete. Why do we continue to allow a mechanism that states in its name that it contradicts the ethos on which we have built commerce in this nation? The federal ban on non competes will serve to promote healthy competition in a marketplace that sorely needs it to improve standards of living for direct employees, as well as standards of healthcare for all."

KIMBERLY	"As a California resident I'm lucky to live where these non compete clauses are illegal already. I think every American deserves this right! It impedes on our right to earn a living."
Joan	"I did sign a non-compliance (NC) agreement when I worked for Intel and fortunately for me, it didn't affect me but I often wondered about my friends who left the company to work elsewhere, how draconian was the clause? The idea that the NC is being foisted on people for any kind of work is ridiculous. This is just a corporation or business' idea of servitude. This flies in the face of capitalism of which we pride ourselves. Why is it that a hairdresser can't work at another salon whereas our government representatives can hire themselves to the highest bidder as soon as they leave office? This is definitely a case of "ok for me but not for you" of which we accuse our government representatives. I had no idea that folks outside the tech field had to sign these enslavement contracts. This must be struck down,"
Oren	"The noncompete has disrupted many veterinarians' lives. They should be made completely illegal."
Matthew	"I 100% support this new rule. Outlaw all non compete agreements, so corporations and employers can't exploit thier workers and suppress thier wage growth. Any worker should always have the option to leave thier current employment and go to either a competitor or another company working in their field of experience. Especially if thier current employer is taking advantage of them or any myriad of good reasons to leave a job. These agreements serve the employers and not the people. It should be the other way around. Employees should have more bargaining power when it comes to employment and"
Benjamin	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 I am for the non-compete clause rule. Non-compete clauses unfairly discriminate against workers and limit their freedom to achieve their real worth while frequently allowing employers to uncompetitively hire their replacements."
Big Iron	"I support banning non-competes uniformly. We should not be encouraging monopolistic behavior as that reduces incentives to provide good services and/or products."
Alex	"Hi, I'm writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Associations's (AHA) attempt to exclude physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. Physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule. They should not be exempt from this needed worker protection as it greatly limits their ability to negotiate their contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over physicians in the marketplace. There is a large increase in physician burnout and allowing the market place to be more free would allow physicians more freedom and flexibility. Additionally, the last time an exemption of this nature was granted by the lobbying from the American Hospital Association (Jung v AAMC 2004) resulted in decades of delay for improving resident physicians' ability for fair wages and benefits; this is still an active struggle today. Please do not make the same mistake again for physicians of today and the future. Thank you, A concerned resident physician"

Jen	"I worked with a Multi Level Marketing "MLM" (Young Living) who has made it impossible to share any other MLM opportunity regardless of if it is competing or not. I am a naturopath practitioner who offers multiple modalities. When I shared another non-competing health supporting modality that happens to be offered in the MLM structure, they terminated me. The first reason was because I offered a product that was competing. When I proved to them that it was not competing, they claimed that the "Intent of use" of that product was competing. When I pointed out that the product I shared is exactly like another company that they allow others to share that they consider non-competing they changed what the term "non-competing" means and that it was because I offered a competing BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY to their customers. This was not the case at all since I never offered the business opportunity at all in the one post, nor the one email I sent that got me terminated. I now must wait 12 months to even share this other product with anyone. As a practitioner this is harmful to my practice, to my clients, and also to my ability to make a living. In this day and age where most people are purchasing online, it is not right to have these non-competes in place. People need to have freedom to purchase and sell what they choose to. MLMs should not be under different rules just because they have an opportunity attached to them. People should have the right and freedom to share what they want to share if it works for them. Please consider banning non-compete clauses for those in the MLM workspace. Attachments Screen Shot 2023-02-25 at 10.32.23 AM"
Jordan	"Hello, I hope this message finds you all in good health. Dear FTC, I believe non-compete's in contracts and offers should no longer exist in the form that they currently do. At the very least they should not be as widely used as they are. There are fringe cases where this can be used for example if you have recipes or trade secrets, there should be stipulations like non- compete agreements detailing the field you need to stay away from and for how long. However, in practice many non-compete clauses stifle creativity while almost completely eliminating competition. I believe as American citizens, it is one of our few and just rights to engage in a free market.... Well freely. A non-compete agreement goes against that entirely."
Steve	"Competition is the basis for free enterprise. Please enact this rule."
Caitlin	"Physicians should not be excluded from the ban on non-compete clauses. It is unconscionable that a physician hoping to leave a practice would be forced to uproot their family and life just to continue their work in a different setting. Physicians are already unprotected from many abuses not allowed in other fields, and to exclude us from the ban on non-compete clauses would help no one except for the hospitals- patients would certainly not benefit. Non- compete clauses are restrictive of freedom and the pursuit of happiness and hamper innovation."

Cora	"The FTC should side with workers and ban the use of noncompete clauses in future employment contracts and void such clauses in existing contracts."
Jaibir	"This needs to be done it's non competes give big corporations way to much power. I 100% support a ban on non competes."
Dimitri	"Non-Compete Clauses are not justifiable. An employee has expertise and capabilities independently of their current job. In most cases, the expertise predates current employment. For example, non-compete clauses for MDs and surgeon MDs. If changing jobs between health organizations, non- compete clauses require effectively switching cities. That is a common consequence and prevents people from seeking better employment. Such a non- compete clause encourages employers to offer low salary increases and benefits. To the extent that employers require employees to sign non-compete clauses, it is a form of an oppressive requirement. Non-compete clauses do not belong in a free country. Employers wrongly assert that someone's current job capabilities were gained in the current job. That is a wrong assertion."
Lee	"I was just starting out in my career when I finally got a part time job in my field of geology. Unfortunately, it didn't last long and I was let go. But because of a non compete agreement I had to sign I couldn't take another job in my field even though I had a good lead on one. Instead I had to take a job as a waitress making less than minimum wage. Non compete clauses unfairly hurt workers and should be banned. Thank you. Sincerely, Lee"
Stephen	"As an individual, and family, negatively affected by an illegal, unenforceable, far-reaching noncompete employment clause, I am ecstatic to see changes being made to support individuals, businesses, ingenuity, and financial freedom. I previously worked for Kalamazoo Anesthesiology, PC in Kalamazoo, Michigan. In order to gain employment, I was forced into a 2 year, 50 mile radius from city center noncompete agreement with the ability to legally moonlight. There was no negotiating around this agreement. They had artfully crafted it over decades. I eventually learned their reputation for litigation against anyone who leaves, whether or not in violation of an unenforceable noncompete agreement. The fear created prevented people from leaving. Meanwhile, wages were dramatically cut, we were forced to start paying for our benefits (including health insurance, something we didn't previously pay for), and we were required to work ever-increasing hours. My typical week, excluding the occasional weekend Call shifts, were 52-55 hours. With a weekend call included, I easily surpassed 70 hours a week. When I tried to begin a business unrelated to their practice, and lawfully within the moonlighting clause, they threatened to fire me and "sue me into the ground." They have single handedly prevented hundreds of individuals from gainful employment and the ability to support their families. My family and I had to downsize our home twice as a result of inflation, increasing prices on consumer goods, and ever-shrinking wages. I picked up extra hours and shifts just to stay afloat financially. Noncompetes will always hurt employees. My employers on the other hand, continued to give themselves higher wages and large bonuses the whole time, all off the backs of employees like me. I applaud the efforts to end such agreements, to protect employees and the freedoms each should enjoy, and am willing to speak to anyone willing to listen."

Gary	"Dear Commissioners, Employers can write effective non-disclosure agreements that protect trade secrets without affecting the employment prospects of former employees with unnecessarily onerous non-compete agreements. As you know, intellectual property law is very specific and a holder or assignee of intellectual property, including patents, trademarks, trade dress and trade secrets, has primary responsibility for identifying and protecting specific claims. Blanket restrictions on departing employees would often be unenforceable but most prospective employees are not in a position to resist non-compete agreements before accepting a position or to defend their rights by disputing the enforceability of an agreement after leaving a job. Thank you for considering my comment."
Meghan	"Noncompete clauses are part of a system that allows hospitals to bypass normal free market forces. These non-compete clauses worsen physician shortages by forcing people to stay in an undesirable working environment or move their lives/families. Physicians who choose to leave are then often just out of the work force despite a need for patient care in the area. They also disincentivize hospitals from responding to physician concerns about their working environment, compensation, or safe patient care. This practice needs to end for both for profit and non-profit hospitals. Excluding non-profits does not address the underlying issues and these institutions should be accountable to their employees and patients the same way for profit hospitals are. One physician leaving a hospital does not place undue burden on a hospital system - and if multiple physicians are leaving, then the institution clearly needs to change! Getting rid of non-competes will force hospitals to spend more time dealing with issues that impact physicians and patient care, which is ultimately important in the recruitment and retention of physicians in the workforce. Without retention of physicians, the ongoing physician shortages will worsen and people will have longer wait times and more restricted access to care."
Jacklynn	"Non-compete clauses force workers to continue working in jobs even in the face of abusive and often illegal practices by the employer, because the worker cannot get another job that utilizes their skills due to the non-compete clause. Non-compete clauses are purely evil and serve no legitimate purpose, the only purpose is to keep employees as chattel and prevent them from taking their business elsewhere. This is why non-compete clauses are already illegal in California and they should be illegal everywhere."
Mel	"The non compete is an unfair and unconstitutional demand on workers. Please get rid of it."
Craig	"My mom nms a tax business in Iowa and was sued by a competitor using non-compete language. The suit failed, as it should have. Non-compete restrictions are a form of restraint on trade and should be banned nationwide. The right to contract is fundamental to the exercise of citizenship - it should not be constrained by companies that seek merely a leg up on competition. If companies are worried about losing intellectual property when people leave, they should do a better job of caring for employees instead of using anti-competitive laws to force employees to stay."

Jim	"Allowing Corporations, or any business, another opportunity to meddle with, or hinder in any way, an employee's freedom of choice, in changing jobs, or moving on, is another point in the punishing and restrictive nature of Capitalism, and the cold-hearted individuals who support it without control. Stop this practice cold, immediately. No non-compete agreements/contracts whatsoever."
Ronnie	"Non-compete agreements should be ILLEGAL."
Gregory	"Dear FTC, As a medical professional I would commonly be targeted for non-compete clauses but only the brave leadership of my state has protected me. There is no way I could seek fair market compensation for the work I provide while staying near my family without these protections. Please extend this right to all American workers and liberate us to work as we see fit."
Lorin	"Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Martha	"I support banning non-compete clauses in labor contracts. It just makes sense."
Xuan-Binh	"Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare. particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare providers. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Secondly, non-compete clauses can reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. In summary, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations (which I have personally suffered under) as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities. This new rule apply to non profit organizations as well."

Lien	"As a physician in training, soon to be out on the job market, I support banning of the noncompete clause. It is detrimental to our healthcare system overall, limits physician practice area, limits our living options and creates more inequities in the long run. No amount of $$ lobbied is worth the lives of hundred of millions down the line. If physicians are not well compensated, especially during training, burnout rate would likely climb and the problem of physician shortage is only going to get worse. Please ban the noncompete clauses!"
S	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompete agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements. One only has to look at California to witness the vibrancy and higher salaries that disallowing noncompetes creates. Banning noncompetes also begins to address leveling the playing field by not allowing companies to artificially suppress the market. Companies should be able to rise or fall on their own merits, based on the superiority of their product, not because they have put their proverbial thumb on the scale. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Rex	"The current era of non-compete clauses is stifling for professionals. In the area of medicine, jobs are more and more linked to large corporate entities that own health systems that have been allowed to eliminate competition in large geographic areas, not just cities. As a result, physician non-compete clauses have limited economic opportunities and worsened working conditions for physician employees because they are unable to exercise their right to seek better employment opportunities without leaving their established homes. As well, most employers mandate these clauses and do not provide any financial consideration in doing so. Lastly, by forcing physicians to leave an area to seek better employment, we are worsening healthcare shortages in these areas. Your doctor should have an amicable and enjoyable relationship with the hospital they are employed at. Patients are not served well by physicians who are disgruntled and forced to provide services to a health care system that has enslaved them to their entity due to unfair employment practices. Certainly there will be many comments from lobbyists and health care administrators who have spend decades undermining physicians as an important part of their business. They do not want us having the same employment rights as nurses and other skilled workers because they have long benefited from the physician workforce and their control over our employment terms."
Alex	"As a worker and union activist, I ask that you please vote to implement the non-compete clause rule. Businesses already exert too much control over the lives of workers; limiting their future employment opportunities only serves the bottom line of businesses at the expense of their workers. Do the right thing to help restore the middle class after decades of attack from business interests."

Debra	"Non-compete clauses increase the imbalance of power between employers and employees, leaving working Americans with fewer employment options. Please ban non-compete clauses. Thank you!"
Sydney	"Every employee should have the right to work in a supportive, friendly, safe, work environment with decent wages and fair discipline. If an employer promotes practices involving any type of discrimination, harassment, sexual abuse, inequality or disregard for a workers' physical and mental Health and safety, then their employees should have the legal right to leave and report what is going on at their workplace. It is time that we fight harder to crack down on abuse in the workplace as well as corporate greed, as well as regulate how big the CEO to worker pay gap should be."
Shamit	"Physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule. They should not be exempt from this needed worker protection as it greatly limits their ability to negotiate their contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over physicians in the marketplace. There is a large increase in physician burnout and allowing the market place to be more free would allow physicians more freedom and flexibility. Additionally, the last time an exemption of this nature was granted by the lobbying from the American Hospital Association (Jung v AAMC 2004) resulted in decades of delay for improving resident physicians' ability for fair wages and benefits; this is still an active struggle today. Please do not make the same mistake again for physicians of today and the future. Signed, Resident physician pgyl"
Marilyn	"To be fair to workers, I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses."
Doug	"The FTC should make non compete clauses illegal. These clauses hurt workers and treat them like slaves. Please make these clauses illegal."
Todd	"I have had to turn down several job offers that would have provided substantial pay increases over the last year due to the non-compete agreement I was required to sign by my current company. Not only has this prevented me from being able to advance my career, but it has also caused friction in many of my professional relationships."
Nina	"Non-compete clauses are horrible for doctors. They force doctors to choose between staying at a job they don't like or staying in their community. This is one of many factors that leads to burnout and dissatisfaction among physicians."
Monica	"This conunent is on behalf of my fiancé who is on a non-compete agreement. His employer is based in Maryland but his work site is in California. He is paid only $3900 per month. It is very difficult to live with this salary in California. He is paying his student debt as well. However, he cannot change jobs because of the non-compete agreement. Thank you very much for proposing a rule to ban all the non-compete agreements. It would be really helpful if he can come out of this agreement and work for a better company that pays him well."

Rithika	"I strongly support banning the current rules regarding non-compete clauses. The way it stands now, employers and large corporations are too easily able to suppress wages and take advantage of their workers that way. This will allow for healthy competition in the market and infuse many more workers into the labor market, allowing workers a sense of dignity as well. There is no reason not to move forward with banning non-competes, unless your true interest is protecting corporations over the citizens you represent"
Beverly	"Please ban non competes for physicians. As a retired physician I see the non completes as decreasing patient choice, restricting access to physicians and trapping physicians in jobs where they are not able to provide quality patient care. New physicians graduate with so much debt they are forced to take these jobs with non compete clauses. Thank you"
Christopher	"Banning non-compete agreements would not only protect employees' career prospects, but also foster innovation and entrepreneurship, promote competition and consumer welfare, and support social mobility and economic growth . By limiting the ability of talented and ambitious individuals to start new ventures, non-compete agreements can have a chilling effect on the creation of new businesses and the development of new ideas, which is harmful for the economy. Additionally, non-compete agreements can lead to lower wages and benefits for workers, perpetuating economic inequality and reducing their ability to improve their economic status over time. This can result in decreased consumer spending, ultimately harming the overall economy. Moreover, non- compete agreements can decrease competition and harm consumer welfare. Companies may maintain market power and charge higher prices for goods and services when employees are prohibited from working for competitors. Finally, non-compete agreements can limit social mobility and economic growth. Workers may become trapped in low-paying or unsatisfying positions, which can limit their ability to improve their economic status and pursue their dreams. Non-compete agreements can also discourage workers from moving to new areas where their skills are in demand, which can stifle regional economic growth and development. Theretbre, banning non-compete agreements would provide employees with the freedom to pursue their careers, start new businesses, and contribute to the economy in meaninglill ways, promoting innovation, competition, and economic growth. By protecting the rights of workers and promoting a more dynamic and competitive economy, banning non-compete agreements would be beneficial for the economy as a whole."
Gary	"Obviously non-compete agreements are anti competitive & a threat to the public & damaging to our democracy. Please prohibit them. Thanks"
Pranav	"The FTC should ban non-compete clauses especially in the tech sector and should make it easier for large tech corporations to hire anyone from a competitor. support the ban!"

Roxanne	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Karen	"Please stop this unfair practice that is hurting average Americans, it is un-American and abusive. Do the right thing please the intent of this law is not to hamstring workers with nothing to do with high level secrets"
James	"Under 910.1(b)(2), the examples of de facto non-compete clauses, it is important to list non-solicitation covenants. These restrictive covenants hann not only workers but also the clients they serve, by preventing workers from separating from their firms and serving their clients when it is efficient to do so. A decision not to enforce non-solicitation covenants is not without precedent. The courts will generally not enforce restrictive covenants on lawyers, due to a strong bias toward the rights of clients to choose who will represent them."
Rotem	"I believe that removing all non compete clauses or making them unenforceable will improve competition for workers and improve the life of ordinary Americans"
Kaylynn	"Noncompete agreement s should in almost all cases be illegal and against public policy They are used to oppress workers and prevent them from seeking better employment and working conditions. End them please."
Tracy	"Non-competes are hannful to the worker. Especially tech workers where they are common. They hurt the careers of works in very quantifiable ways to the benefit of their large corporate employers in non-quantifiable ways who don't need any more legal help. Non-competes ruin the free market for the labor of the individual."
michael	"Non-competes need to go away as they are usually over broad and in many niche industries may deprive one of changing jobs altogether."
Jennifer	"I agree with the FTC's decision to ban non-complete clauses. Non-compete clauses can limit workers' ability to seek better job opportunities and advance their careers, and can stifle innovation and competition in the job market. These clauses often disproportionately affect low-wage workers who have limited bargaining power and may not have the financial means to challenge them. By banning non-compete clauses, the FTC is taking a positive step towards promoting a more open and competitive job mark that benefits both workers, will spur innovation, and boost the economy as whole."
Tawny	"Employers say they need non-compete agreements to protect trade secrets and investments they put into growing their businesses, including training workers. Rubbish. Employers in the states that already ban them (such as California) show no sign of being more reluctant to invest in their businesses or train workers. The real purpose of non-competes is to make it harder (or impossible) for workers to bargain with rival employers for better pay or working conditions. As we learn again and again, capitalism needs guardrails to survive. Unfettered greed leads to monopolies that charge high prices, suppress wages, and corrupt politics."

Keith	"I think that non-compete clauses are un-American. Workers should be free to work for any that they want without any reprisals. I live in California in a job that I like for over 35 years. I see workers in a job and then move on to a different job because of whatever. They should be allowed to do this."
Ronald	"I strongly support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. Non-competes depress wages, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn more."
Judith	"I am in support of banning noncompete clauses. I have not personally had a job governed by a non-compete clause, however I have been in non-personal circumstances one involving job another medical care in which the person in power made a move difficult or impossible to move by directly contacting the personnel of the new site with falsifying information. This type of situation is crippling to the individual and deprives them of their personal right "to the pursuit of happiness". I find non-compete clauses to be equivalent and think it imperative to ban it"
Ricky	"I am an education consultant and author. I work with schools, school districts, and state departments of education across the country helping them to develop trauma-informed systems of support for children and families. My publisher offered me a contract where they would be my sole representative, managing all my consulting contracts. In exchange, I received a salary and benefits which provided considerable stability for a consultant. However, they required that I sign a non-compete agreement. I want to share how profoundly unfair and legally questionable a non-compete agreement is, especially in this circumstance. I am the owner of the intellectual property of my work. I had published my book and began my consulting work prior to signing the contract with them. They own none of the intellectual property related to my consulting work and yet want to forbid me from moving on from our agreement. Their non-compete agreement (and others like it) infringes upon many other financial and legal areas (in this instance intellectual property rights) and is harmful to clients, employees, and future employers. Please ban non-compete agreements."
Carol	"Non-compete clauses are immoral and should be illegal, particularly in medicine. Why should we be beholden to a job long after we've left it? These employers are counting on our unwillingness to uproot our families and move out of state to trap us into horrible working conditions. Perhaps if they instead worked on bettering the working environment, they wouldn't need non-compete clauses. Thank you, FTC, for looking into scrapping this barrier to trade and freedom."

Imani	"Non-Compete agreements go against the free market principles of capitalism by depressing wages, and amount to corporate welfare!"
Joy	"I hope the businesses that require Non-Complete Clauses for employees would step into their shoes. Would you be willing to see your grandchildren locked into a job that FORCES them to stay, working AGAINST THEIR WILL? There ARE valid reasons YOUR GRANDCHILD might need to quit his or her job- Such as SAFETY, HEALTH, LOW PAY, ABUSE BY A SUPERVISOR, ETC. It does conic up as an issue that affects the quality of the workplace AND the employee! Please DELETE Non-Complete Clauses Rules that terrorize some employees. Forcing work is NOT the American way!!"
Manuel	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, Ban non-compete clauses! They are undemocratic, un-American and are bad for the economy. Do it for Americans."
Chuck	"Stop making employees slaves or indentured servants by requiring non compete clauses. If Congress can trade stocks based on inside infonnation how can you in good conscience ban workers from better pay."
Stephen	"Non-compete agreements must be prohibited in all cases. To not do so is exploitation of the working class. California has it correct with business and professions code 16600."
Caithness	"As a physician I hole heartedly support this legislation. Non-compete clauses stifle small businesses, force people to stay in jobs that do not suit them contributing to physician burnout, and frankly are counter to capitalism and democracy."
Spencer	"The banning of Non-compete clauses should have bipartisan support. For free market conservatives, non-compete clauses hamper the market's ability to reward the best workers with appropriate pay; requiring them to move out of city or evens state in order to accept a competitor's offer. This disincentives moving on to better pastures and rewards poorly performing companies by retaining workers through artificial and anti-competitive means. As a progressive, one should completely endorse an expansion of worker's rights to freely choose who gets to compensate them for their labor. Frankly the only interests that would be opposed to this would be corporations interested in deflating working conditions and pay. I wholly support the abolition of non-compete clauses in the United States."
Jason	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. It is NOT fair that an employer can enslave an employee against competition. That is as UN-American as it gets. If America is truly going to live up to its promise, then it cannot deny so many of its people the right to compete in the open free marketplace! Non-competes are slavery! Competition is FREEDOM! Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements forever."

Kyle	"Physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule. They should not be exempt from this needed worker protection as it greatly limits their ability to negotiate their contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over physicians in the marketplace. There is a large increase in physician burnout and allowing the market place to be more free would allow physicians more freedom and flexibility. Additionally, the last time an exemption of this nature was granted by the lobbying from the American Hospital Association (Jung v AAMC 2004) resulted in decades of delay for improving resident physicians' ability for fair wages and benefits; this is still an active struggle today. Please do not make the same mistake again for physicians of today and the future."
David	"When starting my company with a business partner, his father included a non-compete clause in our partnership agreement. When my partner had a stroke and was unable to work, we tried to conic up with a reasonable separation agreement. The non compete clause was held like a sword above my head and the father refused all options. This would have prevented me from working in IT in any fashion for 2 years, which was the only thing I was highly proficient at. Due to being in California, the non-compete didn't hold much weight, so we finally pushed to have a reasonable settlement. Had the power of the non-compete clause been there, I would have either been stuck in a nightmare partnership agreement or been unable to work in my field. Everyone should have the same rights to not let these malicious agreements rule their career development and lives. Thank you."
Emily	"I am very grateful to see this. The non. Compete has always been a selfish tool for companies against their employees. Preventing growth and livelihood for the selfishness of the company is immoral. If one's company is a fair and fine place to work then they will not have to worry about employees leaving. I support banning non compete 100% Thanks you."
J	"Do not exclude physicians from the new rule. Doctors are "labor" in the modern consolidated health economy in the same way as other workers in our country and deserve the same labor protections as anyone else. Non-compete clauses in medicine can dramatically restrict physicians' ability to practice medicine in the communities that they live in and have roots in if their relationship with their employer deteriorates. Overall earnings potential is not the only thing that matters and it's truly oppressive that a physician who wants to change jobs wouldn't be able to practice their trade in the place that they live due to a non-compete agreement. Nowadays, many doctors had no choice when deciding to sign a non-compete in the first place because the healthcare system is so consolidated so individual doctors have so little leverage/market power."
Kalyan	"I support this decision"

T	"Non-competes hurts PATIENTS. Not allowing physicians the freedom the leave work environments that are abusive or dangerous without having to uproot themselves and their families means that healthcare systems (aka private equity nowadays) can continue to push substandard and dangerous care instead of allow physicians to do what's right. It also adds to physician shortages when a physician can't stay within their own community if they want to leave their current work situation. ABOLISH non-competes!"
Oren	"None compete clauses are undemocratic and allow corporations to control employment of people instead of getting the best employees by paying them what they are worth."
David	"I am a physician and I have seen how non-compete agreements devastate other physicians. If a physician moves into a major metro area to work for a health system and then decides the work arrangement is not ideal, he/she can be forced to leave the state in some cases to find a suitable replacement job. I have seen this put strain on families where one or both of the parents are physicians and a person needs to relocate for work. Please eliminate non-compete agreements!"
Philippe	"I approve of this proposed rule to ban non compete clauses. Non compete clauses hurt American workers by controlling their labor after their employment ends. This unfairly limits competition in the labor marketplace."
Bradley	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 Non-compete rules are far too restrictive and not in the public interest. They must be stricken."
AnnaLee	"I documented the economic benefits of eliminating non-competes in my 1994 book, Regional Advantage, which compares the rise of Silicon Valley with its East coast counterpart, Route 128 in Massachusetts. I argue that the open flows of talent and ideas within the Silicon Valley ecosystem--aided by the unwillingness of the courts to enforce non-competes--contributed directly to the rapid pace of innovation and new firm formation in Silicon Valley. The Boston area, which by many measures was better positioned to grow (longer industrial history, financial resources, ties to DC and military contracts, etc., was unable to keep up with the pace of technological change in Silicon Valley. The enforcement of non-competes in Massachusetts was a constraint on experimentation and the generation of new ideas, and was consistent with a more autarkic firm structure. In Silicon Valley the founding myth was about the genealogical nature of the region's start-ups (lots of interconnections between engineers who moved from firm to firm easily) while in Boston the founding myth was the bitter lawsuit started by Digital Equipment Corporation (DEC) when the engineer, Edson DeCastro left to start competitor, Data General."
Jake	"This is great! You can't have a free market if you can't control your labor!"
Myra	"Non compete clauses rob employees the opportunity to better their economic situation and should be banned. Employers already have too much power."

Doctor	"This is an incredibly important ruling. Physicians are often binded to their jobs due to non-compete clauses and lose leverage for salary increases. Further, if the job takes advantage of the physician, which most do, the physician needs to leave the area for new work which is unjust."
Christian	"This is a fantastic idea. Employers reserve the right to hire and fire at-will. Employees should have the right to quit for a competitor at will. Democrats should favor this because it's pro worker. Republicans should favor this because it encourages competition in capitalism."
Daniel	"Please ban non-compete clauses and any other provisions that would have a similar effect in employment contracts and MOUs. Depriving individuals from being able to use their experience and knowledge obtained in their work experience from being able to support themselves in the same job in the same industry as their previous job is completely unfair and should be illegal."
Dustin	"This is a way overdue decision. For far too long employers have been able to use people's families against them by forcing them to choose whether to stay at a lower paying, worse job or to move their families since they are blocked from taking a better job in the same area. This will promote wage growth, better benefits for employees, and overall a better life for employees and families. Thank you for enacting this."
Greg	"I'm totally on board with the FTC's plan to ban noncompete agreements at the federal level! Noncompete agreements have been holding workers back for way too long, stopping us from moving up career-wise and making more money. By getting rid of them, we'll be giving American workers a chance to earn more and find better jobs. It's a huge win for the middle and working classes, and it'll help make our economy stronger overall."
Andrew	"Hello Commissioners, Please end non-competes for employees. They force people to travel ridiculous distances One in Texas offered to me,said you couldn't see any of their customers. They had four different clinics in the area. One visit could make someone a customer. You agreed to a $100,000 fine in business expensive friendly arbitration! Let employees be free instead of captured in labor market. Thank you"
Derek	"I fully support banning non-compete agreements in all forms for all companies."
Gwenyth	"I am a part owner of a company, and I am writing in favor of this proposed rule. Non-compete clauses are unethical and un-American. Many workers probably don't even realize what they are signing. But even if workers really and truly understand what they are signing, non-compete clauses are often forced on workers who desperately need a job and are in no position to refuse to agree to the non-compete clause. I realize that a vast array of corporate interests opposes this rule, primarily because they believe that it will hurt ability to make money. Maybe it will; maybe it won't. Either way, non-compete clauses are unfair and should be banned. The New York times has a great article on the obscene consequences of non-compete clauses (https://www.nytimes.com/2023/04/11/opinionifftc-noncompete-clause-nile.html). This article is more eloquent than I can be, so I respectfully ask that you take the examples of real-life American workers that the New York Times documented to heart and vote to approve this new rule. Thank you for your time and consideration. -Gwen"

Molly	"Please disallow non compete clauses. They make it hard for workers to take a job or leave a job and put workers at a disadvantage."
Nancy	"Please ban non-competes except in very, very specific circumstances! They're anti-competitive and give all the benefit to employers, none to workers. It is possible to ban the taking and selling of trade secrets via the court system, while the rapidly expanding non-compete clauses in the country now just make workers dependent on employers for no reason."
Louis	"The FTC should disallow non-compete clauses. They only benefit employers and stifle the marketplace for workers."
Susan	"We need competition in a true capitalist society. Incumbents must not be allowed NonCimpete Agreements. Monopsonies waste resources better used by potential companies."
Paarth	"Non-compete clauses are an abuse of power and entirely evil; they must be made illegal and unenforceable everywhere in the free world, certainly in America."
Nader	"I strongly endorse the elimination of non-compete clauses. They by definition reduce competition, which is the cornerstone of healthy marketplaces. In addition they are often abusive and in some cases directly go against the community good and often drive workers out of communities that need them the most. Please pass this very important regulation."
Mitchell	"Corporate competition for good. Do pass no non compete regulation."
Kaelan	"I was working 3 jobs to make ends meet and had to sign a non-compete agreement with a small- timeTranscription company owned by one woman. Transcription is a skill that is very well suited to freelance work and it would have helped me financially to be able to start my own business doing this if I had not signed this agreement."
Nandita	"Non compete clause prevents physicians from working in the same place or city of work culture gets toxic. Promote fairness, ban nom compete."
Gabriel	"I've witnessed NPRM's harm independent contractors in several states. A ban would protect Yoga instructors and help to regulate abusive employers. Please vote to protect your constituents."

Dror	"Non-competes are un-American, preventing people from pursuing careers as they see fit. Protecting intellectual property, trade secrets, etc. do not need to come at the expense of preventing the free-market decisions of employers and employees choosing to work together. We've had this in California for decades and have the most vibrant job market in the country!"
Kyna	"Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare, particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare providers. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Secondly, non-compete clauses can reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. In summary, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities."
Jacqueline	"I fully support banning non-competes."
David	"Non compete clauses harm the worker, consumer, and economy. They enable companies to obtain a monopoly."
marc	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! Corporations don't want to pay workers what they could earn on an open market, so they make claims about "fostering innovation." It's a load of b.s. Workers describe themselves as "hostages" and "indentured servants" to their bosses. But impacted industries will run their own campaigns in an attempt to keep the rule from being implemented, sometimes even using tricky astroturf tactics that can be hard for the FTC to detect."
Marc	"With the Chamber of Commerce standing in our way, we need as many supporters as possible to submit public comments today and convince the FTC to defend workers from these exploitative contracts."
Jeffrey	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."

Melinda L	"Dear Commissioners just read an article (Opinion) The Great American Labor Trap New York Times about the misuse of this rule as applied to individuals who work outside of the possibility of abusing corporate secrets as I believe the original intent was designed to prevent. They are severely negatively impacted by this misuse. Please in the name of fair trade and democracy amend the perimeters of this rule at your next meeting."
Bruce	"I heartily endorse the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. stealing intellectual property is one thing. simply taking one's expertise with oneself when changing jobs is another thing altogether."
Inder	"A Non compete clause is unacceptable. It goes against every principle the country is based on. Communities are being provided sub optimal care because anon compete and restrictive covenants placed in Physician contracts. This needs to stop."
Mandeep	"I want to get the non compete clause removed in the interest of patients. It affects the patient care. Good doctors are lost. This clause only favors corporations."
Pavel	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
John	"I strongly support the ban on non-compete clauses. Please work to enact and enforce this."
Cathy	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. People should be able to move jobs freely and this policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Gabe	"Non compete agreements are just one more way that billionaire corporations prevent ordinary folks from getting ahead. They are an abomination, should never have been allowed in the first place, and must be eliminated immediately and retroactively"

Derick	"Non-compete should be illegal."
Don	"this is great! please enact this."
Dorea	"Yes please impose/pass the rule banning non-compete clauses/contracts in America. American businesses have gotten ridiculous by imposing such non-compete clauses on average employees. I worked at three large corporations (GTE/Verizon, Praxair and MasterCard) in the 1980s and 1990s and was a director & vice president. NONE of those companies asked me to sign a non-compete clause, even though I sometimes handled or was aware of sensitive information. It is a drag on workers' careers and a drag on our economy. Thank you."
Mark	"Califomia Attorney General Bonta periodically reminds both employers and employees that noncompete agreements are prohibited in the state of California. Highly skilled technical professionals move from firm to firm in the Silicon Valley without being impeded by non-compete clauses. The economic results of the many successful firms in the Valley speak for themselves. Non-competes should be banned nationally."
Shane	"As a top performer, I built a career out of getting noticed for doing an excellent job and getting recruited for more money or an equity position. I recently joined the insurance industry. As such, I signed a non-compete for the first time in my career. I noticed right away there was a sense of complacency within the industry as well as rampant mediocrity. I was able to identify it right away as a symptom of the non-compete clause. My admonition for any company relying on a non-compete: Do a better job and rely on the strength of your workmanship to compete...or lose to somebody who will."
Greg	"The fundamental problem with noncompetes is that they are not arms length negotiations. People need work and do not have the option to negotiate terms of the noncompete so have to sign so that they can feed their families This is a form of extortion and coercion not a negotiated contract. Additionally, if they company wants someone to not compete with them then they need to pay that person a living wage during the time of the noncompete or it should be invalidated. Essentially the company is getting a service (the employees not working for a competitor) without paying thr it. As there isn't an equal exchange for goods again the noncompete should be held invalid."
Eduardo	"Hello, thank you for considering my public submission; My dream job is to work for the Federal Trade Commission, I read information from here regularly and am a proud Immigrant/ US Citizen who is optimistic about the future for American peoples. I'm 29 years old. and thankful for the opportunity to contribute. A non-compete clause rule (NPRM) should be implemented and effective immediately because indirectly as well as directly and subsequently imposes legal restrictions

	limitations on human workers who work in good faith, making them subject to and vulnerable to deceptive schemes that, by design, forfeits a) commercial gain from any works, creations or ideas and b) financial gains from the distribution of the catalogue or records/recorded as data or biometrical intelligence informations, composition. This subsequently makes the worker nothing but a participant or test subject voiding any obligation for the employer to compensate or award, or subsidize, pay, or share publicly tradable securities or royalties. IT is essential for workers to be able to work with natural reward as well as consequence for the creation of their works, IT should be naturally available and optional to decide such fact, this natural option to default should apply to any technological device, that records, documents, reports or captures any biometrical datapoint of a human worker while they are at work, I understand that corporations must act competitive and protect the interests of the respective investors, but this is not entirely in the best interest of the future. Most of the industry and markets that have matured in today's economy have been in growth and development with support of American investors of the last 3 decades. The business giants of the steel, and railroad have made it possible for new industries focused on creating new stuffs. If it wasn't for the much needed ideas and innovations in the steel and rail development, we wouldn't be as strong as we are now as a country. Let's not forget that the Great Depression as an example of what happens when an industry fall under the false notion of "shortage". In order for the United States to avoid repeating this dangerous limiting belief, there needs to be available adequate code and rules like (NPRM) are the epitome of this adequacy. Of course any American would agree logically and unbiasedly that NPRM is vital for future development. It is logical, also that we can't ignore the other big question; who does this "rule" apply to and who does it NOT apply to? I'll try clarify below also, see the attached files of screenshot examples where I'll be exhibiting the case of Apple's copyright code in every software program, and a generalized, vague, disclaimer policy. Lastly, The Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) is the most important subject matter of this decade. IT is the epitome of the of the creation: and by default; the timeless, universal laws that govern the very stuff that make this world and this country. The NPRM should be implemented to its fullest capability at every level of business, in all industry in the United States and should be made immediately effective. History teaches us that competitive limited belief lead us to a Great Depression, the people who make decisions today can contribute to the future of the United States and embracing Non- Compete Clause Rule is a start. Subsequently this will exterminate the infestation of deceptive schemes that have tricked citizens into becoming "a product" and fooled workers into forfeiting natural ability to create. of the plant that grows in the small room with only a small window. The plant will go through whatever obstacle necessary to reach light source. In the words of the late Wallace D Wattles, "That which makes you want more money is the same as that which makes the plant grow; it is life seeking fuller expression. The science of Getting Rich. Attachments Attachment 1 apple policy potentially deceptive for a worker"
Eduardo	"I would like to make a public comment on a recent study, authored in part by a Commission economist, on the value that firms attach to enforceability of noncompete agreements. See Hiraiwa, Lipsitz, Starr, "Do firms value court enforceability of noncompete agreements?" A revealed preference approach,

	(February 20, 2023) available at SSRN: https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4364674. The study presents data and surveys agency attorneys about how new Washington laws (2020) prohibit firm's enforceability of non-compete agreements in courts upon below level earners (790/0 of income earners who earn under 100k annually) furthermore, most (publicly traded firms) who take employees (who earn less than 100k) to court do not depend on using NCA (Non-Compete Agreements) "because firms can use other, related restrictions." The majority of comments submitted by the public participants regarding Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, "Matter No. P201200" also referred to by the "Commission" as "NPRM" - indicates that most comments stand in 'favor' of this proposed rule making because the absence of NPRM limits their rights and limits them from much needed income earning opportunities , in other words 'MOST comments value the laws that prohibit firm's enforceability of non-compete agreements because employees value their natural freedom and natural rights. The laws of 2020 that prohibited firms to enforce NCAs were applicable ONLY to those who earned below 100k, annually, according to the study (authored by Hiraiwa, Lipsitz..) furthermore, most publicly traded firms only enforce NCA's becuae stake holders traditionally value it in the context of public trade. In conclusion, the proposed "NPRM" Matter No. P201200 may be flawed because they do not prohibit enforceability of 'other related' restrictions that can be used to take employees to court. The Federal Trade should prohibit the use of enforceable agreements by any publicly traded firm that offers goods or services that have common use or essential use for human consumers or employees who seek the natural right and freedom to seek increased financial expression."
Katie	"To The Federal Trade Commission- I support the ban of non-compete clauses and the approval of the Federal Trade Commission proposed rule that would ban the use of noncompete clauses in future employment contracts and void such clauses in existing contracts. It is an unfair practice against American Workers who have the right of Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness, which includes the right to work in your community."
Alpana	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. As you know, non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to

	the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care. Thank you for your attention to this important matter."
John	"I strongly support the FTC's proposed restriction of noncompete agreements, which are inherently incompatible with the very foundation of a capitalist society. Restricting any employee's ability to devote their labor to their most promising opportunity is an abuse of power that gives far too much control to employers and incentivizes exploitative practices."
Charlotte	"Regarding Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 - I support prohibiting employers from entering into non-compete clauses with workers, and I support requiring employers to rescind any existing non-compete clauses. I also support requiring employers to inform their employees that their previous non-compete clauses are null and void. Non-compete clauses are exploitative. They function to suppress wages and to stifle economic productivity. We will all be better off without them."
Guillermo	"I am a physician and myself have a noncompete clause on my contract that has caused significant distress to my ability to earn an income based on the work that I choose to do for whom I choose to do it. This should not be legal. Hoping that the right decision is made."
SANJAY	"I URGE THE FTC TO COMPLETELY ELIMINATE ALL NON-COMPETES IN EVERY FIELD ESPECIALLY ION MEDICINE AT ONCE AND FOREVER!- -THEY ARE UN-AMERICAN UNFAIR PUNITIVE TO FAMILIES AND INEFFECTIVE ANYWAY. EVERY COMPETITIVE BUSINESS IN AMERICA RECRUITS AN DSPENDS MONEY TO ADVERTISE ITS WORJERS—THE FACT THAT SOME REMAIN BEHIND IN TEH AREA AND START THEIR OWN OR JOIN OTHER BUSINESSES BENEFITS THE COMMUNITY. WE ARE NOT HERE TO PROMOTE TO PROPOGATE OLIGOPOLIES AND ESPECIALLY NOT IN MEDICINE, WHERE THE PATIENTS CONCERN SHOULD ALWAYD COME FIRST AND IF THERE IS PRE-EXOSTENT MEDICAL SKILL AND TALENT IN AN AREA- -WNY DRIVE IT AWAY?"
Edh	"Right now, noncompete agreements are being unethically used across the country to prevent workers from quitting their jobs for a better offer. Competition drives markets — and when noncompetes eliminate competition in the labor market, employers don't have an incentive to give their workers better pay, working conditions, or benefits. One in five American workers have signed noncompete agreements and it's a problem across industries. From Jiffy Lube mechanics to Amazon warehouse workers, employees across the country are unfairly bound to their jobs by noncompetes. Jimmy John's even tried to use noncompetes to prevent their employees from working at any other establishment that serves sandwiches. A ban on abusive and excessive noncompetes would have a huge positive impact on our economy: Estimates show that banning noncompete agreements could grow paychecks for American workers by nearly $300 billion per year and open up new career opportunities for

	30 million people but the FTC hasn't approved the policy yet. Corporate lobby groups are bitterly opposed to banning noncompete agreements because they want to keep competition for the labor force as low as possible. Several states have already moved to restrict or ban noncompete agreements including the state of Washington. Attorney General Bob Ferguson began investigating noncompete agreements in 2019, and his work led the Washington state legislature to eliminate noncompete agreements for any employee earning less than $100,000 annually. If enacted, this FTC rule would expand Washington's noncompete ban to the entire country — and it would go a step further by eliminating noncompete agreements for all employees regardless of income. I urge the adoption of all noncompete bans across the country. Let the FTC set this new policy."
Benjamin	"I wholeheartedly support this change, individuals should be free to work wherever they choose. Currently businesses have way too much power to exploit workers and this is a necessary step towards reducing that power."
J	"Please do not exclude physicians from this rule. We need this rule as much as anyone else to protect our labor rights and well being. There is absolutely no compelling reason for a hospital to demand non competes from physicians. There is no such thing as a trade secret that is privately held by a hospital that a physician could take elsewhere for a competitive advantage. The American Hopsital Association represents the interests of hospital leadership, not the physicians who provide care that hospitals profit off. of. It can be expensive to recruit and hire a new physician and it is in the interests of their bottom line that they would like to exclude physicians (they would rather force physicians to stay than improve staff-mg and working conditions). Carving out physicians from this rule will only serve the interests of hospital administrators and their yearly bonuses and do nothing to further medical care in the US."
E	"Non-compete clauses are harmful to individuals and should be abolished."
William	"Non-compete clauses should no exist. When threatened with regulation corporations claim they stifle the free market and unfairly restrict business. What are non-compete clauses but a restriction on the market of labor? Make them illegal and restore a tiny bit of the power back to workers."
Faith	"Every walker should have the right to change jobs if they believe it is time to do so. Non-compete clauses reward the employer and undermine the worker."
Kelly	"Ban non-compete clauses! Protect workers not companies!"
Tad	"The non-compete clause is unfair and unenforceable. It restricts workers and employees freedom of movement within the job market, and limits opportunities to achieve better earnings and greater satisfaction. It also limits competition within markets by holding capable employees and contractors hostage to one company. It is time to terminate this discriminatory law that most courts will not uphold anyway. Thank you."

Sadie	"Non-compete agreements are outrageous! They make it absurdly difficult to have any sort of continuing career path, no matter what the field is. I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. My husband works as a federal contractor, and these agreements have limited his ability to compete for better positions at companies other than the one who currently has a particular contract. As a direct result of this, his wages have actually DECREASED over the past five years. At the same time, he's under requirements to maintain (rather expensive) continuing professional education--- which ends up being of no benefit to him, precisely because he can't move to a different company. For decades, exploitative noncompete agreements have barred workers from pursuing better employment opportunities in the same industry, stifling wages, and preventing career advancement. Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes — ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Boyd	"I was an executive for a global corporation, I was forced to take an early retirement after 25 years. My non-compete last for 5 years and is effective wherever my old company has locations. Needless to say that it is a global company. The non-compete language covers more than just what my position responsibilities were, but all divisions in which the company has. Non-competes are a very one sided agreement to favor the companies or corporations. Please vote in favor to have ALL non-competes eliminated from existing and future employee contracts. Our country was built on Freedom and Democracy; to prevent former employees the freedom to work for a competing company keeps them from benefiting from their experiences and talents. There are millions of people that currently have non-competes in which their compensation has been reduced due to the lack of experience in their new field or the limited opportunities they can pursue."
Susan	"The "reasonableness" standard has failed. Even facially unenforceable noncompetes have an in terrorem effect on employees who can't afford the costly litigation over the noncompete. Employers have other tools to protect their interests. Although companies argue that they need noncompetes to protect trade secrets and other forms of confidential information, there are other viable ways of protecting such information. There is no unique state-law interest to protect. Indeed, choice of law provisions are frequently used to avoid application of more employee-friendly noncompete laws in the state where the employee works, etc. Noncompetes adversely impact a broad range of workers. There should not be different rules based on income levels or for senior executives. Most workers do not negotiate noncompetes. Indeed, many workers sign these without even knowing what they are signing. The ban should be even stronger. If applicable, the rules should clarify that de facto noncompetes would encompass forfeiture for competition clauses/clawbacks and training repayment clauses."
Genevieve	"The existence of noncompete clauses for physicians is completely unconstitutional and goes against anti trust theory. How an institution can come in and "claim" territory over people (patients) and location is akin to a dog coming in and pissing on his bush. It's sad this ever existed. It's crushing to fair market principals and contributes to the already critical physician shortage levels. Let the does take care of patients in the best setting for them and the patients!!!!"

Abu	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations at the expense of the workers. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. I urge the FTC to reject the AHA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians. It is essential to protect workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned physician trainee."
Aundrea	"Please eliminate non-compete clauses for low wage workers who don't copy a business model or take "trade secrets" with them. Also make sure that's a blanket - across the board model. Do not put our health care at risk by exempting non profits and hospitals. Thank you!"
Lindsey	"Please ban non-competes! They are unfair, inhumane, unreasonable and predatory!!"
Jeff	"I fully support the plan to make non-compete agreements illegal in the workplace. They have caused much harm for many decades and should never have been allowed to be legal in the first place! Talk about Un-American and uncompetitive! Thank you for your time and consideration."
Todd	"Non-compete agreements harm my ability to earn a living and end up limiting my compensation. I hope the FTC makes them illegal in as broad a way as possible. I live in California where non-compete agreements are illegal and unenforceable, but there is always ambiguity when the agreement is with an out-of-state company and the legal venue is also out-of-state. I hope the FTC can clarify and unify the law so there is no longer ambiguity. I have a lingering fear that even though agreements are unenforceable in California, I could face a legal bill to avoid being hindered by a non-compete clause. The FTC should make non-compete clauses illegal across the board, from employment agreements to equity/option agreements. I have encountered one employer that has a non-compete in both the employment agreement as well as the equity compensation agreement. Simply making them illegal in employment agreements is insufficient if there is hack-door way to slip them in. Non-complete agreements limit my compensation and ability to earn a living. If I want or need to move to another

	employer, non-competes and non-solicitation agreements mean that I cannot leverage the domain expertise I have acquired in a given field. My compensation will be reduced as a consequence. If I cannot use my knowledge of a market area (cybersecurity, cloud computing, medical devices, etc) or cannot contact companies in this space due to non-solicitation clauses, my ability to earn a living is constrained. Employers have abused these agreements to limit my compensation. I hope the FTC outlaws non-compete clauses in all firms."
Charles	"I would like to express my support for the banning of non-compete clauses between employers and employees, as they negatively impact competition undermine the ability of everyday Americans to negotiate fair employment contracts. The benefits of bans on non-compete clauses can be seen by the positive impact of the policy on wages in California and Washington, among other areas. In addition, the claimed benefits of non-compete clauses are more appropriately addressed through tools narrower in scope such as non-disclosure agreements. I personally am looking for work, and although California currently has a ban on non-compete agreements, I am looking for work in various places across the country. I have often been discouraged by various policy decisions on the local, state, and federal level that do not seem to support the interests of workers. However, policy decisions like a ban on non-compete agreements would make me feel confident that the government has my back and that the compensation for and conditions of my work would be more likely to be fair."
Jennifer	"I support banning non-compete contracts. They are unfair to workers."
Christine	"I fully support the elimination of non-compete clauses. As a physician, I have seen how they erode the practice of medicine and hold doctors hostage in poorly managed hospitals and clinics. I've moved between clinics on two occasions to find the right fit and have now been with the same organization for 7 years. I did this without disrupting my family because I was able to choose other jobs in my same town, all within a 15 minute drive of my home. Please do not listen to the large lobbying groups trying to make it so they can control physicians and eclipse them from this rule. They are simply trying to control their revenue makers. Physicians are the main billable provider for any hospital or medical system. MBAs understand that controlling physicians enables them to control their hospital funds. It's exploitative and serves only the hospitals. California also shows it's unnecessary as we have plenty of high quality physicians and hospitals functioning well without non-compete clauses."
Lily	"Agree that non-competes are utilized to unfairly monopolize a local marketplace. Forcing a physician to uproot their entire family when employment changes, is deeply unjust as well as it gives all the power to the employer when negotiating future contracts."
Bohdan	"Non-compete agreement stops innovation. Companies can hire someone just to kill any chance of competition and build a monopoly."

Serena	"Non compete clauses are unconstitutional and a huge drag on the economy. Citizens need to have the ability to own their own intellectual properties gained through their experience. Please support abandoning the use of non compete clauses"
Ryan	"Healthcare systems are growing, giving them inordinate power over their employees. It is hard to get more anticompetitive than an actual non-complete clause. It is bad for healthcare markets and bad for workers rights. Remove this outdated and abusive practice will incentivize worker retention, improve working conditions, and lead to better patient care."
Joel	"People should be able to make a living in their field regardless of who they go to work for. I support what the FTC is suggesting. Joel Tranmer"
Andrew	"I am completely in favor of forbidding noncompete agreements. They should be illegal across all of the United States."
Tan	"The non-compete clause of an employment contract against physicians is utterly unfair to the physicians. Organizations should not be able to restrict our livelihood in favor of the organization/corporation and at the expense of the physician. The power imbalance is astounding in such clause, and it needs to be removed."
malie	"Please implement this change. The only protection a company deserves is the use of a non disclosure of company secrets. The company must extend resources to remain a viable choice for their customers. If their workers are what make customers want to do business with them, they need to pay them to stay. If they hold them back, and do no it allow them to work for another company because they feel they will take their customers, they are expecting that worker to subsidize the company's profits. Workers have so little opportunity to leverage their own skills in the marketplace against the large corporations that can freely set wages and working conditions please give them this tiny opportunity to achieve their American dream."
Heather	"Non-compete clauses restrict competition among companies and act to create monopolies because they preference large companies hiring over smaller companies ability to hire knowledgeable resources in an industry. By requiring employees not to work for other companies in the same industry, employees are restricted from utilizing their skillsets. I support removal of non-compete clauses. They unnecessarily restricting knowledable employees from working in their industries and limit wage growth and innovation."
Evelyn	"I strongly support the FTC ban against non compete agreements. We are in need of a boost to our economy more now than ever and this would help tremendously. Not to mention non competes are unfair employment practices. If an employee is unhappy at their current position, they should be able to leave freely."

Maya	"I founded a small, women- and minority-owned business with a partner 4 years ago after we were let go from a large $4billion-dollar registered investment advisory firm based in upstate NY. Despite being let go, our contract stipulated that we could not start a company to service the clients we had cultivated here in CA. At the time, we would be earning less than $20K per year if we were to service just these clients. We both received MediCal as our income is still not sufficient to pay healthcare out of pocket. We hired an attorney in CA for a few thousand dollars---money we could barely afford---who told us to take the chance of soliciting the clients we'd cultivated to come to our new firm. Noncompete clauses are not enforceable in CA but could be in NY, where our former employer was located. Luckily our former employer decided not to sue us as they probably understood that these clients would have left anyway. Noncompetes completely benefit large, well-capitalized companies to hold onto their revenue and market power and threaten the livelihood of contractors, small business owners and solopreneurs who are the backbone of the US economy. If a firm has the resources to enforce a noncompete, you've got to wonder whom they are harming. There should be evidence that if the terminated or resigning worker takes employment somewhere else, it significantly damages the reputation and/or brings about the failure of the former employer. In most situations, that is probably not evident."
Lisa	"Workers need to have what is in their best economic interest to prevail so that they are strong contributors to the national economy in support of business, paying their fair share of taxes, & not being at-risk for welfare. It's a win-win situation for everyone that way."
Reta	"Please get rid of non compete clauses. I think the thing you might want to know is that this situation makes me furious. It is just not right to burden ordinary workers in this way. It is just not right to give businesses this kind of power over their workers and over the needs of their communities. I am almost 70 and retired. I am not in a non compete situation myself and I am still angry at the unfairness of this. Signing such an agreement hinds a worker to the business in a way that seems like slavery to me. And in a salary review it's a -take it or leave it" (oh wait, there's no place to go if they leave it) situation. It needs to go."
Evan	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses are fundamentally anticompetitive - they prevent employees from seeking compensation and conditions appropriate for current market conditions, and prevent employers from attracting talent in a fair and open marketplace. Instead, they benefit employers who prey upon inexperienced or desperate jobseekers - often immigrants, women, and people of color - who accept long-term damage to their career for short- term survival. These employers rely on at-will employment so they can let employees go at any time - but they want to control their employees' future jobs, even if they lay off those same employees, or force them to leave through intolerable conditions. If companies are worried about employees bringing their skills and experience to competitors, they should prevent it in a fair way - through appropriate compensation, good work conditions, and fair employment contracts. This lays the burden where it belongs

	- on employers with wealth and structural power, not individual employees. It's also worth remembering that even the threat of litigation can have a chilling effect for employees - even if a noncompete clause would be legally unenforceable, the prospect of legal fees and lost wages is prohibitive for the 63% of employees living paycheck to paycheck, anyone who can't afford thousands of dollars in legal retainer, or anyone who simply does not know their rights and is afraid of legal retribution. I'm a software developer in my thirties, and I grew up in Madison, Wisconsin. Epic Systems is one of the largest employers in the area, producing one of the most popular electronic medical records systems in the world. I've seen first-hand how companies like Epic prey on people who have just graduated from college with no other job experience. They offer an attractive starting salary and the promise of prestigious work - but Epic has a dark side. I've known literally dozens of peers who accepted positions with Epic - then left after 1-3 years, because Epic expects enormous and unsustainable amounts of overtime from software developers, which is uncompensated since these employees are salaried. Epic also has an extensive noncompete agreement - it includes literally thousands of companies, virtually any company which touches Epic's software or corporate structure in any way. I've seen these dozens of ex-Epic employees struggle to find employment - many industry jobs in the area are affected by the noncompete, and over half of them have been forced to leave the state to find work, or leave IT completely. Some have even lost their visas to stay in the United States because they couldn't find work which wasn't banned by the noncompete - at an age where they are just starting to settle down, many, and start families. This is devastating and unfair, and it shouldn't be allowed. This burden should be placed on companies - not the naïve 22-year-olds I've seen systematically preyed upon because they don't know what a fair employment agreement looks like yet."
JOSH	"Preventing the ability to work for a competitor removes workers leverage in negotiating salary. And the unfortunate reality is often the most effective way to increase one's salary is to jump around to different companies."
Leon	"The FTC estimates that banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by $300 billion per year. What more is needed?"
Benjamin	"End the non-compete clause rule!"
Allison	"Ban non competes. They screw workers who may be locked into a location due to finances or family, forcing them to stay in often toxic work environments for fear of not being able to find another job."
Allison	"Non competes are unfair to subjected employees. In a toxic work environment, if I decide to leave, I am banned from working within x mile radius. What about my house? What about my existing community outside that workplace? Noncompetes force employees to give those things up"

Lisa	"I am in favor of banning non-compete clauses. A well written NDA should be sufficient. My family experienced hardship when a large corporation downsized in 2011 and enforced a non compete clause."
Joshua	"To whom it may concern, I have the privilege of living in California where non-compete agreements are not enforceable. This has lead to better opportunity for my family. I began working at an engineering firm as an intern and switched soon to full time after graduating. I soon found that my colleagues doing the same or less work than myself were being hired in making 50% more than my salary. The reward for me loyally staying at a company since interning was a stagnating salary that couldn't even keep up with moderate inflation (not to mention greater than 9% inflation). Because I am not bound by a non compete agreement, I was able to leave my company and find a new employer who compensated me according to the work I actually do. At all my previous employers I have signed non-disclosure agreements to limit my discussing of proprietary information of each company. However, it is laughable that some employers consider general job proficiency and experience as synonymous with proprietary trade secrets. Thank you FTC for implementing new regulation which follows free market common sense and upholds our nation's commitment to the American dream. - Josh V."
Arlene	"Physicians should not be subject to non- compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare, particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare providers. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Non-compete clauses can reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. Overall, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities."
Josh	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."

Jennifer	"As a physician, I believe we must illuminate non-compete clauses in physician contracts. As hospital systems and/or private equity physician groups grow and merge to control larger areas of the country, these noncompete clauses become more and more onerous. One must move out of state away from friends and family to find anew job and even then it could be challenging when a hospital system or private equity physician group is present in multiple states. Additionally, as healthcare becomes increasingly focused on profits - there is a very real threat to patient care. Sometimes only way for physicians to protect our patients is the ability to move to a new job where we feel our patient centered focus is valued. Hospitals and large groups are becoming bullies who try to strong arm physicians into compromising on our oath to "1st do no harm" when it comes to patient care. They have more lobbying power , more funds, and more time to fight this important issue. The only reason there aren't more comments on this is because physicians are busy taking care of patients. Please let us continue to do our jobs as intended. Please do not let them win this battle and continue to further deteriorate patient care."
Daniel	"I support this proposed rule. Labor is a commodity. Allowing labor restriction limits the potential of America's workforce. Pass this legislation now."
K	"Non-competes give large hospital systems an unfair advantage in employment contracts. They hurt doctors and patients and are inherently anti-capitalist. Furthermore, many "non-profit" hospitals behave just like for-profit corporations. They are not using non-competes to compel physicians to care for uninsured patients. They are using non-competes to ensure that doctors cannot leave their jobs without uprooting their lives. Capitalism needs to function like a game of tug-of-war. Two opposing sides need to continually struggle for dominance, but at no time can either side be permitted to walk away with the rope. Non-competes give the hospital systems the rope."
Jim	"I'm a US citizen and retired psychotherapist living in Oakland, California. I urge the FTC to categorically ban non-compete clauses because of how such clauses fundamentally obstruct labor market competition. Blocking workers from switching to jobs in which they would be better paid and more productive does significant harm to workers' motivation to do productive, successful work because it lessens or deadens a worker's desires to advance herself, and or her family's conditions by holding new employment. Non-compete clauses categorically create limitations and blockage in labor hiring pools. Blocking workers by non-compete clauses from switching to jobs in which they would be better paid and produce more productive and innovative work is restricting the opportunities of all workers in that labor market. That's unfair to a great number of citizens and unfairness is not a founding principle of the United States nor does it support a thriving economy. Lessening and blocking innovation also has a chilling impact on an economy. Thank you for reading my comment. The available data do not allow the Commission to estimate earnings effects for every occupation."

	However, the evidentiary record indicates non-compete clauses depress wages for a wide range of subgroups of workers across the spectrum of income and job function—from hourly workers to highly paid, highly skilled workers such as executives. The Commission therefore estimates the proposed rule would increase earnings for workers in all of the subgroups of the labor force for which sufficient data is available. (377) Excluding these workers from the proposed rule would deny these workers the benefits of higher earnings through increased competition in the market for their labor. The Commission recognizes there are compelling reasons for banning non-compete clauses that apply more strongly to lower-wage workers. Non-compete clauses for lower-wage workers—such as sandwich shop workers, warehouse workers, or security guards (378) —may be more likely than non-compete clauses for higher-wage workers to be exploitative and coercive at the time of contracting and at the time of the worker's potential departure from the employer. (379) In addition, the most commonly cited justifications for non-compete clauses appear particularly weak when applied to relatively lower-wage workers, to the extent such workers are less likely to have access to trade secrets or confidential information. (380) The Commission believes there are also compelling reasons for banning non-compete clauses that apply more strongly to highly paid or highly skilled workers such as senior executives. As described above, the weight of the available evidence indicates non-compete clauses negatively affect new business formation, innovation, and the ability of competitors to hire skilled workers. (381) Non-compete clauses for highly paid or highly skilled workers such as senior executives may be contributing more to these harms than non-compete clauses for some other workers, to the extent such workers may be likely to start competing businesses, be hired by potential entrants or competitors, or develop innovative products and services. Non-compete clauses for highly paid or highly skilled workers such as senior executives may also block potential entrants, or raise their costs, to a high degree, because such workers are likely to be in high demand by potential entrants. As a result, prohibiting non-compete clauses for highly paid or highly skilled workers such as senior executives may have relatively greater benefits for consumers than prohibiting non-compete clauses for other workers."
Paul	"Please remove non compete and their thinly veiled equivalent 'exclusivity' causes from all of healthcare. Physicians, who have virtually no power, are forced to sign these because all of the hospitals and large contract management groups who effectively control almost all medical jobs require them. Even when state law disallows them the threat of costly legal action against you by a multi billion dollar company forces you to accept non-competes. As a result we are forced to see too many patients in too little time in halls instead of rooms and we cannot quit."
Tom	"We can't undo the damage already done by these terrible non-compete rules, but we must do away with them now!"
Sagar	"Non-Compete Clauses don't help the vast majority of Americans. The original reason to have them has been overshadowed by unfair misuses. Please stand up for fairness."

Charles	"I am a practicing physician currently in California about to move to Florida. Non compete contracts help private equity groups impede competition. Patients should have the choice of the provider they want, and physicians should have a choice in their practice environment. In a world where there is more and more health care consolidation the large organizations have all the power and are limited patient's choices. Physicians don't keep trade secrets, they practice their art, and their art should be accessible for all those who are interested in seeing them. If the HMOs are afraid of paying higher salaries, it's because they know that the salaries they give are artificially kept low through their legal monopoly."
Eric	"This is an important step in guaranteeing an unfettered labor market. Please approve/pass this."
Lina	" Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. Non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care."
Nicole	"Non-compete clauses are stifling American workers. This is totally unacceptable and in-American! Stop this now!!"
George	"at the very least, please eliminate non-complete causes for low-wage workers, they need to be able to change employers easily so they can increase their income.so they can increase their income"
Gram	"It is obvious that the non-compete clause hurts employees and benefits businesses. Since non-compete clauses are practically unusable for most situations, The law is used to get retribution against employees."
Lulu	"This is a no-brainer. PLEASE, please DO THE RIGHT THING for workers and for our country's economy and ELIMINATE NON-COMPETE CLAUSES."
Laura	"Dear Commissioners, I am writing you today in tears to beg you to forbid nondisclosure agreements, without full compensation for any employee. I have seen this damage families, workers, and even highly skilled marketing people. I left a job when I was going to be forced to sign an NDA, And what was ridiculous was I was in a right to work state! I sold radio advertising, and all of the radio stations were insisting on NDA's, yet our client list and customer list was literally

	broadcast on the radio every single day! This is a travesty for workers, it is anti-entrepreneurial, And is really just enslaving workers. Thank you for your consideration, and I hope you strike this down as quickly as possible. There is no good reason to restrict worker liberty in this fashion unless there is full compensation. I live in California now which is the most productive economy in the country. One reason? The state forbids NDAs. Thank you."
William	"I very much support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete clauses. NCCs reduce competition for workers, thereby suppressing wages, as well as stifling innovation. Banning them will increase career mobility and allow workers to earn what they're worth."
Jeffrey	"Thank you for proposing this important protection for employees. I ran a research laboratory for 50 years, initially doing basic neuroscience research and then doing basic and translational medical research. In this environment, we refer to our employees as colleagues and work with them toward common goals. It is typical that they will leave for a variety of reasons--often to continue their education and perhaps start their own research programs. This situation is quite different from a business that is based on increasing the bottom line. For some small businesses employee compensation may be their largest expense, so it is natural they want to retain their most productive employees while paying them as little as possible. But the non-compete clauses in contracts, especially for larger businesses, are grossly unfair for reasons that have been pointed out by others. I strongly support your action to limit non- compete clauses."
Harry	"I fully support the new FTC Non-Compete Clause Rule. It's good for workers. It's good for investors. It's good for Americans."
Sara	"As a patient, I want my doctors and other health care workers to be happy with their jobs because I believe that leads to their providing better care. Appropriate compensation for their work is part of that happiness. Non-compete clauses suppress physicians' compensation unfairly, and physicians who do need to change jobs for whatever reason shouldn't be forced to uproot their families and move to another state or town in order to do so."
Lacey	"American workers need a win and the FTC's proposed rule to ban exploitative non-compete agreements, could deliver on this at a crucial time nationally and economically."
Thomas	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! We're wasting tech industry talent by having them live in fear of continuing to create things they've become good at making and understanding on the job."
Elizabeth	"I am in favor of the proposed ban on non competes. Non competes hurt American workers' wages and are a violation of the free market and the spirit of antitrust regulations. I strongly urge you to support the passage of this ban."

Jeffrey	"I support a ban on non compete clauses. There is no reason to lose a job to then not be able to work in your field right away."
Ray Hua	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I think it's important for innovation and the freedom of ordinary people for a ban on noncompete clauses to get passed. I strongly support the proposed rule."
Ghanshyam	"Non compete clauses are medieval and create an opportunity for exploitation of workers."
Vicky	"Please get rid on non-competes for physicians. Physicians often have to sign the stiffest and most limiting employee contracts in this county. For young physicians facing $300,000-400,000 in student loans and late career starts, having non-compete clauses prevents them from negotiating and finding the best employment opportunities to help them pay down their student loans and start saving when compared to peers of their age groups. Physicians often also have to sign contracts that will not release them from their contracts without a 3 months notice. Other healthcare providers who also see patients in clinic, sometimes independently such as nurse practitioners and physician assistants, are only required to give 2 weeks notice. 3 months and 2 weeks are vastly different. This is not fair. Release physicians from unfair and unequal non-compete contracts."
Karen	"I strongly support enactment of this regulation."
Lucas	"As both an individual and current business owner, one who has employed before, I am in favor of this rule. Non-competes hurt people and rarely actually benefit businesses. They are nothing more than strong-arm attempts at controlling employees once they leave. A business should have enough protection with non-disclosure agreements and need nothing more. Likewise, someone working two jobs at once should be allowed to. Only above market pay should be considered acceptable in lieu of not working two similar jobs. Regardless, an employee should not be bound by a non-compete."
Jessica	"Non-compete clauses severely limit medical care in the United States. For example, as an MD, I am under contract with a medical group that does not allow me to do ANY medical care outside of their institution. I would participate in additional clinics (as an emergency medicine doctor, I would work part time at an addiction clinic or urgent care) but am contractually unable to. These additional hours would significantly increase the needed work force for medical care."
Laurie	"I am definitely against Non-Compete Rules. More power to the people and not the health care industry."
Alex	"I completely support banning non-compete causes in workers' contracts. It is a monopolistic practice that goes against the idea and practice of a free market in labor by restraining the ability of labor (workers) to seek suitable employment" opportunities. It places inappropriate restrictions on the price (wages) of a commodity (labor), and so creates market distortions not to mention poverty for many workers who labor-power is consequently priced below free market averages. If employers want non-compete clauses, then they should also institute a clause that ensures payment of a living wage in their contracts based on the CPI for their region. If the price of labor is to be restricted in a sense that favors employers, it should be counterbalanced by a provision that restricts the price of labor in favor of employees by providing a living-wage floor."

David	"Hi, I would like to comment on the Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) I work in an industry(aerospace engineering) that has many NDA's and strict non-compete rules. There are a lot of trade secrets and company proprietary information involved. It makes sense that there are rules that restrict the information I can disclose if I were to go to work for a competitor of my current employer. I am not against Non-Compete in all cases. I am against Non-Compete where the jobs do not involve trade secrets, while someone may have gotten skills from a previous job (say repairing iPhones), I do not believe that person be barred from going from working at an Apple store to working for a Mom and Pop phone repair store. People should be free to change jobs for the normal reasons (bad boss, more money, better working conditions, better commute ...)"
Anthony	"Non-Compete Clauses were originally designed for when buying out a business or something very similar. The fact that they have been abused and used on rank and file employees make 0 sense. Non-compete clauses should not be the default, but rather a rarity and only used in the cases of executives or those getting retirement level amounts of money (say a flat 5 Million if we are going off 2023 standards)"
Celia	"No one who makes under $250k a year should be subject to a noncompete"
R	"Please STOP noncompetes from ruining the lives of ordinary Americans. They should only apply to high paying positions that deal with prioritized trade information that a company needs to protect. Currently they are routinely used in all kinds of employment and they devastate hard working and skilled people from finding better jobs in their communities. It's a horrible abuse of a system meant to be applied in a strictly unique set of circumstances. But the lobbying power corporate America made noncompetes prevalent throughout the workplace. It has to stop. It's hurting all of us and diminishing our ability to be a healthier and fair country."
saul	"There should be an exception for non compete contracts that fairly compensate the former employee. For a period of up to 2 years the former employer may pay the former employee not to compete. The payment should be at least as much as the employee received during employment or fair value for his work, whichever is greater. Example: Many years ago my Uncle was the executive VP at a large agricultural company where he had implemented revolutionary ideas which increased profits multiple times. The owners, two brothers did not want him to compete after letting him go. His contract called for them to pay him at his last

	rate of pay for 2 years so lie would not compete. This fairly compensated my uncle who went into business for himself in a non competing business. The agriculture company got value by not having my uncle open directly competing business in their market."
KIMBERLY	"I think non compete agreements should be limited in scope. For instance, its fair to prohibit, for a time, an employee or contractor from stealing clients or customers and working for them independently. Otherwise every employer is an unwitting and unpaid agency. Poaching would be unchecked. But it's never fair to prohibit someone from working in their industry. It's never fair to prevent a laborer from working in their own city. My knowledge is mine and it's what makes me valuable. No company can own that."
Greg	"I get the intent here, but how do we protect a business's interests at the same time. If a business creates/invents something specialized that creates demand/efficiencies, they should be able to profit from it. Business competitors' may want to take advantage of the "invention", but they didn't put in the effort of the inventors. Some protections are needed for the inventors. If you don't do this, it takes away from the motivation to invent."
Tom	"I work in the software industry and at every one of the places I've worked I've needed to sign non-competes. I am not in favor of this being an acceptable general business practice, and at the very least that some restrictions should be in place. My current employer is present in most major domain spaces from healthcare to e-commerce, and as I look ahead to where I may work in the future I feel like the general wording of these clauses drastically restricts the industries I have available to me for my next position. While I doubt there would be enforcement for many of the industries that aren't the one I'm in, these clauses are worded so broadly and generally that it is a non trivial part of my decision making for all. A potential rebuttal would be that if I'm so concerned, I should search for employees without non compete clauses. I find this argument holds no water as every employer I've worked for has mandated these clauses, from start ups to fortune 500. This is a general practice that pervades my entire industry. It should be considered the exception and not the rule that a company wouldn't mandate a non-compete clause for their software devs. As for the argument that this is required to protect trade secrets, I again find this argument to be invalid in the general case. Given the unique implementation of each companies software it makes it near impossible to directly transfer solutions that a non compete would seek to protect. Further, non competes are not the only solution to this problem, as companies can offer compensation or other incentives to make relevant employees want to stay. Allowing companies to blanketly use non competes removes the need for workers to be paid for the true value of their contributions and innovations."
Terri	"A Non-compete Clause for a low-wage worker is a form of slavery, nothing less. What possible important trade secret could a beautician or a fast food worker take to another shop? The poorest workers among us are thus unfairly prevented from leaving a bad position for a better one, for no reason but greed. Non-

	compete Clauses are for those whose knowledge might literally cause significant harms to their former employer; keep them there and don't let them cause our poorest workers even more suffering and difficulty."
Hilary	"Please ban non compete clauses! They are unfair and unjustifiable. Their only purpose is to allow employers to keep wages low. The only people who should be bound are highly paid employees who have the benefit of counsel when negotiating their employment contracts."
Laurel	"I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban non-complete clauses."
Iris	"As a Registered Nurse and concerned patient, I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."
Karen	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Doctors are well educated and we need them to be able to use this knowledge to enhance our health care to the best of their abilities. Non-compete clauses keep medical professionals from changing jobs to continue practicing medicine for a competitor or even as an independent clinician. Hospitals, insurance companies and corporations that employ physicians are changing their rules and regulations more often. Doctors need more freedom to change jobs now. Non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."
Barbara	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. For example, non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. I have been with the same wonderful and knowledgeable doctors at UCI for twenty years and it is easy to read what is happening to them and then their change in behavior. This is insane, nefarious and should stop immediately. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."
Kathy	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Since the murders that took place in hospitals during the "pandemic" & living in CA where it is a law that doctors can lose their license for telling the truth instead of

	going along with the narrative, trust in doctors is very low. If the non-compete clause is not banned, I will have absolutely no trust in doctors() Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. For example, non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."
Chen	"I'm writing to say I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. I can understand an employer insisting that employees sign a contract not to divulge trade secrets when they leave a place of employment but asking them not to work elsewhere? Ridiculous! A person in a free society should have the right to make a living wherever they choose. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. For example, non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine and bad social justice. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."

Colorado | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 billion in increased wages over the next decade, including for Colorado:

Colorado Covered Workers	Increase in Total Annual CO Worker Earnings	Increase in Average Annual CO Worker Earnings

	"My name is Eric..I am the owner of a company called Great Western Building Systems and we are located in Colorado. . . . I have witnessed the damage that overly broad non-competes can cause to individual workers. Many companies use these non-competes to unfairly limit worker compensation and mobility within their career field. Many people have been forced into long and expensive litigation just for the right to work Good for the FTC and President Biden's executive order. This rule will open up many opportunities for our nation's workforce and encourage many small businesses. I hope it get's placed into law exactly as written." -Eric B.
	"I graduated with an engineering degree in 1995 and immediately went to work for a technology company in Silicon Valley. When I left my first job after three years and went to a competitor, I was threatened by my first employer even though California had effectively banned non-competes. I ultimately had my new employer write a letter of indemnification, even though my role at the new company had little overlap with my responsibilities at the prior company...I believe cross-pollination and open competition is why silicon valley has the greatest pace of innovation and development in the world. One tangential observation, the new position at the new company came with a —60% raise. I was clearly under-compensated by my first employer and only by getting offers from competitors was I able to ascertain my true market worth." -Eric.
	"I work for a billion dollar transportation company that cut pay 25% for the sales staff effective January 1st of 2023 despite back to back record years. 100% - they cut pay because there is a non compete that is required to work for them and this non compete puts shackles on the sales staff to sit back and take the pay cut without options in the industry we are all specialized in. I applaud the FTC for releasing me and my coworkers from the tyranny that have to live under with a non compete." -Kyle
	"I was terminated as a barista in good standing at Starbucks. When I began pursuing franchise options at a competitor brand, I was let go for non-compete. I was punctual, effective, and had no prior conflict with management." -Ron C.

	"Thank you for recognizing this unfair legal agreement designed to maximize corporate profits at the expense of hard working . . . employees. As a business owner, I have never added these clauses and I have emphasized to my employees, " if you have a better employment option or future opportunity than I can offer, please take it". My turnover rate is minimal and I have loyal and dedicated employees." -Jeff D.
	"I work in a community that is small and most workers make hourly salary at or that are less than minimum wage. I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!" -Bernadette E.
	"I am a physician Anesthesiologist in Denver, Colorado. The anesthesia job market in Denver for the last 7 years has been dominated by a national group which has coerced most of the Hospital systems into entering exclusive arrangements for anesthesia services, essentially shutting out any competition. Any physicians employed by this national entity were required to agree to a noncompete clause in their contract. Now, with the national shortage of anesthesiologists, the hospitals are struggling to find physicians that are not restricted by this noncompete clause to provide anesthesia services for their patients. This is creating hardships for patients, hospitals, and providers alike and thus is not in the best interest of the community and the public at large. I request consideration of this input and hope that the FTC takes a strong stand in prohibiting all noncompete contract clauses in the future." -Bernd
	"My current IT Sales employer uses the Non-Compete as a way to lock us in with the company and has numerous times filed legal law suits against co-workers who left to another company (didn't even compete) as a means to keep talent. . . . If this ruling gets passed I feel it will allow us to make decent compensation structure that is competitive." -Harvey
	"I would like to strongly support the elimination of noncompete clauses. For three reasons. First, employers often spring them on employees when it is too late for the employee to effectively do anything about it. Second, even the threat of enforcement of an illegal noncompete can have the same impact as one that is lawful. Third, in some cases, noncompete agreements violate religious freedom...As it is written, it effectively prohibits me from working in my area of expertise and my demonstrated professional field. The area of restriction is also nearly the entire globe. However, my previous employer has millions of dollars in reserves and a top notch lawyer on retainer. I have miniscule resources in comparison and the entire process could take longer to resolve than the length my

	non- compete. So even though every lawyer I've spoken with says it's not legally enforceable, it is effectively enforceable because we are not operating on fair terms...My work is more than a career. As a person of faith, I feel called by God to do the work that I do. My profession is a matter of religious conviction not a vocational choice. The noncompete violates my right to practice my faith and be obedient to my calling. There is nothing more important to me than to live as best as I can according to my religious values and principles. Even though my noncompete would not likely hold up in court, for the reasons explained above, it effectively bans me from practicing my religion." -Josh

Shannon	"As a specialty trained surgeon currently working at the only children's hospital in a major metropolitan area, my non compete prevents me from creating a private practice that would allow me to deliver much needed healthcare to children who cannot travel to the major medical center. These clauses contribute to the failure of the American medical system and contribute to physician burnout."
Jared	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. I am thrilled that you are considering taking action to end non-compete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. These agreements stifle innovation and inhibit competition. Thus, agreements are anti-worker and anti-capitalist. Furthermore, as you know, noncompete agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Aaron	"Noncompete agreements are abusive to employees, and cause unneeded hardship during an already difficult time. Employees should have the freedom to work for any employer, at any time of their choosing."
Ameera	" Physicians with noncompetes in their contracts are forced with the choice of uprooting themselves and their families each time they want to switch practice environments, and the daunting challenging of reestablishing a reputation and practice in a new location. Employers know this, and use it as leverage when physicians speak out against situations that are detrimental to patient care, inappropriate or illegal actions by their employers, or unreasonable/unsustainable working conditions. This can effectively hold physicians hostage at unfavorable working conditions for decades, while employers evade market forces that would necessitate change. . . . Ultimately, noncompete clauses at large healthcare employers are detrimental to our nation's long term ability to maintain access to quality care, and should be outlawed."

Bilal	"Please put an end to this atrocious non complete clause. It harms patient care. It is stressful for practicing physicians suffering abuse from employers but can't leave. It's affects continuity of care. The only benefit is to help with financial greed of corporations. Absolutely 100% end it, NOW!"
Jill	"After dedicating the majority of their young lives to pursuing the study of medicine, a physician joins the work force almost a decade after their peers. Non-compete clauses impair the ability for physicians to seek the right position for themselves, being forced to uproot their families/partners to move outside of the non-compete radius - this is immensely disruptive to wellness and contributes to physician burnout, forcing doctors to stay in positions that increase their rates of depression/suicide or to uproot and move out of city or state, even when an optimal opportunity is available that would not cause this disruption. I strongly support removing non-compete language!!"
Courtney	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Isabelle	"Hello, I am a physician. I have seen the harm that non compete does to physicians and their patients. I am writing to express my support to ban non compete clauses for physicians and health care workers in general. If anyone is unhappy in a working situation they should have the freedom to move freely. . . . 1- physicians who cannot work within a certain perimeter may stay in their current hospital system just because they feel trapped. This leads to burnout and then poor care for patients. 2- physicians are vastly employed by big institutions who have many clinics over a certain area. It is thus impossible for them to stay "out of the non compete" area except by leaving entirely their community. 3- physicians may decide to leave for the 2 year period doing locums. This leads to disruption for their family time (this is my own situation! Where I'm not seeing my young kids every other week!). we should not have to chose between our kids and sustaining ourselves because of non compete. 4- Non compete leads to less choice for patients. By forcing physicians to work outside a perimeter around their previous institutions (that's usually where the issue is), you are not allowing their patients to continue care if they wish to with their own physicians. This has led to a disruption in continuity of care which is detrimental to the patients."
Samantha	"Ban non-compete clauses. Non-competes often require specialized employees to uproot their lives and families in order to seek employment elsewhere, which keeps employees trapped in dead-end positions with low wages if they can't afford to move. It degrades our communities, it increases employee burnout, and it prevents workers from organizing and negotiating for better working conditions, benefits, and salaries. Non-compete clauses prioritize company profits over the lives and livelihoods of the employees that generate those profits. End non-compete now!"

Michael	"I agree with this rule. I have a non-compete with my current employer. It is not used to stop disclosing trade secrets, as one employee was allowed to go to a competitor after being let go and asking permission. It is used to stifle employee mobility and keep wages down. Get rid of non-competes."
Gian	"Non-compete agreements, at their most basic form seek only to protect the companies that utilize them without regard to the employees they inhibit. When quarterly, I get to review my company's financial results that include 35% profitability and I receive 25% of the gross commission I generate, it becomes increasingly clear that the power of the company far exceeds the value of the group of employees they rely on to generate most of their income. The routine argument that the 75% goes to pay for support and administrative staff salaries is clearly a misdirect relative to the true breakdown of distribution of income to employees. When conspired the commission splits arranged in CA for the same company, it's clear the companies can still profit and pay income generating employees a significantly higher split across the country and still provide the level of service and resources required to be successfully in the sales industry."
Megan	"Hello! This is an excellent new rule proposition. I would like to strongly encourage its application to also apply to health care workers. Most physicians have to sign a non compete clause which almost always makes a doctor have to leave the city or state they are working in to get a new job. It is causing zero competition without the threat of a big move. I am a pediatric sub specialist and often have limited hospitals I can work in. Hospital systems will work to make this rule not apply to them so I encourage wording to include healthcare providers explicitly."
Lorraine	"Please end Non-Compete Clauses in employment. These are unfair to workers and stifle competition."
Connie	"Please stop hampering people's ability to find better jobs with higher wages and more favorable working conditions. This ISN'T the American way."
Dan	"I support the proposed change to eliminate do not compete clauses for contracts. While employers have other protections in place for IP and trade secret theft, in many industries these are not even an issue and these clauses solely limit employees ability to seek a better job without significant impact on the employee or their family. They only serve to punish labor and limit their ability to get paid in a competitive wage environment."

Jacqueline	"Non-compete clauses should not only apply to physicians- many of us are the sole breadwinners for our family. We just want to do good work and be treated respectfully."
Dylan	"Non-compete agreements hold both companies and workers back. States that have banned them have had great results."
Samantha	"Banning non competes would be a very positive change for the physician community and healthcare in general. If a physician is able to leave a job that is not a good fit or toxic without punishment, it would decrease burn out and in the long term help with physician retention. In general, there is a physician shortage as more and more physicians leave clinical positions for non-medicine jobs or non-clinical positions as they otherwise have limited options if they need to leave an employer and are subject to noncompetes. Physicians should also have a fair work market like any other profession. Noncompetes undermine the healthcare market Banning non competes promotes a more free market approach to healthcare and would better hold practices accountable for how they treat their employees"
Sasa	"My name is Sasa (Sasha) and I am 100% in support of this change. I have just gone through this issue with my previous employer, and had attorneys involved. It is absolutely ridiculous that anyone should ever be prevented from doing honest work. It is not consistent with the capitalist way of how things work in this country. It is the land of opportunity, is it not?"
Diane	"Hello, I'm writing to express my opinion that the FTC ban non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses hurt the American worker, especially the middle and lower classes. Please help workers feel seen by giving us a sense of agency and empowerment."
William	"Please stop non-compete clauses. It's wrong. Intellectual property is important and there are other laws to protect it. Workers should be able to increase their wages by changing jobs."
Janel	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Amanda	"I am a physician. Non compete clauses hams patients by disrupting the patient physician relationship when a physician changes employment. It causes physicians to leave communities they would love to stay in because of non-compete clauses. They should end."

Ramona	"Non compete clauses are harmful to both individuals and society as a whole. By suppressing wages, they add to the growing divide between the wealthiest and the middle class. Our loss of a strong middle class harms our economy as this group drives most of the economic engine through purchases. Another issue is freedom. Non compete clauses are a direct violation of our most basic freedoms to choose. Choice is the foundation of capitalism and a free market. Without choice, real choices with known advantages, disadvantages and costs, our economic system breaks down. Over the last few decades, restrictions to freedom of choice, laws that favor companies over workers and the greater good of the country have eroded our democracy at its very foundation. Please limit or out law this non-compete clauses so that workers can once more exercise choice in the market place of jobs."
Haley	"Noncompete clauses should be banned, especially for physicians! Hospital admin overreach has had egregious effects on the level of care provided. There is no profession for which banning these clauses is more crucial!"
David	"I am a veterinarian working for a large corporation. Getting this job required that I sign a "Confidentiality and Non- Solicitation" agreement that effectively prohibits my working anywhere else in the large metropolitan area where I live for a period of 2 years following the termination of my employment, no matter the cause. I would have to move. This is stifling and absurd. I feel owned. I am a strong proponent of making all such agreements illegal. Thank you."
Joe	"Thank you! Unleash creativity and entrepreneurialism while supporting workers and improving their lives."
Rita	"Non-compete clauses absolutely need to be abolished. When working at Microsoft as a vendor (contractor), Microsoft hired a different contractor company that managed 50+ employees. The old (fired) contracting company stated the employees couldn't work for the new company due to the non- compete clause. It was a nightmare! We were not allowed to work for 45 days until this was resolved. All the vendors did not know there was a non- compete clause because that was established directly with Microsoft. As vendors/contractors, we worked for the contracting company that hired us. Many of the most talented left as the new company was lowballing our salaries and benefits to the extreme. The vendors had no recourse and were completely caught in the middle. Abolish non-compete clauses!"
Cara	"I am writing to support eliminating non compete clauses. I was victim to a non compete clause after being let go without cause. My former employer harassed me and made multiple bogus threats that I was violating my non compete. I was unable to work in my field for a year. I am still recovering financially. It's been two years since I was fired. Non competes are only necessary for protection of very certain IP. My former employer tried to keep me and succeeded in keeping me from an entire field with the bullying of their lawyers for a year. I sincerely hope you eliminate non competes."

Diane	"Ban the NPRM, it is the right thing to do!"
S	"Non-compete clauses in employment contracts are crippling for every industry. Employees are forced to work at reduced levels or in different industries which acts as a drain brain. Specialized skills and knowledge bases are needed. Non competes are being used as ridiculous tools of punishment to control market share."
Pranav	"This is a fantastic proposed rule. As a veterinarian, non-compete clauses have been a staple in the contracts of doctors for many years. If someone lives in a city and is experiencing a toxic work environment, a non-compete clause can prevent him/her from being able to work virtually anywhere else in their city and cause them to have to relocate. This also means that in many instances a veterinarian cannot start their own professional practice in the city that they live. There is already a corporatization of veterinary medicine as well as a shortage of veterinarians occurring, both of which are driving up prices to consumers. With the various difficulties that come with owning a practice already, let's remove at least this one roadblock so that more veterinarians can have the ability to start practices where they live, and thereby increase competition and decrease the cost of care!"
Michael	"Non compete agreements are absolute nonsense. Its time our government starts doing things to protect workers."
Ron	"Not allowing someone to Work in the field that they have experience is just wrong!"
Nancy	"I'm not an attorney nor do I presume to understand all of the issues. However, after many years in a number of professions I believe the non- disclosure act in journalism favors businesses over the rights of the individual and against the interests of the public."
Adrian	"I am an ER Physician who works in rural, underserved communities. Please ban non-compete clauses. They divert funds from small hospitals. Some corporations with these clauses span across states and regions. The corporations do not care if patients lose their physician (death, maternity leave, severe illness such as Covid Pneumonia) and will deny qualified replacements due to non-compete clauses. Please ban them immediately."
Cristina	"Don't ban physicians from fording fair equitable work by allowing employers to add non compete clause to our already overbearing contracts. I hate moving every single time I want a job change for growth and development."

Jeannette	"It's long past time for this oppressive, unjust practice to be banned."
Linda	"Please stop businesses from trapping their employees. Non-compete clauses must go."
Tracy	"Please vote to do away with the non compete. It makes working for rural populations such as the Indian Health Service almost impossible and deprives patients of access to their providers."
Salvatore	"Non-compete clauses in employment contracts are restrictions that prohibit employees from working for competitors or starting their own businesses in the same field after leaving their current employer. These clauses can reduce competition, limit innovation, and have negative impacts on the economy. Therefore, non-compete clauses should be banned. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit job mobility and hinder career advancement for workers. Employees with specialized skills and knowledge are unable to use their expertise in similar fields or advance their careers, thus creating a barrier to job opportunities and entrepreneurial ventures. This limits the potential for innovation and growth, and restricts the free flow of talent and ideas in the market. Secondly, non-compete clauses have negative effects on small businesses and startups. These companies rely heavily on talented and experienced employees to innovate and grow, but non-compete clauses make it difficult for them to attract and retain such employees. This ultimately limits the potential for these companies to compete with larger, established firms and hinders the creation of new and innovative products and services. Lastly, non-compete clauses have limited effectiveness in protecting company secrets or confidential information."
Brian	"To the Federal Trade Commission, As a physician and surgeon, non-compete agreements (NCA) have for too long plagued the healthcare system and the ability for physicians to work and live where they desire. I am an orthopedic surgeon in Colorado and I have been personally affected by this issue as I signed a contract with a non- compete agreement . . . even after several negotiations with a healthcare lawyer as the clinic was determined to maintain the NCA. . . . Signing this contract was the only manner in which I found it possible to stay in a desirable location to work as an orthopedic surgeon near the Boulder and Denver areas as the physician market here is very difficult to enter, especially as a young surgeon. As a native Coloradoan with family and in-laws remaining in the cities Golden and Evergreen, it is critically important that my family (including my wife and 19-month-old daughter) were able to stay close to our relatives. . . . Physicians do not owe their employers for their medical education (which is already purchased at premium costs and debts) and there are no significant trade secrets that physicians can carry between employers."
Katherine	"Non-compete clauses in physician contracts impair a physician's ability to earn a livelihood. As hospital systems and medical groups consolidate, the "reach," or geographic restriction specified in no compete clauses has continued to expand, further restricting physicians' employment opportunities."

Eugene	"I was very surprised to hear that Non-Compete Clauses are being used in what I would describe as blue collar jobs. The intent is clearly to keep people from seeking to change employers in pursuit of a better wage. In my opinion this is akin to slavery in which the opportunity to improve one's situation is thwarted by employers seeking to keep employees in their place. I strongly urge the FTC to ban these practices which go against everything this country should stand for. The fact that the Chamber of Commerce is fighting to preserve this form of bondage does not surprise me but it should inform the Commissioners as to which way they should rule on this issue."
Katelyn	"This is super important but needs to also include not for profits! As a physician it is super hard to job hunt due to very strict non-compete clauses that can make you move far from your home area!"
Thomas	"I strongly support this measure! Abolishing noncompete clauses would promote dynamism and increased employment in the American economy, giving it a sorely needed boost. Noncompete clauses have devolved to become a drag on the market, limiting employment that would otherwise be possible as well as representing an unnecessarily skewed balance of power between employers and employees. I urge the FTC to adopt this measure as quickly as possible!"
Frustrated	"Exempting physicians from noncompete clauses is a recipe for disaster. Physicians are increasingly treated poorly by hospitals and nonprofit hospitals. For patient safety, we choose to leave at some point. We need our livelihood protected, when we stand up for the protection of our patients. AHA has zero physicians on their board and should not be considered a spokesperson for physicians."
B	"Non-compete clauses should be abolished. Non-disclosure agreements can be used to protect trade secrets and avoid conflicts of interest."
Kevin	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, If a market is to be free, its labor must be. The work you are doing to level the playing field for American workers is vital, and I am writing to wholeheartedly support your effort to ban noncompete agreements. It is a deeply American principle to foster freedom of choice in our working lives, and its effects will bring benefits to our economy, our future entrepreneurs, and the general working conditions of our people. Noncompete agreements stifle our economy, making our employers hypocrites to the dedication of the principles that make this nation good. Workers in regions and sectors with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, and I am proud to see you move this country in the direction of promoting human flourishing. The only people this will offend are those who seek to control the hearts, minds, and bodies of other individuals, and the dedication to labor's liberty this proposal evokes is deeply aligned with the most important principles of our nation. Banning noncompete agreements is the most significant federal action to improve conditions for American workers I have witnessed in my lifetime, and it is great to see the FTC working to lift up the hearts of the less enfranchised."

Jamie	"I vehemently support a ban on non-compete clauses."
Nicholas	"I am in the process of changing jobs. I would consider myself to be a high-skilled worker, but certainly not highly compensated. I have a PhD in one field. As such, it is natural that all jobs I take share many common elements relating to my expertise. My new company does not compete with my old company in any way. Nevertheless, while I doubt my old company's claims would hold up in court, my old company has made reference to how I am prohibited from engaging in certain activities that could be construed as competitive in the first year of my employment with my new company. I believe these claims are spurious, but they do have a chilling effect. I don't believe my company will prevail (and I doubt they will pursue legal action) but the claims themselves are unsettling, unnecessary, and have a negative effect on me, an employee. This clause in my employment agreement has given me pause for quite some time as I have contemplated this move. I am eager for the FTC to strike down non-compete clauses. I think that this rule makes clear (though perhaps could make more clear) the fact that banning noncompete agreements does not change the prohibition stealing intellectual property. However, over-broad noncompete agreements have an unnecessary chilling effect and hurt the economy."
Brian	"Please move forward with eliminating non-compete clauses from contracts. Workers with the most valuable, specialized skills often have a limited number of potential employers and industries where they can work. If these workers are not able to negotiate fair compensation (or find other work), the incentives to seek specialization will suffer and fewer people will work to develop these highly valuable skills."
Andrew	"Non-competes should be outlawed for all but the most senior executives. They prevent people from finding employment in a fair and open jobs marketplace. Please protect the people from the powerful interests who only want to enrich themselves at the cost to society."
David	"Reading the proposed rule, I can imagine no reason why the proposed rule shouldn't be made effective and binding upon employers."
Nathan	"Non-compete agreements represent an ideology that is in conflict with the free market. A worker should not be threatened with a legal action for trying to get the best price in return for their labor. Non-compete clauses/agreements are another way for greedy corporations to pay their employees as little as possible and using the legal system to do it. It is un-American, anti-democratic, anti-capitalist, anti-worker, and pro-subjugation. Also, I'm looking forward to seeing a renewed effort to break up illegal monopolies. Something that hasn't happened (with a couple exceptions) since President Roosevelt. What a shame! Shame on this country,

	especially it's government, for letting corporations run rampant and treat the workers, our economy, and the environment with disdain. Where is the oversight to protect the workers? where is the regulation to keep greedy companies from destroying our environment? Where is the legislation to make sure our economy is not reliant on foreign manufacturing? For shame!"
Bernardo	"This is a critical step toward creating more fairness in the market! Huge support."
Cameron	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I strongly support your extorts to ban non-compete agreements nationwide. These agreements utilized lengthy legal verbiage to intimidate employees into staying in their roles should they look to seek other employment in their field of expertise. These contracts also put the employee at an unfair disadvantage and potentially drive economic hardship should the employer decide to terminate their employment and then bar them from future employment in their field of expertise. I am however in favor of other contractual limitations that prohibit the solicitation of employees and clients of the employer or sharing trade secrets or proprietary inventions and business solutions with competitors. These measures allow the company to protect itself but do not hinder an employee's professional growth path. Banning non-compete agreements will help to both allow employees the basic right of employment choice and also help to promote a more fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your leadership on this issue, I truly appreciate the work you are doing with this and ask that you please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements so we are all working on a fair playing field. Best, Cameron Felton"
John	"Dear members of the Federal Trade Commission: I am writing to strongly encourage you to impose a rule that bans noncompete clauses. A foundation of prosperity and upward mobility in America is the right to seek employment elsewhere, especially for low and moderate income people. These individuals typically do not have easy access to legal counsel, may not be able to delay securing employment, and may not be aware of the ramifications of the "fine print" in employment contracts. Having the right to seek better opportunities elsewhere, within whatever field or industry a person wants, should be considered a fundamental freedom for all Americans. Kind regards, John Felty"
Steve	"In regard to the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200, I would like to voice support for the Commission's proposed changes to make non- compete rules much less widespread. As a former Chief BR or Talent officer for Vail Resorts (US largest ski company), Visteon (Tier One automotive supplier) and Bridgewater Associates (world's largest hedge fund) along with over 15 years in high tech firms I have witnessed the evolution of non-competes going towards a select few (who have economic leverage) to the masses (who do not). It's fundamentally unfair to restrict those with little access to intellectual property and whom lack the leverage to demand fair compensation for the restrictions placed upon their future employment. I' in now coaching executives, and we make employers commit to paying wages during a "garden leave" if they enforce a non-compete...a middle manager does not have that luxury despite probably needing it more. In short, non-competes should indeed be restricted to a limited few whom (a) have access to true IP, and (b) are compensated for their tenure of non competition. Thank you for your consideration."

Carolynn	"I am strongly in favor of getting rid of noncompetes for everyone. But particularly for Physicians. As a physician myself, I have seen so many colleagues who are trapped in terrible positions because of noncompetes. There's an unlimited amount of patients and there's no reason that physicians need to have noncompetes. The doctor-patient relationship, a secret and patients should be able to transfer with their doctor wherever the doctor needs to go. Employers are using noncompetes as a way to force Physicians into continuing in their positions instead of negotiating with the physician. It is contributing to access issues for patients and disrupting the scared doctor patient relationship. Do not exclude physicians from this policy change"
Jason	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I greatly support your proposed ban on non-compete agreements. I'm a conservative and view this noncompetes as anti-capitalism. It has also personally stifled my career and salaries due to unique skill sets. This simple ban could promote growth and competition for our country and is a great policy change. Appreciate your work. Sincerely, Jason Fry Littleton, CO"
Marianne	"I'm a single parent of two adult daughters. Raising them on my own was unexpected and very difficult. I've created this comment in hopes of benefiting them and all younger people still in the workforce. Non- compete clauses are patently unfair 'agreements' that benefit only employers. Prospective employees are forced to sign if they need the job. This is completely unbalanced, and I very much hope that such contracts will be banned. Thanks for your consideration."
Sarah	"Non- competes hurt workers, unfairly impact minority groups, inhibit personal economic and professional growth, and harm the economy on the whole. Currently, several states have restrictions placed on non-competes which protects workers in those states. These restrictions that protect employees ought to be extended at the Federal level. In a world where remote workers comprise roughly 1/3 of the American work force, we need clear federal guidelines. In our current environment, remote workers who are employed by an out-of-state employer and/or move between states face challenges trying to understand which laws apply to them. Creating a federal ban on non-competes resolves this concern. Non-competes give all the favor to he employer and harm the employee. I understand wanting to protect legitimate business interests, but all too often, non-competes only keep a former employee from being able to find meaningful work in their respective industry. People are held back in their career growth and earning potential when they are unable to work in their industry for 6 months to 3 years (the most time ranges found in non competes). Alternatively, people might be forced to switch industries all together, effectively resetting their career progress. Ultimately, this means industries that could benefit from the ideas and work of workers restricted by non-competes are also harmed. Furthermore, non-competes disproportionately impact women and People of Color as evidenced by multiple studies. How can we claim to be a country that upholds freedom and equality if we allow (on the federal level) laws that unfairly negatively impact women and People of Color? I hope the FTC will take into account the thousands of stories being told in these comments speaking about the negative impacts of non-competes. Non-competes should not exist. You have the power to put an end to decades of harmful practices that hurt workers and the economy. Please do the right thing and ban non competes."

Kelly	"Please do not exclude physicians from the non-compete rule. As an emergency physician I am paid by the hour and have no access to any privileged business information. Prohibiting me from working at the other hospitals in town only serves to fatten the bottom line of the business and keep me from speaking out about safety issues."
Maureen	"Non competes are wrong and completely in opposition to the American dream. How can I get ahead if I can't get away?"
Daniel	"I fully support a ban on the use of non-compete agreements for employment contracts. This is a discriminatory practice that punishes workers for no fault of their own. It's immoral, unethical, and abusive. Non-compete agreements damage the economy and make America a less competitive country with a less dynamic economy. They should be illegal."
Jami	"Hi, I work in Colorado State Government. My ED added clauses to all vendor contracts banning them from hiring most employees from my agency. This effectively prevents me from being hired by any company in the healthcare industry in CO. I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. I also ask that language be added to prohibit similar language being added to vendor contracts as a backdoor means of a non-compete clause that then prevents employees from leaving government sectors to work within other areas of their industry. These clauses prevent workers from finding well-paying jobs, leaving toxic work environments, or growing within their fields. This policy will make it easier for workers to have options."
Chris	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 - I support the rule to eliminate non-compete clauses. Because of a non-compete clause my wife must continue to work for a company she no longer wishes to work for or leave the workforce for 2 years. Our other option is to relocate to another city outside the radius of the non-compete."
Shelena	"Companies should not be allowed to force workers into non-competes. A rule against this is long overdue."
Thomas	"As an Automotive Executive and unfortunate recipient of a Non Compete Disclosure, it's caused many outside of the organization opportunities to fall off the table. For a publicly traded company, it is also prejudice and unfair to only enforce the disclosure to select employees. It's a "hit or miss" mentality. Competition is reality when it comes to competing for consumers. Competition should be reality for those serving our consumers without the harsh Non Competes in place. When employers treat their employees "right" the employee doesn't want to leave anyway. If the employee isn't the right fit, or vice versa, the employer should allow the employee to find the right fit without penalty."

Michael	"Long overdue. non-compete clauses and those worded to try to not sound like non compete "i.e. worker must pay damages if they seek work elsewhere in a given radius" are a plague on workers"
Amanda	"I support the FTC's decision to ban non-compete clauses from worker contracts. As someone who has worked under this system before I have seen the harm it does to workers and to making the company culture less supportive. Please get rid of this practice."
Perna	"To whom it may concern: Physicians took an oath to put patients first, they also have a fiduciary responsibility to their patients. The corporate practice of medicine is illegal in most states. Noncompete agreements are in direct conflict with the ethical practice of Medicine because they put Physician's at risk of being strong, armed into practicing unethical medicine, and into putting their employers over their patients. Physician should have a right to work and move freely just like every other person. Physicians are the value creators. There's no intellectual property or business value that is created by health system employers -they bring patients and doctors together, they are compensated, handsomely for that service, and they should have no further influence or jurisdiction over the practice of medicine. Sincerely, Prema Gupta, MD A young physician hoping for a fruitful career taking care of patients"
Andrew	"The elimination of the NPRM would indeed provide individuals seeking employment with greater freedom in the job market by allowing them to participate without fear of punishment or constraint from the non-compete clause. The removal of such restrictions can lead to increased competition and innovation in various industries, benefitting both workers and consumers."
C	"Hey FTC, non-compete clauses are anti-competitive and monopolistic. Corporations have grown to have way too much power, and are using non-compete clauses to suppress worker and individual rights unfairly. Even smaller companies are using non-compete to abuse and underpay workers and manipulate job markets. These, and any causes like them, should be banned permanently within the borders of the United States."
Mark	"Good afternoon. I am delighted to see the proposed rules eliminating non-compete clauses. Such clauses are contrary to the overall health of the economy due to the restriction on the free flow of labor, without encumbrances. Record corporate profits shows that the pendulum of economic power has swung dramatically toward businesses, particularly the very large businesses. Many states, including Colorado where I reside, already are ahead of the federal government, and it is time for a national standard on this in protecting the free flow of talent."

James	"I am very happy that the Non-Compete Clause Rule is being implemented. This rule only helps owners keep wages down and hurts workers. Low wages are part of the problem of homelessness and banning non-Compete clauses helps address that issue."
Wendy	"I'm absolutely in favor of banning the non-compete clauses. Having been subject to them for years as a software developer, they limited my ability to find new work, locking me into employment situations that don't allow me to advance my career, my skills, or improve my income or health benefits. If I decide, or am forced, to leave my employment, my former employer should not have that level of control over my next job."
Michael	"RE: Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 I support preventing companies from creating formal non-compete contracts as a condition of employment. These type of agreements impact both employees and consumers negatively."
James	"Non competes are literally against the very core of capitalism. The only reason they exist are anti-capitalistic in nature. If companies were to invest in retaining employees instead of sucking the very soul of working out through their wallets, non competes would never have existed in the first place."
Zachary	"Non-Compete Contracts are anti-competitive and stifle growth for American workers"
Julian	"As a captive "Independent Contractor" for a large insurance company, this vile would be a lifeline should I decide to pursue an independent agent opportunity. The insurance company I represent, has gradually cut commissions over the past few years, while fattening its bottom line through sky high policy renewals and rates the new business that makes it extremely uncompetitive compared to peers. There is absolutely no reason why I should be held prisoner and not be able to pursue far more favorable, and beneficial opportunities, for both myself and my family. Insurance will be an industry where employees or contractors will have a significant advantage should this rule go in effect. I am in favor of this rule and can't wait for it to be implemented."
Lauren	"Iain in favor of banning non-compete clauses. In my experience many large corporations use them as a weapon to force employees to accept contracts and terms is employment that are very unfriendly to workers (e.g., paying below market salaries with poor benefits) while still making record profits. It effectively enables companies to squeeze every mince of productivity of workers at the expense of their physical and mental health, but those workers are effectively trapped by a

	non-compete that would force them into situations that are bad because of long commutes, having to take an extended break from employment, etc. I know of companies that are forcing employees to sign non-competes even where the state bans them, threatening the employee with having to defend themselves against a frivolous lawsuit that the company knows it cannot win. It is yet another symptom of the corporate greed plaguing the US."
Brandon	"I 100% support this. Please make this a priority as the practice of Non Competes are unethical, anti-labor and anti-competitive and harm the working class. I have worked in tech for 20 years and this has made growing my career both chaotic and forced me to incur a harder job search multiple times. Workers don't have the means to have lawyers on retainer which creates a real active fear, especially in competitive industries, of vengeful ex employers trying to limit movement in the workforce without improving their culture or management issues."
Lisa	"After 19 1/2 years with my company out of Texas I was fired in November. The noncompete I was coerced into signing has a 3 1/2 year waiting period after termination and geographical boundaries as stipulations that are unreasonable. PLEASE!!! do away with these noncompetes. Please!!!"
Lisa	"Non-competes aren't good for business. They supposedly are in place to protect the employers confidential information, files, designs, etc. That has nothing to do with the employee who has spent their entire career in one field and wants to work for another employer but restricted because of an unreasonable noncompete agreement. It only hampers the employee from continuing to do what they do well with another employer. I'm trying to get out of my noncompete that is incredibly UNREASONABLE! 500 mile geographic limitation from a company that has 249 US locations as well as a 3 1/2 year noncompete time period. By then I'll be into retirement and won't need the agreement or it to be voided. I need this bill to pass so I can continue working and doing what I do well for another employer. The employer I left after 20 years got a lot out of me and is very prosperous due to my efforts. Now I want to go to another employer. Please, please pass this bill so I can live again. I've attached my noncompete just in case you want to review how insane it really is."
Ariana	"I support this bill and hope this can be pushed through to legislation. Corporate entities have way too much power and oftentimes enforce these rules even with involuntary terminations. We are lagging behind other nations across a variety of industries; allowing people the opportunity to return to work in their field of expertise keeps innovation moving. Also, the statistic about healthcare costs is staggering. Having to pay for marketplace insurance as opposed to sponsored plans is extremely cost prohibitive, and for terrible coverage. This bill is long overdue."
Alex	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. It could also worsen patient outcomes. I urge the FTC to reject the AHA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians."

Ashton	"A++++++ would law again!"
Ezra	"Thank you, that has been needed for years. Free market is the best market."

Matthew	"As a technical worker who is currently trapped in a non-compete clause, I whole heartedly support rescinding non-compete clauses. My business partner would like to start a competing business because we believe we can run operations better, and provide better value to the government. We need our current salaries to survive, which makes it next to impossible to escape our current employers. I would be forever thankful if this were passed. Additionally, it would also help if there were a non-retaliation part to this. There are only so many government contractors, another fear is our current company would get us blacklisted due to their connections in competing, or being brought on as a sub to a larger contractor. Thank you!"

Mark	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Jenn	"As a physician I feel non compete clauses affect us in a very detrimental manner. I support eliminating them for all of us especially those in health care."
Anita	"Thank you for taking on the non-compete clauses in employment; I endorse the NPRM! This will benefit consumers as well as workers, and it will also benefit good companies by leveling the playing field."
William	"I fully support this rule."
Morgan	"This will allow physicians to provide better patient care! A win for physicians and patients."
Zachary	"FTC commissioner Wilson cannot be trusted to weigh in on this proposed rule given her long-running association with both the American Bar association and the Chamber of Commerce as it pertains to this proposed rule. She will categorically ignore any comments in favor and instead come up with some far-fetched hair-brained reasoning as to why this rule is a stain on American patriotism and freedom. The reality is that LAWYERS of all people are the only ones who currently benefit from protections against non-compete agreements and Commissioner Wilson would like nothing more than to deny that right to remaining 330M Americans."
Danielle	"Non-competes are an unfair advantage to all new graduates, associates and supportive staff that work tirelessly at subpar wages that favor any long- standing, pre-existing corporate employer. These contracts prohibit professional workers from pursuing their careers, and therefore making appropriate income, after acquiring astronomical amounts of debt from their higher education achievements. Not only that, non-competes keep unhappy employees in their positions because they know they don't have another nearby option in their career to make similar wages. This further leads to mental health issues amongst professionals which further disrupts the level of care they are able to provide to the general public. In my particular area, my non-compete restricts me from pursuing my profession anywhere nearby. I would have to drive a minimum of one hour away to perform my job that I attended 8 years of higher education for. It's absolutely unnecessary and ridiculous. Our area is in NEED of more veterinarians, yet my non-compete keeps me from helping my own community."
Lucas	"Thank you for doing this. My brother has gone through legal troubles because of the vindictiveness of a company he no longer works for which should have no say or ability to restrict his employment opportunities at that point. People train and become specialists such that their best and possibly only opportunities to further their career and maintain their standard of living is in a similar role at a competing company. Banning non-compete clauses is long overdue. They are blatantly anti-competitive, and a blight to economic health."

Travis	"37 yr old male construction worker. I currently work under a non-compete agreement, in Colorado state. The application of non-compete agreements with low wage, hourly workers is directly conflicting to an American's ability to exercise their god given freedom and pursue their dreams, on the best on the path of their own choosing, without abandoning their profession."
Janel	"The use of non-compete agreements are unconscionable when used against low level employees without privileged corporate data. They are often used not to protect institutional knowledge but to reduce the power of employees to receive fair compensation and reduce competitiveness. We don't allow price fixing or other forms of collusion, this is no different. There may be some very limited cases where it is strictly necessary, but they are most often used as an unfair advantage in the labor marketplace. I commend this action to outlaw them and hope you carve out as few exemptions as possible."
Adam	"Capitalism thrives on competition. The right to earn a living is fundamental."
David	"Non-compete clauses are unfair. Non-compete clauses stifle employees' ability to advance their careers."
Parker	"I think that non-compete clauses and documents do not help anyone but companies that are trying to exploit their workers more by limiting their options of employment. Let the free market decide."
Adam	"As far as I'm concerned Non-Compete agreements are anti-free market and the authority of Courts to enforce them is Constitutional questionable at best. They only hurt the market and allow large companies to abuse their employees and artificially depress wages by fear."
Katharine	"I am a primary care physician. Every single contract that I have seen (and signed) has contained a non-compete clause. In fact, my current contract has a non-compete clause to the tune of a 25 mile radius for TWO years after leaving my current place of employment — in other words, I need to leave town if I want to change jobs and continue to see patients. These clauses are incredibly detrimental not only to physicians as employees and laborers, but also to patients and communities who stand to lose access to their doctors if a doctor opts to leave their current place of practice for one reason or another. These clauses are designed to be anticompetitive, to limit the employment opportunities for physicians, and to lock them into employment agreements in which they have little leverage to demand change, improved work standards or benefits, more time toward patient care, or the myriad of other things that would improve healthcare outcomes and keep doctors on the job for longer. Add this to the fact that there is an estimated shortage of approximately 55,000 primary care doctors in the US within the next decade. We cannot afford to restrict the ability of highly trained physicians to serve their communities simply for the economic advantage of healthcare systems. I strongly encourage the FTC to pass this regulation and to eliminate the widespread, inappropriate use of non-compete clauses in the US labor market."

Jen	"I support ending the non-compete clause for physicians"
Kelly	"My UFCW pension plan also has a non-compete requirement, with very restrictive rules as to where a person may work, how many square feet the merchant may have, what category of products are for sale, etc. This is entirely non-skilled labor. I believe that pension plans should also be prohibited from enforcing this policy, or intimidating with the threat to curtail benefits. I've been out of the industry for nearly 20 years, but am still "required" to complete an affidavit (attached) that I will not perform "prohibited work". My wife is in the same situation. I can only assume that thousands of others may be limited in their employment opportunities by these restrictions. I'm not even sure that this is legal now, but would like to ensure that it's not allowed going forward. Thank You Attachments IMG0846 IMG_0847"
Tara	"This would be a great benefit to all of us who are unjustly working under non-compete clauses. I have a 5 year non-compete clause where I cannot work in my field as a real estate broker or managing broker or in any capacity for any type of business that is in competition who also owns a title company and a mortgage company. If I were to leave or get fired, I would be not able to work in my profession. I have been reluctant to make a change in my employment even though the company has treated me badly and has been a party to violating what I believe are RESPA laws and employment laws including EEOC and Equal Pay for Equal work laws due to the existence of my non-compete which I have attached here. Daniel	"Hospital systems have and continue to implement non-competes to geographically restrict physicians and threaten their livelihood and happiness, which ultimately impacts patient care. It needs to be banned."
Jen	"I wholeheartedly support outlawing non-compete clauses. Non-complete clauses are a huge overreach- companies should have no control over what a person does when they're no longer employed by that company. Non-compete clauses only exist to hurt workers and should never be allowed. Thanks for your time."

Rita	"defend workers from these exploitative contracts, ban noncompete agreements"
Joseph	"I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Ultimately corporations must be reigned in on their control over the citizens of the United States. Non-compete agreements remove freedom, stifle creativity and innovation, and hurt all of our citizens as a direct result. The biggest example to me is the effect this can have on medicine and hospitals. Currently, the fact that Non-competes exist in this industry is an abomination and has a huge negative effect on both the employees bound by the agreements and also the patients receiving care. By binding people to these agreements, entire careers are effectively trapped in a situation where they are unable to simply move on if the professionals bound believe business practices to be unethical, such as egregious price increases on publicly funded medical advancements and otherwise (In the example of the covid-19 vaccines among many other publicly funded necessary medical advancements that should be nationalized as a matter of public health and safety). This is a must pass first step in order to effectively rein in corporate power and allow for a more just and a more ethical nation. We must increase worker power and stability, and ensure all people within our nation have the freedom to make decisions based on their own morals without being tied up by authoritarian and hostile corporations. As a nation, we must ensure individuals have the ability to push back without being strong armed and coerced by oppressive systems and inescapable financial situations that have historically handicapped them against corporate power. If people need to have a job to live, they must have the freedom to work for any employer without being cornered by any agreement that doesn't deal in safety or necessary regulation. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Beth	"Physicians must not be controlled by noncompete contracts. This disrupts patient care & access. PC & TC should never be allowed to control one another. This is how monopolies begin & greed takes over. Healthcare should not be a commodity - we are all individuals."
Claire	"We veterinarians deserve to navigate our careers without arbitrary restrictions imposed on us by employers who are afraid that their clients, OUR clients, will develop such meaningful relationships with us that they will choose to follow us when we pursue new opportunities in our communities. Barbara	"Please support FTC ban on non-compete clauses; they harm the economy greatly!"
David	"I am a practicing physician and I strongly disagree with the exclusion of physicians from non compete rules. This will lead to poorer health outcomes, poorer outcomes for patients, poorer choice for patients, and poorer working conditions for physicians"

Patrick	"This is a great rule, and I completely support it. It is much needed to ensure worker rights and economic mobility."
Melanie	"I had a non compete as a physician in Louisville KY years ago. I had to leave KY to practice my specialty when I lost that job due to a chairman switch. Non competes are horrible. I, as a radiologist, don't have my patients follow me. Just silly."
Mark	"As a family physician, non-competes are unfair and limit my ability find additional work close to home."
Amanda	"As a broadcast professional who works in an on-air capacity I've been hampered by non-competes in the near past. It is patently unfair to tell an employee that that they are not allowed to continue in the field they have studied in and often paid for certifications for any period of time, especially when broadcast companies feel no allegiance to those employees and often lay people off or fire them without cause. There should be no protections for the company if there are no protections for the employee. Broadcast companies have used these to derail the careers of several of my colleagues who were forced to leave the industry to feed their families. Please do away with non-competes!"
Andrea	"Non-compete clauses severely disadvantage employees. When it comes to concerns over intellectual property, narrowly written non-disclosure agreements should be sufficient. When I left a low-wage menial job I had secured right after college, I was hit with a letter by my former employer "reminding" me of the non-compete and non-solicit clauses in my contract. This was a very stressful and intimidating experience for a 22-year-old who was making $12 an hour at my previous employer and had gone to a $ 55k-a-year job that allowed me to meet my financial obligations. I had to seek legal counsel to draft the required response and was very paranoid for a long time. These clauses are often written to be overbroad and the threats for "breaking" them put a significant financial burden on the low-wage employees receiving these threats. When it comes to executive exclusions for a non-compete ban, I do not support it. There is no title standardization across industries, and there are many situations where those with "Director" and "Vice President" level titles are little more than high performing individual contributors, or middle managers. A ban on non-compete clauses would protect employees from the scorn of the employers they have left and bolster the economy. I grew up in the Greater Boston area around the time Burlington, MA became a large tech hub. Concurrently Silicon Valley was also growing rapidly and becoming the West Coast tech center. The two were competing with each other for talent and influence. We can see from history though that the CA ban on non-competes stimulated the economic activity in the area, and MA's non-compete laws have stifled it's growth despite what some could argue is a significantly stronger talent generation engine (Boston Universities)."

Joe	"I strongly believe that the FTC is on the right track with its effort to rein in the use of non-compete agreements. As the agency notes, these clauses were once bound only in employment contracts for senior-level employees with access to true proprietary information and corporate secrets, but they have proliferated to even hourly and contract workers. A non-disclosure clause has some of the same effect and can be used where necessary, although for most employees, neither should be used. I would find it acceptable for contracts for very senior employees - C-suite and possibly VP-level positions - to have non-compete clauses. But I don't think they are acceptable at any other level of employment. I have spent 25 years in freelance journalism and have even seen contracts for stories that included non-compete clauses - including that I may not write about this or any similar subject for a set period of time. That's a ridiculous thing to impose on a freelance contractor, especially since the phrasing is often vague enough that it could be taken to mean an entire subject area is off-limits. I've been successful in getting these clauses struck from contracts, but only with work, and only when weighing whether it's worth using my "capital" to push for that change on the chance that a prospective client will simply kill the contract and walk away, leaving me with unsold work. If there were clear rules disallowing these clauses, that would make life a lot easier. As a final point, in disallowing non-competes, I'd encourage the FTC' to think broadly about how employers might try to creatively sidestep the new rules and enforce what are effectively non-competes by other means. There's no point in disallowing a narrow class of contract language if inventive corporate lawyers can simply accomplish the same thing by other means."
Jason	"Non-competes should be banned. The real issue is loss of IP which can be covered under an NDA. These non-competes are currently used for so many different levels and positions, preventing someone from working in an industry for a year or two. Imagine having ten years in an industry and understanding how the industry works. Not being able to work there is harmful to the workers and used to keep employees at their current positions where they would otherwise leave due to lower pay or an environment they don't enjoy. I fully support completely eliminating non-competes."
Christopher	"I am a physician practicing for 15 years, serving my community both as a physician, but also a community educator and researcher. I strongly urge you to support the federal roll back of non-compete clauses especially for health care providers. These are a de facto method to depress wages and limit the ability for individuals to negotiate for themselves in good faith. The free movement of goods and services, part of the free market principles that lead to increased efficiency, is completely invalidated by the presence and enforcement of non-compete clauses. Even if these are found non-enforceable in a court, the cost and time to fight against a non-compete is so overly burdensome that it is not a viable option. Currently, I read reports that the American Hospital Association is lobbying for an exception for physicians and other healthcare providers. This monopoly should not be allowed to dictate unilaterally the terms of employment for healthcare workers throughout the country. Attorneys have enjoyed this protection in every state for years, and it is only fair and reasonable to extend to all professionals."

J	"As an individual who currently is working with a non-compete clause in my employment contract, I support the proposal to remove non-competes. My company has a very wide reach within its industry, so you could make an argument that ANY other company within the same industry is a competitor. I'd be at risk of being sued if I left the company to join one of them. I can't make use of the industry specific knowledge I've gained when I look for my next job. Thanks for making this proposal, I very much hope it is approved."
Elisa	"It's wild that people in a specialized field, or even a non specialized field can be shackled to a bad employer due to non competes."
Amar	"Please include non-competes for physicians and healthcare workers. As a physician if I am being treated unfairly and have a non-compete limiting my practice to a city, I will have no option but to move away. The problem is that all the patients I care for will not have a specialist in their area and will be without specialized care because of the non compete. It is an unfair tool that stifles competition and goes against capitalist values. Thank you, Amar Mannina"
Rodolfo	"As a physician I fully support this rule."
randolph	"I do think we need to do away with the noncompete clause in contracts and all businesses. I also see the other side of the story, but it's more compelling to do away with the noncompete clause, rather than to keep it."
Joseph	"The function of a democratic government is (or at least should be) to protect and serve the people. Even if we take the idea the corporation are people seriously they are still vastly outnumbered by the common folk. Moreover, corporations can't suffer, humans can. As such, any rule that disproportionately benefits corporations at the expense of the common folk is a failure of the whole system. If an employer can ensure a skilled worker can't take those skills elsewhere it gives them disproportionate control over them. Moreover it is anti competitive since it destroys the key incentive for both a company to reward it's workers and innovate against competitors."
Michael	"This is very much needed to see personal growth, as well as be able to provide a stable and financial stability for my family. Right now, most customers keep their business because of not just the companies, but the employee's work relationship with the local manager or sales reps. If the company changes, the employee is stuck at the company because of the noncompete, even if there are layoffs there noncompete sticks and does not allow the employee to stay in the industry and creates setbacks in the employee's life. Most companies lie about the noncompete validity in most states, and this cost employees time and money with lawyers or looking for a new job."

Neil	"I left working in a hospital setting because of corporate mergers limiting ability to be autonomous in my practice. There should be no exceptions for hospitals or any industry to allow non compete clauses"
Shawn	"Yes please"
Cara	"I am a citizen who has been harmed by noncompete clauses on medical personnel. They disappear, and all my confidential medical information details disappear with them, when they leave the abusive workplaces where I happen to have found these practitioners. Once I discover that they are prohibited from staying in touch with me, then of course I must refuse to see any other practitioners at that bad workplace, because the problems will just happen again there. It is hard to find a good PT or OT who is not bound by these nasty contracts. Please forbid non-compete clauses in work contracts."
F	"The very basis of -free enterprise" is the ability of its constituents to actually be free. Non-compete restrictions keep workers from being so. They need to be abolished."
Phil	"I strongly support this measure for anyone paid less than 1 million per year."
Zachary	"As a young adult starting my post-graduate career, the Non-Compete Clause Rule will greatly impact myself and many others within the staffing industry. I started my career with a staffing agency right after graduating college, and a year later I ended up moving to a new state and chose to work for a different staffing firm. Within a few weeks my old employer threatened to sue me for breaching my non-compete agreement. Not only did they attempt to do that immediately after starting a new job that I was very excited about, but when I put in my notice to my former employer, my boss threatened me after I refused to stay with the company. He said, "We have some of the best lawyers and a lot of money. Even if we don't win immediately, we can make it go on for so long that your new employer can't afford to defend you anymore, and they will have to let you go". I was scared and confused. I'm just a young adult trying to make something of myself in the staffing world. I wasn't taking anything from them and ironically, I was still supporting my previous employer through the friends I made while working there. I provided my old co-workers detailed information on previous business partners as I knew I could no longer work with them due to the non-compete agreement, and even though I didn't need to do that, I valued doing the right thing. I don't work with anyone or any company that I worked with at my previous employer, and other than my job title, my new role is entirely different. It is unfair that employers can have this type of power, especially over people trying to start a career. Most of the time you don't have many options when you are young in your career, and trying to find the right company for you is a normal part of the process. People shouldn't be held back in making career changes, they should be encouraged. If a company listens to their employees and treats them well, they shouldn't even come across this problem."

Christopher	"Please ban non-competes. My wife is a physician and non competes hinder her ability to practice in her area. Non-competes are anti-capitalist, anti- freedom, and anti-employee. She could not get a job anywhere without signing a non-compete. These agreements are almost never entered into by people with equal bargaining power. Instead, they are forced upon anyone seeking employment. Ban non-competes."
Christopher W.	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements."
Connor	"I'm in strong support of banning non compete clauses outright. Having worked in a specialized industry for 15 years, I'm currently in an employee contract that is extremely limiting for pursuing other opportunities. There are no trade secrets or intellectual property at risk in this case. This is purely driven by employee retention that places restrictions on employees to pursue other opportunities. If we can ban non competes across the board, it will help economic growth and enable more entrepreneurs in the US. To me this is a no brainer."
Travis	"Fully support this. I'm in the casino/betting industry and I've had non-competes with both prior companies and my current company. There are a handful of operators so non-competes severely hamper people like me to seek further opportunities"
Adam	"Wonderful. This has been overlooked for too long."
Jeffrey	"I support the ban."
Marissa	"I agree that non-compete agreements should be harmed. While I understand an employer wanting to keep their employees, this industry is not financially lucrative and people need to make a living by working at many different places! They deserve the freedom to work at the amount of places needed to earn a decent income."
Tara	"I feel strongly than non-compete laws should not apply to physicians. I am an emergency medicine physician. My patients do not follow me, but in order to leave my current place of employment, I am forced to uproot my family and move out of state. This is absurd and unfair"
Charles	"The negative consequences of physician noncompete agreements far outweigh any potential benefits for healthcare organizations. Removing these agreements is essential to enhance physician autonomy, reduce harm to physicians and their families, and improve the overall healthcare landscape. By eliminating noncompete agreements, the industry can address the physician shortage and ensure that patients in all communities have access to quality healthcare. Instead of relying on restrictive noncompete agreements, healthcare organizations should invest in alternative strategies to protect their interests and promote employee satisfaction. This includes implementing NDAs to protect sensitive information, offering competitive compensation packages, and fostering positive work environments. By prioritizing the well-being and professional autonomy of physicians, healthcare organizations can contribute to a more robust and effective healthcare system that benefits both practitioners and patients alike"

Ryan	"Please move forward with this proposal. All this does is hurt workers and makes for less competition. These need to be made illegal."
Ryan	"The non compete I was forced to sign or loss my job is affecting my life. The company uses it so that I can't compete in the US, Canada, and over seas. All they do is put hardship on workers and hurt competition. Big companies uses these to pay workers less and make it harder for you to leave and get a better job."
MARTHA	"Forcing a prospective employee to sign and adhere to a non-compete clause as a condition of employment is an unfair business practice: particularly in low-wage service occupations. If an employee signs a non-compete clause and then quits or is terminated from that job s/he is then unfairly restricted from finding work in a similar field with a "competitor". This severely impacts the employee's ability to find gainful employment and make a living in the field where they already have useful skills. The practice is the employer's attempt to reduce competition for their products by placing excessive controls on the labor market, through legal means. It can also result in overall wage and benefit suppression for workers in that job sector. Across-the-board signing of non-compete clauses should be illegal and banned in all future employment contracts and they should be voided in all existing contracts. A better, and fairer way to compensate businesses that provide extensive education and/training (attainment of a college degree or a license, for example), would be to allow contracts where employees are required to work for that company for a number of years after 2+ years of extensive training If the employee decides to quit after all or most of the education/training, prior to fulfilling the employer's work requirement, then the employee should be required to pay the employer a set sum to compensate for the training received."
Lori	"We absolutely need to do away with Non-Compete clauses. I am a Massage Therapist, and non-compete clauses are very disruptive to our ability to work. At most retail massage studios (e.g. Massage Envy, Hand & Stone, Elements, etc.), managers are very reluctant to grant raises. Many are franchises owned by venture capitalists who will cut every corner possible to preserve their profit margin. The most efficient way to get a raise in the current massage job market is to jump to another studio for the hiring bonus. Since employers refuse to pay us for our longevity in the spa, non-compete clauses are a direct impediment to our ability to earn the money we need to cover our basic expenses."
Jacob	"I feel that this is a smart move that will immensely benefit American workers and the middle class. I am glad to hear there are still people in government interested in helping normal people instead of corporate interests."

Todd	"Why should anyone be allowed to tell you, me, or anyone else where or who they can or cannot work for? I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Todd	"A right that can be taken away, is just a temporary privilege. Please stop this terrible, horrible, outdated practice now."
Justin	"I have lost job opportunities because broad noncompete agreement terms leave businesses afraid of legal retaliation if they hire an employee that signed one, even if it is vague about the terms. Noncompetes should not be used because there is no way to limit their terms or enforcement. There are already laws about the disclosure of trade secrets and an NDA does nothing to prevent an employee from waiting out their contract and going to a competitor with their trade secrets at a later date. This obviously only leaves one real reason they are used, to punish an employee for leaving, and to scare them not to."
Nathan	"To the NLRB: the proposed rule to end non compete agree means clauses in labor contracts is timely, important, and welcome. For most employees, there is no legitimate reason for employers to use non competes as a threat or as a coercive measure. Employees should have the right to seek employment or self employment elsewhere. Non competes are used in an anti competitive mariner by employers, arid his needs to end."
Ross	"The non-compete clause fundamentally undermines the concept of free market competition and gives the practice/employer undue power. Our country benefits from a free-flowing labor force that has the ability to move if circumstances determine that movement is in their best interest. This freedom of movement ensures that employers will need to remain fair in their treatment and compensation of labor in order to remain competitive. Non-compete fully undermines this basic tenet of the American labor economy and allows employers to mistreat their labor with little fear of that labor leaving for a competing employer. It is essentially a form of collusion where all of the employers/practices know that they do not have to put the most competitive working conditions forward to retain labor. This is especially true with employers / practices bringing in new, and often, young employees. As long as they are able to "sell" their practice well up front and get that young Physician, NP, PA, etc. in the door, then they know they have locked that labor in with little recourse if the working conditions they ultimately provide do not match those that were "sold." Ultimately doing away with the non-compete will improve working conditions for the labor force across the board, and promote healthy competition among the employers/practices. As demonstrated throughout this country's history, competition breeds innovation and is undeniably instrumental to progress. Stifling that competition puts a drag on the industry and promotes unhealthy labor conditions."

Nina	"Please do not exclude physicians from this rule. There is no reason that physicians shouldn't be able to have the same job protections as any other employee in the US. The non compete rules for physicians make it so that if a physician needs to change their job currently, they must uproot their family, take their children out of school in order to do so. Or they must live out of hotels for a few years in order to provide their family stability while doing locums work. Please protect physicians and their families from non compete clauses."
Physician	"Here's what I submitted... Physicians should not be subject to non- compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare, particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare providers. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Secondly, non-compete clauses can reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. In summary, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations (which I have personally suffered under) as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities. Noncompetes force physicians to stay in toxic work environments for the sake of family or their community, and this leads to burnout and ultimately leaving the workforce. Physicians should have the freedom to leave an unsustainable work environment. Noncompetes clauses give the freedom for employers to focus less on employee retention and more on profits, driving increased burnout and unfair labor environments."
John	"As a career counselor I am strongly in favor of this rule."
Pamela	"The current situation is simply slavery. I was utterly appalled to read that folks not privy to trade secrets or inside information could be prevented from finding employment for obscene distances or ridiculous lengths of time. We are supposed to live in a country founded on individual freedom. Businesses have to pay more to employees, less to management and charge more for their products to be fair to the working Americans. Please nullify these unfair laws. While you are at it, you might also negate binding arbitration and non-disclosure clauses. We are retired, so it has no bearing on us, but we do care deeply our fellow citizens."
Patrick	"Free markets are the life-blood of our country. It is errant to believe that the federal or state governments could be the only impediment to free enterprise."

	Corporations must be prevented from blocking talented individuals from freely moving between companies. The sharp increase of unnecessary NCAs also leads to desperate employees getting captured in NCAs simply because they have a job offer at a company that requires them to have an NCA. This perpetuates the cycle of poverty when companies are unwilling to promote from within. Reasons for this lack of upward movement cannot be simply brushed aside as the fault of the worker. NCAs capture individuals with no recourse for improving themselves."
Jeremy	"I am a physician working for a public state university school of medicine (SON!). When I interviewed for the position, I was shown a "member practice agreement" (a non-compete) that briefly discussed the relationship between the SOM, the hospital system with which it contracted to provide staff (physicians) and a third party billing organization that was contracted to do all the SOM billing. I was told that all physicians had to sign this in order to have a job with the school of medicine, and that the details of it were specific to particular roles. As a surgeon, the penalties for "breaking" the agreement are different, more strict, than they would be for a less competitive and lucrative field of medicine. I signed it, which is of course my fault as several attorneys have told me - no way around that, but this non-compete has prevented me from leaving my employer to take better, more lucrative positions in my large city, despite multiple offers. Colleagues in other medical specialties have had the same experience. Many years ago, when I inquired of my employer about the non-compete, and negotiating an exit, my attorney was told that I would have to leave, and then I would be sued for breach of contract. There is no way this hasn't kept wages down in my market. While treatment like this affecting lower wage earners is worse in my mind, I am also in a position where I would just have to leave the city, the schools, my friends, in order to practice my craft. I do not have trade secrets. I did not arrive with a lab and require lots of start up investment. I did not require a lot of expensive equipment. This is completely unfair treatment of a labor force. My non-compete, now well over 10 years old, requires 2 years of no practice within the city, a 50 mile radius (including from satellite sites) and a vaguely calculated $250,000 penalty with an uncertain "estimated patient revenue" section that my attorneys said could go either way depending on a judge - could be way more, could be less. But the SOM would fight, no matter what, and will not negotiate ahead of time. Even exploring a local opportunity a number of years ago led to backlash in my current position. We physicians are absolutely stuck."
Drew	"Hi there, I am a 28 year old employee who has never worked under an NCA, but I have known some who have and the limiting of personal options and employment freedom created is unacceptable. My state just banned NCAs under an income threshold late last year and I can feel the sigh of relief when I tell people that this happened. NCAs provide very little for the greater good and create helpless situations for some employees and a good reason for bad employers to refuse to improve. The law passed in my state went relatively unnoticed. As I understand, this FTC rule would require that employers inform their NCA employees of the unenforceability of that portion of their contract, which I fully support. If I'm understanding that incorrectly, I think this requirement should be implemented. I think the damage of an NCA only goes away when the employee is fully aware of

	their options. This rule should pass for the benefit of the employees of this country. NCAs only serve the employer and the power dynamic between private sector, non unionized employees and their employers is dramatically in favor of the employer. This makes the NCA a requirement, not a negotiable option. There are other legal methods for companies to protect their IPs such as NDAs, making NCAs a disguised way of simply stopping one avenue for competition in its tracks. Thank you for taking the time to review public comments."
J	"I am strongly in favor of this rule. Excellent work."
Nick	"I would like to add my support to the ban on non compete clauses. In my industry (IT) they are being used as threats that despite not going to court still scare away and limit potential job opportunities. You're average worker does not have the resources to fight in court and most potential employers do not care enough for a single employee to deal with the hassle. The end result is employees can be "trapped" in a position or forced to undergo prolonged periods without pay. All the while the cost to the company forcing the non-compete is nothing. The whole system has a chilling effect on workers and ultimately stifles competition and innovation"
Allison	"These non-competes are unethical and restrict workers from their full earning potential. If workers are laid off, they sometimes have to be careful not to get a job in the same sector they worked in. Non-competes are often a part of severance pay agreements which is also unethical. Please remove non- competes and take the side of workers instead of the wealthy. The workers need support, especially in this time of recession and economic uncertainty, and the wealthy already have too much."
Tom	"I am simply writing to express my support for the elimination of non-compete clauses in employee contracts. It seems an unfair practice that puts too much power in the hands of the employer while eliminating any leverage an Employee might have to change jobs or request more pay. Simply put, it is an unfair business practice."
Leah	"Yes, please ban non-competes! It is a corporate tactic to trap workers in a toxic work environment when they avoid addressing issues! It is harmful to workers, and exploits the individual by forcing them to move."
Andrew	"Please please, please end non-compete clauses!"
Robin	"I am writing to encourage you to ban non-compete clauses. We supposedly live in a country that values "the free market". If that is true, then employers should have to compete for talented people and talented workers should be free to work wherever they deem the best possible work environments for themselves. Non-compete clauses damage communities and industries by preventing people with valuable skills to be able to use those skills and also unfairly advantage

	employers. Companies and employers with non-compete clauses are trying to and effectively squashing competition. Yet, our economic system and political systems supposedly support competition as a vital part of a health economy. Non-compete clauses undermine competition and the very, values and tenants our society and governmental leadership hold regarding free markets and open competition. Of course, non-compete clauses always advantage the powerful over the less-powerful. Inherently within them are issues of fairness and justice. What type of situation is it when someone needs work, they have to sign a contract that has a non-compete clause, then if they leave the employer for whatever reason they would have to root up their whole lives in order to be able to contribute their talents and skills to their local communities? It is a situation that is unethical, that increases financial insecurity, that robs our communities of needed services (e.g. health care), that flies in the face of American values of fairness and open competition, that stifles innovation, that stifles the development and growth of new small businesses. The harms of non-compete clauses to workers and professionals and their families and communities far outweighs any benefit to employers and companies. The concerns about the siphoning off of intellectual property or proprietary factors can be dealt with through means other than non-compete clauses. Therefore, I urge the FTC to make a decision in favor of banning non-compete clauses in employment contracts. Sincerely, Robin E. Richard, MD, FACP"
Amy	"I am a OBG'N. The closest OBGYN group is at least 2 hours away in all four directions- 3 of which have a substantial mountain pass. If I leave, I have to move out of the area and can't serve any of this community, a landmass the size of New Hampshire. Non-compete clauses are not in the best interest of rural America. It deprives Americans of quality medical care in the era of increasing amounts of physician shortages. Labor and Deliveries are closing all around us; when hospitals haven't gained the trust of a local mothers, they take their family's healthcare business elsewhere. The hospital struggles and the community's healthcare struggles. The community then is not a healthy community and can then rapidly go downhill. Please help maintain the vibrancy of our small hospitals and the local quality of healthcare. Please do away with non-compete clauses. Our women and children need it."
Adam	"As a pet owner of multiple pets I completely agree non competes should be non existent. Just because an employer isn't willing to pay an employee what they deserve should not prevent them from working in the same area because they found an employer who cares."
Diane	"Non-compete agreements limit workers freedom, by limiting their ability to freely switch jobs, depriving them of higher wages and better working conditions, career growth and depriving businesses of a talent pool that they need to build and expand. I support the notion that non-competes should be made unenforceable to protect individual rights and freedoms."

Paul	"I fully agree with banning noncompete clauses for employees. When I entered the workforce from college, my entry level employee contract contained an NDA. Several coworkers voiced dissatisfaction with poor company decisions but were hesitant to leave, fearing some legal action despite having no access to intellectual property or being a decision maker. These serve only to scare employees. If a company cannot survive if employees leave the a competitor that company is unfit for the capitalistic free market."
Salvador	"I support this legislation as a financial advisor. These rules should have always been illegal and it needs to be implemented."
Calvin	"This is a great proposal. Please implement this."
Ali	"I'm a neurologist who has practiced in several states and remotely via telemedicine for over 10 years. Non-competes keep healthcare companies from improving treatment of their staff because they don't have to worry as much about attrition due to poor work conditions. Happier healthcare professionals take better care of patients and society. I am fully in favor of banning them."
Alison	"Non compete clauses should be illegal and non enforceable. It allows employers control over workers lives, allows for mistreatment of employees with no recourse other than to relocate family away from area. It stifles wages and decreases competition among employers. In the case of physicians, it can break the patient physician relationship unnecessarily due to employer conditions if the physician has to leave the area."
Tirzah	"I am a registered nurse who was required to sign a Non-Compete Clause with my current employer. I'm not even interested in leaving my current job, but I find it severely limiting in my future prospects. Banning Non-Compete Clauses would in so many ways improve the options of working Americans. Please do the right thing and ban this clause."
Leah	"Non-competes should not exist. It is as simple as that. People should not have to suffer financial expense or uplift their families due to non-compete clauses which often keep individuals prisoners in their workplace."
Imran	"I agree a 100% , being a health care worker, I feel trapped in my job with poor working conditions and limits me from seeking better opportunity in the neighborhood due to the tear that it will uproot my family. I support this move , please enforce this as soon as possible"
Wyatt	"I strongly support the proposed new rule banning most non-compete clauses. As an engineer and manager myself, I have seen firsthand that non-compete clauses have negative effects for both workers and businesses. First, for workers who have spent time and money building a skillset, a non-compete can prove

	disastrous when, for whatever reason, they are no longer able to remain with a specific employer. If, by the existence of a non-compete, those workers are rendered unable to find other local work in their field of expertise, they are often forced to move, accept jobs that don't align with their skills, or start over in a new career, all of which put them in very difficult situations. Secondly, and perhaps counterintuitively, non-compete agreements are also often detrimental to businesses. In today's environment of labor scarcity, non-competes limit the ability of businesses to hire talented and experienced workers. Whereas the free movement of workers between similar companies tends to align employees with the roles in which they are most successful, non-compete clauses prevent this natural optimization of the workforce. This results in employees lingering in roles where they are less effective or underutilized, prevents new or growing companies from attracting top talent, and even pushes skilled workers out of their industries for long periods of time. As such, the FTC's proposed ban of most non-compete clauses will be beneficial to workers and their employers. I strongly support the passage of this new rule."
Amen	"Non-competes are a form of imprisonment for doctors who get stuck in jobs that are unsatisfying but they can't move. I was in such a position. It took a toll on my family and my health. Now I quit the job but I am working locums which had me traveling away from my family. We don't deserve this. It should be a free market!"
Alec	"I think it would be wonderful to completely ban non-compete clauses. They really hurt individuals and their livelihood. Companies can compete by creating better products. They should not be allowed to compete by banning competition. And after all, companies are already protected by Non-Disclosure agreements."
Deborah	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! We need to stop unscrupulous and criminal CEO's in their drive to harm their employees. Please do enforce this ban on non-compete clauses. Thank you!"
Holly	"This is 100% necessary for physicians! We are currently held prisoner by the non-compete clauses in our contracts. This is a direct impediment to patient care and access to healthcare. This is also a way for the huge corporations to cap pay and not be held accountable to fair pay and work standards. Physicians deserve professional autonomy and respect in choosing a workplace."
Philip	"I am 100% for this new rule. Non-compete clauses are everywhere. Their only true purpose is to lock people into a job with an employer while stifling competition in the free market. To be clear this impacts not only W-2 employees, but also those who fall within other types of employment like a 1099. My fiancé right now is struggling to find a job due to non-compete clauses. Most offers are well below the average pay despite being qualified well beyond the norm and require she not work within a significant radius for years after leaving. Pay aside, she is justifiably worried that the work environment could be poor based on peers that have worked

	with such companies along with online reviews by prior employees. Could the work environment have improved or not be as poor as made out at some or all of these places? Yes, it could but taking that gamble comes with unfair penalties to the employee when testimonies turn out to be true. How can we expect a free market to work properly when you cannot leave your job? Employers are not incentivized to improve your pay over time with a non-compete clause. They know you can't leave for a more equitable employer that values your skills, experience, and education. With no true competition for existing or recent employees the marketplace of available workforce becomes only those that are new to an area or field. All of this culminates in an abuse of the employees because employers can get away with it. Employees can be stuck working in a horrid, underpaid, overworked, and abusive environment as the only solution to get out of it is uproot their lives by moving somewhere else or not work at all in the same field their career is in for an extended period. Most cannot afford to not work for a few months let alone the years that these non-compete clauses often demand. The situation is made even worse when you consider the lives of an employee's family. A significant other may not be able to leave their job to facilitate a move to a new location. Forcing children to leave their school, friends, etc. is typically not something a parent wants to do."
Sean	"I believe employees should have the right to seek the best fit for them and this includes being able to seek employment at competitors of their current employer. This gives freedom to workers and promotes competition to provide a more worker friendly environment. People should not be restricted on their ability to find employment that best suits them, the burden ought to be on employers to provide an environment that inspires loyalty in its employees."
Gabe	"As a physician, it's ridiculous that we are prevented from working at multiple hospitals. By getting rid of noncompetes, it will improve the physician shortage by allowing doctors to work both in urban and rural settings. Please stop corporations of hospitals from abusing doctors. Physicians deserve to be able to work where we want and deliver healthcare to people in need."
Nick	"The intention of the FTC's proposed rule is to prevent employers from using non-compete clauses to stifle innovation and prevent their employees from leaving, starting a new business or otherwise operating within their industry with their contacts. Non-solicitation clauses, as cited within the proposed rules, or "non-interference" clauses can also become de-facto non-compete clauses in the case where the employee has longstanding relationships within a professional network, but is precluded for some period of time from working with his or her customers because of these aforementioned clauses. The threat of legal action is so onerous that such employees would be afraid of starting a business using their professional network, because should the challenge on the basis of a de-facto non-compete under the rule fail, his or her entire company could be at risk. In knowledge-based professions, not being able to use one's network, and contract with one's network, is essentially forcing that employee to make the choice of switching industries and starting over, or not being able to work or start a business for the blackout period. An individual's professional network should be seen as very different than, for

	example, an employee downloading a customer list of people—with whom he or she has no ongoing or prior working relationship on his or her last week to take with him or her. Therefore, my proposal is that the rule be amended so that in most cases, non-solicit and language about "interference," be generally stricken down under the federal rule, with rare and specific exceptions carved out for cases such as mentioned above, where a former employee is specifically using privileged information to target another firm's customer base. However, if the firm lists such customers on publicly available locations such as company websites or social media such as LinkedIn, then such exceptions should not apply."
Caroline	"I am a young woman who signed a very strict non-compete agreement in a tiny town in Colorado- it has made starting my own business nearly impossible even though the woman I work for that made me sign it is completely dishonest and doing unethical work. This would change my life !"
Frank	"Obviously, This is just another way for companies to remove power from workers."
STANLEY	"I fully support a total ban (no matter the wage) on non-compete agreements. I understand some businesses worry a ban would put them at a disadvantage, but I do not feel the solution to that problem should be a burden levied against the very employees who built the business up to be in an advantageous position to begin with. The very nature of anon-compete is anti-competitive, anti-freedom, anti-capitalistic, and inhumane."
Alex	"I believe that this new rule change would be highly beneficial for both workers and the overall health of the US economy. Noncompetes are designed to stifle competition within sectors of the economy, which causes consolidation and occasionally outright monopolies. The US government has long identified the need to prevent such consolidation such that wages may freely increase with market productivity, and to prevent out-of-control price increases. Because of the stated mission of the FTC as well as the aforementioned reasons, I fully support this regulation."
Jahnavi	"I live in Colorado and work for a tech company. Because of this, and the unfair advantages that companies have and use over their workers, I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth, which is the promise of our American Dream and should be uniform and standard across the USA. BAN non- compete clauses!!"
Nancy	"Thank you for proposing this rule making regarding non-compete clauses. Particularly for low wage workers, non-compete clauses can have unexpected, devastating consequences. Around the time he turned 50, a close relative had a stroke. Afterward, he had to relearn speech, walking and other skills of everyday living. His ability to remember new information has apparently not come back as strong as it once was. Soon after he received his COVID vaccine, he took a job at

	a restaurant, carefully explaining his limitations when lie applied. His employer had him sign a non-compete clause saying he would not work for another restaurant for an extended period afterward, if he left this job. I never saw this document, and don't know the exact details. As people went back to work after the worst of the pandemic, my relative's employer added other employees. The employer had apparently become frustrated with my relative's limitations. His hours were cut to the point where lie could not have afforded to eat, let alone pay rent, if relatives had not supported him. Perhaps the employer cut hours rather than letting him go because that would have triggered an unemployment claim against the restaurant. Because of the non-compete clause, my relative could not go work at another restaurant. He was stuck. He had to find a new, low-skill, non-restaurant job where his limitations would not result in a similar situation. Please follow through with this proposed non-compete rule making. Non-compete clauses can be bad for any low-wage worker's future if s/he is geographically limited and has few skills. For someone with additional factors, it can be disastrous."
Elise	"I am writing in support of the passage of this bill. As a rural family practice doctor, I have a 2 year 50 mile non-complete clause in my contract. If I wanted to start my own practice, or transfer to another practice in town, I would have to engage in a lengthy and expensive legal process. This unfairly weighs the employment field in favor of the employer. Having to leave my current position to start in a new location would mean disrupting relationships with my patients, disrupting my family's life including my partner's job and my child's schooling. Please pass this law to eliminate non-complete clauses."
Ryan	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. My current employer has a very poor understanding of the use of non-competes. My company is a defense contractor providing professional operational SME services to primarily the Air Force. I have attempted to explain how our current non-compete clause is far too broad and essentially unenforceable, but they maintain that they have the power to approve-disapprove an employees ability to accept an offer from a competitor in the industry. I'm sure that it will come with no surprise that this employer also uses risks like the non-compete as a barrier to routine, annual comp increase discussions. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Kelly	"Life in the US has long been seen as a way of bettering oneself and "moving up". However a noncompete clause is wholly UN-American because it prohibits those making generally low wages from trying to get a higher paying job by using the experience they've gained. Someone who's worked 3 years making sub sandwiches is unlikely to be harboring major competitive secrets but they aren't paid well enough to take a year sabbatical while their NC contract runs out. The people who need to be able to take better-paying jobs for better opportunities are the ones most hurt by non-compete contracts."

Joseph	"Noncompetes do exactly what they say-prevent competition, to the detriment of the health care consumer. Noncompetes drive up cost and decrease care value. They lower provider satisfaction and by extension patient satisfaction. Patients whose providers are less satisfied are more likely to experience harm."
Catherine	"Non-competes disincentivize employers to retain employees based on good working conditions, and allows unethical employers to force employees to stay despite untenable circumstances"
James	"I am strongly in favor of eliminating the use of non-compete clauses, or restricting them to executives, as they were originally intended. As currently used, they create a for of wage slavery: a person must remain with a company no matter the circumstances or be unable to find a different job without completely abandoning their current career."
David	"I am a practicing ED physician for 20 years. During my time I have seen our health system fall to shreds. Patients are the victims ultimately. That includes you and your family. In the name of progress and money big health systems along with health insurance, pharma, and government have systematically trimmed the fat in the name of profits. Non-compete clauses are just one of their many tools. Never before in history have physicians been required to work harder, had less say in how they manage, and been complete removed as directors of the system, and as advocates for their patients. Please help remedy this problem by supporting them and including them in removal of this unfair practice that helps render them powerless."
Sean	"I wholeheartedly support this proposal. I have spent many years building my career and relevant skills, but my non-compete means I'd need to switch so far outside of my expertise that I'd probably need to take a pay cut and title reduction. If I had the freedom to do what I'm good at anywhere that I wished, then I could choose the company that offers the best culture and work environment, incentivizing my current employer to implement healthier policies and culture."
Melissa	"I support the ban on non-compete clauses. I am a veterinarian, and non-competes often block us from job opportunities in multiple cities across the country due to the now high number of corporate run veterinary hospitals. Please continue this fight for the working people."
Matthew	"This proposal would benefit American workers as well as the economy as a whole and should be implemented post haste"
Ryan	"Please pass this"

Heidi	"I am in full agreement with the banning of non complete clauses. I live in a small valley where a transportation company requires signing of non compete for 5 years! That's a ridiculously long term and entirely unnecessary. There are a few other companies nearby but this means a total ban on working in this industry. Please pass this law!"
Dustin	"I am an IT Consultant specializing in Insurance and Banking technologies. I was with my previous company for 12 years before being laid off for no fault of my own. In my contract, I had two year non compete clause which prevented me from finding gainful employment and severely limited my opportunities to work. Essentially, I could not work in my industry, and I could not provide for my family. All this happened during Covid, in a foreign country, with my wife and no support for repatriation or extension of health benefits. We were left to fend for ourselves, and restricted from seeking employment, nor speaking with colleagues or my professional network to find work, because that was considered "enticement" to lure away employees from the company. I lost over 2 years of income, my professional standing, my reputation and most of all, we were facing a global pandemic (lockdown) with no income, in a foreign country, and could not speak to my support network because everyone I knew in that country was because of my work and they were under the same contract and restrictions. I think eliminating 'non-compete' clauses would allow workers to have more leverage and control of their own skills and talents."
Greg	"Noncompete clauses should be banned. They are used by employers to exploit physicians and others."
Kathleen	"Hello I have been affected by 2 non-compete clauses in my employment as a veterinarian. Both of these clauses where written into my contracts when a corporate entity bought out the practice I was working at. One every thinks that something horrible will happen but the purchase of the clinics by a corporation changed everything about these practices. The corporate buyout of veterinary clinics is a whole other issue. But when these practices changed so drastically that I was not practicing medicine but selling wares I needed to leave. Unfortunately that left me having to travel far from my home to be outside of the non-compete and love clients and patients I had cared for years. As I mentioned this unfortunately has happened twice in my carrier again corporate buy outs of veterinary clinics is causing a loss of veterinarians in record numbers post pandemic. The non-competes of miles prevent us from working in our hometowns where we develop relationships and erodes the trust that people use to have in Veterinarians as now we are seen as money grubbers due to the way corporate practices operate. Many factors have led to the current veterinary shortage and animals having to wait days to be seen or many hours in an emergency setting this is just one of them. We as private practitioners cannot fight these large corporations that have multiple lawyers at their beck and call as we are still struggling to pay off our crippling student loans. We all want to practice veterinary medicine and look forward to a day when corporations do not dictate where or how we practice Veterinary Medicine."

Greg	"I think this is a great thing. Our company was recently bought out and the buying company lied about everything and forced a non compete on us and I am only in Tech Support. I am now stuck in an under paid job that I hate"
Adam	"Ban non-competes. I don't see why companies can remain in the same business after a relationship with an employee turns sour but the employee is suddenly left unable to leverage their experience and knowledge."
B. Travis	"Non-compete clauses are frustrating, particularly in the field of Information Technology. Whether the company is a consulting firm, a manufacturing company, a healthcare provider, etc. from an IT perspective, email still needs to be delivered, VoIP phones still need to ring, and devices connected to the network need to be updated. These and other IT-related tasks are not proprietary,, they are simply best practices that span any organization of any size. I would ask that non-compete clauses be rendered arcane and no longer applicable in 2023 and beyond."
Megan	"As an independent contractor- yoga teacher- I have been on the receiving end of the ambiguity with non-compete contracts a few times, all of them ended in the favor of the employer and not of myself, the independent contractor. One position I chose to leave for unrelated reasons, but was not able to have any communication or contact with students with whom I had a long-teen and growing therapeutic relationship. I feel that the inability to communicate directly with my students and attend to the impact of my leaving had a detrimental affect on them and on my reputation as a teacher. In two other situations, businesses wanted to require me to sign a non-compete contract which would have limited my ability to teach my craft. In both cases I chose to leave that position in order to maintain the ability to work as much and as often as I need to keep my income. In both cases, studios were offering 5 or less classes/week for me to teach and requiring that I did not teach anywhere else. The ambiguity of the non-compete contract did nothing at the time to support my work as a teacher. I had to leave those jobs in order to be able to maintain my private interests. I believe that this law will benefit teacher and the yoga community as a whole. Having more of a legitimate road for yoga teachers professionally."
Trinity	"Please make non-compete agreements only apply in very select industries with specific and secret information and skills. The overuse and pervasiveness of these non-compete agreements is keeping regular workers from finding better wages in everyday jobs such as Physical Therapy, Aestheticians, General Practice Physicians, Mechanics and even Hairdressers. Wages are already stagnant, Americans are fighting for their financial lives, non-compete agreements when used indiscriminately is unethical and draconian."
Alison	"The non-compete should not apply to highly compensated worker. Propose adding an exemption in line with Colorado Statutory language which follows.

	Otherwise, small businesses could be severely impacted if executives and key personnel who have access to business trade secrets are able to take that information and start a competing business. CRS 8-2-113 language "THRESHOLD AMOUNT FOR HIGHLY COMPENSATED WORKERS" MEANS THE GREATER OF THE THRESHOLD AMOUNT FOR HIGHLY COMPENSATED WORKERS AS DETERMINED BY THE DIVISION OF LABOR STANDARDS AND STATISTICS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND EMPLOYMENT"
Brandon	"Please end the madness and oppression of non-compete clauses for people that do not hold trade secrets. People that work in low level, non-decision making roles not exposed to sensitive business information or decisions should not be bound to non-compete agreements. This is a tool only used to limit employee movement and rights."
Christopher	"Non compete clauses are modern serfdom. They should be illegal for all but the most highly compensated professionals."
Justin	"I support getting rid of non compete clauses in areas that do not involve national security"
Amanda	"I really think that you should allow businesses to continue to require a non-compete for their highest paid executives. Like maybe you could set a threshold where the top 1% of highest paid workers at a company could be subject to a non-compete, or perhaps any worker earning more than 5x the average worker at that company. It is not necessary to implement legal changes that will also increase executive pay at a time when news articles have routinely reported executive pay exceeding 350x worker pay. Please executives have far more access to the inner workings of a business and the trade secrets than an average employee."
Frank	"I am a retired small businessman. I understand that non-compete agreements can be abused, and I think they should be regulated, but not eliminated entirely. For example: after having a reasonably successful retail/service outlet in a relatively small community, a large national chain opened nearby, in direct competition with me. My long time manager quit not long after that. Had he gone to work for the national chain, they probably could have put me out of business. Non-compete agreements should be restricted to managers (as defined by federal labor laws), and expire after a reasonable time, perhaps two years. Please do make the law fair to hourly employees, but do not throw the baby out with the bath water."
Eva	"Dear FTC committee: Non-compete clauses in labor contracts should be limited to only those employees who actually have access to company/industry secrets. Otherwise this is a blatant abuse of employees. It's unbelievable that this hasn't been eliminated already."

Constituent Support for the FTC's Noncompete Rule

Connecticut | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 billion in increased wages over the next decade, including for Connecticut:

Connecticut Covered Workers	Increase in Total Annual CT Worker Earnings	Increase in Average Annual CT Worker Earnings
1,314,029	$2,330,837,261	$720

Profession	Comment
	“As a practicing anesthesiologist, I want to express my strong support to eliminate non compete clauses in physician contracts...Seeing an end to non compete clauses would mean more flexibility for physicians in an underserved area like mine to take on sporadic calls at hospitals where they are needed, giving patients critical access to essential services.” -Juan R.
	“I fully support making non compete contracts illegal. I am under a non compete and feel I am handcuffed to my employer in a very negative way. It hinders my career advancement and the only one who benefits is the employer. It is a form of discrimination and exploitation. The hairdressing industry as a whole will benefit from the removal of these contracts.” -Nicole
	“As a Personal Trainer of 10 years and a mom of 3, the non-compete clause has hindered my ability to train new clients closer to my home and discouraged me from opening my own business. Where I currently work, I have not had a raise in 7 years, nor do I get any benefits including sick time. I feel as though I am treated unfairly but cannot afford to leave. The non-compete clause would force me to find an alternate career/job outside of what I studied and worked 13 years to achieve.” -Jenn D.
	“As an elementary school teacher, I stand with employees who are unjustly denied the ability to work due to this trade practice. My students suffer as a direct result of non complete contracts. While noncomplete may have a place among some professions, when businesses exploit this regulation at the expense of laypeople, the consequences are dire. Changes to noncompete contracts will support American workers and families who live check to pay check.” -Robert S.
	“In my employee agreement a list of —15 companies were listed as competitors, however, the legal clause said that this list was "non-exhaustive". When I left the company, they claimed that the true list was 75+ - to the point where this list now included companies and clients completely outside of the marketing research industry. The clear intent was to restrict my employee at any company remotely related to them, but essentially banning me from the entire marketing research industry. I support the invalidation of non-compete agreements.” -David

Anonymous	"As a physician impaired by non-compete to find a job in neighboring health system, I think the non-compete should be made illegal unless trade secrets are involved. You would have to move your entire family just to find a job otherwise you are locked to a health system/hospital."
Noah	"The non compete basically makes it impossible for me to take a job at another finance firm doing something similar to what I do now - that is, the thing I've been building expertise in for years now with hard work. While generally I have it pretty great in life (employees often refer to the restrictions as "golden handcuffs"), it does irk me that even if I get laid off, I cannot continue in the same line for work for 2 years."
Meagan	" Physicians need to be exempt from non competes regardless assigned placements in residency that may not be where we want to live...A noncompete could literally make us homeless or force us to make a major move away to be able to work when we have often been separated from family for years due to the Physician shouldn't have to choose between taking care of their patients and where they want to live."
John	"As a physician I believe that noncompetes stifle innovation and are a detriment to care. While I am sure health systems will look for a carve out to keep them I strongly hope they will be banned for physicians as well."
Lalarukh	"There shouldn't be a non-compete clause. Physicians have a right to make living."
Jennifer	"I am a primary care physician ...I support banning these noncompete clauses to improve quality of life, working conditions, and individual freedoms. They do not serve to protect anybody, rather they are a method for employers to exercise unfair control over employees...These covenants have been fought and overturned in courts, but this is an undue burden to have to go through. Please ban them altogether."
Jennifer	"Allowing these restrictions to continue toward physicians based on our earning potential is a double standard that is hurting individuals and communities... Please approve this ban without exception. There are other mechanisms for employers to protect trade secrets."

Laurie	"This rule is profoundly un-American and deeply offensive to all notions of freedom. Even its name- -"non-compete clause"- -makes clear it's about suppressing freedom. As for those individuals with highly technical knowledge obtained through working for a particular company, so what? If patent law isn't involved, this is a free country and if an ambitious employee wants to earn switch jobs that should be his or her right."
Michelle	"I support banning non-compete clauses and I don't believe pre-existing contracts with non-competes should be grandfathered."
Maure	"It's clear as day that noncompete agreements are bad for workers."
Mike	"I am a physician. Please ban all non-compete clauses. My patients will be better served without diem."
Lauren	"Employees need more power. Currently, employers have it all. Employees are discriminated against on a regular basis when it comes to pay or promotion because of sex, layoff due to age, & ability to leave a company and work where they can find a good job without concern of an NDA."
Samrat	"I am now in an involuntary contractual relationship with an entity that I did not choose and would prefer not to be. But because of the noncompete agreement, I effectively am unable to leave the relationship, even when the term of my existing franchise agreement ends. Since last I signed what was already an oppressive, one-sided, franchise agreement, the franchisor has removed its obligation to provide franchisees with any support. Additionally, the new franchisor has announced that it intends to change our royalty from 5% to a 4% to 7% range, shorten the term of the franchise agreement from 10 years to 5 years, raise performance standards, require us to provide monthly financial statements, and charge us a $500 technology fee, even though it has not provided us with any new technology. I do not support any of these changes...As such, I ask that you consider banning post-contract non-compete clauses in franchise agreements."
Ian	"Non-Complete Clauses significant disadvantage workers. As a healthcare provider, my ability to negotiate salary is restricted by my noncompete clause which does not allow me to apply to other jobs in the area. Because of this, I am not earning the wage at my current job that I would be able to negotiate if I did not have the non-compete clause. Furthermore, there is very little evidence that I would be directly competing with my current job if I did join another specialty."

Connor	"Excellent idea to help promote competition amongst practice groups leading to overall better care for patients."
Kari	"I strongly support the FTCs proposed ban on the non-compete clause. As a physician , I have always felt that this is completely unethical and nonsensical. Physicians are already very limited in job opportunities given how specialized we are. It is not fair to require someone to move out of their hometown and away from friends and family, or to drive a ridiculous distance to find a new job, just because one opportunity did not work out. It is also unfair to not allow patients to follow a provider they have strongly connected with, when that is also very hard to find these days."
Robert	"I am absolutely opposed to the oppressive non-compete agreements that really shock the sense of fair play for workers in search of similar positions elsewhere which may, or in fact, do have superior benefits and work conditions. Non-compete documents/contracts should be non-applicable if the signatory opts to render them null and void."
Andrew	"Please expand this to include not for profit hospitals. There is an employment crisis in this country and eliminating noncompete clauses would be a step in the right direction."
Carissa	" Physicians with noncompetes in their contracts are forced with the choice of uprooting themselves and their families each time they want to switch practice environments, and the daunting challenging of reestablishing a reputation and practice in a new location. Employers know this, and use it as leverage when physicians speak out against situations that are detrimental to patient care, inappropriate or illegal actions by their employers, or unreasonable/unsustainable working conditions."
Michael	" Physicians with noncompetes in their contracts are forced with the choice of uprooting themselves and their families each time they want to switch practice environments, and the daunting challenging of reestablishing a reputation and practice in a new location...When physicians are forced to work at jobs that aren't good fit, disillusionment with the field is growing at a time where clinician burnout is at an all time high. Therefore, many physicians are now electing to stop practicing medicine altogether rather than work at a job they don't enjoy, thus exacerbating the physician shortage and access to care nationally at a time where this is already a public health emergency."

Erica	"I strongly support the FTC's Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) to prohibit employers from imposing noncompete clauses on workers. From a nurse/healthcare perspective, it is a huge limitation that takes power away from workers, keeps nurses and clinicians in jobs without wage growth or unionization, and limits healthcare workers from working in the places where they are needed most. Even a small FQHC or rural hospital will often have a broad, coercive, non-compete contract, where a doctor, RN, or NP couldn't work within a 50-100 mile radius in similar care for many years if leaving - forcing workers out of primary care provision, out of working in their local communities, and away from working in rural, low-resourced areas.
Andrea	"I would support this rule. I have seen companies use it to limit potential competition."
Sandra	"I totally support this recommendation including rescinding current non-compete rules. A family member is unable to change jobs due to a two year non-compete he signed years ago, pre-pandemic. Times have changed and he is unable to change to a job that would not be competing with his current company; but is in the same career path. In my opinion the proposed change would be good for the economy."
Wendy	"This kind of clause is immoral and only exists to make sure workers can't quit and to punish them if they do."
Edward	"This rule is decades overdue! No one especially in the U.S. should be trapped in their jobs by a non-compete contract! It's a form of involuntary servitude & keeps people from seeking & obtaining better jobs! Once this becomes law of the land it's time to strike down right to work laws!
Louis	"As a physician non-compete contracts are detrimental to patient care- causing physicians to relocate to regions outside of their agreement causing Patients to lose access to care and to suffer from lack of continuity of care."
David	"There may be a few exceptional cases where these clauses are warranted, but most are just ways to unfairly control workers."
Afim	"Noncompetes for physicians only allow for further degradation of our working conditions by reducing our power to choose to leave. They serve no other purpose."

M	"I currently have a non-compete clause in my contract despite the fact I work for state government . There is no reason for non-compete except to keep wages down and tilting the power of the employer over the employee. Non competes cause unnecessary burden and disruption to families displacing children from their known environment. They limit freedom in a society where the markets regulate wages. They need to be abolished."
mario	"Non-compete unfairly affect physicians in a current environment where large healthcare systems with monopolies in the local healthcare market abuse their labor and make it impossible for small practices or individual physician to establish or flourish. Non-competes ought to be eliminated for all employees no matter their level of education or training."
Joel	"I am currently working under a non-compete clause. I was given a choice to sign the clause as an existing employee and was made to feel compelled to do so. Although not directly stated there was an implicit confusion on whether anyone who did not sign by a certain date would be let go. I felt a great level of coercion and have always regretted signing a document which I feel restricts my freedom to seek work at similar companies as my current one. Please pass this measure to right what I feel was an unfair practice that I am now bound to."
Craig	"I have personally been negatively impacted more than once by my current non complete. On one occasion I was told directly by the hiring company that they couldn't hire me because my current company has sent a letter to them telling them to stay away from their employees. In that case my current company didn't even have a competing product... It's sickening . These employment agreements are not fair and need to be abolished."
thomas	"Noncompete clauses are an anti democratic Method that allows companies to dictate people's lives. Yale medical school and yale new haven hospital has used noncompete clauses against physicians to prevent them from leaving employment at Yale. Not only is this reprehensible but physicians with enough money can usually successfully sidestep these clauses because they have money to hire lawyers if they need to go to court. People with lower salaries and less resources are trapped by their employers who use incompetent clauses."
Kevin	"Ban noncompete agreements."
Peter	"The proposed ruling, to end or severely limit the non-compete clause, is a boon both to workers and, to industry itself. This will unleash new ideas on the part of individuals who had been prevented from starting their own companies to put into effect their original ideas. This change will be very much in the American tradition of entrepreneurship and ingenuity. Good!"

Ashwin	"I strongly support the FTCs proposed ban on Non-Compete clauses. Forcing a skilled worker to give up working in their profession is completely unacceptable...I actually DID change professions when leaving my last company, but they continued to threaten me with baseless claims. While I might have won in court, every lawyer I spoke to assured me that I would spend a LOT of money just to win such a case, even though their claims were baseless. In the end, I was forced to "lie low" until the non-compete expired. The company never sued me, because they knew they had no case... Employees should not have to defend themselves at extensive cost, even when they change professions and are not at fault!"
Karen	"As medical groups and large health systems continue to consolidate, there is increasing challenge to a physician who wishes to change office locations. Already, most of us are reticent to leave current practice from a loyalty to the patients we serve. This is especially true in primary care and medical specialties where care tends to be longitudinal. Without this legislation, physicians must move or make a significant commute when change in employer is needed."
Joseph	"Non profits need to be included in this rule. Anyone that works in healthcare, money and competition is everything in a non profit. It's equal to that of a for profit institution. The proposal does not go far enough and is severely disappointing in that aspect. It will not help give me the freedom I need. This is especially true for workers that are PSLF. Their situation would not improve."
Kyle	"Non-compete clauses will allow healthcare workers (HCWs) actually to receive appropriate compensation and benefits for their level of training and experience, which will, in turn, promote better competition within shared healthcare markets, benefitting HCWs as a whole. The moment, HCWs are beholden to their employer, the debt they accumulated to earn their respective degree, and their current living situation. In order to advance within their respective profession when an advanced position for their experience becomes available, many times they are not afforded the ability to take these positions as they may be offered at a competing hospital in a shared market."
Chris	"I am a tech entrepreneur who was coerced into signing a non-compete when a Private Equity firm took over the company I was working at. In the week of signing that document, I am having difficulty building my own business as a result of their unfair business practices which included, forcing me to sign the document without providing me with a glimpse of what my compensation plan would be in the future. The noncompete contract is a direct hindrance to the creation of new innovation in the US economy."
Linda	"Please, please, please ban noncompete clauses/contracts! Workers must be able to participate freely in the labor market to support themselves and their families! These clauses/contracts are unfair and harm individuals, families, and economies."

Glen	“Non compete clauses coupled with at will employment can be compared to slavery. The at will language is commonly used to reflect an equal footing for both employees and employers, but when coupled with a non compete which is often over reaching it severely tilts die favor to the employer. The United States has some of the least favorable employee agreements in the non public employment sector. It's time to change this now and forever. California has been ahead of the curve and currently each state get to issue its own rules.”
Brian	“I agree with this ban on non-compete agreements - I worked under them for most of my 40+ years as an engineer and they made career choices very difficult or impossible... trade "secrets" can be protected without a non -compete clause.”
Danielle	“Non-compete clauses are used to trap employees and discourage free market employment. They are frequently used even when an employee going to another business would not result in a loss of customers/clients...No one goes to the emergency room to request a specific doctor, yet non competes prevent emergency veterinarians from seeking employment from other local emergency hospitals.”
Jake	“I am currently under a non-compete with my former company for one year. I have a family to support and take care, but I cannot pursue a job in my field because of my non-compete. This is completely unfair and unconstitutional to me. I have a career in my field my whole life, now I cannot pursue this for one year. This needs to be over turned, all I want and all of us under non competes is the equal chance to work in our chosen fields.. An example is a major league ball player playing for the Yankees for 10 years, and then is released or cut, or contract is up, telling that player you cannot go play for the Red Sox, or any other MLB team, just silly...Therefore I ask that you rule to make non compete illegal and make any current non compete null and void.”
Alan	“I have been under a non compete clause since my company eliminated my job in January. Non compete is for one year. I am in sales, have had my entire career in sales. Cannot find employment elsewhere, as every company whether online or in person interview asks if I am under a non compete. Usually first question. Very frustrating. I did not quit my last job, had nearly 25 years in the company, thought I would retire with company. The choose to eliminate my job with a 10 minute zoom call. Eliminating non competes will allow me and thousands of others the equal chance to seek employment elsewhere.”

Parth	"The AHA asked that any rules banning non-competes should specifically "exempt physicians and senior hospital executives or, more generally, highly- skilled, highly-compensated employees using, for instance, categories that are already well-established in federal law under the exemptions from minimum wage and overtime pay provided by Section 13(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act." This is a ploy by the AI-IA to drive down skilled labor wages. The non-competes for physicians specifically were intended to stop physicians from stealing patients (and in effect business) from the entity doing the hiring.//The AHA's comment is completely self- serving and should be ignored.
Karen	"I am a physician employee in non- for-profit healthcare system. The system dominates in the region already limiting local job market for my specialist. I am under noncompete agreement as mandatory part of job contract, which makes almost impossible to change the employer without moving to another state. I wholeheartedly support restrictions on noncompete restrictions. I also urge the Committee to include non-for-profit organization in the term Employer for this proposal."
Eric	"As a freelance web developer, it is essential to my business model for me to be able to provide the same services to a variety of clients. I would be unable to continue my business if just one client made me sign a non-compete. I would, of course, refuse a contract with such a client. This would result in fewer possible job opportunities for me and, perhaps, lower wages over all as I would have fewer project available to bid on, particularly if I had a service focused on an industry where non-competes were common."
Ann	"I am opposed to noncompete agreements and hope that you will make them illegal."
Paul	"Non-compete contracts are way over-used and hurt ordinary working americans. Please protect us.
Amy	"Many of my friends and family have ended up subject to non-compete clauses in their jobs because there is often no reason for the employer not to require this. It keeps my loved ones stuck in jobs with low wages, toxic colleagues, etc. because they may be forbidden from going to a similar role within a reasonable commuting distance...As a manager myself, I get how frustrating it is to deal with employees leaving soon after being hired, going to competitors, etc. but there is no way easing that frustration is worth harming the ability of workers to make their own choices and stifling competition in the economy. No matter how you look at it politically, non-compete clauses are wrong."

Ravenna	"Please get rid of non-compete clauses! It is so damaging to my work as a musician and teacher ."
Mehak	"We cant have hospitals control how we want to practice medicine . Compete clause is unfair. Please remove it."
Daniel	"As a physician , I have seen firsthand how non-compete clauses can have a detrimental effect on patient care and the competitive landscape of the healthcare industry. Non-compete clauses restrict healthy competition within the healthcare industry and give employers an unfair advantage when negotiating contracts. These clauses can be used to prevent physicians from seeking better compensation or better working conditions, as employers know that the physician is unable to seek employment from competitors. This can lead to physicians feeling trapped in their current job, with no ability to negotiate better pay or benefits."
Lara	"I am bound to my state and area for my husbands job and caregivers for our elderly parents. I am a physician and there are limited opportunities in this area - I feel bound to my job simply because of my noncompete which is restrictive in miles and hundreds of thousands of dollars meaning I cannot change jobs simply because of this and it is very fearful and a horrible way to practice medicine. I studied for so many years and want to serve patients in the best way possible and fear I won't be able to work at another practice because of the correct rules."
Niurka	"I separated from my employer on 8/26/22 to open up my own practice. They are part of a huge health system in CT. Connecticut is a small state and their non-compete restricts where and who I can serve. They forced me to relinquish an assisted living facility that I secured through my own clinic. Non-competes limit physicians from breaking the chains of corporate medicine. Employers treat physicians as property and use these agreements to intimidate us. As a primary care physician it is detrimental especially since there is a shortage in my specialty. We need to take medicine back from these greedy corporations."
Martin	"I strongly oppose all non-competes, especially in healthcare. Private equity companies are using non-competes to blackmail hospitals, and hold providers hostage. They force hospitals to pay expensive profits to shareholders, instead of directing that money back into the healthcare system."
Charles	"I want to give my 100% support to the ending of the non compete clauses in Medical sales field. The clauses stifle competition and entrepreneurship by LOCKING in employees into staying with one firm. Relationships that are developed by the employee and owned by the company not the representative who has done all the work. In a sense the companies not only want the own the business they also own the employee. In College all my Professors talked about the "laissez faire" nature of American business but in practice its anything but freedom of employee movement."

Henry	"It's time to put non compete clauses to bed."
Justin	"There is no legitimate reason to allow non-compete clauses. This unfair practice robs employees of agency for the sake of a wealthy few."
Craig	"I support the proposed rule. I've been unfairly subjected to non-compete agreements throughout my career and they have drastically reduced my career options. Thank you for enacting this rule."
Chris	"I had a non compete that left me helpless. They cut our commissions and if I went anywhere remotely, they would sue. Which they have for others. So you take a job that you hope better you and offers you a career path but if you want to change or if they do items like change your pay or pass you up for promotions. You should be able change jobs without fear of being sued."
Peter	"I totally agree with and support a ruling that bans non-compete contracts and agreements. Such agreements are a form of involuntary servitude, impede economic growth and stifles innovation and economic development."
Jill	"Non competes are archaic and only favor big employer. Ban them!"
Marc	"The FTC's proposed rule banning the use of non-competes is great news for workers like myself and for maintaining our economy's competitive edge. I have been subject to several non-competes which have restricted my career opportunities over the years. As I age and my skills become specialized, it becomes more difficult to find career opportunities that fit my years of experience and don't conflict with a non-compete. In recent years, we've seen an explosion of non-compete agreements across industries and income brackets that have depressed wages and stifled innovation."
Sadee	"Non competes are disgusting violations of an employee's rights. They are in favor of employers and leave the employees at a gross disadvantage. Unbelievable they were able to do this for so long. It also makes patients suffer due to inability to find a physician ."
Kateryna	"English is the second language for me, and signing up contract with my employer I didn't even know of what non compete means. Now 2 weeks into my training I found out that employer deliberately concealed important information about their policy, that drastically influences my monthly income. Now after I found out about also and non-compete chapter in contract I leave me at big that has no fair monthly rate and no opportunity to change the job 15 miles radius of the area.”

Aprille	“I am horrified to learn that non-compete clauses have been integrated into middle and low income professions . Their adoption by small to mid-sized service businesses like salons, car repair shops and restaurants is a misuse of an already ill-defined law. It was meant to safeguard companies from employees that had access to, and knowledge of, proprietary technology, which they could use to give another company an unfair advantage. The law was never meant to prevent a garage mechanic from moving to another job for better pay.//Our labor law seems to be taking giant leaps backward. We are steadily making our way back to the 19th Century.”
Heather	“Please eliminate non-compete clauses - these contractual limitations create modern slavery, allowing the rich to capture the intelligent. Non-compete clauses benefit rapacious billionaires, and American society loses while we watch these rich vipers destroy our best and brightest.”
James	“I really appreciate your lifting the conversation about non-compete agreements and hope that you will be able to implement measures that limit those agreements to create the job-lock and other problems that have hampered employees for decades. As with non-compete agreements, I believe that severance agreements like this are also part of the problem.”
Dana	“Please act to ban noncompetes especially in the field of medicine...I currently am a primary care physician with a 20 mile noncompete. I really had no choice to sign this contract which was required to keep my job when we were bought. I am planning to leave my current employer, but the distance is too far to expect my patients to be able to follow me and the company I work for has infinite resources making it impossible for me to challenge it in the courts.”
Stephanie	“I strongly believe that any language included in an employment agreement which prohibits an individual from earning a living due to leaving that company should be banned. As a hairstylist who is paid on a commission basis, it is important to note that in addition to non-competes, we are often subject to "business expense charges", which can significantly lower our commission rate. What we produce in service sales for our employer is very different from what we actually gross as a salary, which is approximately 1/3 of service sales.. Please stop non-competes and start treating all workers as you yourself would want to be treated.”
Jason	“Hello - I am fully in support of banning non-compete clauses in employment offers. The use of non-competes limits one's ability to change jobs freely within the same industry (which may be where their expertise lies) without fear of a legal battle...These clauses should be eliminated.”

Maeve	“Non-competes are a horrendous business practice that are designed to prevent people from using their skills to receive the fairest wages at a market rate. They are significantly overused, in fields where they are completely unnecessary, and unnecessarily burden employees and trap them in bad situations, while allowing businesses to significantly underpay their labor. The FTC should IMMEDIATELY ban non-competes, and open America up to free market principles.”
Austin	“Fully supportive of the action and goals of banning non-compete clauses in employment and especially terminations. This is harmful on wages, and non-competitive on employment.”
Robert	“As both an employer of individuals and employee of current and previous companies, I support this proposal. It is more fair to the individuals involved and prevents unreasonable restraint of employment by companies. This is especially grievous in the case of employees who are terminated or laid off yet are still forced to comply with the terms of a non-compete agreement, as well as for individuals forced to resign even though such resignation may not be optional. One element that ought to be considered as an exception goes beyond the company sales provision described but extends that to the sale or licensing of a product to an entity; here a non-compete seems reasonable for at least a period of time (>1 year).”
Rammurthy	“I am aware of situations where an employer forced an ironclad noncompete clause in the contract ..then fired the Physician employee with in 3 wks of hiring claiming inadequate revenues then refuses to give relief from such clause. The physician who moved from afar bought a home now stuck w such unreasonable clause preventing her for earning a living with in the area. Extremely disappointing such clauses are allowed to stand in this age of shortage of HEALTHCARE workers!”
Martine	“Please stop this predatory practice. It has derailed the promising career of a family member. She has studied very hard to become a physical therapist. Her first employer exploited my niece's kindness, sincerity and inexperience. In the end my niece had to decide to either stay in an abusive employment situation or due to an outrageous non-compete, to be without work for months until finding a position she now has to drive over 3 hours a day for. Her skills are in high demand nearer to home, but her noncompete makes it impossible.”
William	“I suffered under non-compete clauses for decades. They constrained my opportunities, limited my wages, and inhibited me from starting my own company and even writing a book! Employers protect themselves completely with non-disclosure agreements. That preserves their intellectual property. Non-competes are punitive and choke economic growth.”
Muhammad	“This non compete clause unnecessarily restricts doctors who for whatever reason may want to switch employment. What if the employer is operating under unfair practices? What if contract renegotiation falls through? This ability gives employers all the power to control where employees can work, this rule restricts free labor. I would vote against non compete clauses!"

Joni	"Non competes are keeping people from finding employment. They trap people in unhealthy and unsafe working environments. I am trapped in a non compete where the pay structure changes when ever the owners of the business feel like it. I can't leave because of the restrictions of the non compete. Companies should not be allowed to do what ever they want while their employees have to suck it up because of fear of losing income."
Benjamin	"I think this a great idea, and I hope it gets implemented"
robert	"Very much in favor of banning non-competes."
Phyllis	"Against non-competes at all levels but especially at non-corporate jobs. There is no intellectual property to protect here. Jobs are quit for many reasons and the ability to secure future employment is unfairly hampered by these contracts. Morally, there is no place for them in the modern business workplace."
Gautam	"It has been brought to my attention that for almost all contractually employed people, restrictive covenants are about to be made extra legal. At the same time, somehow, physicians are going to be specifically excluded from this new laws. It feels very much as if the government is "ganging up" on physicians, the very people who help care for the majority of the unwell and infirm. Excluding physicians from these laws very directly makes them susceptible to loss of all employment rights. They are immediately made pawns of what we already know is an oversized and overpowerful system."
Douglas	"Non-compete clauses are a PERVERSION of capitalism, insulating incompetent companies from market consequences for their own market failures. Companies need to accept ALL the responsibilities of participating in an OPEN market, including paying a price for a resource, LABOR, here, that will gravitate to the highest return for LABOR's market participation."
Daniel	"The non compete clauses in contracts have forced me to change careers on more than one occasion. Putting undue financial strain on me and my family which I support. These are unfair clauses giving employers an unfair advantage over employees. Please do eliminate non compete clauses nationally, you will be helping millions of people better their own lives and the lives of others around them."
J	"I signed my noncompete as a condition of getting a raise about 10 years ago. I was two months, postpartum and vulnerable my noncompete applies even if my employer fires me I am in the healthcare industry , providing clinical care, and having a noncompete has prevented me from seeking other employment with my current employer and work environment has become difficult.”

Hao	“Non compete needs to be banned especially in medicine where physicians have no special company secret. It hurts patient care when patients cannot go to see the physicians they want. Overall non compete is bad for all workers and should be banned.”
Elizabeth	“As a physician , this would be a valuable change for more flexibility. If a company wants exclusivity they can recruit and retain better without dictating what a person does after leaving the company. Non-competes are predatory and should be eliminated.”
Frank	“100% support this. Non competes don't protect company secrets they protect employer turf and prevent workers from freedom to choose their workplace.”
David	“As a physician , I strongly believe this needs to be done away with. There are rules preventing taking patients from prior employer, however there is no reason why I need to double my commute to switch jobs. If a patient chooses to follow me, that is their prerogative. A bad employer should not be able to hold an employee hostage. If they don't want people leaving, they should treat employees better.
Danielle	“I am a physician with a unique specialty in a small state. I recently left my job where I was hired to perform my specialty. When I decided to leave that job because I was unhappy, no other major practice currently utilizing my specialty was outside of my non-compete radius. My non-compete clause was forcing me to either stay in my current position where I was unhappy, or to take a job knowing I could not practice my specialty for at least one year, unless I wanted to build a clinic from the ground up (which I was not interested in doing). Also, prior to signing my contract that included the non-compete clause, I attempted to negotiate that the radius be reduced/removed, however, my employment was contingent on signing the non-compete.”
Ariel	“Non competes should be illegal.”
Swagoto	“I am a physician , who, if you include medical school, spent 14 years in training to become an independent practitioner. The current process for medical training at each step makes trainees feel as though they should be indebted to their employers and supervisors instead of their patients. At the end of my training, when I was searching for jobs, the process did not become any better. Abolishing noncompete clauses would not only be a liberating step for essentially all healthcare workers but the increased mobility would elevate the best health systems further and I believe would lead to better patient outcomes and experiences.”

Missy	"I strongly support this ban. Currently as a yoga teacher/personal trainer it really limits where I can work and who I can work with - leading to difficulty making ends meet financially."
A	"Today's workplace is far more unreliable and employees need to have the ability to apply for other jobs without fear. Noncompete language is sometimes included in employee incentives and through other means and they are unaware. I purposely gave up bonus stock incentive in 2022 as a result of noncomplete language and risk of RIF at any time. I am happy to see that the FTC has clearly defined the difference between an NDA and a NCC as a company should be allowed to have employees and third-parties sign an NDA to protect their interests."
Dr. David	"Non competes are a source of leverage and power that employers unfairly use to preserve their monopoly. A resident coming out of training has no choice but to sign a non compete, moves their family to a community and not infrequently discovers that the same people who insist on a non compete are like the lawyers in the famous Grisham novel, The Firm. It's time to give the employees a bit of level ground. Please abolish this inequity."
Muhammad	"Everyone should have the right to work and practice their skills without fear of intimidation. Non compete is against the basic right to work in area of your choice."
Nicole	"Noncompete clauses have caused me to have to move cities to be able to work. It's not fair that a business can reservist require an employee to leave the state in some cases to honor a noncompete. There are no regulations with size or timeframe. Employees need protection from businesses not the other way around."
Adam	"Please enact this rule and eliminate noncompetes which are holding our economy and society back and creating unnecessary human suffering for talented people who want to work and provide for their families."
Frank	" Physicians should under no circumstances be excluded from protections from non competes. The AHA is solely trying to support monopolies of labor despite no demonstrable benefit to public health or commerce with preventing physicians from moving to different practices."
Syed Areej	"Remove non compete please"
Matthew	"I support this. Non-compete contracts are anti-competitive. They everyday Americans that are trying to better themselves."

AI	“When I left my last job 4.5 years ago, my then employer tried to include very onerous noncompete language in my severance agreement. Such language would have severely limited my ability to find another job or start my own business in a field in which I had close to 30 years experience. I was able to delete the noncompete language from the final agreement, but only after heavy negotiations, the help of a good lawyer, and me trading off things I wanted elsewhere in the agreement. I should not have had to pay a lawyer, nor trade off other terms in such an agreement in order to continue to be able to work in the field in which I had close to 30 years experience.”

	"Not only have I been severely impacted by a non-compete as a committed employee, a father, husband and professional but as now as a business owner as well. I absolutely love people, my father was the king of people, the king of sales. When I graduated college I floated around a bit to figure out what I wanted to do as a career. I ended up having lunch with my fathers insurance broker, who has known my dad for decades, and had known me since I was a child. When we had lunch he said "I know your dad, I can tell you're like your father, if you want a position here I would love to make one for you" I started at the amazing draw (not a salary) of $28,000 per year.... About 2 years into my role I was literally knocking the skin off the ball, crushed my draw and was making "decent" money (probably 60K) One day my office manager came to my desk with a paper and casually said "hey Ed we forgot to have you sign this when you were onboarding" It was a non- compete! I was a stellar and loyal employee, what triggered this?? I immediately called my dad, I explained my situation and asked what to do. He said "eddie. I would take that paper, open my desk drawer, place the paper in the bottom of the drawer, shut the drawer, and never talk about it again (unless it comes up) I DID EXACTLY THAT!On black Friday 2018 I dropped the bomb, I called my office manager and told her we have a problem, [my boss] brought up a non-compete agreement that she gave to me, but I never signed it, told her the story and let her know I was afraid to bring it up, never wanted to because I wanted this to work in the most sincere way, but it's a fact I didn't sign it...I explained [to my boss] that I never leveraged the lack of a non-compete against him, HE leveraged it against me. We came to an agreement, I took part of my block and I launched my vision which became Pro Benefits Plus. Now a business owner I have employees sign a mutually worded non-solicitation agreement. I don't want to ever use it, even had an employee leave mutually and wished them the best and shredded it. My industry is plagued by massive consolidation, massive VC backed agencies gobble up small guys as the industry continues to age out. The problem is all the younger folks are locked into non-competes, I can't hire anyone, the goliath agency with legal council on staff can bankrupt me with legal costs at will. They place their employees in a pressure cooker, the consolidation effects quality to business owners and employees, and the employee can't leave without knowing they're for 2 years...Non-competes need to go"
	"If non compete clauses are not fully made illegal, they should at the least be required to be extremely limited in time (6 months), geographic location (20 miles) and specific to any DIRECT HARM to the current employer. My daughter had to sign the attached non compete clause in order to work for an event planning business. It had no geographic restriction which is important as the company was based in New Jersey but they planned events as far away as Texas and Wisconsin, as well as events in surrounding states. Not only would this exclude her from working for a competitor, but also any business this company had contact with, whether it be advertising firms, sales

	offices, ticketing venues, etc - essentially any business that remotely had any type of business connection with this employer. So if she quit where would she be able to find a job??" -Diana
	"Companies shouldn't get to control what people do in their free time or after they're no longer paying people, simple as that. It's a personal freedom issue. Companies already have too much control over our lives, and with the current state of the economy, people unfortunately need more than one job sometimes and nothing should prevent them from doing so." -Hunter
	"I strongly oppose the noncompete clause as it leaves doctors as slaves to the corporate business and hospitals without any freedom. Corporate businesses and hospitals will definitely take advantage of their power and all executives will make all the money from Medicare and health insurance payments. Also [quality] of health care will be compromised seriously" -Natwarla

Vaibhav	"Non compete clauses are extremely unfair towards a physician . It provides leverage to hospital systems to abuse a physician and treat us unjustly and if we decide on leaving the hospital then we have to leave the city because of non compete clause. I would request FTC to ban non compete clause and make it illegal"
Kristine	"As a family physician working in rural Delaware , I have seen first-hand how non-compete clauses in physician contracts have hurt my community. It can be difficult recruiting physicians to my area, and retaining physicians can be even more difficult. Most physicians in this area are employed by hospital systems, and their contracts always contain non-compete clauses which force those physicians to find work out of the area if they decide to not renew their contract. This means patients have even less access to both primary care and specialty care, when there is a shortage in my area as it is. I support the proposed rule."
Melody	"Noncompete clauses are outdated and should be forbidden to allow competition in all fields as well as not stripping workers of pay or their trade or profession."
Ellen	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! Furthermore, how can such an undemocratic clause actually be lawful, opening the way, as it clearly does, for complete tyranny of management over workers?"

Scott	"I agree with the rule proposed. Non compete clauses hamper a workers ability to negotiate freely for a better paying job. It's simply not fair to restrict a workers mobility."
Laura	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine entirely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Peter	"As Americans, we need to do all we can to ensure the anti-Americans in the pro-Putin Republican party are not successful in their endeavors to grow their anti-democratic, fascist, plutocratic, oligarchic, kleptocratic authoritarian regime. Efforts to improve the earning capabilities of hard- working Americans is a solid step in that direction."
Anita	"In Delaware it's taking 12 weeks for reciprocity on a barber license meanwhile a man that I know is homeless and has no money. This is a terrible situation that need to go away. The same hours are required in Delaware as i. pa where he was a barber manager. What can he so??? Many job offers but they can't employ him until he receives his Delaware license. It should be automatic when the requirements are the same. Terrible situation"
Bethany	"Non-compete clauses hold employees hostage in jobs that are not meeting their needs. If a job is not meeting an employee's needs either by not paying them a wage that meets their cost of living needs, or by creating a hostile and toxic work environment that endangers the employee's mental and physical health, that employee should be free to leave and seek employment that does meet their needs. Competition in the job market holds employers accountable to foster a positive and equitable work environment - this is the way to attract new employees and to retain the ones that you have. Employees in every industry should have the opportunity to fine tune their existing skill set and upskill as they desire without having to uproot their entire life to meet the criteria of a non-compete limiting their work in their industry. Also, the non-compete as it is being used today has far exceeded its reasonable scope. Medical scribe companies are forcing college students to sign non- competes saying that they will not work for any other scribe company for 1 year after separation from the original company, and even then not at any site that is within a 60 mile radius of a site partnered with the original company. These are kids who are juniors and seniors in college, looking to get medical experience and patient contact hours to get into medical school. The majority of them work as a scribe for 6 months to 2 years and then move on to further professional education. As medical scribes, they are also being treated like paid interns at a wage nowhere near the current cost of living, and subject to gross exploitation. It's unconscionable Eliminating non-compete agreements would be the first step toward making the job market more equitable and addressing other exploitative legal agreements imposed by employers."
Anthony	"My company has a 1 year non-compete rule that caused me lose consideration from another employer that wanted to hire me. I feel like I have been injured by this policy. My current company only offers 2 weeks of vacation per year and I wanted to make a move. I was notified that my company fiemmersbach USA went after another employee that left the company and was hired by another company. Non-compete needs to disappear in most situations especially if intellectual property is not involved."

Dan	"I have an noncompete agreement in the state of Delaware that has already prevented me from advancing my career elsewhere. a ban on noncompete agreements would be a huge benefit to millions of people. Thank you."
Scott	"I wholeheartedly support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete agreements."

	"This is exactly the type of action that the public hopes our government agencies will do, but rarely see. I am a practicing physician and veteran of the US Air Force. I believe in free and fair markets, and the American way. Non-compete clauses have always struck me as anti-completive, anti-free market, and un-American. They are instruments that keep the balance of power tilted toward the powerful while limiting the options of less powerful workers. The government should restore the balance by passing this rule banning non-compete clauses." - Gustavo L.
	"I worked as a teacher at a public charter Montessori school in Florida. Becoming a Montessori teacher required two years of courses in addition to my normal certification. I thought it would make me more sought after in the marketplace. Instead my school required a nc clause for three years after I left them in my area. My county has a shortage of Montessori teachers. My spouse works in this county. I could not leave. Instead of being more desirable in the field, and having an employer that worked to regain me, I was essentially handcuffed even though I had put in years of service and repaid the cost of my training Please ban non competes." - Anna C.
	"[I] am a mid-career data professional who works for an internet-based company with Users from all around the world. I am restricted by non compete from working for other companies within 100 miles of anywhere they do business for 12 months. This is effectively a total ban on working for competitors, since my company has global reach, and competitors are also global. I had to turn down a job when, after a decade, I had forgotten that I had signed an NC upon being hired. My company pays very poorly because they know that employees would have to abandon their careers in order to leave, and in my case, the last decade of my professional experience. They made no investments in my professional growth. I am trapped. Enacting this rule would allow me to go where I am needed, at a pay rate that is commensurate with my skills." - Tanya G.
	"Please vote to protect workers from Non-compete clauses. These protect the business at the expense of many low-paid individuals. Where I work, any yoga teacher who quits a yoga studio is barred from working in our town, because the studios all have non-compete clauses. What a terrible thing for the teachers, who are chronically underpaid. The system keeps them under paid. Please protect us. Thanks you" - Ann L.

	"I've been doing hair since I was 21 and have been working in the industry since I was 16. Over ten years later in being dragged through an expensive lawsuit by a former employer for a breach of non compete because I left and started working for myself. I did not reach out or solicit a single client and have evidence of their messages reaching out to me to find where I had gone to. The business suing me closed down two months after I left which had been planned months before unbeknownst to the staff as the business had been sold to another salon. Yet the original owners of the salon are continuing to come after me for 180,000 and recently offering to settle for 25,000. My contract stated that I couldn't do hair in the entire state of Florida for two years, effective killing my career. When I signed it I was told it was standard and that they would never pursue it, and wasn't aware that the state of Florida took these documents very seriously. So here I am today a year later drowning in legal fees and paying off a personal load I had to take out to cover my expenses while the multi millionaire multiple business owners continue to come after me." - James F.
	"As a journalist, having non-competes has serious implications on my job, my career path, my paycheck, and the opportunities I'm able to consider. I write this comment in favor of a total ban on non-compete clauses. Without non-competes, I could be considered for jobs at other TV stations in the city I live in, without having to uproot my entire life to a new place to receive a better wage. The current non-compete I and many others in my industry face bans be from working in my TV viewing area market (where I live) for upwards of one year following my last day at my current company. This would require me to either move to a new city to continue working in my industry, or to find a completely new career path to stay employed in the place I call home. Journalists are also very underpaid. I can share countless stories of TV news reporters like myself who were struggling to make rent and pay for groceries in their first jobs, many forced to take a second and even third job. Our salary increases do not come near keeping up with inflation. Without non- competes, stations would be forced to offer more competitive wages to not lose their staff to the competition. The impacts this could have are massive-- and that doesn't even scratch the surface of all other work industries outside of my own." - Malique R.
	"I am an OBGYN resident physician in a severely underserved area. If I sign the non-compete the hospital is demanding I sign, I will essentially be trapped in that job with no ability to find a better fit, unless I leave the state. Corporations know they have this power over recent graduates and are using it to take advantage. On top of a quarter of a million dollars of medical debt, I also have a disabled child and I need to stay in this town because this is where my child care/ family support system is. All I want to do is take care of patients, take care of my family, and have the ability to continue to grow in my career as my life and priorities change." - Katherine R.

Stefan	"Warning. I'm not an expert on this topic (or pretty much any other topic under the Sun!), but this proposed rule banning non-compete clauses seems good to me: "Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. For example, non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition.""
Michael	"If sports found a way to allow free agency without binding, then business should be able to do it, too. Sports teams compete directly, when you lose your best player he/she may go directly to your competitors, but you can do that, too. If companies want loyalty, they should drop the "at will" employment mess and sign their key employees up for extended contracts that are incentives to stay put."
James	"Non competes should be prohibited. It stifles creativity and growth. It is used by Employers to intimidate and cause stress. Please do away with this arcane process. I am currently dealing with the non compete clause. The company Berkley Group is threatening to charge me 500 per day in damages. I am 70 years old and was offered a position different but better than my previous employer. I worked for them for 28 years and produced over a Billion in sale. Prior to the time, I spent 20 years in various executive positions within the Timeshare Industry. My past employer is treating Me horrifically. I am guilty of accepting a Better position. Please Help."
John	"Non compete clauses should be banned simply because they are attempts at contravening free trade and the constitutional right to the pursuit of happiness and security"
Alejandro	"Hello, I was required to sign a noncompete for the company I am currently working at. After being here for almost a year, the company is not what I expected it to be, and is dishonest in it's marketing and has no integrity in it's products. I have multiple offers from other companies with higher wages and benefits, but I am not able to do so for fear of legal action against me due to my noncompete. A ban on noncompetes would dramatically improve my quality of life by allowing me to get a higher paying job without fear of a lawsuit that could leave me destitute. Please institute a ban on noncompete agreements, because I believe it constitutes an unfair competitive advantage to companies when their employees can't even find a job in the field that they have studied or have experience in without fear of legal repercussions."
Christina	"I'm am commenting in favor of the proposed rule to eliminate noncompete clauses related to employment contracts. I am an OB-GYN physician in one of the top 10

	OB shortage markets in the country, in Jacksonville, FL. My non-compete would require me to move out of my county and any county that borders this one for 5 years in order to work if I leave this job. It would also preclude me from working for any insurance company in FL in an administrative capacity. This essentially holds me hostage in my job. If I chose to leave, it would deprive my patients of their physician at a time when OB physicians are a significant community need. Please do not carve out physician contracts from this proposed rule."
JOHN	"This is essential for economic flexibility for workers."
Barbara	"People should be able to work where ever they want, regardless of whether they have been in a comparable business. Non compete rules should NOT be allowed. They should be as illegal as they as immoral!"
Sajat	"I am a primary care physician and have worked as an employee for several large corporations. The non compete clauses are extremely harmful both to the employee and the consumer. It prevents the employee from seeking better career opportunities for fear of disrupting the family (spouse's job, kid's school) by moving out of the restriction zone. This leads to disgruntled employees providing substandard service to the consumer. I have been a part of management teams and non compete clause was always discussed as a weapon to prevent doctors from leaving. It reduces the incentive for businesses to improve the work environment to retain talent. Non-compete clauses are anti-capitalism!!"
Juan	" Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare, particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare providers. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Secondly, non-compete clauses can reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. In summary, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations (which I have personally suffered under) as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities."
Tahs	"As a physician who does not even see patients in clinic (and therefore cannot "take my patients with me" if I left to a different job) even I have a non compete. It makes no sense, and has severely restricted where I can live. I want to switch jobs but I can't. I want better hours so I can spend time with my baby, but I can't switch to the other hospital in town because of my non compete. It is like a choke old on my life and it affects my family too. Physicians are people too. I hate my non compete and feel trapped. Please, if you abolish non-competes, dont leave physicians out."

Abdullah	"I fully agree that non-competes should be banned. They stifle growth and reduce opportunities for self-growth. Usually hardly enforceable, they are used as a scare tactic and employees shouldn't have to worry about those in an already hyper-competitive job market."
Asim	"To whom it may concern: I am a practicing physician . Noncompete clauses are rampant in our profession, especially with the increase in organization employed physicians over the last two decades. Non-competes generally harm the ability of physicians to respond to changes in patient care needs across the country and unfairly burden physicians from addressing changes in care needed within their own community. From a patient standpoint, noncompete clauses beholden patients to a specific administration via the fact that administrators make decisions about clinical care and resources allotted to their employed physicians. These allocations are first and foremost in the interest of the medical systems rather than in the interest of changing standards of patient care. Lastly, physicians have spent more than two decades in school, and in most cases have devoted significant financial resources to attain their degrees. Noncompete clauses reduce our ability to maximize their income potential, settle our educational liabilities, and build a sufficiently robust retirement plan in the setting of a markedly shortened career created by the long educational requirements of entering the profession. Rather than requiring accountability to maintain standard of care and reasonable work environment for healthcare professionals, non-compete clauses allow employers to hold employees hostage as the seeking an organization that would accomplish this better would require uprooting the physicians entire livelihood and family due to restrictive nature of these covenants. These policies are antithetical to the concept of a free market economy or any form of leadership culpability. In essence, noncomplete clauses have benefit only corporations and employers and actively harm patients and their healthcare providers. These policies have no place within a modern healthcare system. Sincerely, Dr. Asim Ahmed"
Saif	"I support banning non-compete clauses"
Syed	"I strongly recommend to ban the non-compete clause because it gives employer a lot of control over the non compete employee and I have suffered so much abuse by my employer because if could not leave my job. He abused me and made me work extra hours and also abused my family. Finally I was able to leave but he has caused life long trauma."
Rajesh	"Non compete for physicians should be banned."
Maheen	" I am an attorney that reviews physician employment agreements, and every single day, I am shocked by the lack of bargaining power these doctors have against the hospital systems in their towns. One hospital system in a major metropolitan city has a clause in their contract that states a specialist is barred from ALL MEDICINE within their non-compete area (this client did internal medicine residency and then further training in particular subspecialty). I explained to the hospital's attorney that such clause wouldn't even be enforceable since it is broad and has nothing to do with the specialty my client was offered to join at the hospital system. The hospital's lawyer refused to acknowledge my point, and seemed to believe I was incorrect. If my client wanted a job here, they'd have to agree to this egregious clause being in the employment agreement. The part that is disappointing is that years from now when my client decides to leave the hospital system he will feel like needs to abide by this clause, obtain a waiver or spend money figuring out whether the clause is valid or not. We need to be kinder the physicians in our community and remember that when they are in training they get paid less than minimum wage for all of their service, they sacrifice their personal lives all to be in a profession that aids others. Of course ever profession has their bad apples, but there are far too many amazing ones that deserve to be protected, and I am commenting today to try to help them out. The hospital systems can leave, but these physicians are a part of our communities, I don't want them leaving because their relationship with their employer didn't work out and I don't want them having a ridiculous commute, because they are forced to stay in certain areas because lets say of divorce and custody reasons. I could go on and on, but I know you understand my point.

P.S. One final point, this horrible agreement also had a clause in their that enforced the non-compete in the event the agreement was terminated due to a disability on part of the physician. I tried to strike this and educate the attorney that this hospital system may not have the same obligations to accommodate the physician under ADA due to the accommodation being considered an undue burden for this specific hospital system - however the attorney refused to budge. So folks this is what is happening - this is what we are up against- we need a law to prevent non-compete in physicians agreements.

Another trend I am noticing is that hospital systems and private equity companies are buying practices. They know the non-competes they are adding in are overly broad, but they add them in to "scare" the physicians into complying with such bogus provisions or make it so that the physician has to spend money to obtain a legal opinion on the enforceability of such opinion or litigate it to find out if it would hold up. So many physicians just want to move on with their lives and continue to earn money to provide for their families, and are not interested in solving these open ended legal questions surrounding enforceability of non-competes (many of them are also straddled with large amounts of debt due to student loans and this isn't a priority budget wise). We need to BAN physician non-competes. ANOTHER ISSUE IS THAT lets say a physician has a wonderful patient population associated with a specific insurance provider, but their practice decides to part ways with that provider, but the physician disagrees and would like to continue serving that patient population. These non-competes bar the physician from being able to open up their own shop to serve those patients since they are barred by the non-compete. The PATIENTS are the real losers here, since now they forgo continuity of care by someone who was willing to provide such care, and they are now forced to find another care provider who may or may not be as good, and they are forced to develop a new relationship."

Shabana	"Hi. I'm a pediatrician and I do not agree with the non-compete clause. It interferes intermittently with the care I provide to my patients."
REDA	""I believe non-compete clauses result in an inequitable balance of power between the employer and employee. Clauses such as these foster an environment of discrimination, unfair wage practices, and bias against promotion for those who want to continue living in a specific region or want to continue in the same field of expertise. Not to mention that it also affect patient's care as patients are no longer able to see their provider that they like and trust. I support this proposed change."
Tyler	"Non-compete clauses put undue strain on the working public and stifle career mobility, and forcing our populous to generalize their skills instead of specializing because they cannot work in the same industry they already have experience in is a terrible policy to enforce. Removing non-compete clauses will either allow workers to find opportunities that are tailored to them (increasing overall job satisfaction) or will three companies to provide better benefits, perks, culture, or salary to keep their employees. The current system allows businesses to effectively threaten their employees with the cliché "You'll never work in this town again!", after the first day they start their new job."
Tim	"I wholeheartedly support getting rid of non competes, especially if the company you have a non compete with is the one that lets you go. I was let go from Space Coast Credit Union in Florida on January 5th of this year and they're holding me to a year long non compete where I can't work at any financial institution in Florida for a year! In my industry, there's no proprietary information to share or clients to take with me. Now I can't support my family and am finding it very difficult to find a job. I've talked to my former company and they refuse to release me from it. Please make this initiative to get rid of non competes effective as soon as possible."
Gabriel	"The proposed rule to ban Non-Compete Clauses is the only just and moral choice for an America that purports itself as valuing individual freedom. Non-compete clauses often greatly restrict the freedom of a worker in ways that a company is not bound to reciprocate. While there may be legitimate cases for their use, the abuse of such clauses has become such a common scourge that it is questionable what value there is in retaining them at all. If America values its innovation, and believes that competition inspires greatness, we cannot allow corporations to place shackles upon our citizens and prevent them from exercising their right to improve their condition through finding new employment."
Talat	"Noncompete clause should be banned forever. It limits competition and improving quality of care. It obligates affected individuals from market fair share. Banning noncompete clause will promote healthy labor force movement. Noncompete clause, contradicts United States, Constitution."
Matthew	"I fully support getting rid of non-compete agreements. Non-competes hinder a person's ability to find a new job and make their lives better. Non- competes are un-

	American and serve the interests of corporations over citizenry.citizenry. Labor needs to be mobile for a strong economy and non- competes prevent that."
Ahmad	"I absolutely support a ban on non-compete clauses forced upon workers. They are anti-competitive, by definition, harmful to workers, and only exacerbate a power imbalance between employee-employer relationships."
Agustin	" Physicians can provide a wide range of services and no institution should be limiting that capacity. God forbid you become a physician with multiple board certifications in the aim of helping others and a single institution had the audacity to avoid you from doing it in the community"
Julibeth	"The non compete clause restrict the individual from full professional development, decreases opportunities to improve services and impose restrictions to small business, solo proprietors and entrepreneurs."
Stephanie	"I am currently a Speech-Language Pathologist . I work as a contractor in the school system. Due to my non-compete, I have not been able to negotiate or raise my rate in 3 years. I feel stuck with a company I do not like and cannot change companies. The non-compete states I cannot work in the same district for a different company. So to switch companies or negotiate my hourly wage, I would have to leave the county for 1 year and return with a new company. I feel powerless and stuck. At this point due to the non-compete I feel my company's motto is: "you get what you get, and you don't get upset"."
Eric	"Hello. Thank you for this consideration. Noncompetes can be important if inside company secrets can be used to assist another company. However, a noncomeote for a physician is not appropriate in many instances such as myself. I am an Anthrsiologist- I do not bring patients (or clients) to the hospital, that is the job of the surgeon. Furthermore, I am bring my learned skills to any facility I work in- I am not being taught how to do my job. As such, I should be free to work anywhere at anytime if I so choose. Please do not remove physicians from this bill. We already sacrificed 11-20 years of our lives to obtain board certification, please do not force us to work at a location that is not optimal for our lives or careers without the risk of moving our families. Also, medicine is now made of large corporations- we are highly trained employees supervised by bosses who do not understand how to do our job. This at times leads to abusive practices that are difficult to change. Please do not limit our ability to work and be happy. Thank you."
rishi	"Dear FTC: Thank you for the proposed Non-compete Compete rule. As a physician practicing for over 13 years I have witnessed first hand how restrictive non- compete clause have directly caused harm to the patients and community we serve and care for. Long standing patient physician relationships are harmed or severed when non-compete are enforced. Unfortunately, our patients suffer disproportionately. Frequently, physicians may find they can no longer provide the best care possible for their patients and will need to change locations in order to provide care or the latest in medical care, but are unable to freely do so due to a non compete. Below are 4 reasons in support of your non compete rule: 1. Non-compete employment

	agreements impede upon a doctor's ability to practice, limiting their ability to provide medical care to all possible patients. This results in restrictions on the type of care a doctor can provide, which can have a negative impact on patient outcomes. 2. A non-compete agreement can also lead to a lack of competition and increase healthcare costs for patients, as providers are limited in the types of treatments they offer and the services they can provide. This can be especially detrimental to those living in rural or underserved areas, who may not have access to other providers. 3. Non-compete clauses can create an atmosphere of uncertainty for doctors, as they may have to choose between adhering to a contract and risking losing their job, or risk violating the terms of their contract and potentially facing legal action. This creates an environment of fear and anxiety, which can lead to decreased job satisfaction and lower quality patient care. 4. Doctors should be able to practice without fear of retribution from non-compete agreements. It is important that doctors be allowed to provide the best care possible to their patients, without fear of being penalized for choosing to provide certain treatments or services."
Carrie	"I am a family physician working under a non-compete clause. While I want to continue to serve my population of patients, I must move over an hour away in order to restart my practice under the current contract. This is unfair to me due to the cost incurred from a move, the loss of my community, and the impact on my family. However I feel it is an even larger disservice to the community I serve, as I am in a physician shortage area and would leave many people without immediate access to a physician. Non-compete clauses in the medical profession are harmful to the population, not just the worker. Please reverse the non-compete clause with this ruling. Thank you for your public service."
John	"Non-compete agreements limit the capability of American citizens to sell their labor in a free and fair market, jeopardizing the very earning potential and our communities, and providing employers with an unfair competitive advantage in the employer/employee relationship. I invested 4 years of my time and money to earn a Bachelor of Science in Communications from the University of Tennessee; graduating in 2002. My degree cost me over $40,000. I went to college to specifically work in the Advertising industry. My first job, at 22 years old, required me to sign a non-compete agreement. I was hired by the St. Petersburg Times (now Tampa Bay Times) to sell advertising. This non-compete agreement prevented me from working for other publishers operating in the local metro, while also being limited in my career development at this employer. I was terminated (at will employment state) yet was still not able to pursue opportunities in my community. This limited my earning potential and increased my fear of not being able to pay my mortgage. I was able to work with a publisher doing business outside of the local market, but it was not my first choice. Since then, I have gone on to work in digital publishing, software, and insurance; where Vector Learning, Nextraq, and Met-Life all forced non-compete agreements to be signed before starting, but not during the employment negotiation process. I was recruited to a second GPS company and received a "Cease and Desist" letter representing Nextraq after I left the company for a different vendor for a better opportunity. A legal review cost me over $500 from counsel, ensuring I could in fact continue to work at my new job. I was considering leaving this job, where I saw a $15,000/year raise. The most disturbing language I see in these types of agreements

	read something along the lines of "Employee will not prospect potential customers". The entire world cannot be named as potential customers. Non-compete employment agreements provide employers an unfair competitive advantage in the labor market. Employers do not own employees, nor have any right to prevent where they seek future opportunities. This does not preclude non-disclosure agreements, which could still include trade secrets. Non-compete agreements in each stage of my career have limited me at times to find work outside of the industries I have built a working knowledge of, and to some degree, also devaluing the investment I made in my education. Additionally, for states that have At-Will employment, employees can be terminated at any point while also being limited where they can continue to earn a wage to provide for their families. This can be especially threatening in smaller communities. Non-compete agreements are a form of an uncompetitive advantage for employers in the labor market. I fully support the ban on non-compete agreements."
William	"As a person with an entrepreneurial spirit a non-compete stifles my ability to build a better "mouse-trap". Thoughts, ideas and innovation would be subjugated to a company's slave-mentality should they force an individual to not innovate a better way. Monopolies were barred in the late 1800s as companies could squash competition via cut-throat techniques, like price cutting, denying access, etc. America was built on innovation and the pioneer spirit and when you allow a "bully" mentality to reign, i.e. non-compete, we set ourselves and others back to the period of slavery. People being laid-off are a result of bad economics, poor management and planning, and the competitiveness of the capital markets. Let us compete and thrive for a better tomorrow without being held back by a feudal system. Please ensure the non-compete clause is abolished!"
Michael	"Competition is the centerpiece of Capitalism. Competition and profit motive is what makes capitalism work as well as it does. Everywhere that competition is constrained demonstrates a distortion in the market. Non-compete clauses are inherently anti-competitive and, therefore, anti-capitalist in the strictest sense of the word. Workers should be free to pursue opportunities based on their skill sets. This benefits the worker, because they can improve their station by maximizing their skills and burnishing their reputations. It benefits employers because they can attract the most skilled workers. Non-compete clauses bind the worker to the shop and disincentivize skill acquisition and self-improvement. Nobody wins. The worker is trapped. Businesses do not benefit from greater skill skills. Even the business holding the non-compete agreement loses because they have a less productive employee who would rather be somewhere else. If a business owners want to keep an employee from competing with them, then they should take on the cost of that by incentivizing that employee to stay within the firm."
SARAVANAN	"I Fully support the banning of non-compete agreements; software consulting companies and staffing companies have extensively abused the non-compete agreements to a great extent, and courts have wrongly enjoined the employees in many litigations. This has suppressed wages, prevented employees from taking better positions in other companies, and employees are held against their wishes and forced to work for the same employer."

Alison	"I've been getting my hair done with a girl in a salon called N Color. Her name is Ana. She is a single mother of three. She is excellent at what she does. She signed a contract with the salon owner 18 years ago. It prohibits her from working within an 18 mile radius of the salon. Obviously all her clientele is outside of that area. She doesn't like the work environment and could make a lot more money on her own. She has taken the contract to several attorneys, and they have told her she has no way out. Is there any way you can help her?"
J	"I was recruited to a program at a large not for profit hospital in Florida. A number of major concerns were not disclosed to me regarding the state of the program. I have not been at the program long enough to establish a referral practice but I did move my whole family 3000 miles. I have opportunities at other hospitals in the community but the administration is hying to prevent me from going yet not making an effort to change moral and ethical issues within the program. Please consider the power these multimillion dollar salaried CEOs (of course even at not for profit institutions) possess when controlling the fate of physicians such as myself. I trained for 14 years followed by many years of grueling, stressful work as an attending and the skills I possess should not be hijacked in this manner."
Anonymous	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations at the expense of the workers. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. Eliminating the noncompete clauses will help improve healthcare access for patients as hospitals and corporations can no longer restrict where physicians can work. I urge the FTC to reject the AHA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians. It is essential to protect workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned physician."
Anonymous	"I have a "non-compete" agreement at a large company and I cannot search for employment, elsewhere. Salaries in my industry are as much as double what I make & conditions are the worst of the worst. What can I do?"
Cheryl	"I was just informed that my accountant cannot do our taxes for the next 2 years due to a non-compete law, which I am extremely upset about. She could not work under her current work environment and chose to leave, which has affected many of her clients including the 4 companies that I manage payroll and books for. I have not found a better accountant that I truly rely on and who is always there for us when we need her. I have 4 companies that would like to vote or put in our 2 cents that this law should be changed as most people needing work will sign anything to be employed

	even if they have no idea that their working conditions could cause unhappiness forcing them to leave and not be able to do what they love for 2 years, seems unethical to me."
Hans	"Non-Compete Agreements are fundamentally anti-American. They lock workers into Feudalistic agreements, scaring them into subservience and servitude. They hinder the dynamic nature of America's economy and artificially suppress wages. There are limited cases where non-compete agreements are warranted, like companies with secret formulations or practices that are core to the business (e.g., Coca-Cola vs. Pepsi); for everything else, non competes should either be banned or in the case where they are necessary, the worker should be provided financial compensation that takes into account their base pay and contract duration."
Andrew	"Action to ban the abusive and absurd use of non-compete agreements is long overdue. Our free market system and economy are based on the idea of competition. The best products should find the most consumers and the best (and best experienced) workers should find the most desirable jobs. Forcing low-wage workers to sign a non-compete agreement that prevents them from leaving KFC to work at McDonalds allows that worker to be exploited and cuts workers off from the opportunity to better themselves. It is an updated version of sharecropping and other forms of worker entrapment that prevent employees from "walking off the plantation" to seek better opportunities elsewhere. Obviously, an experienced worker is often the most valuable, as he or she requires less training and already has considerable skill in their role. I strongly support the FTC's move to eliminate the shameful use of non-compete policies, which offer workers and consumers nothing, while giving employers yet another unfair advantage over hardworking Americans."
Taylor	"I strongly support the proposed rule to ban non-compete agreements as they unfairly restrict competition and limit workers ability to pursue new job opportunities and negotiate better wages and benefits. This practice can lead to workers being trapped in unsuitable jobs, hampering the job market's ability to operate efficiently. Banning non-compete agreements would level the playing field in the job market, giving workers the freedom to move between employers and negotiate better terms. This would result in increased innovation, higher wages, and better working conditions for employees. I understand some may argue that non-compete agreements protect employers' interests and their intellectual property. However, there are other ways to protect this property without limiting workers' freedom. For instance, confidentiality agreements and non-solicitation clauses are sufficient alternatives. It's time to end the practice of non-compete agreements and promote competition in the labor market. Thank you for considering this rule."
Cassandra	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. Patients may be "required" to accept treatments that are not helpful, because they are the current "standard of care." These have been shown often to not help as they are promoted to do, and can actually be harmful, like psychiatric drugs for children or opioids for minor pains. Doctors should not be shut up. And, they should be free to leave a group that they believe is not allowing them to do their best, or for whatever other reason they have. For example. non-competes result in patients losing access to the physicians who know them best, deter physicians from speaking out about patient safety concerns, and increase the cost of medical care by thwarting competition. The bottom line is that non-compete clauses are bad medicine. I urge the FTC to adopt the proposal to ban them."

Sarah	"Non competes are bad for patients, bad for doctors, we will all fall victim to situations benefiting corporations over people."
Susan	"Please ban non competes. They are bad for society and are in direct opposition to our freedom to choose. They are very bad for health care and continuity of care for patients."
Mina	"I work as part of a very large hospitalist group and although almost every physician on current hospital is not happy with our current job due to management issues. The non compete will basically prevent us from working in the county as company have a presence in every hospital. Few of us are considering alternative venues for the possibility of just leave medicine all together. Too much stress, low incentives and too much burocratic work is putting a toll in us and making other venues outside medicine more attractive. Even if you make less money, you will have time to enjoy family and live which is unnatainable at the moment."
Mary	"I urge the FTC to add a new subchapter J, consisting of part 910, to chapter 1 in title 16 of the Code of Federal Regulations. I have seen first hand the damage a noncompete has had on a mother of two children working as a hair stylist on Amelia Island, Florida. Her former employer has taken her to court and she is no longer able to serve her long-term clients, of which I am one, in any salon within 10 miles of her former employer. I find it outrageous that a noncompete would apply in this situation. This is having a significant negative financial effect on her and her family. Noncompetes are not appropriate for many reasons and are especially not fair for those working in service level positions such as hair stylists."
A	"Mom-compete clauses prevent medical professionals from optimizing their impact when they are trapped working for big hospitals and corporations and cannot go to where patients need them the most."
J	"I am a physician in Florida and have been out of residency for 8 years. The non-compete in my contract is so strict I would have to take my kids out of school and move to get another job. A fellow partner tried to leave the group and spent $10k in legal fees fighting to stay in town and eventually gave in and left In the medical profession large medical groups and hospitals have large legal departments and budgets to enforce non-competes. They can then force unfair wages and unfair work hours. In the medical profession we get no education or proprietary knowledge from our employer so they have no ground for the stringent non-compete."

M	"I support putting a stop to Noncompete Agreements in order to support our economy and working population. Non-competes are about one thing: Power. They are yielded as weapons against workers."
Chris	"We must have this rule passed ASAP. I am being unfairly targeted by unscrupulous employer and it is hindering my ability to earn a living with the skills and knowledge I have worked hard to obtain. I David and they are Goliath and I barely have enough money to pay the bills, let alone try and fight the employer or worse, fight a lawsuit for trying to make a living!"
Jenny	"I am strongly opposed to non-complete clauses. They are bad for patients and bad for healthcare providers. Patients may not be able to see the provider that they wish to because if a provider leaves their job, they may not continue to work in the same geographic area. Providers may be forced to stay in a job that they are unhappy in because they are not legally able to obtain employment in the same area. Providers lose the opportunity for financial growth which is something we cannot afford in this healthcare shortage. It is time to remove the archaic practice that costs billions of dollars annually."
SAMEER	"I am an oncologist in Palm Coast Florida. It's difficult to discuss the various problems of our medical system in isolation, as each exacerbates and potentiates the effect of the others. However, of all these problems, the greatest is the non-compete clause. The physician shortage is a manufactured crisis. It is a by-product of non-compete agreements which are now ubiquitous in medicine— every doctor has to sign a non-compete today. Non-competes, particularly in medicine, are an instrument that solely serves the interest of corporations while harming Americans. Non-compete agreements allow healthcare corporations to create oligopolies by carving out territories, not much different than drug cartels. The motive is purely to ensure egregious profiteering from human suffering by stifling competition and controlling access to healthcare. For the first time in our history most American doctors are now employed, almost 75%. The safety net of independent physicians is gone. The Majority of Doctors now work for staffing firms that are owned and operated by Wall Street Private Equity firms, like the Blackstone Group, KKR., and Summit Partners. Consequently the magnitude of the effect of non-competes has never been greater than it is today. Non-competes completely suppress competition, decrease access to physicians and have led to worse patient outcomes. — That means more avoidable suffering, more avoidable death, and exponentially higher healthcare costs. Non-competes allow corporations to create toxic and exploitative work conditions for doctors and even more importantly, interfere with our medical decision making. This in turn increases physician burnout which is now reported by more than 60% of American doctors. A direct consequence of this is that physicians have to leave their jobs, and many are leaving medical practice entirely. When doctors have to leave their jobs, non-competes block them from serving in their own communities. This creates what are known as 'medical deserts' — a term used to describe regions in this country where there are few or no doctors at all.

	What happens to these patients? When doctors are being eliminated from the community, the remaining doctors have to absorb these populations. It is no wonder that it takes months to see any physician at all today. Non-competes silence physicians from whistleblowing. When corporations can threaten physicians and their families with economic warfare, all whistleblower protections mean absolutely nothing. How do we expect doctors to speak out about corporate practices that are fraudulent or endanger human lives, all in the name of profit. We must decide if we want Wall Street muzzling our doctors via coercive non-compete agreements. The results of non-competes in healthcare are being borne out right in front of our eyes — How do we have a shortage of physicians and less access to medical care, but the highest healthcare spending of any country, only to get the worst patient outcomes of any advanced nation? Yet somehow hospital corporations are making record profits year after year. How does this add up? The formula is straightforward: monopolize and control the labor market with tools like non-compete clauses. Cut corners, raise prices. Medical care suffers, but the quarterly profit is up. Any other scenario simply does not compute. Non-competes, particularly in medicine, are immoral, unnecessary, and a clear and present danger to the country. Medicine cannot be treated just like any other business — it's different, it's special, and access to it must be protected by banning non-compete agreements entirely. To all those who are listening, I will conclude by saying this: you will all someday be on the receiving end of the healthcare system, take heed to what you create. Thank you for your time."
Robert	"I am strongly opposed to the use of non-compete clauses in employment contracts. I am a physician who is under a non-compete clause from a major "not-for-profit" hospital chain. I had a simple choice; sign the "non-negotiable" non-compete clause, or sell my home (during a down real estate market, with rising interest rates) and move elsewhere to earn a living. I have lived in my community for 12 years and have deep ties and do not wish to move. They know this, and giant corporations are leveraging the situation to take unfair advantage of individual physicians. It's unfair and it needs to be stopped."
Karl	"Non-competes our way to keep people under control and suppressed even after they leave a bad employment situation. One American should not be able to control another Americans future."
Lynda	"Non-compete clauses should be banned. I'm a physician and many of us have non-compete clauses which hurt patients and further restrict patient access in a time when there is already a huge deficit. The financial concerns of hospitals should not take priority over access to safe and consistent health care."
Samantha	"I signed a noncompete without knowing at my very first job out of college. Granted, I should've read the paper work and had a better understanding at what I was signing, but at that point I was just excited to even have gotten a job as it was the height of the pandemic. I'm now about to go through litigation because the noncompete is overly broad and restricts me from working in my industry anywhere in the world.

	Let's not forget, this noncompete was for an entry level employee who should pose absolutely no threat to this company. I fully stand behind abolishing noncompetes. It's restrictive and unfair to employees just trying to make a living and do their job in their preferred field."
Dwaraknadh	"I request FCC to ban non compete clause altogether It's against individuals and supporters big hospitals and corporations and insurance companies and makes healthcare more expensive and less available Than you"
Ryan	"I submit these comments on my own behalf and on behalf of the Florida Chapter of the National Employment Lawyers Association (Florida NELA) in support of the entire Non-Compete Clause Rule as proposed. Florida NELA is a non-profit organization dedicated to protecting the rights of workers throughout the state of Florida. Florida NELA promotes the civil rights of employees, applicants, and former employees by assisting the lawyers who represent them. Florida NELA is an affiliate state chapter of the National Employment Lawyers Association. Florida NELA has filed numerous amicus briefs with federal and state courts which have been recognized by courts in assisting in the evaluation of issues of Florida employment law. See, e.g., Gogel v. Kia Motors Mfg. of Georgia, Inc., 967 F.3d 1121, 1163 (11th Cir. 2020); Donovan v. Broward Cnty. Bd. of Comin'rs, 974 So. 2d 458, 461 (Fla. 4th DCA 2008). On a daily basis, the members of Florida NELA advise employees (and those labeled as independent contractors) on Florida's draconian law on non-compete agreements and other restrictive covenants. We speak with employees about the substantial risks they take when they leave a job to pursue the American dream of starting their own business or even just consider moving to a better paying job at the fast-food restaurant down the street. Even more heartwrenching is having to counsel an employee who has been fired without cause, but the employer is still enforcing a non-compete against them. I personally have 25 years' experience in representing employers and employees in Florida in non-compete matters. I have represented individuals who perform manual labor for minimum wage and chief executive officers of publicly traded corporations in non-compete matters. In almost every instance when I am discussing Florida non-compete law the individual is surprised about how Florida law treats non-compete agreements and the amazing anti-worker bias. in Florida, a non-compete clause typically prohibits an individual from working for a competitor or starting their own business for two years after the termination of their business relationship, regardless of the reason for termination. While there were previously geographic limits, with the growth of the internet many businesses now claim to have nationwide operations and seek to prevent individuals from working anywhere for a two-year period. As noted in the Notice and the proposed rule, there are a broad range of contract provisions that, while not explicitly labeled as non-competes, are used to restrict individuals from working after the tennination of their business relationship. For example, non-solicitation clauses prohibiting soliciting potential customers for two years are functionally a non-compete because businesses consider virtually everyone potential customers. There are also non-disclosure agreements, which will prohibit an employee from disclosing or utilizing any information about their employer, typically for a two-year period after termination. These are often written not to protect true trade secrets but rather the mundane, commonly known information and arc used to prevent legitimate competition. In addition, sometimes these agreements are structured so that the individual receives a signing bonus when they begin employment but requires the employee to return the bonus or to be bound by the restrictions for a very lengthy period of time. Similarly, liquidated damages provisions and training-repayment agreements are also used to restrict employees' ability to work. Under Florida law, these restrictive employment covenants are used against employees and those labeled as agents or independent contractors. See Fla. Stat. 542.335(1)(dX1). These contract provisions are often contained in the same document, which is typically presented to the individual as part of a package of items they need to click to accept, either at the start of employment or disguised as an innocuous update to policies and procedures. Because of the use of click to agree, the individuals are often unaware of these post-employment restrictions. Non-compete clauses are almost always presented as take-it-or-leave-it contracts and, under Florida law, where continued employment is sufficient consideration for enforcement of a non-compete, an employer can implement a non-compete at any time in the employment relationship. In addition, where there is an employment at-will relationship, a Florida employer can terminate an employee at any time and for any reason, including refusal to sign a non-compete agreement. Taken in combination, the individual has no meaningful way to avoid the unilateral implementation of a non-compete.

Although Florida has a broad general prohibition on contracts that restrain trade, Florida law on non-competes are a huge exception to this prohibition. Compare Fla. Stat. §542.18 ("Every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is unlawful.") with Fla. Stat. §542.335. As detailed in the Notice, Florida is "the state which enforces noncompete clauses most strictly." See Notice at page 21. It must also be noted that the basis courts in other states use to limit non-compete agreements identified in the Notice are greatly restricted in Florida. For example, in discussing "[t]he first basis on which a non-compete clause can be found unreasonable is where the restraint is greater than needed to protect the employer's legitimate interest" the Notice states, "[i]f the employer can demonstrate a legitimate interest, the employer must then show the non-compete clause is tailored to that interest." See Notice at page 52. Under Florida law, as long as the employer is able to establish a prima facie case that restraint is reasonably necessary, the burden is on the employee to establish that the restriction is overbroad, overlong or otherwise unnecessary. See Fla. Stat. §542.335(1)(c). More disturbingly, the Notice identifies "[t]he second basis under which a non-compete clause can be found unreasonable is where the employer's need for the non-compete clause is outweighed by the hardship to the worker and the likely injury to the public," but Florida law does not allow consideration of one of these basis at all and greatly limits consideration of the other. See Notice at page 53. Under Florida law, the court is explicitly not permitted to consider the hardship to the worker that the non-compete will cause. See Fla. Stat. §542.335(1)(g)(1) ("In determining the enforceability of a restrictive covenant, a court [s]hall not consider any individualized economic or other hardship that might be caused to the person against whom enforcement is sought.") With respect to public policy considerations, Florida law specifically provides, "[n]o court may refuse enforcement of an otherwise enforceable restrictive covenant on the ground that the contract violates public policy unless such public policy is articulated specifically by the court and the court finds that the specified public policy requirements substantially outweigh the need to protect the legitimate business

	interest or interests established by the person seeking enforcement of the restraint." See Fla. Stat. §542.335(1)(i). In addition, Florida law turns the normal rules of contract construction upside down. Rather than construing the agreements against the party who drafted them or against the noncompete, Florida law provides, "[a] court shall not employ any rule of contract construction that requires the court to construe a restrictive covenant narrowly, against the restraint, or against the drafter of the contract." See Fla. Stat. §542.225 (1)(11). Florida law also requires the court to construe the agreement in the employer's favor. Id. It is against this backdrop that Florida NELA strongly endorses the entire Non-Compete Clause Rule as proposed. We believe that the Rule should apply equally to all workers, whether a laborer or an executive, whether paid minimum wage or with stock options, whether an employee or an independent contractor. Non-compete clauses prevent all workers from taking better opportunities. Further, senior executives and those who are highly compensated are often in a position to start new businesses, which will lead to the development of new products, services and even markets. There can be a magnifying effect from these individuals being able to fully compete as opposed to being forced to be unproductive for years, often during the prime of their working careers. Because of this we support the provisions of the proposed rule which clarify that the term "worker" includes an employee, individual classified as an independent contractor, extern, intern, volunteer, apprentice, or sole proprietor who provides a service to a client or customer. Similarly, because of the variation of methods and terminology used to restrict employees after the termination of their business relationship, we support the broad prohibition on non-competes and all of their functional equivalents. Further, we urge the FTC to include franchisees in the rule. It is our experience that an increasing number of industries are relying upon franchise models. In fact, data from the United States Census Bureau shows that many industries have shifted to a franchise model. See Nearly 300 Industries Offer Franchise Opportunities by Barbara Zamora-Appel and Nidaal Jubran, December 01, 2021 available at https://www.census.gov/library/stories/2021/12/franchising-is-more-than-just-fast-food.html. Many of these new entrants are just as subject to exploitation as employees or independent contractors and should be protected. Further, if there is a different rule for franchisees, companies will just label their workers franchisees in an attempt to impose noncompete restrictions. On my own behalf and on behalf of the members of Florida NELA I thank you for undertaking this important work and for consideration of these comments in support of the proposed rule. If we can provide further information, please contact me."
Kevin	"I have worked for a medical device company, Zimmer Biomet for 13 years and have recently just been laid off. I am now being expected to not compete for 12 months but am only being paid 2 months of severance. This is now causing me to work outside of the state I'm in to avoid legal action from an overly litigious company. This new ruling would allow me to continue working in my industry near my home rather the putting the financial burden on a company hiring me to get me to either move or travel out of state during this time. If companies believed in having the best people and products, they wouldn't hide behind noncompetes."
James	"Non-compete agreements are interfering in the healthcare labor market. I know many physicians that are unable to change without uprooting their family because of a non-compete agreement. As the healthcare market changes, physicians need to the flexibility to work at different places in their geographic area and provide their expertise where it is needed most. It is not in the interests of patients or public health to keep physicians locked up in jobs that may not be a good fit for their practice patterns."

Katie	"As a veterinarian , I support this change. If we are covered by a non-compete, we often have to move cities or face long commutes to follow the non-compete. This is a huge financial burden."
Corey	"Please do this, my wife is a CRNA and the groups do this to force retention and hold back increasing compensation to be market value."
Jesse	"I feel that a non-compete clause is a way to hamper workers and limit their mobility and freedom of expression. a non-compete clause can prevent a worker from seeking better employment or prevent them from quitting a toxic job if they cannot work at another company in the same field."
Michael	"I agree we need reform on Non-compete contracts/agreements. They have gotten way out of hand and well past what they were originally intended for. I understand onon-compete when someone is working with developing cutting edge products etc but we are holding even nurses now to non-compete contracts. It makes no sense and it is well past time for reform. The abuse of these non-competes has led us to the point to almost scrap them entirely. If employers treat employees well then many stay. If not, they leave."
Matthew	"As the spouse of a veterinarian , I've seen the damage non-competes do to workers in industries in which they are common: they cause sclerosis, damage the economy, and only help the already wealthy and powerful business owners. My wife, as medical director of a non-profit clinic, has tried to hire veterinarians wanting to serve the public good, only to discover that years earlier the veterinarians had signed away their rights to decide how and where they work early in their career. This practice is wrong and should be outright banned. It not just hurts workers, but employers that do not use them to tilt the scales by preventing our economy from being as dynamic as it should be. Please make sure these rules protect workers by banning non-competes as much as possible: for workers, veterinarians, medical professionals, engineers, and anyone else moving this economy forward. Thanks."
Courtney	"Eliminating the non-compete clause in contractors would benefit the consumers right to choose their provider. This also benefits the worker- employers will have greater pressure to provide positive work places because their employers would not be shackled by non-compete clauses."
Kurt	"Adopt the Ban! Non-Competes solely benefit the employer and restrict competition and prevent growth."
Zoltan	"Eliminate noncompete. It forces an individual to either move from their locations, pulling children out of school and having to sell and buy a new home. It is a terrible practice and should be eliminated. Employment should be Atwill and fair market. You should be able to determine your value. I believe it will increase employee retention by raising salary to keep great employees."

Jennifer	"Ban non-competes, as well as non-solicits. It's always been a disgusting practice for a company to have the power to eliminate the hard work of an employee and ban them for 12-18 or more months after they're no longer with their organization. Most non-competes do not include a clause for if someone was laid off or if their position was terminated, so the pure fact that a company can keep all of the business someone generated while simultaneously kicking them to the curb is vile. But yet, if an employee isn't comfortable in their job, doesn't like their leadership, or has any reason to leave a job they no longer want to be in- they have to lose everything? The broad strokes many non-competes have are purely out to harm workers and some make it impossible for someone to even stay in the long standing career they've built if they choose to leave. People in the US love capitalism, so let's apply that to non-competes... a company should make their product or their remaining people better if they don't want to lose business. The majority of people under non-competes have no intention of stealing intellectual property etc, they just want to earn a living and perform the job they're good at/continue serving the people they've worked hard to develop business with- and the people or companies that want to continue doing business with a particular person who has earned their trust, should not be punished and forced to work with someone they don't want to simply because an organization isn't confident enough in their product, services, or remaining employees to attempt to retain a customer."
Melissa	"Non-competes are debilitating and limit the employee to pursue other opportunities in their specialized field, unless they relocate. Non-competes also limit finding a new employer because of the legal battle that the current employer may uphold, new employer doesn't want to take such a risk, which then leaves the employee minimal to zero opportunities to further advance. It's just not right. No employee should feel or be treated like they are owned by any employer."
John	"The FTC proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule is an excellent idea. The proposed rule should increase competition and employee wages and reduce the economic reward reaped by employers. I wanted to point out that I have taken advantage of less version of this rule for my entire career. The Florida Bar has decreed that attorneys are not bound by any law firm's non-compete provisions because clients have the unfettered right to choose who represents them. Hence, the wages of attorneys have not stagnated as has happened in many other less-competitive professions and trades. I hope that other workers in America soon have the benefit of the proposed rule. A similar rule to the one that has been proposed by the FTC has certainly not hurt the legal industry here in Florida and I doubt that the proposed rule will hurt the United States' economy either."
Elizabeth	"Please pass this rule, particularly for health care workers and middle to lower class wage earners. The restriction of workers rights has trended worse and worse- employers are able to pay lower wages and treat employees unfairly because of these rules. I have been a victim of one of these no compete clauses. I'm a mom of 3

	and health care worker already working more than one job to pay off my debt. I left because of the tendency of my employer to yell and use anger towards me frequently. I tried to follow the letter of the contract and the law in separating from the company but now the legal fees are destroying my family. I can't afford daycare, student loans and now legal fees to protect my career and keep a roof over my family's heads. The legal harassment I'm experiencing is incessant and I haven't slept in months. I just want the right to work in reasonable conditions and with reasonable treatment and the right to leave if that is not being offered."
Ana	"I am single mother and sole provider of two young men (15 and 8). I have worked at the salon I am currently at for 15-E years now. I started as just an assistant and worked my way up to be one of the lead stylist. Unfortunately, I made the decision at a young age of 23 to sign a non compete, not realizing further down the road that would be the worst decision I could make for my future. I am now 36 years old, unable to open the salon I've always wanted, unable to grow more financially, unable to help others grow within the business of doing hair. I have been put into a very mentally draining situation. The owner of the salon creates a very toxic, negative work environment. The turnover rate is like no other over the course of time I have been here. To the point where people will not even apply to work at his company due to his reputation around town. From the degrading comments he makes to employees, to "setting the tone" in the morning after he comes in and verbally abuses staff because he simply woke up on the wrong side of the bed. He has raised his portion of the commission he makes off of us stylist. He requires us to sell his boutique items (jewelry, handbags, home decor) otherwise we will be penalized with more commission to be taken away, all though our passion has always been hair, not to work in retail. The only stylist left here are the ones who have unfortunately signed non competes. He no longer employees anyone without signing the non compete. My contract is the most extreme with being 25 mile radius for 18 months. I have brought this to his attention, making a point that I will not be able to provide for my children or myself if I move that far. His response was basically a shoulder shrug. I would really appreciate you considering banning non competes. So that I and many other employees stuck in an unhappy work environment get the chance to fulfill their dreams and to be able to make more financially!"
Sarah	"Want to improve public access to quality healthcare (I.e. physicians)? Make sure they can work freely, and fairly, in the workplace of their choice, in a free professional market. Noncompete clauses unnecessarily limit physician practice, without aiding the corporate employers who enforce them. Please stop this practice. Included within nonprofit hospital systems."
Sarah	"As a physician who has been affected by noncompete clauses for years, I will attest that this practice has limited my ability to practice my skill freely and effectively. It has given excessive power to large corporate groups who wield their power to limit good medical practice, competitive pay, and decent working treatment to physicians and other healthcare providers. The only beneficiary is their corporate profits! As a limited and valuable commodity in the US, healthcare workers of all sorts, including phsysci8ans, MUST be allowed to seek competitive, good employment or own their own practices. If we want strong healthcare in the US, END non-compete clauses!"

Kevin	"It should be up to the customer who they would like to do business with if they choose then they should have there say because some times they are stuck with someone they really don't want to be with ii also understand the the other side it might be in good faith to chance the tenn to a much shorter term that way it gives each person to have time to make good decisions maybe 90 days to 120 sounds reasonable"
Joshua	"Noncompetes harm and reduce competition. Remove them!"
Rahul	"Non compete for physicians can be very restrictive, anti trust and sometimes almost imprisons the physicians who can be forced to sometimes work at a hospital which is almost holding them hostage and the physician has to stay inspite of hostile environments due to family and other personal issues due to lack of choice. This has led to in many cases almost abuse of many physicians."
Carmen	"The non competes here in Florida, especially for health care providers, are antiquated, limiting to the point you have to move to another county! Who is willing to do that?? Until it affects the bottom dollar of other businesses (trickle down effect) it won't change. If I'm moving or driving over an hour to work because my non compete is twenty miles, guess what...I'm spending money elsewhere. In healthcare there are no trade secrets, we learn secrets at conferences! I92 I NC's end up hurting the patient and continuity of care. NC need to vanish."
Noah	"I am going into the salaried workforce and cannot stress enough how much I support this proposal. Pass this as it will give more power to the employees to take risks without the fear of being sued by giant tech companies."
Macie	" Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to express my support for the Federal Trade Commission's proposal to ban non-compete clauses in the workplace. As an employee in Esthetics, I have personally experienced the negative impact of non-compete clauses on my career growth and opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses restrict my ability to explore new job opportunities and pursue my career goals. In a competitive job market, it is crucial for workers to be able to leverage their skills and experience to find the best job that fits their needs. Non-compete clauses limit this ability by preventing workers from seeking employment with competitors, even if they have unique skills and knowledge that could benefit the industry as a whole. Secondly, non-compete clauses often lead to lower wages and benefits for workers. Employers can use these clauses as leverage to offer lower salaries and fewer benefits, knowing that workers may not be able to leave for higher-paying jobs in the same field. Thirdly, non-compete clauses can have a chilling effect on innovation and entrepreneurship. Workers with valuable skills and experience may be hesitant to start their own businesses or pursue new ideas for fear of violating their non-compete agreements. In swnmaty, banning non-compete clauses would promote a more competitive job market, increase opportunities for workers to pursue their career goals, and encourage entrepreneurship and innovation. I strongly urge the Federal Trade Commission to implement this proposal and support the rights of workers in licensed trade fields and beyond. I personally work at the European Wax Center. I have been with the company for 5 years. I do not have the opportunities like so many to be able to work in my field and be able to pursue my own career opportunities. This would indeed change my life and future generations' lives as well. Below I have attached a file of my personal non-disclosure. I hope this helps with any information you may need. Thank you for considering my views on this important issue."

Mary	"I support the proposed non-compete rule; non-compete clauses have no place in the majority of jobs that currently use them. There is far too much control in this country over workers and workers still lack protections. If employers made their workplaces humane, paid them well and treated workers well, they wouldn't want to leave in most cases."
Sandra S	"Non-compete clauses should be outlawed. No. person should be tied to an employer by such a document. Just think about the type of person who would expect you to limit your life for his benefit. This clause is anti-employee, just as the "RIGHT TO WORK"lie is! I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban non-compete agreements.t."
Deborah	"See attached files: Attachment 1 is my comment. Attachment 2: proof my old job is suing me for violating our non-compete agreement and the actual non-compete document I was tricked into signing. Attachment 3: proof I have legally complained and will go to trial regarding emotional, physical, and sexual abuse at the job suing me for violation of non- compete."
German	"Restrictive covenants non-compete clauses should be banned as soon as possible. It is a highly abusive large corporate bullying tactic to control doctors and the patients they serve. In the health industry, it is a way for large corporations that are consolidating medical practices under their corporate umbrella to keep doctors from working in a specified geographically area. Doctors that are terminated or leave from these large corporate settings cannot go to local independent local facilities that are small businesses. This business practice hampers the small independent medical facilities from hiring qualified doctors that are leaving larger corporations hampering competition and stifling the growth of the small medical facilities. It also forces doctors to leave the area and find work in other geographical areas. This is detrimental to the community since it makes doctors leave an area where they have been serving patients and have gained an understanding of their patient's medical needs. There is no advantage to the community and to the patients served by having doctors sign and work under a Restrictive covenant / Non Compete clause. Please make this practice illegal and unenforceable for past, current, and future contracts."
Loretta	"I am a current employee of PSG, the physician arm of HCA. My contract clearly states I'm allowed to do outside work as long as I post a conflict of interest declaration which has been done. I also went further to ask for a letter of exemption. Also, the area of noncompete is 5 miles radius from the facility I work at. I have been repeatedly, denied Locums opportunities at other FICA facilities, due to the fact that I am employed at a facility with needs. Prior to pursuing these outside activities, I performed extra shifts which I have not been paid for in total $80,000 worth of work. PSG has come back to say that those were in eligible shifts and that I owe them

	$100,000 for not providing back up which was impossible to provide due to lack of back up shifts. They stated sign this new contract and will give you $60,000 to date, I have signed this contract and have not received my compensation. Throughout this process PSG has not returned multiple emails. Voicemails text messages, and phone calls affectively ghosting me. It would seem that PSG/HCA is blocking employment opportunities for their benefit despite a contractual agreement to allow outside activities. My concern is that when I leave my present HCA facility, I will not be able to work at any further HCA facilities because of internal blocking, despite a noncompete area of 5 miles radius of my primary facility."
Mark	"I currently work as a primary care physician for a large medical system in Florida. When I began working, I had had zero patients and have built the panel of patients to over 1700 over the last 3 years. I have come to know my patients well and we have formed strong bonds. My current contract has a non- compete radius of 10 miles. So, if things go sour with my employer and I decide to leave, it is highly unlikely that my patients will follow me. This would mean starting over again which can lead to a large monetary deficit in the first 2-3 years. And this is a contract that is much more fair compared to others. This swings the pendulum of power in favor of the employer a bit too much and because of this, I feel that non-competes should not exist at all."
Julian	"This is egregious, you don't even hide your contempt for physicians anymore."
David	"The FTC is considering removal of non compete clauses in some but not all industries. As a physician who has twice been negatively impacted by these laws, I believe that physician exclusion is a fundamentally unacceptable consideration. I understand how private practices, small-, medium- and large-sized healthcare systems need to have some basis of physician retention as there is ample upfront costs. In other industries, respectfully treating employees is the mechanism of retention. The multiple industries somewhat analogous to ours act like other free markets whereas this reality would be purposefully negated if the provision as is goes into effect. Lastly, the most important aspect of non competes to individuals is that it prevents people from establishing a home in places that are restrictive to healthcare start up. This allows and promotes patient abandonment, which should an issue prevented directly or indirectly in healthcare law, even if not actually occurring."
jay	"In the aviation industry the airlines are riddled with competition. People should be able to work in positions that are at opposing airlines. They work at airlines, they don't own them. It's about making a living and being paid what you are worth and what you need to be. All that a non compete clause does is hinder you from that. The workers themselves don't personally have a controlling stake in the company or own the airline, and therefore do not have a say in how the airline is run and the decisions it makes. It takes away your ability to have more than one source of income in the same industry - and that's why a no compete clause needs to be done away with. I would say the only exception to this is if you have an actual say in what happens the airline (not just as a shareholder)."
Kathleen	"I work for a large private practice group in Tampa Florida. I am completely opposed to non-competes, and I am in support of deleting them from any contracts."

deana	"I was forced to sign a non-compete clause before accepting an art sales job in Tampa, Florida. I was new to the industry and did not understand the repercussions of agreeing to the terms. The existence of this very broad non-compete has not only prohibited me from finding work in the field that I can most successfully contribute to, but it kept me at a job that was often hostile and unsafe because I knew I could not find work if I left. Non-compete agreements have NO place in the marketplace. This document can create an unhealthy power dynamic that takes away a level of accountability from the employer. It em damage the lives of hard working people who are just looking to make a living...not damage the business of past employers."
Jessica	"Agree this should happen (but also for profit institutions)"
Elizabeth	"To whom it may concern, I am writing as a practicing healthcare provider , to express my opinion and support of eliminating the non-compete agreement. I took a job in a rural community in Florida under the circumstances of many verbal agreements that are not being followed. I relocated hours away to take the job based on the circumstances discussed and based on the false assumption that the employer was a trustworthy person based on the discussion of religion and christian based comments during the interview that the employer made to make me feel safe in the verbal discussion. Since relocating and beginning the job, every detail that was discussed has not followed through. Many private discussions have occurred regarding my frustration without any resolution. My pay has significantly declined due to this and I am now under financial stress all due to this employer not following the plan that was agreed upon prior to moving to this area. I was unable to take the job without signing the non-compete and feel that the employer trapped me into a position that she knew I would not be able to get out of given the area and distance and description provided in the non-compete. Due to the rural nature of the area, I am now trapped at a job that I am miserable at, not being appropriately compensated for, and have gotten myself into debt because of the lack of follow through of the employer's "word". At this time, I am no longer able to relocate to a different job within a drivable distance due to the description and distance listed on the non- complete in order for me to provide for myself and my family Elimination of the non-compete agreement would allow me to begin a practice or to take another job within a drivable distance in order to get myself out of debt and provide for my family. If the non-compete were to be eliminated, rural communities, such as the one I am in, would have better access to the health care that they deserve by allowing more businesses to begin and providers to do what they joined the health care system for- caring for patients. Please take my life story into strong consideration when making a decision regarding this important matter. Regards, Dr. Anonymous"
Darwin	"Non compete clauses have never stopped a company from terminating an employee but have prevented that person from using their skills in another position which is not right. I have experiences where employees was required to sign a non-compete if they wanted an incentive stock grant they had earned though their good work. In at least two cases I remember, the employee refused and the stock grant was canceled whereupon the employee resigned. I don't know if they ignored the non-compete or not but I would have. In any case, there was no benefit to the company and the employee suffered unnecessary disruption to their life. I don't see any whiners in this outcome and believe non-competes have outlived their usefulness if they ever had any."

Eduardo	"I am an ophthalmologist based out of Florida whose contract was not renewed. I cannot find a quality job in this area outside my non-compete that is close enough to realistically commute to. I am currently planning to move to a different state specifically due to my non-compete. As a result, hundreds of patients will lose their provider that they trust and depend on. I am sure many people will postpone their eye care, and they will probably be worse off due to this rule that only financially benefitted the practice. I truly believe patients health outcomes will be affected, and it is unethical to force non-competes on physicians. While the practice does have an interest in protecting their brand, the negative health consequences for patients is a more pressing issue. This is just not right for hundreds of vulnerable people."
Katherine	"Please get rid of non-compete clauses. They prevent doctors from taking care of patients. There is a great need for medical care & preventing doctors from treating patients only makes this dilemma worse. It only empowers the employer, not the patients needing care."
C	"I am a physician who works for a large hospital system in south Florida and am strongly against non compete clauses in employment contracts. In my contract I am not allowed to work within a 10 mile radius of any office in which I see patients. Unfortunately I have offices in 2 separate counties and the 10 mile radius takes up most of the inhabitable land in both counties. The combined population of these 2 counties is 5 million people and the hospital system has almost 20,000 total employees, so I fail to see how my leaving hurts their business."
George	"I fully support this. As someone who has worked in tech and design , non-compete agreements have forced me to miss out on opportunities that would have helped provide extra income to make my life easier. Companies take a broad interpretation of competition so even opportunities where there is very little competitive overlap I have not been granted permission to work on them. I don't think this is fair to individual workers to have companies able to dictate projects that they work on outside the scope of their working hours or in any time frame around when they worked for a previous company. Workers should have every flexibility and opportunity made available to them in order to make a living in their chosen career field."
Kevin	"It should be obvious that no employer, once the term of employment has expired, should be able to control the behavior of their former employees ability to find other work. If an employer who finds that they are losing employees due to compensation, mistreatment, or culture, then the onus lies on the employer to change their circumstances, not control their former employees circumstances. I would Grant an exception to this rule only on a very limited basis when the individual leaves employment to start a new business in the immediate area. This has the potential to be problematic if the area to "block" is too large, or the service area is limited in itself. In any case, competition has always been the driver of innovation and we should be seeking to encourage that."

Lauren	"I fully believe non-compete clauses limit a person's ability to work and/or practice their trade in the region they live. The non-compete typically protects the large corporate interests beyond the smaller business interests. They also limit wages since workers don't have an option to go elsewhere."
M	"This is the best news ever. Finally, this completely 1 sided and unfair practice is coming to an end. I am in the Nutriceutical manufacturing industry , we were recently acquired by a M&A finance company and i was forced to sign a non-Compete agreement of be fired. So unfair that I do not have the option to leave and take my book of business with me, HOOORAYY!!!!"
Mike	"Please move forward with banning non-competes. They have become a standard method to force many people to stick with a company they may be experiencing problems with for fear of legal backlash if they were to move to mother company and continue working elsewhere. They were not created nor designed for the average individual in the workplace and many employers have abused or taken advantage of employees by forcing them to stick with a workplace environment that overworks, abuses, and devalues them, backing them into a corner for fear of backlash. Some companies have also created absolutely unrealistic restrictions such as not being able to work for a competitor within an entire state should they leave. In many cases, these individuals are forced to turn to other field or move for work elsewhere simply because they spent their entire life pursuing a passion that a restrictive non-compete unfairly undermines."
S	"Dear officials, I stand in staunch support of ending non compete clauses. This has affected my own life as a physician , and severely limited both the quality of life for me and my family as well as the care available to children in Central Florida which is already an underserved region. I look forward to your progress. Sincerely, annoyed physician"
PA	"Thank you for the opportunity to listen to those of us who are affected by non competes. I have read through many comments and was not aware the extent to which these restrictive covenants are utilized so widely in various professions. I am a Physician Assistant who moved from Texas to Florida for my current position. A non compete was a new concept when I accepted this job so I agreed to it and am now suffering the consequences. I have a 3 year contract and the non compete agreement kicks in once I leave this employer. Every year I stay, I am prolonging the inevitable of a 2 year non compete to follow. Moving out of my non compete range would result in having to move my family again and leave a community we absolutely love and thrive in. While I have the freedom to change specialties (unlike physicians), I have worked hard for 7 years to become very skilled in my current specialty and changing would mean lower pay due to lack of experience and need for extensive on the job training The non compete agreement does not allow for competition and provides no incentive to the employer to maintain a healthy, happy work environment in which people will want to stay! Please abolish this ridiculous clause and allow us to practice medicine in a way that will prevent burnout and keep providers practicing at the top of their scope."

Lynette	"Non competes do not benefit hard working successful individuals and I disagree with non compete agreements"
Katie	"I am a heath care provider in the state of Florida. Upon moving to Florida I started my employment with a company that imposes a non compete clause. After 2 years of employment I felt that I needed to move on due to no raises and hostile work place but I couldn't because of the non compete clause. The only area hospitals that employed my specialty were within the non compete clause. I had to wait over and additional 2 years for a position to become available outside of the non compete that was reasonably commutable. I ensured a hostile work environment because I couldn't and didn't want to sell my house and move because of a non compete clause. It does not foster good feelings towards companies. Employees feel trapped and resentful. It doesn't foster competition to be a better company or employer so that your employees want to stay (instead sometimes they have to stay). They should be banned everywhere for any progression regardless of salary or job with maybe a few select instances/special circumstances but even then - non disclosure clauses should be enough to keep company "secrets" instead of non compete"
Si private	"Non compete clauses hurt careers, I am against non compete clauses because I believe it definitely holds back single individuals with promising careers that maybe stuck in their contracts to further their careers creatively on their own. Just say NO to non compete, get rid of them please."
Bob	"I would be overjoyed to see non-compete clauses be eliminated I work in emergency medicine and critical care. When patients need my services they aren't choosing their hospital based on whether or not I personally work there. I don't have long- tenn doctor-patient relationships such that my patients would follow me to another institution if I changed jobs. The non-compete clause is an undue burden on workers that impedes our ability to leave an untenable working situation without uprooting our families I moved my family several times during the training process to become a doctor and then subsequently during my military service, and removing the non-compete clause would give me peace of mind that I would be able to uphold the promise that I made to my kids that this is our forever home."
Suny	"A non compete has affected my life significantly. It takes me away from my children as they cant move and I have to work 2.5 hours away due to a large geographical area non compete. I am an Ob/Gyn physician and my patients lost the continuity of care and my town lost another Ob/Gyn due to non competes. Additionally, my old company uses the non compete restrictions as a trap. It allows them to behave in improper ways, employees tolerate bad work environments only because its too hard to leave. Non competes should be illegal. I sacrifice so much of my life to become a doctor and to help people. Never did I think my freedom to work and my long time patients freedom to see me would be limited by a company."
Charles	"I have been a practicing physician for over 40 years. I worked for the Cleveland Clinic for 20 of those years. When they sold their hospital and clinic in Florida to for-profit hospital company, they also sold our contracts to the new company. That contract blocked us from going to work for any other unit of the Cleveland Clinic. I would have moved to Weston, FL or back to Cleveland, but could not because of this. Since then, I have worked as an employee for 2 other practices. Both of them presented me with contracts that contained restrictive covenants. In both cases, I crossed out those clauses and said if you want me to work for you, initial this cross-out along with me. Both did. These covenants are bad for business in general. They prevent entrepreneurs from opening their own practices which includes the use of rental properties or new construction, the purchasing of new equipment and supplies, and the hiring of staff."

Angela	"The non-compete clause should apply to physicians. As the healthcare landscape continues to evolve, many physicians are employed by major hospital systems and for-profit organizations. A non-compete forces physicians to find work outside of a catchment area which can span several miles. This can be disruptive to families as it may require relocation. It can also limit employment opportunities for the physician."
Jaime	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to you in reference to non-compete clauses that are currently being discussed, and urge you to ban all non-compete clauses for employees, including physicians . As you know, such clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor or even themselves for a certain time after leaving their position, and this restricts growth and can have a significant impact on employees and the public. As most physicians are now employees of much larger corporations or hospitals, these restrictive covenants can have a devastating impact on patient care. When employees, including physicians, have to abide by such clauses, if they want to leave a burdensome or even toxic situation, sometimes their only choice is to leave their field altogether because of restrictive covenants. This is particularly true for primary care physicians, of which there is currently a national shortage, and will further reduce patient access to quality healthcare. You may be aware of the recent study that showed an alarming 63% burnout rate of physicians, with large numbers leaving the field as well as decreased numbers of quality medical students entering the field of primary care. We need to ensure that corporations and hospitals do not further infringe on their rights to practice medicine in alternate situations if they are not treated well. You may find it interesting to watch Dr. Glaucomflecken's short videos for social commentary on such matters. In summary, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is imperative that we prioritize patient care, and to do so we must prioritize the mental health of physicians who are experiencing burnout at record rates. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help increase access to quality healthcare and avoid driving physicians out of healthcare altogether. Thank you for your interest and attention to this very important matter."
Rafael	"Agree 100%!"
Stephen	"Wholeheartedly support the action against non compete clauses. They are an incredible drag on labor Inability in my industry."
Justin	"I am 50 years old, and I must provide food, shelter and clothing for my family. My wife only works part time. And, I have been subjected to terrible non- compete and non-solicitation agreements for my entire career. I truly feel that it has negatively

	affected my ability to earn better wages for myself and my family and prevented me from gaining better working conditions throughout my entire adult working career. These agreements are always presented to a job seeker along with an offer letter. This is because the company has an advantage knowing that anyone seeking a new job is likely seeking career progression (or, may be desperate to leave a bad employer) and the job seeker is excited about getting a new offer. Therefore, if the job seeker tries to dispute the non-compete, the employer simply explains that it is a requirement, (or you won't get hired). So, many job seekers will sign to get the new job. On the back end, these agreements often last for 1-5 years after leaving the company (and, it is enforceable whether the employee resigns or is laid-off). Really?!? You laid off employees cause you missed your numbers, and then you tell them that they cannot go find work in their chosen career profession?!? Furthermore, if the company enforces it, then the former-employee must either defend themselves or hire legal council (significant financial hardship for most Americans, especially for someone who may have just been laid-off). Or, the old company simply sends a "Threatening legal letter" to the new employer, and now the employee is in hot water with their new employer, and may likely get fired. To re-iterate, I'm just a guy trying to earn a living and provide food, shelter and clothing for my family. For me to go up against a multi-million (billion) dollar corporation and their legal council seems grossly unfair and unbalanced! Non-competes are anti-competitive and they have been used to block workers from freely switching jobs which has suppressed employee wages for decades. Furthermore, it inhibits innovation. "Trade secrets and non-disclosure" are completely separate issues. For example, if an engineer had exposure to proprietary patent information and tried to take that information to the next job at a competitor, I could see that being a big problem. But, companies should not be allowed to blur the lines between "Trade secrets and non-disclosure" and a "non-compete agreement." For example, many companies often try to "confuse" these two separate concepts by saying that in a sales job that "current and potential client lists are proprietary/confidential information." Which is not true, because I can search on Google, Definitive HC, ZoomInfo, etc. to get any publicly available list of names, accounts, etc. For these reasons, I would strongly support a broad Federal ban."
Jeffrey	"I wholeheartedly support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete agreements. As a physician, I have witnessed first-hand the pain caused to patients when they learn they will no longer be able to see a physician because the physician is forced to practice far from their current location. Moreover, non-compete clauses often cause tremendous difficulty within families when one person is forced to work far away. Non-compete clauses are un-American and inhibit healthy competition and collaboration while simultaneously suppressing wages. Thank you for your consideration."
Reese	"As a physician I SUPPORT the ban on noncompete agreements and especially support physicians to be included in this ban. I believe the clause excluding not for profit hospitals should be removed so that no physicians are bound by noncompete agreements."
Avelino	"I am a primary care physician who has practiced for over 30 years in Miami-Dade county. For most of that time I practiced as part of my own PA. I only recently became

	an employed physician. My current non-compete stipulates a 10 mile radius from all of my employer's practice sites. Should I decide to leave or if they terminate me for ANY cause, this non-compete would be in effect. It would essentially force me to move out of the county to practice medicine. There are no particular trade secrets unique to my employer or my practice. There is no patented device or knowledge that I could use against them with another employer. I am a doctor. I see and treat patients. For example, the non-compete would preclude me from working with the local VA hospital or 3rd party organizations that primarily work with Medicare and Medicaid patients. In my current position I do NOT see these types of patients nor do they constitute a major source of patients for my employer. I feel non-competes should exist for fields where there is significant proprietary knowledge or skill sets that if taken elsewhere would damage an employer. Primary Care doctors do not represent such a threat. Only the patient suffers when they are not allowed to follow their doctor especially if their doctor is terminated for ANY cause. A hospital system's business decision to eliminate a position or close a satellite office, should not interfere with continuity of care for a patient."
Joseph	"I am in the tech industry and fully agree with banning non-compete agreements. For the past 20 years I have been bound to terms like this and it has kept me from finding better employment. I did leave one organization about 6 years ago and they threatened to bring myself and my new employer to court unless they fired me. This lasted nearly 3 months and was extremely stressful. Its crazy to think about how much power these companies have."
Manny	"You can write essays and paragraphs about this. But the truth is the truth. Large corporations use noncompetes everywhere, including in the medical field with nurses and doctors, to their advantage to set a price point for wages and not allow free markets to set them for themselves. Non completes should not exist in free market, only if there are company secrets which someone can take with them but the way they are used now are abusive and predatory."
Caroline	"Noncompetes are egregious and not only hurts the employee but the public in general. I am a physician and had to leave my area of practice due to a non compete now there is a shortage of physicians and I can't go back for 2 years. It's very detrimental to healthcare and public health in general. They should be banned across the country."
Alma	"Non-compete agreements should be banned. They are almost always unenforceable, wasting court time and cost if they ever go to court, and as such, they only serve to intimidate employees who don't know their rights."
Claudia	"I agree with this proposal. It will allow me to start my own business and keep in contact with all the relationships I have developed in my long career. Personal and professional development should be always in the top of our paths."
Frank	"I support this ban on non-compete contracts/agreements. Businesses should not restrict an individual with a certain skill set from moving to other opportunities in their field of expertise!"

Gabriel	"I am a journalist and News Producer in Tampa. Industry-wide in Broadcast News, it's standard practice to include non-compete clauses in our contracts. Frankly, I believe the practice is anti-capitalistic and anti-American. It exists only for the companies we work under to hold control over us. I've been offered job opportunities that I haven't been able to take because of the clause. It's a way for companies to lower their salary proposals, because they know we won't be able to take other job opportunities in our line of work without moving. I believe the only right thing to do would be to get rid non- compete clauses."
Randy	"I think it would be great to ban non compete clauses. I agree that this will allow companies to compete for labor which can allow citizens the flexibility to accept growth opportunities."
Cesar	"I am an orthopedic surgeon who is a minority owner in a very successful ambulatory surgery center (ASC). I am currently exploring new growth opportunities although I am handcuffed by a restrictive covenant agreement. These agreements are detrimental to most if not all businesses, including healthcare where they ultimately negatively affect patient care in our country. They negatively affect innovation and wages, and they should not be legal in a free society such as ours. One way of improving healthcare is to eliminate restrictive covenants."
Michael	"I believe this is the right thing to do and long overdue. Having experienced working under a non-competes, it made it difficult to pursue better opportunities without intense negotiations, which didn't always work out well."
Cassandra	"I am all in favor of this. It is an unfair practice. People want to change jobs for all sorts of reasons, and employment should be a free market."
satish	"Strongly support this initiative to ban non competes"
Amy	"Noncompetes harm families. If the employer is fair noncompetes are unnecessary. This practice hurts employees."
Carole	"People that are skilled and need to work within a close radius to their homes and who work for small businesses, not in government or tech type companies with intellectual property/secrets - Should NOT be forced to sign Non-compete documents. The small businesses that promote using non- compete clauses are just afraid they will have to do better in their communities (pay more or give benefits) to keep top talent. They are using these does to keep people down and it hurts everyone in the community when top talent is driven out by small minds."
Aaron	"I support a ban on non-competition clauses. I am a midlevel anesthetist . In our field, we have noncompetition clauses that extend past the borders of the area we work in, requiring us to move to another area entirely if we are to find work elsewhere. Banning noncompetition clauses would greatly help to improve my working conditions and pay without leaving my family behind."

David	"As a physician with a non compete clause I am forced to live outside my no compete if anything were to happen to my job I still have to support my family and can't make my small children move schools Because of this I live 1.5 hours because of traffic by car on my way home. Non competes ruin lives. I've missed so much time with my family because of this."
Cedric	"I am writing in support of this change!! Non-competes are extremely anti-worker and have no place existing in the first place!"
Christina	"Non-competes in the medical world should be illegal. When you are burnt out from clinical medicine and corporate agendas that put profits before patient care and physician wellbeing, the last thing you should have to do is uproot your life."
Richard	"I have worked for several companies who have non compete clauses and have always refused to sign one. So far, my employers have backed off because they need me more than I need them. Non compete clauses NEVER help the employee. They tie our hands and prevent us from growing in our careers. They only help the employer. Yes to banning them!"
Lila	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to you as a young physician myself to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. It is NOT fair to single handedly exclude physicians, the backbone of patient care. Non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, there should be no place for non compete clauses in the medical care doctors provide their patients - they have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. I personally know many excellent physicians who have had to uproot and move their entire families to other states due to non compete clauses, only to uproot them yet again a year or two later, to go back to where they originally wanted to practice to begin with. One cannot expect a physician employee to be "married" to their employer for life - things happen, and people want to change to another company or open a price practice. and these doctors should NOT be forced to move away. The patients a doctor sees arc not the property of anyone, they do not "belong" to a hospital or to a practice , and patients should be free to choose whatever doctor they want even if that doctor left a group and decided to start practicing on their own. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Non-compete clauses can also reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. We NEED you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that

	individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care. Don't forget physicians are humans too , and they should have the freedom and autonomy to practice wherever they decide. Non compete clauses subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations, and nobody, especially physicians, should be expected to be tied down to such a situation simply because of a non- compete clause. Finally, this language to ban non-compete clauses MUST apply to all hospitals and groups, even the "not for profit" ones (where CEO's still make millions of dollars!). There should be no exception. Thank you for your attention to this important matter."
Alec	"I believe the non compete rule should be illegal. It's not fair if you get let go and you try to go out on your own and you can't or even if you don't get along with your partner and have to separate then you can't go out for 2 years to start a business. All in all it's not fair or ethical to do that. Non compete needs to be ruled out. I hope they pass this bill effective immediately 1."
Jennie	"This is necessary. Do it."
Guru	"Exempting physicians from the provisions of this law, leaving them subject to non compete clauses that are aimed at curtailing negotiating power, limiting the ability to leave a job, is a dangerous idea. Administration often exerts enormous pressure on physicians to practice in an unsafe manner. This is because they deliberately understaff and overwork the ancillary teams, and then expect physicians to take dangerous steps to work around these limitations. If any physician found themselves in such an unsafe job, leaving is not even a question of monetary gain, but one of morals. Physicians should not be held hostage by these non competes, made to triage care due to the incompetence of those who are supposed to be administering the hospitals. Leaving the non competes here would constitute forcing someone to continue to participate in unsafe patient care, simply because the hospital knows they have the leverage to not need to improve conditions."
Douglas	"If we want to have a free market, employees need to be able to test that market to get maximum value for their services. I support the banning of non- compete clauses."
Ravi	"Please make sure doctors are included with this ruling. Non-competes are greatly reducing access to qualified physicians in rural areas as physicians become trapped under one system"
Kali	"I agree that non compete agreements should be banned by the FTC. I agree that non-compete agreements hamper worker choice within the job market, suppress workers wages, and discourages competition and innovation. Below is evidence supporting this."
Cheryl	"I was forced, along with every other employee, to sign a non-compete agreement or lose my job. I went to work there with all the info they needed, I am taking nothing of the employers with me, there is no "trade secret" to protect, all is public knowledge

	for anyone caring to search for it. I left when I found employment elsewhere that did not affect the non-compete (nearly impossible task). There is a customer of my past employer who is not being serviced well and wants to end their contract to bring the process in-house (they already did that with the other steps to the process). I was contacted to see if I would come work for them the make sure they were doing things right. This company is being stopped from growth, my experience is being wasted - and I was not told before I went to work there that a non-compete would be required. They needed me, not me them, yet my ex-employer had the right to steal my career. Where is the fairness in that for me? If employers want to keep their employees, they should make it so great that no one wants to leave. Enact it!"
Robyn	"This needs to stop. Why can't she move with the client if that's what the client needs. The client choose to move and he/she should be able to move with an Aide that's is known to them and comfortable with. These agencies needs to be stopped. They are already collecting a chunk of the money and paying these people little to nothing."
Ronda	"I'm in full support of the change to the non-compete clause. I recently left a job due to impossible working conditions, continually working 80 hours per week which resulted in me working from 8am to 1am five days a week. I took Saturdays off and then worked about six hours on Sunday. I never caught up. I was deemed a top performer in the company with very high marks each year on my performance review. I had a huge stake in the game taking a lot of pride and was passionate about what I did and how I helped the company to succeed. I was more than fairly compensated and had significant equity in the company. These conditions greatly impacted my health including lack of proper sleep for months at a time, no time to eat, take necessary bio breaks, and zero time for adequate exercise. It finally came to the stark resolution that in order to save my health, I needed to quit. Not resigned, quit. I tried to work out these impossible working conditions with proper folks from HR to the CEO. The response was "please don't leave." I woke up a few months later and said I value my health more than this big, huge corporate job. Upon professionally resigning, I stated my case and asked that my non-compete please be reduced from one year to at least six months. I did not win that battle -- for both fulltime work or within a consulting role. So, I sit here now in much better health, enjoying life more, and proud that I found the strength to resign. However, I am unable to work within the industry that I love because of my non compete. It's where I am most employable. AND, competitors have reached out and I stated that I am honoring my agreement and my non-compete is in effect. This has greatly interfered with my employability. It's not like I left the job because I wanted to. I left because I wanted to save my health and ultimately my life. I would greatly appreciate what is being proposed is actually implemented. I'd have a new job the very next day."
Brad	"Non competes should be illegal. If I go to school and graduate, get experience and then start a job. I do not believe that job should be able to dictate when and where you use your training and knowledge. These can be used for abusive and toxic employers to force workers to leave their chosen career fields or stay with the company. One of the main parts of a contract is consideration. Something of value is promised in exchange for a specified action or non action. Your exchange for working for a company is your salary. Non competes do not give anything to the worker in exchange for signing it."

William	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I support the proposed rule. Non-Compete Clauses unfairly restrict the ability of individuals to seek compensation at the full value of their ability to contribute in the workplace. Employers have an enormous power advantage over employees, and they use this to implement and enforce non-compete clauses in order to restrict competition. This is unfair to employees. In order to protect employer interests, I do support strict enforcement of Non-Disclosure Agreements. Employees should be free to change jobs for a wide variety of reasons, but if they take a new job with a new employer, they should be obligated to protect the intellectual property and trade secrets of their previous employer. Thank you for proposing this new rule. I think that it will help employees get compensation that reflects the full value of their ability to contribute in the workplace, and with proper enforcement of Non-Disclosure Agreements, it will also protect employers."
Royce	"Non-Compete Clauses (NCC) restrain freedom of employment, career advancement, and family connectivity. RE employment. NCCs are precisely identical to employment restraints due to race, gender, or religious affiliation. Although NCCs allows an employer to control future employment, not for cause, but to prevent competition. by controlling an employee's ability to be mobile in seeking employment. The restrictions of NCCs area form of destiny restrictions, the former employer controls the employee's destiny, again parallel to other controlling biases. RE: Career advancement, NCCs prevent lateral and upwards career development. Seeking opportunity to improve career limited by NCCs is a form of employer entrapment without cause and purely for the employer's corporate gain. RE: Family connectivity. NCCs also affect families when an employee is forced to seek employment outside of the NCCs geographical boundary, disrupting family life, family growth and community coherence. Again for the sole purpose of corporate profit and employee control. Please prevent these negative impacts the NCCs have on the well being of employees and their families."
Mendy	"I strongly support the ban on non-compete clauses. I am a medical sales rep and I have been with a company that has been going thru growing pains and restructuring which has been holding myself and my team back as well as affecting our paychecks. But due to our non compete, we are not able to make a move to another company. Our non compete is for 12 months after resignation. We are also going thru lay offs and that means that this non compete is still hanging over our heads if we happen to be one selected during the lay offs. In this industry everyone wants to hire you for your experience, knowledge and relationships in the field. If I could make a move I would. Otherwise, I have to move to a company or industry away from my field of expertise for 12 months in order to make a move away from my current company. I find this to be unfair. I hope that the FCC does ban and abolish all current non competes."
Marcos	"I am a developmental-behavioral pediatrician and non-compete clauses are particularly damaging to our career. We typically can only work in places where there are academic centers and sometimes when something does not work out with an all-

	controlling organization, we are left with the only option being to move across the country to find more work. With the wait lists involved in our field as well, an individual will never truly take away from the workload of any developmental specialist practice in the area, so while non-competes are limiting they are also useless in our field. In fact, just this year, my organization decided it would stop covering a large portion of our health benefits, giving me no recourse other than to move my family from the area or stay on and pay potentially $6-8k more per year, money I have not been able to budget before this moment. Developmental-behavioral pediatricians aren't exactly the highest paid physicians, and this change affects other professionals even more. Hospital systems and enterprises want to keep non-compete clauses in contracts because they exert a level of control over medical professionals and their autonomy. I could see how they could be useful in making sure that people pay back a training period or if they needed to extend proprietary control over a product or service, but professionals are people, not property. 99% of the time, when we enter into a contract with an organization, our training has already been completed and we owe nothing to the organization taking us on. In fact, if we are given stipends or bonuses, terms are usually dictated in the contract regarding payback periods. The non-compete is just an archaic means of control. Doing away with them encourages competition and ensures that no one organization can have power over another outside of the normal capitalist competitive nature that we encourage. I hope that law makers and the government can see past the greed that has cowed doctors and other medical professionals for years and vote/pass legislation in favor of the individual. Giving us our autonomy and power back is one step closer to being able to dictate our own fates instead of having a hospital system decide everything for us."
Rosemary	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements This will not affect me personally. I am retired and live in a retirement community. But I strongly support this because it will help people that need the help this ban--and in the long run, it will help me personally. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
James	"Please do away with non-compete clauses. In the IT industry, you can go to work for a company, even a small one, and be locked into a non-compete contract that makes it so that you aren't able to work for any other company within the surrounding 100 miles. That would make it impossible for someone to be in a hostile working environment, and then go to work somewhere else in the same industry and still be able to provide for your family. This is unfair to any workers that are looking for good employment."
Robert	"See attached file(s) Attachments support"
Robert	"I [...] fully support this move and also recognize what this would mean and the actions of these are unconstitutional. I have been tied into one of these in the state of

	Florida for 11 years now. The company basically bullies every employee with these and it drives the employees down and makes them scared to start a company of their own. Please vote for this to be banned and eliminated. Thank you"
Rose	"The Federal Trade Commission's motion to end non-compete agreements in the workplace is a great decision as it protects the rights of minimum wage and blue collar workers. Non-compete agreements are contracts that restrict an employee from working for a competitor or starting their own business within a certain period after leaving their current job, essentially prohibiting them from continuing to work in an industry they may have been employed in prior. This can be especially damaging for those earning minimum wage or relying on blue collar jobs since these types of employment often don't pay enough to cover living expenses while searching for new employment opportunities. Non-competes also violate the first amendment by restricting employees' freedom of speech and expression, which includes pursuing other career options that could lead them towards better wages and benefits than what was offered at their former employer. Furthermore, due to limited resources available when looking into legal action against employers who enforce such policies unfairly, many lower income individuals are left with no choice but accept whatever terms they're presented with regardless if it goes against basic labor laws or not.. By ending non-competes altogether this would ensure all workers receive fair treatment regardless of socio economic status when seeking out new opportunities away from undesirable workplaces without fear of being sued by former employers over breach of contract violations . In conclusion , The Federal Trade Commission's motion should be supported as it promotes fairness among all classes whether you're making millions annually or just trying make ends meet through hourly wages . It will help protect vulnerable populations like those dependent on low paying jobs with limited benefits so they can freely pursue better prospects without worrying about potentially facing financial penalties down the road. By enforcing a non-compete agreement that restricts an individual for more than 5 years especially is a very low key way to bully your way into having ideal retention rates."
German	"Non-competes are purely in favor of the employer and it keeps the employee from being able to negotiate better terms based on the market."
Joseph	"I believe non-compete clauses result in an inequitable balance of power between the employer and employee. Clauses such as these foster an environment of discrimination, unfair wages practices, and bias against promotion for those who want to continue living in a specific region or want to continue working in the same field of expertise. I support this proposed change."
Chelsea	"I support the proposal to limit non-complete clauses as they are designed to benefit companies/organizations, and often harm individual worker's ability to secure gainful employment. Companies already hold too much power in our country, we need to restore power to the people themselves."
Sarah	"Abolishing the non-compete clause is vital to establishing fair and non-abusive working conditions."

S	"who takes a job in good faith and puts down roots. "Then they're like, 'You know what, I don't like my employer. I want to go work somewhere else,' " he said. A person takes a job and creates roots in the community. The job ends up not being a good fit. With a non-compete, this person literally has to sell their house, move their kids to a different school, or leave their family to commute to a job further away, all in order to stay in their profession. That is unethical and a disservice to the community. BAN NON-COMPETE."
Rebecca	"I believe non-competes are ridiculous, you should not be banned from getting another job and working in your preferred field. If anything they should sign non disclosure agreements and move on."
Dawn-Marie	"Although I respect a non-compete clause when a business is purchased, I cannot in good faith support one when partners split because of differences. In my situation, I have been a client of a CPA firm in which two partners disagreed on how to manage & run their business. The majority partner, not the one who I had been working with for years, placed a non-compete on my accountant and she was no longer able to work with me. I find this ludicrous, as I feel like I am being punished. I should have the right to go to whom I desire, as I too feel as if I have had a non-compete placed upon me (the client). Please strongly consider the CLIENT'S position, as you decide the fate of the notorious "non-compete". I am clumsily trying to find a replacement...but, after working so closely with her for years, I fear it will be years before I can fully recover! Thank you!"
Adriana	"Thank you for proposing to ban non-compete rule. I hope the the vile survives."
K	"I agree with the doing-away / banning of the noncompete rule, as I am a drafter / c.a.d.d. operator by career who signed a noncompete 1 year ago, and while work is very slow in the survey world which I work in I am unable to make a living."
Linda	"The non competes are very unfair! Please end them thank you"
Mandy	"As a primary care physician , banning non competes would have a direct and significant effect on healthcare. Non competes are standard on many physician contracts. Some of which routinely cover 1,500 square miles. However they "protect" the employer or hospital system and allow them to become lazy in keeping their physicians happy and providing quality care. Patients lose access to their doctors because of non competes. Non competes only serve to keep doctors in low paying or poor fit jobs. I believe that if non competes were eliminated for physicians, it would be the first in a series of necessary business changes to our healthcare system and support it fully. When looking for my job, I chose a location for practice that would serve an underserved population. After several years of frustration and difficulty with my employer in being able to adequately treat my patients, my only option is to move away from this underserved community if I want to continue practicing medicine, but not with the current organization. Doesn't seem to support our patients needs with the current state of our healthcare system and physician shortages especially in primary care."

Amy	"I am a Nurse Practitioner in Orlando Florida. I am currently under a scrutinizing, overly broad, and unjust non-compete. I am a mother of three boys, 7, 5, and 10 months old. I left an extremely toxic work environment after 3 years of employment and have been forced to travel 2 hours one way to abide by my non-compete. On the first day of my previous job almost four years ago, I was given a 15-page employment contract laying out the terms of my employment. I was not allowed to leave the building with the contract to have my husband, family, or an attorney look over it. I was told all employee paperwork "must stay in the building." I was a new Nurse Practitioner, and I was presented with a good opportunity to provide for my family. After 3 years, my employer would not let me decrease my hours when I became pregnant and needed more time off as a mother and therefore, our relationship went sour quickly. I left the practice and was presented with a threatening attorney letter only days later reminding me of my 50 mile 2 year non-compete clause and that my previous employer would be "watching me carefully" to ensure I did not violate the covenants of the contract. At 7 months pregnant, I got a job in Tampa two days a week to make bills and cover the cost of groceries. I have been doing this for 1 year now, and it has been an exhausting and extremely difficult feat. My previous employer used my noncompete as a sword not a shield against me. This noncompete has not only kept me from providing services in healthcare to my community, but it has taken valuable time away from my family. Non-competes are being abused by companies and workers are suffering. They are absolutely ruining fair competition and rights to work in my state among all providers in the healthcare industry. I hope that someone will read this and truly take into account that people's lives are being turned upside down by these contractual agreements. We are never taught about legal contractual agreements in our specialties, and most of us are desperate out of school to be hired without experience. Employers know this, and they choose to prey on new hires for this reason. Non-competes must be banned in order to allow middle class working families an opportunity to provide for their community without a fear of legal repercussions from an employer who truly has zero legitimate business interest in a former employee. Especially not 50 miles from the previous employers place of work...."
Jerel	"I believe non-competes are inhumane and unethical. They should be banned. Physicians spend so much time in school training to serve society and the fact that their options are restricted when they are done is insane. Especially in the day and age when there's a shortage. Someone is forced to leave an area for a certain amount of time before they can return to serve"
Amanda	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes directly impact the health of the American people."
Ela	"I support the bill 100%. It restricts employee's chances of getting employment in the area. I know individuals that had to move out of the area to be able to make a living and then come back 1-2 years later."

Jessica	"I support ending noncompete agreements. My husband is a physician for a large hospital system in a metropolitan area. His noncompete holds him back from pursuing new opportunities unfairly."
Leslee	"Non-compete clauses should have always been illegal. These clauses only benefit the business, not the worker, not the physician. Business do not have the right to hold you hostage. Wanting to change jobs should not mean you must move away from your home, and take on additional expenses. Business use this to trap employees in jobs that no longer fit them. "Stay with us, or move and disrupt your entire life". Businesses should compete for employees, like employees compete for jobs, Non-competes affects the quality of life, happiness, and sense of autonomy. Non-competes squash creativity, developments of new businesses, and prevent physicians from taking jobs in smaller or rural communities. Non- competes in small and rural communities will force a move out the community if the job does not work out. Non-competes must go as soon as possible."
Ashley	"I strongly support forbidding the use of noncompete clauses."
Ryan	"I strongly support banning non- competes. It has cost me and my family $100's of thousands of dollars in earnings and upward mobility. I am currently unemployed. This should have been done a long time ago. Thank you to the FTC for getting the ball rolling and I look forward to the day when we can all move freely to enjoy our careers and be paid fairly for our efforts."
Jenniffer	"I am a physician working in the state of Florida. As a physician I have been subjected to non competes that forces you to move in another direction from were you were treating patients and friends. Non competes are used by hospitals and private groups, and they have the power of banned use from entire regions. In other positions I know they ban you from working from entire health systems. Is unfair, as it makes us stay in a job we don't like longer if we have children going to school or have made the investment to buy a house. In my prior job, our employer always declined to increase or adjust our salary to inflation as he was sure we would either stay or move out of the area. Canceling non compete rule will make our jobs fair. Thank you"
Silvio	"I support the removal of non-compete clauses. I work in the healthcare field and non compete clauses causes physicians abuse by private practices with nefarious intentions. One should be free to work without the pressure of a non compete. I applaud the efforts. Great job!!"
Diana	"I strongly support prohibiting the noncompete clause for physicians ! When compared to other professions, this would be standard, so please consider this an equity measure!!"
Jeff	"This is a great thing to have companies care about the employees they manage and prevent ruining people livelihood by preventing you from doing the only thing you have done for years. It's one thing to have actual company secrets such has a formula or similar but to restrict you from competing with them is an unfair practice. Thank you again for looking out for the very people you represent."

Mary	"I agree with this proposal. I have personally seen how destructive this practice is. Most perspective employees are not aware of how restrictive these contracts are and are only thinking about the new position they have. The companies have access to the best legal means and they know it. It's a sad day when an employee that leaves an employer cannot work in the field they were educated in. Most of these employees have college loans to pay and then they are restricted from that field. Crazy!!!"
Kelly	"I do not believe that physicians should have noncompetes. This is the employer's way of making sure they are locked down and stuck in their jobs. By being transparent you can create an enjoyable work environment for the physician and you won't need to trap them with a noncompete. There are no "trade secrets" to medicine."
Joseph	"Please include non for profit hospitals. They do this rampantly."
Joseph	"Hello Leaders of the Federal Trade Commission, I am writing this to you of my own personal experience. I am a Physician and health care systems have been buying practices and making physicians employees for years. Most physicians are now employed. These health systems want to reduce competition and employee freedom and have been doing so for an extensive time with non-compete language in contracts. These contracts even ban you from a certain distance radius should you leave for a defined time frame. My current contract is a 2 year 20 mile ban. Could you imagine starting a new position and finding out it was not a good fit for you and having to uproot the family and leave town? The hospital I worked at before this did not have a non-compete clause. How they would keep people is by treating them well and fairly. Quality people will stay with a quality company and do not need a punishment to leave. The only reason I left this position was to move closer to aging family members. I would have stayed until retirement there. My first employed position at a hospital had a 2 year 5 mile ban. I went to another hospital 10 miles away. Non-compete clauses are just another corporate scheme to control people. This is part of the reason Physician burnout is high, why they are leaving the workforce, why there are not enough medical professionals. If I am restricted to one place how am I to help more people? Bottom line non-compete clauses reduce freedom, competition, and fair work practices. This is why unions were formed. I am in unquestionable agreement that these clauses are manipulation and should be illegal."
Thomas	"Ban non-compete"
Samantha	"I fully support! I've worked with an explicit non-compete clause in my employment, and I understood its importance but I TRULY believe it restricts the professional development of a worker if they are no longer growing in a certain job position, if they work on a toxic environment and someone else included a potential competitor is making a better offer. I'm happy to see this non-compete clause happening, and I hope to see it come to fruition! I think companies will end up having happier employees and restoring the workforce."

Imad	"I am in full support of eliminating no-compete-clause. I am a physician who I was a partner In multi specialist clinic. Suffered from financial abuse for many years and when I decided to leave the clinic I had to leave the area for 2 years before I was able to go back and work where I'd like to work"
Monica	"Hello, I hope my comment and plea for help is read. My husband unknowing signed a non compete agreement with a real estate brokerage that does not allow him to work for a competing brokerage for 2 years after they purchase his shares from him. They have not purchased his shares yet. He resigned from his employment position about 3 months ago. My husband was employed by 1 brokerage in 1 city in the US and is being told he cannot go to work for any other real estate company in the entire USA. We have an attorney. Our attorney is working to renegotiate the non compete agreement. It is not going well. The scenario as a whole is much more complicated than I described here and I just cannot believe that there is not sonic law, someone that can help us. We do not have the money to hire a bunch of attorneys or take this company to court to find out how a judge may rule on this matter. My name is Monica, if anyone can help us, guide us as to how we may be able to get my husband back to work. Thank you."
Pam	"I am in favor of this proposed rule."
Laura	"I am An obstetrician/gynecologist in Tampa , Florida. I am also part of a larger organization of physicians that spans the entire United States. I am adamantly apposed to non compete laws, especially with regard to medical practices. My belief is that if you provide an environment in which people like to work, they will stay. If they are not happy, why would I want to maintain such an associate ? We have no secret trade secrets that I would be concerned about losing to a competing group/organization. Physicians should strive to provide the best care possible in a respectable and supportive environment . I vote to do away with noncompete clauses ."
Dominique	"Noncompete ban I hope that the noncompete ban goes through for multiple reasons. please comment to FTC. The American Hospital Association (with not one single physician on their executive board) is fighting to exclude physicians (and ONLY physicians) from the new FTC non compete rule. I strongly suggest commenting your opposition and sharing with your physician colleagues if you have the time and inclination. There's a limited time for the comment window. Here's a sample template Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. As you know, non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in

	need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. I never thought I would be in a position where I could not practice medicine but due to a noncompete a currently cannot open a practice in the area I live. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care. Thank you for your attention to this important matter."
Stephen	"Thank you for recognizing the importance of this significant employee issue. As a physician, I see the extreme levels of frustration and burnout in my peers. These feelings seem to be compounded by feeling "trapped" by employers. I work as a pediatric sub specialist in a large system in a large urban city, but I know that if I wanted to leave my current employer Pd have to leave this area of the state, requiring me to sell my home and move my family (including requiring my spouse to change employers). There is no reasonable need for employers- especially large corporate systems- to have this inequitable bargaining power to limit our rights to work."
David	"Physicians are placed at an unfair disadvantage by non-compete clauses. Physicians spend years developing physician-patient relationships and physician-physician referral/co- management relationships that lead to patient efficiency, better care and patient safety. Non-compete clauses for physicians can hurt the community. A non-compete has much more weight on physician employment than would be expected. Physicians can not engage in group negotiations, unions nor have the ability to strike by law. I support the proposed changes."
Shay	"I am personally under the restraint of a non-compete that has cost me two job opportunities because the new employer was hesitant to bring me on for fear of litigation with my former employer. This is having very negative consequences on my livelihood. The employer had me sign a non-compete during a corporate buyout and then eliminated my position 5 business days later. They KNEW they were eliminating the staff and replacing them with their own people, yet bound us all to a non-compete anyway. I am fairly certain the non-compete wouldn't hold up in court, but that isn't stopping the negative impacts on my job prospects due to new employers being hesitant to engage until the non-compete terminates. Unless I hire an attorney, which I cannot afford while being unemployed, I am stuck. Non-competes only hurt workers. Employers can implement non-disclosure agreements to reasonably protect themselves and do so without restricting an employee from working. I have children to care for and my current restrictions are harming my family in a very meaningful way."
Molly	"The non-complete clause should be abolished, especially in the healthcare setting. Physicians and their practices have been bought out by investment companies and

	large corporations who have placed non-compete clauses in the physician and other healthcare provider's contracts. This has created a loss of continuity of care for patients and hurt medical care and access. Good, established, and experienced physicians are being forced to leave the area they have served for years if they do not agree with or comply with requirements set forth by the large employers such as required metrics for number of visits. These are profit-driven and not driven by improving patient care. However, with a non-compete in place the physician cannot leave to care for patients they have established with for years. This has made many physicians leave clinical practice all-together creating an even bigger problem. Please eliminate the non-compete clauses from healthcare and hold the current ones ineffective and unenforceable for both the patients and the ones who care for them. Thank-you."
John	"I fully support the Non-Compete Ban! They are a form of control that forces a person to stay working with an employer even when unhappy."
Charles	"I can tell you that this would be greatly appreciated by employees like me. I have over a 20-year sales career and worked for a fortune 500 company. I lost many an opportunity to work for a competitor or hire someone because of a non-compete. It is about time that the employee has the freedom to move when they want to."
Kristen	"I whole heartedly believe non competes should not be a thing I currently am under one and in a bad spot where my boss doesn't even fully supply the products we need as hairstylist to do our job such as hair color product even forgets about cleaning supplies and toilet paper! I would love to get out of the situation I'm in but I'm scared because they've sued people for leaving and the closest place I can go is almost an hour from where I live and a lot clients aren't going to drive that far every 4-6 weeks! I 1000% support the banning of non competes it's toxic!"
Akash	"I am writing to oppose exclusion of physicians from this rule. Beyond the comments that others have made, I believe that allowing non-compete clauses to apply to physicians would have deleterious effects on patient care. Many fields in medicine are highly subspecialized and those subspecialized physicians must be allowed mobility to practice in environments that best allow them to serve patients. For example, if a subspecialty physician relocates to work in an organization that ends up not supporting her clinic and not allowing her to serve patients to the best of her ability, prohibiting her ability to move to another organization in the same area will result in negative consequences for patients in that area namely, lower service levels than could otherwise be offered if she were not subject to a non-compete clause. While true that the physician could move outside the radius of the non-compete, there are at least two problems with this. First, the physician may have established a family life in the area rendering moving impractical. And second, the real need for a subspecialized service, for example, may be in the area the physician is already in, with needs in other areas already met, relatively speaking, due to regionalization of services. For example, a surgical oncologist who specializes in neuroendocrine tumors may be recruited to a health system but it turns out that the operating room and clinic are inadequately staffed and poorly run, greatly limiting the ability of the surgeon to serve patients. If the surgeon bought a house, has a spouse who also found a job in the area, and school age children, relocating out of the area may not be practical. Further, it may be that there isn't the same level of need in other regional centers around the country and so the surgeon's expertise is most needed in the area she is already in. In both cases, limiting the surgeon's mobility through a non-compete clause harms the local community through effectively forcing the surgeon to stay in a sub-optimal practice environment, leading to reduced service levels for patients in need. Physicians all bring unique skills, even within the same specialty, and so there would not be a reliable way to determine from specialty/subspecialty alone whether a non-compete would harm patient care in the area in the manner described above. Therefore, I am writing to urge that physicians as a group not be excluded from this rule prohibiting non-compete clauses, which would protect the ability of physicians to serve the public to the best of their ability."

Joseph	"The company I previously worked for recently sold. The new owners wanted certain employees to sign a very restrictive non-compete agreement. I refused to sign the agreement. I was not fired, but I found out the company was looking for my replacement. After leaving, I reached out to a competitor who was interested in hiring me. Even though I told the prospective employer I did not sign any non-compete, NDA or employment contract of any time, they did not want to hire me as an employee because they feared potential litigation. I left with no company information, only what I know from my experience of nearly 30 years in the industry. These types of agreements are meant to control wages and are completely one sided for the employer and not the employee. They do not offer any compensation to the employee in consideration of signing the agreement. In my case, I have years of experience in a very small industry."
Shawn	"I am writing in STRONG support of abolishing Non-compete clauses. They are un-American and stifle competition. Worker's rights are routinely trampled with these non-competes. Abolish them, please!"
Sara	"These needs to be eliminated I This prevents us as providers to better ourselves and the community when other opportunities arise."
BRENT	"End Non Competes!!!"
Robert	"I strongly oppose non-compete agreements as I have seen how employers have abused this process which prevents lower level employees from obtaining new employment without any compensation, even when the company has fired/laid-off the employee. While the employee may not feel threatened by this non-compete agreement, potential new employers often do not want to get involved in a legal battle with the former employer which results in the employee losing significant income and creates a great deal of hardship on the former employee & their family."
Beverly	"Please ban unfair non-compete clauses for physicians ."
Sarah	" Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses for the same reasons others should not be subject to them. They can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career

	opportunities. Additionally, with the continually decreasing reimbursements despite inflation, the overall physician morale is low and the noncompete is yet one more thing that contributes to this. More and more physicians are leaving medicine for other career fields and, before we know it, there will not be any physicians left to care for us. It makes no sense to discriminate only against physicians and steal away their autonomy of being able to choose where they and their family will live. This kind of discrimination will not stand and will look very poorly upon whoever tries to institute such a policy."
mary	"To Whom it may Concern, I desperately and urgently advise you to abolish any and all anti-American non-compete laws and/or policies. They suppress wages and chain us to wealthy corporations. We are extremely grateful that you are even addressing this issue and are optimistic that you will follow through. I work for a large commercial laboratory and not only can they terminate us without warning, with or without cause, but I cannot work as a physician, practically speaking, in this country for a year afterwards. These are horrific and barbaric gifts to corporate greed. It's extremely interesting that Florida lawyers have forbidden such non-competes for attorneys but not for physicians, hair stylists and sandwich makers alike. I have no idea if this is just Florida or Federal, as I am a physician tasked with saving lives and not an attorney. Please help us all as we are desperate."
Connie	"Please ensure that the ban on noncompete clauses applies to physicians. There is currently abuse of noncompetes to retain physicians into poor working conditions and harms the community and their patients when they are forced to leave the region to continue practicing. The physician shortage in this country means that most areas will not suffer from the competition of more than one physician practicing in the same area. As hospitals are merging to create ever larger healthcare systems, physicians are being forced into contracts with noncompetes if they want employment. A ban of noncompete clauses would create more effort to retaining physicians and ultimately benefit patients. Thank you for your consideration."
Eric	"I am a physician in the Jacksonville, Florida area. My Practice was bought out by a large corporation 3 1/2 years ago with the promise to improve efficiencies of the practice as well as provide better resources to improve the care I provide to patients. This has not come to be. All they have done is drain all the resources from my Practice. My expense ratio prior to joining them was 55%. Now it is 80%. I actually have to pay this corporation to come to work each day. Based on this scenario, it is no longer an equitable relationship. My employment contract restricts me from practicing in this community for 2 years if I decide to resign. I have been in this community for over 17 years. If I am forced to leave my home, my patient care relationships that I have nurtured over the years will be left behind. Banning Non-Compete clauses is good for the employee, but also benefits patients and the general public."
Nayf	"I support this ban on non-compete clause. It hurts doctors workers and most importantly patients who wants to keep their doctors."

Jon	"Non-compete clauses are anti-competitive and shift power from employees to corporations. Corporations have gained too much power in the employment relationship over the past 40-50 years. This rule would be one small step towards correcting that."
Andrew	"As a contractor working with a fortune 5 company I'm bound by a non compete from my staffing agency. The staffing agency did not recruit me nor does it invest in my development in any way. I simply used the staffing agency as a pass through in order to work as a contractor for previous colleagues at the fortune 5 company. Please do away with non compete agreements."
Georgia	"I'm strongly opposed to excluding physicians from these noncompete rules. These rules trap physicians in bad and at times unsafe working conditions, especially if they have bought a home, have a spouse with a local job, or are raising their children in a particular school. Why should we and our families be subject to such unethical clauses while the rest of Americans are protected from it? This is the kind of thing that's contributing to massive burnout and physician shortages. Lastly, I do not agree with non-for profit hospitals being excluded. I know from personal experience they can be some of the worst work environments. Let us not forget that the CEO of Atrium health made 10 MILLION dollars in 2021 alone. Not sure how that amount of money is justifiable in a nonprofit organization. But clearly they profit from these hospitals just as much as for profit leadership does."
Stephen	"I'm an audiovisual engineer . My industry has been also plagued with stringent non-compete clauses. I held a position at a company for several years as a service technician, where I saw my leadership team pursue ANY former coworker that left to work for competition. On multiple occasions I saw my employer win settlements against those former coworkers. These were NOT high level executives. No one holding trade secrets. Just other technicians like myself. The fear of that happening to me, locked me into that company for years longer than I saw fit. It created a toxic workplace culture. Our leadership team made certain to let us know the consequences of what would happen should we leave. This company did not establish my career, they did not pay for my education, and their pay scale was marginally lower than industry standard Non- competes are meant for high level executives holding trade secrets. NOT blue collar workers that established their careers with dick own ambition, education, and dedication to the field. I had the chance to take my position remote, which allowed me to move outside of the area specified in my non-compete, FINALLY giving me peace of mind to leave the grip of that employer. Only to be locked up in another one ! In my experience, non-competes have been nothing more than a tool to abuse worker rights."
Jordan	"While I believe the proposed rule is a good start, excluding not for profit entities will limit the scope of this proposal in a harmful way. Many physicians are burdened by non compete clauses and many work for not for profit hospitals (some of the largest employers in metro areas). As such, I believe that this exclusion should be removed to further benefit those who are impacted negatively/restricted by non competes. Physicians and patients will benefit as a result."

Jeffrey	"I completely agree with getting rid of the non competes. I just resigned as a financial advisor from a company in a small town. They have us on a 2yr noncompete that says I cannot even contact the clients I worked with, nor open a new office within a mile of their office. They naturally are on the main street of the town. This makes it be impossible to be downtown in a small town. Having started this job straight after retiring from the military, it feels like they have taken advantage of us (many vets) as they know we haven't any idea about that part of the contract. Please not only abolish it for the future, but force companies to remove them from the past, just as you stated in the potential rule change. Thanks for purposing, and hopefully completing it after comment."
Candace	"I would like to request that the Non-Compete Clause Rule be eliminated. I believe it is not a fair law. In my case, we have lost an accountant that we have worked with for over 12 years for both our business and personal accounting needs when the business was sold. Due to the "old guard" vs "new guard", our accountant left the business and due to a "non compete" clause, the accountant that knows our business and personal needs inside out, that we have worked with all this time, is not allowed to do business with us. I have no history on the new owner and have to either stay with someone I don't know or find another accountant that I don't know. Where did OUR RIGHTS go to be able to work with the accountant of our choice that we know and that knows us? Especially since this person is still doing accounting work. Why is it fair for her to be able to work with strangers but not those of us that have had a long time business relationship with her? I respectfully request this "Non Compete" clause be done away with. Thankvyou"
Kenneth	"Once our franchise agreement is complete, we should not be prevented front working in the industry as we still need to make a living. Of course we should not use any proprietary systems, but we should be able to create and run our own business. The real problem here is the franchisor can set any terms they like for renewal and we are on a take it or leave it basis. We have zero negotiating power. That is not right."
Kevin	"Non competes shift too much power from those who do the work "employees" to the institution. Even after the contract is over, institutions hold non competes which gives absolutely lack of FREEDOM to work to the employee. Having to move to find a good job when there are similar jobs in the same area seems easily against our own typical workers morals. I would ban all non competes."
Liz	"Non-compete clauses are unfair to employees and make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats you, by allowing your former employer to sue you if you go to work for another company in the same industry. If you aren't allowed to work in the same industry that you're trained in, how are you supposed to get a decent job? The FTC estimates that banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by 5300 billion per year. More people making money and having jobs would help the economy and lessen the need for welfare. Plus, it would just be more fair. It's hard enough to get a new job nowadays, and non-compete clauses just add to the stress and difficulty. Please ban non-compete clauses...or at least modify them to allow people to work in their field as long as they don't divulge past employer secrets to their new company."

Jessica	"I completely support a non-compete clause rule for all industries. This would vastly improve wages and ease of changing jobs."
Maricer	"I strongly support a federal ban on non-compete clauses proposed by the bill. These clauses are used to keep doctors from leaving abusive work environments. They often have ridiculous constraints. My last contract had a non-compete that included 3 counties for a period of 2 years and was in effect no matter why I parted ways with the employer. This would require uprooting my family and moving my husband and children (which is exceedingly difficult, but ultimately what I ended up doing). It seems like doctors should simply not sign contracts with these clauses, but they have become ubiquitous so the choice is usually to sign it or remain unemployed."
James	"I think non-compete clauses hurt regular employees and working class people more than anyone else."
Julie	"As a physician assistant practicing in dermatology in an already underserved area, i was required to sign a two year 25 mile radius non compete clause with my former employer. In order to advance my career and to find a job with basic benefits, i have been forced to drive 1.5 hours each way daily in order to find a comparable position. This is actually costing me both more time and expense in traveling as well as more time spent on one of the most dangerous interstates in America. As we are unable to practice medicine without a supervising physician, there is no way that we would be able to cause or coerce patients to leave a practice they are comfortable with in numbers sufficient enough to cause damage to a practice even if we wanted to. I do believe that non competes are unfair and are a violation of the fair trade agreement. In the same way that you can have a CVS and Walgreens directly across from each other or two gas stations across from each other and both can be successful, the same is true for providers that may be just a few miles away. Non competes are unconstitutional in my opinion and should be obsolete. Thank you."
Rachel	"I believe that a noncompete should either not exist or there be some specifications put on them. I am a single mom to four kids, I had to leave my previous job due to some mental health issues with my daughter that required me to take a leave of absence from my employer and then go with a position that allowed me more flexibility and the ability to make more money in less time, affording me the attention I needed to be placed with my children. I parted on good terms only to get sent a letter from my previous employer threatening to sue me even when I did nothing wrong. I have had to already go through great obstacles to work in areas outside of a 75-miled radius which is quite difficult especially when people want to specifically work with me and I have to turn them down. I am still being threatened which required me to spend money I don't have obtaining an attorney which on top of all of my other struggles already existing has caused more emotional distress. I am a drop in the bucket compared to all of the business this company gets and considering all of the money I made them. It's absolutely ridiculous. It is a shame that someone that has been there for years can keep getting their pay cut and they can get away with it because that person is so invested that they can't afford to start over. I understand if someone is intentionally being malicious but if it is innocent and beyond an employees control, there should be special consideration given without having to spend thousands in legal fees."

Tom	"Great idea.A no compete clause that I had to sign to get sewerage pay at The Merchants Association of Florida prevented me from pursuing my specialty which was coordinating a Street Pole Banner Program in Fl. so I am a champion of not allowing this practice. "
Khaled	"Non competes restrict trade. They should be eliminated"
Eric	"Fully support ban of non competes as I have had to practice under one for 17 years so far"
Ben	"This rule is needed to protect employees and foster fair treatment of employees and fair wages. As a former employee of South Motors of Miami Dade, I am subject to a non-compete. First I recognize that I bear responsibility for signing the document. The restrictions this document places on people like me is extremely unfair. I did not receive any specialized training at South Motors, I brought 30 years of automotive experience into the job with South Motors and found my wages stagnant for the three years I worked there. During my employment there, my processes and analysis brought the company millions in earnings Upon tendering my resignation I was first threatened with enforcement of my signed NON COMPETE I remained steadfast on my decision to leave. Only then I was offered a 200% salary increase to stay, I declined the offer and still left. On day one of my employment at my new job, my new employer received a strongly worded yet incorrect letter from South Motors. In most instances that type of letter resulted in new employers terminating the new employee. The employee would have no choice but either leave the industry, take an extra long commute or return to South Motors. On the other hand, South Motors hired an employee from AutoNation named Mr. Bueno, who also had an existing non-compete. South Motors, made Mr Bueno a "consultant" while giving him a full time job with responsibilities of a normal employee. South Motors' unlimited resources make it very hard for employees to challenge their non-compete by using their attorneys and court to coerce former workers. Yet, hypocritically they scuff competition's non-compete. They'veen enforce their non competes on carwash employees."
Kristi	"I was working as a commission only employee . My employer takes 50% of what I earn. I have the opportunity to go work for a new company offering a new position, better compensation and room for advancement. My employer is stating that because I met this individual (now new business owner) during the time I was working for my previous employer I can not go work for the new company for 12 months. I'm not taking any trade secrets, any clients and there will be no financial impact due to my departure and it's a new position. However, because I "met this person" through my employment I am unable to work for them. I left my job after signing a contract and now I don't have a job to goto. Because my previous company is so big I'm not sure where I can go that I haven't made contact at some point with a large majority of people in my industry."

Todd	"Non-competes have scope creeped well beyond protection of trade secrets and have and are used to prevent employees from using personal experience to grow professionally. The agreements work to commingle trade secrets with personal experience and value thereby limiting one's ability to look for more competitive wages, companies and competition with better corporate values, benefits etc... They are a product to maintain the corporate/company power and limit innovation. FTC is correct in this new rule."
Eric	"Yes please! We live in a world being taken over by monopolies. The government should do everything in its power to encourage competition. AntiTrust seems to be dead. Why not empower entrepreneurs at least?!"
Urban	"This proposed rule will enhance pricing, quality of advice and reduce disputes for consumers in personal finance/financial services sector . Currently, many workers such as financial advisors, planners and bankers have non-competes that undermine the foundation of the sector- relationships and quality advice. So much has been done at the Dept. of Labor and SEC to attempt to put the clients first but non-competes are inherently a conflict of interest. Consider a fiduciary financial advisor that has a legal duty to put their clients' best interest first. If the fiduciary advisor cannot fully depart their employer that's incentives, initiatives and products undermine the fiduciary relationship, is the consumer best positioned to receive non-biased advice? In the financial services sector where non-biased advice is fundamental to helping consumers reach their goals, non-competes are tools used to override fiduciary standards for the best interest of the entities requiring non-competes rather than consumers."
Nancy	"I believe that this proposed non-compete clause limits an individual's incentive to grow in their position. Our nation is founded upon freedom and this would severely limits an employee's creative freedom or the ability to better themselves by being in a competitive marketplace. It is so wrong in so many ways. It stifles an individual from wanting to do better as it limits their potential. It would thereby limit the free enterprise that made us a great nation."
William	"Thank you for considering this proposal. As a veterinary specialist , I am in full support for outlawing non-compete agreements. They allow corporate practices to exploit their employees and prevent natural competition in the market."
Sheyla	"I'm a new grad healthcare worker . Having difficulty to decide either to not get a job or sign a non-compete clause with a poor salary. I don't believe non-competes should be legal. I studied very hard and own money to my federal loans from school."
Andrew	"I am in full support of removing the non-compete clause. I am currently trying to survive a one year non-compete clause. The effect is extremally difficult. with reduced income and pressures on family life. I cant work within 25 miles of my last job which is extremely restrictive. All I want to do is get back to work and provide for my family."

Wayne	"non-compete is wrong. get rid of it. we are not owned by business."
Laura	"As someone who worked in corporate America for over over 30 years, I know the devastating effect of the non-complete clause rule. Like any other law/rule there must be some thought behind it...though addressing the needs of both parties. From what I and others experienced the rule was heavily weighted to the side of the employer. While I was an executive, this rule also effected those whose positions were not "executive". Earning a living with the talents and expertise we have are critical to the expansion of our economy"
John	"Thank you for considering this. I am a general surgeon and have been in practice for over 30 years. I have experience noncompete clauses in two of my practices, including the one in which I am currently employed. I provide wound care at nursing homes, and the noncompete clause is extremely onerous requiring that if I were to leave, I cannot work within 25 miles of any facility where any of my colleagues work or have worked within two years. There are over 300 physicians in the group spanning the country. This is an exceedingly onerous and unfair clause in the contract. At the time of signing the contract, I do not believe I had any other option if I wanted to do the work, and assumed that I would likely be retiring from that practice, so it wouldn't be an issue. Unfortunately, I need to leave this practice for various reasons, and I am restricted significantly from working in the same field in any meaningful way for the next two years. This would potentially require starting over in an entirely different field with the attendant stress, decreased wages, and difficulties that would come with it. In a previous practice, I had to leave the area, moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio in order to find employment because of the noncompete clause. This was extremely disruptive to me and my young family, thring me to leave the extended family in the area where I had been raised. Thank you for considering this ban on noncompete, clauses and resending any that are currently in existence. I welcome this, as a tremendous benefit to people like me, and all workers who are affected by it. It will stimulate the economy, allow for healthy competition, and improved growth and jobs. Thank you."
Cathy	"The FTC should eliminate all non-compete clauses. These agreements hinder the ability of employees to seek better jobs."
Joshua	"employers are using non-comepete agreements as a form of retaliation against former employees. contacting the former employees new employers and harassing their company for information. some employers find themselves threatened with a lawsuit even though they are not privy to the terms of the agreement. all too often these companies determine it is easier to terminate the employee than to defend them in court: even if language in the non-compete does not equal a breach of terms. non-competes are not being used as a way to protect a business' legitimate interests but rather as a sword to attack former employees. if this rule is not passed , as is. I would like to see a shield be given to employees to defend them from a former litigious employer who is using a non- compete as a tool for harassment and retribution. specifically wording that contacting the former employees new employer is a form of harassment and to penalize them with punitive damages."

Jared	"The use of noncompete clauses in employment contracts by hospitals and organizations is used to force established physicians to accept any terms proposed. Physicians inherently have less negotiating power compared to institutions with hundreds of employees. Additionally, noncompete clauses are one sided providing no limitation to the hospital and enforcing unfair restrictions on physicians."
K	"I am a physician from Montana. I was forced to stay out of the civilian market in large part due to no compete clauses. It is unfair to hold your home and family's stability hostage due to the whims of ever-more powerful hospital systems. Please end noncompete clauses. They are unfair and cannot be avoided due to vested interest of employers."
Zach	"End Non- Compete's!"
Alessandro	"Finally. The non-compete is damaging the single teacher and self employed people and forces them to accept low pay and to be submit to unrealistic studio rules"
Bradley	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to you as a general surgeon , who is bound by a noncompete clause. I am writing in strong support of your proposed change to eliminate noncompete clauses and/or make them illegal in contracts. I think that it fundamentally restricts our freedom as physicians, employees and citizens, to be bound by a noncompete clause that essentially force us to move cities, if we no longer wish to work for our current employer. If employers mistreat us, undervalue us or otherwise create a suboptimal work environment we should have the right to leave and work elsewhere, without having to uproot our lives to another city. It is not as though we are taking trade secrets or intellectual property with us as physicians. Furthermore, let it be known that the American Hospital Association does not speak for physicians when it states that it is against the elimination of noncompete clauses. I cannot think of a single physician that I know that is in favor of noncompete clauses. I respectfully ask that the FTC pass the proposed rule to eliminate noncompete clauses from contracts."
Christopher	"Please ban all non-competes, including for physicians . Noncompetes in physician contracts puts unnecessary barriers in the healthcare system."
Matthew	"I am completely in favor of banning non-compete clauses. These stipulations in employment contracts do nothing but drive wages lower for workers and allow corporations to monopolize talent in a given area. These clauses cause a lack of competition for a fair wage for the labor provided because a competitor in the area cannot offer a competing job offer due to the non-compete. Additionally, these clauses when applied to critical services, such as healthcare, prevent a facility from recruiting from other organizations and causes skilled labor to move from an one city or county to another for a better wage. This causes an artificial labor shortage and ultimately only serves the owners of these organizations. A ban on non-compete agreements will be helpful for workers across the country."

Xueli	"I am personally a victim of the unfair and unjustified practice of non-compete clause. My employer required every single employee to sign a non-compete agreement during the middle of employment, which essentially blocked us from working for any other employees for two years. Several of my coworkers lost their job opportunity when the potential employer learned they were bound by non-compete agreement. When I submitted my resignation to my company, they specifically threatened me with the clause. This practice is essentially a modern day indentured labor system. A complete ban of this unjust practice is urgently needed to protect the rights of workers and promote a free labor market."
Samer	"Eliminating the non compete clause for physicians would allow for better more robust care for all patients especially those who are disadvantaged or disabled. It may be on the the most cost effective method to reduce health care costs and improve care at the same time. I would be happy to discuss further in any format."
Jason	"Thank you for finally taking action to protect us from noncompete clauses. Both my wife and I are physicians and are bound by noncompete clauses. Every healthcare worker we know are also bound by noncompetes. If either my wife or I try to leave to work somewhere else, we will be unable to live with our family for over a year due to noncompete clauses. The hospital systems know this and they take advantage of these noncompete clauses. And there's nothing we can do about it as they all use the same system to prevent any of us from ever working somewhere else without banishing us to leave our loved ones behind or picking up our entire family and moving."
Renee	"The non-compete tyranny should be banned. It is an oppressive portion of a contract that enslaves a worker to continue working at the same spot due to having to relocated their lives and families if the employee wishes to change jobs. Please strike this from being legal for all past contracts, all current ones, and any future."
Colleen	"Noncompete clauses have been used in medicine to lock physicians out of entire cities if they choose to change employment. The average physician at large healthcare systems does not carry trade secrets and cannot alone change the dynamic of referral patterns between these health systems. Noncompete clauses inhibit physicians from changing jobs leading to increased burnout and decreased productivity. They also lead to the loss of talented physicians from markets with only one or two health systems. It is time for this practice of restrictive covenants to end."
noah	"As a current non-compete worker I believe this keeps employees trapped by their employers. Having years of related experience in an area should not allow an employer to trap employees from being employed in other businesses that may be partially related to the current employee's work. I think non-compete allows employers to hold all the cards when it comes to wage growth and retaining employees as there are no options for workers to seek as they will breach their non-compete contracts."
Joseph	"I am a physician in primary care. Physicians of all types should not be excluded from legislation prohibiting non-competes. Non-competes prevent patient access to care to physicians they like if the physicians have business disagreements with their employers. End non competes for all healthcare practitioners."

Joseph	"If lawyers are prohibited from signing non compete clauses, why treat other professionals trying to advocate people any different? Physicians need to be a neutral party in offering the best advice to patients, and when they are bound my noncompete, they may feel pressured to make decisions to benefit their employer. Please see: https://jamarietnetwork.com/journals/jama-health-forum/fullarticle/2786894 "
Linda	"I have seen the non compete clause used unfairly on those being laid off and have to travel long distances for employment. And forces people to stay in jobs so they don't have to move for a new job out of the non compete area."
Gaspere	"Non-compete clauses can protect am employer's investment in a new physician employee. This investment can be calculated, fairly or unfairly. However, if the physician is bound by a non-compete clause, this may allow the employer to unfairly treat the employee knowing the employee is bound to them by a non- compete. Sonic employers refuse to inform patients of the new location of the physician they introduced to the community, deliberately withholding information from patients who chose and liked that physician. Non-competes should be made illegal and unethical in medical care. Attorneys consider them unethical. If it is impossible to render them illegal, a compromise is to limit their scope and duration. Less than ten miles distance from a primary office (not to include all offices of that employer) and a maximum duration of 1 year. There should also be a stipulation that if a physician leaves an employer, that employer is obligated to provide the current location (if known) of the physician's new location, unless the physician was released/fired for cause related to malpractice or egregious behavior."
Suzanne	"All physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule, just as all other workers will be afforded this safeguard. Physicians, especially hospital-employed physicians such as myself in Radiology, Pathology, Hospitalist Medicine, should NOT be exempt from this needed worker protection as it stifles our ability to negotiate our contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over our livelihood and the marketplace. Exempting Physicians from the new Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM), is not only unjust- it will contribute to the burgeoning epidemic of physician burnout."
Kacey	"Non-compete have directly affected my ability to work and support my family in an area we consider home. After 11 years of education as a physician this is complete injustice."
STEPHEN	"Wonderful! Wonderful! Hurrah for the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule!"
Dimitri	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to express my strong opposition to the use of non-compete clauses in contracts for physicians . These clauses restrict physicians from practicing medicine within a certain geographic area or with a certain patient population for a specified period of time after leaving a practice. The use of non-compete clauses in physician contracts is detrimental to both the physicians and

	the patients they serve. Physician non-competes limit the mobility and job opportunities of physicians, and can prevent them from providing care to patients in need. This can lead to shortages of physicians in certain areas, and can make it difficult for patients to find the care they need. Furthermore, non-compete clauses in physician contracts can limit competition, which can lead to higher healthcare costs for patients. By limiting the number of physicians in a given area, non-competes can also limit the number of choices that patients have when selecting a healthcare provider. In light of these concerns, I urge the Federal Trade Commission to take action to prohibit the use of non-compete clauses in contracts for physicians. Such a prohibition would help to ensure that patients have access to the care they need, and would promote competition in the healthcare industry. Thank you for your consideration."
LAWRENCE	"Huge income disparity is destructive to a democratic republic. Management gains inappropriate leverage over employees by using these non-compete clauses. It's high time to end the abuse of these restrictive legal devices. ASAP, and as broadly applied as possible."
Robert	"This restriction stops people from earning a living in the field of choice"
Kristen	"I think this is a wonderful proposed rule. I was trapped in a job for ten years with a non compete. When I left, to honor it, I had to drive 3 hours away and spend frequent time apart from my family. The home care industry doesn't even protect proprietary knowledge. It stifles competition by often requiring these burdensome agreements. I spent $1000 of my own money to have an attorney review my agreement prior to leaving my company to advise me of my options. They were few in number and limited in scope."
Amy	"In regards to Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. I am fully in favor of the ban of non-compete clauses. I have been a licensed, practicing Physician Assistant for almost 20 years. I had to sign a non-compete clause with my previous employer for a 2 year period. Because of this, I have had to travel over an hour one way to work since finding new employment. This was my only option in order to remain in my medical specialty. This has caused me to cut back to part time work and has made a large impact on my family's income. I am 15 months into my non-compete clause and have another 9 months to go. If I had had the opportunity to stay in my community to practice Dermatology, I would in no way have been taking business from my previous employer. Please consider passing this ban to allow employees to have better options to better themselves and choose other employment without any road blocks due to a useless non-compete clause."
Nishant	"I absolutely support the banning of non-competes. It essentially amounts to indentured servitude. In the spirit of free market economics, this practice should absolutely be banned, wholly, completely, and retroactively, and especially for physicians."
Amanda	"Non-competes are archaic restrictions to control employees and competition and have no place in a free market"

Helen	"Non-Compete agreements area bad idea and used to exploit employees in many situations. Sometimes they are valid when someone might steal clients or scientific formulas etc. When they are used in situations where employees in low skill jobs are compelled to stay in dead end situations due to a non-compete agreement that is a very serious problem and should be outlawed."
Becky	"I believe non-compete clauses result in an inequitable balance of power between the employer and employee. Clauses such as these foster an environment of discrimination, unfair wages practices, and bias against promotion for those who want to continue living in a specific region or want to continue working in the same field of expertise. I support this proposed change."
Steven	"I believe non-compete clauses result in an inequitable balance of power between the employer and employee. Clauses such as these foster a poor work environment and dissatisfaction. I have been a physician in my community for the past 23 years. My group was acquired by a large private equity company 4 years ago- they made numerous promises and have failed to perform even close to stated expectations. Patient care and work - life happiness continues to decline with this organization. I have no practical recourse - not practical to have a legal battle with a multi billion dollar company. I am forced to either continue on with other disgruntled physicians or leave my family and community of 23 years to start over. If employers fostered a good work environment and did not fail to perform as promised then there would not be a need to look elsewhere. With the current state of non compete agreements the employers have too much control over their employees - there is no balance of power. I fully support the proposed legislation to end non-compete clauses."
Bhaskar	"Comment: I as a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations and hospitals. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians. Non-profit hospitals should not be exempt from this ban. Sincerely,"
Anton	"I support the FTC in banning noncompete clauses. Noncompetes cause undo duress onto the employees and limits competition and innovation in all fields. I am a physician and an administrator and I do not support the American Hospital Association statement in reference to this policy, they do not represent me and I comfortably say they do not represent the best interest of any of their associated hospital's employees as they make it seem in their first few sentences of their statement. Noncompete clauses stifle innovation in health care and can lead to bum out and people leaving the healthcare field due to lack of options. Please do what is right for the people and ban noncompete clauses."
Pablo	"This is absurd. How insulting and discriminating to exclude employed physicians working for non-profit organizations when we know such non for profits make hundreds of millions every year at the expense of such professionals. Non compete clauses are a form of slavery and completely out dated. Name one more professional field in which an important employee can't go work for the competition of the

Pablo	"Medical providers, as with any other profession are currently held hostage to contracts that not always serve their best interest. Often, such physicians will continue working, unhappily, in certain institutions due to the lack of an option to switch jobs without having to move their spouse and children to other city or state. Physician bum out and suicide are at an all time high for physicians. Although multi-factorial, whether this chronic unhappiness at the work place is in part related to restrictive non-compete clauses could be argued. I cannot drink of another profession where contracts prevent free competition (I'm this case among health care institutions) to sign a talented human resource because of this iron clad stipulations. This needs to stop."
Alberto	"As a surgeon in Florida I was negatively impacted by a non compete. I worked for a private group for 6 years. When we finally reached the point that we could not continue the non compete caused me to leave the community I had served for 6 years. The only Spanish speaking vascular surgeon in Tampa. Lawyers wanted $100k to defend me and allow me to practice, but who has that kinda of cash to throw at a legal system. Non compete was set for 4 counties and max 2 years in Florida. It is time to allow physicians to practice without harm to their family and lifestyle. It is time to federally ban non compete clauses in medical practice. If u treat your employees well and pay them appropriately you will not have an issue Non competes are based on greed and bulky tactics. They must be banned."
Maggie	"Please ban this non-compete! I am not making a living wage at my current job and I am being offered a great job from the competitor which will improve my living situation considerably. But I sign the non compete and I can't take the job!"
Regino	"I welcome the opportunity to opine on this important issue. By severely limiting mobility, Non-compete clauses 'de facto' serve to keep employees hostage. This feeling progressively results in job dissatisfaction, decreased productivity and eventual burn-out (with all of its attendant negative consequences). As a physician, I should have the freedom to choose my place of employment without fearing these repercussions. I strongly believe it is past due to illegitimate these contractual vestiges, once and for all! Thank you"
Ana Maria	"My situation is a perfect example of an overreaching no complete agreement that I signed only as willingly as one can be when the only other option is termination. The

	agreement I signed prohibits me from working within 20 miles of my ex-employer for a duration of 2 years. I have owned a business that services the same area for 4 years before joining my ex employer, and yet I cannot resume business with my clients. I have a lawyer who is unwilling to pursue arguing the legitimacy of the agreement. If I were to resume business in the area, and my ex-employer sought to engage in legal action against me, would a judge rule in my favor, given the position of the FTC regulation proposal?"
David	"I strongly support eliminating non-compete clauses in contracts. I am an employed hospitalist physician who does not have a group of patients considered my own, yet I have an extensive non-compete with my hospital that limits me from providing hospitalist work with our competitors within an hours drive. Similarly, other physicians perhaps in private practice are not allowed to leave their groups to work as educators serving uninsured women. The hospitals specifically restrict our employment as a means of reducing wages and any attempts to negotiate work conditions. We have not had a raise in 7 years, which in this inflationary environment represents significant loss of wages. I am not free to seek employment with a more favorable reimbursement scheme simply because the hospital desires to control us. I signed this contract as a newly graduating physician 1. Because I had a favorable view of the hospital which is now diminished 2. Because every healthcare organization had similar or worse non-competes. Healthcare is facing serious challenges coming out of the pandemic. Healthcare organizations must be held accountable through a free work force. Our hospital continues to hire administrators rather than physicians only to make more demands of an already fragile workforce. This problem is pandemic across the nation and needs to be addressed."
Sam	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. Non competes forced the best Mayor my city, Lake Worth Beach ever had to leave town. His wife had one and it changed the future of the life of 40 thousand people for the worse, in a major way."
Alan	"I strongly support the FTC's proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule. Non-compete agreements are almost always inequitable and disadvantageous to employees subject to them. Non-compete agreements harm employees by restraining their ability to use their skills, knowledge, and experience to move up the economic ladder by changing jobs. Companies frequently tout training and experience gained on a job as benefits, while severely limiting the ability for people to use such benefits. Non-competes tend to indenture employees to an organization while preventing those employees from seeking economic prosperity and freedom. Non-compete agreements are wholly un-American and should be banned."
Austin	"These non-compete clauses reduce competition among hospitals and degrade healthcare for American citizens. Furthermore, they place an unfair burden on physicians who have spent ten years in training just to be able to practice medicine. I shouldn't have to uproot my family and leave the state if I find the my cunent job to be untenable."

Deanne	"Regarding Non-compete Clause Rulemaking• Matter No. P201200 I firmly support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete agreements. These agreements are pervasive within the medical community and are often used to intimidate workers from leaving positions, while also pressuring workers to sign on to a position with benefits, over others without benefits, while including a non-compete clause. Often whole areas are left without medical care because of non-compete clauses, since employees can no longer work in their home areas after leaving employment. Large corporations seems to be the worst offenders of forcing non-competes, and they also have the funding to litigate against single employees trying to survive after leaving their employment, or even worse, being terminated from employment due to no fault of the employee. I myself have worked for 2 years under a non-compete after serving my time in the military. It was the only position available in my county at the time I returned home. Over the past two years, the company I started with has been sold twice and every sale has brought on more restrictions and more work. The sole purpose of the non-compete is now intimidating me from leaving my job - which is working, and I am stuck in this position until retirement, unless I want to drive 1 hour to work and then hack. And the surrounding positions all have non-competes as well. It is a travesty. Please find non-compete clauses illegal and as such force companies to rescind the clauses, allowing more competition and more freedom. Thank you."
Michael	"I feel that it is unfair for anyone to allow an employer to refuse the right of an employee to not provide for their family. Especially when they have worked in their profession for a long period of time."
Thomas	"I support the full ban of noncompete employment contacts. I have been employed with my company for 12 yrs in insurance sales. My compensation is 100% commission based and I am compensated with a percentage of the commission I sell. I do not receive leads or business opportunity's from the company and develop my sales from the many years of personally networking much at my own expense. My company has lowered my commission changed my compensation structure several time for their benefit with littler to no recourse for myself. I have been a top producer annually and my non compete empowers my employee and imprisons me from moving to another company that may offer greater benefits, opportunity and support. I do have the choice to move to another company, though the non compete is a deterrent to other employers and is purely leverage to be able to create to keep employees captative."
Caryn	"I am in favor of a ban with a provision stating that employees who RESIGN -- as opposed to being terminated -- cannot contact customers/clients for 6 months. I think this exception should be limited to resignations because otherwise, an employer could hire a great salesperson from another company, and the employee could build up the employer's client or customer base, and then the employer could terminate the employee -- knowing he/she isn't permitted to contact his/own customers for an extended period of time."

Robert	"Getting rid of noncompete clauses will allow physicians to better care for patients, and will enforce more fair hiring practices by hospitals for nurses, doctors, and other healthcare providers. I am fully in favor of eliminating noncompete."
Anne	"This non-compete clause is punitive to American workers and downright in-American in its damage to competition. Please do not approve!"
Sahil	"I am a physician and worked in my community in rural Illinois for three years. I was the only pain physician in that community and was getting patients off of opioids to treat opioid addiction. However, due to a contract dispute with my employer I was not able to continue in that community and had to leave to find a different job. My non compete stated that I can't find work within 50 miles of the hospital for up to two years . I had to move states to find the job I liked . My patients in rural Illinois are still struggling to find a pain physician and lots of them are reverting back to opioids. I am in support of making non compete clause obsolete ."
Daniel	"As a veterinarian , I 100% agree with banning non-compete clauses. As a highly trained and skilled professional, it is outrageous that I have to move to a new place if I decided to leave my job. Corporations should be more worried about talent retention and fair working conditions, instead of being allowed to force people to remain in a job with a fear of legal repercussions if they left for a better offer in the vicinity."
Zoey	"Non competes are harmful and have been very detrimental to our family. As an orthodontist I have paid well over $750,000 for my education and I cannot use it within 15 miles of any of the 3 locations of my former employer which is effectively a 45 mile non compete. It is hard to see any claim that he has over the education and skills I have build over 10 years of education. I had to leave due to horrible working conditions and the culture of high volume and poor quality of work at his offices. I can now only work 1 day a week over an hour away which makes it very difficult for me and family who live in a rural area with not many orthodontic job options. It also is harmful for the public and my former employer is not practicing to the same standard I believe is appropriate, the public no longer has access to high quality orthodontics."
Darius	"Totally agree that this Non-Compete act is only in favor for big corps not for small companies or individuals who want to compete in a fairly way"
Lisa	"Thank you for this very important proposed rule. As a physician , I witness firsthand the immense frustration and burnout experienced by my colleagues, which is often exacerbated by employers holding them hostage. Being a pediatrician in a large urban city, I am aware that if I wanted to switch employers, I would have to uproot my family, sell my home, and even require my spouse to find a new job. Such a situation is unfair and unnecessary, especially in the case of large corporate systems that wield disproportionate bargaining power to restrict our right to work freely."
Dr	"I am an eye doctor that worked for a large group practice for the last 10 years. It was bought by an investment firm that only cares about profit and not treating patients. I was let go for not "producing" enough profit. My original contract had a non compete for neighboring 3 counties for 2 years. I started working for a small practice

	15 miles from my previous employer and they have filled a lawsuit against me. I have not solicited patients. I have a right to make a living and should not be punished for providing hood health care. Non competes decrease patient care and are and unfairly punish honest doctors. There should be at least much more strict limits on non compete clauses."
K	"This impacts me directly. I am currently under a non-compete agreement that is very broad. Extends beyond direct competition of my former employer to include any vendor of, or proposed vendor of my prior employer. I'm blocked from getting a job in an industry for which I have the most expertise. I am a stock holder of less than 1% of my prior employer. I believe there should be a balance of protection of companies intellectual property and a non- compete/non-solicit. I do not think employees should be able to steal company secrets, including customer lists beyond their direct relationships. However, a I think broad non-competes like the one I am under is too prohibitive - keeps me from providing for my family."
Todd	"I work in Pool Repair in Florida. I've been with the same company for over a decade. We are forced to sign a non-compete when the job commenced, and a few years ago, were forced to sign an updated one. It is 5 PAGES of fine print oppressive nonsense. I would like to get my contractor's license and start a small company but am in fear of litigation, as Florida is one of the worst states for enforcement of these contracts. Nothing that our company does is significantly different than other pool repair companies. There are no trade secrets that you can't find on YouTube. I was trained for a few weeks over a decade ago and 90% of what I know I've taught myself. But still, these overreaching ANTI Competition agreements prevent me from taking steps to better my and my family's position. I agree with the FTC that these contracts are Anti Capitalism and Anti American. Please finalize this rule and help the hard-working families of this country pursue happiness."
Terry	"Ending the unfair non-compete clause would be an absolute improvement for employees rights. It is possible to protect both the employees and employers interests without the non-compete clause. It is past time to stop the use of this restrictive practice."
Scott	"I am an HR professional and am speaking for myself, not my company. I strongly believe that rigid non-compete clauses should be illegal and agree with the FTC that they hinder the free market at trade at the expense of the employees. I know many employees who have spent their whole working career in our industry and because the company I work for competes in many different categories, employees who separate, whether voluntary or involuntary, don't think they can get a job that they are qualified to do near the same wage they were making Non-disclosure policies can protect the company from proprietary information getting into competitors hands. Non-compete agreements are way too restrictive and hinder workers from making a living in the field they are experts in."
Samira	"I vote against non compete clause for physicians ."

Julia	"I am a nurse practitioner looking for a new job in central Florida. Many jobs I am currently looking at have 2 year or 40 mile non-compete in their contracts. I would like to purchase a home, but if I ever want to leave one of those employers with a mile clause I would have to drive 40-60 one way to find a new job or move to a new town. It would be wonderful to be able to find a new job in my current small town. Nursing does not contain any proprietary information. Please pass this bill."
CJ	"I agree with eliminating non-competes. I am currently under one. I was a hospital administrator , and my previous company is preventing me from working in the field for 2 YEARS, AND 50 MILES from my last hospital. So I either have to move my family, or switch industries. I ended up switching industries. I can understand a non-compete to keep you from going after clients, key employees, etc. But to prevent you from earning a living and supporting your family is atrocious."
Blake	"Please ban non-competes! They hurt all of us!"
Candis	"Many people are held in lower-paying jobs because of non-compete clauses that they signed without realizing the consequences. This is shoddy behavior on the part of the corporations that are exploiting their workers. It should be prohibited!"
Kameryn	"I am a huge supporter of this new rule. This will allow for healthy competition in the labor market. Employees should be able to develop their skills and switch jobs as needed."
Erika	"It seems absolutely counterintuitive that a company/practice can prevent us from seeking out a better situation for our families, better pay, better benefits, etc. based on geography and catchment areas. If there's an opportunity across the street that would better my wellness, career goals, etc., I should be able to pursue it without a hefty consequence (I.e., a year's salary), especially when we live in an era in which there are health care disparity areas included in those restricted/non compete areas."
Wayne	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Crystal	"We relocated to the beaches area to reduce transportation costs and reside closer to our children's schools that offer no transportation. We rented, uncertain if we'd love the neighborhood. Fell in love with the area. Nearly mid-lease, owner advised he needed to sell. We're hastily crunching numbers; we had another year on our lease to ensure we could not only afford the home but also qualify. We'd anticipated to buy a home but timeline was moved forward! We apply, Crystal needs to make more money to proceed with purchase. Crystal had opportunities and was offered a job tripling her salary satisfying terms of home loan with an agency neighboring our county. Crystal reaches out to employer [at the time] and was completely transparent on reasons to separate employment were for the short & long-term benefit of our family. I'd asked to kindly release me of the 12-month boundary restriction as our children will be uprooted and lose this home. She had no idea what I was speaking of until I pointed it out in her own clause. (Backstory: she'd sued her former firm costing

	11,000 in attorney fees to regain only 4,000; I was fully aware of the venom in this woman and didn't wish to subject my family to her spite if I were to accept employment in my county- hence my need for transparency.) Her counter offer was to extend my restriction an additional 12- months. Mind you, two-thirds of my income at the time were commissions. I declined to empower her unrestrained use of authority. Business is business. END RESULT: 1) We lost the home to another buyer with the inability to settle timely due to this non-compete. 2) We lost our 'retirement investment'. We would have later sold the adjacent lot connected to this home. We were offered no benefits nor 401k thus my strategy to improvise 'retirement'. 3) My husband and I now have a useless hard-inquiry on our credit. In conclusion, departing this firm was our family's greatest blessing yet this clause was more than an unfair method to former employees. Arbitrary, immoral, single sided, unreasonable and unwarranted loss to the family."
Maria	"Get rid of non-competes. It's hurting patients when they can't find the doctor or care they need. It only helps big corporations"
Arielle	"I urge the FTC to include non-profit organization employers in the new proposed rule. Employees of non-profit organizations, including many hospitals impose onerous non-compete restrictions on employees. This can be just as limiting as non-compete restrictions imposed by for profit companies. Doctors are a group of employees particular affected by these onerous contractual restrictions."
BRETT	"I wholeheartedly support this rule, and it would change my life. As a worker with a non-compete clause in an organization that requires a 1-year non- complete in all employment contracts primarily to limit competition with more lucrative opportunities, this directly affects me and all my coworkers and I have had to turn down multiple job offers due to this. By implementing this rule, not only would it open opportunities for me to seek higher salaries elsewhere, it would push my current employer to raise their compensation for all my colleagues."
Sheryl	"Corporations should not have a hold on the work life of it's employee base. It is critical for the well being of workers that they are fairly compensated and not held back with ties to a specific company. Support workers and innovation by ending non-compete agreements."
Lauren	"Non competes should be banned in the field of medicine. Non competes can force a provider into not practicing for that period of time. There are numerous reasons a provider may need to leave a practice and move to a nearby practice. I hope this law goes into effect. It will have positive impact in our field."
Sam	"I strongly support the rule. I am a gastroenterologist and I have previously worked in underserved areas as well as in larger hospitals. The noncompete created an environment where the hospital focus is on attracting new physicians and giving them generous initial offers and well as multiple promises-which are often broken-, and when contract renewal comes the hospital has the upper hand knowing that the physician has the option of either agreeing to whatever they propose or moving out of town, which is not convenient the least to say especially for people with families."

	Removing noncompete clause will shift the hospital priority to retaining their current staff rather than focusing on trapping new physicians into signing with them and then not caring about them once they are hired. It will also help reduce physician burn out which is a lot of times precipitated by the feeling of being "trapped" in a job they don't like or working under conditions they don't desire. Hospitals help physician employees establish their patient base and provide them with CME payments for continued education. However, these potential losses to the hospitals can be mitigated by nonsolicitation clauses and refunds of certain payments if physician leaves within a certain period of time. The solution for those issues should not be trapping the physician and giving them the option of either staying with their current employer or moving into a different city. In cities where there are two or more health systems, this decision will cause increased attention to improving working conditions and physician retention and will lead to reduced physician burnout and improved patient care. If hospitals are expected to compete, they should also be competing for attracting and retaining talent. It should not be free market for hospitals, and surfdom for physicians."
Mason	"I am submitting a comment in favor of the proposed elimination of non-compete clauses. I am a resident physician about to enter the workforce as an independent practitioner and the impact of these rules is immediately visible both for myself and my future patients. For me, this has created unnecessary hurdles in my job search, because I have a geographic area of interest to practice due to personal factors, the most important of which is proximity to family. These non-competes mean that I am beholden to my first employer even if work conditions change to become less favorable because leaving the position would require that I either uproot my family or drive many miles away to work. It is not difficult to see how employers can potentially use this to exploit physicians who care deeply about their family and patients, not wanting to abandon either group due to forcibly having to practice outside the non-compete distance. I think it is wise for society at large, not just those in medical practice, to remove barriers to leaving an employer who in the worst circumstances could be acting unethically. We should not be placing an added burden on employees to choose between doing the right thing (which could include leaving to report illegal or dangerous behavior) and avoiding being forced to leave behind beloved family/friends/clients/patients. Furthermore, non-compete clauses create an unfair competitive market for anyone seeking employment. When negotiating an offer or contract, the candidate will have a finite amount of political capital based on how desirable their skills are in the market, and having to spend some of that good will on reducing the distance or time frame of a non-compete will reduce salaries. I lence, it is in the benefit of the employer to erect unnecessary points of negotiation such as the non-compete because the candidate will not be able to reduce the non-compete while also successfully negotiating a better salary or other specifics of their work environment, hours of preference, etc. In rebuttal, employers may state that without a non-compete clause, employees will simply leave and set up shop across the street. Some employers may even view this as tantamount to stealing but there are a few reasons this does not make sense. For one, contracts could still enforce that stealing patents, existing employees, soliciting existing clients, or other intellectual property relevant to that industry is not permitted. That is totally different from preventing an individual from using their non-unique skillset in close proximity to the former employer. For instance in medicine, guidelines of appropriate care are published for

	anyone to read. Since the law dictates that contracts cannot infringe on the patient-physician relationship, it creates a perverse incentive for employers to prevent physicians that leave from being geographically available to known patients. This creates fragmentation of care, prevents innovation, and raises expenses. Additionally, many of these large employers have numerous brick and mortar locations, or in some industries may service extremely large areas due to the nature of the work (online work, utilities, etc). Thus, to assert that an employee moving outside of an arbitrary non-compete radius will prevent competition in geographic proximity with the parent company does not make sense. On a parallel note, some employers may claim that this rule is unnecessary because non-competes are not enforceable in many jurisdictions. However, without a firm rule in place from the FTC across the board for the entire US, bigger employers who can afford to tie up individual employees in the legal system to adjudicate the non-compete can continue to do so. This causes non-competes to be practically "enforced" in reality because it is an undue financial burden for employees to exercise their rights. Overall, I think the elimination of the non-compete clause or creation of a narrow maximum-allowed non-compete such as 1 mile for 6 months from the primary site of work would be a positive step forward for promoting fair and ethical business practices."
William	"Employers tell you that it is ok to sign the non-compete as they are never enforced. I came to my current employer with twenty five years experience in the industry. No I want to leave they have me hostage as I can not get a job in the field with this non-compete. I am effectively their slave. This should be illegal."
Susanne	"It is time to protect workers by prohibiting non compete contracts so wages can increase and more job opportunities are created"
Robin	"Support! I think this is an excellent initiative. The non-compete rules entirely focus on the best interest of corporations and do not allow fair employment opportunities for workers. Especially in specialized fields, such as healthcare, the non-complete limits an employee from pursuing better opportunities, better pay, and advancement."
Jared	"To whom it may I am an equine veterinarian in Ocala, Florida. Ocala is where I have called home for over 17 years and I have raised my family here. My children are 14, 11 and 9 and my wife is an elementary school teacher. I can to Ocala and have worked for the same company for 10 years. I currently have a non compete that keeps me from starting my own business which has been my lifelong goal. My only options are to move my family out of the place I consider home or travel for a majority of my time and live away from my family. Neither of these options are fair to my family and I consider my family the primary factor in my life. So ultimately I am stuck in my current position which unfortunately weighs on my personal happiness and intimately damages my personal and professional life. I hope that the FTC can put a stop to these unfair practices."
Lindsay	"Non-compete clauses handcuff signers to often times be unable to have a career with skills that they have learned."

Chris	"I have spent my whole life enamored with Search Engine Optimization and Digital Marketing. I even earned my MBA in Marketing, having done several projects in the SEO space with a minor in Entrepreneurship, knowing one day I would start my own business. I joined a small start up upon graduation and helped lead that company from nothing to $1.5M in monthly revenue. After 5 years there it was finally time to start my own venture. It was around that time I received a call from another competing company. They promised me the moon if I joined there team and talked about how well everyone was doing and what they were earning The one caveat? I had to sign a non- compete. After joining it became instantly clear this company was not what they said it was and they had succeeded in simply removing a Director at a major competitor. After reviewing my noncompete, we see that the geographical restrictions are worldwide! The scope of work was practically anything in the digital space related to my expertise. What am I to do? I want to start my own business or at the very least join a company to earn a living but my noncompete prohibits this. I know I can build a company giving the world the best possible service. I know I can provide hundreds of people with wonderful careers and a great culture to work in. I can't do any of this as long as that noncompete stands."
Robert	"Non compete clauses are used to extort medical professionals. Hospitals and large private groups attract physicians with promises that they may or may not keep. They know once a physician settles in to the area, buys a house, kids in school, etc. that moving becomes difficult. These non competes prevent physicians from working elsewhere in the area and leaves them with 2 choices. Either uproot your entire family, or continue to work for an employer who takes advantage of you. Nothing is more un-American than non compete clauses. It has made me second guess continuing to work in healthcare. These non compete clauses must be made illegal. There is no justification for them. It only helps the employer and only hurts the employee."
Brian	"non-compete clauses should be revoked. It is abused by hospitals and corporations to control employees. It should only apply to employees/trainees who learned something. e.g. somebody receives training as a resident for heart transplants. You shouldn't be have non-competes so that individual can't open a heart transplant center next to the place he learned it from. But for individuals now it is used to control nurses, or office managers, or doctors who have already received training at other institutions and should just be done away."
robert	"I am hopeful this rule change passes. Its almost unreal to think about how this rule even came about in the first place. Employers and employees know of the rule and understand if they go to a competitor their current employer may sue them. The employees where I work at also understand the rule will be imposed and enforced because we have seen it first hand. The non-compete rule holds people back in other ways as well. I was speaking with a coworker recently and had mentioned it would be a good idea to get some more experience at our current job and then go look for a new job elsewhere that pays more because rent prices in Florida are insane. That coworker said to me he was willing to do that except he fears being sued if he left, and that wasn't even leaving to a competitor but just in general."

	I understand an employer may see the situation as losing their Intellectual Property when an employee leaves. I can see where that mode of thinking comes from and why a company would want to tie a rope around our neck and ankles to protect what they deem as I.P. but the better methods of retaining people like better pay and better work conditions are a much better option. Most workers are not working on Nuclear fusion and want to take that to a competitor and then stop because of a non-compete. There are other laws to govern those sort of cases and the reason this non-compete stays law is to ensure an employer can bring a case against employees when the damages to I.P. are near to impossible to prove otherwise employers would go to court against an individual for I.P. theft. Employers taking employees to court for non-compete have a ripple effect through the employees because they know that is their future parting gift should they leave. You work and prepare each day differently obviously. I have seen a few cases where the owner of certain IP has been questioned and I'm no lawyer but from what I have seen with my layman eyes suggests employers believe everything is their IP. I am hopeful this is not the situation everywhere or as a whole and I can see how this mindset gets embedded in our heads but the reality may be a little different. If your a pastor at a church there is a good other pastors in time may end up doing and using the same tools and methods just by nature of the job and learning. Unless a company is truly disruptive most processes and methods employed by most companies of like industries become similar over time. An employer can retain people they feel are worth retaining by doing the same things we do for people we care about and want to keep. Small sacrifices by all involved at companies can return large gains like putting to rest the worry of IP theft. I obviously prefer a world where the people who "do" can do what they do for whoever is willing to afford them the best life, but we do live in a country that hasn't raised minimum wage since 1970 I believe I read??? that's crazy! Is also a crazy world where you have to go to work with the thought of not doing better for yourself for fear of retribution. This non-compete rule is a rope around Americans best, please get rid of this."
Keenan	"My uncle [redacted] was one of the nations top computer programmers in the early 1980s. After a dispute with his boss he was told "if you don't work for me....you don't work anywhere" for most of my childhood in NY I watched him suffer. He couldn't get a job of any kind. No matter how or where he applied. In the early two thousands... It happened to me at avis rent a car. Once budget took over I was on the wrong side of management. They found creative ways to get rid of all the avis employees and when I threatened legal action I was blackballed by them. It took nearly a decade to recover and a federal job at NASA for that to finally end. The things companies get away with through legal loops are beyond conscience... Absolutely disgustingly criminal... Yet legal. The cost to our nation and society in general is beyond calculation. It is long overdue to be addressed. This is only a small step, but it IS a step in the right direction."
David	"I am very very excited to see this new rule put in place. It has impacted me my entire career and has prevented me from pursuing my career in the past that I intended. I was forced to not accept positions of higher pay in higher status, as a part of my

	career advancing strategy which impacted me and my family greatly. And what is sad is I even attempted to do the right thing and notify my employer where I was going in the position I was accepting, and that this new employer was more than willing to put in writing that I would not contact certain customers or clients over the first year in my current employer, at the time rejected this effort by myself and my new employer, and thus I had to turn down the position. And what is sad is I even attempted to do the right thing and notify my employer where I was going in the position I was accepting, and that this new employer was more than willing to put in writing that I would not contact certain customers or clients over the first year in my current employer, at the time rejected this effort by myself and my new employer, and thus I had to turn down the position. Most non-competes I Donely don't allow the hiring of the employee to work in the same industry, profession, etc. but it also prevents a former employee from doing contractual work not as a direct employee. He prevents contractual work or consulting as well. In the same industry, they are leaving as part of the noncompete and non-disclosure. This new rule should include those factors as well."
Dana	"I am a general OBGYN Physician; there is NOTHING proprietary or secret about my job or my field of medicine AT ALL. Almost all of my colleagues and I have non-compete clauses forced upon us by employers who use them as nothing more than a tool to prevent us from moving to another opportunity (thus suppressing our freedom and wages). To allow this practice to continue is absolute abomination and as un-American as you can get. If you have the power to stop it, PLEASE do so!!!! I beg you. Every single one of us in the healthcare field risked our lives for this country over the past 3 years, please help us!"
David	"Non competes should be outlawed. They hurt workers. They are inherently not fair."
Richard	"This is a good move for the United States. Frequently smaller US companies are being acquired by larger conglomerates and foreign entities. The primary owners walk away with significant payouts; however, many of these smaller companies have key employees under strict noncompete agreements. Very often, these noncompete agreements are transferable. The employee may even have a small stake in the company as with smaller businesses key employee retention is critical. When the company is sold, the employee is often obligated to sell their shares (if they have any) to the acquiring entity. The payouts for the small shareholder is not enough to retire, but the employee remains with the company with the best of intentions of continuing their employment on a long term basis. However the acquiring company may have other ideas. If is proven that one of their "efficiency" strategies is to remove highly paid employees and replace them with mid level employees. This can work for the company if they are in the mode of holding tight to their current products and not in the mode of developing new products or markets. Often once a company hits a certain level it can grow on its own, these conglomerates know this and therefore increase profits by cutting employees and combining resources with their other holdings. This is a fact of life and all well and good with the exception that the employees who have built their careers, elevated their incomes and have a great deal of value in the market place are restricted by time and geography. Often incomes when the employee has to leave their specialty can drop as much as 75%. In addition, companies that would normally hire these talented individuals to enhance

	their own product lines without any hesitation; cannot hire because of the noncompete agreements. It is not fair to the individual who has built their career in a specialized industry to have to take a massive loss of income due to a noncompete. Often this can be a "career killer" for the folks who are caught in this trap, as once the time has gone by that fulfills the noncompete, technology may have passed them by or their value has dropped because companies are hesitant to hire someone who has "sat on the bench" for a number of years. As you can probably already determine, this has happened to me personally, which is why I can discuss this with some level of accuracy and detail. In fact, this has happened to me twice in my career, so I can verify and demonstrate that this is a real thing. Another factor regarding non compete agreements is the fact that the company basically holds the employee hostage. In that, let's say an employee decides they want to make a change, perhaps due to wanting or needing to relocate to take care of a family member, or advance their career. Perhaps they find a position that they are qualified for that allows their income to increase significantly. The noncompete in many cases prohibits the individual from being able to seek any other opportunities and without any recourse. In the industry this is referred to as "golden handcuffs" and is strategically used to capture employees and then use their talent at a reduced rate for extended periods of time. This does not work for every position, but highly technical positions are the nonnal target for this strategy. If an employee is under a noncompete and the company ends the employment, then the company should be obligated to compensate the employee for the duration of the noncompete. If the employee starts a new career then the past employer should be obligated to compensate the employee for the difference in income that the employee experiences for the duration of the noncompete. That way at the end of the noncompete the employee can decide whether to continue the new career or go back into the area of their expertise. Although this would be a step in the right direction the losses to the employee due to the loss of time within their specialized industry might not be fully recoverable. With the realization by our country's leadership of the unfairness and damages done to those who have been effected by this. Please consider making it retroactive to those who have been damaged by companies who obviously knew what they were doing by tagging their employees with this act. And then there is the basic rights of being an American, the home of the "free": however, we allow businesses to limit, actually even prohibit capitalism and entrepreneurship. Just think how backwards this country would be, if the folks who were the pioneers of an industry were prohibited by not branching out on their own. Just think, if you study the history, if the noncompete had existed may decades ago, we might only have one automobile manufacturer in the US, one light bulb and their are so many other examples. I low much further would we be if individuals were not so restricted today? I believe we have set back progress by decades."
Leah	"Physicians are the value creators in hospital systems. They are the ones that bring in the knowledge, the skills, and the expertise. Physicians also have a fudiciary responsibility to their patients so noncompetes puts patients at risk, because it makes them unable to uphold that responsibility. Patients should be able to have full continuity of care and see their doctor, wherever they work in order to prevent death and permanent disability, and improve their long- term outcomes. The practice of including non-competes in any employment contracts for physicians is not only anticompetitive, but it's dangerous for patients, and it needs to be put to an end. I am in Emergency Physician and I believe this is a key factor that has led to worsening physician access, increase costs, and worsening patient outcomes across the United States."

Leah	" Physicians took an oath to put patients first, they also have a fiduciary responsibility to their patients. The corporate practice of medicine is illegal in most states. Noncompete agreements are in direct conflict with the ethical practice of Medicine because they put Physician's at risk of being strong, armed into practicing unethical medicine, and into putting their employers over their patients. Physician should have a right to work and move freely just like every other person. Physicians are the value creators. There's no intellectual property or business value that is created by health system employers -they bring patients and doctors together, they are compensated, handsomely for that service, and they should have no further influence or jurisdiction over the practice of medicine."
Sarah	"I'm a Nurse Practitioner forced to relocate (multiple times) in order to be in compliance with companies' non competition clauses in my contracts. These outrageous clauses have limited my ability to work, and cost me thousands in moving expenses and licensing fees. As though it isn't hard enough with the AMA tying my hands in practice, taking any job with company with contractual non competition clauses basically chips away at my right to practice at all. Forget about independent practice. And patients have zero opportunity to choose me as their provider if I leave because I'll be too far away from them. It's truly unacceptable."
Karen	"I worked for a company where I had a non compete. After I left this company and did not even go into the same field. I was harassed. Law suits threatened. We should have the right to work wherever we want."
Matthew	"Dear Commissioners: I 100% support the proposal to ban non-competes. Please categorically ban non-competes: I support the option to categorically "bright-line" ban non-competes. That option is needed to fully realize the benefits of getting rid of non-competes, as workers and companies need to be completely certain of the situation when making decisions to accept a job, or offer a job to a worker. The amorphous, fact-specific tests currently used in many states are very damaging, because workers do not know if they can accept a competing job, and competing employers do not know if they can offer the job to a candidate subject to a non-compete with the prior employer. Non-competes Especially Harmful to Specialized High-Tech Workers, Cause Specialized Labor Shortage That Harms Companies I believe that non-competes harm both workers, and indirectly companies. I believe that non-competes are especially harmful in any field where workers have invested substantial amounts of time and money into their training, especially in highly specialized technical fields, like specialties of electrical engineering or computers science. Imagine spending 5-7 years getting trained, and to be able to only work for one employer afterwards. With non-competes, if that employer does not work out, the employee can't use that training elsewhere. Non-competes thus may discourage college students from getting the specialized training and advanced degrees needed for many current high-tech jobs. It is frequently stated that the tech workforce has a talent base "a mile wide and an inch deep." This situation - an abundance of people with broad, shallow skillsets and a shortage of highly specialized workers - may be exacerbated by the use of non- competes in 47 states. An environment where many employers use non-competes may constitute a "tragedy of the anti-commons" where each employer uses a non-compete because they believe it directly benefits them, but each employer is also indirectly harmed by the industry-wide use of the non-competes by other employers. The solution is a categorical ban on non-competes. The fact that California continues to have a huge technology industry - despite high costs of living - may be due to their not enforcing non-competes. If a specialized high-tech worker - e.g. a phd in electrical engineering - is in a situation that does not work out, he or she can leave and stay in the same specialty. In 47 other states, the employee may have to stay in a sub-optimal situation or find something else to do, thus exacerbating a shortage of specialized labor. Please categorically ban non- competes. Thank you."

Carmen	"I agree wholeheartedly with passing this new law/rule. As a primary care provider I was driven out of the town I live in due to a non compete agreement when my contract ended with my employer and I did not renew it. As a results hundreds of my patients were left without a primary care physician. Non-competes need to be eliminated immediately. thanks"
Amanda	"As a family physician , I wholeheartedly support the ban on non-compete clauses. The clauses inhibit competition and prevent doctors from practicing in many areas. This is contributing to the crisis of being unable to find a primary care physician in many areas or if they do then they wait months to be seen. This proposed ban will help free workers from restrictive clauses and enable workers to remain in the communities they love!! Competition should be cherished not banned."
Brenda	"This is so unfair to workers!"
Vanessa	"I fully support this rule. As a physician , non-compete clauses are common and ultimately limit the ability to practice and advocate for patients and improvements for fear that loss of their position could uproot their lives. As over half of physicians are now employed physicians, our ability to negotiate for improvements in working conditions or in patient safety is limited and these large corporations with multiple sites use their size to expand non compete ranges Banning non competes gives physicians the ability to move freely, which in turn improves physician power to improve conditions in hospitals and in patient safety without fear. This is a win for both physicians and patients."
C	" Physicians hold no trade secrets and practice independently. Non competes exist only to limit physician to patient relationships outside of a branded healthcare entity. It exists to stop negotiating and stifle benefits and competition. At the end of the day, it hurts patients who have established a safe relationship with a physician they trust."
M	"The non compete agreement is a weapon against physician to make them stay at a job they might not like or enjoy because it will be hard to find another. It is a clause that is created to three the employees to stay at their job with no hope of finding something comparable or better within a large area. It's so unfair."

Marinella	"Right now, noncompete agreements are being unethically used across the country to prevent workers from quitting their jobs for a better offer. Competition drives markets -- and when noncompetes eliminate competition in the labor market, employers don't have an incentive to give their workers better pay, working conditions, or benefits. I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements as this would will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. Thank you for your time and consideration."
John	"Please pass this regulation"
Mark	"As an individual that has been subject to a few non-compete agreements as conditions of employment - I very much welcome this regulation."
Jennifer	"Non-compete clauses prevent people from obtaining work without a major shift in their lives - often necessitating moving very far distances in order to comply. This uproots families, especially children who are in school. They are unfair and should be abolished."
Avi	"My life has been ruined because of forced Non-compete. I have been working 15 years in my trade, have built long lasting relationships over those years, and have always been a source of knowledge for my long term client lists. I began my current role roughly three years ago and was forced to sign a non-compete or not get paid. I have wanted to leave my current role for over a year due to my CEO/Founders discriminatory comments, treatment, and overall bad nature of conduct. However, the consistent threats of being sued if I leave to a competitor, or work with clients that I BROUGHT to this current position based on 10+ years of relationship building has left me with no choice but to stay put. I am underpaid for my role, have had my performance based commissions cut in half, and have had none of the promises made to me when I came here kept. In any other situation, the employee would have left quite some time ago. However, I am not in a financial position to fight a 6 figure legal battle with a spiteful egomaniac. If I were to start over at a new company, I would have to take 12 months away from contacting my friends and clients which would inhibit me from gaining a position at another company. Again, these are relationships I built well before I ever started at my current role. Overall, I never thought my life would be so extremely tormented by this little paragraph I was forced to sign. Please, reverse these actions, let people work where they choose, we have a right to our freedom and our time we've put in our trade."
Oral	"I agree with banning this. I had a contract which I fulfilled but afterwards I still was unable to work in the area. This is unfair."
Pascal	"I do agree, non compete should be banned, it limits our ability to change jobs for better wages and conditions"
Mahendran	"Non compete clause are one sided and restrictive to physicians and deprives of the clinical workforce in a community . It should be banned ."

Jasmin	"Our family was torn apart for 3 years thanks to a devastating non compete my husband had to follow after leaving a practice. For 3 years he works 3 hours away from home, only coming home on days off. Left me raising kids alone while working full time. This is not humane."
Marcel	"I work in Aviation as a insurance producer. I too have a non-compete agreement and I also work in unfair conditions. I do not get raises, bonuses are non-negotiable, and my non-compete has cemented me to the company. And I have a $1.5 million book of business, generating over $100,000 for me last year. Keep note I've been with the company for two short years. Coming to reality in this moment soon enough. Along with no reward for performance, I've increased my companys portfolio by over 10% in less than 24 months. Its been in business for 42 years. And my badgering boss still complains about making phone calls. Biting the hand that feeds the business itself. I'm getting feasted on by the baby huey of all heirs in a family business. Almost a nightmare from Horrible Bosses with that Kevin Spacey guy in it. The company isn't even looking to grow as it stands, preventing me from any type of growth within itself. I'm a producer working for two owners. I have to sell more to make more. I get fired for some odd reason tomorrow, my $100K per year I just did in two miraculous years, is gone. Unless the next aviation broker you work for is Assured Partners or Acrissure. I'm sure they'd pay those court bills until my incumbent folds due to continuances. Thais of course once I get sued for leaving the company and "pirating" their business that I rightfully earned. And done. Charges do apply if you want more sensitive information about the aviation insurance industry. One take away on this matter. I don't even get paid on time. I don't get my wages paid on time. Even when they say they will pay, they don't pay. But they pay, just whenever they feel like it."
Chris	"This has to be banned, it's limiting where new physicians can practice which restricts access to healthcare for the general population"
David	"I am in favor of the FTC rule to ban non-compete contracts. Especially in healthcare. It negatively impacts patients and medical professionals alike. Physicians, nurse practitioners, and Physicians Assistants are forced to move often 60mi1es or more upending their families and forcing patients to lose trusted relationships in order for hospitals and practices to make more money. These workers do not have trade secrets. It's medicine. A non-solicitation should be more than adequate. Impose a Smile cap so it's not a hardship if patients want to maintain their relationship and clinicians can avoid having to uproot then families and move. Competition is a cornerstone of capitalism to drive innovation and service. Let companies retain employees by being an employer of choice. Why would they be afraid of losing patients if they were good healthcare clinics? The AHA and special interest lobbies are sure to be large and vocal to retain their protected status, but non- competes hurt us all and is against the public good."
Dr.	"I am a physician that is bound by a non-compete clause in my employment contract. If I were to leave my position, I would have to uproot my family and move to another area to find work. While non-compete clauses in physician contracts are not new, they are often used to limit the mobility of physicians to leave an abusive work

	situation. If a physician chooses to leave employment, they are often precluded from practicing within 10 miles of any clinic or hospital of their employer. The time limit of the non-compete is usually 2 years in duration. These clauses should be revoked permanently. Non-compete clauses exist entirely for the benefit of the employer and the detriment of the employee."
Michele	"I am an OB/GYN in a busy metropolitan area. A non compete in my contract will essentially prevent me from providing patient care to a very underserved population even if my current practice closes. This is an unacceptable form of abuse of the physician who only wants to care for our patients. Patients should be provided the right to follow their doctor to another practice should that doctor choose to leave. Additionally, practices should have work environments and compensation such that physicians do not desire to leave. Non Competes hurt patient care plain and simple, they should be deemed unlawful immediately"
Richard	"During my career, I was required to sign non-compete agreements with several companies in order to be employed by them. There was no ability to modify any of the terms of those agreements, and in my case, they prohibited me from working in my field for a period of one to two years, regardless of whether I resigned, or was laid off, or left the company for any other reason. I was very fortunate that in one case where I was laid off during a change of control at a company, the company released me from my non-compete agreement - otherwise I would have been in a pretty bad financial situation, since I would not have been able to work for any other company in that business!"
Greg	"Working in healthcare this definitely hampers my ability to seek the best location for my financial and mental wellbeing. I support removing it preventing non compete actions."
Brandon	"Great idea!"
Ken	"I'm so glad this is finally happening! I work in real estate in Orlando. For the last 20 years, I've worked in timeshare. I own a timeshare and love it, but that's for another day. The industry standard is to have everyone from bottom to top sign non-competes. Here are the issues: 1) if you quit or are fired, I have to move out of the state to find new employment. It's a 100 mile rule, but if I work at Wyndham no other company will hire me to I get CLEARENCE from Wyndham to work at the new company because they don't want to disrupt the non-compete system. Timeshares are only sold in limited vacation locations, so if I can't move companies locally, then I have to move to a different state. 2) if I leave, the non-compete says I have to pay money back. So, I lose my future commissions (my pay is usually 30-45 days behind with revision laws) but they have tried to bill me for cancelations from clients who cancel contracts from years ago. 3) the Industry gets a bad name because non compete doesn't allow good, non-lying sales people to move from bad companies or corrupt management. We can't hire good local people without them losing their livelihoods for 6 months to a year. I like helping people and don't lie to them, but I've worked with management who doesn't support that and I can't change the culture but I also can't leave. It creates a box that good workers are stuck in. This is not just

	Florida, it's everywhere. PLEASE PLEASE PLEASE get rid of non-compete for workers! It helps the workers AND the consumers!"
William	"Non-compete clause give too much leverage to the employer, and don't prevent companies from replacing employees with either lower paid graduates or h1b workers."
Maritza	"To whom it may concern. Not only do non compete contracts inhibit our ability to make more money but it often forces us to stay in jobs where we are miserable. It is unfair and one sided power the employers use to deter other competitors from offering more lucrative and rewarding positions as, even if, like myself, you live in a right to work state, it takes months and thousands of dollars to go to court to fight for your right to make a living at your chosen profession. PLEASE PUT AN END TO THIS"
Rohan	"I am in favor of the FTC rule to do away with non- compete clauses. I am an employee surgeon in a mid sized town with only 2 hospitals. Under the current non-compete rules I would have to potentially leave town if I chose to leave my current employer and work for the other hospital."
Evan	"Here is a very condensed version of my true non-compete agreement story. that has caused me or the past 17 years, in the prime of my life and career to be either in corporate bondage (over 10 years) or facing millions of dollars in legal fees (over 6 years and ongoing) in litigation: - In 2005, I founded my own attorney recruiting company, after working as an associate at a top Wall St law firm for a few years and already an experienced and successful attorney recruiter for over 2 years. - In 2006, a former colleague (in a recruiting company) who started in the industry only several months before I did convinced me to join his firm on a no- strings attached basis, with no non-compete agreement, and promised to provide me a bunch of resources I could use to build a database and complex job board website I had been planning to build on my own. We agreed that either of us could end this employer / employee relationship at any time, for any reason. Without this assurance, I never would have agreed to join his company. - 8 months later, after I was provided none of the promised resources, but after I made several placements and built a new Asia practice from the ground up, I was forced to sign a draconian non-compete agreement or else I would lose all the commissions I had generated from these new Asia placements AND also would lose all the commissions I had in the pipeline for 2007 placements (this was well over $500,000). My employer knew that I was in a difficult financial position (I had worked pro bono on a litigation for 2 years prior, my family lost our home in Hurricane Katrina. and other issues well known to my employer). - For 10 years after this unfortunate event, I stayed at this company, under constant vocalized threat of being defamed to clients, sued and bankrupted with legal fees, if I ever left the company. - I was NEVER paid the commission 65% I was promised for any of hundreds of placements. There was nothing I could do to protest, because if I complained, I could be fired, have all my commissions pending and in pipeline stolen from me, and sued with no resources to litigate many years. - I was never trained (another promise of the forced upon non-compete agreement), which was comical to think about since I taught my employer how to recruit successfully. - I

	was never reimbursed for most of my business expenses and was forced to pay for most of my employer's Asia operation business expenses for 10 years. - I sourced all my own clients. -18 months before finally leaving this abusive employer, I was transferred to Hong Kong (from Miami), but the promised and legally required I tong Kong work visa application was cancelled without my knowledge. I was told that I had to remain in Hong Kong and work illegally, or else be fired. have all my pending and in pipeline commissions stolen from me, and of course be sued under the 2006 Florida non-compete agreement. -I finally left the company in December 2016 after being advised by counsel that I could be arrested if I remained living and working in I long Kong without a work visa. -In March 2017,1 was sued by my former employer. He did not make any attempt to serve me however until April 2018, but for those 13 months prior he "served" his lawsuit against me to most of my key clients. When he finally served me, he voluntarily dismissed the nonsensical fraud claim against me and my partners. -After 6 years and well over S2 million in legal fees (that we literally raised on month to month basis, in amazing herculean effort for a start up recruiting company), we went to trial in December 2022 and unfortunately lost an a judgment for millions was entered against me. -The Court ruled that every time my employer paid me a much smaller commission than I was promised in the 2006 non-compete agreement, I was agreeing to a new contract basically with lower commission %s by my not resigning from the company immediately. -Of course, this part of the Court's ruling would imply that when I was told I would get lesser commission than promised, I had to leave the company and not have any even social contact for ONE YEAR with anyone at any law firm in the world that my employer recruiting firm had ever been in contact with for my 11 years there. -Yes, that draconian term was included in the non-compete agreement I was forced to sign. -The Court ruled that it was irrelevant that my employer transferred me to Hong Kong and cancelled my work visa and was forcing me to work illegally in [long Kong. -I was not allowed a jury, even though when I was sued a jury was "demanded." -All of my many material witnesses, except one, were excluded from trial only one business day before trial began. -Many other irregularities in judgment and discovery process too numerous to fit in 5000 words. - We are appealing. "
R	"Doctors are being subject to corporate coercion by health systems owning doctors and imposing non competes."
Sergey	"I am a physician, and noncompete clauses are rampant in our profession, especially with the increase in organization employed physicians over the last two decades. Non-competes generally harm the ability of physicians to respond to changes in patient care needs across the country and unfairly burden physicians from addressing changes in care needed within their own community. From a patient standpoint, noncompete clauses beholden patients to a specific administration via the fact that administrators make decisions about clinical care and resources allotted to their employed physicians. These allocations are first and foremost in the interest of the medical systems rather than in the interest of changing standards of patient care. Lastly, physicians have spent more than two decades in school, and in most cases have devoted significant financial resources to attain their degrees. Noncompete clauses reduce our ability to maximize their income potential, settle our educational liabilities, and build a sufficiently robust retirement plan in the setting of a markedly shortened career created by the long educational requirements of entering the profession."

Madelyn	"For physicians trying to care for the sick and being pressured by hospitals to see more patients irrespective of the quality decline of this factory process, the best bargaining we have is the freedom to work in a competitive market locally. With the non compete clauses removed health care will improve as the market will drive satisfaction to a higher and higher level. Please.. this is a win win. And this is America. We should have the freedom to work unincumbered"
Arun	"I believe there should be no non-compete clause"
mina	"I've personally been impacted by non-compete clauses. I worked for a company named "Postcardmania" that made me sign an NDA (I felt that there would be retaliation since I work in a right-to-work state) and essentially that prevented me from working at another marketing company for 2 years post employment. I've been in marketing fir years prior to Postcardmania and since I signed this non-compete, it has forced me to switch industries and no longer work a position that I'm highly educated on."
Priya	"Noncompete clause is not fair at all , especially when doctors are in shortage , it affects patient care"
Kamaljit	"Highly support."
Angela	"Bring in the construction industry as sales we are forced to sign NC but simply fact I came to this company with my knowledge an training prior but once I accepted the new position with them I was forced into a NC before I could get a deserved raise . NC are out of control an it no more then paper slavery . It hurt's employees from moving up an providing for their families an companies know they gave you trapped . If you are not the CEO, CFO etc they should not be able to stop a person from trying to better themselves"
Susan	"Corporations and businesses should not be able to dictate and control people's lives and livelihoods."
rob	"I am the victim of a non compete. I fully support the removing non competes and making the illegal. These huge companies give pay decreases during the great recession and won't allow you to move to another company due to the non compete."
Eric	"Hello, I would be very happy if the non-compete was eliminated As a person that worked for a company for 28 years, it was very unfortunate that upon being tired did I realize that I could not go get a job to support my family in the same industry because of a non-compete. To me, I believe that the only way a non-compete would be appropriate is if the employer paid for a type of license/school and then it should only be valid for a set time period like 2-3 years depending on the amount paid. I hope non-competes are removed from society."

Jason	"Please ban non competes because they are plaguing our industry of orthotics and prosthetics and make it very challenging to work even when terminated unwillingly from an employer. It's absurd that this is allowed to happen 1, in some instances there's absolutely no compassion for human rights and the right of people to work"
Brittany	"In the setting of unprecedented moral injury and burnout, it would bring so many physicians joy to see the end of non-compete rules."
Raymond	"Employees are not owned persons. Non-compete terms of employment are effectively ways for an employer to own a person's livelihood. Alternatives ways to reward employees for loyalty and respect of intellectual capabilities can be easily offered in long term bonuses, retention deferred salary and a myriad of other incentives. Non-competes should have been disallowed as part of the 13th Amendment."
Thomas	"Please do this. I have been trapped inside crazy non compete clauses before and threatened to be sued by companies that weren't paying me what they owed me. I am in the door to door sales industries and employers use these clauses to threaten and deprive individuals of their constitutional rights. Please move forward with a complete ban on non competes."
A	"I support the proposed ban of non-competes for physicians and other medical professionals alike. These non-compete regulations hurt the free market, medical professionals, and support monopolies. As a new physician with $400,000 in medical school debt, non-competes limit my ability to pay off my student loans. It is better for our government, our societies, and our future that noncompete to be banned. Thank you for your consideration and understanding."
Rohan	"Please ensure this rule banning noncompete clauses also applies to physicians and other healthcare workers. Physician salaries are currently kept artificially low by predatory and unreasonable noncompetes which are directly contradictory to the concept of a truly free market."
Robert	"Non-compete clauses should be made illegal, especially in medicine/health care. It is currently nearly impossible for patients to find a consistent physician to care for them. Employers significantly exacerbate this problem by forcing physicians to move away from the area each time they need to change jobs. Allowing a physician to stay in the area after changing jobs would allow patients to continue to receive the vital care that they need. Please eliminate non- compete clauses."
Bridget	"I am commenting on the rule to ban noncompete clauses. I believe they should be banned. It is an unfair business practice. Workers will suffer, and be out of work when noncompetes are enforced. Trade people who have been in the same industry their entire lives can be out of work and unable to re enter the work force for a certain amount of time due to these clauses. I absolutely love my profession and have worked so hard to get here, and a noncompete clause can put me out of business for up to 2 years. 2 years not earning income or doing the thing that I love to do. I'm passionate about my career and it is unfair to not allow me to work in my field due to a noncompete. I work for a small business that has two locations in two small cities right next to each other, and if I decide to leave or get fired, I cannot work in either city for 2 years. My only choices would be to not work for 2 years and collect unemployment and wait until I can re-enter my field, or move to a different city. These are two absolutely unfair extremes. Our country needs people to be working, and banning the noncompete clause will give people opportunities to work."

Samuel	"I am a doctor who has been working for 10 years, the hospital that I work for has been dramatically arbitrarily reducing my salary but I cannot look for a better paying job due to this abusive non compete law. This is an abusive law that needs to end."
Patrick	"As a physician , I whole heartedly support the proposed rule from a personal as well as patient care perspective!"
Jeffrey	"As a physician , noncompete clauses have had a negative impact on my family as we have had to relocate for a new job. Noncompete clauses are contracts that prohibit employees from working for a competing employer for a certain period of time after leaving their current job. This means that physicians who have signed a noncompete clause may be limited in their ability to practice medicine in their field, as they may not be able to work for certain hospitals or healthcare providers within a specified geographic region. In many cases, this can force physicians to move to a new city or state in order to find work. Relocating for anew job can be a major disruption to a family's life. It can be difficult to uproot children from their schools, leave behind friends and family, and adjust to a new city or state. Additionally, moving expenses can be significant, and finding a new home in a competitive housing market can be a challenge. For physicians, relocating can also mean giving up seniority, patient relationships, and a familiar work environment, which can be stressful and disruptive to their professional lives. All of these factors can have a negative impact on a physician's family and quality of life, and can make it difficult to maintain a healthy work-life balance."
Nancy	"Noncompete agreements give all the power the corporate interests, especially corporate medicine. If a doctor leaves a practice, the patients should be able to choose where they will be seen. Patients don't "belong" to anyone. Please vote to eliminate noncompete clauses in doctor's contracts."
Brandon	"This directive is long overdue. Non-competes are exploited to indenture employees and limit competition for labor. For doctors in particular this impacts patient care and continuity. It is unfair and harmful to the wellbeing and commercial interests of the public. It also unfairly impacts those employees who are not able to work remotely or in smaller communities. They are forced to work at jobs they do not like for wages less than they would otherwise earn. It empowers larger corporations to take advantage of individuals. I own a small dermatology practice, in a small city, and would benefit the most from keeping the status quo, but I am strongly against it."
Christopher	"In the IT industry , businesses already skirt a grey line when it comes to overtime and job categorization. Adding enforceable non-competes to a job that is not sales related restricts a workers options and should be unlawful."

"I am a practicing physician who started my career in 1993. At that time it was stated clearly in AMA ethics policy that non compete clauses were considered unethical. The logic is rather obvious. Firstly, physicians are licensed, highly specified professionals and not a patented or proprietary business model. Secondly, most communities lack sufficient supply of physicians who serve a critical public good. Business employment contracts should not be allowed to impede the communities access to a licensed physician who would wish to remain available to the community. Hospitals are tightly limited (by regulatory intent) and in our community's case, are an actual monopoly. They can decline privileges to physicians which markedly impedes the doctor's opportunity to serve in the community. In 1993, I pointed this out to my first employer (private practice partnership) during negotiations and they agreed that they would have their lawyer pull the noncompete clause. They too agreed it wasn't ethical. Over the years I have served as a Florida Medical Association Delegate and the topic of seeking redress and/or address the abusive positions particularly hospital entities arc using with non-compete contract language has been repeatedly proposed. Physicians clearly reported feeling trapped with no recourse should they want to consider remaining in the community but not in the present contract. The non-compete language would have enforcement positions even when the employee served their contract time term. Employed physicians have requested elimination of these tactics in contracting but so far this hasn't been accomplished. In our Lee County of Florida, we have a large hospital monopoly (they have 95% of all lxxis in the county) which has morphed into a major employer of physicians over the past 15 years. The hospital system use non compete clauses in doctor employment. They tell physician prospects "take it or leave it, there is no negotiation with these clauses. We must treat all contracted employees the same" (how convenient). They use geography boundaries and buy out clauses to deter competition of physician employment. In my particular experience I was forced to pay a buy-out payment equal to 10% of a Hospital- employed physician's last year earned salary in order for the hospital to release him from their no-compete clause. The clause existed to stop any hospitalist business entity from entering our market which is specifically the hospitals intent. The physician had completed his contract term (2 years) and was going to outpatient practice whilst maintaining his hospital privileges in order to be of maximum service to his/our patients. We are not a hospitalist business. What is particular wrong in this instance is the hospital administration enforced this clause DESPITE the employed physician completing his contract and simply wishing to return to a private outpatient medical office with a partnership opportunity. I am sure we have legal standing to dispute this particular case but the legal costs and time required are clearly a successful deterrent. The hospital administrations abuse of this clause demonstrates that this is likely "standard practice" business behavior by the hospital industry. The hospital industry in my estimation is one of the most powerful lobbies that our federal and state governments have to deal with. I favor eliminating noncompete language from employee contracts. Employees (my direct concern being professional physicians) do not pose a business threat to hospitals or a formed business with rare exception. Further, the concerns of limiting use of proprietary business practices can be mitigated by special contract arrangements including buy-outs or a license/materials contract should such a concern truly exist."

Melissa	"I support the elimination of the Non-Compete Claus enacted by employers. My husband has worked for the same company for 24 years. Over the years the company has become a hostile work environment, overbearing discrimination, and on many occasions witnessed or experienced sexual harassment. Through the years he has made this company a lot of money and was paid by commission. Due to his hard work and dedicated work ethic he made decent money as well. As he worked harder than most in the company, he did not receive raises like everyone else did. He finally had enough and resigned. Unfortunately the skill that he mastered in the last 24 years is unable to be used because of the "Non-Compete" that the employer made him sign. He is unable to better himself by starting his own business, or work for another company in the same field due to this. This same company took a single mother with 2 kids to court because she violated the Non-Compete by switching to the competition. The other company was willing to pay her more, which in turn made it easier to support her kids. Luckily the courts ruled in her favor. Eliminating the "Non-Compete Claus" can't come soon enough."
Robert	" I vote for eliminating the non compete agreement."
Calvin	"Many people are subjected to non-compete clauses (also known as restrictive covenants) when it comes to employment. Especially those who identify as professionals. As a physician , I have been subjected to being coerced into signing employment contracts with non-compete clauses without the ability to negotiate. This not only restricts physicians in their ability to practice, especially if they have a family in which their spouse also has a career, forcing many physicians to uproot their families to other areas due to non-compete clauses, but also prevents others from bringing their abilities to communities to practice medicine where it is needed. This is detrimental from a public health perspective, but also detrimental to many families I am sure other professions are also subject to the restrictions of non-compete clauses and also cause the same disruptions when it comes to their careers and families. Many professional physician societies have long called for the end of non-compete clauses, well before the FTC has proposed this rule. As a physician who has spent many years training, I support any rule which would effectively ban the ability of any employer to utilize non-competes, or restrictive covenants, to limit their current, former, or potential employees as they only serve the business and limit healthcare delivery to people and have shown to be extremely disruptive to people and their families."
Sunil	"Non compete for physicians can be very restrictive, anti trust and sometimes almost imprisons the physicians who can be forced to sometimes work at a hospital which is almost holding them hostage and the physician has to stay inspire of hostile environments due to family and other personal issues due to lack of choice. This has led to in many cases almost abuse of many physicians."
Varinder	"Non-compete clause only helps corporations. It promotes slavery. We need to remove the last root of slavery. Non-compete clause also hurts patients. I have seen over the years that many physicians were forced to move out and therefore have to give up their long established patients. Patients can suffer in the process of a finding a new doctor, transitioning of care, establishing trust which can take years. It creates a big gap in patient care and poor outcomes. Non compete can never be justified if you think of patients."

John	"Couldn't support this more. I have been restricted unfairly by a rouge company stating that no employee can work in the industry (finance) in any state which they have a business relationship. Theoretically, this definition could mean any state in which they have a client which is just about every state of the nation."
J	"I strongly support the FTC's efforts on banning non-compete clauses. I am a young physician practicing in Florida. I work for a physician group that was bought out by a large equity firm several years ago. Do not be misled into thinking the reason for non-competes is to improve patient care - if anything it hinders it greatly. I have a very large patient base that I would have to abandon if I attempt to find better working conditions fur myself - instead I'm forced to stay where I am as I cannot just uproot my family and move to another city. Additionally, the corporations will claim that there has been investment in physician training - absolutely not. I have all my medical knowledge from medical school and residency — I have had no training from my group other than a 1 day lesson on using the EMR. The non-compete clauses are simply a way to control physicians by limiting our options to practice and keeping our wages low so the administration can have an inflated salary; despite the physicians doing all the work the administration and equity firms are reaping the benefits. My physician group desired to hire a new-graduate physician but was only allowed to offer a below-market rate. When we asked to raise the salary to a more competitive rate we were told it was not possible as they need to keep new graduates at a low salary. The new-graduate understandably passed on our offer and we were forced to hire a less-qualified graduate that would take the lower salary. This is just an example in the medical field of how non-compete clauses are harmful to the worker class and only benefit the owner class. Hearing the FTC take on non-competes has given me hope that there may be a better future where I won't be forced to compromise myself or my practice. I hope this passes without any exceptions for physicians as all workers stand to benefit from the banning on non-compete clauses."
Larry	"I support this rule change. Non-compete clauses should not be allowed anywhere in the U.S. They serve only the company's interests and are unfair to workers and our right to earn a living. It's time to end this practice once and for all."
yuandy	"As a recent FNP graduate I don't have many options to start working because "NO experience" is what all the employer said, so once you sing the first certificate of non-compliance you have no choice but what they give you, even if you need to start practicing and after a few months you don't like the place or the people or you just move to another house you can't work in a different company because the agreement says that 10 or 20 miles away. I understand the interest that companies have in maintaining control of the population that you see, but "COMPETITION" is part of capitalism, that is what makes this country great, because you as a company owner have to do the best to keep your business open, this is quality of service, and this is what we are losing today with all those regulations and prohibitions. I agree with the FTC's proposed rule that would generally prohibit employers from using non-compete clauses, Thank you."

Sandra B	"I will like the non compete law to be remove. I don't think is fair that a person has to move the family the kids away to another school because the non compete problem with the ex-employment. There is enough business in the area, employees should keep clientele happy and employees happy or they are the ones that loose."
Christopher	"I am 100% unequivocally in favor of this. I am a physician who just left a practice in Florida which is a state that upholds most noncompete clauses, despite them being unethical and limiting my ability to earn a livelihood. My current noncompete has been fought with me by my prior employer with threat after threat of litigation. It also limits me beyond my ability to overcome such limitations geographically stating I cannot practice medicine within the tricounty area of South Florida (ie, all of South Florida!). I am currently still unemployed, getting unemployment as a physician (!!!!), and beyond anxious and concerned about what I'm going to do - it seems either pack up and move my whole life that I've worked so hard to establish here or get a job doing telemedicine with a license in another state, working remotely. Additionally, it has hurt my prior patients beyond belief. They were reassigned another provider without being informed of my leaving the practice and they are not allowed to continue their relationship with me for 2 years; patients come to a practice to see a provider, NOT the practice. The relationship providers have with patients is sacred and takes a long time to build that trust and level of sharing and noncompete's completely disregard and damage good patient-physician relationships, worsen patient outcomes, limit patients' right to choose, and increase healthcare costs exponentially while patients scramble to bring a new provider up to speed. What happened to continuity of care? Apparently if money is involved, it doesn't matter. I vehemently oppose ALL noncompete clauses and believe our economy SHOULD have the pressure and possible fear of losing good people/employees to go off and compete with them should they be treated poorly/abused. In medicine we are often treated expendably and all that matters is our productivity; it's time that our satisfaction and work-life balance actually mattered. For all these reasons I almost cried when I read the FTC initial report /stance and am hoping that this will give me new possibilities to obtain meaningful employment without a constant fear of litigation/someone looking over my back causing RESTRAINT OF TRADE, limiting my ABILITY TO EARN A LIVELIHOOD, restricting my ABILITY TO PROVIDE NEEDED CARE IN A COUNTRY WITH A KNOWN PHYSICIAN SHORTAGE (especially primary care), worsening the already SEVERE BURNOUT PHYSICIANS ARE EXPERIENCING (now worse after COVID). and ONLY WORSENS PATIENT OUTCOMES WHILE DAMAGING THE PATIENT-PHYSICIAN RELATIONSHIP, increasing costs and only serves to grow monopoly-like big clinic/organization entities where patients are just a number and everyone gets 15 minute visits where the provider never takes their eyes off the screen in front of diem. This is unacceptable and only hurts an already crippled medical system where patients are demanding better care - how can we do this when we are sued when trying to do S0999999 PLEASE YES FOR ALL THAT IS GOOD AND JUST; BAN ALL NONCOMPETES!!!! " "
Claudia	"Noncompetes exploit employees, cause unease, and potentially prevents good talent in working in certain healthcare settings. This creates a major impact in the community by creating areas of deficit and minimal access to certain subspecialties in medicine. It also creates unnecessary costs for physicians having to move to different geographic areas due to a restrictive covenant. Bottom line, this should be unethical and eliminated as a practice."

Seetha	"The non compete clause has significant adverse effects on the family unit. While imposing restrictions on a working parent it doesn't take into consideration the well-being of the children. For example, if a working mother who has a non compete clause to not work for 3 years in a 30 mile radius is predatory. If the mother has to move commute for the job, the child will need to move and change schools as well. It negatively impacts our future citizens especially in the aftermath of the pandemic where social isolation and ability to form close friendships is already effected. This clause doesn't serve the American public, it only serves corporate greed"
Phillip	"I moved to East Coast for work. After I arrived I was told that I had to sign a non compete. Being already here I couldn't say no. After a time I realized that I didn't like the company. I was stuck. This is not American. How can someone tell me that I can't better myself nor that of my children."
Gina	"Having a individuals sign non compete clause is total unfair to the individual. If you want to keep your employees do right by them. Most of the time people don't leave organizations, they leave people or working conditions. Keeping people from being able to earn a living in a field where they can excel at only befits big business."
Lillian	"I do not agree with non compete contracts"
Doug	"ban exploitative noncompete agreements - NOW"
Jennifer	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth. It also keeps you from getting work when the branch of the company you were in closes, but not the whole company, like what happened to me when the company we were working with decided to stop using a third party (the company I worked for). I could not apply for the same kind of work due to the contract I signed for at least a year. Not helpful when you have bills to pay and can't move."
Michelle	"In support of banning non compete clauses. Employment contracts are business agreements and one parting ways a party should not be able to limit the activities of the other."
Jonathon	"As one who is bound to 2 non competes and currently in a lawsuit for one, I feel this is a great opportunity for working to broaden there careers. There is no intricate definition to "trade secrets" Sales itself is a trade secret. Myself being bound to this non compete and lawsuit that was just filed, this will help me and all other workers in my situation significantly. Thank you for presenting this!!!!"
Jenna	"I know many people who have been forced to commute hours out of town in order to find employment in their field of expertise due to non-competes. It is my opinion that they are a burden to most Americans, inhibit commercial competition/growth, and negatively impact access to fair compensation."

Monica	"As a practicing Ob/GYN who has been subject to multiple non-compete clauses in employment contracts, I can say non-compete clauses hurt patients and don't serve legitimate business needs that they purport to just company profits. I strongly support the proposed rule to ban unnecessary non-compete language, especially in fields involving patient care."
skip	"As a Insurance Broker , I am writing to express my support for the proposed ban on Non-compete language in employment agreements across all industries. I have seen firsthand how these agreements can be used unfairly by employers. Under a non-compete, your value as a professional diminished and then going your power is removed, making correct decisions for yourself and family are less. Such agreements handcuffed all employees, staying in positions where they are unhappy, underpaid disrespected. A non-compete holds all employees from taking their skill and making a bettering their life. Raise income, remove non-compete agreement. In my current employment, I have even been threatened with termination for questioning my employer's operations, and at the same time, faced with the prospect of a multi-year non-compete agreement that would force me to move into another career if terminated. This is unacceptable. Non-compete agreements should not be used to trap any employee in positions they are unhappy with or force them to leave their their careers. While some argue that non-compete agreements are legal in some states, their legality does not necessarily make them fair or ethical. Several states have already banned non-compete agreements, and I believe that this should be the norm across the country. As a insurance broker, my ability to work in a particular industry should not be limited by non-compete agreements. My skills are not the property of any particular insurance firm and non-compete agreements unfairly exclude me work with other particular employers. A simple confidentiality agreement would suffice to protect an employer's trade secrets and business practices. Changing jobs as a insurance broker can be a costly process, Fighting a non-compete agreement can double this expense, which is a burden that falls solely on the employee. This is unfair and disproportionately affects all employees of all income levels. Non-compete agreements harm both low and high wage earners alike. In conclusion, non-compete agreements are unfair restraints on trade that prevent physicians and other healthcare providers from seeking better opportunities for themselves and their clients. I commend the FTC for taking this necessary step, and I urge you to include all professionals in this rule as we are often the targets of this unfair practice."
Maria	"The vast majority of physicians would agree that noncompete clauses in the healthcare field are on the whole bad for both physicians and for patients. They discourage market forces that allow physicians to vote with their feet if they don't agree with decisions being made by hospital systems that are to the detriment of quality medical care or clinician career longevity. According to one report, 117,000 physicians left the workforce in 2021, which is roughly 10% of the physician population. In an era where profits are continuously being put above patient care and the physician shortage is amplifying dramatically as physicians leave the field in droves secondary to widespread frustration and burnout, it is important for physicians to be able to speak out about these issues or leave their jobs without fear of retribution or the inability to provide for themselves and their families"

Jay	"I am a physician in support of banning non-competes."
Doris	"Please include physicians in the FTC non compete ban. Do not limit patient's access to physicians by enforcing non-compete clauses."
Tammy	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban cruel noncompete agreements. For decades, these exploitative noncompete agreements have barred workers from pursuing better employment opportunities in the same industry, stifling wages, and preventing career advancement. Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes -- ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Howard	"To whom it may concern, Non-competes regarding physician contracts is an issue near and dear to me. I have left practices and given the non-compete, this could conceivably force me to uproot my family to go to mother location to work. Non-competes for physicians either not exist, or should be limited to cases where an institution is first expending a significant income to attract a physician (eg significant equipment expenditures specifically to recruit a physician) and the institution invests more than say, 5 million dollars to bring a practice. I am against increasing government regulation and I am in favor of increasing competition, especially when it comes to physician recruitment. Thank you."
Ivan	"I fully support getting rid of non competes"
Joanna	"As a registered dietitian in a clinical Setting and have a private practice to help more people in the community it is discounting that such clauses are cust that restrict where and how you can practice. Medical professionals shouldn't have this clause as in in the end it's the people and communities that suffer."
Joseph	" Physician should not have non-competes. It enables healthcare systems locally to destroy a physician and their practice of medicine. HCA IS A PRIME EXAMPLE. We need action now."
Cairenn	"Non-compete clauses are restrictive for both the employee and the employer. Three scenarios in my own work history include the following: 1. My new hire company paid me a $250k guarantee for one year to "sit out" while my former employer issued cease and desist letters if 1 so much as ran into a client at the gym. 2. Another new hire employer bought out my non-compete, to the tune of $500k. 3. And another new hire employer refused to interview me beyond round 2 because they were a brand new start up company and couldn't afford the litigation, although they would have greatly benefited from my experience and industry knowledge. In particular, the unfairness of a non-compete is highlighted in "right to work" states where employees affected by restructuring and mass layoffs still have a binding non- compete while

	they attempt to seek replacement employment. And proving that a non-compete makes you "unemployable" (where the former employer is required by law to pay the employee through the conclusion of the non-compete) is incredibly difficult to prove, and requires immediate funds to obtain an employment attorney. If you've just been made redundant, you simply don't have those type of funds available. When companies reference the return on investment of a new hire, which includes their investment in training; they fail to mention that, in any given year, that same employee is cultivating and managing an entire book of business for the organization that can be valued in the millions of dollars. Or, in the case of labor & manufacturing markets, they are involved in creating a product that provides a return in the millions of dollars. Perhaps a reasonable non-compete buy-out could be agreed upon at the commencement of employment, ie: the equivalent of 3- 6 months salary, etc., which would allow lateral mobility, and replace any loss of use and training costs for the replacement hire. Non- solicitation clauses are relatively fair, as they still allow employees to leave of their own accord, but prevent one employee's departures upending the entire organization."
Jennifer	"Thank you for recognizing the importance of this significant issue. As a pediatrician practicing in neonatology and pediatric ICU, I have been trapped in positions where working conditions were detrimental to my mental and physical health. Moreover, I have cancer. I work in a large system in a large urban city, but I know that if I wanted or needed to leave my current employer to work in a position that accommodates a "new normal," I would have to leave this area of the state. I would also be limited in other states because of the locations of the system in which I work. There is no need thr employers- especially those large ones with far reaching sites- to have this power which not only limits our right to work but also limits our choice to live where we want or our families need."
Alexis	"Hello. I'm an ob/gyn in Florida. That's right... the hot bed of ALL things legal and statutory. While I have zero interest in leaving my current job, I know, for a fact, that non-compete clauses are hindering patient care. I can speak of dozens and dozens of physicians who cannot and will not leave their current jobs, which they are miserable in, due to non compete clauses. While govememtn never really cared much about people FEEL, I encourage you to think about how people REACT when they feel they are trapped. They make mistakes. They are burnt out. They spend less time with patients. they make medication and surgical errors. Tehy have higher rates of mental illless, higher rates of physician suicide, etc. The list goes on and on. This is a system designed to protect HOSPITALs and major corporations, not the average physician. Enough is enough."
Jenny	"I am in favor of eliminating non-compete agreements to an extent. It is understandable for an employer to restrict its employees from soliciting its current clients within a limited timeframe. However, employers restricting employees' ability to work in the same field or within a distance radius affects their livelihoods. I live in South Florida and have worked in the property management industry for the past twenty years. My current employer limits my ability to work for another company or start my own business within 20 miles from the client property. They have offered me no training to do my job. Instead, I have invested my time to make their company a

	success. My current company's benefits are expensive and I know I can get a better benefits package and salary with another company. However, the distance restriction would mean I would have to work about two hours from my home, taking time away from my family and other work-life balance activities. These non-compete restrictions must be outlawed. If a company wants to retain its employees, they need to offer better wages and benefits to compete with other companies instead of shackling the employee and demeaning their worth."
Shuo	"The non-compete clause is unfair and shall be abolished cross the country."
Floyd	"Thank you for recognizing the importance of this significant employee issue. As a physician, I see the extreme levels of frustration and burnout in my peers. These feelings seem to be compounded by feeling "trapped" by employers. I work as a pediatrician in a large system in a large urban city, but I know that if I wanted to leave my current employer I'd have to leave this area of the state, requiring me to sell my home and move my family (including requiring my spouse to change employers). There is no reasonable need for employers- especially large corporate systems- to have this inequitable bargaining power to limit our rights to work."
Fitore	"To whom it may concern, I would like to state for the record that non competes are ludicrous and should be terminated as a requirement for employment. There is a plethora of reasons, some including but not limited to the fact I've made more money and have been able to have more work life balance with my current company. Inevitably pouring more into the economy. I should not be punished for my old employers not being able to compete with the competition... so many other reasons. From someone who is currently hying to be SUED it's unfair and I don't care if someone was to open the same store next door, this is what this country is based on. Competition is a good thing, requires you to be innovative, and take out the box. I have never heard of fast food companies offering non competes. Yet they still expand and are capable of growth. Thank you!"
John	"I am a board-certified neonatoloist, and have been required to sign a non-compete for every job I have accepted in the past 15 to 18 years. These non- competes have significantly limited my ability to change jobs within the same city/region and have limited my salary potential by unfairly limiting competition for my professional services. In each case, these companies, which invariably have huge legal teams, and already exert significant power over me as an employee, have exerted even more power over me and my family by limiting our ability to change jobs without great expense. Big companies which often enjoy non-profit/501(c)3 status, and government subsidies to do research, are using their power over the little guy! I have worked at the University of Texas Southwestern (Dallas), Nationwide Children's Hospital (Columbus, OH), and now at the University if Florida College of Medicine in Jacksonville, FL, and each of these institutions have required me to sign a non-competes in order to accept an academic neonatologist job... This limits my opportunities within the same region, and indirectly limits my income potential by limiting competition for my skills/services. Moreover, when I join these institutions I have to sign over my rights to feed for services rendered to the institution! I am happy to discuss further, but would like to do so anonymously unless I can be protected

	(legally) from my current (and former) employer(s). Thank you for initiating this important protection of the individual."
Christopher	"I agree with this motion. I think it's a great way to enhance competition and growth of industry especially when located in a city where a 5 mile non compete can push you out of a city if you decide to change jobs. I support getting rid of non competes 100%"
Samantha	"I respectfully and wholeheartedly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule. It brings hope to empower physician and also increase physician access to certain communities that are in need of more support. This allows physicians to practice in the same region and still provide healthcare to patient but under a different organization that might place a better emphasis on quality of life, work life balance and patient: it allows the physician to be happy and the community not to suffer the loss of a physician due to a non compete"
Joni	"I ask for the elimination of 1) the exception for nonprofit hospitals and 2) the salary cap."
Katherine	"As a physician who has worked in underserved areas, I strongly believe non competes prevent doctors from freely practicing and continuing to treat patients in their community. I previously worked in a underserved area of Ohio where patients had to wait over 6 months to see a medical specialist. My hospital job required a non compete of 20 miles. These non completes three physicians to leave the community and their patients if they want to leave their job. I personally had to move with my family to another state to work again after leaving. This not only causes disruption for physicians families-they are forced to move homes, children move schools but also forces hundreds of patients of each of these physicians to now have to re-establish care with another doctor they do not know. In many of these underserved communities there aren't even any other doctors in this speciality and patients may have to wait many months and travel far to see their doctor again. Large corporations almost always require these non compete agreements for new doctors and many of them have locations in multiple cities and states and the competes are for all locations of the company basically preventing the doctor from working again if they leave. I personally know several doctors who left clinical practice because of these types of extreme non competes. With a current shortage of physicians and specialists we should not allow large corporations to prevent doctors from practicing medicine and taking care of their patients. Doctors often train for 10+ years to gain the knowledge and expertise to take care of patients-we should not allow large corporations to take away doctors ability to care for their patients and to be forced to leave an area if they lose their job for any reason."
Judy	"They are taking freedom away from employees bettering themselves by pursuing jobs that would give them more opportunities for advancement, better pay along with additional benefits, better working conditions and overall not feeling enslaved by a job!"
Thomas	"Today I have a job offer on the table, pending request from the offering company regarding non-compete clauses I'm subject to. Turns out that I am subject to a non-

	compete that was stuffed into a contract I was newly required to sign in order to receive my bonus - this contract was not described at the beginning of the year, but only after bonuses were announced, several months into the subsequent year. So what do I do at the time? Throw away 15% of my salary, or sign a stack of pages of fine print. The non-compete is hugely problematic - it covers the entire, massive financial industry, and it claims irreparable harm if I were to work for the competition. In short, I'm forced change careers after 30 years, at the most valuable time of my career, resulting in greatly reduced income. Or I can remain indentured to the company that I want to leave."
Cynthia	"This must be stopped. It is unfair to individuals, and it leads to more poverty and instability in our democracy."
John	"This should not include an exception for 'non-profit' hospitals because physicians and other employees should not be limited based on this employer status."
K	"I support a ban on non-compete agreements. My current employer made me sign a non-compete that I cannot work in my highly specialized field (Vocational Rehabilitation), for which I have over 30 certificates, for two years. This is the field I am trained in and invested in for schooling."
Joshua	"Non competes are predatory and harmful to the worker. I believe they should be abolished."
Carol	"Non-compete clauses trap employees in their job and prevent them from taking their skills elsewhere. Even if you are in a state that limits or bans non-competes, the threat of litigation is enough to keep employees from leaving a job. It's a form of modern servitude. Please ban this form of servitude."
Kerry	"Non-competes should be banned! I would make more money if I could leave to work at another company but I can't."
Atul	"Stop this illegal practice of non compete"
Mitchell	"While I'm certainly not looking to leave my current employer - there is a sense of freedom in knowing that should my employment be terminated for any reason that my options are not only limited to work outside of my chosen profession, skillset, and expertise. In turn as someone who hires talent - removing this barrier may seem like a difficulty in the short term. However, I see it as an opportunity to reinvigorate our team with new skills, expertise, and most importantly enthusiasm and passion over the long term. I am whole-heartedly in favor of the non-compete clause rule (NPRM), and grateful to those who proposed this change as it stands today."
Christopher	"I was asked to sign a Non-disclosure document for an employer that was so broad that it ended up effectively being a non compete and a assignment of all rights of intellectual property ownership from the employee to the employer for any and all ideas regardless of whether they related to the industry of the employer or not. I agree with the arguments against non compete agreements, whether contained in a

	non disclosure agreement or as a separate document, and I am strongly in favor of the FTC putting an end to this in spirit not just in name only. I am very grateful to see of the FTC taking on issues like this and look forward to more scrutiny of non disclosure agreements and intellectual property rights assignments. Things like requiring all of these documents be posted publicly with a job description or something similar would help as the employer springing these documents on an employee during orientation after they have already left their previous employer is unfair and a deceptive abuse of power."
Beth	"I was the victim of a non-compete clause in 2002. I was contract sales for a durable medical equipment company near Ocala Florida. I was very good at cultivating clients such as the VA, Medicaid Waiver program and Vocational Rehabilitation. A colleague, another contractor, struggled and usually needed a "draw". The company owner decided to terminate my contract and "give" my clients to the struggling contractor. Poor business decision, in my opinion. It was 15 days before Christmas when my contract was terminated and as a single mother of a young son, I ignored the non-compete clause and switched companies. All of my clients honored my company change and stopped purchasing from the original company. I was sued and settled for my own attorney's fees, $2500, and I ceased competing...I had to get a regular job and had to dig myself (family) out of that hole, slowly."
Sheridan	"The FTC should end non-competes. The reasoning for keeping them are illogical. Imagine telling a family medicine physician that they can't work where they want to, that they cannot serve their communities all in the midst of a shortage in primary care physicians. This is a great step by the FTC!"
Rahil	"Please stop non compete clauses. I have incurred physical, financial, emotional trauma from having to leave a job but not being able to practice within the same county. The harm extends to the family members and socioeconomic impact of this is significantly detrimental and should not be allowed. Hospitals and large corporations should not be allowed to force a non compete clause on to their employees"
Hunter	"I am an attorney who practices in multiple areas, including commercial litigation. In my practice, I have handled a number of situations and cases involving non-compete agreements (both for the employer and for the employee). It is my opinion that a non-compete agreement creates unfair restraints on competition. Specifically, for companies that require a non-compete agreement, prospective employees are typically required to sign the agreement before beginning work. At that time, the employee only has a glimpse of the company and its work environment. The employee will generally only meet one or a few of the managerial level employees at an interview at which a "best view of the company" is described for the prospective employee. Any workplace politics, issues with supervisors/managers, unsavory work conditions, etc., are generally not shared with prospective employees at the interview (and are not usually available upon Google search about the company). And yet, the prospective employee is asked to sign an agreement stating that if that employee leaves the company for any reason, that employee is restricted from working in the same industry for some number of months or years after the employment terminates.

	There are occasions where employees begin employment and find out that either they do not get along with a supervisor (and the supervisor knows there is a non-compete so the employee has a difficult decision to make), or the company is doing things that involve questionable ethics/morals. Despite these and other scenarios where the workplace is not quite as rosy as the employee was led to believe during the interview, the employee is still bound by the non-compete agreement. Sometimes, the work environment changes after an employee is hired. Sometimes there is managerial turnover or a particular employee's supervisor changes, or a change in how the company does business to try to gain an advantage in the marketplace. There are times when these changes create an environment where the employee simply does not want to work ... whether because the new supervisor is entirely irrational or unreasonable, the new policies conflict with the employee's ethics or morals, etc. This is the epitome of unfair bargaining power and unfair competition. A question was asked as to what tools would exist for an employer to protect itself if non-compete agreements are banned. Nondisclosure agreements were mentioned and this is one way for employers to protect themselves from disclosure of trade secrets or confidential information. Also, non-solicitation agreements would protect employers from an employee taking an employer's customers in whom the employer invested resources. The combination of nondisclosure and non-solicitation agreements provide protections to the employer that its own investment in ideas, concepts, and other trade secrets are protected from being shared, and customers are protected from being stolen. Meanwhile, the employees are free to explore other potential employment opportunities in their field of experience and expertise if other opportunities provide a better work environment, compensation and/or benefits. Banning non-compete clauses may also encourage employers to value the workplace environment a little more so that an environment is created where employees do not want to leave. A question was also asked about whether the non-compete ban should apply to franchisors and franchisees. I believe that it should. Just as I explained in my first paragraph above, franchisees make an investment in a franchise without the benefit of much experience with the franchisor. In my practice, I have met with franchisees who advise me that franchisors failed to provide all of the training and resources that were promised. In these scenarios, a franchisee should be able to look for other franchise opportunities in the same or other industries without fear of being sued under a non-compete clause. Franchisors could maintain protection of its trade secrets via nondisclosure provisions."
Denise	"As a professional who is involved in a highly competitive industry, I totally support abolishing this antiquated rule. Competition only makes us strive to do better and provides the public with optimum choices for service providers who really have to work hard to succeed. A consumer should be allowed to make the choice - not a document."
David	"I am strongly in support of the proposed rule to limit non-complete clause. My previous employment ended with an expensive buyout in order to keep hospital privileges despite fulfilling my contract obligations, giving proper notice prior to non-renewal of the next contract, and change in my capacity of work from hospitalist to primary care physician as a new DPC physician. These type of penalties are unnecessary and do not add to patient care. I left on good terms from a not for profit organization, why should they be allowed to monetize my choice to alter career path."

Sara	"First, I want to thank all who proposed this bill. While I may not be a medical professional, these non-compete clauses have been presented at nearly every employer I have worked with. The roles were low paying and minor and it has always struck me as incredibly bizarre that I would need to sign them. Most of these jobs were low labor jobs. These non-compete clauses make it incredibly hard for entry level employees to gain experience in a field and move to a better position with a better company for those who have talent and wish to grow in their career fields. It essentially takes wage negotiation off the table with employers who have non--competes, allowing them to take advantage and in some cases abuse those who are passionate about their work. The employee is forced to either move, wait for the non compete to expire, or work in another field altogether. All options stifle the growth of the individual employee and give an unfair advantage to the potentially subpar employer. I presently work in a small art and antique auction house. As a recipient of a Bachelor's in Fine Arts, this was an incredibly lucky find in my local area; there are not a lot of career avenues for art graduates outside of teaching or design. The company took me on despite my lack of experience and I have come to really enjoy the idea of this industry being my career path. However, I once again had to sign a non-compete. I have been with this company a year now and while I love most things about the company, one of the owners can be at times rude or abrasive to his employees. The pay is also comparatively low considering the level of service I have provided them and my education. I would love to move on, but this non-compete prevents me from doing so. Even if I wanted to move on to Sotheby's, a far superior auction house that provides a professional level wage, I wouldn't be able to. Even though there is absolutely no "trade secret" I could possibly provide Sotheby's of which they do not already have knowledge. In short, these non-compete agreements stifle Americans who wish to grow in their careers and they impact in my opinion the lowest level workers the hardest. And now knowing how it impacts nurses and doctors, I now understand why the healthcare industry is in shambles. It's time for these companies to start meeting the expectations of their employees and clients. If we really want a "free" market we need to stop protecting had performing companies and eliminate the non-compete agreements. Let competitive companies and individuals thrive! Our market will be better for it."
Hector	"I spent the last 20 years working in a specialized industry. I was offered a 50% pay-cut to stay with the company. I could not survive on that pay & now they have a 3 year non-compete on me that I signed 20 years ago. At 58 years old, it will be very difficult to move into a totally different industry. Not really fair after 20 years of loyal service."
Kayla	"This absolutely needs to be implemented. I worked for Neogenomics laboratories and this is a big practice to keep employees locked in with little pay and demanding work. A lot of my colleagues left for other industries. Top talent will leave if they feel backed into a corner. Successful people will be just that.. successful regardless of what company they work for"

Seth	"The idea of allowing for non-compete clauses in workplace contracts/paperwork is outdated and easily abused. Having someone, especially younger people just entering the workforce, sign these non competes for spurious reasons as a tool to exert control over them, not to protect any sort of top secret process or formula that the company themselves created, is asinine. The United States, a country that openly claims is a free country, must therefore, make necessary changes towards the economic freedom and well being of its citizens. The move to eliminate non competes, as well as I hear another rule to eliminate captive anti-union meetings, and to hopefully fund the NLRB properly, would be moves in that direction. A truly free populace is one where work is a choice. Where to work is a choice. And where one does not need to give up one's freedom, dignity or humanity for a paycheck that barely (if at all) covers the most basic of human needs. So while we do need to do more, like raising the minimum wage, passing the PRO Act or similar pro-union legislation, providing a federal jobs guarantee, providing paid parental leave, guaranteed vacation, protecting the right to strike...this action nudges us a step closer to true economic justice for Americans, rather than moving us farther away from it under the guise of a conveniently nebulous and undefined idea of "freedom"."
Larry	"As a physician in Maternal-Fetal Medicine I feel this is overdue. If you are not supported as promised, children are in schools locally, and want to move on, you have to move to another city or risk being sued through the non-compete. One company, Pediatrix, restricts working at any site within a certain radius of one of their practices, and they have practices throughout the country. Other industries aren't held to that same standard, why physicians are is beyond my grasp. This has been a travesty from the beginning, essentially dictating where you can make a living if you make a mistake and attempt to move on to another practice. There is a fairness issue here. These companies will prevent you from getting a raise and threaten you legally if you practice within a specific radius of your previous job. I am 100% behind this legislation!"
doug	"It has always seemed to me that a non-compete agreement is a violation of anti-trust laws for human resources. If I have top secret information and the company or entity has compensated me fairly for my ideas, then a non-compete makes perfect sense. But if I work for a company or entity that does not value my contributions, either in reality or in compensation, then keeping me from a company that would value my contributions in reality and in compensation is unethical, immoral, and should be illegal. My company makes clear the non-compete agreement is for their benefit only by stating it is not an employment agreement and the company can terminate me at anytime, but I would still be subject to the non-compete. Further, the agreement (written by the company) states any ideas I have on company time or my personal time belongs to the company. Not sure that is even legal but they write that to leverage their size and ability to bring legal action to scare one into compliance. Moreover, these non-compete agreements artificially keep wages down for talented people by limiting one's options and compensation in one's chosen profession. For these reasons, among many others, the use of non-competes should be limited to very specific relationships. And if a non-compete is warranted, due compensation, agreed to by both parties, shall be required. A free and open market place demands such."

Virginia	"I support this rule change. Non-Competes, meant to apply to highly compensated, technically oriented white-collar workers, are inherently unfair to most workers and make it virtually impossible for every day workers to make a living if they are let go or look to change their employment - even to work independently! Please make this change!"
Dawn	"To hold a physician to a non-compete clause is absurd. To limit our ability to work and be near our family at the same time is cruel. To think I can "compete" for patients as a neonatologist is ludicrous! If I go to a different hospital, pregnant women whose baby will need NICU care do not follow me! Please end this illegal nonsense. It is bad for physicians, bad for healthcare, bad for patients, and un-American!"
T	"Non competes have always felt like a way for corporations to force employees to stay at their current employer even though they may have a better opportunity from another employer. I am in full agreement of forbidding non-competes and keeping my employees through better leadership."
Collin	"I am a psychiatric mental health, nurse practitioner , and I work in outpatient psychiatry, predominantly serving child and adolescent populations. My employer has a noncompete clause in my contract, which would three me not to work for approximately two years after leaving this practice. Not only does this make me feel trapped as an employee, but it significantly hampers my ability and drive to one day establish my own practice, noncompete clauses significantly and negatively hold back the healthcare industry and its providers. I truly hope that noncompete agreements are nationally banned. I am not only a medical provider, but an officer in the United States Army reserve in my whole goal is to serve my community. I should not feel trapped into a position where I lack leverage for compensation, or ability to venture out on my own. Thank you for your time."
Megan	"It is very important to get rid of these non-competes! Big hospitals and companies are adding bigger and completely unreasonable non-competes that probably wouldn't hold up in court, but knowing young doctors out of training won't risk taking them to court and spending a lot of money. It doesn't make sense to have these non-competes if you have a family and your spouse works in the area and enjoys their job, and you don't want to have to move the whole family or do locums for a year or however long the non-compete is. It is unfair to make people stay in a job they hate and are being taking advantage of only because they don't want to move their whole family or have no income. This also applies to non-competes for fellowships, for example I know someone that had to sign a fellowship contract with a completely unreasonable non-compete of multiple counties. The spouse was also a doctor and had just started a good job and they wanted to start a family and long distance was not an option, so they had to take the fellowship. After fellowship, they are forced to sign with that group because the non-compete states they can't work anywhere in the surrounding 4 counties for 1 year. New grads don't have any money reserve, have to start paying hefty loans, and they don't have the money to take on big companies in court. Doctors shouldn't be stuck in these situations."

sybil	"As someone who has been in the broadcast industry for very nearly FIFTY years I can tell you that a non-compete clause has been inserted into every single one of my employment contracts. And I have not been permitted to strike through any of them. I was never the type of talent who would have taken thousands with me had I "crossed the street" (journeyman). So these contracts made it necessary for me to MOVE every time a job ended or I felt the need to advance in my career. They are simply a tool with which business maintain controls over personel they have no right to wield. And yes, it negatively affected my lifetime earnings which will affect my SSI payments which may require the state to care for elderly me. Conservatives yet again cut off their own noses in a lame effort to avoid supporting AMERICANS (who have paid for it - and them - remind them please)."
Keri	"Please put an end to these so I can finally take this invisible ball and chain off of my ankle and be free to work where I want."
Nicole	"Noncompetes only hurt patients by limiting the amount of physicians that can Practice"
T	"As a health care provider , I wholly support banning noncompete provisions in contracts. They stifle competition and discriminate against female workers."
Naresh	"I am a physician and totally agree with a ban on non compete clause. More corporations are taking over our practices and then making working conditions difficult forcing us to quit and then enforce the non compete clause and get new recently trained physicians or non physician providers to take over the practices that we have taken years to build and pay the new providers a low reimbursement compared to what we were being paid and thus increasing their profits"
Mari	"Right now, noncompete agreements are being unethically used across the country to prevent workers from quitting their jobs for a better offer. Competition drives markets — and when noncompetes eliminate competition in the labor market, employers don't have an incentive to give their walkers better pay, working conditions, or benefits"
Fernanda	"As a physician I find that we should be able to freely chose where to practice medicine. Big hospital systems deprive doctors of the free will to live and practice anywhere hey choose. Please abolish the non compete clause once and for all. Thank you"
Gianna	"Non competes are an abuse of power and used to control employees in an effort to strong arm them to stay in a job that is no longer a good fit or serving their goals. They need to be heavily regulated."
Deborah	"Somehow this country has to stand up for the people and allow them to have lives they choose without keeping them from growing with their families needs. For years I

	worked for people that I had to stay with to carry insurance on my family. If I quit to get another job I would lose health insurance for my son with asthma because they didn't cover preexisting conditions. Obama fought for the people and I was able to move to a different job not worrying about my sons health coverage. To this day some government leaders want that taken away?! So this fight is again for the people. To help them make a life for their families by giving them options and not keeping them stuck in a job . Please know it is not easy out here in the middle class world but we are fighters so we will prevail. Albeit we won't make much money we will be ok."
Stephanie	"I'm a physician, noncompete limit my ability to work in the same area I live in and have built established relationships with patients in if the relationship with my "employer" becomes null. This essentially grants the Health System full autonomy over the work I personally have done in building those patient relationships and bars me from opening my own practice or working for another office and limits my ability to earn a living as most of my earnings come from production of revenue. It takes many years to build a patient base large enough to support a salary and noncompetes for us either tie us to hostile work environments, cut us off from patients who know and trust us or make sure we have to move to other areas and start all over again. This is an unfair practice that favors only the corporation and not the worker (the physician in this case) who has done the actual work."
Cary	"I was hired by the University of Florida at Halifax Health in 2014 with a start date of 6/1/2015. The offer letter had a non-compete clause which was not negotiable with a 50 mile radius from the Halifax Medical Center in Daytona Beach for a 2 year period. If I wanted this position, I had to sign the offer letter which I did in Nov, 2014. My family relocated to the area, and our parents soon followed residing approximately 2 miles from our home. Additionally, my wife and I have children in the public school system, and my wife's career has really taken-off in the area. We also have close community ties and my wife volunteers with the Junior League of Daytona Beach. During my time in this practice as a Cardiothoracic Surgeon, I worked very hard reaching-out to physicians in the region to grow my practice and have outstanding clinical outcomes. There was very modest support from the University of Florida or Halifax to grow the practice which I shared with one other surgeon. On July 27, 2022, I was informed my contract would not be renewed and was given a 90 day notice which was per the original offer letter as a "no fault" termination. Needless to say, I was caught by surprise and faced not only a loss of income, but also, health insurance for my family as well as dental, vision, and retirement benefits. This all happened just prior to my 60th birthday which placed me in a less desirable position to acquire a new position due to my age. I was verbally offered a position at the Advent Daytona Hospital locally, but was informed that I had to be released from the non-compete clause from the University of Florida and Halifax Health. I attempted to discuss my situation in-person and in writing with the CEO of Halifax Health as well as the UF Health administration for this release so I could provide for my family, and was told to hire an attorney. At the end of August, 2022, I hired an attorney to negotiate a release from the non-compete so I could be present locally for my family and our elderly parents. It has been approximately 6 months since this process started, and the University of Florida and Halifax Health have hired a private law firm

	to enforce the non-compete against me. Their strategy has been to stall the process as much as possible and the matter remains unsettled. In the meantime, I had to find work as a locums surgeon to support my family with locations in Texas, North Carolina, and Iowa. This translates into me being away from home approximately 15-20 days a month which is not good for my 2 daughters at home or for my wife who is a single parent during this time. I am also unavailable to help my mother who will be 80 in June or my in-laws. The decision to terminate me was not mine, but completely the decision of UF Health and Halifax Health. I was happy to remain in my position serving the community, and just want the opportunity to remain working in the Daytona Beach area where the population has grown immensely over the past several years, especially people greater than 55 years old. Yet, this non-compete is preventing me from practicing locally despite many referring physicians who want to continue sending me patients. There is a tremendous need for healthcare providers in the area, but recruiting and retaining physicians has been a challenge. As a locums physician, I work as an independent contractor and had to secure health insurance for my family. I have shared my experience with many physicians as well as individuals not working in healthcare. None of them can understand how I can be prevented from practicing locally when the employer made the determination to terminate me. I have been assured by my attorney as well as attorney friends that UF Health and Halifax Health will lose this battle, however, the legal process is slow and if this process takes 1-2 years, the employer wins by default. I am also personally responsible for the legal fees to fight this non compete which is an additional stressor. In summary, these non compete clauses between health care systems and individual doctors are completely unfair and are designed to handcuff the physician to a hospital or group. The expectation is that the physician will pack-up and move elsewhere if terminated regardless of cause, and there is no consideration of family members or the roots planted in the community. I hope the ETC is able to remove this unfair labor practice and allow healthcare providers the ability to find work in their communities. Thank you for your time and consideration."
Thomas (Russ)	"Hello, I may be the poster child for who Not to care much about but I do appreciate a forum to be heard. For starters, I am a young white male who is a tech entrepenur / founder that helped start a successful software company as soon as I graduated college with two seasoned buisness men that I would later find out went against their word while having me sign an NDA before I really knew what I was doing (I know, still my fault for not reading). The NDA that I signed has basically made me a prisoner to my own IP and everything that I have built over the past 5 years. Again, my fault for signing something I did not truly understand, but I'm sure I am not the only young entrepenur that has been taken advantage of while being locked into something that allows my employer to underpay and basically hold me hostage for everything I have or will ever create while working here. I think we all believe that this proposal will be great for the American people as it will increase competition while decreasing the ability / chance for absolute power. At the very least there should be some sort of expiration date required for Non Competes that companies should have to renegotiate. Thank you for giving a platform to comment on this proposal. Just a last second thought, If I were "Big Buisness" I would have thousands of bots lined up on this site ready to say the exact opposite."

Roxana	"I support the banning of the non-compete cause for physicians and all professionals. It is just UNFAIR!. It almost feel like you belong to someone. I understand their purpose of taking care of their interests and their money making business, but most of the times these are huge millionaires corporations, thus a physician opening his/her own small practice won't do anything to them. This type of legislation just support everyone being a "forever employee" of a company that makes a huge profit out of your work and is not even appreciative. In my case, I started a job and decided to quit after 1 year because it was a very toxic environment with horrible working conditions. The job didn't turn out what I expected or what it was promised it'd be. Then, after quitting, I just wanted to join another practice (cause I needed to continue making a living) and then I had the non-compete clause for 2 years and 10 miles radius. So, that means that even when I'm not a decent or realistic competitor to this huge corporation, I needed to find a job significantly far from them (and my home) and that I have to consider to change my life such as moving to another area or commuting for hours just to be outside of their radius. It just doesn't make sense and it's not fair!."
Chris	"Please eliminate all non-competes for workers. Non-compete clause should have only been used for executives in large companies. They have now been used as a beat stick to prevent workers from leaving companies that they no longer wish to work at. Because of the restrictions in these non compete it prevents ordinary workers from taking offers with other companies who are willing to provide more. It is frankly unamerican that a corporation is able to tell a worker where they can and cannot work after they leave. Again, please eliminate all non-competes on the federal level."
Jennifer	"I am strongly in favor of the rule that would ban non-compete clauses in employment contracts. The state of Florida is known for being extremely favorable to employers after state level legislation was implemented in 2018. The employers in the industry of my employment over the last 12 years has been using these agreements to threaten and intimidate workers after laws became more favorable to them. Many of the clauses I have personally seen are overreaching For example, this industry is a niche of construction but they have banned workers from working in any area of construction, whether or not the company of employment even performs the service. While many of the terms of these agreements are not enforceable in court, the goal of these employers is to scare the employees with very costly lawsuits and it is usually effective. There are additional contractual terms that can protect these employers from losing the cost of specialized training or prevent employees from leaving and taking clients and other employees to competitors. Non- solicitations are also added to the non-compete agreement and are usually quite fair. The term where employees may not work for any company the employer defines as a competitor perpetuate unfavorable working conditions to the employees. I have personally experienced or been witness to sexual harassment, verbal abuse, physical abuse, and extremely unsafe working conditions made possible because people could not leave and utilize their skills without the threat of a lawsuit. These lawsuits can cost what the average worker makes in a year. Please move forward with the ban of the non-compete clauses in employment contracts."

Carson	"As an independent consultant I fully support and encourage the proposed rule-making to restrict the use and enforcement of non-compete agreements. I make a living leveraging decades of experience to help clients improve their business processes. I don't do this by sharing trade secrets or insider information — I provide a personal perspective based on my experience to help my client see their business in a new light. Non-compete clauses make it extremely difficult to move freely from client to client. This limits my income potential, and hurts the clients that could be benefiting from my assistance. I typically have non-disclosure agreements with my clients, so a non-compete doesn't really add any additional protections to the employer, while creating a significant burden for me. This is like asking a ghost writer to sign an agreement that they won't write for anyone else. Or a traveling nurse agreeing not to work for other hospitals. Non-competes make no sense. They are bad for employees. They limit job opportunities. They limit employee income potential. They prevent job mobility. And they don't really afford any real benefit to the employer. Please proceed with the proposed rule-making!"
Eric	"Totally agree with stopping the non-compete. I currently has one that according to the non compete is effective globally and doesn't allow me to work anywhere in the solution I've managed and worked in for 9+ years"
Eric	"The ban on non-compete clauses/agreements is absolutely needed and likely overdue. A few years ago, I was working as a software engineer at a financial institution. There was a clause in my contract that stated I could not work for a competing financial institution for 1 or 2 years after my employment ended with my employer. This prevented me from being able to work for other companies that were offering more competitive salaries and benefits, just because they competed in the same market as my previous employer... I had no trade secrets or information regarding new products or services... It was completely ridiculous. I decided then I wouldn't ever work for an employer that required me to sign a non-compete agreement and I haven't since. It's clear from the other comments that I've read that other people in different professions needed this ban as well. This surprised me but even positions such as personal trainers and even security guards suffered because of non-compete clauses... I don't believe executives of companies should be excluded either, they should be free to work for a competitor if they choose to do so. Even if they're knowledgeable of future ideas of products, services, or marketing campaigns. It will ultimately only increase competition in the market and that helps consumers. It's always been an assumed risk in business that someone could steal away your customers because they provide another product/service in a cheaper or better way. They will still have to respect anything patented, copyrighted, or trademarked... This clause is clearly intended to only benefit the employer and to intimidate their current and former employees from working with competitors, even when those employees have knowledge and experience of laws, regulations, or perhaps a general understanding of consumer needs in that particular market... All of that knowledge will be wasted because they can't work for an employer in that market because their previous employer could sue them or their new employer... The counter-argument to this might be, "well not all companies have non- compete clauses." This argument is preposterous because it doesn't cost companies anything to include this clause and what happens when enough companies in a market do have these clauses? Another counter-argument could be that, "well no one is forcing the employee to agree to this clause/agreement." This argument is also only half-baked because considerations need to be made for a person's available local job market, if he/she has limited opportunities in their area, it's preventing them from gaining additional work. Ultimately utilization of this type of clause only hurts employees and the consumers of that market by keeping prices high and stifling competition. Below is copy of the FTC's mission: The FTC's mission is protecting the public from deceptive or unfair business practices and from unfair methods of competition through law enforcement, advocacy, research, and education."

Tyler	"I worked at TQL for a period of time, ended up leaving and went to a company called Fusion Logistics a satellite office for REEDTMS. After 9 Months of working at REED, TQL issued a court summons for previous employees that were currently working at REED violating their noncompete. Even though i wasn't listed in this witch hunt I was let go because i came from the same company. I was 23 years old leaving on my own, I wasn't making enough to have a savings but i valued the experience. Little did i know a noncompete would take away my entire source of income. End these noncompetes, they do nothing but allow companies to dictate the future of their employees."
Subhasis	"All non compete causes should be banned including for doctors . It is Anti American."
Trina	"noncompete agreements are unethically used across the country to prevent workers from quitting their jobs for a better offer. Competition drives markets --- and when noncompetes eliminate competition in the labor market, employers don't have an incentive to give their workers better pay, working conditions, or benefits. Please make noncompete agreement unlawful!"
Rob	"I agree with banning of non-competes. There is rules in place for copyright, patents, trademarks etc.... Companies have plenty of legal options to protect their interests legally. The worker in this case is stifled and there are many reasons why a worker may want to leave a company."
Jai	"As a consultant who advises companies on all sorts of transformational projects, my personal worth is tied to the knowledge and experience I gain doing my work. Existing protections provided by intellectual property rights, confidentiality agreements and trade secret protection agreements are more than sufficient to preserve and protect my employers interests. A non-compete clause that prevents me from working for a competitor or with my prior clients is only designed to hurt competition and my interests as an employee who "works at will". As long as I do not divulge secrets or misuse protected materials, I should be allowed to work for any competing firm and provide services to any of my prior clients as I wish. California has it right in not allowing restrictive non-compete clauses and that's a big part of why software and technology companies have thrived there. Without that protection, Intel, Oracle, Sun, Salesforce and the like would never have been born. It is about time, the proposed FTC rule unleashes innovation and unshackles workers all over America. I whole heartedly support this proposed rule banning non-compete clauses."

Valerie	"Non-competes put the employees at a significant disadvantage. I had a 100 mile noncompete for 2 years. The company was abusive and frequently broke the law. But as an employee, I didn't have the money to hire an attorney to fight the situation, so I was forced to move to another state for 2 years to be able to find work in the only industry that I have experience in. I really hope you will ban non-competes as it really harms the workforce. If companies treat employees well, they don't have to moony about them leaving. Non-competes allow companies to be abusive and we endure the torture if we aren't able to move to start a new life."
Rajat	"Non-competes are used by hospitals and group practices to trap physicians in suboptimal contracts. When those physicians leave, they have to leave the area where they are often raising their family. Not only are physicians affected by this, but patients are harmed. I was just talking to a patient today who said her PCP changes every time she has an appointment (every 6 months). When turnover is this frequent, patients don't build relationships with their physicians and that leads to suboptimal care for patients. This especially impacts areas outside of cities where patients already have fewer options. This shouldn't be a hospital v. Physician issue but should be seen through the lens of allowing patients to have better continuity with their doctor and enhanced trust in the medical system."
Ricardo	"As a Healthcare professional we are usually asked to sign contracts with non compete clauses. These restrictions definitely limits the ability to make lateral employment decisions and negatively impacts not only our careers but our ability to provide for our families financially I would encourage the FTC to implement the proposed law to eliminate non compete clauses Thank you for giving employees who are limited by these restrictions to voice our opinions"
Michael	"I have been in sales in the MRO industry for 15 years and I am definitely for the abolishment of the Non- Compete agreements. I am actually restrained by one of them with my ex-employer and can not expand and run my business properly because of it. I keep receiving letters with legal threat which I find totally wrong. My expertise is in that field and this is all I have been doing. My customers are buying from ME and not from my employer. I hope this will go through. Thank you so much for getting this done and free us!"
Evan	"I wholeheartedly support this proposed rule. As a professional Software Engineer , entrepreneur, and freelancer, I have often times turned down work - both full-time and contract that were not sourced from the state of California. This was due to the fact that the way that other states enforced non-compete provisions were at times so contrived and onerous that they made the regulatory environment too unpredictable to safely operate my enterprises despite there not being any clearly identifiable competing interest that a layman or professional alike could identify. In my experience, these provisions, particularly when applied to non-executive positions, do a lot more harm than good and stifle innovation and economic activity."

David	"After 22 years with the same company I was let go without details as to why. Not required in Florida. The company provided a nominal severance package and enforced a 1 year no compete that I signed 22 years ago. Now, at my age, moving out of my industry in next to impossible. Non-competes should be banned. A NDA will protect what intellectual property concerns might exist."
Zachary	"I am strongly in favor of eliminating non-compete clauses. This will have the effect of freeing skilled labor to migrate and innovate, serving the economy."
Amanda	"Our family has personally suffered from stagnated wages due to a non-compete clause. On the first day of my husband's employment, without prior notice, an extensive 2 year non-compete clause was put in his employment contract and while it was noted within the clause he could seek counsel, when you are in the middle of your first day of work ifs not practical. In addition, for most people, if it is your first experience with a non-compete, you likely do not have the funds to pay a 8750 per hour lawyer to advise and negotiate on your behalf, nor realize the possible long-term consequences. Most people do not grow up around lawyers or experienced business people who would be able to advise of the consequences of non-competes. In my husband's case lie went 3 years without a raise and upon seeking out other employment found he was drastically underpaid but when he brought this to his employer's attention, they immediately referenced the non-compete and so the "market's" value did not apply. Our experience has shown that employers cannot be counted on to do right by their employees and at the very minimum there should be severance guarantees required to enforce a non-compete which would allow more equitable positions between employer and employee. As my husband's non-compete completely barred him the entire sector he worked in for the majority of his career without any severance or termination compensation it gave the employer complete control and they had no incentive to pay him any more as very few people can afford to go two years without working in their industry without severely impacting their family and even if they found employment in another industry they would likely have to start over to try to work their way up again. Please approve and defend this rule. I have attached a copy of his non-compete for reference on how lopsided some agreements are."
Kiranmayi	"As physicians non compete clause is detrimental. We end up being bonded laborers to hospitals."
Aino	"As a primary care physician I truly hope to see this move forward. I recently left my position at one company and for a year commuted an hour to be outside of my non compete radius. I recently returned to my community and discovered I have more patients than I can count who simply didn't get care for over a year because they didn't want to find a new PCP but also could t make the hour drive to see me at my new location. The commute was annoying for me, but ultimately the only ones truly hurt were patients. Let's stop hurting our patients by restricting their ability to see their physicians."
Ryan	"I am bound to a non compete in my job my company pays me less than other companies for the same position. I would like to advance in my career after 13 years

	but my company will not promote me. Other companies have expressed interest but once they hear I have a non compete they are no longer interested. I have lost out on great positions and great pay raises not being able to move to other companies. So here I sit I can't leave my company for another, even if they let me go I'm still bound to the non compete. I am not an executive I am about the lowest on the ladder in my company, please remove non competes ."
John	"I am a Home Instead franchisee owning 1 franchise and employing approximately 105 individuals in the community. I am writing to discuss how the noncompete agreement that I was required to sign in connection with the signing of my franchise agreement negatively affects my business and me. In August 2021, our franchisor — Home Instead, Inc. — was purchased by Honor Technology, Inc. — a private-equity/venture-capital backed entity. I had no say in that purchase and was not informed of it until after it happened. Honor is attempting to fundamentally change our franchisee-franchisor relationship and business model in a way that I do not support. I am now in an involuntary contractual relationship with an entity that I did not choose and would prefer not to be. But because of the noncompete agreement, I effectively am unable to leave the relationship, even when the term of my existing franchise agreement ends. Since last I signed what was already an oppressive, one-sided, franchise agreement, the franchisor has removed its obligation to provide franchisees with any support. Additionally, the new franchisor has announced that it intends to change our royalty from 5% to a 4% to 7% range, shorten the term of the franchise agreement from 10 years to 5 years, raise performance standards, and require us to provide monthly financial statements. I do not support any of these changes. I have two choices when my franchise agreement ends: I must renew my contract on completely new, non-negotiable terms or, because of the noncompete agreement, I must completely leave a business that I have spent years building. If I choose the latter, the noncompete clause in my franchise agreement requires me to walk away from my existing business, and it severely limits my ability to create or own another similar business. The economic penalty of not renewing is just overwhelming, thereby forcing me to renew with an entity and agree to terms that I would not otherwise do. As such, I ask that you consider banning post-contract non-compete clauses in franchise agreements. Thank you for your time."
Adeeb	"I am absolutely 100% behind the proposed ban. As a physician this has placed many of the US Medical force in chains when it comes to providing healthcare to our particular localities. I have personally been part of a malignant work environment and it was my first job out of residency, had to leave because of an unsafe work environment but slapped with 2 year restrictive covenant 25 miles radius from the hospital. Had to move to find work when I could easily worked for the competing hospitalist group if this wasn't in place. This affects many more like me. Eliminating the clause would make employers improve work conditions and salaries to compete with other groups for the best providers medicine can produce. These non-competes inhibit Medical job growth and ultimately Americans continue to suffer due to their enforcement."
Tracy	"Please ban non compete clauses. They hurt working Americans."

Cel	"Non-compete limits healthcare options. Only business owners win. Patients lose."
Samuel	"This is a great thing and I agree and support this. This will enable more freedom for us Americans to work where we want to and help our families and not be locked down by where we work. And the data shows our salaries can go up as well and be able to better take care of ourselves and hopefully need to rely less on social services to support our family."
Austin	"Non-competes, by their nature, are a means for corporations to stifle competition, reduce wages and shift power from the workers to themselves. Many that are enacted are also incredibly broad, effectively trapping employees at their current place of work. With some highly specialized industries and skill sets, there are few options for employment and the non-compete can make it so that the employee in question has no opportunity to leave. This can end careers and drive skilled talent out of not just the area, but potentially the country. Most states have right to work laws, and this gives them huge leverage over individuals when they know they can ban them from the industry. This rule should be put into place for the good of the economy and the country."
Ram	"Fully support this rule to eliminate non-compete clauses in contracts"
Mohan	"My services are needed for the community and non compete prevents this. I'm an oncologist and continuity of care matters to cancer patients. It's a dis service to humanity and violation of human rights and obstruction of hippocratic oath."
Sushma	" Physicians should not be excluded. We are human too with regular lives kids and families"
Kishan	" Physicians should not be excluded from these rules as it would be discriminatory. Physicians deserve the same protections as other employees"
Ronica	"Non competes for medical professionals should be eliminated Non competes compromise patient care. In rural Or underserved areas, enforcing non competes can virtually eliminate a patients access to care within a reasonable radius. In addition employers already have a virtual monopoly on physician employment opportunities and non compete clauses further narrow options which has dramatic effects on future earnings and family lite. Non competes only benefit hospital corporations and PE"
Mark	"As a physician currently employed with a noncompete clause in my contract, I strongly support the abolishment of this. I should be able to practice freely where I reside now after being here for many years and where I have built a life and home, if ever I decide to leave my current employer."
Andrew	"Competition should be allowed. I have suffered horrible service for years because there was only one feasible option in my area."

Dido	"This is such an important step towards workers freedom and I fully support! I've worked with an explicit non-compete clause in my employment, and I understood its importance for the small start-up business I was working for. For small businesses, they make a lot of sense. But for larger businesses and corporations, I think they heavily and unnecessarily restrict the freedom of a worker to quit when they want and work for someone else included a potential competitor who is making a better offer. I'm happy to see this non-compete clause happening, and I hope to see it come to fruition!"
William R.	"Non-completes (NC's) need to end. Businesses are using the excuse of NC's and keeping trade secrets to oppress workers when they can be using a Non-Disclosure Agreement (NDA). This only harms employees and their freedom to look for better opportunities and brighter future."
Rebecca	"I have worked in and managed a salon who used non-compete contracts and saw first hand the damage it did to those affected employees. One of those employees is a young woman I know personally and professionally. She is currently being enslaved, exploited, and suppressed due to a noncompete. This non-compete was presented to her after she had already accepted her position within the company and therefore had little negotiation leverage. She is a single mother and needed this job to provide for herself and her children. Starting as an assistant to the stylists and through hard work, continuing education, grit, and long hours, she has worked her way up to being one of the lead stylists. Her non-compete contract dictates that upon resignation and even termination, she is unable to work in any capacity in the cosmetology industry within a 25 mile radius for 18 months. She has asked to be released from her current non-compete contract but has been denied and threatened on all occasions. She has personally hired several labor attorneys to determine if there are any legal terms on which she can leave - which there have not been. She is now quite literally stuck in a work environment with no room for personal or professional growth and development and no choice but to continue to be subject to the owners whims - recently including unfair commission splits. The detrimental consequences of signing that contract have taken her greatest professional assets - her years of hard work and earned skills - and turned them into a liability as she is now prevented from doing the one thing she knows how to do. Her mobility is frozen and any bargaining power and sharing of company earnings, has declined. There is no incentive for negotiation when the owner of the company knows she cannot leave. I petition you to ban non-competes and can attest to the fact that they block personal entrepreneurial goals, suppress wages, and most certainly exploit employees."
Lee	"A practicing anesthesiologist and pain management physician. I am in support of ending non-compete clauses as they apply to physicians. These clauses are frequently cited as necessary for some reasons as I have listed below 1. Reduce physician turnover and therefore increase stability and continuity of care for patients. 2. non-competition agreements legitimately protect employers' investments in providing specialized training for doctors while preventing unfair competition. 3. loss of the employer's confidential business information. 4. loss of patients from established practices to departing physicians. The truth is that they are enforced in order to protect the business owner be that a physician, a private equity group, or a

	hospital system. If a company provides such excellent service as many large hospital system love to tout, then patients would remain with the company because of its own attributes. Not leave because their physician has left. If a physician is appropriately compensated then why would they ever wish to leave the practice? In my own case, I can share a brief story. My first job was in upstate NY where my wife was from. There are not an abundance of options for a physician to choose from. I chose and was hired by a hospital system to enforced a 60mile, 2 year non-compete. When I realized I was unhappy with the job and attempted to have discussions with hospital management, the same answers always came. "At the end of the day, with your non-compete you would have to move. Is this worth you uprooting your family for?" The answer eventually was yes. I left an underserved area in dire need of physicians because of my non-compete. I would have transferred to another employment opportunity otherwise. Never was there a concern over taking patients, proprietary information, or concern over training I may have received. It was further stated clearly to me by the department head, "we have this non-compete so you can't just take a better offer somewhere else. It keeps your salary in check." That is the basis of this. These non-competes are only enforced to limit the growth, employment opportunities, and income opportunities of physicians. I am saddened the American Medical Association has asked for no ruling to be made. Their only argument can be that this would lead to higher patient care provider turnover. This can't be done at the expense of physician's right to work and our inherent rights in a free market economy. You have the opportunity to make individuals professionals again instead of employees who are losing their rights with no ability for recourse other than to leave and uproot."
Terrell	"I support getting rid of them. I am currently constrained by one."
christopher	"As a healthcare worker (nurse practitioner) who has been adversely affected by non competes since the inception of my career, I strongly urge the FTC to proceed with a complete and total ban on non-competes and NOT only apply this ban to workers who are lower income, or meet certain income thresholds, or have certain jobs. Reading through other comments you can see how the current non compete landscape is negatively impacting everyone, and not just lower income or skilled workers. I've seen numerous comments from physicians, nurses, pharmacists, vets, nurse practitioners and PAs, dentists. I read through the proposed alternatives. I don't see any reason the FTC would make the monumental change and then only restrict the ban to certain incomes or jobs. This would further divide who the ban helps and hurts when everyone is hurting from it. In my opinion, no employee benefits from a non compete regardless of income. We should NOT be penalizing employees earning a higher income. They also need to provide for their families. Non competes crush the healthcare industry and many physicians, PAs, nurse practitioners who are earning income over $100,000 a year also have their careers and income potential negatively impacted by the existence of non-competes that are rampant in healthcare. I still struggle to provide fully for my family and plan for our future as a one income household living in a high cost of living area. Healthcare workers devote their lives and careers to helping others. I used to work a few jobs having 3-5 flexible income sources but now I am limited to one job and it only hurts me, my career, and family. I support a complete and total ban that does not restrict certain income levels

	or groups of workers. Healthcare workers are the LAST group of people who would care about company "trade secrets?" and sharing company information from one to the next. We simply want to have the freedom in our careers to grow, provide for ourselves and our families, and help our patients. Give the power back to the people who deserve it, the workers!"
Amy	"Non-competes are stifling growth and well-being of the American Economy. I developed a strategy to create a storm safe community, Babcock Ranch, that endured Hurricane Ian just off the Florida coast with little to no damage, and has been featured nationally for its unique engineering design. I was recently fired from my job, however, due to a conflict of personalities, not because of anything work product or ethics related; and I have a non-compete, that will not allow me to obtain work within my field of expertise, utilizing a design I created myself, prior to even joining the firm I was fired from; which will set America back as a whole from advancements in developing communities in a more resilient manner to endure extreme storm events with little loss."
Daniel	"Hi, I'm a software engineer, US citizen, and a resident of Florida. I commend the FTC's decision to look into banning non-compete agreements. Non-compete agreements were originally intended for key executives at a company. However, they've come to be broadly used by line workers as well and it's purely to suppress competition. I think that the decision to ban them outright (except perhaps in limited circumstances, such as owners of a company agreeing not to compete when the company is acquired) would be the correct one, but short of that, companies that want to enforce non-competes should at least need to pay out salaries. In other words, you don't want me to compete? Fine, pay me to not work during that period. The current situation is not tenable. Most employees have very little ability to negotiate the boilerplate language in contracts. Meanwhile, employers are incentivized to have non-compete clauses in their contracts, even when it hardly benefits them."
Chon	"In light of hospitals being a monopoly and using noncompetes to usurp this power. One needs to realize the only way to allow prices of healthcare to drop is to allow competition. The only way for states to not lose their doctors is to allow them to practice where they live."
Thanh	"Non-compete should be abolished for all workers and employees, including and especially for physicians. For too long, this has stifled fair trade and hampered the ability of physicians to continue to practice in an area and prevent them a means to make a living. Abolishing non-compete will create fairness as well as promoting patient care so they can continue to be cared for by doctors who know them."
Thanh	"It is unfair and should be eliminated. This rule has caused too much adversity and hardship upon US physicians far too long. We should be allowed to work for our livelihood when one opportunity closes. It is also for the good of our patients so they can continue to receive care from physicians they know once they end their previous employment."

Uyen	"Please allow non compete to apply to physicians . I was hired for a job in Sarasota; however after looking at the contract, I refused to sign since it is not in alignment with my goal. The hospital itself approaches me and wishes to hire me with better contract. They were unable to do so because the recruiter company has already presented me to the hospital. And they can't hire me without a big buy out. That costs me an opportunity with this hospital. Although I've never signed any contract it's still somehow enforced in the recruiter and the hospital 's side"
Michele	"Non-compete clauses, much like employer provided health care, prevent mobility and free choice in making career moves and job choices and this is true in any level of employment. As a clinical social worker , I have avoided taking jobs where I was required to sign NCC because it too severely restricted my ability to choose my own path and have far too much control to the agency or employer over me as a person and my intellectual development as a commodity, seeing my skills as a tool for the company to utilize, rather than allowing me to choose where I could go to work that would benefit me the most."
Jerry	"Noncompete is a scare tactic. The company that I dedicated myself to for the last 5 years just sent me a letter from their attorney. I did not like what was happening in management, dismissing co-workers before Christmas and replacing them with inexperienced personnel. So I proceeded to find a job further away because I don't need any of their customers and just wanted a fresh start. Now they are trying to scare me and my family. If they worry about taking care of employees as much as they worry about this, I think they wouldn't have to moony about their company."
Vicki	"As an emergency medicine physician , I support the FTC's proposed rule to ban noncompete clauses. I would also ask that the exemption for non-profit hospitals be removed from this rule. Noncompete clauses in physician contracts are harmful to physicians, patients and their community. When a physician, especially an emergency physician, is restricted from practicing at a particular hospital or geographic location it is detrimental to the community to lose their expertise and knowledge in order to protect business interests. Emergency physicians have no proprietary knowledge for these clauses to be necessary in their contracts. Noncompetes area tool used by corporations and hospitals to hamper EM physicians from changing jobs easily and prevent them from staying in their home area and serving their communities."
Sally	"Non competes are killing the average person"
Brian	"In this day and age where corporate medicine overwork and underpay physician employees, the non compete clauses that are commonly placed in physician contracts hinder physician efforts to seek a stable 'home base area' to raise their families. Corporate medicine thinks nothing of ending a physician's employment for any reason, and on top of that, they enforce the physician's non compete clause to force them to move/relocate outside the enforced area, upending their families lives. I have moved at least 7 times in my career to different cities because of non compete clauses, which wreaked havoc on my career, ended my marriage, and upended a stable home life for my children. All this could have been averted if I was allowed to seek employment elsewhere at a nearby hospital that was inside the enforcement are of my non compete clauses. For this reason I support the ban of Non compete clauses for MDs/DOs in medicine"

Joseph	"I am a Family Practice Physician in Zephyrhills Florida. As an employee of Advent Health I was obligated preferentially use medical specialties in the Advent Health System. When I left Advent to work at a different health system I was required to be at a distance of 5 miles for 1 year. This was inspire of 19 years of loyal service. Advent usually enforces 15 miles. My elderly patients were inconvenienced tremendously in traveling to a different town to seek continuity of care with their provider"
D.	"Please eliminate non-compete clauses. It makes no sense from a personal rights or right to work perspective."
Alissa	"Please pass this for the medical field at minimum I am a physician . I joined a small practice owned by physician but lie sold to private equity and I did not realize that I would get sold with the sale too and my non-compete is still valid. So this means that my entire patient panel that I have worked hard to build and for whom I care immensely, would no longer have access to me should I decide that I don't like working for this huge corporation. And honestly I don't like it....But if I choose to get another job I have to go far enough away that most of my patients would never be able to drive to me. So by enforcing non-competes on physicians, you limit healthcare unfairly to the patients. The patients are the one that suffer because their doctor disappears. And the company usually will not tell the patients where you went. They will say that you're retired or moved away with complete dishonesty. And it makes us physicians feel trapped because we don't want to abandon our patients. Please help."
M	"This non-complete clause practice should be changed immediately. It stops competition, which is the bedrock of the free enterprise system."
18 years	"Non-competes have followed me my entire career. It creates an environment of animosity because in order to progress or try experience new things in the workplace, I have to move geographically and leave my patients behind. Currently, the organization I work for in Florida has clinics in all major cities. If I chose to leave, I have to uproot my family and leave the state. My move would still be limited as they are present in the 2 states we would be interested to moving. I have no recourse to ask for a raise or changes in benefits, because they know I don't want to move my family. It holds me back financially and my patients lose when I move away and disrupt their care. Nobody wins. Disgruntled works stuck in a job they no longer want doesn't help companies or workers. Please abolish the non-compete clause in Florida and nationally."
Daniel	"The time to ban non-compete clauses is long overdue. Please support this rule change that will improve the lives of millions of American workers and shift the imbalance of power in labor relations away from employers."

Ryan	"Please ensure that all non compete clause removal applies to physicians as well. Non competes in physician employment absolutely stifle competition for wages and force physician families to often relocate to entirely different states rather than across town if a job change is needed. We are not exposed to hospital propriety informationwe ourselves are the information. Without us there is no health system, it is not like a tech or marketing company where access to code or business strategy may compromise the company we leave. Non competes for physicians are in many ways a form of slavery....we may be moderately paid slaves, however those clauses effectively dictate ownership of our services, despite us holding all the critical information in our clinical ability. It's absolutely wrong, and time it was changed. Inflation adjusted most physician wages have been on the decline for decades, while part of this is due to Medicare part B legislation, the other aspect is hospital employers have a huge amount of leverage over physicians due to non competes. When you have to leave the state , sell your home, move your kids to different schools, all because of a ridiculous clause it's insane, esp when no corporate proprietary information is at play. Are there overheads for physicians...(hospital justification typically) ...absolutely, but that is the cost of business. Take a construction company or farming company , you think that there are not enormous overhead costs ? Cost of an excavator for construction or cost of a combine harvesterabout 750k on average per piece of equipment , excluding maintenance costssignificantly more than anything a physician has in overhead , but do you see heavy equipment operators or farm workers have non competes with their employer ? No it would be a total joke. So why is it not a joke for physicians? Time to get real and tell the C suite folks to give us real wages and stop holding an axe over our heads with non competes Reality is that there is no hospital , no revenue without physicians. It's time to treat us with a little more respect instead of threatening us all the time. They know we can't walk out because of these clauses and the impact on our families. No one will enter medicine the way things are going. Who do you want to treat your kids and grandkids ? You want an A grade student or the C grade student doing your brain surgery ? It's your choice, but it's time to act."
Ricardo	"This is America. Competition is the bedrock of american exceptionalism and capitalism. Non-compete clauses are a malicious tactic that destroys healthy capitalism. I'm in favour of ending non-compete clauses."
Sarah	"Hello, as a Clinical Psychologist I strongly support the banning of non-compete clauses. These clauses place an unfair burden on the employee and are exploitative in nature."
Victoria	"As a Family Medicine Physician I find myself professionally limited by non compete clauses. Currently, my Non compete contract bans me from practicing medicine in 3 consecutive counties. As a young physician, with over $450k student loan burden, I should be able to provide my services without a geographical limitation. Non compete clauses cost physicians thousands of dollars by being forced to relocate to avoid legal action against us. I am 100% supportive on eliminating non compete clauses and allowing the free market to regular based on demand."

Zane	"I was hired as a county school officer Guardian in 2019 and only After the initial process and 30 or so of us had left our previous jobs and were sitting together in a classroom were we told we could not work for anyone else including in the summer when school was out and we would have no work at the schools. We were not able to work anywhere with the training we had including some who had our own companies. Noncompete enforcement or agreements should NOT exist... PERIOD."
David	"Please abolish noncompete and restrictive contracts they are hurting Americans. I cant provide for my family right now because of these restrictions."
Jesse	"Please pass this!"
Sandi	"My husband is currently unemployed because of the noncompete law. He's been employed since 2015 and was let go in September 2022 because he supposedly wasn't the leader they wanted but yet they aren't allowing him to work within the industry because of the noncompete Agreement. Even though he found employment an hour away from this company, they sent him a letter a through a attorney, threatening legal action if he did not terminate his employment with this company.. This is in no way affecting their company, but it is affecting our family as he is the main income earner, we have three teenagers at home, and I have been a stay at home mom with part-time work occasionally."
Ahmad	"I strongly support this long overdue proposal to ban non-competes, given that the vast majority of the world has nothing like this in healthcare, nor do the vast majority of other US industries (except physician employment). This is unethical and a disservice to both physicians and the patients they serve."
A	"I fully agree in abolishing this law. As a healthcare worker me and all my coworkers are bound by a non compete that means moving to a different city if we want to take on a higher paying job while practicing medicine. Employers should not be allowed to control the life of people once they decide to leave the job."
Faith	"I'm bound by a non compete that doesn't allow me to accept an offer in the whole produce industry because they reference subsidiaries and affiliates. I'm a credit manager I don't have proprietary information and shouldn't have to worried that I will sued WI want to better myself and change jobs. I'm trapped in a job I really don't want to stay in. This is so unfair."
David	"I have been in contract with Baptist Primary Care in Jacksonville for 20 years. The organization has unilaterally changed the conditions of my work at least a dozen times in that time. I live and work in the small town where I grew up and will never leave. I feel trapped in this organization by a noncompete."
Ozlem	"I strongly believe that banning noncompete clauses for physicians is a beneficial decision. Noncompete clauses limit a physician's ability to practice in their chosen field and can lead to a decrease in quality of care for patients. With a ban in place, physicians would have more freedom to practice where they choose and would be able to provide more comprehensive care for their patients. Noncompete clauses can also create a monopoly, allowing certain practices to dominate the field and drive-up prices. By banning noncompete clauses, competition in the medical field would be increased, leading to lower costs for patients. One potential gap in the FTC proposed rule, however, is that it wouldn't apply to nonprofit health systems, and a majority of hospital systems in the U.S. are classified this way. Finally, a ban on noncompete clauses would protect physicians from unfair contracts and ensure they are able to practice in the best interests of their patients. This is particularly important when we have significant issues related to physician burnout and shortage in the country."

Rosemary N	"I support the proposed non-compete clause rule."
Gabriel	"I fully support this! Physicians, surgeons, nurses, nurses practitioners should not be excluded from this. Physicians are being hurt by non compete clauses and many times they have to move to another city to continue working..."
Sarah	"Please do not exempt physicians"
Amit	"Abolish none competes! Also for None profits!!! In a job where it restricts me from the ENTIRae East coast!!!! Medicine is unfair! Abolish it!"
Divya	"Hello, I don't think non-compete clauses are fair to employees. I am a physician and I have found that main reason they are used to prevent clinicians from having their patients follow them to the new organization. However, this benefits the original employer but not the patients. Patients generally prefer to keep seeing their doctor. Non-competes places the needs of employer above the patients. The clauses are used for financial purposes, but the patients needs are not considered when these clauses are in place."
Koran	"I am physician and I had to leave a previous practice and ultimately leave town because if non-compete. My practice was a small cardiology practice about 4 cardiologist but they have multiple offices in town and they asking a noncomepete 15 miles from each office some of these offices they rent for 1-2 days a week, one office they barely could have enough patients in that they were sending patients across town to be seen there but they deliberately kept that office because me and another cardiologist lived close to that office technically that would be a deterant to both of us to move because it will technically put us out of work and we have to move from our houses because if non compete They threatened me that if I move I can not go to so and so hospitals close to my house because if non-compete I threatened that I will sue and question the legitimacy of this non compete but ultimately figured that it will be a lot of money and need to move so I moved to a different state worked for the VA basically because I have so much of hard time signing with a private practice after what happened Noncomepete is not used to protect any legitimate business it is just used to reign in employees and coerce them to accepting bad deals. Noncomepete is you punishment if you asked for better condition or wanted to negotiate anything It is a absolutely preposterous that is needed to protect business Absolutely no reason for it other than to reign in and force physicians to accept what ever terms the practice through at you Original Comment I am physician and I had to leave a previous

Krista	"Please pass the banning of the non compete clause. So many doctors who have worked so hard their whole lives to get to where they are are stuck in horrible jobs or situations because of these non competes and these big companies know they are stuck which give them the leverage to under pay and overwork them. Then they have to move their families to different cities to escape. These big hospital system and companies have too much power. Enough is enough."
Parth	"Please make noncompete clause is invalid. These only suppress the potential of an employee in there for the growth potential of the country as a whole."
Pk	"Non compete agreement is taking away the physician of choice from hundreds of thousands of patients every year. This must stop."
Pranavkumar	"As a hospitalist there should be no non-compete.. we take care of patients that get admitted through the ER, we do not influence the business aspect of hospital in any capacity, please eliminate the non-compete clause .."

Roshan	"Physician should not have non compete. They should be allowed to change the job without being harassed by corporate structure just like other workers...."
Himanshu	"The non compete rule should be banned forever. Hurts the worker and reduces competition for employer. It can force people to stay in a job that they hate due to the employers I'll treatment/bullying etc." environments due to family and other personal issues due to lack of choice. This has led to in many cases almost abuse of many physicians."

Sandhya	"I am a physician and life has taken us places and major inconveniences due to this particular cause. While patients would still find and follow us regardless, this is unfair to both us and patients. we all stand a right to see the physician provider that we are comfortable with regardless of who they are employed by. I even had employers threaten through written communication that they will pursue legally if I pursued employment against that clause and a reminder always comes through upon termination reminding us of the clause. And they are all major players that we as tiny representatives cannot afford to fight back. The clause is outright unfair!!"
Robert	"Please do away with non competes. As they hurt local people who work in industries and also hurt other businesses in industry. It is not fair especially in states like fl where you can get fired for anything but can't get another job in the same industry."
Stuart	"As an orthopaedic surgeon who has been affected by a non compete contract, I applaud the move to outlaw this activity. This is anticompetitive behaviour by employers. A physician will not leave an employer if they are working in an environment that respects and supports them. Restrictive covenants are a form of indentured servitude. If you elect to resign from the company, you and your family are forced to relocate 15-50 miles away from ANY of their places of employment. In some cases, that entails moving to counties remote from your established home. Hugely disruptive and financially devastating for a family. Patients lose their established physician. Ironically, an attorney has no restrictions as to where they practice after leaving an employer in Florida. Grossly unfair situation."
Kym	"Hello, I have a friend that is a hairstylist . She is trying to open her own salon, but she signed a non compete and has to be 25 miles from this salon. Please stop this! Thank you!"
Alex	"This would be a tremendous change for our country, as well as our economy. America is built on free enterprise and the freedom of its people, or atleast, that's what it's supposed to be built on. If the FTC goes through with this, they will only be reinforcing these principles. Workers' rights have long been, and often ignored in America. Now, the FTC has a chance to make a real change. A change that will positively affect America, its families, and the economy, by greatly expanding the number of opportunities given to each and every U.S. citizen. This rule supports everything that I believe America is and what it should be about. So please, go through with this."
Vamsi	"This will be a welcome change. Will make changing jobs easier and open up free/fair market into jobs. Remove unnecessary/unfair restrictions by employers."
Katherine	"I would like to state my opposition to non-compete clauses and support legislation to make them invalid. Once serving a purpose to protect companies, they have become far too rigid and truly stifle an individual's ability to gain employment not only in their industry but across various industries."

Daniel	"My mother and I have both been locked into companies but non compete clauses. They limited our mobility and made it so that we had to choose a different field of work or state/county we could work within. They unfairly protect a company's workforce, not the secrets they should be hoping to protect. A well crafted NDA could accomplish the same outcome and it is anti competitive to continue to allow companies to trap employees this way."
Javier	"I am in favor of eliminating draconian in compete clauses that only favor employers and hamper healthy competition. I am a solo practitioner/surgeon and welcome this reform."
Jesus M	"I'm 100% in favor of banning non compete agreement it is abusive and prevents worker to get better jobs / salaries. as soon as an employee signs a Non compete, management becomes abusive and exploit the worker."
Sarah	"I first off want to start off by saying that I am not a democrat. I am a free market capitalist republican and I think that banning non compete across the country is the single best thing that the Biden administration has proposed. This should have STRONG bi partisan support. If politicians truly care about Americans and our well being, this is a no brainer. No company should have the ability to prevent an employee from seeking a job with their competitor. Banning these archaic socialist forms of over reach would truly require accountability from corporate America. For far too long companies have had a choke hold on american citizens that require them to stay in a job where they are not happy or treated properly. If someone is unhappy with their current job with their current company for whatever reason, they should be totally free to choose to go to another organization in the same general field. I read today that the US chamber is challenging this and their logic is absolutely ridiculous. No "trade secrets" or other proprietary info will be lost if this is allowed to take effect. Those are and should be patented and copyrighted. Companies can take extra measure to make sure that any info such as that is fully protected which I support. I want to take a second to touch on non competes for a specific industry and that is medical providers. This is an appalling practice which stifles patient choice and and on its face is illegal in my opinion. How in the world does a hospital organization restrict a providers medical license? Because that is exactly what non competes are in the medical field. They are prevented from practicing medicine in a state or zip code because of a contract they had to sign to get a job. The only entity that is able to restrict medical licenses is a state medical board. End. of Story. Non compete contracts are contradictory to the principles of free market which our country is founded on. If a customer is able to take their business elsewhere, than the employees should be able to take their TRADE elsewhere too. I will go one step further and say that I also think it should be illegal for a company to not tell former clients, if they call and ask, where the former employee is now doing business from. That is a company making a choice for a client or patient if this medical in nature. We do not do that in America. That is not in line with any principles we abide by. It is time that corporate america and healthcare companies put their money where their big fat mouth is. A true free market does not support non compete contracts. I also think it is within the FTCs ability to ban these under Section 5. This is without a doubt unfair methods of competition. Make sure you all use that bit about medical non competes...because it is well documented who and for what reasons a medical license can be restricted and under no circumstance can a hospital do this Just as an FYI. This same theory can also be applied to any license someone has to obtain to work. It is time for a change in this country. Any opposition to this is only because employers are afraid that they will lose the control they have to keep people working for them, even though they do not care about said employees. Fight hard for this, I know you all have great attorneys. Both sides of the political spectrum are behind you on this. Thank you!"

Elsa	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth because people come before profits. If you are valued then you reflect that. This includes the right to get a better job, without having to worry that your employer will punish you for deciding to leave your present position. Just like indentured servants were a bad idea, non-compete clauses in an employment contract will do more harm than good for the people it effects."
Michael	"As an emergency physician currently bound by a non-compete, I wholeheartedly support the unfair practice of non-compete clauses. I take great issue, however, with the exception for non-profits. I currently work for a non-profit and feel that it is unfair that my employer should keep its ability to unfairly limit my job-seeking rights. Furthermore, non-profit status these days is stretched far beyond what one would innocently believe it to mean. Please ban non-compete clauses for all employers!"
Mary	"As a single mother, I support ending non compete contracts... I have experienced verbal and emotional abuse from an employer knowing they have the upper hand and I have no choice but to endure the difficult miserable work environment because going to look for a healthier work environment with benefits is not possible with my non compete! Please end the non compete contracts ASAP so I can find a healthy work situation where I can grow my career in a positive direction with growth and benefits for my family rather than being stuck in a misleading situation bound by a contract that is not in my favor My employer demanded I sign the contract AFTER I started working there and since I needed a job to support my family and had already started and was hoping for the best, I felt pressured into it"
Edward	"Competition is the critical element that makes free markets work. It is the "invisible hand" alluded to by Adam Smith. Noncompete clauses are anti-competition. Competition is the lifeblood of a free market system. It lowers prices, forces all competitors to improve their products and/or services, while rewarding the best. In the aggregate it boosts profits, elevates, wages, generates more tax revenues, and raises living standards."
Patrick	"Totally support this rule. An individual that works diligently for many years and is then forced out to allow younger less expensive employees to take over the accounts they have built relationships with is a common practice within companies these days. So the employee is limited to either staying and being paid less or leaving and forced to take on a new role with no experience. The employee suffers and good competition is eliminated via the non-compete process."

Mary Frances	"So I know this will probably never be seen. But I'm a doctor and so is my husband. His company was bought several years ago and the new company has been very difficult to work with. He is a cancer surgeon and he and his current partner are the only ones in 100 miles that do the type of surgeries he does. If he could not work the care for cancer patients would greatly be affected. A new opportunity in the area opened up and he wants to take it. The opportunity would be great for him. He has a non compete with his current company who 1. Didn't help establish his practice 2. Is actively reducing his staff due to the company doing poorly 3. Is very disrespectful to him. He's a doctor he has no company secrets. Why should we have to move out of a town where we have established our lives and children for a company that is actively hurting him? Patients will suffer. The only one that benefits is a large company that doesn't have to take care of their employees"
David	"I fully support the proposed rule. As a practicing physician who recently left a medical practice, I now will have to commute 2 hours per day to stay in town and work or be forced to move away or do out of town Locum work as the 2 year noncompete forces me to travel or stay in a position that no longer gives me professional satisfaction. Thank you for addressing this long overdue issue!"
Jared	"Non-compete agreements have caused me and my family increased struggles and burdened out lives. Please ban this practice"
Tyler	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I am a Family Physician and I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I have heard many stories from other doctors about the negative effects of non competes. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Matthew	"I am currently unable to work in my county as a Florida licensed Home Inspector . The non compete prohibits me from working within 100 miles and areas that they plan to do business in fir a period of 2 years. I am no longer working with this company due to scheduling conflicts and issues receiving the hours that were in my offer letter. I am part of a family of five and should have a right to work in my state without an employer telling me that I cannot. My license, my education and certifications are basically worthless now and I was sent an exit letter stating that I need to find work outside of the Home Inspection world. I beg of people to pay attention to the fact that we let employers have this kind of power and control over someone else's career path just because of fear of competition. I definitely support this ban and feel that this should never have been allowed in the first place."

Beata	"Noncompete clauses limit physicians who have dedicated their life to patient care, and in turn limit their own lives by restricting the physician from making career changes that would allow for growth, family support, and personal reasons. Current non-compete clauses force doctors to work in what may be subpar conditions and don't give them the flexibility they deserve to move to a better job opportunity without compromising pay, or many times forcing the doctor to pick up their family and move for a better life. Non compete needs to be removed!"
Gayan	"I support the dissolution of non-compete clauses. As a physician , it is an undo burden to have to completely relocate yourself and your family if you are unhappy with your employer, and no compromise can be made. Physicians should not be forced to remain in unsupportive or toxic work environments just to stay in their home."
Ilana	"I am a physician . Due to non compete clauses, I've had to move states every time I've wanted to change jobs. The public and my patients lose out because I have to leave them. I don't even have a clinic as I'm hospital based. Please please please get rid of non competes for physicians"
Michael	"It seems like a non-compete clause is a violation of basic capitalistic principles. Just about the ONLY power a worker has is to choose for whom he or she works. Does capital have to own labor outright?"
Joseph	"Non compete clauses provide no value to the often stated purpose to protect organizational interests without unduly suppressing future employment options. The fact is, if an employee has valuable company data they don't need to be employed by a competing organization to wrongfully disclose the data. Non competes should be banned. There are other methods to provide sufficiently negative consequences and are better suited to obtain the desired outcome without unnecessarily damaging employment options."
Dan	"Non-competes force salaries down because you can't leave and people can't entice you with better pay or benefits. I'll never sign a non-compete. Your employer can treat you like total shit, but then you're supposed to stay? No, I will not."
Karla	"I have anon compete in staffing agency I worked only 2 months and is a small agency they put me a restriction in Miami and Broward for 2 year and I close 2 accounts for this agency. That the Benedict's are very important in money increase every month. The owner send me 2 intimidates emails remind me that I can't work in Miami and Broward for 2 years for this non compete. I'm a single mother. I received another offer as a regional manager in another states Im working outside of Miami right now but I feel is unfair this non compete and even he doesn't want to negotiate and intimidate to me with a bigger lawyer company"
Lisette	" As a single mom, I fully support the ban on non competes. I have been stuck in a job with no opportunity for advancement or salary increase, all while being bound by a non compete agreement. It's incredibly frustrating to know that you could potentially work for a competitor for better pay and benefits, but you're unable to do so because of your contract. The struggle to support and provide for your children is an added stress that no one should have to bear. I wholeheartedly support the need for reform around non compete agreements, to ensure that workers are given the freedom to pursue better opportunities and improve their quality of life."

Sionis	"This rule has been a long time coming. I have worked as a contractor for over 25 yrs. And one thing that very much hampered my growth was/is the Non- Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) If this rule passes, then it will be a great day for those of us that had to take a job and got stuck not being able to move onward and upward because of the fear of being sue. ."
Nicklaus	"I believe that non-compete agreements are a danger to small businesses as myself I've been with the same accountant for years and she's no longer with that firm. But, due to a NC, I'm no longer able to utilize her. I've never heard from the firm after her departure and nothing has been done with my files. It's become hard to find an accountant that will take on my multiple businesses right in the middle of tax season. Non-competes only hurt the consumer."
Leo	"I can't begin to tell you what detriments non-compete clauses have done to my career. What gives the right for a company to tell me what to do with my life? What gives them the right to say I can't work in my chosen field where I live? After years of dealing with this dilemma, I support banning them, non- competes, like California has done. Give the rights back to the American workers!"
Eduardo	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician/medical staff shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians/medical staff either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Brian	"I am against no compete contracts. It robs a person of their livelihood, and their ability to make a living in the area of their dwelling and family. Often times it leaves customers in an uncomfortable situation, where they no longer have the services they desire because they cannot freely function in the market with the person they are most comfortable with. Please make a common sense decision and ban all current and existing noncompete clauses."
Charma	"It is unethical and unwise to force healthcare workers into non-compete clauses. It prevents providers from diversifying themselves and the healthcare system. It enables facilities and companies to be unsafe and abuse their staff because they are less able to leave. It can uproot workers who are forced to relocate instead of choose somewhere near them, raising risk of burnout and worsening the ever-present issue of physician burnout. We need to regulate companies so they cannot abuse these people integral to our health system. There is no health system without the actual providers and caregivers. Protect them like they protect you."
Mary	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians . As you know, non-compete clauses

	restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. I am a primary care physician and due to a current noncompete clause will not be practicing primary care for at least one year. With the long wait times for primary care and shortage of physicians in general this has a large impact on my local community. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care. Thank you for your attention to this important matter."
Kayla	"I recently left a staffing company I was a branch manager with and they sent a demand to comply to my new company on my first day of employment! The non-compete that I signed is making it impossible for me to do my new job because I cannot touch any clients I did business with in my old company, even though the services are slightly different that we offer. It is hindering my ability to do my job and make money. I left my old job due to poor management and direct favoritism. I should not be punished."
Elizabeth	"Non-competes only help the hospital/corporations. Healthcare workers are leaving in record numbers. Removing non-competes can revitalize the work force. This is the governments opportunity to show they support the worker - REMOVE ALL NONCOMPETES"
Alfredo	"As a small business owner and startup co-founder, I very much recognize the arguments made by certain entities and individuals about the IP protections and legal benefits that come with non-compete agreements. However, I believe that NCAs are ultimately counterproductive toward general innovation and progress across business communities. NCAs also disproportionately impact lower-income and low-skilled workers who, unlike higher-income business executives, cannot leverage their way out of NCAs nor trade up skills or knowledge as easily as other workers. I strongly urge the FTC to ban NCAs for all workers. If a compromise must be taken, then I urge them to ban them for low-wage, low-skill laborers, at the very least."
Lu	"I worked with a Multi Level Marketing "MLM" (Young Living) who has made it impossible to share any other MLM opportunity regardless of if it is competing or not. A fellow friend is a naturopath practitioner who offers multiple modalities. When she shared another non-competing health supporting modality that happens to be offered in the MLM structure, they terminated her. The first reason was because she offered a product that was competing. When she proved to them that it was not competing, they claimed that the "Intent of use" of that product was competing. When she

	pointed out that the product shared is exactly like another company that they allow others to share that they consider non-competing they changed what the term "non-competing" means and that it was because instead she offered a competing BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY to their customers. This was not the case at all since she never offered the business opportunity at all in the one post, nor the one email she sent that got her terminated. Now she must wait 12 months to even share this other product with anyone. As a practitioner this is harmful to her practice, to her clients, and also to her ability to make a living. In this day and age where most people are purchasing online, it is not right to have these non-competes in place. People need to have freedom to purchase and sell what they choose to. MLMs should not be under different rules just because they have an opportunity attached to them. People should have the right and freedom to share what they want to share if it works for them. Please consider banning non-compete clauses for those in the MLM workspace"
Shannon	"While I have been fortunate enough to avoid non-competes through contract negotiations, I have seen many colleagues who have not. I have had colleagues who have needed to leave a place of employment, but had to either uproot their family or face a significantly burdensome commute to find new employment outside of their compete radius. When an employee or contractor feels the need to leave a work, they should be able to obtain new employment wherever they can. Non-competes cause a necessary burden for workers, and should be eliminated."
Juan	"Non compete clauses are unduly cruel, unethical and nearly immoral, especially in a day and age where market and personal freedom rule. Non competes allow big corporations to destroy people's lives, in the healthcare field a large established practice or hospital will seek to harm an individual physician, his/hers family, children and personal relationships, more importantly it also affects proper continuity of care and patient physician relationship deeply. Sure patients can see another physician, but not without struggle to bring their care up to date and many times with poorer rapport. I think non competes are quite unnecessary given the fact that there are plenty of patients for all to go around, when you call a practice and the next available new patient appointment is 2 months out it speaks volumes of how unnecessary it is to remove a physician from a 20 mile radius, which if multiple offices exists can become 100 miles in the blink of an eye. Please remove this arcaic practice and allow for the best to succeed over the big."
Darin	"Non-competes hurt workers significantly. They're often so broad in scope and employers use them to bully employees. Even if you're not directly competing, I've had to sign non competes that basically include my entire job I do, which is generic. I absolutely agree that the FTC should ban non competes and rescind existing ones. This will be a huge benefit to workers."
Raja	"As a physician, at the present time, I do telemedicine for an online psychiatry corporation in Georgia on a part time basis. When I applied for another part time telemedicine position for a different corporation in Florida (to treat patients only in Florida), I was told that other corporation in Georgia is a direct competitor for this corporation (in Georgia and Florida) and they would not hire me for that reason. I feel it is an unfair restriction on my ability to practice wherever I want. I am wondering if this new rule proposed resolve these types of restrictions. Thank you."

Kent	"Are noncompetes are fair? Seriously? I told an employer I needed a hernia operation and couldn't travel for several weeks. Unfortunately, I told them verbally. Let go 3 hours later and then they blocked me from taking a job with a competitor. I spent $5k on an attorney to try to negotiate with them. Really, this is fair? It nearly financially wiped me out as it took over a year to find another job. I almost moved to CA to stop this nonsense...."
D	"As a lifelong educator, business owner, entrepreneur, HR consultant, and head of household during the hiring process I have had several employers seek to impose a non-compete clause rule over their employers or consultants. Over the years I have signed non-compete but understand under no circumstance will any organization's policy documents, etc. prohibit me from advancing my career, and business goals, or increasing my revenue by what I create to appropriate well-being for me and my family. It is shameful that organizations think employees should create for them but wants to stop when an individual create on their own. My creativity belongs to me and not an organization and will not stop me from moving forward in the same industry with business, patents, products, and services. Organizations actually seek individuals from the same industry then they try to stop individuals from advancing their careers. No one has a monopoly on another person's career. A non-compete is unethical and should be banned because individuals will always do what is best for their career path and increased revenue."
Douglas	"Employers use non-competes to coerce employees into staying employed. Employees are not "competition." They're employees. These clauses make it impossible to leave a job without moving, selling a home, upending a family. The clause is not about competition at all!"
Etoshia	"For it"
Daniel	"Yes please eliminate the non compete. It is unfair to employees. I have been hurt and continue to be hurt by non compete clauses."
Louise	"I am a taxpaying US citizen. This proposal needs to pass unanimously. Current non-compete rule is preventing my freedom to choose the firm that represents myself, my husband and my company regarding accounting and income tax (and has for more than 10 years). Please understand the hardship on those that can not compete as well as those of us who should have the right to choose who represents and takes care of us."
Martina	"I believe non-compete clauses result in an inequitable balance of power between the employer and employee. Clauses such as these foster an environment of discrimination, unfair wages practices, and bias against promotion for those who want to continue living in a specific region or want to continue working in the same field of expertise. I support this proposed change."

Kendall	"Definitely support this idea. The rules for non-competes are too vague and discourage people seeking better opportunities within their own field."
Marimer	"I support banning non compete"
Rick	"No one should be required to sign a non-compete contract. Any exception should require a lawyer representing the employee (of the employee's choosing and paid for by the employer) to review any such document."
Donna	"Please ban noncompetes for physicians We are increasingly held by private equity. If we leave they have deep pockets to prosecute us. Our kids would like to stay in their community and schools.. We need to stop being punished for doing our jobs so well, that entities want to prevent us from providing the service for ourselves or someone else. We implore you to give us back this small inch of power"
Afonso	"No compete has hurt my career. I live in the backyard of one of the largest gi practices in America named gastrohealth Either you work for gastrohealth or you suffer the lifelong conflict of interest of working for a hospital. There is no other option, no gi doctor can survive in a solo practice around gastrohealth. We need to end monopoly! We need to be free to work anywhere we wish."
Stephen	"As a physician I think it is very important to abolish non-compete clauses. It not only hurts patients by restricting access to care but also physicians who devote themselves to the community they would have to move out of if non competes exist. Furthermore it gives healthcare corporations unilateral control over physicians who can't push back on business decisions that aren't in the best interest of patients. If a physician stands up to these healthcare corporations they could find themselves without a job and having to move out of the community they serve/love in order to find gainful employment. Non competes are predatory and allow companies to make decisions that are in their best interests not that of their employees without any recourse from their employees."
Jasmine	"I signed a contract as a physician in Florida for a position as a hospitalist, a primary care physician solely sees patients in the hospital setting for acute inpatient care. The contract had a noncompete clause that I should have never signed. After realizing I had more holiday coverage than colleagues without increased pay and again no bonus pay which was previously told I was on track for, I gave my three month notice. I live in a small city where there are only two hospitals within less than 10 miles of each other. The non-compete states I cannot use my medical license to any degree within 25 miles of any clinic (they have clinics all over the area, extending over 30 miles from where I live). This has kept me away from my home where my family lives for extended periods of time. It has prevented me from serving my community and I plan to fight this non-compete once I save enough funds to secure an experienced attorney. I hope that this rule is passed not only for myself but to protect others who are only trying to make a living in the communities where they live and are being bullied by employers whose main objective with these unfair and heinous non-competes is to use fear tactics to retain employees."

Jonathan	"I think this proposed rule is a positive change for workers in the United States. When I was a business owner I avoided non-competes because I felt it was unnecessary to expect to limit competition through the workers who were helping me grow my business. The best way to limit competition is to be a better employer by paying competitive wages and constantly innovating the way you offer benefits to a worker. The most loyal workers are workers that are well paid and feel appreciated. Non-competes are also all over the place and enforced differently state by state which is very unfair."
Lin	"Please, BAN the non-compete clause from contracts there is continuous "bait and switch" for many industries including healthcare stop enforced indentured servitude. Outlaw non-compete clauses in contracts."
Jorge	"As a family of two physician doctors with small kids, I believe that non-compete clauses have significant negative impacts for the physician who signs them; that surpass any negative effects a hospital may have from losing the business of one physician. The most important negative effect I see is that most of these non complete clauses force the physicians to uproot their families and leave town because of the radius in which they are banned from practicing. There is no real negative effect to the practice from one physician leaving. Patient's will continue to go to the hospital or practice to get their care. Specifically, in my practice which is radiology, a patient will continue to go to the same center to get their imaging. In general patients don't seek to have their studies read by a specific physician. Me leaving the group, to join another group in town has no negative effect to their practice. Having non compete clauses also decreases the need for a hospital group or practice to compete to retain their best people. I believe down stream consequences of this lead to decreased quality of care overall, although difficult to quantify. A specific example is a general surgeon friend who maxes out his salary and RVU based bonus before the end of the year because of the quantity of patients he has to see. Once he maxes out, he continues to work essentially for free until the next cycle begins. Those three or four months he continues to have the same day to day responsibilities but does not get paid the additional work, while the hospital continues to bill for his care. Although he continues to provide the best patient care, there is no incentive to continue to go above and beyond to see the large influx of patients coming in. He's brought this issue to the administration during contract negotiations over several years but they have not increased his base or bonus structure. I believe this is directly tied to the control the hospitals have with the non compete clauses. Because my friend has a growing family and a strong community here he has decided to stay. Otherwise, in order for him to work and provide for his family he would have to leave town until the 2 year restrictive clause expires. That is why I strongly agree with the proposition to ban non-competes. Banning noncompete clauses allows competition between employers, so employees can be part of the companies they want to work for without fear they are hurting their future selves, by being limited to one employer. It allows communities to stay intact so they can grow and flourish. Doctors shouldn't have to leave town or the state to be able to provide for themselves or their families. Patient's also shouldn't have to lose a trusted physician because of these clauses."

Luis	"I would to thank the current FTC administration for taking on the subject of non competes. As a sales leader for my organization, I feel 'handcuffed ' to my organization. I had an attorney review my non compete and his words were " the language was tight and it would be costly to fight". In order words, if I would find a better opportunity to provide for my family In an industry I have served my entire adult career (healthcare) I would not be able to do so. I absolutely hope that non competes are abolished and cannot come soon enough. It would be great to understand once it is agreed upon, when can it be implemented. I understand the 180 day rule, but is there an approximate timeline? Thank you again so much in behalf of my entire family!!!"
Yasaira	" Physician should be included in the noncompete group. We have a shortage of physicians we don't need noncompetes interfering with patients care and access"
Thomas	"Non-compete clauses hinder workers from advancing their careers within their respective fields. When threatened with regulation, corporations proclaim they choke the free market and unfairly restrict business. These non-compete clauses are a restriction on the market of labor. Make them illegal and restore a some power and bargaining back to workers."
Francisco	"I am in favor of banning non-compete clauses and voiding the ones existing in current employee agreements. I work in the working capital and lending industry, sales department. There is NO trade secrets in lending!!!! I have the impossibility of going to work on another office basically for life according to one attorney - that said that the clause on my agreement is so aggressive they can follow me for years."
Rusty	"It's not fair to average Americans that they can't go to work at another employer in the same field."
Gregory	"Non-competes unduly limits worker pay, job growth and skill development. Worker non-competes inhibit innovation and denies the consumer the best value for their money."
Brian	"Many people are forced to sign a non-compete as a condition to start a job without really understanding what it means. It's a bit of a bully tactic from employers & should be eliminated. In a free market, this should not be a limiting factor, especially since many non-competes say you cannot work for another company in teh industry even if we fire you."
Brad	"It took hundreds of hears to lift the United States out of slavery, and several more decades to finally protect paid laborers. Allowing rich companies to control when and where I can work is not a free market of labor, it is indentured servitude. Please control this scourge of backstepping our history and ban non- compete clauses."
Lance	"Non competes should be banned."

Heydi	" I signed a non compete with Hand and Stone spa in Lakeland Fl in December 2018. At the time, I was fresh out of school, desperate for employment and had no clue what a non compete agreement was or how it would affect me in the future. Fast forward, I left this spa in July of 2022. My non compete stated I couldn't work for another spa or as a sole proprietor for a period of 6 months after I left and within a 10 mile radius. Lakeland is a small city, so 10 miles is pretty much the entire city. I would have had to travel over 30 miles to another city for to work. So I had to work in secret for myself. After 7 months, and once my non compete had expired. I received a cease and desist letter from my former employer asking me to stop working and since they believe I violated my non compete I must comply and start the 6 month period all over again. I had to hire a lawyer to help me which is costly. I worked hard for my former employer, sacrificed my time, extra hours, and many days off. After all I did for them this is how I am repaid. Non competes restrict people from the earning a higher wage and becoming entrepreneurs. They want to confine us to a limited income status so that only they can profit. They instill fear. Please ban non compete agreements in the future so that others don't suffer like I am now. I have a family to provide for and now I am unable to work in the only field I have worked in for the last 5 years. It's so difficult to gain employment in a different industry when all you have done for the last 5 years is worked in one particular industry. When I worked for the spa I was underpaid, overworked, and in a hostile environment. Working for myself has been a blessing and my dreams of being a business owner came true. Now I have to put my business and my life on hold to satisfy another's greed."
Jack	"I am a professional broadcast journalist subject to a non-compete agreement with every employment contract I have ever signed, which is the industry standard. I understand the need for contractual agreements with on-air talent and some off-air talent, but non-compete agreements have historically offered nothing to employees besides restricting where they work, and how much money they are able to earn while giving large corporations and ownership groups the ability to offer small raises and few benefits knowing that employees would have to completely relocate if they wanted to seek or accept another opportunity. I support the FTC's proposed rule change relating to the elimination of non-compete agreements. In my 10+ years of experience in my industry, I have never been privy to any trade secrets that are not already made publicly available by the time I learn them, which has always been cited as the primary reason for non-compete agreements in the first place. Additionally, organizations claim to make major investments in on-air talent like myself, thus presenting the need for employers to restrict our ability to seek or accept better opportunities at competitors in the same city. This hinders my ability to negotiate employment agreements that adequately consider my needs and those of my family. As everyone across all industries know, sometimes change is needed and employees want to seek other opportunities for various reasons. With a non-compete agreement, I would be prohibited from working in my field in the same city for a period of one year, thus forcing me to stay employed at my current job unless Pm willing to move to a new city - which is often challenging in and of itself. Additionally, because so many people work under long term contracts, the timing of finding a new job is already challenging and adding a non-compete agreement makes it virtually impossible to seek jobs outside of your current one until the stars align. I feel that removing noncompete agreements would force employers to negotiate in good faith with workers, and encourage more open dialogue between them. It would also foster more creativity, allow companies to hire from a more diverse and readily available pool of talent, and increase worker wages by promoting healthy competition. There is nothing accomplished in a non-compete that a non-disclosure couldn't also do. Our industry is a challenging one in which to work. It requires moving every few years in order to advance. But as with so many things, television companies and stations change frequently. As such, working environments, managers, and priorities change while workers are left with their hands tied by complicated non-compete agreements that make it fiercely challenging to pursue better opportunities. I hope the FTC will adopt this rule change for the betterment of employees in my industry and across business sectors everywhere which will surely see a rise in wages, creativity, and ultimately success for employers once we are all able to operate on a level playing field instead of having to move across the country, away from family, or pick our children up mid school year to seek an opportunity that might exist just down the road. Please pass this rule change."

Jay	"I agree non-compete clauses should be abolished. I am a physician and have had a variety of businesses. I was forced to sign a non-compete agreement during my initial employment. However, I have refused since and never asked any others to do so. Everyone has the right to considerably advance professionally to bigger and better opportunities. The only exception might be when an employer fully trains and invests (time and expense) in an individual to provide entirely new skills and experience."
Adriana	"I agree with this ! Say yes to non competes its unfair to shackle people to one income when they have families to support especially if they have dreams of having their own business. People should be free to build their future"
J. Matthew	"I am in complete agreement with doing away with non-compete clauses. Not only do they stifle innovation, but in my field, medicine, they can compromise access to care by artificially limiting physicians who can practice in a certain area. The argument often used in medicine for using them is to "protect business secrets". After practicing in private practice medicine for 15 years, I can say with certainty that there are absolutely no "secrets" of "sensitive" information that one physician can pass to any other groups because the practice of medicine is the same in each instance! It is in the by far more in patients best interests to be able to preserve any physician patient relationships that may have occurred than it is to protect any "trade secrets" that simply don't exist in the first place."
Angus	"I support it because it helps workers have more leverage in negotiations, as it means that a company has to actually pay competitively to retain a person over making them sign away that ability"
Julieta	"I am a medical doctor and a surgeon . It is my personal experience that noncompete clauses reduce patients access to medical care. I left my private practice of 8 years after it was sold to an * out of state * private equity corporation. Due to the noncompete clause, I cannot see my patients, some of whom are in a rural setting. They have not found a doctor to replace me, those patients now have to drive for hours or wait for months to see a subspecialist and even longer to schedule

	their surgery. How can an out of state corporation walk in after 8 years and sue me for continuing to take care of my own patients, who I have built relationships with over years? This is my community, it is a practice in which I am very invested, and I built with my work. This has resulted in me leaving the state. I know countless doctors in this position. My husband is a subspecialty pathologist, he was offered a job with a practice reading slides mainly for the diagnosis of cancer- his noncompete was written that he could not work in ANY STATE from which he received a specimen. This was almost 30 states! He passed on that opportunity. While we know it is an unreasonable and non enforceable clause, what individual doctor is willing to legally take on these huge corporate entities? It is intimidating, the legal fees world bankrupt us. We have since left the state."
Joanna	"I believe non compete rules need to be revised from a past experience. My son is special needs and I had a waiver support coordinator in state of FL which is in regular business a case worker. He has this WSC for over 10 years. We had a excellent report with her as a solo provider. When the Agency for person's with disability through legislators, forced everyone into no more solo providers but 4 to make an agency. I went to court to testify that state has a "FREEDOM OF CHOICE which the court denied to the solo third party workers and gave the original owners of agency permission to a non compete clause with out parents being made aware of. So when my case worker wanted to leave to another co or start her own she was forced to leave some of the consumers behind. We were forced to stay with that assigned agency and they gave us a new case worker who we never saw or heard from until that day in court. I told the judge I have never met the new case worker until today in conversation telling my story she was listening and came over and said you mentioned my name. She is herself, and agency she worked for, where her area was. Her are was 4 hours away. She never knew the agency was billing for her from my son's funds. First illegal, secondediciad fruad. The judge agreed it was a misunderstanding instead of fraud. The co was told to replace the funds to son. Do better training But the judge did tell my case worker you signed a non compete therefore you can't take the consumers for 1 year. After that you can have them transfer. But I left that co and went to someone different and stayed with them since. Non compete clause cause more trouble for the consumer then the businesses and this is why they should be allowed. They people are not staying because of the co but the dedicated workers. If worker leave for promotion, better pay, better co we should as freedom of choice be able to leave too. We don't sign contracts. If an employee leaves for cause then it should be brought to the consumers attention why? Especially to vulnerable consumers who most have guardians. Theft, abuse, over charging for work, not showing for work. If you worked for any other business you would not have non compete. I had a lawyer who left firm for car accident. I kept that lawyer who left in mid stream because he knew the case. We were asked if we would like to be released from that firm. Common courtesy and I could have left without permission but they were kinda notified us he was leaving and we could be reassigned or leave."
I	"I've been stuck without work because of NC rules, it's so weird and evil, not sure why this was ever allowed! if another company can pay more ide like to leave thank you! NC — Slavery loophole!, government please fix this, thank you."

Patrick	"Non-Competes mean I can get fired, lose my source of income, and not work in a career I have spent 20 years working in. They are tools for big business to bully individuals burying them in legal fees. Whether it is enforce-able or not doesn't matter when your defendant can't afford a lawyer."
s	"Lets get Rid of non compete in healthcare to make it easier for physicians to practice where and hiw they want to do it."
S	"Restrictive covenants have been used unfairly to limit individuals' abilities to practice their chosen profession. They stymie true competition for services and unfairly prohibit individuals from working in their desired location (usually near their home). In my humble opinion, our ability to choose where and for whom we work is a core value to our economic freedom. The very essence of non competes/restrictive covenants undermine that. They prevent us from seeking jobs with higher wages or better work environs. In particular this is hurtful to struggling families that would otherwise benefit from increased wages, especially this past year with inflation pressures on goods and services. Furthermore, business owners in need of upcoming talent often run into roadblocks when individuals have restrictions from current employers. This can lead to unnecessary and costly legal proceedings. I whole-heartedly support the removal of the non-compete. I am confident this will allow for greater economic growth, empower the workforce with more choices and encourage fair competition."
Sarah	"Please ban noncompetes! These prohibit physicians from moving hospitals and in doing so limit patients access to care and physician autonomy"
Ma	"There is no reason for an organization to place restrictions on where physicians can practice. The only reason is their insecurity and their wanting to prevent competition, which serves absolutely no purpose in providing better patient care, only hinders it by frustrating the physicians due to the employers' unfair practices. It benefits no one other than the employers (in lining their pockets)!"
David	"I strongly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as proposed in Matter No. P201200. Non-compete clauses in contracts are unamerican. Such clauses limit the ability of employees to seek new job opportunities and can create a barrier to entry liar people seeking to work in certain industries. Therefore, it is imperative to support laws that prohibit non-compete clauses in employment contracts. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit employee mobility, which is essential for the growth of the workforce and the economy. By restricting an employee from working in a similar industry for a certain period, they are unable to explore new opportunities, grow their skills, and gain valuable experiences. This can cause them to feel trapped in their current job, ultimately leading to reduced job satisfaction and motivation. Furthermore, it can negatively impact the industry as a whole by reducing the pool of skilled employees. Secondly, non-compete clauses can cause undue hardship on low-wage employees who may have limited job opportunities. Such employees may be forced to accept non-compete agreements in order to secure employment, leaving them unable to seek alternative job opportunities if their current position does not work out. This can create an unequal power dynamic between employers and employees, leading to exploitation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also stifle innovation and competition, leading to negative effects on the economy. By limiting the ability of employees to move freely between different companies, innovation is hindered as employees are unable to share their knowledge and expertise with other businesses. This, in turn, can lead to a lack of competition, ultimately resulting in reduced efficiency and increased prices for consumers. Furthermore, the use of non-compete clauses in the medial environment further drives the cost of healthcare and the rate of physician burnout (already at all time highs). In conclusion, laws that prohibit non-compete clauses in employment contracts are essential to promote employee mobility, reduce exploitation and medical provider burnout, and foster innovation and competition. By supporting such laws, we can create a more equitable and dynamic workforce that benefits both employees and the economy as a whole."

Sandra	"We have recently experienced the "non compete" as my husband having had enough of the company that bought his place of employment went and found a better place to work. Upon meeting with the personal manager and giving his notice he was informed of a non compete "agreement " he was in and that he would not be able to work in his field of expertise. They did that with a smile, as they knew he did not know. This corporation is very dishonest and doesn't treat their people well. I wondered if we had moved to China , surely this is not legal in America , 7000$ later we find it must be"
Brandon	"I am strongly against the non-compete agreement and hope that it gets changed as people should not have to change their professions because of it!"
Christopher	"Sounds look a good idea. It should hopefully promote competition between corporations."
Jeremy	"I hope for all the families put there that this ban goes into affect. I have been unemployed since November because of a non-compete agreement that prohibits me from working in the trade that I have been working in for the past ten years. The non-compete states I cannot work with a different company, nor start my own business and I cannot do the type of work within a 30 mile radius. The company that had me sign the agreement is nationwide. I just want to be able to provide for my family again."
John	"Thank you for recognizing the importance of this significant employee issue. As a physician, I see the extreme levels of frustration and burnout in my peers. These feelings seem to be compounded by feeling "trapped" by employers. I work as a pediatrician in a large system in a large urban city, but I know that if I wanted to leave my current employer I'd have to leave this area of the state, requiring me to sell my home and move my family (including requiring my spouse to change employers). There is no reasonable need for employers especially large corporate systems to have this inequitable bargaining power to limit our rights to work."
Angelia	"People should be able to work for whomever they want. If they can find a better job elsewhere, they should be free to take it. Anything else is involuntary servitude. The idea that a company can tell you that you cannot use your skills with another company, for better pay, is absurd."

Rajendra	"There is no world in which these non-competes make any sense or help any patients. They are designed to stifle competition and control markets in healthcare. Our best hope is for these rules to be done away with."
L	"I strongly support a ban on noncompete agreements. Noncompete agreements result in local monopolies, which mean higher prices and worse service for consumers. A truly free market is one in which consumers have a choice between many competing companies."
Eileen	"This ruling is important and a long time coming. I've seen non-compete documents that include anything the employee invents on their own time, even if it does not relate to the work they do or their role with the employer. This needs to stop. I applaud this effort."
Shaina	"This bill should be passed. I built a strong relationship with hundreds of clients. I was the only accountant they knew in my office and because a new shareholder bought in, that did NO work and spent all of our money, I left and cannot retain my clients. They are extremely mad and seeking my services on a weekly basis."
Brian	"I am a physician working in a large healthcare system. Our hospitals cover a nearly 100 mile radius. My non-compete clause prohibits me from working in up to 3 counties in south Florida. Most physicians sign their contracts with no option for negotiation on the non-compete coverage. This provides an unfair advantage to hospital systems and employers and forces physicians to move to extended distances away from family and friends in the event of contract termination for almost any reason. This anti-competitive practice must come to an end."
Edward	"I fully support the ban on non-competes. In my experience they are an unfair burden on workers and have personally prevented me from pursuing opportunities that would have allowed me to advance my career and make a greater contribution to the economy."
Martin	"In November of 2023 I'll be 83 years old & have always worked Full time (even at my current Age) & intend to work until I medically can not produce or drive to my office (22 miles each way)- I'm a Full-time Insurance Agent in Florida (I work in my office in Naples & Live in Estero-The Agency I work for has a new owner (about 2 years ago) & if I (We) didn't sign the non-compete we'd of lost our position-In the contract it says within 100 mile radius I can NOT in any circumstance work as an Agent even though I've been one since 1977-Its basicly all I know-My wife is 75 & I have a Step Son who's on Medicare Disability (He does wk pt time wheeling wagons in a Publix parking lot) I'm the only source of good income (we are on Social Security) The Person who owns the Agency is very difficult & always threatens Agents if we don't put more applications through- -There are other Insurance Agencies in my area that would want me to work for them & regognize the Value I bring to any Insurance Co-- I've been awarded Numerous Company & Industry Awards & I can sill do an Excellent job--I've got lots of Clients that come to me every day for advice & help in getting them the Proper insurance & Based on her Non-Compete contract I'd have to stop working therefore stopping any income which she claims she would go after. Even though we would have a tough time in paying our bills nor living a lifestyle that I worked over 40 years to achieve-This is totally unfair-I've earned it--I've also as a Human being earned a right not to work under horrible threatening conditions--If I had stolen anything Or committed a felony I might understand but this is NOT right--I'm not the only one-My compensation is on a 1099 (Non-Employee) & yet she holds all the cards-This is a Free Country & considering my age I know I deserve the right to work in a business that I've worked in for almost 50Years- -50 Years & now I can't work?? TOTALLY UNFAIR"

Christina	"I am strongly in favor of eliminating no compete agreements as a condition of employment, termination, or resignation. No company should have the power to restrict an employee current, former or future from working for another company in the profession of their education, training and experience."
Daniel	"Speaking from personal experience as I am currently restricted by such a document. I should not have to jeopardize 1 yr of salary just to leave my company and stay in the field I have been in for 35yrs. Please pass this!!"
Rashmi	"I am a board-certified, family physician in practice in Florida since 2000. My onerous noncompete/anti-competition clause in my contract with a very large hospital system prevented me from continuing to practice medicine when I decided I no longer wished to be an employee with rapidly changing priorities. I would've had to upend my entire family if I wanted to keep working as a physician. Two years ago, I made a very difficult decision to leave clinical medicine, because of this noncompete clause. Big hospital systems already have too much power. This power over the lives of physicians is unethical and should be banned."
Rashmi	"The non compete clauses should be eliminated from physician contracts. Big hospital systems take advantage of physicians and essentially hold them hostage with these rules. They should be illegal."
William	"Non-compete clauses are in practically every physician contract and serve to prevent the physician from leaving practice to serve patients in a locations within a county radius in some circumstances or a certain mileage radius in other circumstances. I understand that there is some degree of cost advertising and credentialing involved in hiring a physician but these non-competes never even sunset and these non-competes are used against physicians to keep them locked in to the salary in the contract they signed. I was hired by a large hospital organization to work as a primary care physician and was given a salary consistent with 7 years of work experience. Then cost of living rose dramatically in my area and hiring of physicians to the area became more costly. The same hospital organization then hired a new doctor to work in the same practice I was working He was just out of medical school and had no prior experience. He was given a starting about 15-20 percent greater than me in addition to a signing bonus. When I asked for a raise I was denied. I think some employers use these non-competes to keep salaries the same because employees have no other options."

Gregory	"As a physician , I'm disappointed that there is consideration not to protect me from predatory contracts."
Richard	"Please approve the Non-Compete Clause Rule. Non-compete clauses stifle competition in the market. They also turn employment especially for low- wage earners into captive employees akin to indentured servants."
Mike	"Please repeal all non-competes. These are antiquated rules. People sign those sometimes against their better judgment, but need the job being offered. A non compete should never be part of a persons contract for the duration of their career. Please move forward on eliminating non competes."
Sherryl	"This should definitely be banned there has been professionals unconvinced by working great distances from home or completely different states due to non compete clauses. This is unfair and it is a punishment for not wanting to stay with a practice or company"
Christopher	"I am an employed Physician in the South Broward Hospital District of Florida. I would like to leave to open my own practice as I am not being fairly compensated compared to my peers. However, the contract I had to agree to stipulates a 1 year non compete in all Broward with an additional 5 mile halo around it. How am I supposed to go that far away for a year when my home, family and entire patient practice is in Broward?. It forces me to stay or leave and struggle significantly for a year. It's just not right."
Robin	"Please remove this egregious non-compete rule from standard employment contracts. It is being used overused and inappropriately. Protect America's workforce."
Christopher	"I was recently informed of the lobby efforts of hospitals to add an exception for healthcare workers. As a physician , I find this to be an unacceptable modification. Non-competes in healthcare lead to significant hurdles to practice, and force many physicians to uproot their families if their work situation becomes untenable. It gives unreasonable power of hospital executives over healthcare workers and should be abolished. To make such an exception immediately after the pandemic when healthcare workers were pushed to the limit by hospitals that continued to make record profits would be a grave insult."
Kathleen	"Non-compete clauses make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats you, by allowing your former employer to sue you if you go to work for another company in the same industry. The FTC estimates that banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by $300 billion per year. This would be particularly important for people who work in the fast-food industry, where wages are often inadequate to live on, but employees are very often mistreated and not allowed to go to work for a different franchise because of existing non- complete clauses in their contracts."

Kathleen	"The proposed ban on non-compete clauses is an EXCELLENT idea, and will give workers more freedom to move to a better job. Thank you for proposing this."
M	"I fully support ban on Non-Compete clause. Thanks for reading!"
Kay	"Please ban non compete clauses for physicians . The only person those help are the CEOs of corporations forcing practice geographically restricted physicians to practice in suboptimal work environments (poor staffed, understaffed, inadequest support sustems etc). At the end, its patients that suffer."
Sunay	"I am a physician and need to relocate my entire family due to a non complete clause. This decision will affect my wife's job and 3 children in school. Non competes prevent employers from fostering a good work environment because they are in control if you don't like your job. Only options are to continue a poor job or relocate the entire family. Employers should be encouraged to foster a great work environment so employees stay long term. Instead Non competes force people to stay in jobs with less than desirable work environments since many cannot relocate their families. Let's end Non competes and force employers to improve the work environment to retain their employees."
Nirmala	"Taking away non compete is a must .. so physicians will practice freely and willfully."
Andrew	"I have recently transitioned from an academic emergency medicine faculty position at a state university associated health center to independent contractor status in a busy community emergency department . In a world in which corporate ownership of my professional work is a constant threat, this Non- Compete Clause Rule is a sign of sanity in an increasingly depersonalized and alienating work culture in the United States. Corporate entities do not have families, they do not live in communities, they do not put down roots, and they do not have their employee's best interests as a founding, fiduciary principle of their make up. Through non-compete clauses and conditions of employment they can determine where and how their employees can live-- when and whether their employees must make their children change schools or find new care facilities for their elderly parents. In a playing field already tilted overwhelmingly in favor of business, non-complete clauses are an unnecessarily powerful tool used to control employees by forcing them to choose between a potentially unfavorable or exploitative work life, and uprooting their personal lives and the lives of their families by enforcing often arbitrary geographical limits on that employee's ability to look for alternate employment. I am in favor of the FTC's proposed rule to eliminate non-compete clauses, and support this rule."
Kavita	"I am writing as a physician in support of the FTC proposal largely opposing the noncompete clauses. I have felt that these are used by employers to intimidate workers and physicians into remaining in positions wherein they are unhappy or in a position unable to advocate for themselves under threat of being functionally "exliiled" to relocate far beyond a reasonable distance. The scope of noncompete clauses is often too large a burden."

Sabina	"Non-compete clauses make it difficult to leave hostile or unsupportive work environments. One becomes tied to the job if relocation is not an option. Many forms of non-compete clauses do it make sense. For example, a hospitalist position would not be "stealing" a patient as they are not the primary MD anyway. Patients do not choose who they admitted under while inpatient. Patients do not follow physicians in this manner. Therefore non-compete clauses don't make sense."
Bob	"Highly supportive of this proposed rule change!"
Sue	"Stopping a physician from working after leaving their prior job is there merely to punish a physician and a way to keep physicians from being able to negotiate their work contracts. It does not in anyway benefit the healthcare system, it can only hurt patients. What does society benefit from making sure a doctor cannot work for 1 year sometime up to 5 years in the area, just because they want to change their contract or location. Physicians are generally hardworking people just trying to do their best in their field. Please don't let large corporations punish the individual."
Eric	"I strongly support the ban on non-compete clauses. I've signed several over my 20+ year career within information technology , and never once did I feel that I was in an equal negotiating position -- it was _always_ "sign this or expect to find a new job". I'm neither a c-level executive or a patent generating scientist, so I feel there was very little reason for me to be asked to sign a document like this. In my opinion, non-competes have zero upside for employees, massive upside potential for unscrupulous employers, and encourage exiting employees to seek work within different and unfamiliar industries to avoid possible litigation, much to the detriment of our overall national productivity."
Andrew	"This absolutely needs to become the law the land. Non Competes only benefit the employer and further restricts workers from being able to pursue their craft and utilize their skills to their maximum. When we were are told that we have a non compete in our clause we are told that we cannot utilize the skill we have developed at all, which forces us to remain with companies that can then offer us less and less benefits knowing they have hamstrung us. A rule abolishing non competes is a win for worker's rights."
Randi	"Non competes should be banned, this is an unfair practice. It is especially prevalent in the state of Florida where there are fewer opportunities, so it makes it even harder to increase your salary."
Mirtha	"Non compete laws force employees to move from areas where they have built relationships and have family and friends if their contract expires and they would like to remain in their chosen field. It empowers the employer and controls the employee to remain"

Prathap kumar	"I have seen physicians moving out of the practice area, It hurts the established patients the most. Those patients would need to find a new physician in that area. It impacts continuity of care, can potentially play a significant role in delayed diagnosis or even can contribute to missed diagnosis. I support removal of restrictive covenant provisions in clinical practices."
Stephanie	"This should be crossed out on every contract! Let the economy grow, support entrepreneurship and let us work where we choose and in conditions we choose!"
Robert	" I am strongly in favor of banning non-compete clauses. These types of restrictions stifle the pursuit of happiness for the US workforce at best, and handicap economic growth and healthy competition at worst. Non-compete clauses have no place in our society."
Dmitry	"Non-compete is a lightly veiled attempt of corporations to force serfdom onto employees. Freedom of choice and equality are trumped by extreme profits extracted by employers. Non-compete contracts are anachronism that should be banned in free society."
Balraj	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, Thank you very much for looking into medical noncompete that is need of the hour. Physicians are hired by big companies and corporations making this noble profession turning into business, trading and fish market Noncompete clause benefits nobody but the big administrations and hospitals and companies abusing health care providers who have to agree to their terms An employee working for Walmart can leave Walmart and start working for Publix and Sam's Club. He or she does not have to leave the town or to go to a different city for two years. Why is medical noncompete a different situation ? This will open new doors for physician and give them Some autonomy and eventually this will help patients getting the care they deserve"
Jay	"The noncompete clause should also apply to so called nonprofit hospitals. Though, they call themselves nonprofit, in all manners of operation they behave as for-profit hospitals The noncompete clause, they use restricts physician movement, and they use it as it additional clout to restrict and force patients into the system, physicians, who do not refer to the same hospital system as their employed by a severely punished. This is completely non-competitive, and should be abolished."
Tonya	"The non compete makes it very hard for the In my industry Healthcare revenue Cycle very hard to get out of a contract. If I resign I cannot work for another revenue cycle company for 2 years n if I'm terminated in have to wait 1 year."
Dr. Gayatri	"The non compete should be taken away. It causes great havoc for basic living and as physicians it can extend up to 30 miles. This means we have to move to a different place and it really affects the livelihood. The noncompete does not really help the employees. It should be definitely taken away."

Benjamin	"I am a physician working in a semi rural location in the United States. Like many of my colleagues I have a non-compete clause that would prevent me from caring for the patients in my community. This negatively impacts the community I work for, and disproportionately effects patients living in rural communities who have fewer physicians to choose from. If these communities cannot retain the physicians they attract it will continue to become harder to find care in rural America. Additionally non compete clauses hams workers. It reduces our leverage to negotiate with local employers, and the freedom of choice helps self regulate a free market. Stifling free market choice of employers is anti-capitalist and is a form of market control and manipulation used by employers to stifle their employees pay and benefits. I would urge you to move to invalidate non-compete clauses both for the protection of rural American as well as workers everywhere."
Sarah	"Despite a large provider shortage in my community, I am currently unable to start a practice in my hometown because it would violate my current non- compete. This ruling would allow me to serve patients in my own community and not have to search out other opportunities to wait out my 2 year non- compete. I am already working outside my community because of my non-compete from my previous employer."
Mike	"I support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule. I practiced medicine for 40 years (1977 through 2017). During that period the standard contract in my specialty, pathology , included non-compete clauses. These clauses forced me to move my family twice (once out of state), restricted my income throughout my career, denied me many work opportunities and finally forced me to retire earlier than I anticipated (when I was 63 years old). Non-compete clauses are unfair to all workers and should be banned in total. Thank You for giving me an opportunity to comment."
Sandra	"Non-compete clauses are unfair and blatantly unethical. I am 63 years old and have lived in Miami, Florida since 1996."
Gabriel	"I fully support this ban on non-competes, it is good for workers and good for competition and ultimately good for consumers. In my industry (pricing software) noncompetes create an unfair competitive advantage for companies that are based in states like Texas where these are enforceable. I have not been able to hire people and also had to terminate one employee as their former employer took legal action against them to enforce a noncompete that they didn't even realize they had signed, causing significant hardship to him as well as our organization . Moreover, as a former resident of California that has recently moved to Florida, a noncompete would also adversely impact my ability to move to another company in my industry and certainly suppresses earning potential for skilled individuals like myself to seek similar roles in other companies in my industry."
Justin	"America prides itself on "free enterprise" and by extension of that principle, workers should be able to move freely between jobs just as freely as capital is allowed. Non-compete clauses are anti-freedom. They have no place in a country that boasts "most free in the world"."

Lee	"This law should be passed. Employees have been taken advantage of and power has been abused. Please pass this"
Robin	"The removal of non-competes is integral to the growth of the economy and wages for Americans."
Tired	"As a physician assistant that works within several counties in my state, my contractual non-compete/non-solicitation is quite strangulating. Like many others, impossible to relocate especially with the territory that I cover, and switching specialties at this point in life would be a difficult transition. I love my job and love serving the population that I serve, but have been feeling unheard and very unsupported by my employers.. they know that I am "stuck", so they choose to poopoo my complaints and needs. I just want to be heard, I just want to feel valued, and I am excited to know that, hopefully, one day soon- if my current employer cannot find the value in me, I cotdd find an employer that does."
Joseph	"I am working for Konecranes as a service technician in the Nuclear field . I have worked on Overhead Cranes since 1999. My first job was with P & H out of Milwaukee, WI. They forgot to make me sign a non compete when they first hired me. They tried everything along with threats to get me to sign. Years later Konecranes took over my company. They also tried to make me sign. I went to Whiting Cranes Nuclear. When I decided to join Konecranes Nuclear I signed the noncompete since the pandemic I have been offered higher paying jobs in my profession. But as soon as they hear that I signed a non compete the offer is withdrawn. In the last three years of these economic times I have only gotten two raise 2.1/4 % and 2.1/2 % . I have always been around a Journeyman electricians pay. I am fifteen dollars an hour behind"
Atul	"Needs to be banned. Physicians deserve a free and fair market to serve patients."
Joshua	"I am a physician . I am in a non-compete due to my specialty in Emergency Medicine. There are no trade secrets in medicine or nursing. This is only a way to control employees. The American hospital association statement is completely off case. I strongly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as proposed in Matter No. P201200."
Brian	"Non-compete clauses represent the closest thing to indentured servitude that our government allows. It puts all the power in the hands of the employer and restricts the leverage of the employee. In my current position, my hospital administration is allows to change any rules in our contract as they please. We are told, if we don't like it then we can leave the job. But given our non-compete clauses, leaving the job means I will have to leave the county, give up my home, and move my family to find a new job. This just seems like an unfair balance of power that should be prohibited."
Tyler	"I am a stylist in Florida that has worked for a salon company for 10 years and was let go without notice due to a difference of opinion and I am still held to a non compete that doesn't allow me to work in a tri county area that encompasses hundreds of miles. I secured hundreds of thousands of business for this company to

	just be let go with no options to go work. There are hundreds of salons near me and I am not able to go work at any of them. Something needs to be done about these overreaching non-competes that force people to stay in hostile jobs work environments for fear of not be ing able to secure another job. Please pass this bill for me and many others."
Eric	"I strongly support banning non-compete clauses. Such clauses only serve to benefit the employer and restrict an employee from seeking better conditions locally. It pushes employees to look for work much further away, which increases commute times and expenses. It does not stop nearby local employers from hiring other employees to fill vacant positions, so competition still exists whether it is coming from a former employee or a new move in. Such clauses do not exist for other healthcare workers. I believe it creates an unnecessary financial, psychological and physical burden for any employee looking for a different job near their home. I have a friend who is now looking to uproot her entire family to move to a different state because of a non-compete clause because she wanted a job that offered more money. Due to the non-compete clause she could not look around the same city for similar work. I was prohibited from working for a different company near my home due to a former contract after my employer systematically continued to cut wages, which was contrary to the original contract, and I was left with no option but to accept their terms while my employer made no sacrifice on their end in terms of negotiating the contract. It was essentially, "accept the contract as it is, because if you don't, we let you go and we keep you from working anywhere near home.""
Michele	"I am writing in support of banning the non-complete. As a physician in South Florida, having a non-compete makes it impossible to keep working in South Florida. Many hospital centers have satellite sites spanning 100s of miles; if physicians. or nurses or techs or anyone working at the hospital can not get a job within 20 miles of any satellite site, essentially they have to move out of the state. Additionally, many non-competes for physicians are 1-2 years long. How can we possibly support our family if we are not working during this time? How can we afford health insurance? rent? Many young doctors are starting out in this state with a massive amount of debt and no savings- we need to continue working for ourselves and our communities. Hospital systems benefit from non-competes because they can pay physicians less knowing that they can not leave, but that does not drive progress or success long term. Additionally, patients can use the internet and find where their doctor moved to and follow them to the new hospital system Banning physicians from telling their patients where they are moving does not prevent patients from figuring it out."
GREGORY	"I am current under an "employment agreement" that has kept me with my employer for over 12 years. I've been in the same industry for over 35 years. To find employment elsewhere I can't go to work for a competitor with a HUGE penalty by my current employer."
Hershell	"This would be a major increase in our economy. Suppression of innovation and productivity must stop"
Anna	"Please suspend non-competes! It is putting a chokehold on our nations labor force."

Cameron	"Please ban non-compete clauses! They unfairly limit our ability to earn a living outside of our current employer. They also place undue liability burdens on workers who don't have lawyers to represent our interests most of the time and we could unknowingly violate non-compete clauses."
Phillip	"I am in favor of the proposed change in the non compete contracts. I have had non compete contracts with employees in the past. When they left their position I've never tried to enforce the contract as I felt it would do more harm than good."
Soleena	"I left a salon last month due to open drug use and drug distribution. I filed a complaint with the State of Florida. Now the Salon owner is threatening to sue due to me working within 5 miles. Our entire town is about 5 miles. I went out on my own, no real competition to a salon with several locations. I have no doubt I would win in court, but the cost to fight the non compete and threats from her attorney to the owner of the space Im renting is unreal! The other stylists that work for her are afraid while she takes 70% of their earnings Mostly young stylists that don't know any better, and now can't better themselves unless they leave town and never contact a client they worked with."
Nick	"Hello, I am a small business owner and 12 year veteran of the healthcare staffing industry . I am absolutely appalled by the way that noncompetes are used in this industry. As an employee, these agreements give far too much power to your employer and essentially turn you into the company's property. As a business owner, they are anticompetitive and leading to lower wages and higher costs to hospitals and healthcare systems. I'm going to just make a few short points on the topic here rather than try to organize a big essay: 1. "Trade Secrets" are already protected by state and federal law absent an employment agreement of any kind 2. Non-solicitation agreements for clients or business interests are a viable alternative that don't take away a US citizen's right to work in their field 3. California and Utah have had noncompete bans in place for years, and their economies are among the strongest and fastest growing in the nation 4. Under current law in most states, noncompete agreements remain in place even after an employer has changed the nature of the job or reduced pay and benefits. 5. Sexually harassed employees, usually women, are often trapped at a job by these agreements 6. The legal system is heavily skewed towards large corporations, who often use noncompete agreements to harass employees who aren't violating them. 7. If companies wish to retain employees, they should do so by offering more compensation or benefits, not by fear and threats of legal action Thank you for your time and I thank you for your attention to this matter."
Caity	"When I first heard of non-compete clauses, I thought "surely, that's illegal." I was appalled to find out it is not. This rule is a long time coming."
Carlos	"I am an employer and even though I wouldnt like for an employee that I teach the business to to open their own and be my competition, it is true that people deserve the right to work and should not be endentured by any employer who usually has more leverage and money to suppress them. In the end if you have a good product or service and you work hard to sell it, you shouldnt worry about a start up business competing. In the end competition drives innovation and lowers prices. I agree, pass the rule."

Yam	"Non compete is not fair and it should be eliminated. Non compete is a type of slavery."
Nicole	"Having non-competes is a disadvantage for employees. Companies have no interest in keeping employees happy (salary wise/work conditions) because they know that we are attached to the company due to non-competes. I completely agree with banning non-competes."
Sterling	"Regarding the change in the non-compete. Yes, this ruling affects a lot of younger workers, but it also is crippling for those of us that are trying to slowly leave our full-time job and make some income part-time in the career that we have been doing our whole lives. I am currently 66 and I have spent over 40 years in the restoration industry. As I look toward retirement, I would like to be able to do consulting to supplement my retirement income. However, the companies noncompete would keep me from making any income in my industry for three years. Assuming I wanted to leave my current position at the end of this year, at the age of 66, I would not be able to do any work in my industry until I was 69. How can that be right? My current employer has made it clear that they will pursue anyone who leaves for any reason and enforce their noncompete. Please realize that one of the groups of people that non- compete affects most severely is those of us that are close to retirement age."
Richard	" Dental offices use restrictions to limit competition and lock out providers in large areas. Removing this restriction would allow much more freedom of movement and increase provider availability to patients."
Robert	"All physicians should be included. Non competes destabilize quality care in the community, destroy patient and physician relationships. Create an undue burden on a physician and their family, be potentially creating s move to leave a hospital system, or a lengthy drive. There should be no exceptions for this rule. Non for profit, or for profit entities should be included in this rule. In health care it will create better systems and healthcare in general because the entities will have to better manage themselves and their employees, physician talent. The non compete clause places significant leverage and creates a toxic and hostile work environment. That does not allow the free market to improve systems, process and quality to keep good employees. There should be no healthcare system exemptions."
Daniel	" Dear Chair Lina Khan, This is an amazing action that will save untold numbers of workers from what I consider employment slavery. Please push this through."
Julia	"I support the ban on non-compete contracts 100%. As someone who, at one point in time, worked full-time as a yoga instructor and had to sign non- competes at every studio I worked in, I had to drive a ridiculous commute to be outside of the contract limits and actually make money."

Connie	"I think this is so so necessary and it's about time. I'm someone who is trying to get into technology and last year I turned down an entry level temporary job that didn't even pay $20/hr because of the non-compete. Where was I going to go after the job ended? Am I supposed to move away to another city or find another career path because they're afraid? It's like telling a McDonald's worker they can't go to Taco Bell. It's ridiculous. I really hope you do this because it can't come soon enough."
Amanda	"Regarding the "Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200", I wholeheartedly agree with removing all non-competes as it harms the working class. Personally, I am in fear of leaving a toxic working environment in fear they will attempt to pursue legal action. Their non-competes specifies that during employment and for two years after, I would not be able to work in a similar specialty within a 40 mile radius. I work in a highly specialized field and with their non-compete it would be extremely difficult for me to obtain another job outside of that specialty. I would run risk of being jobless for an extended period of time until I find a job willing to hire me without experience in that field (unlikely in the medical field). With non-competes, it limits job opportunities and growth within the community and forces workers into being jobless for an extended period of time or accept positions that are below their pay grade just to get some sort of income into their household. What happened to the old saying that, "competition is good for business"? Employers shouldn't limit competition, they should welcome it, as it's a driving force for companies to become more innovative and develop opportunities for them to get ahead of the competition instead of maintaining stagnant."
Karyn	"In NO WAY should physicians be excluded from this ruling. We have ALREADY served the public good by devoting YEARS (often more than a decade!!!) of our lives to grueling curriculum, insurmountable student loan debt, and the endentured servitude of Residency. We DESERVE the same basic rights as any other worker! We often fo without restroom breaks, vacations, any sort of breaks for food other than crackers and peanut butter between patients. We are human too, and deserve to be to freely work and serve where we wish. These Big Corps (which call themselves "hospitals" and "centers of healing") didn't take oaths and sacrifice everything to become a doctor. I did. I deserve basic employee protections too. NO to Non Competes!!!!"
ADAM	"I recently left my job as a family physician for a corporate healthcare system in Pensacola, FL. After 18 years of dedicated service, I realized I needed to move on to a new opportunity. When I asked my former employer if I could pursue a job with a local private medical group, I was told no because of the non-compete clause in my contract. I was forced to leave the area and am now employed in Alabama where non-compete clauses are not enforceable. I grew up in Pensacola and graduated from a local high school there in the early 1990's. I left the area for college and my medical training Upon graduating, I immediately returned to Pensacola to serve the community I love. My children attend school in Pensacola and my wife works at a local elementary school. My parents still live in the area and are very active grandparents. Non-compete clauses in the healthcare field not only hurt individual workers but can also be destructive to families. Normally when a physician leaves a practice in Florida, they must sell their house, pull their children out of school, and

	ask their spouse to find a new job. In many cases, it also means pulling the children away from their grandparents. The clauses are also very damaging to patients and result in higher health care costs. In my case, many of my patients were left without a primary care provider. My former employer attempted to find them new ones, however there are simply not enough primary care providers in the area. Some of them had to wait months to find a new provider. Many were not able to get medications refilled in a timely manner and had to delay much needed care. Starting over with a new provider is also costly and very time consuming. Non-compete clauses must end, especially in the healthcare field. They are harmful to patient care and result in higher costs. They are also destructive to physicians and their families I commend the FTC for standing up for workers against the large corporate entities. It must stand firm and eliminate this exploitative practice."
JOHN	"As a hopeful entrepreneur I have seen the harm first hand how a non compete contract has harmed myself and others around me due to the inability to pursue better opportunities for our families we spend lye tome to learn a trade and become a professional just to be bound by a business owners unwillingness to allow for forward movement economicly. The owners of a business who has prospered off the labor of lower paid employees who dedicated their time and effort to leans a trade and in that process make money for the business far and beyond the income paid. When opportunities are limited wages stay stagnant and competition in the market is limited costing consumers more on good and services. This is a antiquated practice and should be outlawed. The theft of proprietary practices and trade secrets is of upmost concern and need to be protected while still allowing a person to seek upward movement it's the American way and what this country was built on. I feel all non compete contracts should be outlawed while still protecting and allowing non disclosure of trade practices and secrets contracts to replace the non compete . Unless a practice or secret is not covered with copyright trademark or patent rights."
James	"I support the banning of non-compete clauses. It is monopolistic, suppressive of economic growth, and serves no purpose other than to chain an employee left in an environment they would be unwilling to continue to work in otherwise."
Brian	"I want to begin by stating that I believe there are cases where proprietary information about products, and customers is warranted. However, personally I work in the construction industry and recently I went to a home improvement company in Florida that had me sign a non-compete before I started selling kitchen remodels and closet organization for them. There were some things that were verbally promised to me that they did not deliver on and I decided to find other employment. I found one of their competitors on the window side of the business (they do not compete on kitchens or closets) and got a sales position with them. Upon discovering that I was going there, my boss threatened to sue me after I had only worked there for 2 months and had no real information that would be beneficial to the competitor. I decided to take my chances and go anyway since a lawyer told me he had legal grounds in Florida, but the benefit to suing me would be very small to him. It has been a great move for me, but the fact that the non-compete exists still hangs over my head. Also the way it reads I would be barred from working anywhere in a 2 hr radius for the next 3 years in any construction position. Construction is my entire experience for my 17 years of work. Put simply, please pass this law!"

Chris	"I support workers ability to have freedom of choice without the restrictions of a non compete. It's unreasonable to restrict that freedom via non compete clauses and for employers to claim they are the value add instead of the skills of the worker."
Arthur	"I wished this would have happened a long time ago because I'm stuck at a job that likes to push the limits of abuse and degrading people. Because they have me on a non compete for a two year period if I leave, I'd have to move my family out of the state just to support my family in the same job that I've done for almost 30 years. Not is it not only fair but it's so mentally draining. Please pass this as soon as possible. It's no fun not getting paid bonuses your owed or getting little to no raises."
Ryan	"Non competes regarding physicians are bad for physicians and bad for patients. My specialty of hospitalist medicine simply takes care of the patients that show up to the hospital. They don't come for me specifically as they have no idea which of the dozens of doctors on staff will be taking care of them when they show up. I do not have any trade secrets, and if I were to quit and work at a hospital across the street there would be no stealing of "customers" and honestly no one would notice. The same goes for ER physicians. There is absolutely no logic or sense behind noncompetes for my specialty, however every single position requires it just because they can. It limits salary and benefits because it severely limits competition. I urge the committee to make all noncompete clauses illegal, and to specifically include physicians in this ruling."
Erik	"Non competes are very unfair and trap workers in jobs they do not like which hurts innovation and the entrepreneurial spirit"
Ryan	"This is a great change for the American worker"
Kyria	"Please end the practice of non competes!!!"
Reinaldo	"Non Competes are anti-Worker in nature. We are growing our skills when we work at a company and to tell us that we cannot work someplace else that would benefit from the skills that we grew... That is inhumane since we rely on the income we gain through trading our time and skills for money. If we cannot do that then how will we live? Put yourself in the workers shoes and you'll see how terrible noncompetes are."
Rolo	"I fully support the banning of non-compete clauses. As a physician , and speaking on behalf of myself and, more importantly, younger physicians, the non- compete clauses stifle competition and drive up health care costs. Larger groups are formed with individual physician unlikely to leave for fear of litigation, these larger groups have a larger portion of the market share and thus negotiate higher health care costs from insurance companies despite, in most instances, not performing superior care. Banning non-competes, in particular for physicians, will see the resurgence of small practices that can more closely focus on patient care. Thank you for doing this. I encourage you to proceed with the nde and hope Congress will follow suit and thus protect you from the anticipated litigation on constitutionality. Respectfully, Dr. LM"

Elisa	"I am a Nurse Practitioner working for a Community Health Center in Tampa, Florida. I support the removal of Non- Compete Clauses in all work settings. Over half of the patient population served by my community center are un- or under-insured. Providers are required to sign a non-compete upon hire. This non-compete excludes work at any non-profit health center in our county and three surrounding counties. Providers who work here have a passion for patient care and serving those most in need. To accomplish this work, we have to commit to not extend our service and talents to other similar organizations. This is a detriment to the community's health and further exacerbates provider shortages for those most in need. I urge you to consider supporting this legislative action and ban non-compete clauses for all professions."
Vanessa	"Should be illegal A non compete is causing me to drive 45 min out of my way so that I can work. I'm a single mother supporting my family. I have to be away from my daughter's school, drive more and spend more to get to work. All because it benefits a large company that has 16 clinics. They tried to have me so that I couldn't work near of any of their 16 clinics, basically forcing me to move out of state. Because of my divorce agreement I have to live near my ex. Basically the noncompete almost left me homeless and without a job. Please stop the noncompetes."
Vanessa	"Non compete from my last place of employment caused me to now have to drive 30 minutes to Mount Dora Fl. I am not near my home nor my daughter's school. Seems like corporations can mandate where a single mother supporting a household now has to Jump hoops to make ends meet. Please help and make them ilegal."
Karin	"I am an anesthesiologist and since signing on with a new company a non-compete is usually attached, you are forced to stay at the job no matter what. Most non-compete clauses in FL are for 2 years and 25 miles around each facility. If you are unhappy with your current job, you would need to work as a Locum tenens provider outside that range for 2 years, until you can search another job. Sometimes companies are getting bought up by majority decision, pressing new contracts on their employees, who are, if they do not want to work under these conditions, forced to work out of the non-compete area. As new practice areas get acquired by the company, the area of non-compete expands. If the employee decides to leave the company, he or she may need to relocate. Non-compete clauses only work for the employer, it does not help the employee. It hinders healthy competition and innovation."
Mikel	"The non-compete rule is completely a one sided contract that only favors business. It hurts employees who feel they have no choice but to sign an agreement when onboarding with a new company. I know someone who was recently let go from his position as a sales executive and was notified that if he tried to work for a competitor they would pursue legal action. Meanwhile this guy has a wife and two kids and is being denied a chance to make a"

Brandon	"This is a GREAT IDEA!! I am currently under an 18 month non compete that incorporates the ENTIRE state of Florida. For the next 18 months I am not allowed to do my job whatsoever. This is forcing my clients to be working with people from my old company that they don't like, or trust. Instead of being able to work with me. This affects people's lives. I do trauma surgical consulting. So the surgeons I've worked with for over 10 years are working with people they have never met. My former company will not let me do anything in the hospital, doctor's offices nothing. They say if I even talk to them it violates the non compete because I may be able to talk to them about trauma stuff. So essentially I am sitting at home until the non compete runs out. And if the surgeons still want to work with me I will be able to go back to work. If not, I will have to start all over and make minimum wage down from a steady six figure job. Thank you for stopping this horrible practice that is designed to keep business with the original company and screw the employee who left. Making it so nobody wants to quit even though it is in their best interest, and their family's best interest, to quit. It takes advantage of the employees and keeps the employees down in a hole that they cannot dig out of. Thank you very much. I hope this passes."
Colyn	"TWIMC, I've been a developer in the Technology industry for more than 13 years and have had to navigate Non-Compete agreements. As I understand it, they were initially intended to prevent theft of intellectual property. In practice they are used to create a new kind of indentured servitude where they trap employees with an employer. These agreements restrict an employee's ability to practice their craft and skills for years after they leave an employer. Sometimes the agreement is restricted to the state the employee lived in, but most time's there are no restrictions. Employers also restrict employees from sharing open jobs at other employers among each other as if the current employer "owns" rights to employ that employee. These practices are abhorrent. ill-advised, and anti-American. Industries across the country have abused Non-Compete agreements to unfairly and adversely affect American's pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness. Further these abuses have been levied for want of consideration (no compensation). They should be abolished like the opiate they've become. Sincerely, A Concerned Citizen"
Sreekanth	"I completely agree that it is time to lift these restrictive rules that only benefit the corporate medicine teams. Removing this clause make a level-playing field for physicians, reduce the burn out and increase professional satisfaction. This is long time due"
Marta	"I fay support the FTC's potential ruling that non-compete clauses are illegal. I was laid off by my company and I have a non-compete clause in my original employment agreement. It's not fair that they laid me off and now I am having a hard time finding a new company that isn't touched in some way by my company. Competition is the cornerstone of the U.S. workforce and limiting a person is jeopardizing their livelihood. I've applied to over 200 job postings and none are really in the industry I can work. It's challenging with thousands of applicants for each position. I even have turned down a very good job offer due to the non-compete clause. I feel that if a company is worried about competition, they should focus on something like intellectual property, trade secrets and confidentiality...not impeding my ability to work."

Michel	"Non compete are unfair and should be illegal. They are unfair to the physicians who trained for so many years and to their patients that need to find a new doctor, after establishing a trust relationship. The doctor needs to uproot his family and move many times to a different city. Doctors become less competitive and have less negotiation advantages due to non competes. And many times we are forced to accept lower salaries or more work hours without compensation"
Robert	"I support this proposed rule. Non-complete clauses area horrible thing and inhibit the ability for employees to make the best job choices for themselves. As a nurse practitioner , it is common to have a non-compete clause in every contract, many of which have excessive geographical and time constraints. This limits my ability to practice in my own city."
Ray	"A non-compete has forced a hardship on my family as there are many limitations that keep me from working in the same healthcare specialty I have been in for the last 12 years. I could only work jobs paying much less than I currently make. Non-competes keep Americans from supporting their families while corporations get rich off the backs of employees."
Britt	"Freedom to the workers - especially those who want to further their career. My child's pediatrician was stuck in a non-compete contract. I applause the FTC for trying to achieve change!"
Kenneth	"Yes, please. For employees who don't have trade secrets, this law is outdated, prevents competition, and keeps salaries lower."
Kristin	" Physicians should be champions of patient safety, but the current noncompete climate punishes those that speak out. If there were no noncompete clauses, local hospital systems would have to compete on systems of care and safety to retain physicians. Let physicians freely choose the best hospital system to provide the highest quality care for their patients, and patient care will improve across the board. Physicians can be engaged and active participants in improving care without the ever-present threat of having to uproot families."
Jamee	"Thank you for recognizing the importance of this significant employee issue. As a physician, I see the extreme levels of frustration and burnout in my peers. These feelings seem to be compounded by feeling "trapped" by employers. I work as a pediatrician in a large system in a large urban city, but I know that if I wanted to leave my current employer I'd have to leave this area of the state, requiring me to sell my home and move my family. There is no reasonable need for employers- especially large corporate systems- to have this inequitable bargaining power to limit our rights to work."

Daniel	"I definitely believe believe that non compete rules stifel competition and suppress wages and opportunities and they should be banned."
Jeff	"I have worked in the field of steel distribution for the last 31 years. From 1999 through 2007 I owned my own business. Late in 2007 I sold my business to a competitor and took a job with that competitor for the last 15 years. Two years ago the company that I sold my business to was sold to a third party. I was told that due to the business being sold I had to sign a non-compete for the third party buyers, even though I was not an owner, and not even under contract to the company. After working at the same job over 13 years I signed an agreement so that I could keep my job. My supervisor told me at the time that I needed to show the new company that I was a "team player" and that I would be promoted to a regional manager in the coming year. After working under the owners for 18 months, I was told the regional manager position was no longer an option for me, and they restructured my pay plan and cut my salary nearly 40%. I gave a 2 week notice early in January 2023, however the new company is now trying to enforce the non-compete on me and stating that I can not work in the steel distribution business anywhere in the Southeast US. After working my entire 31 year career in the in industry they now seek to restrict my employment because it was mandatory to sign the agreement two years ago when they purchased the company. I applaud the FTC for proposing this new rule, and I hope it is made law."
Bri	"Non-competes make it impossible to leave my current job. In order to change jobs I would also have to move my family away from all of their extended family. It also interferes with my ability to further my career in our local area."
Julie	" I am submitting this comment as a physician leader, mother, a proponent of the Proposed FTC Ban on Non-Compete. As a first generation Taiwanese American, blessed with educations from Cornell, New York Medical College, trained at Mayo Clinic Rochester as Otolaryngologist(ear, nose, and throat), I then trained 2 more years in fellowship to become pediatric ENT. Since 2003 I have devoted my career and all professional activities as a surgeon treating thousands of children, advocate, educator, research, and serving families first in KC (2003-2013) then moved to Orlando (2013 until present). I was employed by the largest US pediatric health system who opened brand new children's hospital in Orlando in Oct 2022. There are 3 pediatric hospitals in Orlando, with the other 2 being part of a larger adult health system, each about 22-23 miles from the hospital I worked. The clinical team I built has rare expertise, we served at hospital and 5 satellite clinics including Melbourne to Lakeland FL. When my family and I moved here, I never questioned signing the restrictive covenant which explicitly states I can't work for either Advent Health or Arnold Palmer Hospital for Children in Orlando, for 2 years nor within 30 miles of the hospital I worked at. We have no family here, I moved here and built an incredible pediatric ENT and audiology division to serve the Central FI patients and families. There is only 1 private practice group of similar expertise in town (4 surgeons), and no others except 2 in Gainesville, then 2 in Hollywood FL, and down to Miami. After working exhaustively for the hospital and health system for 8.5 years, I chose to resign for many reasons. First, despite all of my contributions, pandemic impact to finances led to my being asked in early 2021 to executive reduction in force

	impacting letting go of several clinicians, including surgeon, advanced practitioner, audiologists, and also elimination of any work life flexibility. During the forced lay-offs occurred at a time when I suffered right frozen shoulder, requiring surgery. Post surgery-May 2021, I developed adhesive capsulitis losing nearly all range of motion of right shoulder. Instead of rehab and rest, I focused on pressures we faced and meeting patient demands. In 2021. In October 2021, I developed cervical radiculopathy, numbness and tingling of right hand/fingers, arm, and continued severe right shoulder pain. After 3 months of FMLA I chose to leave in Feb 2022. This entire past year I have struggled against disability insurance hesitant to pay benefits, but have since regained much function after self pay for chiropractic therapy, extensive physical therapy once I had time away from clinical work as a surgeon. I have recently completed my master in medical management at Carnegie Mellon Heinz School, and chose to return to school to learn in depth all factors eroding the quality, access, and issues related to US Health care system due to political "hijacking",lack of universal health insurance. The argument for eliminating noncompete is to serve public good. I am highly trained, ready to work, need to work to support my family. I am barred from making a living. My husband was laid off last October, we are living off our savings. It's humbling to be President of American Society of Pediatric Otolaryngology, I teach medical students at UCF COM, and receive countless messages from desperate parents, they want to see me but can't. I have spoken to attorneys, and despite the other 2 systems approaching me last year, expressing interest, and private practice groups interested in hiring me, no offer is possible as ALL are afraid of litigation in FL. There is not contingency so no "money" to be made for my case. After my departure, another surgeon resigned as well. The patients now are waiting at least 6 up to 9 months to get an appt at my old hospital, . I volunteered yesterday at a free clinic for children with Down Syndrome, moved to tears as so many patients/families I have known came to see me. Some children have had pus draining from their ears for 1 year, decreased hearing, unable to get appointments. The group of 4 private practice surgeons are "drowning", as population of Central FL and FL in general continues to increase, anticipating another 1 million children in next decade. My husband is a computer software architect with intellectual property law degree. I understand there are exceptions to protect businesses for proprietary information and inventions, healthcare should NOT be included. The AHA will protest and lobby against this for their marketshare, control, and focus on revenue. I assure you it's not for patient access or public good. Not allowing highly trained physicians and surgeons to serve the public is detrimental. My old employer fought for certificate of need for 5 years, citing that the need for 3rd children's hospital was present despite having 2 already within 20 miles. Ironic. Please I want to meet Chairman Khan."
Melissa	"I am a licensed marriage and family therapist (LMFT) in Florida who is bound by a non-compete clause that limits my ability to provide additional therapy services to my community. I would be able to increase my family's income and provide additional needed mental health services to my community if it were not for this clause. I support this proposed rule change."
Eric	"I worked for a company that I thought was edging toward doing things that were illegal. I had a non-compete agreement, but luckily, the owner was a hot head and yelled that anyone in the office who wanted him to tear up his non-compete agreement, he would do it. He did, and I went down the road two miles and took over the management of a competitor's business. But, if he hadn't been a nut case, I couldn't have worked in the same business within 200 miles. And, I certainly couldn't afford to go to court to invalidate my agreement."

Emma	"The non- compete clause is very disruptive for physicians with children, who are forced to move school districts and lose all their friends if a physician parent has to move 50 miles away. Families are torn apart if only the parent moves. Divorced families struggle greatly with kids having to travel long distances to see the other parent. The non-compete clause is an unfair and unnecessary punishment tir physicians who sacrifice so much for training. Physicians are leaving the field due to burnout, and if a physician faces a non compete, he is more likely to just leave the field entirely. We need to support the physicians who gave so much during COVID."
Walter	"Non competes are a form of involuntary servitude. One step above slavery. People spend years developing knowledge and experience in a field and need to start in an entirely new field if they no longer wish to work for an employer. Those reason could be financial but they could also relate to the work environment or how they are treated by the employer. It may restrict them from career advancement and improved compensation and benefits. That talent is wasted as is the time they invested to educate themselves in their field of expertise. It is not fair to the employee or favorable to advancement of their expertise in a particular field."
Deborah	"I am a physician and I support a ban on non-competes."
Morgan	"Non compete agreements are anti-competitive and often punitive to workers. They do not deserve to be a part of the labor marketplace."
Eric	"Fantastic idea!"
Andrea	"This is way overdue. Please proceed to ban non-competes."
Joel	"i have been in the insurance industry for 25 years. I was terminally ill and was forced to leave my job making in excess of 500k per year. It was a miss diagnoses and I was ready to come back to work. My employer refused to let me come hack and enforced a three year non compete that ultimately made me almost homeless. I had file for bankruptcy and have never recovered. These contracts have protected greedy business owners to take advantage of people like me. You should do away with them now. Please"
Richard	"Considering I am being sued and put out of business from my previous Fortune 500 Employer I stand in favor for this rule. We started this business and offered a better product with better service and the big company did not like that so they are trying to put us out of business through legal fees. They can afford to sue us in Federal Court and bury us with legal fees in efforts to break us into submission. Small businesses can't afford the literally Hundreds of Thousands of dollars in legal fees, so most companies fold. It is very difficult to understand why a 20 Billion dollar business gives you an ultimatum get vaccinated or be fired. Then, sue you for violating your non-compete even though they were going to fire you. As we are finding out quickly, this is done to put competition out of business before they make a bigger impact. It is ruthless and shameful!"

Susan	"I support this ban 100%. I have been in the horse business all of my life (I am now 73). I first heard of this mandatory non-compete, for veterinarians when I was living and working in Wellington, FL. Veterinarians there, if leaving their group/employer, could not work in the same area within 700 miles. I thought then, as I do now, how completely unfair and fear motivated it was by the employers. They did not want any competition. Everyone suffers with that!"
Joseph	"Banning non-compete clauses would incentivise employer's to pay better wages and treat their employees better."
Kristen	"Non compete clauses should be banned. I am a physician who works in Florida and non-compete clauses are particularly bad here. One of the biggest employers in this state has a 5 year, 2 counties away "from any office". So if someone wants to change jobs, they are leaving the states. There is little to no guidance on what to look for in a contract as you are finishing residency and looking for your first job. You are exhausted, making less than 50,000 a year, and watching loans pile up Companies lure in residents with big signing bonuses and stay vague on the details on how they will get paid after the first year. Then companies make new rules about how they are paying the physicians- and usually pay amounts go down for the same amount of work. i have seen physician salaries cut in half. But people feel trapped in their job because their families already have a life in the area kids go to schools etc. If companies/hospitals want to hang on to their physicians, they should pay them fairly and give them the support they need- not hold them hostage with an non compete which we can't afford to fight"
Amberly	"I am in favor of a ban on contracted non-competes."
Christopher	"A non compete clause was part of my future contract not yet in full force because I had not completed fellowship training in Mohs surgery. It was to become active after I graduated, yet I signed the contract 4 months into my physician subspecialty training because the private practice hosting the fellowship training invited another dermatologist in a rural area to become part of their group. I was going to move to this rural area that had no fellowship trained Molts surgeon/skin cancer specialists. The owner of the dermatology practice in the rural area decided to separate from this larger dermatology group. The program director for my fellowship who is also the president of the larger dermatology group sued me personally on non compete grounds to prevent me from providing care in this rural community despite me not having worked under the contract. I provided care to this community for 7 months however, I could no longer afford the months long legal suit and $70,000 worth of legal fees with no end in sight and had to settle agreeing to leave the area and not return for 2 years. The non compete was abused and prevented a community in need from having the care it deserved. I have another 8 months before I could return. I fully support the ban on non-competes it does no good for the community and only serves the interest of those who would prevent care to serve their own bottom line putting money above the care of a community. Mohs and Reconstructive Surgeon"

Tim	"The non compete in my industry handcuffs me to work in constrained conditions which limit my ability to progress within my industry. My life's work and skillset is in this given industry; and my company knows this, therefore I cannot leave to pursue better opportunities because I cannot work within 50 miles of my already large territory. If I wanted to pursue a better job, I cannot because I would have to move my family and my home to be able to commute to that job. My employer knows this and limits my wages and exploits this non compete as they know I can not just move my family. The non compete subjects sales representatives to exploitation by the employer."
Alyssa	"As it is currently written, many lawyers have stated that the FTC proposal would not apply to nonprofit organizations. Given that the majority of the hospital systems in the country are classified as nonprofit in name despite the business model being the same as other healthcare entities, this would actively give nonprofit hospital systems an unfair advantage over independent physician practices and for-profit health systems. It is important to note that several of the hospital systems that produce the most in profits and pay their CEOs many millions a year are 'not for profit' in name. Therefore, this rule seems arbitrary, and if the FTC proposal was to have its intended consequence, noncompetes should to be eliminated for both not for profit and for profit hospital systems. While it is hard to argue that a single physician leaving a hospital system would significantly affect the bottom line for a large hospital system, it is quite true that a single physician employed by a small independent physician practice could significantly hurt that independent practice by using the practice's resources to build a patient base and reputation, and then opening their own practice across the street. Given that the footprint of an individual practice is smaller than a hospital system, the argument that a physician wanting to leave that practice could still practice in the area without having to uproot their families is much more reasonable. Independent practices area valuable player in the healthcare ecosystem, and preferred by many patients. Therefore, if a carveout in the FTC proposal is created in healthcare, it should be for independent practices, not for 'not for profit' healthcare systems, and be aimed at keeping independent physician practices viable."
Dave	"Please make this happen! I've been working medical sales for 10 years. I was let go by a company and now they're after me with their attorneys for taking a job in a similar field. I have four kids I'm trying to raise and I'm just trying to work! Now they are threatening me and I'm having to hire an attorney. These non competes are out of control. This one restricts me from working in three entire States! It also says 2 years of salary and commission are immediately due to them. How can this be enforceable!? Please please end noncompetes! "
Tyler	"I am an associate oral surgeon under a two year noncompete with my current employer. I am starting my own practice in a different area than my current employer, however I am supposed to refuse to see anyone who would normally be referred to my current employer per the noncompete. Many of my current employer's referral sources are ones that I secured on my own as an associate, but I will have to turn them down and ask them to see my current employer per the contract. I also cannot hire any of his staff for at least 2 years in spite of them expressing an interest in changing to my office."

Robert	"I am 100% in support of eliminating non-compete clauses. I am a physician whose career trajectory has been harmed by non-compete clauses - unable to leave a position with a poorly run practice because I would have to relocate away from my family."
Clark	"The FTC's proposed rule banning non-compete agreements is both necessary and long overdue. It's well established that the Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution of the United States is intended to empower the Federal Government, and by extension, the various agencies formed by Congress to enact and enforce its policies, to regulate interstate commerce. It is undeniable that in an increasingly "remote first" world, more businesses are working across various State boundaries. These businesses are often formed in a particular state, but employ persons residing in another (and are therefore generally bound by a different set of laws). For instance, a business formed in California is already statutorily prohibited from employing non-compete clauses in agreements made with employees. A business formed in Florida (a notoriously pro non-compete state) is not bound by the same State restrictions. Now, let's assume each of the aforementioned companies chooses to employ persons in the opposite state. We have a clearly ambiguous situation in need of Federal regulation in favor of the common good, and leveling the playing field for businesses. The common good, I would submit, is the banning of non-compete agreements, if not in whole practice, as the proposed rule contemplates, in all but only the most extreme circumstances of executive employees, founders of businesses of substantial size, etc. A personal story as reference follows: Having just recently graduated from a state university in Florida, I was excited to get my career started, but had no particularly specialized degree or requirements for a job. Only that it be in a sales position to gain experience in a mass market skill. In a tough economy (2008) I managed to find a job working for a company (formed in Florida) that asked me to sign a non-compete (something I knew nothing about at the time). I was an entry level employee by all accords. Having worked for the company for 4 years, and having gained some skill in the general areas of business (as one would nearly anywhere,) I was approached for a job by a competitor of my company and offered a job, making 28.6% more per year and allowing me to work from home. An upgrade in lifestyle by anyone's measure. They were a California based company. They asked me to sign non- solicitation and non-disclosure agreements, but not a non-compete (which were already banned more than 10 years ago), presumably to protect both their interests and those of my former employer. When I resigned and told my employer of the new opportunity, I was physically assaulted by our CEO ,who slammed a copy of the non-compete in my chest. Afterward, they weaponized the non-compete by sending it to my new employer, who promptly rescinded the offer out of fear of litigation. I laving done real financial damage, I had no choice but to sue my former employer for Tortious Interference in hopes of undoing the financial damage. Because of Florida's body of common law, and its judiciary's tendencies of liberally siding with companies, my former company prevailed. To pile on, they pursued, and

	were awarded Attorney's Fee in the amount of approximately 587,000. I was under 30 years old. My only available choice was Bankruptcy. Even that didn't prevent me from having to pay the judgment, which continued to devastate for years. This is a cautionary tale, but could have been any well-meaning recent college graduate trying to improve their career and standard of living, without any malice towards the company holding them hostage with a non-compete. I'd happily provide more details to any governmental body wishing to learn more about my story. This experience has had one of the most profound effects on my life of all. Non-competes are weapons of mass destruction against the common welfare of the working class, and are in desperate need of Federal regulation."
Lisa	"To whom it may concern, Please repeal this. It hurts American workers and limits our abilities to gainful employment."
Karen	"I strongly agree that non-compete agreements should be banned. They are old-fashioned and just a way to suffocate the worker, because the worker is basically forced to sign when they are vulnerable, ie, in need of a job and most people don't really understand the ramifications. It stifles the workforce, preventing workers from obtaining better job opportunities, and keeping them trapped in a job that doesn't work for them."
Justin	"I am currently a medical student who was required to enter into a non-compete agreement for a job I held during my undergraduate degree. The job paid me $15 per hour and I did not hold trade secrets. This non-compete was used to lock me into a job. This is also a critical issue for physicians, who are increasingly locked into non-competes. Physicians who are locked into non-competes cannot change jobs or practices without being forced to pay large sums of money or leaving the metropolitan area or state. This denies patients access to medical services by worsening local physician shortages. Non-compete agreements are being abused by large and small businesses and should be banned in order to protect the future prospects for millennial's and Generation Z, who have or are entering the workforce with few of the benefits that older generations benefited from. Opponents of this proposed rule have their own bank accounts and pocketbooks at interest and not the interest of working class Americans."
Xo	"This ruling needs to happen ASAP. I am bound to a non-compete clause that in order to work I'd have to move if I wanted to leave my job. I basically can't work in 4 counties because of this clause. One of which was put in at the very last minute of me receiving the contract. I had reviewed multiple copies and that did not have this one sentence in it. I am trapped and come to find out this is what this employer/owner does all the time. This ruling can't come soon enough. I'm hoping it passes."
Robert	"I'm a practicing Obstetrician/Gynecologist in Florida and currently work for a large women's health organization. I am absolutely in support of the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete clauses. I am an equity partner of the organization and have been present since day 1 of the corporation as it exists today. There are now over 400 healthcare providers within the company and, with few exceptions, we are all bound

	to a highly restrictive non-compete clauses. The vast majority of providers are in Florida which is a state that strongly enforces non-competes, including for healthcare providers. This company submitted a comment voicing opposition to the FTC Proposal and listed a number of requested exceptions to the proposal should it pass (https://www.regulations.gov/comment/FTC-2023-0007-7064). I would like it make it clear that the company in no way speaks for their individual healthcare providers, including myself. One of their proposed exceptions states, "[If the proposal passes] Make an exception for highly compensated individuals. Organizations spend an increased amount of time and effort training highly compensated individuals, and it would be a significant loss for such individuals to leave an organization after a short period of time." We, the physicians, are the highly compensated individuals referenced here. We were trained in medical school and residency. We have honed our skills through years of direct patient care and self study. This company is not in the business of training us and haven't needed to spend time or effort to do so. We are highly trained by the time we first join the organization. The fact of the matter is that if the FTC proposal passes and non-competes are banned, companies such as mine would have to actually start investing in their employees/providers. This may come in the form of appropriate compensation and improved work-life balance. This is contrary to the all-too-common setting of being pushed to see more patients without a meaningful increase in compensation. Currently, if a private practice down the street or another healthcare organization a couple zip codes away wishes to offer me better compensation, better benefits, and better work schedules I am out of luck due to a very restrictive non-compete. I essentially have no job mobility within the city I currently reside. In the healthcare world, providers don't possess "trade secrets" that could jeopardize the company if we leave. We possess skills and knowledge, the great majority of which were obtained in medical school and residency. Healthcare organizations then employ us and profit greatly from but don't actually contribute to our skills and knowledge. Sure, the company may lose some patients who choose to continue seeing me at a new location, but that's called continuity of care and is extremely important - especially in my field of medicine. The fear of patients leaving one healthcare organization for another is not a valid justification for non-compete clauses. And regardless, a quality healthcare organization should be able to recruit skilled providers to replace me. The vast majority of my practicing colleagues are also in full support of the FTC proposal. A number of them have submitted comments as well. As providers, we are frequently tasked with sacrificing evenings with family, our kids' baseball games, holidays, and SLEEP in the name of patient care. Non-compete clauses require us to also sacrifice better compensation, benefits, vacation time and improved work-life balance as a whole. They have no place in the healthcare world."
Ivonne	"I completely support doing away with non-compete clauses in any employment or termination agreement. They should be replaced by confidentiality clauses ensuring employees and contractors do not disclose confidential or private information during their employment or upon or after separation from their employment."
Kenric	"Compulsory Non-Compete agreements for anything other than employees working on a company's trade secrets is an indefensible act of bad faith by employers. America is increasingly becoming a country with no guarantee of labor standards the rest of the modern world enjoys, and in light of an incoming recession even a job might become a luxury. Therefore, the idea of continuing to allow business can potentially legally threaten and bully potential and former employees who in much of America can barely afford a single $500 medical issue with a job let alone afford a lawyer to deal with legal issues is gross oversight by the federal government."

Cole	"Non competes are ridiculous and totally undermine the free market. Employees either have to submit to the organization's demands with no recourse but to move from the area. My physician had to work in another county recently because of his non compete. Let's have a real free market and abolish non compete agreements."
Phyllis	"I support banning non-compete clauses in contracts."
Fu	"I agree with the Federal Trade Commission that noncompetes allow for exploitative practice that suppresses wages, hampers innovation, and blocks entrepreneurs from starting new businesses. I will explain my case as it is happening as I write. I've been working for the past five years as an account manager with Blue Sun Intl, FL, where I signed a non-compete agreement. Due to this, I have been subject to exploitative practices and unpaid wages (commissions). My employer never showed me the overall number of my sales, nor has he paid me commissions for the past 4 years. Due to the highly restrictive non-compete agreement, if I wanted to continue using my expertise and work in my industry, my only options are to stay and work for this company or face legal repercussions should I seek a new job. Two weeks ago, I resigned from the position for another similar job in another state with a higher salary and overall better benefits: health, 401k, health insurance, etc. The new employment offered is not from a competitor nor is it for the same geographic location. It is from one of their suppliers where they only have distribution rights in Florida. Being aware of the non-compete, I did not pursue any job offers within the state and will uproot my life and move to CA. Even so, my previous employer sent me a cease and desist letter, threatening a potential lawsuit, should I not drop the job offer from Solabia using a competing business clause of the non-compete agreement. As of today, March 5, 2023, my former employer is threatening me with litigation with an attorney due to the non-compete agreement. I either have to comply with his unreasonable demands or hire an attorney to defend my case, which will be very costly as I no longer have any income. Furthermore, my new employer is delaying the hiring process until this situation gets sorted out. If it wasn't for the non-compete agreement, my situation will be very different as I will be able to move to LA and start my new job/life. In short, I agree with the FTC that non-compete agreements should be banned as it limits an employee's career to a single company for years, creates poor working conditions where employees are vulnerable to exploitation, and stops employees from searching/accepting better job opportunities. Dakota	"I fully support the abolishment of non compete agreements. As others have stated, competition is the backbone of our economy and free enterprise. I understand that companies want to protect themselves in the sense of the cost of training new employees, and the possibility of trade secrets being shared with competitors. Has the idea of stipulating a minimum employment term into an employee contract been suggested? Have the minimum term be equal to how long it would take to cover training costs based in employees pay. Have employees sign an NDA in regards to trade secrets. This allows them to stay in the same trade/profession, but does not allow them to legally divulge trade secrets with their new company/employer."
Diana	"As a physician I fully support the Federal Trade Commission Non compete clause rule. It is unfair to physicians to uproot and be forced to relocate their entire families after contracts have been completed as they cannot work in the same area they live."
	"TLDR: Non-competes are a form of bullying. I am a 31 year old female and currently under a chokehold with my former employer and not allowed to engage in activity in 6 states. 4 of which I had never worked in with said employer. Non-compete clauses have transformed into a way to bully/intimidate employees. I was forced to sign a non-compete for a start-up business in healthcare tech and was not allowed to negotiate terms in said clause. It was for a great and rare opportunity for a pharmacist so I decided to proceed with signing. I went from a retail pharmacy manager for a big chain to a Director of Customer Success for the start up who implemented specialty pharmacy services in hospital systems- an amazing upgrade. Within 3 years I was promoted to Senior Director and oversaw all of the implementations and supervise the team. Recently, my company was bought-out and the culture completely changed. I was looking for another opportunity and found one to be a VP of Customer Operations and oversee operations in the USA. This was a title promotion, a pay increase and my first opportunity with equity shares. Under my non- compete I am not allowed to support the teams that I oversee if they are located in 6 states. 4 of these states I have never worked in for my former company. It was an intimidation tactic to make me stay with my former employer and I am super fortunate that I had another employer willing to abide and proceed with me for this opportunity. I know there are others among the workforce who was not able to leave for fear of no other job."
Robert	"Hi, Thanks for working on this rule banning non-complete clauses. California has had this for years and it's time that these clauses were banned nationwide. I work in IT and these are increasingly common and an artificial form of anti-competitive behavior. If you can't ban these, at least pass a rule that you must be paid your current wage as severance during the time covered by the non-compete if you leave your job. If a company wants me to not work after my time with them, then they need to pay for that."
Thomas	"I believe an employer has sonic reasonable right to a minor non-compete when applied to employees they have invested in for specialized training In those instances the non-compete should begin from hire date and not termination date to provide the employer fair return on investment. However when an employee arrives with all the skill set already in place it is extremely unfair to place 2 year 50 mile radius restrictions via a non-compete. This situation unfairly restricts the employee under these circumstances from maximizing their families earning capacities. Often to better themselves it would require for that person to drive long distances or relocate which creates additional different hardships, often outweighing the benefit of the change. Non-Competes are an unfair means to control workers while restricting earning potential of that individual. It is the exact opposite of a free market and what the foundation of our nation is based on."

Fortunate	"Non-compete clauses should be abolished for doctors who work in a hospital setting as they have little control on patient admission. However, for clinics, it should be very restricted, such as within 0.5 miles for a maximum period of 6 months. This caveat is to protect clinic owners fairly."
Christopher	"Our 1L Contracts class had a sustained discussion on the fairness, efficiency, and administrability of a flat ban on noncompetes. We developed a broad consensus that low-wage workers and small businesses are adversely impacted by noncompete clauses and approve of a rule banning them entirely. Other students felt that noncompete clauses discourage provision of goods and services that comprise public utilities and favored trade-specific or profession-specific bans on noncompete clauses. The class disagreed, moreover, about whether noncompete clauses are problematic in the context of high-wage workers and big businesses (especially since, in robust markets, future employers can "settle out" the dispute) and thought that courts should review such clauses to make sure they are reasonable and not unduly burdensome, as in the classic Contracts case of Valley Medical v. Farber. We did not reach any consensus on how precisely to define the scope of an exception to the ban. Students proposed two tests, one based on the internal classification of employees in large companies, and another based on relative compensation."
Elyse	"Non-competes must be reasonable. Big enough to not compete directly with the employer, but not large enough that the individual must relocate in order to work"
Elizabeth	"Non-compete clauses are ridiculous for anyone but the most senior of executives. If you can just leave them for those employees, then that's fine. But if you can't then eliminating them all is better than leaving them for all. I am sure you are being lobbied by corporations. I cannot imagine what they can argue in favor of non-compete clauses, but I am also sure they will find something. Do not enable this drag on our economy that hurts wage employees. Get rid of non-compete clauses."
Kim	"Good day and thank you for this opportunity to express myself publicly, as it is most appreciated. By way of background may I submit the following: I have been involved in franchising for a career that has now spanned north of 30 years. As both Franchisor and Franchisee, I've been on both sides of the desk (and counter) for as long as I can remember. I've developed, executed, and designed franchising programs, and franchise documentation consistent with regulations, and "sold" franchises domestically and internationally. My background consists of all things franchised, including franchise sales and development, franchisee support, operations, marketing, financial management, real estate, construction, franchise brand building, and brand acquisitions, with titles such as President, COO, Country

	Manager, Managing Director, Regional, Area, and District manager. In addition, I am passionate about working with the American Diabetes Association and the Congressional Diabetes Caucus for Diabetes Advocacy with Police Departments, First Responder EMTs, and in particular, with the Cleveland Clinic / Martin County I health for ongoing education and refresher courses. I am also honored to be a SCORE mentor and workshop presenter and a supporting member and delegate to the leadership council with the American Association of Franchisees and Dealers (AAFD), the nonprofit organization that advocates on behalf of Cherished Franchisees. Today, I am a Franchisee advocate, a Franchisee advisor, and what is commonly referred to as a franchise "broker, consultant, coach, referral agent" etc. As has been my lively hood for the career described I have been the subject of "Non-Competes." which significantly attempted to sideswipe my career with unreasonable and untenable provisions that would have stopped me from pursuing my chosen profession and business investments. One, in particular, was so egregious that it indicated I was not to be engaged in the "sale" of franchises, for any company, for TI TREE years after my resignation, and to not do so both in the United States or anywhere on the globe. Imagine being told that you could not pursue a career in your chosen field of Government when it's all you've known and what you have at this point in time pursued. Without question. I am totally aware and agree with certain portions of non-competes in specific industries and where, specifically, proprietary elements, trademark dress, and "replication" should he made part of a reasonably crafted non-compete to protect and preserve the items mentioned. I'm afraid I, however, have to disagree with the impact it may very well have on a person or persons attempting to make a living and support loved ones, a family, and themselves by unduly being restricted to continue to pursue their chosen field of work. The solution would be to craft non-competes with complete specificity. With proper attention to detail, carve-outs that preclude onerous and egregiously unreasonable terms and conditions, and a document that does not interfere with the career objectives of individuals assuming they agree with the proposed specific carve-outs that I write of. You can not, for example, be a "Chef" and become prohibited from being a Chef elsewhere if cooking is your chosen profession. You can not be a salesperson and be banned from "selling" elsewhere if "selling" is your profession. You can not be a "Manager" and be prohibited from managing elsewhere if "Managing" is your profession. You can not be a Lawyer and be banned from practicing law elsewhere if "The Practice of Law" is your profession. If enforced under a non-compete, these examples fly in the face of fairness and equitable standards. My sincerest thanks for allowing me and others the opportunity to express our opinions, and may you be guided by doing the "right" thing relative to non- compete agreements. Respectfully submitted. Alan	"I support imposing a ban on non-compete contracts in most cases. The sole exception would be businesses which are involved in the creation of specific intellectual property, and even then the non-compete contracts should be narrow in scope and limited in duration. Starbucks should not be able to use non-compete contracts to prevent their baristas moving into better paying jobs with other coffee shops, nor should a non-compete contract be a permanent bar to any employee moving to another job."

Jack	"As non-compete clauses are generally offered to current employees and don't come into effect until the end of employment, there is effectively no remuneration to employees for accepting a non-compete. Banning a non-compete agreement is a step that will help, but it goes too far. Agreements without compensation should be banned. But, there are situations and actions which support non-compete agreements. These scenarios are ones that naturally arise where an employee developed special skills or knowledge that would gain a competitor a significant advantage to acquire. Employees with that knowledge and/or skills should be free to enter into a non-compete agreement that compensates them fairly for agreeing. Fair compensation should depend on how restrictive the agreement is. A very restrictive agreement that prevents working in the same industry anywhere in the world should offer compensation close to full time salary and benefits for the duration of the non-compete period. A much narrower agreement naming a small geographic region or identifying explicit competitors that are blocked - and which there are a multitude of competitors and geographic areas not blocked would be subject to a much lower compensation threshold - perhaps just an amount equal to moving costs to get out of the affected areas. Additionally, these non-compete agreements should only impact voluntary departures. If the employee is laid off involuntarily, no non-compete agreement should survive. That brings us to the last point. Non-competes should never be forced on employees as a condition of involuntary separation to get severance benefits. They should be permitted if they offer additional benefits, and are at the same or better levels as voluntary agreements signed during employment"
Melissa	"As an attorney who has drafted and litigated non-compete agreements, I strongly recommend that the Commission (1) categorically ban the use of noncompete clauses for some workers and (2) impose no requirements on executive level or commission-based sales workers. Executive workers who occupy the upper echelons of a company are savvy enough to bargain properly for non-compete agreements and deserve no protection from this Commission therefore no additional rules are needed to protect this class. Workers who are salesmen in purely commission-based likewise should not have the benefit of a rebuttable presumption against a noncompete because business typically invest in training to get that sales employee in a position to perform. A worker's ability to sell is a generic skill that could apply to multiple different industries such that if a salesman terminates employment at a car dealership, that worker can use their sales skillset to sale in another industry. The only reason an experienced salesperson wants to stay in the same industry to compete is because the employer has placed that worker in a position to meet/know clients in a particular industry & it is easier on the worker to continue to sale for a different employer, but it is inequitable to allow that sales person to continue in the same field & compete with the former employer when they can use that same skillset to sale a different item in a different industry. Therefore, neither executives nor commission-based salesmen need rules to prohibit noncompete agreements. On the opposite end of the work spectrum are hourly wage employees or salaried employees who perform non-sales or non-commission based jobs: these are the workers who should benefit from a rule outright prohibiting noncompete clauses. Likewise, hairdressers, aestheticians, nail technician, makeup artists, etc should also have their livelihoods protected by banning non-compete clauses because these are lower- income earners or non-business savvy workers who are taken advantage of by

	big business & it stifles entrepreneurship. Unlike the salespersons, a hairdresser or anyone in the beauty business has a unique artistic skillset such that is not transferable to another industry. Noncompete clauses should also be banned against anyone in the medical profession, including nurses, dentists, dental hygienists, chiropractors, etc because the public needs better access to good medical professionals and if the medical facility is not keeping their staff happy then only by losing good workers will they self-correct had business practices. Noncompetes should be banned for attorneys & legal staff."
Tamzin	"I support the FTC proposed rule banning non-compete clauses. It is absolutely outrageous that medical care in this nation has been taken over by medical corporatists and they were facilitated in that takeover by our own government. I am deeply embittered by the way my government has killed real medical care in the USA, and by the medical corporatists who have followed in its wake like sharks following a bloody carcass dragged through the surf. As a physician, I have been cheated and kicked in the teeth all my professional life by an enormous, incomprehensible government bureaucracy, and then to add insult to injury, by the multi-millionaire medical corporatists. I have been a dedicated and honest physician. I would have done better financially being a toll-taker on the NJ Turnpike right out of high school. I have been terrified of the US government all my life-too long to describe why here. I became a physician because my mother died from TB when I was 15. I was left alone with nothing. My father was a sick WW2 veteran. He did not fight for my freedom, because I have steadily lost it during the course of my life. It wasn't easy, but I got an academic scholarship to college, put myself through medical school, AND PAID BACK MY LOANS! I wish I had been a veterinarian. Hospitals and other facilities Americans depend on for care abuse non-compete clauses to the detriment of patients and the medical professionals who care for them. Contracts that prohibit medical professionals from caring for their patients outside of corporate employment are not only unethical and anti-competitive, but are dangerous to patients. 	"As a massage therapist working in a spa, I've been stuck. I paid for my education, liability insurance, continuing education, licensing, etc. My place of employment doesn't allow me to work for a year within 10 miles, which eliminates much of the area within range of my home. I feel trapped in a job that didn't really invest anything in my ability to perform my job. Ending non competes would allow me to negotiate a better situation at my current job or have the flexibility to leave if the conditions aren't favorable." -N. A.B.
	""I'm in the Tech industry, and 100% in favor of prohibiting non-competes. I've been a founder of startups, as well as employee. if someone specializes in a field, but then can't work at any other company in that field, they are essentially an indentured servant at that point." -Shannon B.
	"I am a 55 year old medical oncologist who has practiced in the Atlanta Metro area for 22 years. I initially practiced for my first 15 years with a large multisite practice which I enjoyed very much. Ten years ago it was acquired by one of the large Healthcare systems in Atlanta.. I signed the contract which had a non compete that was 25 miles from all offices that I worked at and essentially meant that if I left I would not be able to practice within the Atlanta Metro area. They told me that they would not negotiate the non compete away or modify it. The reality is I never had any negotiating power...During my employment I endured abusive comments made to me by physician and non physician leadership. At times non physician and physician leaders made implicit and explicit comments about replacing me without giving a reason (My contract had a termination without cause that still would allow the non compete to be enforced). Because of my non compete I could not leave until my youngest child completed middle school and high school. When my youngest child graduated from high school I resigned. I could no longer tolerate working for this organization...I am a physician thirty years into his career and because of this non compete I have to start over. I need to develop a reputation in the new community I work in and develop a referral and patient base. This will take years. The patients I leave behind are devastated and quite honestly are not sure what to do... Although I have suffered professionally and personally from non compete clauses I hope others in the future will not have to."

	"As a mid-level executive in highly specific field of HVAC, I strongly support loosening of restrictive employment practices and non-compete agreements. I worked for a company for 9 years and moved into various lateral job functions without a significant title or responsibility increase (because I was trapped). I recently left to go to a much smaller competitor that was starting in the market that gave me a promotion and a path to career and financial growth. After 3 months, I received a threatening letter from an attorney on Christmas Eve. This caused significant emotional concern for my entire family. While I will abide by the terms of the agreement, customers should be allowed to buy from me if they like me and my products better. Employees should be able to leave and work for me if I provide a healthier environment and more opportunities for growth." -J.
	"I am a board-certified dermatologist. After a 4-year undergraduate degree, I spent 4 years in medical school then 4 years in dermatology residency. But apart the time and effort needed, I incurred about $350,000 in educational loan debts. I believe that non-compete clauses are unfairly restrictive. If I want to leave my job for any reason, I should be able to leave and find gainful employment wherever I want to, irrespective of the location. To be obstructed from practicing in a geographic area of choice is insulting after dedicating years of my life to the art of medicine and shouldering a huge financial burden (and risk!) to do what I do. It also places an undue burden on me to either move my family (including school age children) or drive long distances to another job outside the non-compete radius. Please give consideration to eradicating all non-compete clauses for professional contracts across the country." -Joseph
	"I am a physician in Atlanta Georgia. I work for a company owned by a private equity firm. Our company was sold to new owners who cut our pay by 25%. We had to sign this contract or be fired. As a physician who works for someone else one is forced to sign a non-compete in order to be employed. This is extremely restrictive to practicing medicine because if you find out management is bad or the company changes hands to new ownership, you cannot leave and work in your craft in the same city of millions of people like Atlanta. You have to go 20, 25 miles outside of the population center to find a job counties away because of the non-compete. Most non-competes I've seen you also cannot practice medicine in your specialty in the same area or city for 18 months. This is absurd for an employer to be able to tell you that if you leave their company, you cannot work and earn a living in the area for a year and a half...An employer should never have been allowed by contract in the United States of America to own an employee in what amounts to being an indentured servant." -Todd B.

	"I work in the Finance industry as a financial advisor and having a non-competes greatly restricts our team. Our firm has given complete control of our revenue share to the managing director of our office. Even though he services only about 5% of our client base, he pays himself over 60% of the revenue, leaving the other 40% to be split amongst 4 advisors that are actually servicing the book. Given the non-compete our hands are tied because we cannot work as an advisor for another firm within 100 miles of our home office. When bringing up the issue to corporate, they seem to know they have all the power and have no intentions of making things right. Banning all non-competes would force them to come to the table and negotiate fair pay, or give us the opportunity to take our clients elsewhere that is more equitable." -Matt B.
	"This week alone I've had my gynecologist and gastroenterologist leave the prominent healthcare system here in ATLANTA, GA. They're moving out of state because the noncomplete doesn't allow them to practice in town. I'm losing healthcare providers I've built a relationship with over years. I was also not able to get a new patient appointment for a child psychiatrist at the same healthcare system - the same issue. The community is not able to retain quality providers due to the threat of the noncompete. It may benefit the employer but it is hurting the community at large." -Karen

Susan	"Non compete clauses are abused by organizations- both 'not for profit' and profit. Physicians and other providers often are forced to stay at places practicing abusive policies due to the overreach of the non-compete and the impact on families / ability to continue to work in the community."
Muhammad	"I am a physician practicing in Georgia. Non-compete clause is oppressive which obstructs the rights of physicians as employee. On other hand, a hospital can construct their extension whenever they want. In smaller communities, physician can't exercise their right to dissociate from a hospital and move to another organization. There can be a lot of reasons for physicians to move away from a hospital; one of them being non-conducive environment to provide compassionate clinical care. I strongly support the motion to end non-compete clause."
Kymberly	"I am a nurse practitioner in a rural area and I have a non compete clause that restricts me from working within 45 miles of any office I have worked out of. We have four locations in four different towns. I will be forced to move 80 to 100 miles away if I quit my job. I am in favor of adopting the rule to ban non compete clause's."

Melissa	"As a physician in a major metropolitan city I fully support a ban on noncompete clauses. It limits competition, keeps physician wages stagnant and contributes to burnout in our profession. Most physicians are now employed by hospitals or large private equity firms that are making massive profits off the backs of their workers. With physicians having very little leverage in the negotiation process the contracts all have stringent non compete clauses. If someone wanted to find a new job in their area it is basically impossible. You're forced to uproot your family and move to another city or state to find a more suitable job. I believe banning noncompetes would greatly help the medical field. Thank you for examining this important issue."
Anonymous	"Non competes are completely unfair and can be detrimental to providing for your family. I am currently finding this out. I have been in the same industry for the last 15 years, it's all I know. I recently went to work for a company who completely mislead me on what my duties and responsibilities would be - they flat out lied. I signed an extremely over reaching non compete as a condition of my employment. It all sounded like no big deal at the time, as I had every intention to spend the rest of my career there. Fast forward only 4 months later, and I had no choice but to leave due to the gross misrepresentation of my duties and the completely unethical practices this company is involved in. I left to work for what could loosely be construed as a competitor based on the non compete terms, but in reality they are not competition at all. They sell completely different products for different markets. But because of the way the non compete was written, my ex-employer was empowered to and has since filed a lawsuit against me and my new company. So I am staring down massive legal fees and the possibly of being let go as I type this. This non compete limits every place I could work in my industry for 2 years within a 500 mile radius. This is an extremely small company with zero business roughly 50 miles outside of their location and in a different state than I live in... just seems crazy this can be enforced, which is what every lawyer has said so far. It's all so wrong. Never mind the fact that I signed this based on completely false pretenses about the company and what my duties would be. That doesn't matter at all apparently. That's a huge problem with these non competes, there is Zero accountability for the employer enforcing them to hold up their end of the bargain at the time of signing. It is completely one sided. I am a single father to 3 wonderful little girls, and have no clue what I'm supposed to do to provide for them now. Please help and eliminate this completely unfair practice."
Wade	"Non compete clauses are harmful and detrimental to the people bound to them. There is no reason why a company should be able to prevent a former employee from working wherever they please after they leave the company."
JOSEPH	"Non-compete clauses are an unfair legal tool that restricts the ability of a worker to make a living. The current practice favors an employer's interests and supports an arbitrary geographic restriction on a worker's rights. Once a worker has settled in a place of living, bought a house, enrolled kids in school, moved their own family to the same area, etc., does anyone really think it's fair for an employer to be able to cage-out the worker from earning a living? it's ridiculous, and I strongly support your efforts."
Alex	"As someone in a highly technical field with limited employment options, my hope when switching jobs is that no one tries to enforce the non-competes I've signed. So far, I have had no issue and many in my field move around freely, but the non-competes are always a thought in the back of our minds. The fact that non-competes can be used for entry level and manual labor jobs is absurd and abuse the reason why non-competes were created. My CEO can sit on a dozen company boards (and does) that all tie to the original business and compete against it in some way, but in theory I could not go work liar those other companies. NDAs cover the requirement of not sharing company secrets. Again, I work in a highly technical field, full of patents and processes, that my company does not want to have shared. An NDA covers that. A non-compete handcuffs me. Please abolish non-competes once and for all."

Maxell	"Non-competes in medicine makes no sense. You gain a majority of your skills/knowledge in residency and fellowship. Why should your employer then dictate where/when you can change jobs? If they want to keep you, then they need to compensate/treat you fairly. it's really that simple. I understand protecting intellectual property/trade secrets and there are NDA's/ Confidentiality agreements for that."
Lauren	"I am in full support of this proposal. As an artist, our skills are best grown through multiple means of exploration in different fields, and our income is equally supplemented when allowed to pursue freelance, gigs, and creative endeavors outside of our day job. However, various animation, game, and film studios employ non-compete clauses, which not only puts our skills at risk of stagnation, but also discourages the chances of building a portfolio that is employable. This is due to the fact that many projects do not reach the finish line, and the work done towards those projects are disallowed from being shared publicly. This is a huge crutch and burden to thousands of artists Banning non-compete clauses will open the field for many creative businesses and pursuits, and will create a wider variety of projects that are funded and created successfully."
Paul	"Thank you for taking the time to address this important issue. Non compete clauses are un-American and need to end immediately ."
Dylan	"Thank you for taking on this important issue. I saw how non-competes very negatively impacted my fathers career as a food safety consultant. Now, as a physician, I see non-competes damaging my colleague's careers, and in turn limiting access to healthcare for the average patient. It is so important that this passes for the health of our healthcare system."
Byung	"Non-compete clauses should be illegal and not allowed in employee contracts anymore. It restricts us from seeking better opportunities and pay for ourselves and our family."
Shaun	"Non-competes, especially the more restrictive versions, not only prevent employees from working for a competitor, they sometimes prevent individuals from even working in their chosen field for a period of up to two years if not more. This forces individuals to take entry level positions outside their area of expertise until that non-compete period is over. At that stage an employer may not view that person as a viable hiring candidate because of the extended gap. Additionally, non-competes stifle an individuals ability to advance to more economically desirable positions outside their current employer."

Tyler	"Non competes need to be eliminated or at the very least severely limited. The one I am currently under would require me to pack up and move my family to an entirely different area of the state I am in if I needed or wanted to find a new job. It's very frustrating and unnecessary especially for large multi billion dollar corporations to be allowed to do this."
Shelby	"Please move forward with the proposal to end non competes in this country. They are harmful for all workers, and all sectors. My family medicine doctor and primary care physician who has treated me for years left his old hospital system practice to move to a new facility and has been stuck on a non compete that does not allow him to practice medicine within a 150 mile radius of the hospital system. I know these types of non competes are not rare, are I also am a healthcare worker and have seen how doctors, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, clinical nurse specialists, registered nurses, CT and Ultrasound Technicians, and other allied healthcare workers are affected by these clauses. It also dramatically hurts our patients, who are unable to be seen in a timely or unsafe manner. Please. Non competes only help corporations hold workers hostage, and allow the company to do less to retain and improve conditions for their workers."
Sean	"I am in favor of the FTC banning non-compete clauses. They have been abused by corporations to help keep wages artificially low and limit employees ability to move, not only to get higher wages, but also to support other life changes. If an employee cannot reasonably expect to get a job when moving (when otherwise qualified) then they are being held hostage by their current employer, and that is not ok."
Christine	"Georgia should not have a compete clause. More people in the business brings down prices and gives more people a chance at a small business."
Jeremiah	"Thank you for addressing non-compete clauses in employment and contractor work. I've faced not being able to work in the film industry before because of non-compete contracts I had to sign. This makes it very hard to make a living or start my own small business."
Cathryn	"I am strongly in support of the non-compete clause rule proposed by the FTC. Non-compete clauses exploit workers and keeps wages low, which only hurts our economy."
Elisabeth	"I am in favor of banning these types of non-complete clauses. I have been bound to one and it has cost me job opportunities because "competitor" is so loosely defined in my industry. My company has also threatened people who leave that they will enforce the non-compete. It's crazy to have one for mid and lower level employees. I live in an "at-will" state and can be fired for any reason but I'm not free to find and accept any job. The imbalance is ridiculous. Please fix it."
Ruchi	"I strongly oppose non compete rule. It need to be removed for physicians."
Suzanne	"Eliminating the non-compete clause would increase competition, a basis for our market economy."
Emily	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people. Additionally , non-competes increase physician burnout as they people for numerous reasons are forced to stay in a job they may not be thriving in."

Steve	"Please approve the ban on non competes. These agreements are being used to force people to stay with firms regardless of whether their and their clients interest could be better served by changing This results in lower wages in industries such as financial services, and allows employers to manipulate employees and allows them to keep wages lower versus having to offer competitive wages to keep talented employees. I feel it is unamerican to not allow freedom for an employee to be able to shop their skills to any willing employer in their geographic area of residence."
Roger	"As a consultant I have worked with physician employers in almost all states on physician employment to advise how to attract the best physicians and how to write their employment agreements. I have also worked with over a thousand individual physicians to review and rewrite their employment contracts. Additionally I've published books, articles and videos on the subject, and held hundreds of seminars and workshops. Make no mistake as I work for and represent the employers, the purpose of the non-compete clause is to keep the employee from leaving the company, keep wages lower and protect the practice from competition. Non-compete clauses are not upheld in various states and those states do very well."
Navneeth	" Physicians and hospital staff need independence to work in any place . Restrictive covenants keeps hostage with the hospital / system . Given merging of systems if we leave a job then have to leave city . This creates hardship to families and keeps us hostage to a particular health system"
Saif	"I work as an endocrinologist in an underserved area under hospital contract. There is no other endocrinologist here in the entire city. My contract has a 50 mile non compete, which means that if in the future I want to change my job I would have to leave this town completely leaving thousands of patients without an endocrinologist. The non compete serves only the hospitals to keep manipulate the competition by suppressing their own employees at the expense of patients and the communities they serve. I fully support a ban on non compete and I hope politicians would not listen to the pressure and the lobbying power of major corporations and in act laws for the benefit of their constituents for once."
Veronica	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. For decades, exploitative noncompete agreements have barred workers from pursuing better employment opportunities in the same industry, stifling wages, and preventing career advancement. Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Stephen	"I fully support this rule."

Andrew	"I support a complete ban on non-compete clauses in employer contracts. I specifically want to include healthcare workers, both nursing and physician staff. Allowing hospitals to continue with non-compete clauses stifles worker wages and prevents worker flexibility. I know multiple colleagues (physicians, anesthesia) who were forced to move out of state after the hospital administration changed corporate anesthesia providers. The corporate anesthesia group, often owned by a hedge fund, enforced a noncompete to prevent the anesthesia providers from finding work in the immediate area. This disrupts families and I strongly oppose an exception for healthcare to the noncompete ban"
Kelly	"Non-competes prevent me from increasing access to child and adolescent psychiatric services in the rural, undeserved community where I work for a health system. I work 4 days per week and cannot practice within 25 miles of other days of the week or for a couple years if I left the practice. If I left my current job where I am the only psychiatrist in the city/county, I am unable to serve my community in another manner and the area would be left without a psychiatrist. Non-competes limit access to care for rural communities. Please eliminate them. I would love to be able to expand care in my rural community."
Alex	"I fully support the FTC's proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses. Citizens should have freedom of economic mobility. There are other ways to protect trade secrets."
James	"As a funeral home owner , I agree that there should be no non-competes between employers and owners."
Miranda	"I support a ban on non-compete clauses. A ban would put more pressure on employers to provide higher wages and better conditions, which is good for workers."
jed	"I am all for outlawing this oppressive way that employers stomp on there employees."
Celia	"I am in the laboratory medicine field and was laid off from a job as an implementation rep for an instrument vendor. Other companies were the competition, and I was held to a non-compete. This caused me to go from a six figure salary with great benefits back to the hospital making barely 60k as a single mother with twins and no emergency fund saved! I later went into the UV disinfection field and developed a tremendous amount of knowledge regarding minimizing the spread of infections in hospitals (pre-covid). After 5 years, I was laid off and prevented from continuing in this niche field that I had spent so much time developing a skillset and statistics within. I was only given a 2 week severance (along with a reminder of legal action if I worked for the competition). Companies use this as a bully tactic! If they can are going to force a non-compete, then they should provide a 6-12 month mandatory severance to allow the employee the time to job search. Job searching is very labor intensive, and combined with the financial pressure of a layoff or quitting because of unforeseen circumstances, this can cause a lifelong mental health and financial decline for the family."
Amy	"Noncompete clauses harm both physicians and patients and only benefit the businesses. Doctors get held hostage by poor jobs unable to deliver appropriate care and patients cannot see the physician that they need. There is already a physician

	shortage particularly in rural areas; noncompetes only worsen this problem. I currently have a noncompete in an underserved area which means when I leave, the community will lose a physician when they already do not have enough physicians to care for everyone."
Christine	"I would like also like to see the non-compete clause used by employers be eliminated. This is a outdated practice that is misaligned with the values of free enterprise and does the opposite of promoting progress and business opportunities."
Anthony	"Please end NDA's or severely limit their scope. When I joined a company in 2012, I didn't know enough to know that what I was signing was non standard and very broad. It has impacted my career and opportunities since unfairly. As a human, it feels predatory that a document signed over 10 years ago is still impacting me negatively."
courtney	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Exempting physicians from prohibiting a noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations. It could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. This, in turn, hurts patient care."
Daniel	"As a physician, I know that non-compete clauses only benefit hospital administrators. If physicians complain that the administrators are pushing them to see unsafe numbers of patients in a day, the administrators can act almost with impunity and force the doctors to see more patients, to the detriment of both patients and the physicians caring for them. Because of non-competes, doctors cannot fight back and threaten to leave, since the range of non competes (upwards of a 30 mile radius, basically a 60 mile circle) are often ridiculous and are set at distances such that there are no hospitals for them to even apply to within a 2 hour range. For the benefit of everyone except hospital administrators, please pass this rule making non-compete clauses unlawful."
Justin	"Given I live in a smaller city and work for a larger corporate entity, I have limited options to branch out within my community to start a private business due to the limitations of the non-compete clause in my contract. It would force me to leave and not allow for competition locally for an alternative service to the company I currently work for. I fully support the rule changes proposed to eliminate unfair non-compete clauses"
Christopher	"Physicians should be included within the ban on non-competes because such agreements can limit patient access to care, restrict the mobility and career opportunities of physicians, and ultimately harm the quality of healthcare provided to patients. Non-compete agreements are typically contracts that prohibit employees from working for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving their current employer. In the case of physicians, these agreements can limit their ability to work in a certain geographic area, work with certain patient populations, or even pursue certain medical specialties. This can limit their career options and potentially harm their ability to provide the best care possible to their patients. Furthermore, the majority of healthcare systems are non-profit organizations, which can limit competition and further exacerbate the impact of non- compete agreements on physicians. By restricting the ability of physicians to move between healthcare systems or pursue new opportunities, non-compete agreements can limit the pool of available physicians and ultimately reduce patient access to care. This can be especially detrimental in rural or underserved areas where access to healthcare is already limited. For these reasons, many argue that non- compete agreements should be banned for physicians, even in non-profit healthcare systems. While there may be some potential benefits to non-compete agreements for employers, such as protecting confidential information or trade secrets, these benefits must be balanced against the potential harm to patients and healthcare providers. By banning non-compete agreements for physicians, healthcare systems can promote competition, encourage innovation, and ultimately improve the quality of care provided to patients."

Shefali	"Non-compete clauses should be eliminated We are already in a physician shortage."
Ben	"Please ban non compete clauses. They hurt workers and depress wages. Let the free market be truly free."
Mason	"This should be enacted to protect workers"
Michelle	"I stand firmly against non-competes. As a family physician , I was nearly barred from continuing to practice medicine in my community after leaving a workplace where I was very unhappy. Non- compete clauses harms a physicians ability to practice the craft they worked tirelessly to perfect and robs their communities of their talents. Non- competes hurt physicians, patients, and ultimately, the community. Please ban these harmfully restrictive s clauses."
John	"There is no situation where healthcare is improved by enforcing noncompetes. Go doctors only have to buy their way out (adding to cost) and bad doctors will fail on their own (and are not needed by an organization."
Andrew	"Non-compete clauses in contracts are anti-competitive and hurt a worker's right to self determination."
McKay	"Dear Committee Members- I am an internist practicing on the edge of rural Georgia, but have also practiced in suburban NC. In both locations, corporate medicine, in the guise of not for profit/non-profit hospitals have adversely impacted the ability of underserved patients to access quality continuity of care through the hammer of non-competes. Both specialists and primary care physicians have been forced to leave both communities if they chose to no longer work for behemoth organizations who only pay lip service to quality care and then refuse care if a patient is unwilling to pay or is not affiliated with the right insurance. Eliminating non- compete clauses will be a step in putting the care of patients back in physician hands and removing the business middle man. Please understand how these clauses, and more importantly, the deployers of these clauses, negatively impact health equity and those with negative determinants of health disproportionately."

Melanie	"As a physician who has had to move hundreds of miles every time I left a hospital due to non-compete clauses, I fully support the FTC abolishing this rule. It keeps highly qualified professionals stuck in toxic situations because of familial obligations. I am a subspecialist who recently left a job which means leaving my entire community without my particular specialty, thus providing substandard care for hundreds and thousands of people. In addition, my parents live here, so I am being robbed of the opportunity for my children to grow up with their grandparents as well as for me to better care for them as they age. A non-compete clause is nothing more than a ploy to keep employees mistreated and underpaid."
Blake	"I am fully in support of eliminating non-compete agreements between employees and employers. As a skilled laborer in automotive reconditioning , I have been subject to scrutinous non-competes over the years which has massively set back not only the future of my family, but also the quality and satisfaction that the customer deserves. In my observation, the larger the company, the more aggressive thick non-compete agreement is. In addition, the larger companies generally are not able to provide the same quality, care, and courtesy that comes from healthy competition. I look forward to this rule taking affect."
C	"I practice medicine in a rural location. My livelihood depends on several hospitals within close proximity. Outside of that, I am looking at a two hour drive to the nearest hospital. The practice of non compete clauses is akin to working for the mafia. Once you've in, you can never leave. Attorneys at the helm with limitless corporate funds and power can threaten physicians and other professionals out of business. This has got to stop."
Rupesh	"The physician noncompete rule in contracts is harmful to the interest of physicians. It eliminates opportunity for better pay, better work environment and excel in their field. As a physician I have put in 7 years of training after medical school to be a subspecialist and serve my community. Eliminating the non compete rule will generate healthy competition between hospitals to attract the best of the talent of physicians and remove the fear of losing the ability to serve the community where the physician was employed in the first place. It's a win win for the community physician serves and for the physician in terms of better pay and work environment!"
Heather	"I agree that the non-compete should be made illegal. Aside from being able to pursue a better opportunity, people may be trapped in a bad work environment."
Mark	"Non-compete agreements, which prohibit employees from working for competitors or starting their own businesses after leaving their current employer, are often used by corporations as a way to protect their trade secrets and prevent key employees from leaving. However, they also limit job mobility and entrepreneurship, particularly for low-wage workers who are unable to negotiate the terms of such agreements. Moreover, they can stifle innovation, as they discourage the sharing of knowledge and ideas among workers in different industries. I find it ironic that corporations often praise capitalism as the best possible economic model, citing competition as a driving force for innovation and growth. However, when it comes to their own employees, corporations have used non-compete agreements to artificially prevent competition for the best possible wages and jobs. This not only limits the individual's economic freedom but also creates an unfair advantage for employers, who are able to dictate

	the terms of the employment contract without fear of losing workers to competitors. By outlawing non-compete agreements, the Federal Trade Commission can help to level the playing field and promote true competition in the labor market. It will give workers the freedom to pursue their career aspirations and seek better opportunities without fear of retribution from their former employers. This, in turn, I believe would benefit workers, businesses, and the economy as a whole. It would promote job mobility and entrepreneurship, allowing workers to pursue their full potential and contribute to economic growth. It would also encourage innovation and competition across all industries. In conclusion, I strongly urge the Federal Trade Commission to take action and implement the proposed rule to outlaw non-compete agreements among corporate employees. It is the right thing to do for the well-being of workers, the economy, and for the very ideals of capitalism that corporations claim to hold dear. Thank you for your attention to this important issue."
Tommy	"Banning non-competes would be in the best interest of American workers. Corporations have used legal scare tactics for years to threaten legal action with what is often an unenforceable contract anyways. This prevents people from leaving toxic work environments because where could they go? All of their experience is likely related to their industry. Most of these people do not have the financial ability to fight a legal battle with a large corporation so they feel stuck. There's also a lot of layoffs going on in the tech sector. What are people supposed to do when a company is still enforcing their non-compete even though they ended their ability to earn a paycheck? Obviously they don't have the financial ability to fight a legal battle let alone hire counsel to review their non-compete because they need to save every penny not knowing when the next time will be that they can earn a paycheck. Non-competes are the elites way of using the lower classes below them to stay wealthy and prevent anyone else from rising through their ranks. How can someone with good ideas, who is feeling like the company is either taking them for granted or isn't listening to their innovative ideas, supposed to start their own venture if they have a 2 year non-compete? It's a bully tactic and there are plenty of ways companies can protect their proprietary products/ideas/etc than by ensuring wages stay low knowing no one can leave."
Ben	"I am currently stifled from local work in my industry due to a non-compete from my previous employer. I had to take a job making $30,000 less per year and I work from Colorado to California. I miss opportunities with my three 4th grade sons and I am missing them growing up, because to stay in the industry I've been in for over a decade, I cannot work within three states of Georgia, where I live. I have to pay my ex-wife child support, so I cannot change industries and take a massive pay cut. I don't think it's fair that my previous employer can control me like this, while many local competitive companies have expressed interest in utilizing my talent and expertise I have gained. Please help America thrive again. Stop this non-compete nonsense."
Thomas	"When I started into the private practice of Pulmonary Medicine, I was subjected to a non-compete clause and went to court to break the clause when I left that practice. I was not successful. When I opened my own practice and built it up to seven physicians and over fifty employees, we did so without non-compete clauses. From my business experience these clauses are entirely noncompetitive and suppress an individual's ability to obtain a higher wage. As our society seems to be suffering from a suppression of competition, it is entirely reasonable to prohibit these clauses, just as many of the contracting techniques used in the Gilded Age have been prohibited. Competition is difficult, but it makes markets and the businesses that compete in those markets more effective."

Alicia	"Non-competes are anti-competitive, allow employers to treat employees unfairly for fear of being unable to work, and prevent workers from making better wages by moving to a new employer. Unless there is a national-security concern, no job should have a non-compete."
Christina	"Non competes in medicine only serve to hurt our patients and their health. Taking physicians out of underserved rural areas when they have to leave an organization leaves a health vacuum and causes tremendous harm to patients and communities."
Wesley	"I'm a physician . PLEASE apply the non-compete ban to physicians. Most physicians are not entrepreneurs. Most of us do not have groundbreaking ideas which will leave with us when we leave our hospital system. Of those physicians who ARE groundbreakers, NONE of them work at for-profit hospital systems. They work at MGH, BVsiTI, Emory, UCLA, or the Mayo Clinic. They are at academic, non-profit systems. They will never leave those systems because that's where the prestige is to advance their careers. Furthermore, the research shows that noncompetes harm patient outcomes. What else do you need to know? These for-profit hospitals lobbying against this potential rule are trying to protect their own profits. They are trying to depress competition, wages, and freedom of self- determination for individuals. They are trying to keep their staff from deserting when they chronically under-hire clinical staff to improve their bottom line. They're not worried about Joe everyday 50th-percentile hospitalist stealing their ideas, they're worried he'll leave when they continually cut costs to the point where it endangers the vulnerable patients we see every day. They're worried that the moral injury incurred by their profit-seeking will come back to haunt them. Those lobbying against this rule are trying to bastardize capitalism. Please protect the American people from the perverse version of capitalism they are seeking to create. While you're at it, can we please do away with for-profit hospital systems altogether? Hospital systems that serve shareholders before patients are not acceptable."
Sam	"As a physician I think non competes are only useful in hurting workers for the benefit of hospitals and their administrators."
Roger	"America thrives on competition. It fosters innovation, growth and importantly competition affects cost - it drives costs down, as we strive to develop faster and more efficient processes. Non competes are anti American in this sense. One of the largest costs to America is healthcare. And a big factor in that is hospitals handcuffing physicians in non compete clauses. Hospital associations and insurance companies have been able to lobby to minimize competition. They actively disrupt independent physician practices in their market and stifle any possibility of a physicians' ability to compete in the same area and to offer possibly more effective and cheaper treatment options to patients, unless employed. It would be ridiculous that the FTC dissolution of non competes not apply to physicians. It would be discriminatory, and again an example of the power hospital systems have in lobbying for their own self serving

	interest and not what it is best for society. This would continue to allow big hospital systems and big insurance companies to monopolize markets and continue to drive up healthcare costs. There is absolutely no reason that physicians should be an excluded party as the America Hospital Association is suggesting be done. I strongly urge that physicians not be excluded - it is time that we return to how medicine is supposed to be practiced. Between a physician and a patient, letting patients choose who best to take care of them by restoring independent physician practices, and not having patients rely on only having the option of going to the big hospital systems. Moreover, I understand that "non profits" may be excluded as well. Many hospitals fall under this category despite them being far from anything "non profit"- this would drastically hinder the competitive spirit I referenced above and I would suggest that if non profits are to be excluded, then I would suggest making an exception for hospitals to be included. We need to end the monopoly that large hospital systems have on patients options for healthcare."
Bailee	" It is my belief that non-competes should be made illegal and non- enforceable, therefore I agree with this proposal. I will describe my current position to explain. I am an ER veterinarian and had to sign a non-compete for my current position. It is very common in my profession (veterinary medicine) to have to sign non-competes across America, so it was unavoidable when looking for a job. I wanted to look into other job possibilities as I am not currently happy at my hospital, however, my non-compete does not allow for that. I would not be able to work ER in a 15 mile radius around my current hospital for 2 years after me leaving my position, which is my entire city. I would need to uproot my entire family to move to a new city to get a different ER job, or transition out of ER medicine to a different type of veterinary medicine that I am not trained for or experienced in, which would make it difficult to find work. For this reason, I feel that non-competes give too much power to my employer while leaving employees helpless. They are allowed to hire and fire at will, however, I am completely stuck at my current hospital and have very limited choices. My current hospital is grossly underpaying me for my position compared to other similar positions in the area in recent years (other hospitals have raised their salary where my hospital refuses), however, I cannot leave to get higher pay elsewhere given my non-compete. Given our non-competes, we all feel stuck and cannot leave, so our hospital is not forced to be competitive. I am being forced to stay at this hospital if I want to remain in my current home and work the type of medicine I am trained to do. Having my non-compete is not only taking away my freedom to find work, but it is also negatively affecting my financial situation given my lower pay, and mental health given the stress this situation brings with feeling stuck without options for myself. Passing this rule will give more freedom to employees and benefit the veterinary market by making sure hospitals are being competitive and taking care of their employees."
Sarah	"Non compete stifles so much creativity and advancement. While I understand companies may want to protect their property, similar companies will have similar bases and it would let people bring general information to new jobs so higher wages and more creative and advanced products. Win/win!"

Daniel	"Unless an employer can demonstrate that the employee will do harm to the company's future business due to the disloyal behavior while employed, there is no reason to restrict the employee's future career options."
Courtney	"I am strongly in favor of banning non competes. I'm an Eesthetician , who is currently dealing with fighting a non compete. The 10 mile range and 5 year non compete is completely ridiculous. Let's not even get started on the fines you could possibly incur. For trade businesses like mine this makes it hard to make a living. No one should be able to tell you where you can and can not work."
Robert	"These need to go away. They abuse people where power balances are not equal. It also inhibits free market growth."
James	"I am a cardiac surgeon now working in a community setting with experience during my career working in surgical groups and for health systems. Medical practices have been constrained by non-competes since I can remember causing doctors to continue to practice in environments they no longer like because of non-competes. There are no trade secrets or IP to protect - just patient doctor relationships and referral networks that represent a typical client service model, which should be flexible as circumstances change. With the current non-compete environment that is not the case, restricting patient access to potentially better practice arrangements and eroding physician satisfaction with their professional opportunities. You should not have to move when you want to leave a particular practice setting. It is interesting to note that the lawyers who make their living writing, advising, and defending non-competes for the medical profession do not permit their own employment contracts to contain any non-compete restrictions. The can move to a competing law firm across the street next Monday morning if they so choose. There is an important message in that covert behavior - they know how constraining that would be on their chosen career path and they want to be able to take their clients (like patients) with them if they move and the clients prefer. Your proposed rule is a very important advance for fair competition and professional autonomy that will improve patient choice and enhance patient care. The same holds true for hourly workers as you note. The medical profession is solidly behind this enlightened approach to transparent and responsible employment contracting. Thank you for this long awaited improvement to employment, competition, and innovation in healthcare."
Sarah	"I am a primary care physician. Because of my noncompete, I am unable to leave my practice to work anywhere within a 10 mile radius in a major city with heavy traffic. This means I am unable to leave my practice and still get my children from school on time coming from another practice. This means even when my contract negatively changes, as it recently did, I am stuck in the same job because I cannot afford to uproot my family to seek better employment. Please ban non competes."
Diana	"Non-competes are anti competitive, and hurt our workforce. Agree with the rule to eliminate them!"
Diana	"Clinician shortages are rapidly increasing, in part due to lack of job mobility for clinicians. When clinicians aren't able to switch jobs to find better fits without having to relocate themselves or their families, they make hard choices, which can include leaving the profession or cutting back clinically. Additionally, noncompetes give the employers unfair leverage. If clinicians are afraid of being fired or otherwise retaliated against because they have a noncompete and are unable to move, they are less able to effectively advocate for themselves or their patients. This can include speaking out against unsafe or unfair working conditions, negotiating fair contracts that help prevent clinician burnout, advocate for safe staffing, or speaking out against patient safety issues."

Chase	"I am an individual working in a sales position in the construction industry . I am very supportive of this proposed clause and hope that it gets passed. In my current role I have a 2 year non compete agreement for my specific trade. I am wanting to start and build my own business but am unable to do so due to my non compete agreement. I recently met with my employer seeking a higher percentage of commission as I feel that I have hit an earning ceiling on my current compensation plan. My employer would not agree to any increase in commission or letting me out of my non compete. If this clause gets passed it would allow me to start my own business and better provide for my family as well as begin creating more jobs for others. I know that there are lots of people in my same position that this would really help. Thank you for allowing me to comment with my thoughts on this."
Joseph	"I am currently trapped in a non-compete and not able to leave my current job due to my job being specialized. I also would like to start my own business but because of my non-compete I cannot. This is seriously restricting me from earning more money for my family. I am for the banning of non-competes."
Adthe	"Doing away with noncompete clauses would be just one more step forward for America. As a small town healthcare provider , my non compete prohibits me from working within 20miles of my home for a different company. That would mean if I were to change jobs, I would have to go to a neighboring town 40 miles away all while leaving my one year old at daycare in our home town. People should have the freedom to change jobs without having to sacrifice travel or family time. Not to mention this would most certainly increase wages!"
Abhijit	"I am a physican and I agree with banning non-compete. It is a barrier to professional development and providing continuity of care to patients ."
Armida	"This is an essential step to support hard-working employees and their families"
Brian	"This law is imperative to the US workforce. Bound by one sided agreements unjustifiably favoring the employer is unfair to the employees. Glad the FTC is taking action."
Haley	"I am a practicing Certified Anesthesiologist Assistant (CAA) who has witnessed how noncompete clauses limit career opportunities, reduce access to care for patients, and uproot healthcare workers from communities. CAAs provide anesthesia for a variety of surgical procedures in the anesthesia care team alongside nurse anesthetists (CRNAs) and physician anesthesiologists (MD/D0s). In many hospitals, the physicians, CRNAs, and CAAs are employed by a management group contracted with the hospital to provide anesthesia services, i.e., these providers are not hospital employees. When a hospital decides to change management groups, the contracted management group will enforce noncompete clauses and no longer allow the MDs, CRNAs, and CAAs to practice at the facility where the contract was lost. Enforcement of the noncompete directly results in the loss of experienced providers familiar with the facility, surgeons, and procedures performed. Delays in both planned and emergent care occur as well as a decrease in quality of care from inexperienced practitioners. The healthcare workers impacted by the noncompete suffer a loss of income, the stress of finding a new position, and the decision to relocate their families. Noncompetes protect the interests of no one except the companies enforcing them. Patients and healthcare workers pay the price."

Ian	"Non-compete clauses are manly designed to restrict competition and trap employees in jobs they may not like, while accepting wages lower than they could otherwise earn. One company who won a federal government IT contract from the company for which I worked offered continued employment to my entire team on the project, subject to a non-compete clause in their standard employment contract. When we refused to sign, they dropped the requirement, and it was never mentioned again - showing that it was unnecessary."
Ruby	" Physicians should not have a non compete. There is already a shortage of doctors and primary care us being shuffled into np only field. Healthcare is heading towards a physician shortage, profit loving hospitals should not be able cripple healthcare this way."
Alexander	"Non-competes should be banned or employees should be paid full salary/lost wages during the non-compete period."
Eleza	"Non competes contribute to physician burn out. They exist to punish the little guy and let large scale hospitals and companies win big by trapping doctors fresh out of training into untenable situations. They take advantage of the fact that people are hesitant to uproot their families to pursue an ideal job, and therefore must remain stuck in a bad situation. In an age where anyone who can leave medicine does, noncompetes only contribute to the problem."
Gopinath	"I fully support that we implement this rule that gives workers rights to work anywhere and for anyone."
Anupama	"I fully endorse this"
Courtney	"Non-compete agreements should be done away with."
Jessica	"As a physician the non compete clause is often used in a predatorial way to trap physician in a particular job, forcing providers to leave the location if they no longer want to work for an organization. The terms of the non compete varies drastically depending on organization and there is no consistency."
Audrey	"I fully support this proposed rule change. I am a CPA and an entrepreneur . I left a CPA firm and set up my own practice, however was bound by a noncompete agreement and was not able to fully develop the practice to what I otherwise could have for a period of 1 year after my departure. Professional skills must be used to stay fresh, and rules change frequently. I have lost a lot in the period that I waited for my noncompete agreement to run out. The firm did not serve the shared client base well, but I was unable to do anything to serve those clients because of this agreement. The agreements reduce competition by limiting what entrepreneurs can do, and our clients were the ones who suffered."

Dhia	"Any given authority to employer to ban workers to move another competent company mean giving the employer rights to enslavement workers lifetime with imposing any roles and punishment practice unjust and controlling workers and their families forever beside taking away his freedom as well as workers being employer's property."
Krishna	"I believe the non-compete clauses are not in the best interest of the public in the healthcare sector. I understand that hiring entities invest money in the hiring process and do not want to lose their investment, but the loser is usually the individual healthcare provider and their patients. As a physician, there are many barriers to changing practices, including the months it takes to re-credential with insurance companies and establish a new staff along with other relationships. The entities that demand the non-compete typically have much deeper pockets and easier access to legal representation than the individual physician trying to change a practice, setting up an uneven playing field. In addition, my biggest concern in the healthcare field is the idea that a "not for profit" hospital would ask an individual physician to sign a non-compete agreement. Once again, I understand that there are start up and recruiting costs, but if a physician stays in that hospital's catchment area the physician is likely to use that hospital's service for their patients so the idea of a non-compete only serves to push the physician away from the area if the relationship sours and the main losers are the patients of the physician. Furthermore, if the hospital is a "not for profit" institution, they really aren't losing anything if the physician leaves the employment of the hospital. Hospitals are notorious for their inefficiency when compared to private practice. I have been in both settings and I saw many fewer patients as a result of being affiliated with a hospital and this led to poorer access for patients to healthcare in addition to many other inefficiencies in carrying out their care."
James	"Please ban non-competes - especially for low paying jobs like Jimmy John's (how ridiculous is it for a sandwich company to have a non-compete). James Hackler"
Thomas	"I am a physician , practicing in the state of Georgia with a noncompete clause in my current contract. Because of this clause, I am unable to start my own practice, hire my own staff, and otherwise practice medicine within the state without moving my entire family to another location. I believe leaving my current job would be in my in my families, best interest, but because of a noncompete clause I am unable to do so. In my current practice, I perform procedures that nobody else in the practice does. I represent no competition should I leave, and we have no material impact on my current practice should I decide to open a practice down the street. The idea that I am somehow going to harm trade secrets or otherwise damage the business by leaving isn't the reality. The noncompete only six to discourage me from leaving an employment environment which is not optimal to my practice as a physician. In short, I am trapped. this rule proposed by the FTC would allow me and my family greater freedom to seek employment or start our own practice. From a personal standpoint, this would be a great boon to myself and my family. I would be able to hire and create jobs. I would be able to be a productive member of my local community without having a fear of a lawsuit from previous employer, hanging over my head. In short, I believe noncompetes or an unethical, suppression of wages and workers rights. As a future employer, if I am ever able to start my own practice, regardless of how the rule changes I will never have a noncompete in an employees contract. I will work to be a great employer and provide a place of work that my employees are proud to work at. I will not Hold a stick over their heads in the form of a non-compete in order to keep them from leaving."

Laney	"Banning non compete clauses would have a huge positive impact for me as a physician assistant in demiatology . Non competes are common in my area of work, and signing a contract that includes one, which most of us are forced to do, puts our livelihood in jeopardy for the extent of the agreement, which is often several years. Not only are opportunities for my line of work few and far between, but our metro traffic could mean I spend two additional hours commuting to be sure I am outside the noncompete area if I take a new position xs. This is a huge burden. Please ban these!!"
Aaron	"I am an Internal Medicine Physician and I support the proposed rule to remove noncompete clause from Physician contracts. The noncompete clause is harmful because it restricts my ability to practice medicine in a certain geographic area and limits my career options and adversely impacts patient access to care. The noncompete clause limits patient access and restricts a primary care physician from practicing in certain geographic areas which leads to longer wait times, long travel distances, and increased healthcare for patients. Second, noncompete clauses disrupts the continuity of care for patients with established relationships with their primary care physicians, which can lead to decreased quality of care. Third, the noncompete clause reduces physician autonomy, which adversely impacts the physician's ability to make independent decisions about their practice and career, which impacts the quality of care provided and physician happiness. This new rule would be a great first step in allowing physicians to stay with an employer because they choose to rather than having no other option but to stay."
Andrea	"I think that banning non-compete agreements would not only improve the salaries of employees but also their peace of mind. Having highly specialized skills and facing the prospect of moving across the country to find a new job when there are jobs available in your local area is unrealistic. Most people will choose to stay in a bad situation rather than go into debt and uproot their families. Stress affects enjoyment and shortens lives. I wholeheartedly support banning non-compete agreements."
Linda	"Non-compete clauses ultimately hurt patients by putting business before medical care solely because organizations want to punish the physician for choosing a better career option elsewhere. The practice of placing non-compete clauses in physician contracts should be banned."
Benjamin	"As a board- certified internal medicine physician , noncompete clauses are very restrictive and inhibit potential for physicians to positively impact the community in which they live. As a primary care physician, it is important to engage with the community. I do this by serving on the board of directors with a local co-op and being actively involved in a local church. Severing these ties and uprooting would be incredibly disruptive for my career and relationships. The idea that a noncompete clause can bind me to one specific hospital system, or employer, within the community eliminates significant autonomy and flexibility that would otherwise allow me to commit to a local community without that commitment being dependent on a specific employer. At any point, myself, my employer, our us mutually could decide working together is no longer in our best interest but this should not also mean my elimination from serving the local community and continuing to practice in proximity to other valuable relationships."

Jordan	"As a private contractor insurance producer I believe that non compete agreements stifle my ability to grow my income. Being held captive by one agency allows the agency to determine my income."
Tim	"Noncompete clauses are incompatible with the values of this country. They are once anti-democratic, immoral, and counter to market interests. Please stand up for our values, our principles, and our citizenly."
Laura	"I am an internal medicine physician working in northeast Georgia. When I moved to the area for my husband's work, one of the major medical conglomerates in my area offered me a contract with a 2-year noncompete clause in it for within 15 miles of anywhere they have a clinic. Because they are so widespread in the area, that basically means that they would have controlled my work or forced me to move out of the area, probably over 100 miles. That means my husband would have to quit his job, we would have to sell our house, and out children would have to move schools if I wanted to switch jobs. Or, I would have to stop being a physician in an area that greatly needs more physicians. Within that framework, how could I ever ask for a raise? What threat would I have? I could not threaten to leave because they know the costs that would incur me and my family, far beyond the economic costs. I turned them down thankfully because I had another offer, but as more and more buy-outs happen in my area, I worry I will be forced to either sign a non- compete someday with a major medical system. And why are they helpful to the systems? I am not going to steal any privileged information from the corporation - all they want is control over my patient base if I move and to force me far enough away that they don't actually have to compete with me on an even playing field. As a physician, I have no access to secret information, really, this is a non-compete in order to stop competition in a free market. Sure, stop me from stealing patient info. But don't stop me from working in my home county. Please pass this rule."
Mark	"This is long overdue!"
Christopher	"As a physician who works for a hospital affiliated group, I have to agree to a 2 year non-compete. While the contract may be terminated with a 90 days notice, I can only practice in an area 50 miles from my present location. Therefore, the organization can arbitrarily make changes to the expectations and the assistance that is provided in the practice regardless of how that affects me as a physician and the care of my practice and because there is the non- compete, I cannot easily object because of the possible loss of my job and then I'm forced to travel away from where I am established in order to fulfill the non-compete. Essentially, the corporation does not have any responsibility to my needs for safe care as I don't have a reasonable method to provide balance as they know that I won't leave my job given the foundation I have in the area and because I cannot go across town and join another practice or start my own."

Elijah	"I agree with banning noncompete agreements . I think it is bad for business and for workers."
Michael	"The proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) will very valuable in strengthening the rights and future opportunities of workers. This will be beneficial to workers in almost every field and location. Employers will be incentivized to compete in the labor marketplace. They will have to treat their workers well ... with more opportunities for professional development, career advancement, better salary and more comprehensive benefits. Employers will not be able to simply sideline workers who leave employ ... but rather face the risk they these workers will now be working for a competitor. I highly support this important regulation and encourage its prompt and full adoption."
Chris	"FTC- Noncompete clauses have been deployed by corporations whose entire business model is solely and completely dependent upon the weaponization of these clauses. Their use as been profoundly detrimental to both the profession's health and the access to healthcare, hospitals, and medical centers. These third parties have entire departments, hospital systems and cities signed to severely restrictive non-competes. Enslaving them in essence. Then, they are essentially able to hold hospitals, physicians, nurses and entire hospital systems hostage as they demand profound increase in fees for their services-- which provide no additional value. At this point, should the hospital refuse to pay the huge increase for the additional services, they risk losing their entire department of physicians, and/or nurses. On the other end of things, physicians and nurses, should they desire to leave, find their professional options severely limited likely having to leave the city or quit practicing. The bottom line is these noncompetes are NOT protecting any legitimate business interest or investment. They are ONLY a legal weapon enabling blackmailing and control or both payors and professionals providing the actual value/service. They severally hurt all parties involved save those offering over the horizon 3rd parties adding NO value. For the medical professionals and system, liberating the free market without limitations of noncompete clauses will yield the best outcome in all categories except possibly private equities' penetration of professional healthcare services."
Maryam	"I would say as a patient I am constantly affected by non competes. Ifs almost impossible to find a private practice family medicine/internist that isn't part of a major academic healthcare system in Atlanta. It is incredibly frustrating as limits my options. As a physician I have never been in a position of any kind of equal bargaining power as a hospital and while hospital systems in which I have worked have had increasing profits, my compensation never increased in the same way. So I am not sure how major healthcare systems want to equate my experience as a physician with the experience of a healthcare CEO. I don't get bonuses or profit shares. In addition the healthcare system I previously worked for has hospitals and clinics throughout GA. I had a 25 mile non compete clause which meant I would have to move out of state to practice outside of that system. It's fin to prevent physicians or anyone from leaving a hospital or a system in order to find a job that is better suited to them, a different location or an opportunity for growth. I am disgusted and appalled both as a patient and as a physician that anyone would limit access to care for patients by implementing noncompetes. And it disgusts and angers me as a human that any corporation's needs supersedes an individual's needs in employment."

C	"As someone in a specialized industry, removing non-compete clauses would make it much easier to change jobs, work in start-ups and generally switch from one place to another. I strongly support this rule."
Chuck	"I believe we should eliminate non competes. In Georgia lawyers are not subject to non competes but doctors and nurses are. We had a "non-profit" hospital group close two hospitals in poor areas of Atlanta and is acquiring two hospitals in wealthier areas. With 30 days notice they closed and told their health care workers they would still hold them to their non-competes even though the hospital closed. Since they were abandoning Atlanta what was the point of enforcing the non-compete other than forcing them to move to stay with the hospital group (WellStar). In another town of two hospitals, (Rome) one hospital that had been bought by an out of state group. They now are buying Harbin Clinic, the largest private physician group in Georgia. The Harbin employees are told they are being held to the non compete contracts of Harbin. They now are putting on contracts that cut compensation drastically. In some cases 50%. But they are being told they are holding them to the non competes even though the owner and new rate has changed. Some employees, went Floyd Hospital was bought had their pay cut but held them to a non compete even though the pay was reduced. They also had a clause that said they could transfer them to a new location that could be in or outside the state at whatever compensation they determined. Sounds like indentured servitude. This is hurting competition and quality in healthcare and is also just not right. Please ban this practice."
:Luis	"My employer definitely uses the NCA as a means to keeps the sales staff in. i had an interesting offer from a competitor and because of the NCA I couldn't consider it. It sucks that I will have to completely change career direction if I ever decide to leave my employer."
J	"There is absolutely no reason physicians should be excluded from the non-compete clause rule. This is completely unfair and is another injustice towards physicians. We as physicians will continue to fight against rules that continue to minimize our autonomy and ability to practice medicine."
Bethany	"I am a physician in Rome, Georgia. I have a strong connection to this community and my extended family live here. I work as a pediatrician here and care deeply for the children of this community. I started working here a decade ago. A new entity out of NC , Atrium, has taken over our hospital who employed me when I came to town. I had carefully negotiated my noncompete at my hire 10 years ago. When Atrium came to town and took over, they gave me a contract to sign that greatly increased my noncompete area that would force me to move if I signed it and ever had to change jobs. Their noncompete would force me to have drive about 65 miles in any direction to find work. This noncompete is in an area of medical shortage where recruiting physicians is difficult anyway. Noncompetes in our community allow them to hold physicians who love this community in bad work environments with lower wages. It is wrong to expand a noncompete in a worker who has been here a decade without increasing any benefit for the extended noncompete. Many of my colleagues have had to leave to go to other areas. Some are working out noncompetes in outlying

	areas outside the noncompete areas, causing patients to either have to drive long distances or be without their beloved physician. Physicians in this community do not threaten this massive hospital system, currently the 5th largest in the country. We certainly do not have access to trade secrets. Lawyers are not bound by noncompetes- why are doctors? We have a loyalty to patients- not big massive healthcare systems that are motivated by profits. I am motivated to provide the best care I can to my community- little children who need someone looking out for them. That is all I want to do in this community. Atrium is looking to form a monopoly on health care here. They are buying up small doctor offices and trying to buy Harbin Clinic- the largest private physician owned multi specialty healthcare system in the US. Noncompetes are wrong for physicians, especially when they work for massive healthcare systems where they pose no threat to such a system if they left."
Charles	"I am a physician in a small community providing very needed cardiac care to my patients. We have had a large hospital system from North Carolina take over our hospital with broad expansions of a noncompete that is bigger than the state of Delaware. They are trying to "own" physicians and restrict our ability to work for the competition should they provide a bad work environment . This is horrible for the patients of my area and for our town's ability to recruit new talent to replace retiring physicians. It also limits wages. Noncompetes in the medical field are wrong, especially for huge hospitals who don't necessarily have patient care and the physician patient relationship at the forefront of their mission. This is about the most sacred trust humans place in their doctors. If big corporate hospitals can be kept from mistreating their physicians by removing their ability to slap these very restrictive noncompetes this is a win for patient care. Additionally, physicians are not subject to trade secrets. Big corporate hospitals don't train us- we sacrifice over a decade of our lives paying and financing our own training. Then we try to take a job and have very unfair noncompetes. It is past time for these non competes to end for these huge corporations where individual physicians are absolutely no threat to these massive hospital systems."
Erskine	"As a physician, with most hospitals being non-profit by definition, this rule would not apply to most hospital-employed physicians, which I disagree with. I recommend that nonprofits be included in the banning of non-competes to allow physicians, nursing, and other hospital employed staff to pursue practices safely."
Deanna	"To whom it may concern: I am a physician with the in Atlanta Georgia. My noncompete clause in my contract states that if I were to leave my position, I would not be able to work within 7.5 miles of my current job. With the Atlanta traffic, this could mean that if I were to quit my job, the next closest job that I am allowed to take may be 30 minutes away. This essentially could extend my commute by an hour each day, in addition to the current commute and thus I will continue working at my current position, out of convenience, even if it is not the right job for me. Workers in numerous fields are experiencing more and more burnout each year, leaving the workforce in droves. This is been so problematic in medicine, not only at the physician level, but with the nurses, medical assistance, and other healthcare workers. We are burnt out, understaffed, and with limited options of other employment due to noncompetes. I am afraid I will burnout of practicing medicine completely, while working at this job, but I value that one extra hour I get with my family, and will stay at my current position. The problem with noncompetes is even more absurd in New York City. I have colleagues there, who have noncompetes that ban them from obtaining any position in New York City. Their only option is literally to move to another city, if they are to look for another job. I think eliminating this clause will be beneficial, not only to physicians, but all workers. We will give us the opportunity to choose positions that we enjoy and thrive in, and stay in these positions, as opposed to being stuck in a position that negatively impact an individual's physical and emotional wellbeing. Dr. DSJ"

Chanell	"I support the ban on non- compete clauses. An individual should not be restricted from operating a business or seeking employment in the same industry of a previous employer."
DENIECE	"Non-competes are another way for corporations to corrupt Healthcare and limit where and how a physician can practice. Competition helps create better prices for patients and clearly Healthcare costs are out of control. Non-competes prevent physicians from leaving a hospital system and starting a practice in the same community, limiting the competition and the ability to have options on where to get their care."
H	"I support the proposed ban on non-compete agreements and urge you to move ahead with the ban. Workers need the right to choose any employer they wish without restrictions."
Matthew	"I have been working as researcher ever since completing my doctorate, and i have been had to sip an extremely restrictive non-compete to get my current job that would required me to move industries if i left my current work. Companies use non competes to try and control employees and suppress their wages, i am strongly in support of getting rid of non-competes."
Charles	"Noncompetes should NEVER have been allowed in the 1st place. It stifles a persons ability to earn a living in the same field or job under threat of lawsuit. That isn't how the US works. There are trade secret laws already on the books for those rare occasions where a business needs to protect their interest. Basically, you have options...but for people just trying to make a living, you should not have the power to stop them from working...EVEN for your competition. You want to keep them , COMPETE for them in the free market. That is what we were founded on...t'ree markets...this is just labor vs a physical widget. BAN ALL NONCOMPETES. It will force businesses to compete for good talent AND incentive them to keep good talent. The employee finally gets a small win in terms of power vs a business trying to limit a persons choices when it comes to working Prime example...my son works for a bar in a college town. The owner makes them sign a noncompete...meaning he CANNOT tend bar ANYWHERE close to our town...literally takes away his ability to work in that job. That isn't fair.."
Machelle	"I fully support the FTC banning non-compete clauses. It severely limits employees and entrepreneurs finding work without having to relocate. The financial burden and hardships placed on individuals in unfair and makes it difficult to earn a living."

Aman	"Physicians non compete should go away. They should be allowed to serve their communities irrespective of their employer. There is a shortage of physicians and non compete makes it even harder for communities to retain them. Hospitals use the non compete clause for their physicians as threat so that they will not leave and join another practice in the community. Non compete is one of the most unfair practice in our country. The physicians should be free to practice in their communities"
Vahan	"It is long overdue to consider abolishing non competes especially for physicians . There aren't any trade secrets in medicine that need protecting. The only people hurt by current non competes are our patients!"
Jennifer	"A rule that eliminates non-competes would be a tremendous win for healthcare workers, particularly physicians, that are often bound to an institution with limited options without uprooting an entire family. Current non- competes hold physicians hostage - in some cases as a sort of endured servant - forced to work more and more for less pay than at nearby medical practices. This is particularly true for academic physicians who join an academic medical center with altruistic and idealistic motives of teaching and research but who find themselves compensated at a small fraction of their earning potential in a private setting. Please eliminate non-competes. Physicians around the country will thank you."
Charles	"I believe the removal of non-compete agreements would increase competition in the workplace, and spur innovation and growth in the economy."
Dilawar	"I am Dilawar...a Medical Oncologist practicing at Harbin Clinic, multi specialty clinic in Rome, Georgia since 2003 and have a non compete restriction for 1 year .we are 3 medical Oncologists in this part of northwest Georgia and are sole providers of cancer care in Rome Georgia to hundreds of patients who desperately depend on us for their cancer care. Recently Atrium Health (Advocate Health) has decided to buy Harbin clinic and this merger is close to happen once FTC clears this deal. Atrium health is offering compensation to me and my 2 other medical oncology partners which is 50% less than our current compensation. Since this draconian reduction in our compensation is not acceptable to us ,we would not be able to practice and take care of our vulnerable cancer patients because of the non compete restriction, leaving hundreds of vulnerable cancer patients without necessary care and putting their lives at risk as their is no medical oncologist service in Rome besides us 3 medical Oncologist. This is a perfect example of unfair restriction on a critical medical care being deprived to a community , and physicians who have been in practice for decades not able to provide essential life saving care because of senseless non compete restrictive covenant. On behalf of my cancer patients and my partners, their has to be some remedy or a corrective action to help us so that we continue to provide life saving cancer care without any breach in continuity of care to this highly vulnerable population."
Erin	"Non-competes, as it pertains to an individual vs a large organization, stifles growth, earning potential, and can disrupt the family unit. As a surgeon who departed an employed single specialty group where the non-compete encompassed the multiple hospitals in the system and the office locations, I initially had to take on employment 90 miles from my home during pregnancy. My husband travels for work and we also have a toddler. It's unfathomable that a single surgeon could significantly compete

	against a long-standing practice and hospital. The entire family was affected by the situation: physically, and emotionally. The uncertainty that lie before was excruciating, especially given the time, stress and debt required to enter the specialty. FOURTEEN YEARS of post secondary education and I couldn't work close to where I live. This must change. Some must uproot entire families to gain employment which can include a significant other finding new employment, children having to navigate a new education system, and other familial support systems being left behind. In some cases employers suffer if they are need of a skill set and cannot hire a candidate due to a noncompete clause. Getting rid of noncompete clauses, or at least imposing major limitations, would benefit individuals, families and employers."
NAGA	"Noncompete in healthcare industry for doctors is very bad for patient care. It is used to throttle the voice of physicians because the choice is to either keep working or to escape noncompete leave the city as they are so restrictive. Once you are settled in a place it is tough uproot your family and leave your patients whom you care. It is hightime that physicians and healthcare teams non compete is removed"
Naga	"Non compete clause for physicians is like a bonded slavery as physicians cant leave the location due to multiple reasons. The only way they can move a job is by uprooting their family and severing ties to the region. If hospitals think they treat physicians fairly they don't need to worry about it because physicians don't leave if they are treated appropriately. Opening a new practice or going to a new practice involves lot of uncertainties including a pay cut. Despite that when doctors want to move then these big health care systems want to penalize doctors"
Daulton	"Non-competes, if not eliminated entirely, need very specific wording and regulation. Corporations have all of the power in our country already, between at-will employment, being the main or only reasonable supplier of benefits, and union busting that is pay-to-win in its current state (if it even gets that far). There needs to be protection put in place that allows employees to have some amount of bargaining power. Clauses that now allow employers to take advantage of new-hirers by forcing them out of the field if they no longer want to work there for a contractual amount of time is immoral. This is the minimal amount of protection we should have, and honestly, we need more than this."
SATISH	"I support this rule as it affected me as a tech contractor working for different prime vendors of the companies. They put this non-compete which is restrictive and it affected my career advancement to take up higher wage jobs with a competitor of that company and also with the client. Non-solicit also should be banned or should not be valid for more than 2 to 3 months if it cannot be avoided. This will help in companies giving competitive pay to both the employees and the contractors."
Valerie	"I work in the healthcare field, and we do not use non competes. My husband works for Serve pro and he is strictly against them. He had to sign a 2 year non-compete and even if he is fired cannot work in the industry for 2 years!"
Matt	"I fully agree with banning non-competes. I work in a niche and specialized market, with very few opportunities outside. To restrict my opportunities inside my market means I lose 20 years of specialized expertise, and have to start from scratch on a

	new area. As such, my company owns me. I have no option to leave as it would be catastrophic to my wages and I support a family."
Ashley	"I am in favor of banning non competes. I work in the private investigation industry and am currently dealing with this myself. Non-competes are being abused by companies to scare employees into staying and not furthering their career. At my previous company, I was paid significantly lower than my co- workers for doing the same job at a higher volume. When I asked for a raise, I was ignored. I finally left and found a better paying job with a lower volume of work in the same industry. The prior company has made many threats because I am violating the overly restrictive non compete they snuck in during a promotion. I have not reached out to any of their clients or done anything to affect their business. They are only upset because I am still working in the industry. There were lawsuits against 2 other employees who left at the same time as me, and they both are out of a job now and forced out of the industry. Their non compete states that for 2 years, we cannot work for any other company in the industry, any of their clients, or anyone they have THOUGHT of doing business with."
GREG	"I think this proposal to remove non-compete clauses is absolutely needed. In the next 4 months, I will be forced to relocate my family because the non- compete clause found in my current contract doesn't allow me to provide health care within the 10-mile radius for a period of two years. I am an associate physician that is currently in a private practice setting in a smaller rural town where people travel up to an hour or more to receive health care treatment. I have spent the past three years building up relationships with other referring primary care providers and specialists. I provided advanced medical procedures and services which were not previously offered by my employer. Under my current contract, I am unable to provide patient care at the hospital where I was affiliated, independent of my employer. After my contract is up, I am not able to continue to provide any care to the patients that I have established a relationship with or even directly or indirectly communicate with any of my patients. Further, I am forced to leave patient care to the hands of someone who isn't trained to the same level as I am. This predicament has a profoundly negative impact on patient care and outcomes. I wish I could continue to care for my established patients regardless of whoever the employer is that writes my paycheck. I have a young family that will be uprooted at a time when they just started to feel like they belonged in school and with friends. We are heavily involved in our church, schools, and community where we are at but have to give that up. Should we have a choice, we would continue on with our lives where we are established independent of who our employer is."
Chris	"I support ending non-competes. Noncompetes has negatively impacted myself and multiple other physicians colleagues. Hospitals use these restrictive covenants as negotiating leverage over physicians more so than to protect their business. Hospitals even have non-competes for emergency room physicians who are of no threat to take patients with them to a new job. Patient safety, quality of care and physician satisfaction only stand to improve if non-competes are eliminated"
Jake	"This would be an amazing change in course for non-competes, which overwhelmingly favors larger businesses, while stifling the ability for individuals to go out on their own. Given that the larger company is able to afford lengthy and costly litigation fees, whereas an individual needs to bare not only the new startup costs of the business, but simultaneously trying to fight off a lawsuit results in most people either not willing to go through the lengthy battle, or potentially leading into failed business due to extra overhead expense (vs. actually building up the business) via legal expenses."

Abigail	"As a veterinary specialist , it would be great not to have to leave the state when I want to leave a hospital, especially since corporations have taken over our industry. One colleague had to work 30 miles from home for two years before he could return to working near home. Ban or limit the scope of non competes."
Raghu	"I as a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the corporate hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians."
Sarah	"Non-compete are nonsense. Please accept this as a Linn disapproval of the proposal."
Crystal	"I heartily support the FTC's proposed rule change to ban non-compete clauses. My experience has been that employers use these clauses to keep workers trapped in jobs while the company refuses to offer competitive wage increases and benefits. I've been in a position numerous times where a client or customer is so impressed with my service and work ethic that they offer me a position, but a non-compete clause means I had no freedom to pursue those opportunities. Yet, when I told my employer I have X number of clients trying to hire me out from under them I still end up getting the "standard" annual raise that doesn't keep pace with inflation. Essentially, being denied real opportunities that I have earned to make more money and instead being expected to stick around and have LESS buying power year after year of staying with the same company. Workers aren't properly rewarded or appreciated in most companies for loyalty and experience. It's time to level the playing field and let great workers chase the opportunities they deserve, instead of insulating, reinforcing, and legally upholding corporate exploitation and greed. I hope the FTC is able to put this rule change into effect. It will provide a much needed rebalancing of the power dynamics between employers and employees."
n	"just asking for fairness, if all other staff have choice, why restrict a few human beings."
Brooke	"Hello, my husband & I are incredibly hopeful that you will pass a ruling that will ban noncompete clauses this year. He would benefit greatly from finally being able to freely break away from his underpaying company to create his own business marketing his niche crafting skill, and being paid his full worth rather than just a fraction of it. Please stick up for the little guy - so many of us could benefit greatly!"
Nabihah	"Non-compete clauses for physicians are unethical. Changing jobs often requires a move to a new city, uprooting our families. In this way, organizations can treat physicians poorly knowing they have no choice but to stay"

David	"The proposed rule regarding non-competes should be approved. At this time, non-compete clauses are only benefiting the employer and taking away from the employee the main right this nation was built upon, freedom. I understand how difficult it is to create a law that would make everybody happy, but it is important that you hear the people. Corporates and companies alike use those clauses unfairly to threaten and hold employees and minority partners in unfair conditions. I am a veterinarian, right now battling a non-compete of 20 miles and 5 years. There are over 200 clinics within 20 miles, and it is proven that most clinics draw their business from about 5 miles around. I have been reasonable throughout the whole process, and, in my case, I asked for a reduction from 20 down to 12.4 miles first and 15.4 miles second. In both cases, my ex-partner opposed that and continued to hold what is in the contract. Even if the court ultimately determines that this non-compete is non-enforceable, I will ultimately spend thousands of dollars and many months in the process. However, this is not only about money, the daily commuting, the increase carbon footprint, the nights away from home and so on also matter here. Clauses like this are not put in place to protect legitimate business interest. instead, employers use them to see how far they can protect themselves. Lawyers put them in contracts to see how far they can go with them. Unfortunately, wrong decisions can create a lot of problems when these non- competes are agreed, either because of poor advice or because of the lack of full understanding. I am not sure how this would affect other professions, however in the medical field, we provide services based on individual intellectual training. There is not real intellectual value that a company or corporation would need to protect. People who seek these services should be free to choose their providers. In my case, the clinic I worked for is not offering some of the services I was doing, instead of, they are trying to protect (stifle competition) if they may be able to provide the services again soon. Flow absurd is that? It is competition what makes this market grow, what creates new jobs and makes us perform at our best so that we can deliver the best product or service. Therefore, the non-compete clause rule would benefit the people employed but would also improve the market and positively affect the consumer. It is very important that this ruling would also consider those minority partners. Partnership is another strategy to retain (enslave) employees with the promise of prospects. These prospects are generally unreal and controlled by the majority owner leaving those in a partnership without any power to make decisions, control prospects and still work under the conditions imposed by those in charge. Non-compete clauses are left to the court system for interpretation and enforceability. The problem is that challenging those is not an easy task for anyone. As it was said during the hearings, it can lead to bankruptcy. Corporates and employees can write off these expenses in their taxes. What about those employees or minority partners? The answer is no. I beg you to continue with your proposal, and from here to make it into law. It is time to end this abusive behavior. This senseless strategy to retain employees and minority partners. We should work on creating a better working environment, equal for both employers and employees, based on respect and equality rather than oppression and abusive behaviors. Thank you so much for your consideration"
Kyla	"Non-compete clauses are a form of socialism for businesses. It's un-American and the practice needs to be limited or banned altogether."

Jyothi	"Please take out all compete clauses for physicians. Rural areas suffer because of greedy hospitals, big doctor groups and recruiting firms."
Debbie	"As I understand it, when the relationship between an employer and employee ends, a non-compete agreement gives the employer continued control over the livelihood of the former employee. The former employee is restricted from being able to market their skillset, experience and knowledge to improve and prosper their own employment situation. The non-compete protects only their former employer. In some cases, these agreements give the employer an avenue for personal attack against former employees with the threat of legal action hanging over them for the duration of the non-compete agreement. My perspective is this: Almost every single employed person I know is under a non-compete agreement. The vast majority of them do not hold secret formulas or other types of proprietary information from their previous employers. By dissolving this unfair practice, doors of opportunity could be opened for so many people in the following ways: • to improve their circumstances • get hired by a better company • receive higher compensation • feel valued. No company should have the right to tell an individual where they can or cannot work. Let's be realistic. Most people have to work. I believe we should have a fair and open environment to make the workplace better for all, employees as well as employers. Some further considerations: • The main responsibilities of the FTC are to protect the consumer and remove unfair practices and conduct by companies. This rule totally supports those directives. • Competition is healthy. It keeps improvement and innovation alive and helps move us forward. Banning these agreements would definitely foster competition. • Currently, non-compete agreements are the source of many legal actions and lawsuits. By prohibiting and dissolving these agreements, the FTC can help lighten the load of our over-worked justice system that is bottlenecked with ridiculous and unwarranted cases. • Also, this move would basically be free of cost to the FTC or the government and would generate much good will among employed people by freeing them to work where they choose. Free is good! 1 100% support dithee FTC banning future non-compete agreements and dissolving those currently in effect. Please make this happen!"
John	"I agree with this proposal because in effect, these non compete clause are tantamount to restraint of trade!"
Earl	"I agree 100% these companies are using the non compete to punish people . Insurance companies are the worst. It is to protect them entirely not for the worker. My company has changed the contract 4-5 in 10 years while reducing pay commissions. Now they are reducing commissions and we do not have to sign contact. A provision states they can change it. I have a buy out at age 63 unlike some. This issue is if I compete within 1 year of leaving I give up my buyout. So at age 63 they are treating me like a employee and using me as a contractor. They tell you what to do and when to do it. Control your commissions and try to run you off si they can hire female or minority at less money. It happens every day in this market. If I did not have a non compete I would leave today and move my customers to a company that could save them money to put back into the economy. I am in a trap at my age and they know it. I sell insurance because people need it. However the insurance companies really do not care about reps you can relate to the client. I wish the FTC would pass this ASAP. Years ago we had mentors that trained you on the job and was proud that if you made a change it benefited your family."

Steven	"Non competes are a predatory practice that have existed for far too long. They have extended far beyond the reach of what should be acceptable. I agree non competes for acquisitions should be enforceable for the beneficial owners of the business being acquired but they should not result in non competes for even key employees. If companies are willing to pay the employee a severance equal to their current salary for the length of any non compete then there should be consideration for that. If the business feels keeping a key employee out of the market is an advantage for them then they should have to compensate said employee for their talent to keep them on the bench. I have even been threatened from a company to enforce a non compete that clearly didn't exist because I was not receiving severance payments per the terms of my contract. Big companies use the threats of drowning you in legal fees to scare you from growing and innovating in your market. This predatory practice should end NOW."
Tyler	"This continues to be a race to the bottom from hospital C suite executives. Physicians are the most integral part of the healthcare system, and should not be hamstrung by being excluded from the new noncompete regulations. This is purely motivated by hospital board greed to pay physicians less and pocket more money for themselves, despite only being obstacles to actually providing quality care to Americans."
Mark	"Please, please, for the love of God, do something good for the American people for once. Ban non-competes."
Harshad	"As a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the corporate hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians."
Kala	"After moving around for years my husband finally landed his dream job with a great company. Or so we thought. Friday February 3rd my husband was terminated from his medical sales rep job for very vague reasons, and unfortunately in Georgia you can be fired for anything. My husband had reached out to FIR regarding a co worker that threatened to fight him outside the operating room and his work did nothing (I believe favoritism/politics or even blackmail is a reason for nothing being done about this). So rightfully so he felt unsafe and unheard while working with this individual. His other partners also participated in picking up other medical device products from outside sources and sold hundreds of them on the side. My husband did not but that's what they said he was allegedly let go for. Now with his non compete he isn't allowed to work in the entire state of Georgia (even though his area was only savannah) for two years. My husband is our only source of income with me being a stay at home mother. This has been his expertise for 7 years and now after we just moved here he can't even work here or start his own company. Keep in mind this company is a multimillion if not billion dollar company and my husband worked with them for 9 months. There is no way he sustained enough relationships to take down their business by any means. We are just a small family trying to make it by without

	picking up our entire lives again just so he can make a decent living for how hard he has worked. On top of that our daughter just started school all of her friends are here and we love the area. Starting over with a different field would take him years to get back to where he was. So who are we hurting here the billion dollar company or a family man that works super hard everyday to take care of us. Please rule in favor of the federal trade commission and the Non-Compete Clause Rule so small families can provide for their families. Thank you for your time."
Tyler	"I support the termination of a non compete. I was just terminated from my job and being held by a non compete that doesn't allow me to provide for my family. I was terminated without pay, and I can't go back to work in the field that I've worked in for 6 years. I hope this goes through to help families like mine. Tyler Mercer"
Tim	"I support the Federal Trade Commission's proposal to ban non-compete clauses. These restrictions are one reason why I left a nearly two-decade career in television news. When I worked in TV news, I had to agree to a non-compete as a condition of employment. The non-competes typically banned me from working for a competitor in the same market for a period of six months to one year. One contract in particular prohibited me from working in two Florida cities, as my then-employer — Bright House Networks — operated cable news channels in Orlando and Tampa. In order to earn a living in my profession, I had to move from city to city, because I could not afford to "sit out" the non-compete. My employers benefited greatly from these one-sided agreements. To them, it was a cheap and effective way to keep me — and others — from leaving for better-paying jobs. I received no benefit from any non-compete I had to sign. I was not privy to any company secrets that would have benefited the competition. Even though I was an off-camera producer, I was subject to the same restrictions as on-air talent when it came to these restrictive covenants. In 2019, I left the TV news business. Prior to my decision to leave, my then-employer WGCL-TV owned at the time by the Meredith Corporation offered me a contract renewal. I would only receive a 2% raise and would have to agree to another six-month non-compete from working for any TV stations or websites in the Atlanta area. An attorney who reviewed the contract for me said the non-compete could even prevent me from working for CNN, since it is also located in Atlanta. This seemed very broad and perhaps unlawfully restrictive, but I did not have the financial means to wage a fight against a multi-million dollar corporation over my right to work. I encourage the Federal Trade Commission to use whatever means necessary to ban non-competes. Employees deserve to have more freedom to seek better-paying jobs in the communities where they want to live. The FTC's proposal will accomplish this."
Kaitlin	"Non compete agreements unfairly restricts my right to work with in the same field. If I am unfairly treated by an employer due to discrimination or unfair wages I am unable to seek work in my field that I have spent years to become educated in. Please End these Non competes. It should be unconstitutional !"
Darren	"Non-compete clauses make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats you, by allowing your former employer to sue you if you go to work for another company in the same industry. The FTC estimates that banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by $300 billion per year .I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These

	clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
David	"I fully agree on this proposed rule. Non-competes are only hampering the market, limiting business and market growth as they affect good competition and the freedom of consumers and for employees to seek for better job opportunities. Most non-competes get signed because there is one part with power that takes advantage of that and one part that is poorly advised or does not have enough information to make a good decision. Once under contract, it is very expensive and time consuming to determine its enforceability. I was a minor shareholder (10% shares) and signed a disproportionate non compete, 20 miles and 5 years. I did this because there were other important things that I had to negotiate to make it work. I was put in a situation in which my loan was already approved and dispersed to found out a terrible agreement. Because of that I decided not to pursue more negotiations and finally agreed to the terms. After 5 years this relationship has not been what I expected and decided to move on. Now the majority owner is trying to enforce the non compete. I asked for a more reasonable non competes and to bring it down to 13 or 15 miles to help me find another job close to compete. Even this mileage is very high in a city and suburban area, the owner does not want to allow any negotiation forcing me to go to court and challenge it. To sum things up, non competes do not really protect the business but affect the freedom of the employee. Let's say the employee wants to start a business nearby, the health of this business would be affected by the proximity to the other business where this employee was employed. Banks may not lend any money if this is too risky. At the end, these risks has to be taken by the new business owner and decide what might or might not be worth. In any case, this only creates fair market competition that benefits the customer, create new markets for new employing opportunities and would ultimately improve working conditions. Working conditions that get improved out of respect and fairness rather than fear by horrible binding contracts. In my case, 15 miles would add over 45 minutes twice a day committing, disrupting my family life, making working days longer with an impact in daily traffic and pollution. This rule can only improve the well being of the employees and a better working environment for everybody. Stress plays a role in mental health, let's start advocating for what it is important. Legitimate business interest can be very difficult to prove and define and it should be subjective to some objective and measurable criteria. Intellectual property should be proven and defend in measurable terms as well. Non-solicitation of clients is valid but in this widely social world, anyone can find where an employee moves and seek to continue business there if desired. Let's work on more free markets that would ultimately benefit everybody."
Christopher	"I strongly support banning Non-compete agreements from contracts, as they are anti-free market, anti-worker mobility, and anti-competitive. Increased worker mobility and opportunities will help the economy and increase overall prosperity. As a recently graduated physician, I wanted to start my own practice and become a small business owner. However, I also needed a source of income to start out and wanted to work part time at a local hospital for income and benefits, however due to a non-compete clause in their contracts, I could not start my own business and practice in the same city if I was to work with them. This hindered my ability to work as much as I wanted (ended up having to work as an independent contractor for significantly less shifts per month and no benefits), and made it more difficult to get my business off the ground due to expenses for providing my own benefits Banning non- compete clauses would significantly help the ability for citizens to pursue starting small businesses or other work to increase their income and prosperity. Please, for the good of workers and the Country, ban Non compete clauses."

Billy	"Please ban the non compete and give power back to workers!"
Gina	"Competition is the foundation a capitalistic system, which is what the United States has chosen for itself. I believe the contractual non-compete clauses, which have become commonplace, need to be regulated."
Stephen	"Absolutely in favor of banning non-compete clauses. They are unfair and should not be part of a free market."
Robert	"Noncompete clauses are harmful for patients physicians and other healthcare providers, allowing hospitals and other employers to restrict competition, raise prices, and reduce choices for patients."
Megan	"Please ban non compete agreements. We need a free and open market and work environment which leads to healthy competition and better jobs, not risk monopolies."
Jacqui	"I am a family physician currently working in a Medically Underserved Area (MUA). I have decided to resign from my position with the local hospital system, opting to open my own private practice instead. However, the hospital system is strictly enforcing my 50-mile, 2-year noncompete clause. How is it good for anyone to bar a family physician from continuing to serve in a MUA? Noncompetes are unethical and should be illegal."
Antonina	"I am in full support. People's livelihoods are at stake because of a company's ability to hold you in their grip long after you are no longer employed with them. flow does it make sense? Thank you for this initiative!"
Marko	"Don't handcuff employees"
Mike	"We 100% need to get rid of non-compete clause. It's unfair to be handcuffed to an employer and find a better opportunity some place else and not be able to progress your own career and financial security."
Rita	"This is a much needed rule. Too many workers are forced to stay in jobs because they cannot leave to work for a competitor Elimination of the non- compete would enable workers to enhance their careers, be happier in their jobs and support their families better. Please repeal the non-compete."
Aaron	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, My sister, a doctor, had to stay at a job with an abusive boss because he made her sign a non-compete contract with no distance limit, then threatened her and her coworkers (also doctors) if he got any thought that someone was thinking about leaving. Repeatedly called meetings and talked about "calls with his lawyers" and the extent to which he could annihilate them if they stepped out of line. He didn't stop at suing them for all the money in their bank accounts. He told them that he would take their house. He threatened to use legal action to take a woman's child away from her if she took a new job at a local hospital. My dad retired

	from upper management at GE, then I was in a car accident and couldn't work for 4 years. He needed to take anew job to help me survive, but was unable to apply to co.paravle jobs because of the noncompete clause GE made him sign. I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Bran	"Non-compete clauses should be viewed as anti-competitive and I support this rule against such practices. By preventing skilled labor from being able to freely move between companies and use their specialized skills to better the overall conditions of the nation. Non compete clauses prevent us from being able to reach our nations potential and grow our GDP through the development of improved products and services. Applied 'earnings honed over careers will allowed workers to benefit and companies to benefit in the long run rather than stumble over the same mistakes as specialized skills sets are wasted in favor of limiting employees from being able to work were they like and/or would otherwise be able to."
Srinadh	"I as a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the corporate hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians."
Ajitabh	"I would implore the commission to ban all non-competes for physicians. It makes it very difficult to obtain employment with a certain locale and causes families to be uprooted."
David	" I support a rule that eliminates the use of non-compete contracts and/or agreements that limit an individuals ability to make the best arrangements for themselves and family. Furthermore, I encourage this rule to cover the individual in the use of there own created intellectual property in a manner that allows the employer to continue to use design and/or original work in relation to the employment agreement, but that also allows to employer to opportunity to use any intellectual property or process they have personally created that is not protected by copyright, patent, or similar legal tool. Additionally, requirements for job training reimbursement should be explicitly included as being in violation of the new rule. It is reasonable for an employer to offer training to improve their own internal processes and or products and to aid in their recruiting and retention efforts, in both cases both the employee and employer benefit. It is not reasonable or moral to use reimbursement as a motivator for continuation of an employment relationship."
Stefanie	"I support a ban on non-compete clauses. As a veterinarian, I feel that the ones I have had to sign greatly restrict my ability to make a living and support my family in my profession."

An interested	"I am an internal medicine physician practicing primary care in Georgia. I have been employed by a hospital/ health care system for the past 12 years. The system was bought by / merged with another system in 2016. The new corporation has breached my contract in multiple ways. No raise since 2016 even though FMV evaluation is mandated every 3 years in the original contract. Refusing to pay for CME which guaranteed. Cutting 403b match.Etc.,etc. My lawyer says I shouldn't fight the non-compete as it's very expensive. I've practiced medicine for 40 years and have seen it all. I feel like an indentured servant. The END of traditional medicine and primary care is near. One remedy to possibly save it is to prohibit / revoke all non-compete agreements and let PCPs try to survive. We are the lowest paid and most burned out of all physicians. Please help."
Devangi	"As a physician, non-competes allow hospitals to abuse physicians, and gives them every reason to force physicians to practice within unsafe and discriminatory environments. They have gone a long way in making sure that we cannot leave, even if we are unhappy, and even if our families need a different job structure. This is not about money- the new generation of workers, including physicians, want to provide safe, cost efficient care and want work life balance. Hospitals are specifically asking physicians to be excused so they do not have to provide maternity/paternity or the needs of new parents, so they can continue to discriminate against minority physicians, do not have to answer to hostile work environments, and force difficult working hours (enslavement). Time for workers who work hard to be rewarded."
Falgun	"I strongly oppose non compete clause for physicians to improve patient care and reduce health care cost."
Parth	"This incredibly greedy bunch of suits, none of is a physician, only cares about profits and not patient care. The growth of useless paper pushers like the American hospital association and administrators has driven the cost of healthcare beyond measure. There should be absolutely no exception to physicians from being unable to exercise the cancellation of noncompete clauses. With the ever-growing shortage of physicians and access to quality care such a measure proposed by ANA shows, your only priority is greed. If physicians are able to be relieved from noncompete clauses, the access to medical care patients will have will greatly increase and so will physician productivity."
Salil	"As a practicing physician, I completely support the elimination of non-compete clauses in the workplace. I have known too many physicians who have had to move far away in order to keep making a living due to restrictive clauses."
Snehal	"As a surgeon I have 25 mile non compete for 2 years from every hospital. I am credentialed. That involves my entire city and the only option is to move. I built a practice on my own without hospital resources and have no option to leave. Non compete should be standardized for physicians and even 10 miles would allow physicians to keep their families in the same city and move."
Varsha	"I fully support burning noncompete in employment agreements. I am a physician, practicing in Georgia, and have been severely restricted in where, and how I can earn additional income due to the noncompete clause in my employment contract. Especially when it comes to medical care, the noncompete does not make sense, because we are serving the patient, not the hospital entity as our "customer." Therefore, medical providers should be permitted to practice medicine and care for patients in the capacity that we are trained to do so, not restricted by a corporation."

Ranjan	"This is a draconian law which the hospital and big practices use against the physicians. This needs to go and physicians should be free to practice wherever they want"
Rene	"Non competes basically restrict trade for anesthesiologists like myself. It forced us to stay with our current employer or basically move to somewhere where we can actually practice and live in a reasonable distance. It is terribly unfair to us as a whole and needs to be changed."
Shanthan	" Physician non-compete clause should be eliminated as it is no less than a legalized slavery document which impacts the physicians and their families in a significant manner. It takes away the competitive spirit and promotes monopoly and bullying of a bigger entity. Unfortunately the patient care suffers in the end I hope the government takes a serious note of this which is prevalent only in the medical field."
Melanie	"I feel that I am being harmed financially by an anti-compete law in my independent contractor role with a small coaching business. I support this law and hope to see it passed."
Anthony	"I work in the healthcare field: I was an EMT for years before becoming a medical student. I will soon graduate and become a physician. I recently read a letter from the American Heart Association in opposition to this proposed rule. I wholeheartedly disagree with the AHA. The AHA asserts that banning noncompete agreements will harm patients by limiting patient access to receive care. I cannot fathom how restricting where physicians are allowed to practice increases patients' access to care. The AHA's argument is nonsensical. They are not worried about quality patient care; the AHA is concerned that the proposed rule may cost hospitals money by forcing administrations to pay employees competitive wages. Non-compete clauses may serve a purpose in some industries. In business if an employee has access to valuable intellectual property, it is a valid interest of their employer to prevent them from taking that information to the competition. In medicine there is no such interest. Hospitals exist to save lives, and most treatments necessary to do so are standardized. There are no intellectual property concerns. The only reason for noncompete clauses in contracts in healthcare is to limit fair competition, and therefore I believe in this industry the FTC's proposed rule should absolutely be implemented."
Jonathan	"I respect the obligations of a contract. I am a physician currently honoring a non-compete (thankfully only one year) by commuting over an hour away to work. After the non-compete expires I will be able to work closer to my home and the community that I love. However, in my smaller community of —100K in the county a recent hospital acquisition forced me out before I fell under the new contract arrangements. These new arrangements which take place when my previous company gets bought out by the new company would put a 5 year and multi-county non-compete in place. This is effectively saying "play ball" with the big company or essentially move to another state or another part of the state. This would completely uproot my family,

	take me from my community and all my patients would be left with limited options in my specialty, all to support the interests of larger and larger medical corporations. This is monopolizing care in certain communities and trading care for patients for financial gain. If a hospital group wants to come into a community, then fine but let them provide an incentive for care providers to stay by being good stewards of that responsibility rather than forcing providers to join or leave."
Shashi	"I strongly feel that the non compete clause should be eliminated Institutions that use the non compete often misuse it and don't treat their employees well, saying "they won't go anywhere.""
Brandon	"I am a board-certified veterinary cardiologist who was employed at BluePearl Veterinary Partners from 2012-2019 in metro Atlanta, GA. They are the only specialty clinic inside Atlanta that employs boarded veterinary cardiologists. In order to obtain employment with BluePearl, I was required to sign a restrictive covenant that included a non-compete of 25 miles for 2 years. Due to multiple factors, I left the company in 2019 and was forced to travel outside this radius to help the veterinary patients in need. Within 6 months, I was being contacted by multiple pet owners as well as general practice veterinarians as BluePearl Veterinary Partners and the surrounding cardiology services could not see patients in a timely manner due to a large caseload. BluePearl's schedule was overloaded and pets could not be evaluated for 2-3 months, which for heart disease is an unacceptably long time. I then reached out to BluePearl to see if there was a possibility of coming to a compromise with my non-compete as it was obvious patients were not getting seen and patients were suffering. These conversations were documented in mails and can be provided if desired. BluePearl was unwilling to consider any compromise despite multiple options offered (including buying out a portion of the non-compete radius, providing a right of first refusal for cases. etc). Even when asked to consider the ethical implications of denying patients needed care, BluePearl was unwilling to allow these pets/pet owners in need from within the 25 mile radius be seen. As a result of BluePearl's action, from late September 2019-late September 2021, pet owners from within metro- Atlanta had extreme difficulty getting timely care for their pets who were suffering from cardiac disease. Despite a full and overloaded schedule, high business load, they still desired to protect their own interests above any other ethical concern. Even when the single cardiologist employed by BluePearl in Atlanta went on maternity leave and BluePearl ceased to see cardiology appointment, they still would not allow me to see cases within the restricted area. They completely shut the service down for —3 months (which coincided with the last 3 months of my non-compete time), leaving patients with no option for care within metro Atlanta and they would provide no relief to pet owners who became even more desperate. When I again reached out to BluePearl to discuss how they could enforce my non-compete when they were not offering the service (I again brought up that I would be willing to buy out the remainder of the non-compete), they responded with the same unwillingness to allow for any concession I had heard before. They would have rather pets not be seen at all if it was not with them. Veterinary medicine businesses (both general practice and specialty), commonly use non-competes for doctors and they serve to limit options for pet owners wanting care for their beloved pets. I have personally lost thousands of dollars in potential revenue due to the 2 years of geographic restriction. I was forced to serve rural areas that had a significantly lower caseload and was not able to help they many suffering patients inside Atlanta whose owners were desperate for assistance. Unethical business practices arc reinforced as long as companies can prevent care by standing behind these harmful non- competes. I implore you to consider doing away with non-compete agreements as the patients, pet owners, primary care veterinarians, and even boarded specialists like myself, have suffered enough due to these agreements that promote a lack of competition and unethical behavior "in the name of doing business". Thank you for your time and I am happy to provide any documentation or further information if needed. I also have many primary veterinarians who experienced difficulty having their cardiology patients seen and can also provide statements, if desired."

Mathew	"I work as a physician . I have a 2 yrs noncompete with my healthcare system that I am required to sign that spans 25miles in the metro Atlanta area. It automatically renews and was non-negotiable as part of my employment. I have worked 10 years for this healthcare system and job satisfaction is at an all time low. None of the physicians can leave due to this noncompete being enforced if we are terminated or leave our job with or without cause. To work 25mi I would have to travel 2 hours from where I live. This is an example of being a prisoner to non compete's. Our employer holds all the cards and doesn't have to treat us well as they know we have no other options to work where we have value and have built our patient base. To leave I would have to start over somewhere and relocate my family. I work in my hometown where I grew up and my parents and siblings all live here. Leaving isn't an option so I'm stuck in this job."
William	"I help manage a large anesthesiologist group in the Southeastern United States. I have personally observed three instances of non-competes evening weaponized against physicians by a large hospital system. In short, the hospital instituted a hostile takeover of their private anesthesia group forcing them to join as hospital based employees. Much of their leverage originated from a non-compete agreement. Immediately upon completion of this takeover the hospital system fired the three physicians that assisted in keeping the group together and aided in the transition. Because they were viewed as physician leaders, they were seen as a threat to hospital dominance and their contracts were terminated. The system threatened litigation should the three terminated physicians break their one year non-compete, preventing any of them from seeking employment within a 30 mile radius. The irony is Anesthesiologist have no competition concerns with hospitals, they don't have patients that they can take with them. This type of action is an anti-competitive monopolistic strategy by large corporate health systems to control a physicians ability to make a living."
Maxwell	"Please end the non-compete rules. It is a huge disadvantage for physicians."
Concerned	"Greetings, I am currently a physician fellow at Emory University Hospital, and throughout my search for a job I have found non-compete clauses to be an unfortunate fact of healthcare life. As you know, healthcare access is an issue for many in our nation. Not just because people are unable to attain existing healthcare services, but also because physicians can be forcefully prevented from providing consistent healthcare services. Many physician jobs now-a-days, including in Georgia, have non-compete clauses. Locally, in Atlanta for example, there are relatively harsh non-compete clauses such as being unable to practice medicine within 25+ miles from all affiliated locations for a period of two years (potentially forcing a community- loved amazing physician to practice outside of the metroplex for 2+ years or even force them to relocate permanently). These type of non-compete clauses are an issue for patients, not just doctors, because they too restrict a patient's freedom to choose the best doctor fur their procedure/illness — effectively forcing patients to receive healthcare driven by business-interests and not physician-driven results. Having the ability to protect a physician's professional autonomy and a patient's freedom to select a doctor of their choice should be a priority, in my opinion, for our elected representatives and governing bothes. Afterall, lawyers (think, the American Bar Association) already have this sort of protection — which makes it extremely hard (if not practically impossible) to legally enforce a restrictive non-compete agreement on a lawyer in the United States. With this in mind, I support the Federal Trade Commission's endeavor to bring the non-compete clause issue to the spotlight --- and hopefully spark discussion and legislation that will make healthcare more equitable, accessible, and navigable to both patients and physicians alike. Best, A Concerned Community Provider"

A	"I am a doctor and non-compete clauses keep me and my colleagues tied to suboptimal jobs we accepted without knowing better."
Dwarka	"There should be no noncompete clause. Period.."
Heather	"Ban non competes"
Josh	"Please proceed with removing non-compete agreements. This is ridiculous. Employers have way too much power with these. I shouldn't have to be stuck like this. Should I challenge it, mandatory arbitration, which should also be done away with. I had no power negotiating that either. There's also a clause I pay their attorneys fees. My non-compete covers the whole USA. I sell computers and PC parts. This is stupid."
Faiz	"As a cardiologist I agree with the FTC proposal. I have lived in Augusta , GA for 25 yrs and served this community with honor . I should not be forced by a health system to leave this area . I did not sign up for a life long sentence of servitude"
Jason	"Please eliminate noncompete so I can continue to provide care to patients in my community"
Dev	"Non compete should not exist between business owners also. This is an important clause, if one owner tits the other business owner, they should be able to take the accounts that they got, just like employees"
Jessica	"Non-compete shouldn't be legal. After how hard I've worked to become a doctor I should have a right to try to make my living where ever I chose. I shouldn't have to move my family to a new state just because I want to leave my employer."
Hanna	"I completely support the removal of non compete clauses. In my husband's job, he was required to sign a non compete that would not allow him to work in aerospace engineering for 2 years anywhere in the US and then it specified anywhere in the state of Georgia, in case the whole US got thrown out in court. We needed to move to Atlanta and didn't feel like there were other options, so he signed it. The scope of that noncompete is ridiculous and wrong. If a company wants to retain you, they should make it worth your while to stay, not handicap your ability to leave."

Mjnari	"There is no place for non-compete clauses in the vast majority of workplaces. If you are a capitalist then the free market should dictate where workers choose to work. Non-competes cheat this process by forcing people to remain with companies that for some reason are not able to beat their competition in the free marketplace of work. If you're against dogmatic capitalism, then non-competes take away worker choice and encourage companies to overwork and abuse employees because they do not have the option to leave. The only position which a non-compete should even be considered for being acceptable is at the highest level of the workforce where there is a potential risk for legitimate trade secrets to be lost. However, even in this case these secrets should be protected by patents anyway. And one has to admit that blocking the sharing of technologies that aren't protected by patents stifles technological advancement and competition for the sake of one company's profits. In reality non-competes are often used to trick lower and middle class workers into continuing to work in unreasonable conditions which they only tolerate out of fear of breaking this largely unenforceable clause."
Benjamin	"Non-competes are the definition of anti competitive behavior. It's literally in the name. And it's the individual worker who has to pay the price. In some industries, non compete clauses are the standard and this hampers employees from receiving the pay they deserve and can coerce them into staying at a company that isn't offering truly competitive compensation, as they can't field better offers from their competition. A total ban on these clauses is necessary for the correct function of a competitive market."
Ron	"I worked in the radio broadcasting field for nearly 30 years, and can attest to the life-altering damage done by NCC's. Having to relocate - because unemployment doesn't last as long as a NCC - is costly, tatters friendships, stresses families and finances and puts undue hardships on kids having to be "the new kid" at yet another new school. One such employer I once worked with - iHeartMedia - has a NCC that disallows an employee from working for any other entity in ANY market they're also in. I toiled in small/medium markets most of my career and finally had the chance to work in major market - but for a station owned by another company, Audacy. The Herculean efforts it took to have higher-ups sign off on this were unreal, and only because I was owed a substantial bonus that I offered to waive was I even allowed to go. In almost EVERY other case, an employee would have had no such luck. Ponder that ... you work for illeart; your mother or father has fallen ill and you need to move to the other side of the country to be nearer, and the only job you can find is for a station owned by a company other than if:kart - with stations in one hundred sixty (160) markets - and that station's in one of those markets. I'd just relocated to Atlanta in 2018 for that major market job; my then- spouse did about nine months later once we'd sold our home. About three months after that, I was let go and - you guessed it - had a NCC of six months I'd have to sit out. Do you know what the Audacy Atlanta market president who fired me said? "You can drive for Uber if you want; we won't contest your unemployment if you want to do that or work for Starbucks or something like that." That's the reality of the NCC environment. I wasn't CHOOSING to seek another job, and yet - through no fault of my own - I needed one. but found myself constrained to something OTHER than what I'd spent nearly three decades doing for income. I was fortunate in that - at the time - I was married and my spouse had taken a job here. I'd also decided to go ahead and get my real estate license as a fall-back, and have opted to stay in that realm ever since, because I HAD to stay in Atlanta, at that point (spouse's job, our families). I won't even go into the psychological strain that situation put me through, compounded by a new career, the pandemic, eventually divorce"

Matthew	"Unless a company is teaching you proprietary information, you should be able to work wherever you would like whenever you would like"
Joe	"Please include physicians in this and don't remove them as the American hospital association wants to do. This means physicians have to move if their hospital does not allow them to take good care of patients and adequately compensate them and allows hospitals to act as dictators over medical care."
William	"As a physician , I would appreciate having the protections against non-compete agreements which are being extended to other workers. I disagree with the American Hospital Association's request to exempt physicians from the rule prohibiting non-compete agreements."
Jennifer	"I support removing non-competes as per this proposed FTC rule for all employees. Non-competes stifle career growth and give the employers too much power over their employees. I'm a physician and often physicians will stop working for the period of the non-compete. With all our access to care challenges and physician shortages, why would we want physicians to stop seeing patients because of a non-compete? Competition is healthy. Employers should not have a monopoly on their workers."
Jonathan	"I fully support the rule to ban Non Compete agreements. I personally was under a non compete in job that I had for over 20 years. My employer fired me and then threatened to sue me if I went to a competitor. My family's well being was put under jeopardy. My new employer didn't want the legal battle if I were to join so I had to make several signed agreements from the old employer. Its an awful practice that gives companies too much power over the personal well being of others to provide for their family."
Louis	"Noncompete clauses only act in the interest of the large corporations that enforce them. They are both harmful to patients and physicians alike. I friendly believe they're removing them from healthcare, will result in lower costs, better outcomes for patients, if your middle men and a significant decrease in physician burnout and attrition. From an economic standpoint, I believe that the primary effect of these noncompete clauses is to depress physician salaries by preventing fair and healthy competition, as well as removing the incentive for fair and equitable treatment, and due process towards physicians. In combination with rising educational costs, and the burden of student loan debt, I believe this further contributes to the dearth/shortage of physicians that we are currently experiencing nationally. Removing the ability of corporations to use these unfair noncompete clauses will be a win-win for all, and I believe will result in better health outcomes, across-the-board, and better economic outcomes."

Chetana	"I support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete agreements."
Caitlin	"Please end the Non-Compete Clause Rule. This causes hard working people to be denied a way of making a livelihood in places they are already familiar with. It should not be allowed for employees that have been terminated from a place of work, with no warning, and then they are expected to find work outside of the restricted areas. Please do away with this, and help hardworking people."
Nathaniel	"The ability for an employer to bind an employee to them via a non-compete is un American and anti capitalist. The stifling of competition in a field or region due to these restrictive practices hurt not only the employees of companies that engage in them but their customers as well. I understand an employer wanting to protect their intellectual property but the majority of non-compete agreements go too far in restricting the opportunities of their employees thus causing undue harm and hardship. Please make this practice illegal to better protect employees and workers rights."
Glo	"Please please please please make this happen!! I am trapped in a non compete I signed in 2010 which prohibits me from working for anyone else in my industry for a period of 2 years after separation with my company. I signed this 13 years ago because I was told "sign this or you can't keep your job". At the time they were the only game in town. Now there are 10 other companies that I COULD be working for but can't. Please stop this practice!!!!!"
Steve	"Non-competes are predatory and destroy competition. I'm a low level employee and my company enforces a non-compete that would restrict the work I could do even in the event of a lay off."
Jay	"I'm an employed physician in private practice and recently the older partners have sold our group to a hospital. They are forcing us to sign with the new entity or our non compete of 30 miles would apply which means many of us are considering leaving the community without adequate medical services. I can't work even one or two counties away because of this. All non competes are is a way for employers to enslave their workers by making it impossible to exit without suffering greatly the loss of not just your job but more importantly your friends, family, investment. This is just wrong. Please make sure to pass this rule for all of us. And for anyone who thinks we can't change the way business has worked for years I would tell you read a history book, workers rights, OSHA requirements, ADA all prove we can and must make the work place better. It's time to end the slavery of non competes."
Jennifer	"Please get rid of this for CPA's!! My accountant left a firm and I'm not able to follow her even though she's been doing my taxes for 5 years and I've never even received an email or any communication from her former partner. I don't know him and I definitely do NOT trust him!!"
Mark	"I strongly support the abolishment of non-compete clauses as they hurt worker's rights."
Kellie	"I believe non-competes unfairly restrict a persons right to be gainfully employed in many professions. They're made to keep people who aren't happy from finding other employment in the same field. It allows the employees to treat employees unfairly and poorly because they know the employee can't leave due to the non-compete. I am very much in favor of doing away with non-competes. I am VP of Sales for my company. I want my employees to enjoy working for me, feel valued and stay because of those reasons, not because a contract. I've recently been asked to sign a new non-compete which would not allow me to work in my field of expertise which is Respiratory Therapy / sales in the entire state of Georgia. I have declined to sign the non-compete and hope this new proposed law banning them will go into effect soon."

Jodine	"Non-compete clauses are bad for physicians, patients, and new employers. We should be free to switch jobs and patients should be free to follow their doctor."
Shenara	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Shrenik	"Members of political parties across the spectrum should support this. From a liberal standpoint eliminating non-compete clauses protects workers and encourages employers to create friendly work environments. Conservatives will appreciate promotion of free-market enterprise, growth, and innovation."
Elle	"1. Noncompetes exacerbate physician shortages and thus access to care. Many physicians I know leave the workforce, move out of town or burnout at their current job because there's not a way to leave their current employer and stay in the same general area. This is especially true for rural towns. A colleague of mine left her 2500 patient panel within 3 months of announcing her departure due to an administrative disagreement. We already do not have enough PCPs in our small town. Her patients were left without medicine, follow up on abnormal labs or imaging. And then added burden was placed on the other PCPs trying to cover our large patient panels and hers. It was untenable. Almost a year after she's left I am finding abnormal labs or imaging that went undetected / not followed up on. She wanted to stay in the community but work for a different hospital system - but couldn't due to the noncompete. The vast majority of people who make up our patient panels are people of color and food insecure. 2. NONCOMPETES help employers evade market forces that would necessitate change by taking away leverage from physicians. I have been working tirelessly to address the social determinants of health in my small community - culinary gardens, culinary medicine workshops, medical student education, veggie RX programs etc. I have met resistance from the hospital. I would happily work for the newer hospital systems trying to make inroads into our small town - except I can't switch jobs. My voice is ineffective because they know I have no recourse. They won't address preventative medicine (the topic of the recent health summit) because... there's no poor outcome for them. There it in our small town. This unfortunately leads to disparate health outcomes for the most vulnerable populations. 3. A single physician leaving a hospital system elsewhere in the same community cannot possibly significantly hurt a hospital system. If multiple physicians leave a hospital system then there are likely systemic issues at play that need to be addressed. 4. The current FTC wording doesn't apply to nonprofit hospitals and needs to be modified to include all hospital systems. As most hospital systems in the US are nonprofit it will fail to eliminate NONCOMPETES for most physicians. Thereby making it an ineffective solution."

Natalie	"I have had to sign a noncompete on several occasions throughout my nursing administrative hospice career . Noncompetes are very unfair to employees and greatly limits employment opportunities. My most recent noncompete prevented me from continuing in hospice administration after 7 years due to my employer preventing me from joining another hospice company within 100 miles. This was after the CEO unfairly terminated me for no reason. This forced me to accept a nursing position in a completely new specialty and placed a tremendous financial burden on my family. My experience is a perfect example of why noncompetes are so unfair!"
Brittanie	"Non-competes force people to stay in roles that are not a good fit, or risk being unemployed for an extended period- or have to take a role with significantly less pay outside their primary field / industry. The non-compete I signed uses intentionally vague language and is for a period of six months would be really derail my career"
Alexandra	"Noncompetes only benefit executives and big business. Limiting NTC will help workers, wages, and work conditions. I work in healthcare and the NTCs definitely contribute to healthcare burnout and shortages"
Christopher	"I worked as a veterinarian at a location in the metro Atlanta area for 4 years which started great but became too personally taxing. The non-compete was 2 years and 5 miles. Given my wife and I loved where we lived, I would have needed to drive 30-45 minutes to/from work in order to find another job. Or we would have needed to move. This decision is completely unnecessary and puts undo stress on an already stressed career. Let's outlaw these non-competes so that veterinarians can have more freedom to find places they love without having to disrupt their family!"
John	"I am a general surgeon in northwest Georgia and partner in a multispecialty private practice group of about 130 physicians. I signed a noncompete 5 years ago as required by the practice to not practice within 30 miles of my office. This was done under the understanding that there was a partner track and all the partners are equal and we are reimbursed in collections based manner. Most of the partners are near retirement age. A large multi state hospital corporation recently made an offer to buy the practice. This corporation does not own the hospital in my town where I practice. They own one of the 2 hospitals in a town an hour away. The board of my group designed a deal to use the vast majority of the money offered to pay off the older doctors on a seniority scale which left very little money for the RVU based payment model going forward. The RVU rate offered is less than half of what the hospital in my town is offering. For someone with 20+ years of practice left this is terrible. All of the provisions in the contract I signed with my multi specialty group have apparently been pushed to the side. Compensation model, vacation days, partnership vs employee. EXCEPT the non compete. My board is planning to sue me and my two partners who are the only 3 general surgeons in the area if we do not sign on for the buy out and instead elect to stay in our town and take care of our community. We don't have the billions of dollars the corporation has to fight this and cannot be idle for 6 months or longer as the process goes through the court system with an injunction against us to not practice medicine and take care of our community. Instead, the non compete is forcing us to work for less than half of the market rate for the next 5 years. This is exactly the problem banning non compete clauses will solve. I hope banning non compete clauses will allow my family and I to stay in our community and take care of its people."

Andrew	"I am definitely in favor of eliminating non-competes. I am a physician and am employed by a large group, but have been unhappy with my current working environment. However, I have a non-compete and because my employer is such a large group, I am unable to leave without having to move my entire family to another state. My wife also works and loves her job, so essentially I cannot leave my employer without significant impact to our lives and therefore I stay because I have to. My salary is also not as good as several of my colleagues, but I have no power to bargain with my employer about compensation because they know I really can't leave and therefore they have all the power."
Shruti	"Agree with no noncompete."
Rekha	"I support in removing non compete clause in physician contract"
Bridget	"Non compete clauses hurt patients as doctors have to leave their community when they no longer want to work in an employed job. These clauses are bad for patients and physicians. They only benefit employers, not patients."
Brenda	"Failure to ban TRAPs at the same time would render this entire effort moot. Unless your goal is to leave employers all the room they need to exploit workers, more needs to be done."
Catherine	"After reading the documentation, the regulation prohibiting employers from using Non-Compete Clauses with their employees at all levels, including highly skilled and highly paid employees would prohibit current abuses by employers. My husband is a physician and was required to sign a non-compete clause to gain employment at a medical practice. The practice required a change to the Non-Compete Clause that would require the clause to remain in effect even if the company the medical practice was in terminated or was bought by another party. Shortly thereafter, the practice was sold to a private equity group. The physicians were bound to stay with the new private equity group owners or move away from their homes. The Non-Compete Clause restricted the doctors from practicing medicine 10 miles from any location that the practice has an office, even if the individual doctor did not practice in that office. The agreement effectively prohibited a doctor from working in over half the state. This not only hurts the doctor and his or her family, increases costs (as the analysis in the preamble states), but also impacts the doctor's patients. By forcing the doctor to leave the state to continue to practice medicine, the patients lose their continuity of medical care. Those against the new regulation might claim that banning the non-complete clause in employee agreements will negatively impact their willingness to train employees. They may argue that why invest in someone if they can just leave and work for a competitor. However, if all employers are subject to the same non-complete clause rule, perhaps they would pay their employees better and treat them better to encourage them to stay working for the employer. The employer would have an incentive to treat the employees better in the workplace because they knew the employee could look for a job at a competitor."

David	"Encore Global is an event services company that has previously bought up most other event companies and then forced all to sign a robust non-compete which specifically names all the other left event companies. These no competes have restricted these event industry employees from making a living or forcing them to move their selves and families. It has removed their ability to gain a better wage. It is unfair, unethical and simply wrong. They basically said sign or leave scaring these wage earners. I assume they would lose in court, but these employees can't afford to fight Encore Global / Blackstone in court. Please look into non-competes and let's get rid of them to level the playing field."
John	"I am in a favor of ending the non compete clause. I am a veterinary specialists practicing for more than 20 years. I have seen how the veterinary industry has change from a service oriented industry to a monopoly by veterinary corporations that only care about profits. Since they have non compete clauses in their contracts and control the market, veterinarians are force to work for them and when they realize that the working conditions of corporate do not align with their values, etc they can not leave as they have a non compete clause. Is more of a scare tactic, as I don't believe that they will hold in court, most physicians do not have the energy or money to fight big corporations. I believe that a non compete should protect against employees taking secret info from their employers, but as physicians we are taking only our talents. I know of at least 10 physicians which have been out of work for 2 years or working on some less than optimal jobs, driving 90 minutes one way everyday while waiting for their non competes to expire. America was stablished on free enterprise and freedoms and this is contrary to it. It only benefits big corporations, which acquire practices and change the culture, increased prices significantly and leave salaries stagnant while increasing their profit margins. Employees are left with little options due to the non compete clauses. Any how I do not believe that this should be accepted as a practice, providing advantages to the employer and no benefit whatsoever for the employees."
Paula	"The Government should include sub-contractors too! No company should be allowed to hinder any person from working and making a living or improving their lives and income! Government needs to act now and get this into law as soon as possible!"
Quinn	"I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help trillions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements I personally was bound by a non - compete agreement over fifteen year ago that delayed my career prospects and pulled me out the industry was planning to work in. I am in a different career path due to this. I find these agreements unnecessary and abusive in most instances. They depress wages and are anti - capitalistic."
Wil	"I agree with a plan to no longer allow employers to require employees to sign and honor a non-compete agreement. I believe this change is long overdue. The non-compete rule completely contradicts the values and freedoms that the right-to-work protection affords our American work force. Companies that directly exploit their

	employees' contributions, such as contractors, should especially be restricted from interfering with those employees' self-obtained opportunities. Consumers are responsible for seventy percent of our economy. Shrinking a company's customer base doesn't limit the economy. Owner- operator businesses can deliver a better-quality service to their customers. Workers and owner-operators directly help grow the economy, not single owners retaining large cash for extravagant, privileged ego driven lifestyles. A ban on the non-compete clauses would greatly benefit our workforce and in turn our economy."
Euge	"Hello, I recently graduated with my Master's degree and joined an amazing company. In the midst of my new hire papers, there was a Non-Compete agreement which requires I don't work at another health company fur ONE YEAR after leaving this one. I only know public health-- what else could I do? Despite contacting HR for clarification, I was told that the NCA is required for employment-- end of conversation. I signed because I had no other job prospects and this was exactly the field I wanted. Unfortunately since starting, I have noticed people have been "stuck" in their same position for 10-20 years. They have grown tired of their same position, but the company doesn't have space for promotions. . . only "lateral moves" as they call it. I make a great salary, but only because I'm married with no kids and no mortgage; yet my coworkers with families and homes, who have been there for 10+ years make a comparable pay to mine. They have nowhere else in healthcare where they can go work, and my company knows that. This is one story of many. I have come to be nervous of my next steps because I also don't want to be in this desk fur over 10 years. However, there are similar stories of employees with much less gain than myself: minimum wage employees who have no grounds for negotiation because they are dispensable, beauticians who can't quit because they would have to lose their loyal clients, practiced workers who can't branch out on their own, doctors and vets who are contracted to stay at their office despite the needs for them at other hospitals. Non-Compete Clauses are not harmless. We need our government to side with the free market and the employee over big business. Without NCAs, companies will further invest in and care for their employees because that's what a free market demands. Employee satisfaction will go up, pay will increase, and knowledge and experience will be circulated. Please, follow in the footsteps of the early courts of Europe and vote to remove and annul NCAs. They don't accomplish anything that NDAs can't protect except harm to the employee and consumer."
Marina	"Highly in favor of this proposed rule. As a salesperson who was pressured into signing one very early in my career, just as I was starting to achieve success within the company, I feel trapped. It was imposed on me after a 4 years of employment and became a condition of my continued employment and earned commissions. As my agreement stands (and is enforceable in Georgia), in order to earn a more competitive living in this industry, I would have to take 2 years off my profession to "lawfully" improve my career. I am in my prime canting years and the business that I'm in is ALL I know how to do, having been with the company for 18 years. In my opinion, non-solicits of clients is a fair middle round to protect employers without holding employees handcuffed and limiting them from working in the industries and doing the jobs they know. In my agreement the non-compete is still valid even if I am terminated, which should be illegal. Furthermore, I reside in a state where I can be terminated for no cause. This feels incredibly one-sided to the employer- the company can fire me for no reason and hold me to a 2 year non-compete in the only industry I know? Please pass this ban across the US so that everyday people like me-- without access to "trade secrets" -- can prosper in America."

David	"I think this would be a step forward in not only improving worker's ability to improve his/her profession but also eliminate the stress that the non-compete enforces when stuck in a toxic work place."
Melissa	"Noncompete clauses are onerous and seem to have no place in a free market."
Kenneth	"I am a Home Instead Franchise owning 3 franchises and employing over 280 individuals in the community. I am writing you to discuss how the noncompete agreement that I was required to sign in connection with my franchise agreement negatively affects my business. In August 2021 Home Instead, Inc was purchased by Honor Technology, Inc-a private equity/venture capital backed entity. I had no say in that purchase and was not informed of it until after it happened. Honor is attempting to fundamentally change our franchise-franchisor relationship and business mode in way that I can't support. I am now in a involuntary contractual relationship with an entity that I do not choose and would prefer not to be . But because of the NONCOMPETE agreement , I effectively am unable to leave the relationship, even when the term of my existing franchise agreement ends. Since last I signed what was already and oppressive one-sided, franchise agreement, the franchisor has removed its obligation to provide franchises with any support. Additionally, the new franchisor has announced that it intends to change our royalty from 5% to a 4 % to 7 % range, shorten the term of the franchise agreement from 10 to 5 years, raised performance standards, require us to provide monthly financial statements and charge us a $500 technology fee, even though it has not provided us with any new technology. I do not support these changes. I have two choices when my franchise agreement ends. I must renew my contract on completely new, non-negotiable terms or, because of the non- compete agreement, I must completely ,eave a business that I have spend 26 years building. If I choose the latter, the noncompete clause in my franchise agreement requires me to walk away from my existing business, and severely limits my ability to create or own another similar business. The economic penalty of not renewing is just overwhelming, thereby forcing me to renew with an entity and agree to terms that I would not otherwise do. I ask that you consider banning the post-contract non-compete clauses in franchise agreements."
Jane	"As a physician , I was unable to hire another physician because she worked 9 miles away from my clinic. When my lawyer told me he had changed practices and I could still use his services, Ile had relocated to a practice in the same neighborhood. The rules should be the same for everybody, However, some physicians are so threatened by an employee that leaves, they will not sign a contract without a non-compete clause. I VOTE for NO non-compete clauses allowed--to even the playing field."
Austin	"It is vital to ban Non-Complete Clauses as it limits American's from growing in a career where they may now have current opportunities in their current situation. In opposition, a company should write up a Non-Disclosure if information they feel is a competitive advantage is vital to their success, but do not limit people from taking a better opportunity for their on personal and career growth for American's futures."

kathryn	"I support the non-compete rule. I was forced to sign a non-compete contract 20 years ago. I deeply resented it. I believe it's un-American to allow powerful companies to limit the common person's freedom."
Sean	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I've worked in IT for most of my adult life. I can't recall the last job that I retained that upon being hired and filling in all my new hire paperwork that didn't include a noncompete. I've been lucky enough that I've been able to move within about three different verticals so never had to test a noncompete, but as I get more specialized and the market insists on certain specializations instead of generalists it's only a matter of time before I might have to run afoul of a noncompete to put food on the table for my family. At least the level of career I'm at it CAN make sense to have a noncompete (though a NDA would probably be a better fit) I can see no reason why a fast food worker, sales clerk at a retail outlet, or similar level of staff should be saddled with a noncompete. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements or at the very least restricts them to a very narrowly defined range of uses."
Joshua	"Non-compete clauses only serve the businesses, and importantly hospitals/health systems that require them at the detriment of hard working workers, communities, patients and consumers. This practice is anti-free market, and anticompetitive. Non-compete clauses should be ended immediately accross all sectors."
Earl	"As a physician , I am for this new proposed ban. The need to release physicians who have life changes, that are sometimes not necessarily due to the physician changing positions or jobs but a spouse or family member, crucial. Larger health systems for years have made it difficult for physicians to ascertain work, and the process by which to release physicians from non-compete clauses has been non-existent and rather difficult Large health systems also have more resources and more physicians that their patients can see if one physician leaves. Easing up these restrictions would help physicians be able to more easily ascertain positions when life changes happen. This has been evident during the COVID-19 pandemic when physicians were needed to help staff other hospitals and practices to facilitate with the response to COVID-19. I'm happy to be called to discuss this because it is necessary and limits physicians who are sometimes trying to move on and not take resources or patients from a current practice, hospital, or health system."
Ram	"Please make this happen. I am a republican and conservative and non competes are the worst fun of contracts specifically designed to lower workers rights and limit the free market that drives the economy. Any true republican would see limiting a persons freedom to get a new job so the existing employer can limit their choices and enslave them to keep working a job they don't want is wrong. If they want that

Quratulain	"I am a primary care physician and geriatrician who has been negatively impacted by non-compete clauses numerous times while working for various healthcare systems in the past 15 years that I have been practicing medicine. I have worked at healthcare systems where non-compete distances range from 15 to 30 miles. It is also note worthy that as many healthcare systems in USA own and operate numerous healthcare centers in numerous parts of the town, the mileage requirements apply to any healthcare center of XYZ Healthcare System, which often forces a clinician to either take a new job some 60- 80 miles away from their residence or take a job at the government healthcare system. Numerous healthcare systems also have complicated clauses that prevent physicians from working for healthcare systems that operate under certain value-based payment models. In times of shortage of primary care and geriatric medicine specialists, excessive burnout of clinicians, and their mass exodus from clinical medicine, this clause surely adds excessive burden on a burnt-out clinician who might be exploring alternative job options. Physicians' employment contracts generally specify that physicians are barred from inviting their patients to join them at the new practice/employer site. Therefore, non-compete does not add extra layer of protection for healthcare systems trying to prevent physicians from taking their patients with them when leaving a job."
Diane	"I was downsized from a medical device company in 2013. I was a Sales Representative and was not able to apply to any competitors such as Bayer and J and J because of a non compete. I had spent 13 years working for a Diabetes Product company, but was not able to use that experience to get a job with a company that also made diabetic medical products. I got a job with a pharmaceutical company, with less vacation and much less compensation. I ended up retiring earlier than I planned."
Flaviu	"Noncompetes without a fully-paid garden leave provision are unfair to workers and a product of uneven bargaining power. I'm in favor of this rule."
Harsha	"As a physician, non-compete clauses are overly draconian and unnecessary. There are no trade-secrets at risk and serves no purpose other than to give employers undue power over their employees"

Uday	"I want to express my support for removing the non compete. Any objections to this are driven by corporate greed. Please do the right thing."
Lisha	"I support banning non-compete clauses. Those clauses keep workers (including physicians) trapped in unfulfilling jobs making lower wages than they should while many hospital CEOs reap massive profits. Please ban non-competes and help to level the playing field for all workers."
Timothy	"Non-complete clauses are terrible for American workers and professionals alike. They keep wages low and professionals in undesirable positions because they can't move. I've seen this recently by my employer who threatened workers with wage cuts and reminded them that they can work any other hospital within a reduces distance and even in unrelated sub specialties sighting competition. This is outrageous and I fully support the abolishment of non complete clauses! Thank you FYC"
S Michael	"I am an 'At Will' Employee at a multi-national tech. corporation, and a 'Non-Complete Agreement' is part of our Employee Handbook as a standard feature. New employee's somehow already have enough critical business knowledge of our corporation that them moving to a competitor would impact our business. Obviously, the only consideration for signing this non-compete is the previously mentioned At-Will employment, and the non-compete we were directed to sign included text instructing that failure to sign was a the same as quitting. Clearly the purpose of this non-compete is not to protect the corporations business or clients, but levied as a way to control and discourage employee mobility, as a ready threat and means control on employee actions, and never offered with good faith compensation for the risk the employee is taking on. Since these agreements are presumed to be legal in all states, all burden would be on the employee to prove the non-complete invalid, and existing case law in my state tells us that an hourly, at will employee with no distinctive skills can certainly be held to such a non-compete despite the non-complete having no compensation and inconsistent enforcement under the umbrella of an employee with vital skills (like say a plumber at a plumbing company, American Plumbing Professionals, Inc. v. ServeStar, LLC)."
Courtney	"I am fully in support of eliminating am employers ability to require a non-compete as a condition of employment. These agreements limit the ability of individuals to grow in their chosen field by trapping them in positions where they have no opportunities to advance. Additionally, they hinder the ability of organizations to recruit and hire seasoned professionals."
Michael	"I support the elimination of non compete agreements for employees as they eliminate the ability of a person to earn a living in the field the individual is an expert at. There are many employers that are eager to destroy a person financially through the court system if they leave employment for a better opportunity or even self employment. I was one of those people and through the court system I was subject to a more than 6 figure judgement and an even longer non compete period because I started a "competing" company in my field of expertise. I'm essentially stuck in a job that is financially inadequate for an extended period by a judgment from a court in the state the company is incorporated in, it's not even the state I live in. The courts overwhelmingly rule in favor of employers because those employers can afford expensive lawyers where the former employee most often cannot. I am in favor of former employees being barred from utilizing trade secrets but do not support non competition agreements for former employees. Competition in business is great for the economy because it keeps companies from over priced services by allowing the consumer different options of whom to do business with. Former employees bound by these non competes often face financial ruin by the employer and courts because of the employees inability to earn a living in their field. This in turn could also result in personal bankruptcy, dependence on government handouts due to the financial injury inflicted by a non compete agreement etc. I urge the FTC to do the right thing for employees in the country so they can get back to work in the fields they're successful in. Corporate executives however should have a period where they are prohibited from competing should they leave a company or be removed from a company. Just because an individual leaves a company shouldn't exclude them from working in their field for 6, 12, 18 months or more. I personally being affected by a non compete agreement and being sued over the non compete agreement has essentially wiped out the money I had saved for retirement, I will now be forced to work probably until I the due to the court case and amount I've had to pay with the judgement. My field of expertise is as a residential and commercial paint salesman, yes a painter! People in the construction industry most often don't have the financial resources to have an attorney look over a non compete agreement, after all they're looking for a job and have been offered a job "it" they sign one of these agreements. They don't realize the implications of these agreements if they leave that employer because they simply cannot afford to have these non compete agreements reviewed. Once they're sued by violating the agreement its financial ruin almost 100 percent of the time because they don't have the deep pockets the company has."

P	"I took a job at an academic center in Atlanta because of family obligations. My non-compete is so broad that all of Atlanta is essentially out of the question for me to switch jobs. I have not been happy at my job but there are no options for me to switch besides leaving the city. Because we don't have a choice, our employer pays less compared to market value, provides very little support and essentially keeps us trapped because there is no alternative for most people working at this hospital. As a physician, we have no flexibility whatsoever to choose our own path, our first non-compete basically determines the rest of our life. This is a terrible rule and absolutely anti- competitive and absolutely leads to taking advantage of physicians by trapping them. It is incredible how little competition there is in the medical field. It is essential for the medical field to become a competitive, market-based field that focuses on best care for the patients that the non-compete is eliminated."
David	"Inclusion of physicians and healthcare organizations in the ruling on restricting non-compete clauses is critical. Physicians increasingly have less bargaining power in contract negotiation, and patients are suffering as a result. Healthcare has transmitted from the days when physicians were largely self-employed. According to a 2022 study by the Physician Advocacy Institute, 74% of physicians are employed by a healthcare or corporate entity. Enforcement of noncompete clauses in physician employment contracts (Alen forces the physician and their family to move out of the community they have been serving, and patients in that community also lose their access to that physician. These large healthcare organizations wield noncompete clauses to restrict economic mobility of physicians and artificially suppress the competitive labor market. As healthcare organizations continue to consolidate into

	corporatized conglomerations, the skew of power between employer and employee becomes even more unbalanced. Few people have the ability to front the attorney fees involved in litigation brought forth by a large corporate entity. In addition, physicians owe a duty to their patients, not their employer, and a noncompete clause serves as an unethical deterrent for the physician to advocate for their patients if being a whistleblower means that they will not only lose their job but potentially have to uproot their family, sell their home, and relocate to an entirely new area. Furthermore, an unhappy physician who is resentful of their employer but unable to leave is also clearly not in the interests of patients at large. I urge the FTC to do what's right for both physicians and patients and restrict noncompete clauses for physicians."
Hamer	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people."
Spencer	"Iain strongly in favor of banning non-competes. The companies that require them have neither the fortitude or the common courtesy to care for its employees and ALWAYS revert back to bullying tactics to enforce their rule of law. instead of doing the right thing for the right reason they merely hid behind some facade of law that is both one sided in its application and unfair in its ability to stifle economic progress for the worker."
Melanie	"I think it is unfair for an employee to sign a non-compete clause and prevent themselves from finding work in a similar field from their current or previous job. That feels like it is essentially black balling employees and runs counter to the idea of a free market where a worker can market themselves."
Ashley	"As a physician, I can say the non-compete severely restricts access of physicians to patients and patients to physicians. It was always about money and control. Now, when medicine is crumbling and well-trained, experienced physicians are hard to find, it is more important than ever to have a larger pool of doctors available to patients. Many people move around in their careers without having to uproot their families, buy new homes and leave their communities. Why are physicians penalized for such a thing? Non-competes are just another deterrent to practicing medicine today. Please end non- compete clauses and help patients, doctors and families."
Sharat	"Non- competes are unethical and immoral, especially in healthcare. Communities lose trusted physicians everyday because they have to leave the areas they used to work in and built relationships. Them is no medical or ethical rationale for including them in contracts."
Laura	"Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare, particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare options. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and

	potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Additionally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. These inherently unjust policies do not apply to the vast majority of other professionals. Physicians deserve to be able to leave a position without penalty and without having to uproot their families. In summary, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities."
William	"My name is William. I am a new dentist practicing in Georgia. Ever since graduating non-compete laws have plagued my search for work and prevented me from taking jobs that were more suited to my skill set. In respect to my role as a health care provider, these non-compete clauses are reducing competition in the dental field, leading to less consumer choice in dental providers and reduced access to care. It is my greatest wish that they are found wholly illegal and permanently made illegal. I speak for many new dentists entering the workforce with these same difficulties and challenges created by non-compete clauses."
Stephanie	"Non-compete clauses violate the essence of the free market and limit the options of the consumer to business that can't handle competition. If these businesses offer quality services and goods, a little healthy competition won't impact their bottom line. Please ban non-compete clauses. Thank you."
Richard	"Good afternoon, I am currently an employee affected by a non-compete clause. This prevents me from directly applying to the company that hired my current company. Because of this I am unable to get a position that allows me the opportunity to work from home currently I drive 37 miles one way to work, it also prevents me from a higher pay rate, and other benefits that are provided to direct hires. From a financial standpoint this means I pay $150+ per week just to get to and from my place of employment. I love the job I do and truly enjoy the people i work for, however, from a purely financial standpoint this limits my earning potential and the ability to offer a better quality of life for my family. As a someone who lives in a rural area I am constantly reminded of my choice to have a lower cost of living by being forced to pay in other ways. I wish I could afford to live in the city and had I have known i could have applied directly and worked from home I would not be where I am at today locked into an archaic agreement that forces me to put a corporations desires above my needs as a productive member of society. Thank you for taking the time to read my comment and I hope the FTC considers both sides and compromise regarding non-competes. As sonic non compete clauses are necessary for the protection of intellectual property and proprietary applications. I would hope that non competes are abolished while simultaneously strengthening a companies rights to what they have created."
Kurt	"This amendment would help protect workers livelihoods and their right to work."

Jessica	"Please eliminate non competes for physicians and other healthcare workers. We should not have to fear losing our place in our community when we stand up against inequities in healthcare."
Carson	"This is wonderful bill for sales people that have a specific skill set. Please pass this bill as large multi- billion corporations are holding workers hostage with non-competes. Thank you!"
Stephanie	"Please pass this bill! Non-Competes hurt the working class person. Large companies can change compensation, policy and procedures, but still enforce non-competes. This hinders workers from moving on and doing what they know best for months and even years. My biggest fear is not being able to provide for my family and non-competes can put a major hardship on earnings. Thank you for allowing comments!"
Talyah	"Please ban non-competes. They are predatory and grossly unfair."
David	"This is awesome news how this non-compete clause has been held over the heads of individuals as if in total submission to the corporations. they hold this noncompete clause in the even you leave, stay outside 25 miles or you will never be paid the value of your agency if they "tl-HNK" you may have violated- sometimes without proof-but they still hold you hostage until one can prove innocence. I support You enacting this to allow persons to further their career without penalty. When captive, they reduce your commissions, change the way you are paid and structure procedures to make it harder to continue. PLEASE_Please set us free, not to hurt anyone but to help ourselves be compensated for our efforts."
Rosemary	"I think these clauses should be banned. I agree that it limits mobility and costs workers earnings"
Olivia	"My name is Olivia and I work in television news . I was forced to leave my hometown of Columbus, Ohio, where I grew up and lived for 24 years when my contract was up at Spectrum News 1 in Columbus due to a non-compete. Even after fulfilling the requirements of my 2 year contract, I had a six- month non compete and could not work at any of the other stations in the area. As a result, in order to stay in my career field, I had to leave my family and take my tax dollars, rent money, and other economy-boosting purchases out of Ohio due to the non compete. These agreements only help major corporations, not the states, and especially not the people they affect. Please consider getting rid of them."
Cherise	"As a veterinarian , we are often subjected to very restrictive non-compete agreements. If a practice changes hands, doesn't do well financially, destroys their reputation, doesn't pay what you agreed or doesn't honor the terms of your employment, then you have no nearby options. One of my colleagues has been forced to endure a job at a practice that is abusive and doesn't appreciate or support her so she won't have to drive 30 miles away each way from her infant and toddler. I had to change states to effectively avoid violation of my non-compete. Also, since many veterinary practices are now becoming corporate-owned, we individual vets don't have the money to fight corporate legal entities over non-compete agreements and they use this against us. This is just a barbaric tool used to manipulate professional workers who aren't in unions and control markers and wages."

Janice	"Please get this rule in place. This rule affects my business keeping me tethered to companies who pay me less than market rate and doesn't pay me within the timeframe of my contract. Please get this rule in place so I can manage my business directly with referral sources instead of through another entity. Thank you."
Tonya	" I strongly support the FTC's proposed rule banning non-competes for all workers. As a woman financial advisor in a male dominated field, and also impeded by a non-compete agreement, I would like to see this ban be upheld. In my experience, the firm I was with changed owners. In order to stay where I had been the last 14 years, the new owner required a non-compete. The owner was threatened by the relationships that I built and nurtured over the years. Instead of seeing me as an asset, he tried to break my confidence and push me out the door. I was afraid to leave because I knew that meant completely starting over in an industry that I have been in most of my adult life. I endured a volatile workplace for three years because I knew that the non-compete would keep me from working in my local area within the same industry. The client relationships that I built and nurtured for 17 years were no longer accessible to me. In addition to losing the ability to reach out to previous clients, it was also written that I could not work within 60 miles of the business. My workplace was local to me but not to my employer. Ultimately, he terminated my employment and I am currently in the rebuilding phase after almost two decades. I would like to see the power removed from the (for lack of a better word) bullies of the workplace and returned to the workers. Once again, I support the ban on non-competes in the workforce."
Luke	"My noncompete status as an associate with a former employer is holding me back, for a full year, from providing improved and expanded services to benefit my relationships. The agreement also harms the clients, who face an unnecessary change in their services with a large organization who cares minimally, or the (unrealistic) prospect of waiting a year to be able to engage with me again. The employer continues to gnaw substantially while I'm prevented from getting a start with my own relationships and efforts, held to the mercy of lawyers. Please help the little guy!"
Glenda	"As a physician I am delighted to see this proposed rule. Do not cave to the AHA lobby and exclude physicians from this rule. Patients have a right to have access to the best doctors, not lose that access because a hospital is afraid of competition."
Evelyn	"Non Compete Clauses are detrimental to those in a skilled trade and should be prohibited for the wellbeing of all citizens."
Cody	"I believe a non-compete clause was created to hurt the employee but retained no real power in controlling the working class but was used as a scare tactic to cause people to conform to the company and benefit it in all regards. The problem is it doesn't benefit a capitalistic environment that supports a working class that has the ability to fight for its rights in working in its field of study or experience."

Mike	"I am in full support of the proposed new rule. I personally think my situation would be a "case study" for why these agreements should not exist. I am a seasoned veteran of 46 years in my industry. I work for a 5th generation family owned company (-- $50MM annual sales) that unfortunately each generation has grown less able to run the business. This has forced them to recruit management outside the family. The decisions the new management has made has resulted in continued loss of business (>$2MM so far) with many unhappy customers. I have actually had conversations with a few of my 20+ year customers about how the company is "ruining my reputation". These customers are willing to sign documents supporting our situations. I have competitors that would love to hire me and I also have the resources to start my own company. However the non-compete I have with this company keeps me from seeking employment in the only industry I know or what I prefer, starting my own company. I certainly hope this happens."
Jeffery	"I wholeheartedly support the FTC's Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) proposal! On January 1, 2023, I am finely freed from a two-years noncompete that severely limited me from a 30+ years career as an Executive in a specialized field. To cut costs, I was let go without cause during COVID. My severance of six-months, plus, a small year-end bonus, did not cover the losses of not being able to work for two-years, so my family and I lived off my Social Security, and our savings. Whenever a potential new employment opportunity arose, it quickly faded when they discovered my noncompete. My noncompete was market, customer, and product specific. It is only fair that if an employer demands a noncompete, that they should have to pay their ex-employee fair compensation during the time that they are prohibited in working in their field/fields of expertise. Lastly, if anyone at the FTC would like to discuss this further, please contact me. While I can retire, I continue to enjoy contributing to society and our economy by working I can't imagine not working. I love my job and need the interaction. Thank you for providing me with this opportunity to express my thoughts."
Steve	"I completely support this rule. Non-compete agreements prevent employee mobility, particularly older workers who aren't as able to reinvent themselves in new careers. A 50 year old who has worked in one industry for 25 years is essentially handcuffed to a job if they have a non-compete. In addition, in a strong economy, when salaries are rising, non-competes disincentivizes employers from offering pay increases to employees shackled by a non-compete. The negotiating leverage lies completely with the employer, and hurts the employee in strong job markets. I implore the FTC to ban the practice of non-competes."
Todd	"I believe non competes are used unfairly against employees. Faced with not being able to make a living in their trade due to a non compete, employees are forced to stay with their employer. Costly legal action is threatened by the employer if an employee wants to leave. Non competes should only be used under certain circumstances with short time frames."
Elizabeth	"As a female physician, I work a job that has no trade secrets but I am bound to my current job by a non-compete clause. I also know that female physicians are systematically underpaid compared to their male counterparts. We are less likely to want to uproot our families in search of better paying positions. These factors compound the effect of non-compete clauses on our salaries. They depress our wages, reduce our opportunities within our careers and communities, and are anti-competitive. The practice of medicine is a relatively standardized one. I have no trade secrets to share, only my personal talents as a physician and I should be able to seek out career opportunities as I choose. Please eliminate non compete clauses."

John	"It is important that American workers are able to provide for themselves and their families in these times, and that newer competitors are able to apply the right talent and tools in the interest of their own and American commercial success. Non-compete clauses in my personal experience have been applied liberally and as a matter of course, without respect to specifics at the point of hire where the employee usually has little to no negotiating power and where the employee's role may turn out to be very different from what was advertised. I suggest an exercise in specificity with respect to the idea of perfect competition in the labor market. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Eligibility. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. At the beginning of the term of employment, employers must justify unusual measures that will be taken to transfer knowledge, skills, certifications, or relationships to the client. b. At the end of the term of employment, employers must justify and evidence the specific knowledge, skills, certifications or relationships transferred and their material amount as part of the role actually executed and specifically quantify them. c. The employee should have the ability to buy out the non-compete at the cost of the investment, not its future value, per a formula. 2. Solicitation <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. Employees develop personal relationships with their colleagues and clients, which is a healthy form of doing business that encourages productivity as well as honesty. My suggestion is that specific names and types of work are laid out in non-competes. b. In the circumstance where a company has been unsuccessful and employees are leaving voluntarily, many solicitation agreements are written in such a way that helping to a former colleague find a job, even with a completely different employer, fall within the terms of a non-compete. In circumstances like these, the perceived nature of a non-compete is dangerously close to price fixing or cartel behavior in the labor market. If specific behaviors were identified, rather than the generic legal terms of "direct or indirect" then this clause is likely to have a much narrower meaning, which is in the interest of the employee and the broader labor market. 3. Applicability and Time <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. The periods of time set out in most non-competes are completely arbitrary and applied without any consideration or justification. These cannot be standard per employee but must be applied via a formula in relation to the eligibility criteria previously laid out, agreed, and negotiated at the end of the term of employment. 4. Enforcement <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. Perhaps the most important and inequitable part of a non-compete is that the employer is always possessed of more resources and interest to enforce a non-compete legally. Aside from a non-compete laying out the circumstances in which it would be enforced, it should also lay out the means of enforcement. b. There should be a means for independent arbitration. For example, if the potential business at stake is worth $10,000 of haircuts, it doesn't make sense for both parties to go to court over the matter and pay high legal fees and consume the capacity of the American court system. In many circumstances, it would be better for the employee to be able to agree or disagree, negotiate, adjust their behavior, and buy out any agreed interest over time. c. I would note that it seems better for employers to bear the burden of specificity in defining the scope of a non-compete up front during a period of comity rather than the US court system, lawyers, and employees having to define these during a period of conflicting interest. If an exercise in structured thought and specificity is conducted, then the perceived meaning of non-competes by employees is likely to be clearly aligned against the success of the American economy or else so narrow that they are not worth negotiating and applying."

Jennifer	"While I understand the value of non-compete clauses for highly paid executives or entrepreneurs with specialized trade information, it seems ridiculous for these to be legally applied to most workers, especially if the worker is laid off, fired, or has their hours cut significantly. There should be some sort of guidelines for who is eligible, just like there are guidelines about who can be salaried/exempt and other worker protections."
Carmen	"Noncompete clauses are important, but should not be onerous. For instance, noncompete clauses for many employed physicians prevent those physicians from working in their specialty anywhere reasonably close to where they live if they leave that job. Physicians cannot just switch specialties on a whim, so this type of noncompete clause is unreasonably onerous and should not be allowed. However, a Physician Assistant or Nurse Practitioner might join a specialty practice, learn new and valuable skills, then want to leave that practice to compete in the same specialty and geographic area. Businesses should be protected from that type of act. Physician Assistants and Nurse Practitioners CAN change specialties at any time, so prohibiting them from performing specific duties related to a medical specialty they've learned in that prior job would not be onerous, as they can literally go work in any medical setting, even in a specialty they've never worked in previously. A noncompete to protect the practice that trained them to perform specialty duties encourages such training to continue, encourages physicians to continue to hire PAs and NPs, and does not limit the NP or PA from working as a NP or PA at all. Please consider careful language to protect private practice physicians. Thank you."
Ken	"Companies have ways of protecting their intellectual property without requiring non-compete clauses. With very few exceptions, such as corporate officers, they should be banned. My personal experience: I joined IBM in 1977. I signed an agreement requiring that I turn over all inventions created during employment to the company. If a patent was issued, it would belong to IBM but my name would be on it as the inventor. Furthermore, I was required to not disclose to anyone outside the company confidential information. IBM was very careful to classify such information. Between these 2 provisions, IBM protected its trade secrets and IP. I was not required to sign a non-complete clause. If I left, I could use my experience and knowledge elsewhere as long as it wasn't based on confidential assets or future product plans. I retired after almost 40 years. I don't know if IBM's current practice is to require non-compete clauses, but it is clear that they are NOT necessary to protect the company's interest. The only purpose of them is to handcuff employees, restricting the free market for their labor. Only the very top leadership in the company might need to sign these agreements due to their having access to a wide array of business plans and intelligence. But the average worker in the professional and non-professional ranks, these agreements are completely unfair and unnecessary."
Lisa	"I've been a sales professional for over 30 years and every company I have worked with required a non-compete. My current non-compete is for two years! This has hindered my career growth. Non-competes rules need revised and made fair for both parties."

Ralph	"Proposed § 910.1(c) would exempt an entity that is not "organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members." This exemption should be reconsidered and eliminated, at least as far as large healthcare organizations are concerned. Many employers of physicians and other professionals such as nurses, therapists, and technicians are very large hospital systems which use non-compete clauses to limit the ability of their employees to bargain for improved working conditions, better pay, and higher quality patient care. These hospital systems, while nominally organized as non-profits, often have revenues in the tens or hundreds of millions of dollars, much of which is derived from taxpayers in programs such as Medicare, Medicaid, Tricare, and Federal employee health insurance. Their top executives are compensated lavishly. If non-profits are to enjoy some exemption from the FTC proposed rule, consider setting a threshold of annual revenue, such as $10 million dollars, above which the employer would have to comply with the ban on employment non-compete clauses. The remainder of the proposed rule barring non-compete clauses is well reasoned, very much needed and strongly supported by me."
Adam	"Thank you for proposing this rule. Americans must not be blocked from using their talents to make a living."
Jasmine	"If you believe in a free market, you must believe in a free market for labor as well. The imposition of non-compete clauses on low level employees is an outrageous violation of the free market in labor, and stifles the ability of ordinary Americans to fairly trade their labor at its market value. Of course large corporations are lobbying to keep their power over employees by locking them into one employer as though they were indentured servants. You must ignore corporate lobbying and restore our right to freely sell our labor on an open free market. Restrict the use of non-compete clauses to high-level executives who are actually responsible for creating and managing sensitive trade secrets."

	"Television uses "non-competes" in there contracts with employee ALL THE TIME! Once employed, certain positions have no choice but to sign a non compete as terms of employment and because the entire industry does it! New and old time employees are forced to stay until their contract is expired, then offered only a measly increase. They are not permitted to look for other related work until the contract is over. Then its too late because they're unemployed. The worst part is that you cannot get another job in the same industry for up to six month to a year or whatever your non compete says. Nexstar Television hires young people out of college and says they train them in exchange for low wages. The problem is, they stay at the low wages (often about $20 an hour) and they remain at that pay for years with less than a 3% annual raise. You may be stuck with a low paying job for decades because you are not permitted to look for another job!" — Terry S
	"Non competes are unfair and unfairly limit competition by limiting where good workers can work. They should be illegal on all levels from hourly workers to salaried professionals. I am a veterinarian and have had to limit where and how I work due to unfair non-competes in contracts." — Bonnie N
	"I am a pediatrician in a small rural town. With the current non-compete clause, if I have an issue with my employer, my options are to either concede to their demands or bend in the community that I'm trying to serve. It makes it hard to buy a home and serve a rural community what's the retaining autonomy and choice. If they're not compete was eliminated, it would be greatly beneficial to me and the rural community said I'm trying to serve." — Azriel
	"I am a massage therapist. After a year of working at my current job my employer required us all to sign a non-compete agreement. They never directly said "sign this or lose your job" but it felt implied. I would not have taken the job if the agreement had been presented when hiring, but now I rely on the work and have built a client base there. The agreement states that I cannot do massage outside of the spa, at all, ever. Now or in future. I signed out of fear for my work and with the hope that the wording was so broad that it would not hold up in court. But I now fear the agreement will come back to haunt me, and I don't see in the first place how it's fair or even legal for an employer to in effect claim ownership of my career, in a profession where it is rare for a massage therapist to work only in one location, as every therapist I know pursues as many private clients as they can acquire. I hope non- competes are banned, thus freeing me from die fear of lawsuits that will hang over me for the rest of my career if they aren't." — Nile C.

Dylan	“Non-competes go against the grain of the industrious opportunities that inspired the development of this nation. I work in an industry stifled by non-compete agreements which SIGNIFICANTLY hinder the US DOD flexibility through large contractors (which are the backbone of research, development, manufacturing, operations and maintenance services) make it very very challenging for knowledgeable people like myself to pursue opportunities that would provide small business profits to communities (instead of corporations), taxes (which large corporations are geared to avoid more easily), and put more $$$ spent on contract in getting procurements streamlined and actual work out the door (anyone who's worked at a small business knows how easy it is to get work done, anyone who's worked at a larger corporation knows how much process and waste exists). non compete agreements hurt our country and have personally made my life challenging.”
Shannon	“I support a ban on non-compete clauses. Thank you!”
Esther	“Non-compete clauses restrict die practice of medicine . Now is the time to allow providers to find the work that suits them best -because many are leaving healthcare behind altogether.”
Bonnie	“Dear FTC, I am a young Family Med Physician, recently graduated from residency. I am against noncompetes because they force physicians to stay at bad jobs, or force them to uproot their families for better opportunities. This is the antithesis of the American Dream. Because I'm a millennial, I'll let this 90 second YouTube video further explain my position on NDAs.”
Janay	“When "non-compete" clauses were first implemented, their purpose was clear: to protect proprietary information that gave an employer an advantage in the marketplace. Such clauses (of 6-to- 12- months duration) prevented other entities from stealing away high-level skill sets and product knowledge. As the Federal Trade Commission is aware, such clauses are now routinely inserted into all kinds of employer-employee contracts--I know people who flip burgers, sweep floors, and serve cocktails who have felt forced to sign such contracts, which would limit their ability to work in an industry for any other employer for a year to two years if they leave their current employer. It is obvious that, in most cases, the non-compete clause is no longer being used for what seemed to be a legitimate purpose and is now being used to trap low-paid, limited-skill workers, especially young workers with few options, in a job by denying them a realistic way out. I have no quarrel with die original purpose of such agreements, but it is clear that their misuse and abuse need to be stopped.”

Anna	"I am a psychotherapist . I support this rule. I have witnessed non-compete clauses to be negatively impactful to the community as it limits mental health care when there is already a crisis shortage of providers. I have also seen non-completes abused by employers as it creates a monopoly over service areas. I believe non-competes go against the basic American ideals of economic freedom."
Vernon	"I don't support the Non-Compete Clause because every service or company should be competitive this what america is about to be compete."
Patrick	"I am in support of the Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM) proposed by the Federal Trade Commission. I am a physician working in Hawaii and local hospitals, medical groups, and private practices apply broad non compete clauses to the contracts to accept employment in the state of Hawaii. Choosing to leave a given employer often requires the physician to seek employment on another island or leave the state entirely. Knowing this, employers are less inclined to provide market appropriate raises in pay, high value employee benefits, enhanced time off, or re-negotiate fair contracts. Many legislature's in our state are aware of the shortage of medical professionals. The high cost of living and remoteness of this location are factors leading many physicians to return to the Mainland US in search of other opportunities. Further, the AMA Code of Ethics does discourage non-compete clauses, commenting, "Covenants-not-to-compete . . . disrupt continuity of care, and potentially deprive the public of medical services. . . . Restrictive covenants are unethical if they are excessive in geographic scope or duration in the circumstances presented, or if they fail to make reasonable accommodation of patients' choice of physician." Each of these factors highlighted by the AMA are relevant to physicians practicing in I Hawaii."
Chihui	"I am in full support of banning non compete. I work as a physician and having a non compete ban would allow me to taker care of patients in my community better."
Brian	"A rule invalidating non compete agreements would be exactly the kind of thing we need to spur innovation and drive up the conditions of the workforce, and to have a more open marketplace for knowledge work. Non competes take up way too much time in the court system as they are essentially unentirceable on unconstitutional grounds. If they were ever really challenged they wouldn't stand up to actual scrutiny."
Shane	"Non-compete clauses are unfair bus's practices that limit economic growth and personal choice. I feel that non-compete clauses should be legally prohibited."
Kristen	"Non-compete clauses should be removed. They give unfair advantages to large hospital corporations compared to individual physician practitioners."
Gail	"I am a registered nurse . I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and hann working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!

	Everyone needs a fair opportunity to challenge positions with lower than standard pay, benefits & working conditions!”
Reed	“I am strongly in support of the banning of non compete clauses throughout the country. Non compete clauses heavily restrict my options to change jobs in my region as a healthcare professional and as such cause high quality providers to either completely leave my region to find better work or stay employed but underpaid or poorly treated. This absolutely compromises the quality of healthcare. Banning non compete agreements is a positive move for workers but also healthcare as a whole.”
Robert	“Non-compete clauses are absolutely ridiculous and need to be outlawed. It is absolutely absurd that it's basically impossible to take advantage of your own knowledge and skills that you've learned from working in an industry at one company and take it to a different company if you've signed one of these. The time limits are arbitrary and unnecessary and the idea of needing these to protect trade secrets is absurd. If someone was intent on spreading trade secrets for a company they used to work for, a noncompete clause isn't going to stop them. There are much easier ways to divulge them than just whispering them to your next employer these days. To make an absurd rule that has actual negative impacts on worker's abilities to utilize their skills in the job market is completely unreasonable. It keeps wages artificially low, stifles innovation, and reduces worker's mobility, especially those in lower skilled jobs. The FTC absolutely needs to ban them as soon as possible and I am firmly in support of such a ban.”
Anonymous	“Non-competes are harmful to access to medical care. Physicians often have these clauses that force them to leave their communities rather than stay to keep caring for patients. They exist even in specialties where there should be no concern about stealing patients away from a practice, like Emergency Medicine. These are the most damaging in smaller communities with fewer physician job options, which are also the ones with the greatest need to draw physicians. Who wants to risk taking a job in a small community when they are forced into a non compete that would lock them out of any other positions if the one job doesn't work out? It's much safer to go to a bigger community with more jobs across a wider distance. Medicine should be about what is best for patients, and these clauses ultimately hurt patients.”
Kelly	“Non-compete agreements are another example of non-abused anticompetitive instruments. Originally designed to protect entrepreneurship, the use of such one-way advantaged 'contracts' have become routine. Employees have no realistic choice in the matter. Thanks for considering a sundown on non-competes. Adam Smith will be smiling upon you.”

	"As an orthodontist practicing over 25 years I would like to share my personal reasons for being in favor of eliminating Non-competes. I sold my business to company 3 years ago. Included in that sale was a 5-year employment agreement with the company along with a 3-year 10-mile non-compete. I agreed to this originally because I expected to be with this company for the rest of my career. Unfortunately the company has become difficult to work with and I find myself wanting to leave. Unfortunately I would have to uproot my family and move to another area altogether in order to continue work in my chosen field. Orthodontics takes 11 years of schooling to receive the degree so obviously working in another field is not what I want to do. I also do not want to move at this stage in my life but that may be the only option due to this non- compete." -Greg
	"Because most employers of yoga teachers do not offer full-time positions (I actually don't know of even one that does), yoga teachers would not be able to earn a living teaching yoga if bound by a non- compete clause." -Sally.
	"I have been working for the same company for the last 16 years. I see competing companies pay better than my current employer, but have been warned by the Regional Operations Manager that I will be sued if I seek employment with them, yet he refuses to match their offer. They openly brag about suing past managers, and knowing they wouldn't win in court but having the financial backing to run up attorney fees." -Daniel
	"I'm a pediatric dentist in Idaho. I joined a corporate dental group. They have 6 offices spread throughout the Treasure Valley. They were terribly disorganized and providing me little support. Predictable patient outcomes were suffering from my perspective. There was a 5 mile radius non compete. They are almost everywhere in the area where I would work. Their noncompete is absolutely preventing not only future business ventures and relationships, but also limiting my ability to provide superior patient experiences." -Dalton

	"I would love to live in a country where we are not bound by non competes. I was raised and worked the first half of my life in California where people were motivated to work hard and in general were rewarded for their hard work. If their working conditions were unacceptable to them and they could find a different employer who could offer them a better job then the employee would move to a place where they felt appreciated. I found that because of this, most employers worked hard to provide as optimal a working environment as possible in order to retain their valuable employees. Then I moved to a state which honored non competes. As is so often the case, I did not realize what I had until I no longer had it. In my new state I found that employers kept employees not so much by good working conditions as by threat of legal action. This impacted not only my own life and lively hood but those of patients I saw in my own practice...I think it would be a wonderful thing to legislate an environment where people were free to pursue the best place to work and not be slaves to a non compete." -Mark

Hugh	"As a medical student enduring increasing tuition costs, declining reimbursement for physicians, and a lack of recourse for advocating for change (i.e., physicians are legally unable to strike to protest workplace conditions and residents who choose to strike or join unions face the prospect of having 4 years of undergraduate education + 4 years of medical school + often more than 4 years of residency going to waste by being dismissed from training), the proposed change to the non-compete clause offers a light in all of the darkness ahead that may one day help myself and other physicians. The opportunity to yield offers from competing hospitals, groups, and practices would not only benefit me personally -- it would enable me to practice the medicine the way I hope to, putting patients first."
C	"I truly appreciate the FTC's review of the Non-Compete Clauses currently being enforced by many businesses across the U.S. Although I understand that there may be certain circumstances where an employer may want to protect the interest(s) of their business, the enforcement, when taken its totality, is a way of suppressing the "freedom" that individuals should have in how, when, are where they practice what they practice. The truth is this - clients/patients/patrons of ANY business should have the freedom to choose who they conduct business with. Likewise, professional working people should also have the freedom to practice their gifts/talents/trades in a way that best suites their customer base without the limitations of "non-compete clauses." I think this whole non-compete clause idea had originally been practiced with good intentions, but became, unfortunately, abused by business owners over the years. Freedom to create and practice in a

Brian	"As a financial professional and advisor with 20 years experience I was ecstatic to hear the proposed changes the FTC is considering regarding abolishing the non-compete clause. My compensation has been severely negatively impacted and large financial firms enriched by me not being able to migrate to financial services companies that would treat me better and more fairly and efficiently manage investment for my clients for whom I am a fiduciary. My client's choices have been taken away and they are not served as well as they could be because I am handcuffed by this non-compete clause and another even more restriction. That is a so-called "Do not solicit" rule. One December in 2011 I was finishing the year reviews with customers and after working for my current brokerage firm for 5 years a "Do not solicit" contract appeared in my inbox. To continue working at my first by January 1st I had to sign an agreement to leave my clients at my current firm and not be able to contact them or ask them if they would like to follow me. If I did I would be a party to a lawsuit and owe damages. Longtime clients would have to find me to re-engage and get help with their investing and I wouldn't be able to help them at another firm for 18 months. Why 18 months? Why not 18 years since its arbitrary and removed the rights of me to earn a living and help investors as the fiduciary I am. I will attach the "Do not solicit" contract I was forced to sign and abide by with 1 weeks notice and ask the FTC to include these types of contracts imposed on Americans and American workers in their efforts to rescind Non-compete clauses and Do not Solicit contracts. Thank you, The Trusted Advisor Attachments rel_support010_cnipo_national (2)_Redacted"
Jared	"I'm a nurse anesthesiologist working in the Boise, Idaho area. The large employers and hospitals here use non-competes to stifle employment competition. I wholeheartedly support the proposed actions to ban noncompete restrictions for all industries. There should not be special provisions for healthcare or non-profit healthcare. These entities can be some of the most abusive in restricting employee freedom."
Dan	"I agree with the proposed changes put forward by the FTC. I believe Non-Compete Agreements are one sided and often entered into when an employee doesn't have a full understanding of the implications the agreement may have on future work opportunities. They should not be enforceable and do more harm than good to the working class."
Elizabeth	"I have had a very vague non-compete placed on me that is phrased "non-compete. 2 yrs. 5 mile radius." I did not sign any agreement adhering myself to it. The lower court judge interpreted that it prohibited me from earning my highest living in the town that I live in and raise my son in. This completely inhibits me from practicing my doctorate and being compensated in dental surgery/dentistry from the town I live, the town my patients live and surrounding towns. It has devastated my livelihood."

Ashwin	" Physicians should absolutely be entitled to the new FTC non-compete rule. They should not be exempt from this needed worker protection as it greatly limits their ability to negotiate their contracts and instead offers large hospital systems an unprecedented advantage over physicians in the marketplace. There is a large increase in physician burnout and allowing the market place to be more free would allow physicians more freedom and flexibility. Additionally, the last time an exemption of this nature was granted by the lobbying from the American Hospital Association (Jung v AAMC 2004) resulted in decades of delay for improving resident physicians' ability for fair wages and benefits; this is still an active struggle today. Please do not make the same mistake again for physicians of today and the future."
Dr Mike	"I am a private practice owner of a veterinary clinic in Boise. Privately owned clinics were predominate in Boise before the pandemic. Now the vast majority are owned by corporations and their non-compete's are driving down the ability to hire associates for my practice. In San Francisco it force many owner/vet's to sell because they could not hire any vet's to work! ! ! Non Compete's can strangle private practice owner's out of business ! ! !"
Erin	"Please end the non-compete Clause rule. as a veterinarian it is an unfair advantage to large practices with deep pockets"
Jason	"I believe that non-competes benefit employers over employees and would strongly recommend removing them as an tool for employers to allow more open market movement and employee incentive driven behaviors over employee restriction behaviors. Strongly supportive of them being prevented."
Barb	"I strongly oppose this non-compete action. It's anti-worker result, if approved, is unconscionable."
Austin	"As a resident in training I fully support this rule. As I am looking for jobs the fact that if my 1st real time employer isn't the right fit for me I therefore have to move to a completely different city is not a fair standard I would have to upend I and my family's life while the employers have no similar consequences. Additionally if they decide they no longer want to work with me for whatever means then suddenly I am not even allowed to work for another employer in the same town only promotes further physician shortages and hurts rural communities."
Courtney	"I love this idea. Non-compete clauses have been abused for far too long and that abuse is only growing. I support this proposed rule and look forward to ending the stifling of labor competition between employers."

Ron	"I am physician in rural Idaho and would be very grateful to not have to deal with non compete clauses. I hope the FTC bans these onerous clauses"
Parker	"Both my community and I have been personally affected by non compete clauses. I work as a trauma, emergency, and critical care surgeon in Boise Idaho . As an employee of one of the two major hospital systems I am prohibited from working at any other hospital or surgery center within 90 miles of my hospital. This non compete harms me as it artificially depresses wages and forces me to move my family if I desire to change jobs. The community is harmed because the other hospitals do not have sufficient specialty surgeons to staff trauma programs and therefore patients are subjected to multiple hospital transfers to obtain proper care. This drives up healthcare costs and in some cases results in worse outcomes for patients as it delays care. If I did not have a non compete clause I could provide trauma and emergency surgery services to multiple hospitals in the community and thereby increase access to health care. I have tried unsuccessfully to negotiate a removal of the clause from my contract including obtaining legal counsel. The attorney felt that there was legal precedence in the state of Idaho that would prevent me from obtaining employment in violation of the non compete clause or the mere threat of litigation could dissuade another hospital from hiring me. Currently I am forced to travel to Washington, Colorado, and Arizona in order to practice medicine to the extent I prefer. This practice forces me to pay additional licensing fees on top of the added travel and lodging costs I incur. As a physician I am frustrated by the many factors out of my control such as rising taxes, lower medical reimbursements and unfair business practices such as non compete clauses- all of which will likely combine to drive me leave the field of medicine earlier than I would like at a time where more critical care providers and surgeons are needed to care for an aging population and under served communities not fewer."
Jeremy	"I agree 100% with this new rule change."
Pamela	"I am an HR professional . I completely agree with the proposed ruling. Some companies are now choosing to use "non- solicitation" agreements which can be enforceable to a certain extent. My question is if you work in an "At Will" state and the offer letter states "this is not a contract and you or the employer can terminate your employment at any time without cause," how can the employer require the employee to sign a non- solicit if the employment is non- contractual?"
Karl	"Non-complete clauses are detrimental to the efficiency of labor markets. Non-compete clauses should be illegal."

Elizabeth	"I am a nurse practitioner and would benefit greatly from this new law if it were to go into effect. The practice I work for now has such a large noncompete radius that I would need to move to a new city to find a practice that wasn't included."
Jeffrey	"Surely this is a no-brainer. No company should be able to block you from going to work for any other company. Even if you are someone who developed something that is making the company a ton of money. If the company is afraid that you will tell your new employer what you did and how you did it, they need to patent or copyright the whatever it is. Otherwise, they have no right to claim it's theirs."
Jeffrey	"I strongly support a ban on non-compete agreements. A former employee of a firm cannot legally use the intellectual property that belongs to his former firm without their consent/remuneration. But that is all that the former employer can legally bar the former employee. The former employer cannot bar the former employee from using his knowledge, training, skills etc because they belong to the employee , not the employer."
Jeffrey	"Non-compete agreements are inappropriate in 99 and 44/100ths percent of the time. Non-compete implies that you are doing something creative or producing something unique. If you're just flipping burgers, for example, you're cooking. All burger joints have slightly different ways of cooking their burgers. If they have some proprietary process to cook the burgers, they would be within their rights to sue both you and your new employer should you take and reveal the proprietary process to a new employer. It seems that in today's environment, companies are trying to lay claim to your knowledge, skills, and abilities . They belong to you, not the company."
Michael	"I fully support the proposed rule by the FTC to ban and eliminate non-complete clauses. As a physician assistant , I have been in a non-compete contract for the past 5 years and have no option to leave my employment without relocating to another metropolitan area altogether. I think this would be a great relief to me knowing I can change employers without having to relocate and allow me to have better negotiation ability when discussing compensation."
Sharon	"Non-compete agreements are used as weapons by employers to hold employees hostage. It is unfair and discriminatory. I have seen businesses ruin peoples lives because of these agreements. I support banning them."
Zachariah	"Please ban non-compete clauses, they are onerous and lead to poor patient care and physician under appreciation while the hordes of hospital administrators grows exponentially. The idea of being locked into a job and having to move your family to a different city if you want to change jobs or start your own company is un-American and puts large employers in control while leaving medical workers without any negotiating power or freedom."

Eric	"Totally agree w proposed rule except for one caveat...the development of "intellectual property" (ideas or equipment) while at one's work should be clarified in the Rule that it is NOT transferable to another entity when the worker leaves. As a physician who worked in a one hospital town , the Hospital made everyone sign a non-compete which by State statute was non-enforceable but would cost the employee a bunch of $$ to fight (and win). Unfair! Hence, agree in concept with the proposed Rule."
Mary	"This rule is long overdue. No compete clauses result in an imbalance of power and destroy free market rules. Employees should be able to find better matches for them. It's good for individual workers, and for the larger economy."
john	"Non competes have been abused much more often than they have been correctly and effectively used. Restrictions on people working hurts the economy. The benefits of noncompete agreements can be achieved with retention bonuses, vestiture rules, and NDAs, as we se many companies already doing in California. I would support a ban on Non-Computes"
John	"In Idaho, I was required to sign a non-compete agreement as a condition of employment. This 'contract' used my employment "as consideration." 1. This was certainly under duress. 2. In an employment-at-will state, the 'consideration' for this contract lasted for about 30 seconds while I signed the form. Please protect US workers from powerful corporations which threaten our livelihoods by forcing us to choose between unemployment and signing a non- compete, then reminding us they have the liberty to fire us for any reason or no reason - and lock us out of our industry for years."
Dr Prashanth	"I am a practicing physician and I have had to move to different state twice because of non-compete clause. It's unfair for patients who would love to keep seeing their doctors. It's unfair for physician families to go through soul grinding moves. We as physicians in no way are privy to any of the business secrets that hospitals might have!! Non-compete clause for physicians drives competition away, decreasing the quality of care for patients and drives up the health care costs for all. It's also responsible for high rates of physician burnouts. Non-compete clause for physicians must be illegal. There is no reason for its existence. Thanks."
Laurence	"As a worker currently hampered by an existing non-compete through my former employer, ¹ I would welcome this change and feel that it would certainly benefit the employment market overall."
Vicki	"I am in favor of banning all non-compete clauses in all professions. They only hurt the consumer and the small business entrepreneurs in a community."
Serina	"I think non competes impede on a person's right to work! They should be banned!"

Christian	"I am a 45 year old health care provider and father of 5. The last 10 years I worked for a LARGE family practice in the Chiropractic field. I started in this office after completing my doctorate education. The employer required I sign a non-compete that continues indefinitely without a requirement to review the document or make any alteration to it at any time. As a student just fresh out of school. I feel I was not given informed consent on what I was actually signing. The non-compete has a 20 mile radius and a 24 month duration. My employer used and uses the contract to intimidate and a means of controlling his staff, and always has. Every time I asked for a raise after my first initial one the answer was no, yet I could not go anywhere because I was bound by a non compete. When he stopped giving me bonuses, there was nothing I could do because I was bound by my non compete. When he gave me extra workload with no raises, there was nothing I could do because of the noncompete. When he disregarded my injury, there was nothing I could do because of my non compete. When he began to be a bully in the workplace, I had to stay because where else would I go because of my non compete. This is why I am FOR the BAN of non competes...Please take into consideration my story in your decision as a veteran, father and a health care provider. Please Ban non compete clauses. BAN them! Please reach out to me with any questions."
Kerri	"I support this BAN of non compete agreements. These legal covenant and contracts hurt families and creates bad employers. I am all for non solicitation and confidently contracts to protect the legitimate business interest of employers. If there is NO fraud or malicious behavior done by the employee wanting to leave or start a new business, then I see no reason to keep them hostage by a non compete or keep them from working in their field. Many non competes are unreasonable and give the employer that has all the $$$ the power to file frivolous lawsuits against the employee because of the non compete contract that was required to sign to start employment. This puts employees at the disadvantage and it also drives employees out of our their field they studied or went to trade school for. Non competes hurt the economy and violate public policy and community. Yes, please ban non competes."
Mark	"I wholeheartedly support the proposed non-compete clause rule. Non-compete clauses have unfortunately become the norm. They impose an unfair burden on employees, sometimes bordering on indentured servitude. I've seen the chilling effect they can have on workers. It's a practice that needs to end."
James	"Non-competes create a very unhealthy environment in the workplace. It gives the employer an element of power that could create a very unhealthy work dynamic. If the employee is not willing to "put up with the crap," then they can't work in their field anywhere locally."
Christian	"As a physician, I strongly urge to remove noncompete clauses from physician contracts. They allow healthcare companies an effective monopoly on specialized services, even in large cities when a geographic radius restriction is in place. These monopolies are harmful to patients, do not allow for free market competition, and could only drive up healthcare costs. No one benefits from these in the long run."

Dustin	"The fact that this does not apply to non-profit hospitals is atrocious and antithetical to any work this legislation might do to relieve the burdens that healthcare workers face. We are currently in a healthcare setting where there is already >50,000 physician shortage with an estimated shortage of > 100,000 in the next 3 years. This anachronistic, exploitative concept of non-compete arrangements force healthcare workers to abandon their homes, friends, and communities and uproot when employment circumstances change, thus depriving communities of their physicians and healthcare workers. No institution should have that much control over their employees, and the fact that this legislation exists would certainly show you are in agreement. So why would you exclude physicians from this? Why exclude healthcare workers who sacrifice so much already to care for our neighbors and communities. Please consider health care workers and include non-profit Healthcare facilities in this legislation."
Graham	"When I first graduated veterinary school, I worked at a clinic with a 5 year non-compete. There was a discrimination issue at the clinic and after a settlement, I decided to move. Due to the non-compete, I had to sell my house and find a new town to work in. I could've looked into hiring an attorney to fight the non-compete, but didn't have the time or money."
William	"As a physician the elimination of non-compete clauses would significantly help healthcare. Large corporations have used non-compete clauses from allowing physician competition. A non-compete clause forced me to leave my hometown and seek a new job on the opposite side of my state. I would applaud efforts by the FTC to eliminate and invalidate all non-compete agreements."
Chance	"Non-Compete Agreements should not be allowed. It is inherently against free market principles that our economic system is supposed to be based on. Ideals of capitalism and free market economy that only seem to exist for market behemoths, corporations, and wealthy constituents when it is to their benefit. By allowing non-competes, it has further rigged the system in favor of crushing the labor force and eliminating laborers' ability to negotiate fair wages and benefits. Non-Compete Agreements can even hurt business owners. The founder of an established and successful plumbing company has recently sought to retire in the next several years. But he did not have anyone to take over for him when he retired, so he decided to allow two of his employees to take over his business. The former employees and soon to be owners, we will call them Peter and Jeff, were required to pay the founder a fixed amount every year for the duration of 10 years to obtain 10% ownership each year. The 10% split between Peter and Jeff. Jeff was responsible for the service sector and Peter took on the new construction. But there was a catch. Peter and Jeff had to sign a Non-Compete Agreement that would bar either party from working within the county or with the same contractors or customers for a duration of 2 years. This would prove to be tragic. At the beginning things were looking good, but soon after began to sour. Jeff had developed an addiction to several illicit substances, but refused to acknowledge the problem. Mood swings and irrational behavior became a regular occurrence with Jeff Clients began to take notice of the fact that Jeff was not performing his duties. He was absent from meetings and was not guiding his employees through tasks. This left Peter in a predicament where die responsibility now fell to him. While Jeff is busy tarnishing the reputation of this once reliable company, Peter has been trying to keep it together. The founder has been dealing with health

	issues, unable or unwilling to step in, while still collecting his promised check. Peter wants out of the deal, but would be financially ruined because he would not be allowed to work in the same valley for two years. He has built a reputation of being a reliable and trusted tradesperson with clients, yet is being turned away due to the nature of the company's current questionable leadership. Peter should not be held to this non-compete, nor should any employee. And thus, non-compete agreements should be made null and void."
Kim	"Non-compete takes away a patient's right to choose a medical provider of their choice when a provider changes locations in the same area. I have been a medical patient who has now been caught up losing a 2 preferred medical providers due to non-compete contracts. I had to wait out during the duration on the first provider and the second provider is currently in a legal battle over the illegality of the non-compete. My attorney general's office didn't care in my first case the non-compete radius has a monopoly on the area and in the second area the non-compete radius means the provider has to move out of the area. I can't even follow this provider after the clinic told us we could no longer be patients due to my having to get on the staff for illegal Medicaid double billing and lack of ability to correctly schedule appointments. In the medical field non-compete contracts hurt patient care and rights. Where is the protection for a patient to see a preferred provider? Non-compete contracts causes providers to start to put the amount in their bank account over patient care. When providers only become concerned with making money then patient care suffers. Patient rights and care need to be put back as the first priority over non-compete contracts. Please continue to work to remove non-compete contracts. Especially in the medical field."
Gini	"Re: Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200: Please implement the Non-Compete rule prohibiting future and nullifying non-compete clauses in employee agreements/contracts. These non-compete requirements are an unfair burden on workers- -this isn't right! They are also a drag on the economy. Think about it--a non-compete agreement for a fast-food worker? A social worker? A truck driver? Seriously? Please implement the rule changes!"
EJ	""Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200" Non-compete laws are limiting access to mental health care in Idaho. Idaho citizens are regularly placed on waitlists of 3 months or longer to see board- certified mental health specialists be it for therapy/counseling or psychiatry and medication management. Often these individuals face critical situations requiring treatments lasting beyond any initial emergency room visit or inpatient psychiatric hospital stay. Waiting 3 months or longer for continuity of care is not a realistic course of treatment and can prove detrimental or deadly for these individuals as well as those living in their communities. Unfortunately, this is the case in rural Idaho. Current non-compete laws contribute to this lack of and delay in services for this critical population. I'm a board-certified Nurse Practitioner and I hold a I)doctoral degree in Psychiatric Mental Health. I've served the community in Southeast Idaho for multiple years. When the time to renew my contract with my former employer came I requested a raise to align my salary with comparable rates, and I provided them with offers I'd received from other potential employers. I was told no; I was reminded in that very meeting that I have a non-compete clause and I would be at risk of legal repercussions if I became employed with or worked for myself within a stated mileage radius for a period of 18 months (the maximum radius and time-period

	allowed by the state of Idaho). I've also received threats/reminders through the mail and by phone from their attorneys despite never attempting to provide the same services I provided as their employee. I only considered starting a practice to provide services to this community that they repeatedly refused to allow me to provide while I worked with them and still don't provide themselves. I was told that this employer could not afford to pay comparable wages at the time; this is certainly an employer's prerogative, but when they can't keep staff at many levels of the organization from the front desk and clerical workers to medical providers due to paying below market wages the non-compete laws become predatory and anti-competitive. This employer, which receives a large amount of Federal Grant funding as they are considered a Federally Qualified Health Center, has since bought out other healthcare systems, even out-of-state, systems. I find it ironic that they can claim they don't have the funding to pay employees fair market wages yet they have funds to buy out their competition and expand. This seems to me like an attempt to monopolize services and this would be less of an option if they couldn't bully employees and past employees with non-compete clauses. Please don't get me wrong, I do see the need for non-compete rules in business, specifically as stated in this very proposal ("Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200") and I'm not a disgruntled ex-employee who didn't get their way. I've since begun working for myself and my family and I am doing just fine financially. I am not, however, serving the rural Idaho community where I live because I can't. I will as soon as I can but until my non-compete expires I have chosen to live in the community I love and work in a neighboring state via telemedicine as my primary income. I could go on indefinitely doing this and making a better wage and providing a higher standard of living for myself and my family, but I want to help MY community. Non-compete rules as they currently stand prevent me from doing this. Please make this proposed rule change into law. Current rules allow unethical business practices and encourage below-market wages for employees. This is a significant hardship, especially in rural areas where it's already difficult to attract and recruit qualified and experienced healthcare providers. Current rules also disqualify skilled laborers such as medical assistants and nurses in the medical field. In rural communities, they often find themselves understaffed, underpaid, and unable to go elsewhere due to groups employing these predatory practices through non-compete agreements."
Nathan	"I support this motion to prevent non-compete agreements, as I believe it has been misused to prevent competition and harm an employee's perspective work options."
Colleen	"I'm writing in support of the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule. For a period of nearly three years, I was employed by a multi-national tech manufacturer who required non-disclosure and non-competition agreements from its employees. I worked on the legal team which prepared and negotiated NDAs with vendors, suppliers and potential customers, and we were occasionally recruited to work on employee non-compete agreements for the FIR team as well. I acknowledge that non-disclosure terms are often appropriate for employees, but the rationale supporting non-compete agreements applies in only very limited circumstances for very limited numbers of employees. Protection of true trade secrets and pre-patented information is essential for innovation and competition, but such broad protections for all employees are not necessary or ethical. Adoption of this proposed rule is important for the protections and freedoms of the majority of our nation's employees. Thank you."

Constituent Support for the FTC's Noncompete Rule

Illinois | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 billion in increased wages over the next decade, including for Massachusetts:

	"I am a cardiologist and cardiac electrophysiologist practicing in a multi specialty group in the south suburbs of Chicago . A fairly underserved area . Have been in practice for 15 years and provide highly specialised and unique services to the patients in the area . I am bound by a non compete agreement as all The doctors in my group . The group owners are using this as a tool to cut physician compensation and retain income in order to enrich themselves and pay their investors. They are paying doctors 30-50% below the market value and have about 1000 physicians in the Chicago are tied up by restrictive covenants. A Ban on non compete will surely improve compensation, competition and insure that doctors will continue to be able to provide care to their patients in the community." - Ahmad
	"I am whole-heartedly in favor of banning non-compete. I am currently under one. The company that I am currently employed with can do absolutely anything with my pay which included decreasing my pay after a high profit year. My per diem is $20+ a day behind all of the competition and my pay is less than half of the competition. I am a senior technician and the junior techs are paid far more than the senior techs. I don't hold any proprietary knowledge. All I have is skill trades that I have acquired over 20 years in the technical field. I am at the pure mercy of my company's whim. It's more enslavement than working with termination always looming overhead. Please unshackle my chains and let me be a true and greater asset to my nation. From a immigrant, a veteran, and a citizen." - Winston
	"I am a veteran who served in the marine corps and who currently works for one of the largest heath care companies in the county. I used to work from an independent company that was bought out buy one of the major wholesalers of medicine. Instantly apou purchasing Gen source we were forced to sign a non compete. In the years since my pay has decreased over 50k while I've grown and become better at my job. Every year the company shows growth but somehow the Sales reps make less and less. The non compete keeps us from seeking employment elsewhere where they would surely pay me and any one I work with twice as much for the same amount of work. They've shortened our lunches as well! The company has changed the payment terms year after year to benefit the company and hurt its reps." - Joseph

	"This is the #1 best rule to ever be proposed by the FTC, IEPA, SEC or any other government agency in my lifetime. I am a 53 year old civil engineer. At 25 years old, I was told to sign a non-compete by my former employer. I initially refused. However, it later became obvious that I would not advance through the company without signing the non-compete, or, worst-case, I would be let go at the first opportunity. I did eventually sign it. From that point forward, I basically felt "trapped" in my job with no real opportunity to leave. As a mid-level project manager ($80k- $100k/yr) I could not afford a lawsuit should I leave and my fonner company and they decided to enforce the non-compete provisions. Fortunately, I was able to negotiate terms that allowed me to move to another employer as long as I did not directly work for any former clients for a year. By that time, I was 45 years old. I am likely too old to for this rule to benefit me in any meaningful way. Hopefully, this rule will pass for the benefit of my children and their generation. I am pro-business and generally vote Republican in every election. I see this as a basic American freedom and fairness issue, not a political issue. Employees and workers should be allowed freedom of movement from one employer to another. If the company is fearful that a valuable employee will leave, then they should pay them their true value or just plain treat them better. Free market capitalism will eventually sort out the specifics of how good employees are retained and compensated. This rule will just make the employer/employee relationship more fair to the employee. Good luck with the rule. It will have a significant positive impact on society." - Gregory
	"I support the ban of non compete contracts. I am a hair replacement stylist and I am tied to a contract for 2 years after leaving on any terms not to work in the industry at all within a 50mile radius. When your workplace becomes a hostile environment you should have the right to leave and not have to find a new career or drive such long distances just to be able to work." - Susan
	"As a veterinarian, non-compete clauses are very prevalent in our contracts, and very detrimental to a profession that already suffers a high rate of burnout and suicide. For me personally, I am unable to work within 20 miles of my former practice for 2 years, which encompasses almost all of the Chicagoland area. And even though there is high demand for veterinarians, this clause makes me unable to practice as any type of veterinarian within my area for the specified time period. 10 months ago, I moved to a clinic 30 miles away from my house to avoid this non-compete, and due to family obligations, will soon be leaving this practice. Now I will have 2 non-competes for the next year, which essentially makes me unable to work even part-time. It should come to no surprise that I strongly discourage anyone from entering the veterinary field." - Toni

"I'm an MIT-educated engineer and product manager who has twice been restricted by non-compete covenants. In both cases, the new job beared very little functional resemblance to my old job, and the non-compete clause was simply used by the old company in a punitive way against the new company. In one case, lawyers went back and forth drafting "nasty" letters and threats for 6 months before finally releasing me. This behavior occurred with both financial trading companies and high- tech companies. [...] Non-competes area friction to the market and slow down the movement of intellectual capital in a free market. They should unquestionably be banned."

Danny	"Get rid of noncompete agreements! They prevent people from leaving potentially leaving a toxic situation for a better job in the same field"
Adrien	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements I have worked at a business where I was required to sign such an agreement, which thus affected the positions I was able to get in the future. This has a negative impact on employees, who are already at a disadvantage compared with employers. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Sankalp	"I am completely in favor of forbidding noncompete agreements."
Ihab	"Restricting physicians only in this regard is unethical and unfair. It certainly would be detrimental to the ability of physicians to seek fair compensation."
Elke	"Please eliminate non-competes for medicine. They limit the ability of qualified doctors to serve the public. Physicians who leave practices are unable to serve their patients locally despite potential access and wait times for those patients. Thank - you for your consideration"
Blair	"The FTC should ban non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"

Jeff	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Angela	"I completely support the non-compete clause proposed by the FTC."
Suliman	"I'm a rheumatologist and my community is in dire need for the rheumatology services. This is the case almost across the US. Health care systems can be ineffective at managing the needs of the community. This increases wait times and decreases access to doctors. Health care systems also use the extra productivity that happened over the last 10-20 years of technological advancements to hire more administrators instead of supporting medical staff salaries and improving staffing ratios. There are currently 9 administrators for every doctor in the health care system. Any attempt to open a private practice is limited and restricted by non-compete clauses. This has negative impact on communities and goes against free market economy."
Anon	"I support the non-compete clause ban. Non-competes are not in the best interest of the American people and impose unnecessary hardships."
Latha	"This is so important! I am an internist . we are not paid fairly and forced to stay at my current job due to restrictive covenant. I have only been at current employer for 2 years, but have been in the area for 15 years with my own strong patient following. And yet they tell me I still have to follow the covenant. This is terrible for continuity of care. It most definitely does not put the care of the patient first. My patients for the past 15 years all live within a 10 mile radius. This is unfair to my patients. Unfair to me who has created this relationship well before my current employer. They use this as a tactic to force us to stay with no power to negotiate fair pay. Thank you thank you for taking this up!"
Amit	"I as a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the corporate hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians."
Gaurav	"This should be ended as this is discrimination of individual rights. This impacts everyone as they are not able to change the job and join the other employers."
Christine	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. We have had to move every time my husband got a new job because of medical non-compete clauses, so I hope these are covered, too. Ten moves. It would be eleven except this last time I stayed put and he got an apartment. They say three moves equals a fire, in terms of cost and loss, so we are financially a mess. For fast food workers it is errant nonsense. Thank you."

Melissa	"Non-compete agreements are completely unethical. Employees feel obligated to sign them because they need the job and then are walking on eggshells throughout their career worrying about the non-compete they signed being held against them at any given time. Employees who find better opportunities elsewhere feel locked into the non-compete agreement and are often stuck at a job and employer because they fear the legal ramifications if they stay within the industry they have worked in for years. A lot times they are mistreated after they've been hired or the promises made by the employer to the employee are not delivered causing undue stress and worry around finding a better job and work environment. I feel non-compete agreements give managers ammo to mistreat their staff because they know that fear is in the back of the employees mind. Many times when people do actually get the courage to leave they have to go into a completely different industry, making less money, in fear of the non-compete agreement being held over them for two or more years. Let's face it, who wants to go through a legal battle with an employer who has deeper pockets and a better legal team to stick it to the employee who is just trying to earn an honest wage and advance their career? All human beings should have the right to work for any company that benefits them fairly and have the right to go to another employer for better benefits and wages, not just for ourselves but for our families that depend on our wages to thrive and survive."
Neil	"Noncompete clauses serve to undermine workers rights and unilaterally favor businesses at the expense of the people. No working person should have to move or go without work to protect the interests of a business. Proprietary information can be protected with no disclosure agreements. I request an end to no compete clauses."
Ryan	"Non-compete clauses are damaging and deprive hard working self starters from prospering. They are frequently overreaching with clauses that allow changes to things like competitors lists with no warning or recourse."
Brian	"Please support this free market proposal to end the stranglehold of business interests upon American workers."
Steve	"I agree with this whole heartedly. Non compete clauses diminish incentive for equitable pay and benefits as well as working conditions as they know the employee will have to leave the area. Too often I've been given a take it or leave it ultimatum by an employer. I would encourage the FTC to ban non Competes across the board, including fields like medicine. It is too often used as a weapon/threat by employers despite often not holding up in court as employers know it takes great legal costs and time to fight."
Derek	"This absolutely needs to be passed. In addition to everything proposed, I am a perfect case example of the harm non-competes cause. I am currently trapped at my current job with no prospects of better pay or prospects. I've tried to find a new job, passed the interview process as top candidate, but they won't hire me solely due to the non-compete. I am effectively stripped of my freedom to have a better job, working conditions, pay, and prospects. This is certainly without a doubt against what the country, stands for and is easily a violation of freedom. I am unable to leave my job willingly and am effectively enslaved to my current company because of the non- compete."

Jeffrey	"Non compete should be banned. These policies are literally in opposition to the spirit of American freedom."
Michael	"This should absolutely go into effect. Non-competes exclusively benefit companies while punishing individuals. All opposition to this will solely be made by corporate interests and is clearly a conflict of interest."
Amit	"As a clinician we are fired for non compete and exploited due to that. One can't work nearby as we have community ties. Non compete should be scraped for clinicians."
Nikhil	"Restrictive covenants should be ruled illegal. Healthcare corporations are getting too large and this is forcing physicians to stay with these corporations unless they want to move and uproot their lives in doing so. This is leading to worsening burnout amongst providers and will eventually lead to worsening healthcare shortages, increased suicide rates and eventually effect the triple aim of healthcare. The AHA does not care about the conditions which hospitals force providers to work under and have made it clear profits will always trump ethical and fair conditions in which physicians don't feel handcuffed to a job. I plead with the FTC to ban restrictive covenants."
Varun	"I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements I was personally affected by a non-compete during COVID-19. After laying me off, my employer inserted a wide-ranging (industry-wide) non-compete for 2 years in order for me to get my severance. It was very distressing to negotiate it out. I had to make other concessions in order to secure my severance. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Vinay	"I support for removing non compete clause in the contrao"
Andrew	"threat and enforcement of non-compete clauses in medicine prevents me and my colleagues from staying in the rural and underserved areas that we feel to duty and desire to serve in. I understand how this could potentially promote retention at a single site however, many areas need multiple providers multiple

	sites for patient care and access. the noncompete clauses, reduce well-being and contribute to the deterioration of worker satisfaction. Physicians have among the highest rate of suicide of any profession, and I suspect that removing the noncompete clause would be beneficial in reducing physician mortality."
Kyle	"Please continue to push forward with banning non-compete agreements."
Allen	"In the medical field, the patient's interests should be paramount. If a physician decides to change his employment, he should have the right to stay in the same area and patients should be able to continue be treated by him in the same area."
Steve	"Please ban Non-Compete clauses. I can't see any reasons why we need them."
Patrick	" Yes this non compete agreement needs to be banned. Especially for employees that aren't paid that much. My company was about to make me manager until they gave me a super lowball offer because they know I cannot go to another company. This job entails so much work and they do not want to pay for it. They are will to let all my experience and knowledge go and hire someone off the street with no knowledge of the business at the same price they offered me. I'm sorry but I am worth more than someone off the street. I have been nothing but a top notch employee and they do not care because they know I cannot go work for another company. So I am stuck where I am at. I denied the position because of all the work there will be for barely a raise in my pay. It's just not right what they do to their employees. Plus they weren't goin to fill in the position I am in currently, so I would have absolutely no help. They were setting me up for failure and not willing to pay a decent salary along the the way. I already am not being paid correctly for all the work I currently do. Something needs to happen to give employees so rights back so they can pursue better opportunities. I am not trying to screw over my current company, I am just trying to get paid fairly and make a decent living. I am barely making a living as it is and I can probably make more money in the position I am in now with overtime than the salary they offered me for manager with no overtime and a lot more work. Completely unfair and they know it, but they know they do not have to worry because I am not allowed to go work anywhere else. I am extremely good at my job too."
Matthew	"I have worked for tech giants and smaller, local tech companies. I have twice had to switch my career path because of a NDA preventing me from working for a different company. The second time I had to do this forced me to leave an industry entirely and rebuilding my brand, reputation, and experience from scratch. I shouldn't have to tell you how disruptive this is. The amount of effort to have to pivot industries is excruciating and I had my personal relations and private life suffer - missing out on birthdays, holidays, or even the ability to relax or recharge my battery have been deprived. As someone who wants to work hard and contribute to their community, these NDA's are arbitrary and excruciating barriers to overcome. NDA's result in lost productivity, worker dissatisfaction, and decrease competition. The USA should remove NDA's and other forms of non-competes if it would like to remain a global leader and innovator"

Dana	"Please add non for profit hospitals."
Leslie	"Non-compete clauses restrict employment and are detrimental to people who are simply trying to make a living."
Edie	"I hope this rule is passed. My husband has felt stuck in his job for 18 years because he signed a non compete agreement. He could be making a lot more money with another company but the non compete keeps him stuck in his dead end job. The company treats their employees terribly because they have them locked into their company. Please push for this new rule. I know too many stories about propel feeling stuck due to non compete agreements."
David	"I write to generally support but request a change in the safe harbor, notice and rescission requirements of Proposed § 910.2(b)(1), (21) and (3) to add a limitation on notice. In business management, the use of Non-compete clauses and agreements can be facially anticompetitive – they literally restrain competition – but there may well be situations where the actual effect on competition is negligible. The notice and rescission requirements make any company who might have such a clause in an agreement a law breaker if they do not comply. I recommend that there be a “safe harbor” for notice and rescission where there may be an isolated clause, perhaps even undiscovered, where the impact on competition is negligible. Consider these hypotheticals: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Company hires a new engineer and as part of the employment agreement with this single employee, in addition to legitimate goals of acquiring ownership in intellectual property, a non-compete clause is present. • Company had a prior policy of having middle management and supervisors sign non-competes, not followed for years, but there is a “legacy” employee who still has such an agreement in the company files. • Company doesn’t treat ancillary agreements for new hires uniformly, sometimes a department may hire and copies do not find their way to a “human resources” file because the company is insufficiently large to have an active Human Resources department. The scenarios invite inadvertent violation in cases where, frankly, no one at Company, in charge of applying FTC regulations, knows about the existence of the Non-compete agreements or clauses and, essentially, because Non-competes are not a part of the ongoing way of doing business, there really is not an effect on competition. The may still be unenforceable – a good thing – but making Company an inadvertent violator is not in the public interest. The most offensive abuses of Non-competes can be seen to occur where either there is wholesale elimination of everybody from job mobility (the Illinois Jimmy John’s scenario) or at the opposite end, preemptively eliminating the most knowledgeable and able, high salaried, employees from leaving and starting competing businesses. I recommend a “safe harbor” for notice and rescission only. Terms of the safe harbor should be defined to encompass small numbers of contracts with low wage employees. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Proposed Amended § 910.2(b)(3) (additions underlined)

	• (3) Safe harbor. An employer complies with the rescission requirement in paragraph (b)(1) of this section where it provides notice to a worker pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) of this section. The notice requirement of paragraph (b) (2) shall not be deemed to be violated if (a) fewer than 10% of low wage employees have Non-compete clauses or agreements or (b) no worker earning more than $100,000 annually has a Non-compete clause or agreement. This provision in no way affects the treatment of the Non-compete clause or agreement as an unfair trade practice under the other provisions of the Rule. The dollar amount at the time of implementation shall be implemented in an amount adjusted for inflation. The 10% provision still requires a company for whom Non-competes with everybody is a part of business. The high earnings provision means that those best able to start or join a competing business are still protected by unfair trade practice treatment, notice and rescission. The dollar amount is chosen as easy to identify and supported by, at least, one state law cited in the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking."
Karl	"I strongly support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. A professional friend of mine was forced to seek employment more than 40 miles away from home due to a non-compete clause in her employment agreement. These clauses enhance local monopolization, hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Jeff	"The use by any-size employer of non-compete clauses is an unfair method of competition. Its use touches the work of a huge proportion of American workers, impacts their ability to live where they want, earn what they deserve, work in a vocation in which they want to work, and limits their professional growth, potential and experience. As a lawyer, licensed to practice in the State of Illinois, for over 35 years, I have been involved in counseling clients about, and litigating, non-compete clauses. At the risk of cutting off my future income, I adamantly support this proposed Rule. My foremost concern is that the Rule will most certainly be dissolved by the Supreme Court, given the Court's current make up and its unfettered support of arbitration agreements - a document employers also require a new employee to sign that requires an employee to give up her rights to sue in court, to have a jury decide a dispute, to have an independent fact finder (who isn't paid by the employer) decide the dispute, and to give up the right to an appeal. This is another contractual mechanism employers use to stifle competition by quelling disputes and keeping their details private that the Supreme Court has uniformly upheld. Yes, the legal analysis is slightly different, but the outcome will be the same. But I digress. The FTC has asked for comment on whether employers that are small entities are less likely than other employers to have alternatives available for protecting their investments. There is no justifiable reason why this rule should not be implemented for all employers. If small employers have an exemption, it would swallow the rule, given the number of "small employers" in America. Every employer of any size in America already has patent, copyright & trademark protection for truly unique concepts that deserve protection. But a medical practice of 5 doctors who won't let a departing MD work within 5 miles of its office for two years- a very common scenario -

	means a patient of that MD won't get the care she wants from that MD if the MD leaves the practice. It means the cost of medical care to the patient paid to that practice won't be lowered by the departing MD who would otherwise compete. The scenario equally applies to sales people, tech workers, all professionals, but even child care providers, call center workers, charter school teachers-I've seen all of those clients many times. Even workers who don't, won't, or can't directly compete with their current employer upon departure, who are "back room" or support workers, are held back from earning more money or moving elsewhere to work with another employer who already competes with the non-compete-issuing employer-I've just litigated such a case in the past three weeks, at a cost of tens of thousands of dollars in legal fees to the new employer and its new employee. For the same reasons, non-compete clauses between employers and senior executives should not be treated any differently than with other workers. Even the rare non-compete clause that permits an executive severance pay during the period of time they are "benched" means their experience is inert while they are benched, their expertise is not used to grow, and the executive's ability does not remain current. A separate concern over the current state of these "agreements" - and no reasonable employee actually ever "agrees" to their terms, which are usually a condition of employment - is that their enforceability, even in egregious cases, is completely unpredictable. Indeed, the standard in Illinois is: "In order for a noncompetition agreement to be enforceable under Illinois law, it must contain reasonable restrictions, based on the "facts and circumstances of the particular case." Liautaud v. Liautaud, 221 F.3d 981, 986-87 (7th Cir. 2000)". Thus, every judge has an "out" in deciding whether each non-competition agreement is enforceable, because no two cases, like snowflakes, are exactly alike. That of course makes it impossible to predict with any certainty whether an employee can succeed in challenging a non-competition agreement, which more often than not means not challenging it, leaving the employer's competition unmarred. The Commission seeks comment about employers' use choice-of-law provisions to evade the laws of states where non-compete clauses are relatively less enforceable. In a recent case I litigated, the employment contract containing the non-compete and non-solicitation provision as issue chose Illinois as the venue for all disputes and the substantive law to be applied. The employer literally had no physical office in Illinois or anywhere else, as all workers worked virtually and remotely, all over the country. The employee being sued lived in Georgia. While we considered filing suit in a Georgia court to declare the "choice of law" unenforceable, that would cost thousands of dollars more with no certainty of outcome. I have run out of space in this comment box."
Laura	"I am a highly trained and skilled surgeon who would have to leave behind my community and uproot my family if my hospital makes terrible decisions. It wouldn't happen you say? Twice now! I had to rip my kids out of their schools, sell my house, uproot my professional husband who has to also obtain licensing in a new state, and I have had multiple patients travel more than 300 miles across state lines to follow me to my new hospital for care. Employed physicians are not in power to negotiate them out of employment contracts, yet they are at the mercy of a large administrative system that does not have their interests or their patient's interests in mind when making business decisions. Abolish non competes!"

Stacy	"This hampers medical innovation and adds to the long and growing list of reasons to leave medicine."
Frank	"Having non compete clauses in employment agreements in the past, It has kept me from seeking employment in other business and thus hurt my earning ability. it seems to me that if states like CA that don't enforce non competes can thrive and have the most advanced technology companies in the world can exist, then non competes are not necessary for a business as long as it pays a fair wage and keeps employees happy."
Barney	"I support banning non-compete clauses. These people that use these continue to own the employee even though they no longer work for them. Corporate formulas/secretes can be protected by other means. Thank you"
Brandon	"This would be a big win for employees and create much more competition and opportunity for workers. In heavily regulated industries, company competition is fierce and many company look to get the advantage by keeping current and future employees from contributing to those industries through extensive use of non-compete contracts. This is great for companies, but stifles worker opportunity and innovation industry wide. Many times when changing jobs, a worker will have to move to a completely different industry to make the move. This results in an overall decrease in the experience level of the industry."
Pat	"I just submitted a comment requesting that you eliminate noncompete clauses. I made an additional comment which I wish to modify. I said that perhaps employers could be permitted to charge a training fee upon departure, payable over the longterm, of, say, one month's wages, from certain employees in cases where an employee had qualified in a new skill. This would be abused however. Such an option should only apply to employees acquiring generally recognized credentials during employment which require substantial nonproductive time over numerous months to acquire, and to employees making a high income such as at least 6 times the Federal minimum wage , and only if the employee leaves less than a year after documentation that the employee had obtained the new credentials. Without some such restrictions, permission to claw back pay would lead to rampant abuse by employers."
Eve	"Non competes for physicians should be illegal. There are no "trade secrets" of large hospital systems or practices. These restrict freedom and often keep physicians working in jobs that are leading to burnout and harm."
Kevin	"I am an established physical therapist with 17 years of clinical experience. Despite to rigors of dealing with patient load, there is a component of achieving that specific set of work that may ill-afford adequate work life balance. In an endeavor to find this balance I have to delicately tread searching for employment that will allow me to be successful and happy at work and home. I am having difficulty doing this because of an archaic, vague and all- encompassing non-compete. This has limited my search and availability due to a non-compete radius that puts me further out with a longer commute, more time away from home and limited ability to be successful at home and work. Being said, absolving non-compete clauses would eliminate the aforementioned process AND keep all players competitive and honest. It is a good thing for the professional market to keep progress and eliminate stagnation."

Joseph	"Non-compete clauses should be banned from all contracts. Lobbyist groups seeking exemption for healthcare workers are acting against the best interests of said workers to maintain restrictive contract terms, which would not be allowed in other fields under this regulation. To have an exclusion for healthcare workers would blatantly favor healthcare corporations over actual healthcare workers like doctors and nurses who care for patients. The right thing to do is to forbid non-compete clauses across all fields."
Brian	"I am in favor of banning non-compete agreements."
Francesco	"non-competes need to go away completely to allow for proper competition and to make sure physicians and other healthcare workers don't have to uproot their entire family if they want a new job but remain in the same geographical area."
Jonathan	"Great idea. Non- competes tie a worker to a company and prevent them finding a better job in a similar field/ location"
Carla	"The non-compete clause rule is a concerning one for business owners in my situation. I am a private practice ob/gyn physician and hire associates before offering a partnership. During this time they have a small radius non compete so they cannot practice at the same hospital if they were to join another practice. If this rule is enacted for the greater good of society, I am fine with it although it will be detrimental to my business. I am not ok with "not for profit" entities (hospitals) not needing to play by this rule. Already hospitals and private equity-owned groups are at a significant advantage when hiring physicians. They routinely pay much more than a new hire will generate in revenue because as a large entity, they make up that money in hospital admissions, testing ordered etc. I cannot do that. Hospitals will be able to have this noncompete safeguard in place. If this rule gets approved PLEASE make sure not to have not- for-profits exempt. This is blatantly unfair to small business owners. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Although it is a small piece within this rule, it is critical for the success of the private practice physician business model."
Elaine	"I would like to address non competes in healthcare specifically. As a physician in a rural area in central Illinois, my non compete means patients drive 45 minutes to see me since I am no longer "in town." I am a sub specialist and the only other sub-specialists in my field are in towns 45-60 minutes away. So when I was the only one in my town patients could travel 15 minutes, but now they have to travel at least 45 minutes to see any of us. There is no full time coverage for my sub specialty in my town, which harms patients. I have seen this with other

	specialties and primary care as well. I would think especially in healthcare, which is 50% paid by the government, there would be a strong reason to ban non-competes. The amount of money wasted by my former and current employer over my transition tune is several million dollars between setting up additional offices and paying high rates for temporary locums coverage. And all of that cost is passed on to patients and payors. And when you add the rising maternal mortality rates in rural areas, why are we making patients travel more than necessary to see me, a high risk pregnancy specialist? I am in the tenth month of my twenty four month restrictive covenant. I think non competes should be banned nationally, as they are in several states, especially thr healthcare. Thank you."
Stephen	"Please make sure this applies to all physicians. Attorneys have long been excluded from Noncompetes because it would interfere with the attorney/client relationship. It is clearly just as important that physicians and patients are able to maintain a relationship long term that is not interrupted by a no compete. In addition, the noncompetes are often so restrictive that a physician has to move to another city or state in order to change jobs. No one should be forced to move or uproot their family just because they want to change employers. For people that are unable to move, this borders on indentured servitude."
Al	"Non compete agreements take a worker's skills hostage, causing him/her great difficulty in recovery following a job loss. Following a job loss during the pandemic, I received 3 job offers that contained restrictive non compete agreements. Restrictive to the point that as a manufacturing manager I couldn't work at Walmart as a greeter simply because the company's products were sold at their. That has nothing to do with protection of proprietary information. It has to do with intimidating a worker that wants to pursue other career opportunities, even if they have been laid off during a pandemic. When I apply for a new job, the Manager of the this is new position is very interested in my job skills that I bring to them from my previous employers. For these reasons non compete agreements must cease exist. I shouldn't ever have to reject a job offer. That is what non compete agreements are driving us to."
Oreo	"Would love to see this rule go away. Working class people being held back from switching employers that pay higher."
Abdullah	"As a physician who is forced to sign contracts with 0 protection and 0 negotiating power, I welcome this new rule and hope to see it signed into the law as soon as possible. Healthcare has become a playground for big money with both patients and healthcare workers acting as their rackets and balls."
Anup	"There should be no noncompete clause for physicians. This should be withdrawn."
shyam	"Thanks for looking into this. I hope this goes into effect for health care too including hospitals and all corporates in Health care many of which are Not for profit hospitals too. Doctors have to sign restrictive that they cannot work for 2

	years within 10-15 miles from the facility if they leave . Most of the does who are employed - have to live close to the hospitals for emergency calls at night times that does have to respond to. Kids go to the same school districts. If does have to leave job for some mason- they cannot work within 15 miles of the facility. Many people have to relocate for those reasons. All this is not fair and should change as soon as possible"
Elaina	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. As you know, non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care. Thank you for your attention to this important matter. Sincerely, Elaina Chen, MD"
Venu	"Most physicians/ health care workers are unfairly affected by this rule. Hospitals are using this rule to block physicians from practicing in the community they belonged to for decades if they have disputes and the patients lose access to their providers, affecting the community health. In my opinion, it should be scrapped. Thanks."
Kirk	"I am strongly in favor of banning non-compete clauses. They area net drain on the economy due to them keeping workers and employees from seeking wages that match inflation."
Andrew	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations at the expense of the workers. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. Eliminating the noncompete clauses will help improve healthcare access for patients as hospitals and corporations can no longer restrict where physicians can work. I urge the FTC to reject the AHA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians. It is essential to protect workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned physician."

Krishna	"Please eliminate the use of non competes. As a physician it prevents me from providing service to large demographics when changing jobs."
Michael	"Non-compete agreements should only be allowed in a few circumstances if at all. What the NYTimes reported today captures the absurdity of this abuse of workers. Is "right to work only to benefit employers? Please fight for the people."
Patricia	"I am in full agreement with a ban on non-compete agreements. They are unfair to workers and restrict the freedom of individuals to be gainfully employed in the field of their choice. Many times this situation happens at times when employment is desperately needed. I have seen middle-aged workers 'downsized' the the profit of big business, only to then be greatly restricted in their job choices and forced to either move or be underemployed. Non- competes also limit competition and are bad for small business. No employer should be able to dictate your future employment, and no entity with which you are no longer associated should have a say in your freedom to choose your place of work or occupation."
Deborah	"As an independent research contractor in the religious research field, I find noncompete agreements to be so stifling, they can prevent us from working at all for long periods of time within our own area of expertise. It has already happened to a colleague, who lost his job and then was unable to work in the same field for nearly a year due to a noncompete agreement with the organization that terminated his employment. When signing short-term contracts, I've been asked to sign a noncompete agreement that would effectively prevent me from working for the duration of a contract that would only pay me part-time wages. I refused to sign it, as I need to be conducting multiple projects to make a living wage, and I have a PhD. Such non compete agreements should be banned."
Ryan	"Non-Competes in the Veterinary Industry are heavily biased against the employee. Veterinarians spend 4+ years in school and sometimes 1-5 years in extra training completing internship(s) and residency programs. Veterinarians commonly have often moved states 2+ times in short period. Upon signing our first contract, we all hope and dream to join a community where we can grow roots for generations. Should our first employer/place of employment not be a good fit, non-competes force us to uproot our lives once again. Our other option is to stay in a job with a toxic work environment leading to more stress, anxiety, depression, and sometimes suicide in a profession with an already astronomical rate of suicide. Please, help the workers and professionals in the Veterinary community to gain some power over large cooperations to promote fair movement between jobs and ban non-competes. Thank you."

Alyssa	"Non-compete clauses are the opposite of free market capitalism; abolishing them is the American thing to do. Workers AND corporations should have the ability to compete freely in the marketplace. It's crazy that they were ever legal in the first place. The American people are tired of our laws only working for the rich and corporations. Ending these anti-competitive agreements is a good decision and will be applauded."
Merrill	"I would like to register that I am strongly in favor of the Non-Complete Clause Rule, which will increase working people's pay, while at the same time putting an end to an unfair labor practice."
Brent	"Hello FTC, I am so thankful that you are considering banning non-compete agreements. It will positively impact my employment opportunities personally. I currently have a great job offer at an awesome company that I really want to take but can't because of a non-compete agreement I didn't even know I signed. I will increase my salary and have a better place to work at if this goes through. I will be able to better provide for my family and start to be able to pay off my debt. I think it's going to be great for our country and our economy. I know I am just one person, but I just wanted to make sure you know how thankful I am for you considering this important action. Best of luck to you!"
Robert	"Non-compete clauses are over used and and heavily favor corporations over individuals. They are another tool for suppressing workers rights. I support the proposed rule change."
Aisling	"Non compete clauses unfairly restrict physicians from working within a certain distance from a previous employer. Currently, many physicians work for hospitals or health systems and may be restricted from working a certain distance from any site owed by the hospital or health system, This is unfair as the physician may not even be able to stay in the same town or county or in some cases the same state and practice medicine. Moving a family, kids in school and having to start all over in another part of the county, state or country. Selling their homes at a loss. Having to build a practice all over again , thereby starting at the bottom of the pay scale for their area of expertise."
Frank	"This is a great rule change. Non compete contacts are unfair to workers. Please approve this change."
Mary	"I've been the victim of non competes which prevented me from seeking a job in my profession after being let go. Companies cannot be allowed to hold workers hostage!!!"
Rob	"I resigned my position one year ago due to my employer's blatant ethical violations and am currently bound by a contractual non-compete agreement. The non-compete is preventing me from accepting attractive offers from potential

	employers. I am, therefore, forced to continue drawing unemployment checks from the state. In absence of the non-compete I would be gainfully employed with employer-paid health insurance and benefits. As it stands, the attractive employment offers I am receiving could vanish by the time the non-compete expires, leaving me destitute. Please move forward with a federal ban on all non-compete restrictions."
James	"Yes, let's get rid of non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses inhibit innovation and hurt workers."
Erin	"My veterinary career and earning power has been completely hampered by use of my employers' non-compete clauses. While my friends working in other industries without noncompete clauses have been able to competitively interview to negotiate raises or change positions and companies, I have been limited by my noncompete and unable to advance in my career and income in the same way. I used my own money, credit, and time to obtain my degree and am still paying off my student loans on my own. However, noncompete clauses have slowed down how quickly I've been able to repay my loans, start a family, and buy a house. With using a noncompete clause, the employers that I've worked for have actually insinuated that they own me, my knowledge, and skills not only for the time I work there, but for a time afterwards as well. The most recent noncompete clause I naively signed was in a major metropolitan area with heavy street traffic. Even if I tried to apply to a job three neighborhoods away because the schedule and pay was better for me, I couldn't because it was still within a several mile noncompete range. The fact that it would take 45 minutes to an hour to get there on surface streets in the city didn't matter - my noncompete forced me to either stay put where I was working or completely uproot my family and spouse's career to move. This noncompete completely gave my employer license to let a toxic work environment run rampant and hang that clause over my head to threaten me. My employer knew that their clause likely wouldn't stand up in court, but since their business partner was a lawyer, they stated that they would spend the money to bring me to court to try to win or just drain my bank accounts and send me into further debt. I have suffered burnout from my career because of the noncompete before I've even had the chance to pay back my student loans. My employer refused to give timely raises and reviews despite my annually increasing production for the clinic. I helped them build a three million dollar company and was told I was indispensable. They then let me go for taking maternity leave, deleting me from the practice software, medical benefits, and clinic benefits with vendors when my newborn was one week old. Instead of being able to interview at different clinics in the city for one that offered benefits, schedule, and salary that I would help me get ahead, I was forced to stay in a toxic work environment that gave little thought to my own well being and the law. I am asking that noncompete clauses be made illegal. The employers and corporations that use these clauses are bullies trying to benefit financially from limiting employee pay and benefits. I understand that businesses may be trying to protect their proprietary information, but a non-disclosure agreement and non-solicitation agreement would be better suited for veterinary medicine."

Angela	"I urge you to not exclude physicians from the non compete clause rule. It is clear in todays market that hospital systems and large private equity groups control the money and market in health care and physicians are just pawns in their game. As a physician I have always felt expendable to them and non competes are a tool they use to extract more from us while giving back very little in return. Mid levels and nurses are given the work standards and respect they deserve because there is a competitive market due to their ability to move freely if they have better options. Not having non competes would allow physicians finally to have some bargaining power to practice the way they want to which is ultimately what's best for the patients. Striving to meet unrealistic RVU requirements is one example of how patients suffer ultimately. Burn out rate is ever increasing and patients suffering not to mention physicians. This would be a huge factor in giving physicians a way out."
Jack	"I strongly support this as a way to give a modicum of power back to labor. Capital has everything in this country. Please do it. Jack"
Gary	"After reading the FTC announcement on non-compete agreements, I am fully supportive of this measure to ban these restrictive covenants. In 2018, I accepted a job offer with an Indiana-based employer, that would see me working in Illinois. As part of my on-boarding, I was INSTRUCTED to sign a 7- page Employee Confidentiality and Restrictive Covenants Agreement. It was made explicit to me by the supervising manager that my employment was conditional on signing this agreement, and no reasonable time was provided to get access to independent legal counsel despite it being mentioned in the Agreement. This agreement was wide-reaching in scope, covering non-disclosure of confidential information, protection of intellectual property, return of company property, conflict of interest, non-solicitation of customers and employees and most importantly, restriction on competitive activities. It is reasonable to expect a company to protect its strategies, IP, skilled workforce and confidential information, however, the clause on restriction of competitive activities for 1 year after termination is onerous, over-reaching and stifling in its scope. The clause would prevent a thnner employee from engaging in "activities that are the same or substantially similar to the business activities in which employee engaged on behalf of the company during the 2 year period prior to the termination" and the restricted area covered by this was defined as the county in which the employee was assigned, any county directly contiguous to the first, ANY COUNTY IN WHICH ANY CUSTOMER OF THE COMPANY IS LOCATED (commenters upper case for emphasis) and any defined geographic territory to which the employee was assigned. This burdensome agreement, effectively prevented employees from leaving to take up alternative roles in similar organizations, thus reducing the need for the original employer to maintain market-competitive compensation and benefits, a clear case of wage suppression. This is also stifled the freedom of movement, as the career opportunities and potential for personal development were restricted, with employees unable to consider roles that could utilize their skills and talents in alternative employers in a defined industry, within a reasonably commutable geographic region. I have personally witnessed employees state that the company compensation and benefits were falling behind market rates for similar

	roles, and as such these employees were being financially penalized. The highly restrictive nature of this agreement, in respect to freedom of employment, means that employees are not able to enjoy access to the full employment market, that the employee is effectively bound to an employer unless they chose to move to a completely different industry and reduces innovation because employees cannot leave an employer and start their own business, as the agreement prevents them operating in a similar industry or region. In summation, I support the FTC in removing the non-compete agreement from US employment law, and I am available for further consultation."
Kyle	"Non compete clauses only restrict the free association of individuals and should absolutely be banned"
Michael	"I work for a very unethical Dental service organization (DSO). They forced us equity partners into a 35 mile non-compete when they were bought out by a European company. This is in the Chicago area where even 5 mile non-competes can be ruled too restrictive. They threatened to get rid of any partner that would not sign. We told them we would not sign unless they changed it but they had us sign a blank signature sheet and said they would change the non compete and they did not. This was only 6 months after we signed a much less restrictive covenant with them. This basically restricts us partners from practicing anywhere in the Chicago area and force you to relocate your family to be employed. This is why Non-compete provisions should not be allowed."
Maria	"Non competes are unethical ways of oppressing highly educated and skilled physicians. Physicians pay for and endure a rigorous educational and training process. They are their own intellectual property. No corporation or employer should have the right to restrict how and where a doctor can work unless they fully paid and supported the doctor's educational path."
Nar	"Please end non compete clause. I had lost employment offer job due to ex employer non compete clause and ex employer did not give non on non compete cluase."
Eric	"Non competes in medicine restrict competition and give exorbitant power to hospitals especially in metropolitan areas where people desire to live. Hospitals should be forced to compete for talented physicians in all aspects but instead they rely on noncompetes in desirable areas to keep physicians without having to treat them better."
aristides	"I support banning non-compete Rule/contracts: For the last 30 yrs our cardiologist has provided compassionate care to our rural underserved community. He recently severed ties with a large medical group. Due to a non-compete clause he must leave our community. "Non-Compete clauses" in the healthcare industry are highly injurious to rural communities across our country. There is considerable legal history relative to this thorny subject which arose as this country moved from an agricultural to an industrial and business oriented economy. Trade secrets, supply chains, engineering innovations made it

	necessary to protect our investors and their operations from commercial raiders of the many facets of a successful unit. Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights were made law. Along with these protections came the notion that valuable employees ought to be protected from being lured by competitors resulting in substantial business uncertainty. Unfortunately, the legality of employee non-compete clauses was never tested in the different spheres of commerce in a balance between the business to be protected and the effect of the law on the general public as might occur. Making widgets has a considerably different affect on consumers than restriction permitted on persons in the health care profession who may become unavailable to the very people who most need his or her skills. The unfettered access to competent health is a far greater priority for the general welfare of this country than the protections that might be enjoyed by institutions or businesses that employ these professionals. This is obviously true and applicable in the great majority of the small towns and rural area which occupy the great majority of the land mass of this country. Given all of the considerations, It would be appropriate to revise and rescind any existing statutes at the Federal and State levels permitting non competition contracts restricting Medical Doctors and those employments critical to the access to health care and outlaw the validity of any future documents not in conformance with the purposes of the enactment."
Deanna	"Non-compete agreements have long sacrificed upward mobility and limited increased wages of the working class. Though I usually occupied a staff position, I've had to sign a non-compete for most private sector jobs I've had in nearly 40 years of work, severely limiting my options. I hope to see the next generation freed of these corporate fetters."
Alisa	"Non-compete practices are horrible for the working people and only have corporate interests in mind. They can be hidden in fine print (like when you accept annual bonus or stock) and you may not even know you have one until you try to leave. My former company snuck one into a third party website bonus acceptance and then I had to get a lawyer when I tried to leave, which cost me money, stress, and potential future compensation. I ended up leaving the industry I was in (working to improve health equity) because they banned me from working kn that space for a year. Horrible. Please end this!!!"
Zachary	"This rule should go into effect. As a physician my goal is to provide the best care for my community as I can. However noncompete clauses can prevent me from working in an environment best suited to provide excellent care for patients. Non compete clauses force physicians to either stay with a hospital system that is not the best fit for their practice or move out of the area. This caused their patient to have to find a new doctor and potentially get lost in the healthcare system. Non compete clauses for physicians allows hospital systems to artificially suppress competition allowing for higher healthcare costs to the patient."
Denise	"We would like you to support the FTC Proposed Rule to Ban Noncompete Clauses, Which Hurt Workers and Harm Competition Thanks, Denise Doctor"

John	"I am a partner in a public accounting firm where we have a 1-2 year non-compete if you join a competitor and a blanket non-compete if you join a competitor after forced retirement at 62. The definition of a competitor is extremely broad and covers anything the firm does, not necessarily what the person leaving does. E.g. If an audit partner leaves, s/he could not practice taxation either as that would be viewed as violating the non-compete. There are exceptions made but those are usually reserved for those already in leadership or close to them. Similarly, there are exceptions made to allow people to work past 60 but those are usually reserved for those already in leadership or close to them. This is complicated further by an opaque compensation system. If a partner is unhappy with his/ her compensation, the only recourse available is to write to a group called "partner affairs", which may decline any compensation change and no additional information is provided. This results in discrimination against minorities as they are often the ones impacted the most. With the inability to leave because of a non-compete, the partner is stuck and has no choice other than forced arbitration, which is also not a realistic option as the arbitrators are selected by the firm and to them the represents a repeat client as opposed to a one time unhappy partner. Non competes should be prohibited."
V	"As a physician , I support banning non competes as it leads to abuse of physicians by smaller medical practice groups owned by individuals"
Patrick	"Hello, Throughout my career, Non-compete agreements have caused me to not pursue opportunities that could've increased my salary. I can fully understand that companies do not want former employees to share proprietary data with their new employers but that doesn't mean that the only way to handle that is via a non-compete. Non-competes are monopolistic contracts that are harmful to the employee and give undo power to the employer. One may ask "why sign a noncompete agreement?" The answer is they are typically a condition of employment. Non-compete agreements are unfair to employees, and they must go."
John	"The best way to keep quality physician providing quality care is by treating them well with autonomy, respect, safe working conditions and adequate staffing. Contractual chains preventing a physician from a better/safer working environment fostered by healthy competition is not appropriate. Physicians dedicate their careers to a community and should not have to uproot their families nor leave their patients to earn a better living. Noncompetes have already been ruled invalid for some medical specialties by the judicial branch Maintaining this across the board would provide parity for physicians."
Jacob	"I am being held by my old company and was forced to take a lower paying job in order to get away from the non compete clause. Please get rid of this, it's ruining my life."
Robert	"The proposed rule to prohibit noncompete clauses in contracts especially in health care would improve patient care in organizations which essentially chain a health care provider as a physician to one organization. They have no power to

	influence correction of inappropriate conduct unless they relocate. There is no real accountability for the employer as the employees are trapped. One the non compete is signed the organization essentially owns a highly trained professional. I have seen firsthand where very talented physicians objected to questionable ethical practices could not negotiate improvements for patients and can only resign and move to other communities to avoid being drawn into ethical issues. The clauses are used to control physicians now as the ability to enter private practice is nearly impossible due to the costs in an environment of terrible reimbursement. Senior physicians, rather than become employed in part time practices totally retire. Others as younger physicians cannot have a second part time position to help out a practice will be prohibited from assisting or changing to a practice which needs part or full time assistance. The purpose of these clauses for physicians is control and to prohibit competition. Many practices will use physicians to expand other providers employment and lock in physicians needed to oversee the other providers. The profit now is in employing provides rather than the physicians. Non compete clauses are used to also enslave other providers so they cannot move to another practice. The clauses are nothing more than a technique to enslave many providers to benefit the business of monopoly medicine. Providers have a limited number of hours they can work and practices if all types try these extreme control measures rather than working with physicians an providers to create a positive work and patient culture. Communities can loose good providers who are forced to relocate every few years and to states which prohibit non competes. The government should in Medicare and Medicaid regulations prohibit provides in the program from using non compete clauses. This may allow more physicians to work more hours and care for more patients in underserved areas within the noncompete areas. Why should non profits which control the majority of hospitals and groups be allowed to be enslaving providers. I absolutely support elimination of noncompete clauses."
Robert	"Allowing non profit hospitals to be exempt from the proposed rule banning non-competition clause is a travesty. Like by large corporate entity they should not be allowed to control competition. This hurts patients ability too maintain relationship and is a barrier to care. Physicians should not be subject to hospital administration control any more then any other employee. there is no justification for considering exemption."
Daniel	"Non-compete clauses are an affront to the open market and a significant disadvantage to physicians who are independent contractors."
Anthony	"I support banning noncompetes. They stifle innovation, allow corporations to treat people like robots, and prevent a free-flowing economy."
Ryan	"I am writing in support of ending the non-compete clause as it relates to physician employment. The non-compete clause interferes with the continuity of care and the patient physician relationship. For physicians considering leaving their current employer, a forced move outside of a geographic area or time constraint to practice in an area, essentially ends that relationship. Many physicians pursue other employment due to perceived or actual unfair work environments. The non-compete clause reduces employer accountability and reduces competition within the local healthcare environment. In summary, eliminating the non-compete clause would create an improvement in patient care and physician satisfaction."

Alison	"Non-compete agreements have lowered my income. I am a pediatrician in Illinois where non-competes are legal and are often enforced in court. My non-compete is 2 years and 15 miles AND due to confusion about how it applies to telemedicine, my lawyers say it essentially prevents me from any telemedicine. Over the past four years, even while I was seeing ever more patients, my company gradually lowered my income by $70,000 a year, but my non-compete has made it impossible for me to find another job, due to my husband's job and my kids special needs being met by the schools we are in."
TIFFANIE	"I STRONGLY SUPPORT THE BAN OF NON COMPETE CLAUSES"
Adam	" I'm a worker that has had to consider whether to take a job that requires signing a no-compete agreement several times in my career. I'd like to state my position that these are harmful to workers like me and they complicate career decisions and reduce our negotiating power and career options. Several times in my career, after weeks of interviewing and salary negotiation, I've found myself facing a required no-compete agreement that would drastically limit my future career options and negotiating power. Several times I've accepted these agreements because I had already turned down competing offers and found myself with limited options. Once I was prevented from leaving a position early because I was concerned my no-compete agreement would integrate with my new position. At least once I've turned down a position because it included a no-compete agreement. In this case, I'd have already spent hours interviewing and negotiating a job role. This time could have been spent talking to other firms where I would not be required to sign away my future career prospects."
James R	"Non-compete clauses -- and legislative fiat which restrict the ability of former employees to select appropriate offers -- both result in market malfunctions. In extreme cases they may make it impossible for the restricted individuals to work in their area of expertise; and consequently, they may result in unqualified individuals obtaining assignments for which they are not suited... There certainly exist governmental assignments, the exiting of which should be limited as to the employees' next activity. But NO commercial enterprise should be able to keep former employees from having an unfettered choice of employment. One cannot support the functioning of a free market and still allow such interference."
John	"I worked as a 1099 salesman for a company for over 17 years. I discovered that there were irregularities with my commissions and fake invoices being inputted to artificially lower my wages. In addition, if that was not enough, the culture of the company became toxic from a mental health point of view and it was mutually agreed upon by both myself and the owner of the company that it would be better for me to move on. I explained I would spend the next year closing out my jobs and then wanted to start my own business. The owner of the company told me that I did not have to wait and could start a company now. I objected, concerned that he would not pay me the commissions I was owed, just as every salesman who ever left had to deal with. I was assured that I would be paid and encouraged to start my new company, which I then did. A few months later, after bitcoin crashed, I was asked to sign a document to receive my check that week. I chose not to sign it because I did not like what was written. I was told to contact their attorney who informed me that the owner wanted to give me a severance and be done, for us both to move on. He told me to calculate my commissions and he would call next week for me to go in there and we figure out a number. Instead of the meeting that was agreed to, I was served with a cease and desist letter and informing me that I had forfeited my commissions that were owed which were several hundred thousand dollars and to close down my new company I had just heavily invested in. My wife was 8 months pregnant at the time. Them knowing that, I was so betrayed, I could not understand why he was doing this to me. Other than the fact that I knew he lost a significant amount of money in bitcoin, I did not feel that I should have to cover his gambling loss. 2 weeks later, I was served with a lawsuit for violating a non compete (that I didn't even sign). I was forced to sign a sales agreement 13 years into the 1099 employment and when we got to the non compete page, I refused. I was told that, that page would be removed and he would not try to enforce it. It was a separate page that was not signed, he removed it from the agreement. In addition I was told that if I did not sign the sales agreement, that I would not be able to collect the commissions owed at that point. Having removed the non compete, I agreed to the sales agreement. Only to have that unsigned page magically reappear as the basis for this frivolous lawsuit (again, not even signed, yet I'm still having to deal with the stress of civil litigation with never ending legal fees). I had to hire an attorney to fight the frivolous suit and to attempt to get me the commissions that were owed to me. On the very first meeting, my former employer's attorney offered to drop their suit and pay me $20,000 if I were to agree to not sue them and forfeit my commissions. Proving there was no need for the non compete and it was only being used to not pay me for the work I completed. The non compete is being used as a weapon to deprive me of what I am owed, not to protect the company. If they were so concerned about the non compete, he would not have convinced me to start my own company and would not agree to drop it if I agreed to forfeit my commissions. This has been going on almost 2 years. I have spent over 100 thousand dollars in legal fees. I could have funded my Children college education, hired new people, used it for research or development, paid taxes on profit but instead, I am forced to fight a frivolous lawsuit for a non-compete that is not even signed and am in this position, solely because I was tricked into it. The litigation seems to be never ending with my former employer refusing to comply with discovery and constantly missing deadlines and asking for extensions, requesting multiple repeated depositions of myself but not allowing me to have the same courtesy as they are manipulating the legal system to avoid resolution. Using the courts and this unsigned non compete to try to bankrupt me. Non competes are evil. If you treat your workers fairly, they'll want to work for you. If you are a good company, people won't want to leave. Non Competes are nothing more than a form of 21st century slavery to control people. America is supposed to be the land of the free, home of the brave. I pray that the FTC' and our legislatures are brave enough to free the people from this evil tool being used to implement servitude and limit individuals' growth and wages, allowing them to provide a better life for their family's and society as a whole. I believe that eliminating non competes is the single most effective thing that government can do to increase the standard of living for the population."

Ryan	"Non-Compete Clauses have shown that they harm all workers, yet they harm low wage workers the most, particularly in the service industry. I first became aware of the problem when I read that the sandwich shop chain "Jimmy John's" was using them against their workers several years ago, and now that this proposed rule is published, I'm actually stunned to find out that the practice is so common. Naturally, some states care about their workers and others don't, and since states that don't aren't going to fix this problem, it falls to the federal government to do something about it. With national inflation surging and worker pay struggling to keep up, and with low income workers having limited employability options in the local marketplace, the government should be helping them by banning non-competitive behavior. The CEOs that run the grocery store chains laugh at a public that can barely even afford a carton of eggs anymore. How is it fair that the same CEO might choose to depress wages in the grocery industry by saying that the workers who quit can't get a job at another grocery store? Right now, in most of the states, nothing stops this, and it's probably actually happening. This behavior clearly harms workers, sabotages competitors of larger chains, and generally unduly interferes with inter-state commerce. Please finalize this regulation."
Robert	" As a practicing emergency physician, I SUPPORT the proposed Non-Compete Clause prohibition, Matter No. P201200. Historically, non-compete clauses have been used by physician contract management groups (CMGs) as a "poison pill" to prevent hospitals from contracting with a new CMG as the new group will have to recruit all-new physicians, even if the current CMG is not providing the best service to patients. Non-compete clauses are also used to intimidate employed physicians, who would need to move themselves and their families if they lose their current employment. There is no legitimate purpose to non-compete clauses used in the field of emergency medicine. Their strong anti-competitive outcomes lead to higher costs for patients and government medical programs, and worse care for patients. Please contact me if I can provide any additional information."
William	"I would like to see non-competes abolished. I am currently anchored to a company that forced me to sign one and cannot leave without threat of being sued. I have a job offer currently with another company that would increase my pay by 20% but if I leave my current employer I will be sued."
William	"You must absolutely ban or place clear limitations on this practice. It is anti-competitive and prevents the labor market from functioning as it should. In particular it should at least be banned for non-exempt employees, and any employee that requires a state license to work, since licensure is already a built-

	in limitation to job mobility. There is really no reason to allow it for any employee, as states like California realized many years ago. There is plenty of precedent for how to do this without compromising a businesses' trade secrets or other know-how. In general, this practice is anti-employee, as it tends to trap them with bad employers because they can't move because of the non-compete."
Robert	"This is long overdue! Even if the employer pays you to sit out, the length of time out is a killer on what you bring to the table with experience and business contacts."
David	"I submit this comment as a partner at a Chicago law firm that represents workers in non-compete and other restrictive covenant litigation. I also am an adjunct professor teaching employment law at Northern Illinois University College of Law. The FTC's proposed rule banning non-competes, while a good start, must go one step further to protect workers against restrictive covenants typically contained in employment agreements. The FTC should expand the rule to also prohibit, in the employment relationship, agreements not to solicit customers ("non-solicit" agreements) unless necessary for a legally-protected interest. The FTC rule banning non-competes is necessary to stop worker abuse; a compromise rule is not appropriate. As an employment lawyer who represents workers, non-compete bound workers regularly come to by law firm with a question along the lines of: "I signed a stack of onboarding paperwork on my first day on the job that had a noncompete. It isn't enforceable, is it?" They are shocked to learn how much it will cost to "get out" of their noncompete when sued. The cost of defending employees against restrictive covenant litigation typically ranges from $15,000 on the low side (coming to a quick resolution) to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Very few employees can afford litigation or dealing. As a result, few employees ever challenge non-competes and, instead, reluctantly comply with them while giving up better job opportunities, resulting in less money for them and their families. Equally troubling, even if an employee is willing to take the risk of getting sued, many prospective employers simply will not hire a candidate subject to a noncompete. Prospective employers today rarely perceive hiring a worker as being worth the risk of getting dragged into a lawsuit. Employers send "cease and desist" letters right when an employee is in the process of transitioning to a job. This results in the withdrawal of a job offer leaving the employee without the job. Many business groups argue that a categorical ban goes too far. I disagree and believe that the FTC's categorical ban on non-competes in the workplace is appropriate. Of course, there are many examples of egregious non-compete overreaching. While these stories make for good headlines, my experience is that the real gut-wrenching and sleepless nights comes from higher-level employees subject to non-competes: Consider the single parent earning $250,000 per year in her executive level position that has little room for advancement. She gets an offer from a competitor for $350,000 but cannot take the position because of a non-compete the day she started her original job. $250,000 may seem like a lot of money, but it really isn't to many single parents (or heads of a family) who are supporting children. The FTC should not get drawn into artificial line-drawing by exempting highly compensated individuals. Equally problematic, a bright-line rule will avoid the

	inevitable litigation that ensues when there are exceptions. Non-Competes discourage workers from starting new businesses and this hurts the American economy. Launching a business with a lawsuit on their back from a well-funded company is typically too much to handle for a small entrepreneur with limited resources. These lawsuits, even when they do not have merit, often have the intended and actual effect to sue a start-up out of business. What this means for our economy is that there is less competition and consumers (often businesses) end up paying more for goods and services. Sometimes, and often, these cases settle with the employee agreeing, confidentially, to not solicit a long list of customers within the industry. This agreement among competitors cuts up the marketplace and leaves those customers with fewer choices, raises antitrust concerns, and is anti-competitive. The FTC should expand the rule to also ban employment agreements that forbid customer non-solicitation agreements unless necessary for a legally protected interest. This exception is recognition that in some cases an employer does have a legitimate interest in protecting its workforce from walking away with established customers and to prevent abuse by employees. I propose a four (4) part test to determine whether customers have a legally protected interest in customers from which they can properly be subject to a non-compete: The employee must show (a) the non-solicitation agreement is necessary to protect trade secret information, (b) the restricted employee did not introduce the subject of the non-solicitation agreement to the employer, (c) the customers has a near-permanent relationship with the employer, and (d) the employee had a material role in maintaining the relationship with employer that is the subject of the non-solicitation agreement."
Garth	"I strongly support the passing of this rule. Non-compete clauses are an unfair method of competition and are coercive to workers."
Kevin	"Non-compete clauses are necessary to protect the business investment of hiring new professionals (investment = losses for a period of time) as the new professionals ramp up their expertise and customer base in a specific geography. If businesses cannot have that protection, then they will pay lower wages knowing there's the risk that the employees take the knowledge and customer base the business across the street. Non-compete clauses are part of private contracts that are negotiated at arm's length. The government should not intervene in private contracts."
Alan	"I am totally against non-compete agreements. It is right now preventing me from pursuing my own business to better care for my family."
Esther	"I strongly support the non-compete clause"
Kathleen	"I strongly support a ban on non-compete clauses in healthcare. Non compete clauses have dubious purpose in the delivery of quality healthcare , disrupt the relationships, and result in the exit of doctors from the workforce in a time where we are already short- staffed."

Amy	"Please consider this case very seriously. Non competes are very limiting for the employee and feels like corporate indentured servitude all over again. Companies know that they have you on the hook by baiting you with income agreements and then you are forced to stay with a company - especially those with specialized industry knowledge. The way these agreements are written it makes it almost impossible for someone to earn a comparable wage for a year or more."
David	"Hello I am a physician with a non compete. I think it is unfair. I work for a multibillion dollar health care corporation with lots of easy ways to maintain their patients- having their other specialists within the same system, having their records on file with their EMR, etc. It simply would not be that easy to poach patients if I were to move to another healthcare system. So if I leave it is no big deal for them, however for me I would have to move me and my family to another city just to continue working."
Barbara	"Anything that reduces the power of business over workers, is all to the good and will help preserve our shrinking middle class."
Curtis	"Reminds me of the Jim Crow laws of return. If a worker escaped or left a bad job, he could be returned to his old job."
Thomas	"I agree with the proposed rule. I am a physician working for a large independent physician group. My contract has a 15 mile radius in the Chicago market. This severely limits my options for changing positions. This also restricts my ability to make a living. The medical group has changed the compensation plan without a change to our contract. This new plan will reduce the compensation for 25 physicians. The non compete clause limits any bargaining power with management. The risk of retaliation is high, the group has retaliated with other physicians in the past. The proposed rule could help increase our ability to change jobs and see more patients at another job or to continue to build our practice and see more patients. I understand this is selfish, but this has affected a significant number of my coworkers as well as other physician friends in other regions affected by this. Thank you for allowing to comment on this issue. It is important and significant"
Michael	"Hello, I wanted to voice my strong support for banning non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses chill workers rights and abilities to advance within their industry. Additionally, they unfairly favor private businesses while chilling competition within their marketplace, which has a negative effect on the market and larger economy. Capitalism demands competition and by allowing private businesses to bar their employees from freely moving to other companies within their industry we aren't allowing the competition that capitalism relies on. I hope you will put individual workers rights ahead of larger businesses and agree to ban non-compete clauses. Thank you"
Colin	"As a physician I strongly support banning non compete clauses. These are inherently undemocratic and solodify power in the hands of large corporations. In healthcare, power is quite concentrated within large healthcare systems, especially at a regional level. Non competes artificially lower physician pay (which is why the AIA strongly opposes this action) and lower competition within the healthcare space for pay, benefits and improved patient care/facilities."

Crey	" Dear Chair Lina Khan, "I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I am a union operator. I would love to see the workforce to have more freedom. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Angel	"As a family physician I am completely in agreement to remove any kind of non compete clauses as it basically strangle physician to negotiate fair compensation and competitive pay by forcing us away from the patients that trust is"
Jessica	"I strongly support banning non compete clauses. They hinder care especially in the underserved population. I work in child and adolescent psychiatry which typically have wait-lists in the 6 month range or more. This prevents care in our most vulnerable populations"
Aleisha	"Thank you. Due to inflation, the high cost of housing in the Chicagoland area, and working for a non-profit organization, I am unable to afford an apartment in Chicago. This rule to void existing non-competes is wonderful as I will be able to work more, provide more services to the public, and earn more to be able to afford housing and food as a result of working Thank you so much for this rule."
Ashwani	"I am a primary care physician and I am in favor of ending noncompete clauses which affect physicians that have to let go of a patient panel and seek jobs at least 10-25 miles away when looking for alternative options. This might keep a physician under unfavorable conditions and lock them out of other opportunities for growth and also encourage corporations to create more unfavorable conditions for them."
Dane	"Please get rid of non-competes. Please."
Alex	"Non-competes are bad for innovation and limit wage growth and opportunities for employees. They are harming economic prosperity and should be banned outright"
Maria	"I feel that non-compete's are used primarily to curtail workers wages and intimidate workers into not using their full leverage when negotiating with their employers. I think at their core con-compete clauses are anti-freedom and inhibit workers from making their own decisions within the labor market. I firmly support the proposal to end the practice of non-competes and to stop companies and businesses from being able to impose them."

RAJU	"This must include healthcare workers and physicians . For too long we have been treated differently allowing hospitals to essentially capture us at a young age and then threaten if we leave they will use the non compete to financially destroy us. It also can hurt access for patients as well. I fully support the end is non compete clauses."
Carl	"I am a small business owner providing professional consulting services. On principle, my company does not require our employees to sign non-compete contracts, even though they have access to proprietary information, because we do not believe we have the right to prevent our staff from making a living, whether that living is made with us or anyone else. That companies employing staff having access to no sensitive information are allowed to restrict their employees in this way is unconscionable. This playing field is not level, the concentration of resources on business side of the equation makes it impossible for the individual to fight the restriction, and untold suffering results. Change this rule."
C.	"I fully support the ban on non-compete clauses within employment contracts. My employer sent one out mid-week and forced ALL employees to sign within 2 days. We had no chance to review or negotiate terms."
Alexander	"Healthcare is a specific scenario the FTC needs to address, in particular if as I understand it nonprofits will not be affected by this Rule. Very large, "nonprofit" healthcare organizations are dominating the market and establishing monopolies on care. There are many economic factors at play driving these changes (many driven by the government / CMS and payments). But specifically regarding this proposed rule, it is critical to understand how this will affect physicians . Approximately 74% of physicians are employed, many by these large nonprofit healthcare organizations. Thus, most doctors are now employees and are negatively affected by these noncompete clauses, similarly to other employees. Noncompete agreements in medicine were historically used to make sure a doctor didn't "hang a shingle up" across the street from his or her prior practice. This is clearly not how healthcare works anymore as the markets are dominated by very large healthcare organizations. Currently, most MDs go to college for 4 years, med school for 4 years, then are matched with a training program for 3-7 years (without specifically choosing their employer or location), then end up employed by a "nonprofit" organization. A noncompete clause for doctors limits negotiating ability, salary, mobility, location, and places additional unnecessary stressors on doctors and their families. If this Proposed Rule does NOT affect nonprofit organizations because it is under Section 5, then this proposed rule would severely and negatively affect doctors in an already stressed healthcare environment. (1) ban noncompetes for private practice doctors (where it still does make at least some sense for doctors to protect their privately held business) but yet (2) allow ongoing noncompete clauses for the massive nonprofit employers. It would continue to kill private practice and drive all MDs to be employed, taking even more power away from doctors and into the hands of corporations, and hurting hard working doctors. The FTC and the Proposed Rule should specifically ban noncompete clauses for nonprofit healthcare organizations."

Catherine	"I am a physician and strongly oppose non compete clauses. They prevent physicians from moving to another job without physically moving. They allow corporate medicine to manipulate doctors and prevent job negotiations."
Veronica	"To whom it may concern: It is time that these onorous, ridiculous and ANTICOMPETITIVE non-compete clauses be done away with. They only serve the interests of monopolies, while harming workers, consumers and communities, please and thanks"
Amit	"This rule should help the workers in the short term and long term. Specially, I want to make a comment about the employed physicians . Over the last decade, the Hospital systems have consolidated and in effect have a near monopoly in some of the regional markets. One of the features that enables them is the Non-compete clauses for the physicians and even nurses. This really handcuffs the physicians to poorly run health care systems, and also severely limits the physicians to be advocates for their patients or advocates for change. The current system is that if you are not happy with the way hospitals are being run, you have to uproot your family to find a different employment and the hospital systems have misused the broad non-compete clause to their advantage. This has lead to high physician dissatisfaction, burnout, poor patient care and most importantly limited competition and increased cost of care. This is a step in the right direction."
Amy	" Physicians should definitely be included. They play a critical role in the treatment team, and non- competes can lead to direct harm if patients when physicians are willing & able to care for them, but their hands are legally tied."
Erin	"Please end non-compete clauses in labor contracts. Businesses can require confidentiality and safeguarding of information to protect proprietary interests. There is no reason to allow for labor exploitation and taking away people's right to sell their labor as they choose."
Hintsa	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final nile that bans noncompete agreements. Sincerely, Hintsa Hagos"
Dillon	"Ending my non compete could geatly increase my mobility within the geater labor force and help me fill in the blanks of a dynamic labor market. END NON COMPETES!"

Simone	"Thank you for bringing this proposal forward. I would also request that this rule apply to non-profit hospital systems as well. As a physician working for a hospital system that is doing nothing regarding physician burnout, I would like to be able to leave and open up my own practice. However, I have been a member of this community for some 30 years, 20+ as a physician and I feel I owe it to the underserved members of this community to continue to provide excellent care for them; care they often do not receive with other clinicians they see or have seen. Leaving the area is not an option but neither is continuing to be complicit in the substandard care they receive without me and those of like minds. Reasons such as not wanting to uproot family and the hassle of having to move to another location also keep individuals in a community without the option of leaving. These physicians are increasingly prone to burnout which ultimately leads to substandard care for their patients. There may also be a ripple effect of an overall improvement in healthcare. Despite the misinformation that is often propagated about physicians, the vast majority simply want to be able to provide excellent care, high quality care to those individuals we are blessed to care for. It is the systems in which we function that often prevent us from doing this to the best of our ability. The only downside is for the organizations who use non-compete clauses to prevent them from having to replace clinicians. Please give us the freedom to be better."
H RONALD	"THIS IS JUST A NEW FORM OF RESTRICTING COMPETITION COUPLED WITH WAGE SLAVERY - ANYONE WHO CANNOT VISUALIZE THE DYNAMICS OF THIS LEGAL "SNAFU" IS A TRULY AN *** !"
Carol	"This law is unfair to the regular worker and once again gives all the power to big corporations. People should be able to change jobs no matter what job they choose to change to."
Catherine	"Please don't exclude physicians from non competes! We deserve the chance to stay in the same city if we move jobs and not upset our entire families and move somewhere completely new to make a change."
Juan Gerardo	"Non compete clauses for veterinarians should not exist"
Lisa	"Please eliminate the non-compete rule for employees in low wage jobs or jobs that have no reasonable need for a non-compete clause. I just watched the video in the New York Times. I've known hair stylists in this situation. In addition to what was covered in the video, it causes employees to stay employed with an employer they don't want to work for. It gives the employer too much power over employees. The employee can't ask for better working conditions or anything small because they are afraid of being fired. My hair stylist had to quit her main job because she had a side gig doing color in a different town. She wasn't a colorist at her main job, but they said she couldn't stay. It's very unfair."
Michael	"I support this change. As someone who had to sign a non compete clause for their first job I agree that they limit competition and innovation. They let companies rely on a legal document to motivate labor from its employees rather than competitive compensation."

Clinton	"Hospitals may need some protections so provider's don't use hospital resources to build a patient load and then take them all across the street, but non-competes are currently used as tools to impose de facto ownership of workers that enables tremendous abuse. I highly encourage this type of proposed rule after twelve solid months of my attempts as an emergency physician to open my own non-emergency practice failed to convince my hospital to lower the legal gm from my head. An email I wrote to my hospital's CEO today, in the last month of my employment, based on my understanding of the contract and Illinois law: Dr. , BLUF: This is a summary of how I eagerly returned home to work as an emergency physician at  after military service and was systematically disenfranchised and driven out of the organization over the period of two years. I hope you can appreciate the disconnect between 's stated values and the draconian power plays of your legal department. The FTC's proposed rule on eliminating non-competes has entered a comment period just as I am ending my time at  due to the very same issue. As you may know, 's physician employment contract imposes extensive restrictions and my last 18 months are a case-study in why non-compete reform is both ethical and inevitable. I left all my family and served on active duty for seven years, being stationed as far away as , before returning home to central . I was gone for the death of close family members and other important personal milestones and stood ready to be deployed as an emergency medicine physician to any combat zone so that we, as free people, can choose our own destinies. I looked forward to finally having my own chance at exercising the freedom that I'd sacrificed the better part of a decade for when I was able to return home during the summer of 2020. Unfortunately, I signed a  physician employment contract and bought a house. One year after separating from the Army, I learned that this contract allowed  to use litigation to prevent me from any other work in the healthcare field within 50 miles. In practice, of course, this really means nearly 100 (next closest cities being , , etc). I also learned that Illinois is an employment at-will state. This combination means that  can terminate one's employment at any time, for any reason, and then banish them from making any living in the healthcare field for three years. Its nature allows for tremendous employee abuse in the wrong leadership's hands. And if I want to keep living and working near my family, I would have to keep working for  for the rest of my career. Is this the freedom I served to protect? With regard to my specific case, I was treated very much like property because, well, the contract pretty much treats us like property. I am attaching a document with all of my relevant correspondence. I have been most disappointment with *'s inability to show any kind of humanity after this direct email, though it is consistent with the overall theme, and the series of half-truths ending with what I can only consider either intentional misleading or sheer incompetence from  (as a representative of the legal department). Regardless of how the FTC's proposed rule turns out, I hope for the sake of future physicians you can facilitate reform of the employment contract in such a way that provides common sense protections for the hospital without demanding complete control of your physicians. There seemed to be some persistent belief that I was trying to game the system, so I have waited until now, when I am not asking for any

	contractual concession, to share this with you. I do hope that there is some accountability for the people responsible for wasting so much of my time, money, and emotional energy and that the physicians that follow me are treated like free people with their own aspirations rather than property, but that is for you to decide. [several quoted mails] Ironically, the best way to stifle my entrepreneurial spirit would have been to keep me happy and working at . Starting a business is absolutely saturated with overwhelming unknowns and risks, and frankly, it's really hard to imagine how I could make any real dent in *'s business. Like Minute Maid driving up and crushing some kid's lemonade stand, all of this just comes across as bullying. I like to think that I'm pretty smart and that I have vision, but I have to admit, I never imagined that this organization that I have thought so highly of for so long would be this petty. _ I have attached a document with all relevant correspondence. It blew my mind to learn how these kinds of contracts are legal and, as a business owner myself, I KNOW these contracts can be limited in a way that provides reasonable business protections without the frank abuse of employees that current contracts allow."
Hadyn	"I support this proposal without reservation. Hospital systems should not have the ability to prevent an employee from seeking alternative employment in any geographical region at any time. As is the case for many physicians, I own a home in the region in which I work, my children attend school, and my family has formed numerous community connections. Non-compete clauses place an undue burden on physicians and their families in the event that a term of employment comes to an end at a given hospital. Physicians are then forced to either travel long distances for employment, or to uproot their families and relocate when they are unable to seek employment at other hospitals in their geographic region."
Hattie	"Non-compete clauses are problematic for employees because they reinforce the imbalance of power in the employee-employer relationship. They also limit the mobility of workers, and limit local employers from recruiting talent, and suppress wages. Given the investment required to obtain a skillset or knowledge base, it is an employee's right to use their human capital as they see fit in the industry of their choice. A federal ban on non-compete clauses is a step towards equity in a free market that tends primarily to benefit capital/management, while leaving effective clauses, such as non-solicitation, revolving door restrictions and enforcement of intellectual property rights intact."
Andrea	"I am a physician with subspecialty training I devoted 10 years of my life beyond college and 450K to acquire the knowledge and skill to form meaningful relationships and deliver quality care to my patients. I started out in private practice but within 10 years, private practices were crushed by hospitals that were then bought out by larger "health care systems". The majority of those who held out have now been bought out by private equity groups. The goal of these conglomerates is to make more money for the shareholders and CEO's. Well compensated doctors average 250k and are on call 24/7 every day of the year including holidays and are liable for every word they say and decision they make. The CEO's and shareholders make MILLIONS of dollars a year. They are paid by the government to accept Medicaid and Medicare but the doctors are

	compensated on their productivity/collections. Medicare cuts reimbursement by 4-5% every year. I feel very strongly that non competes have no place in health care. These companies have not invested a penny in the training of doctors; on the contrary WE serve THEM essentially for free during our training so they cannot support the argument that non competes protect them from loosing out on their investments. They cannot support the claim that they will lose confidential information because patients have a right to their own medical records and to choose their doctors. They cannot support the claim that they fonn meaningful relationships with their clients because relationships are formed between the doctor and the patient, not the corporation whose goal is to get as many patients in and out as possible. Non competes make it virtually impossible for doctors to leave their employers without have to relocate their entire families and start from scratch without a referral network. Many doctors have taken early retirement or left medicine altogether because the prospects are so dim. We all agree that access to medical care is a big problem. Non competes make that even harder. Those that stay in the corporate system are overworked and under appreciated and cannot possibly deliver good care under those conditions. To the argument that noncompetes are necessary to avoid excessive employee turnover I would suggest that a better way to retain doctors (and by extension patients) is not to treat doctors like they are indentured servants who are easily replaceable by mid-level providers. Non competes might make sense to protect smaller practices from losing employees but should not exist to put profits over patients."
Charles	"Not compete clauses aren't about competing. It is about trying to trap employees in their job. It need to the and needed to decades ago. Just another tool abused by corporations these days."
Stephanie	"I urge the FTC to eliminate these NDAs and protect the rights of American workers"
Erik	"I strongly support this effort to remove non-compete clauses. In 2010 I worked for Native Staffing which contracted me out to Siemens, which contracted me to Cigna in Illinois to perform technical work on computer systems. Three months into the job, Siemens lost the contract with Cigna. The company that won the contract approached me about continuing the same work at Cigna while being employed by them. My 6 month non-compete with Native Staffing did not allow me to work at Cigna. The new company encouraged me to ignore this but they had their own non-compete clause. Theirs was for 2 years and included a provision requiring me to pay them a quarter (25%) of my first year's pay or $10,000 if I signed on and later violated their non-compete. When I asked if this provision could be removed from the new contract they declined. My conclusions from this are that a non-compete arbitrarily ended my employment, which was otherwise going fine and would have continued. Additionally, if my employer wanted recompense for their services in finding and hiring me they could have negotiated that as part of the contract they held with another corporation. I could negotiated on my own but none of these companies had any reason to listen to me. In 2011 I was employed by Robert Half International Inc. to fulfill a contract with Gigenet. Robert Half International imposed a non-compete and Gigenet later

	asked me to violate it. Again I was asked to accept the consequences of violating a non-compete so one corporation would not have to pay another. Most of my work since 2010 has been as an employee for staffing firms where my continued employment is contingent upon my employer retaining a contract with another company or organization. These almost always include non-compete clauses. Where those were not present there was no meaningful impact for my employer that I could discern. Except for the scenario where a non-compete clause is between a buyer and seller of a business, I support a unitbnn ban on non-compete clauses for all workers regardless of category. It simplifies application of the ban, causes gains for any category of worker to apply to all workers, and it may have very useful effects on the trend for businesses to get bigger and closer to forming monopolies. If a big business needs to pay the top executives and employees enough that they could afford to create new competing businesses then that may function as an incentive to narrow the pay gap between those employees and the lowest paid employees of the company. Existing protections for trade secrets already give employers the means to combat theft in those areas. Please move forward with this proposed rule as it stands."
Khalid	"I oppose restrictions, like covenants on physicians. This limits out livelihood. Times have changed and so should our rules."
Paula	"I fully support the abolition of non-compete agreements. Employers have long used non-competes as tools of intimidation against workers. They are by their very nature un-American."
Carol	"I believe the non-compete clause prevents the free flow of labor and inhibits justified wage increases for individuals and thus should be abolished. It effects so many more people than one might expect -- and in all salary ranges. One example of a small field which is negatively impacted by non-competes are veterinarians. Many regular veterinarians have non-competes but the most onerous of these are for veterinary specialists (cardiologists, neurologists, oncologists, etc.) The specialty hospitals which employ these specialists are almost exclusively owned by large corporations and they all insist that prospective employees sign a non-compete or they will not be hired. These are extremely harsh non-competes -- 2 years and 25 miles. This prevents anyone from leaving unless they move out of town. They can't make a 50 mile daily commute and then sometimes be on call and come in at night! Furthermore, in this industry all these hospitals are clustered within a big city which can support them so they can literally all be within a 25 mile radius. These specialists often have to move out of state in order to leave their job. How disruptive for their families! These non-competes give the balance of power to these large corporations at the expense of the workers, once hired. There is no need for the corporations to raise salaries because no one is able to leave to improve their salary as in other fields, since the non-compete would require them to move or not work for two years. I have read that non-competes might only be eliminated beneath a certain level of income. This implies that anyone who makes more than this threshold is assumed to hold trade secrets or something due to their status. In the case of these veterinarians, everything they learned was in vet

	school or residency, not from work. Signing a non-disclosure and a non-solicitation should be adequate protection for these corporations who employ them. Also, these specialists, after graduating from college, attend 4 years of vet school, then 4 years of internship and residency during which they earn less than $30,000 so after all of these years of training and little income, need to make money to compensate for all of these years and shouldn't have their income artificially restrained. Finally, many have large student loan balances which they need to pay back so they need the ability to negotiate for wage improvement over the years which the non-compete prevents them from doing. In conclusion, this is an example of an industry where ownership is concentrated in the hands of a few corporate owners. They have undue power over their employees because of the non-competes. It tilts the scale to the benefit of the corporate owners to the detriment of the employees."
Heidi	"I agree with dumping the non-compete"
Haseeb	"I support the ban on non competing clause for the sake of patient care since patients who know their physicians for years can't be deprived of their physicians who took care of them for years just because a physician leaves an organization or viceversa. If the physician still wishes to stay in the neighborhood to serve the patients in the local community, they should be allowed to do so. The existing non competing clause deprives patients their right to retain their physician. It will better for patients and physicians."
Konstantin	"To whom it may concern, I am expressing my full support for Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200. Non-compete clauses are a predatory practice designed to place employees at a significant disadvantage, limiting competition and forcing employees to accept and endure substandard conditions. Talent recruitment and retention should be done through offering superior working conditions and incentives, rather than through disempowerment and fear."
John	"In 2008 was in the hose industry - hydraulic industrial ... my role was a regional sales manager covering three states. I left the company to work for a competitor. My pay went from 80k to 100k...when I immediately left my former employee sued me for breach of non-compete and my new employer did not support me with any legal representation. The new employer terminated my employment. Resulting in me being unemployed. I was without unemployment insurance because I had left the company to work for another and the new company after two week did not provide any financial assistance... the great housing crash of 2008 was thereafter... I was without employment for over a year and a half causing me to deplete my 401k to pay my monthly bills.. non compete should not exist, I paid the price then and for my future retirement"
Samar	"I applaud the FTC for finally addressing this archaic practice of stifling entrepreneurs and innovators. They spend most of their lives learning and perfecting their craft only to be curtailed by large corporations."

Avi-Yona	"I support the end of non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses are taking over the teaching industry. Are we really not meant to teach as many students as possible, regardless of whatever brand decides to make some third party money off it by hopping in-between us? Instead of indentured servitude, it's just indentured punishment for letting the market (or common sense) determine what you're worth."
Daniel	"Hello, [...] I'm a Physician Assistant in Chicago, Illinois. I'm very much in support of this ban as non-competes not only trap workers but promote less investment from an employers side to better a workplace as they know the employee is likely to have to accept the circumstances given the non compete. This would greatly improve the work lives of healthcare providers and allow us to provide greater care!"
Lori	"I am a family physician. Trust me, there are no "trade secrets" to protect. And, these days, it is not so easy for patients to pick up and move their care across town to follow a doctor. They are more likely to be locked into a particular health system by their insurance company. What these noncompete clauses in physician contracts essentially do is allow large medical groups to treat us just poorly enough that we will not move our families away from their schools and friends. They change our employment conditions with a knowledge that most of us will take it. I live in a smaller metro area surrounded by many rural areas. These rural areas are often very short of physicians. Perhaps they would be more grateful to have us and treat us with some semblance of professional respect. It certainly would be a good thing for their rural patients. I suspect abolishing these non-competes for physicians will result in some escape to these communities, as well as some people, deciding to go out on their own and be independents in our community."
Margo	"I am retired now. Most of my career was spent in the technology sector which has a history of heavily relying on the use of non compete clauses. I'm my experience those clauses were used as handcuffs for employees. Companies should focus on employee satisfaction to retain workers, not use threats to keep them. I am in favor of elimination non compete clauses"
Nathan	" I believe this is the correct way of promoting business growth and create a stronger economy. I am in the accounting field and this has caused harm to me and my family. I was working for a company that is a non profit that works mostly in the farming sector. It has had issues with management and unequal pay for several years. I left them once and came back after a major change in the organization only to find that the issues that were there before are still present. I voiced my opinions and tried to work past problems in the organization and in the office that I worked in, but found no attempt for change or willingness to find resolutions. It was not a great environment to work in and seen no end in site. I decided to leave and start my own business and worked with another firm that the owner wanted to retire. I did not actively reach out to clients. I had a noncompete with the company, and to be upfront and honest with them I told them exactly what I was doing and offered to pay for the clients that I wanted to

	take with me. They worked with me on this, and even put together revenues amounts for those clients. Two weeks before leaving I reached out to two clients that were on the list to purchase from them and just told them I was leaving and told them I was working with the company to purchase their account if they wanted to come with me. The management team found out about that and then stopped communicating with me about purchasing clients. The following week I received a letter from their attorney to cease and desist. After I left I did not actively call up any of their clients, but had numerous clients call me up wanting to work with me. About 10 months later I received notice from the courthouse they were suing me for being in violation of the noncompete. Months later and we still havent resolved the case and they won't move forward with what they want from me. These noncompete agreements hamper competition and growth. I would like to do more, but in fear of having to pay them I am treading water to see what the outcomes is and how much it will cost me. I know other co workers have left as well and are in the same situation. These agreements has been a strain on my family and want to move on and grow my business, but there are lots of unknowns at this point. "
Mia	"Please stop non compete clauses for anyone in health care."
Jeffrey	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing today to strongly support your proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses in the healthcare industry. As a physician, I believe that non- compete clauses are detrimental to both the healthcare industry and patients. Non-compete clauses restrict healthy competition in the industry and give employers unfair leverage during contract negotiations. This can lead to lower wages and reduced benefits for physicians, making it more difficult for them to provide quality care for their patients. Non-compete clauses often require physicians to relocate their families to a new city or state. This is disruptive to both the physician and their family, and can have a negative impact on the continuity of care that patients receive. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit patient access to specialty care. When physicians are restricted from practicing in certain areas, patients may not be able to access the care they need. This is especially true in rural and underserved areas, where access to specialty care is already limited. For all of these reasons. I believe that non-compete clauses should be banned in the healthcare industry. They are detrimental to both physicians and patients, and do not benefit anyone. I urge you to move forward with your proposed rule and ban non-compete clauses. Sincerely, Jeffrey Jenson M.D."
Basant	"It should be removed as this restrict the freedom of choice."
Mariah	"Please ban non-competes. My field is very narrow. I have a Master's Degree in my field, and am only qualified for a single clinical position. To put it in perspective, there are less then ten schools for this degree in the United States. Unless I give up my career, I can do nothing else. I was hired by the biggest company that owns shops all across the United States. Starting my residency, I. was made to sign a two year, 50 mile from the nearest branch non- compete. To get a different job when the working conditions became unbearable, I had to

	either move my family across the country or drive over an hour each way. I chose to move, as the next closest location was almost two hours away. And technically, it was labeled as ANY clinic location, which I would still be in violation of, but know would not hold up in court. Our office was kept at half staff for three years before I finally quit. If there wasn't a non- compete and clinicians could make lateral shifts, I firmly believe that the company would have made more of an effort to improve our quality of life instead of simply telling us to make budget by putting in more unpaid hours. Non-competes are coercive and trap people like me, with a narrow scope of practice, in bad work environments because of the social and monetary costs of moving to try and escape them. Please get rid of them so no one else has to feel trapped."
India	"I think that non-compete clauses are harmful to health care workers like nurses and physicians limiting their practice."
Cherie	"I am totally in favor of the proposed FCC rule to ban companies from requiring workers to sign noncompete agreements. Companies use noncompete provisions to keep workers from leaving for better jobs. My daughter was routinely subject to non-compete employment clauses when she worked in various beauty salons. They banned her from obtaining employment in another salon within 25 miles. This allowed the salon she was employed at to take advantage of her in terms of hours and wages. Because she had a child, she couldn't just leave the area to work farther away, she was stuck. The FCC estimates that if this rule goes into effect, workers' wages would rise by $300 billion per year and an estimated 30 million Americans would have better career opportunities. And the rule will also stop companies from requiring workers to reimburse them for certain kinds of training if they leave before a certain period of time, an alternate strategy some companies have used when their noncompete provisions were scrutinized. If the training in question "is not reasonably related to the costs the employer incurred for training the worker", it will be banned and this is how it should be. Please enact this mandatory ban on non- compete agreements."
Maurene	"Fully support the end of non compete clauses! This will be a welcome change and force employers to work harder to keep their employees."
Maureen	"Please stop the use of non compete clauses. If an employer wants someone to stay, they should treat them well. Non competes are abusive."
Cezary	"Stop taking away people's options to interact how we want in the market. Instead, focus on empowering people to make the deals that we want to make, such as through the Universal Basic Income. Also, i make myself available to you for consultation. For more perspective on this issue, i invite you to watch a YouTube show my team, Interactive Media 16, has recently recorded to discuss your proposal https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SXEeKeSKsfM"
Destiny	"A statement in favor of banning of non-compete agreements. Like most millennials, my career began with an entry level position shortly after the

	completion of an undergraduate degree. Unlike most in my generation, I have continued at the same company because of frequent promotions and steady, challenging projects. My current role as a key strategic decision-maker required the signing of a non-compete agreement. Though I have no plans to move to another company at the moment, I expect this will be necessary in the future - at best, to continue my career growth and support myself and my growing family; and at worst, due to economic constraints of my industry. Even the idea of continuing my current role and responsibilities and looking for a new position, all while managing a young family is intimidating and exhausting. Trying to manage all of the above while also navigating around a non-compete agreement is unthinkable. It is a fact of my life that my non-compete agreement will eventually stunt my career growth, which in turn will hinder my family's financial stability. My story is not unique across America. While I understand the reasons companies force employees to sign non-competes, the nation's economic growth is more important than the growth of the companies that already have financial security and will continue to be stable, with or without non-compete agreements. For my future and the future of America's working people, please ban non-compete clauses. Thank you."
Robert	"A nationwide ban on non-compete clauses is an excellent step in favor of workers' rights. These rights need to be expanded to include ALL workers, though. Having carve-outs for specific employers still limits the rights of many people. As a physician, I would have to leave my home and relocate should I wish to find new employment. This is wholly unacceptable as a way of doing business. Having to compete in the marketplace with other employers will fundamentally improve the health care system."
Jake	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I support the effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. Noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements. Sincerely, Jake Kaufman Chicago, IL"
Kay	"Non compete clauses are a burden for employees and are designed to put fear in them or punish them if they leave an employer. It forces them to stay in jobs that are detrimental to them for fear of leaving and getting another job close by without needing to disrupt their entire families lives. There should be a common sense approach to this clause. Restricting it to 1-2 miles will be reasonable for employees. But some employers are forcing employees to sign non competes that restrict them from a 15-20 mile radius. Which means if employees quit, they have to move."
Lamaretta	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 I am currently under a non-compete despite having no trade-secret or proprietary knowledge of my company. Additionally, my company, which acts as a lead generator for major

	insurance carriers in the Medicare Advantage industry, has not developed any proprietary technology, sales tactics, or consumer data that differs from that of any other agency with which it competes. They eliminated my role and thus I am unable to pursue a role with ANY other company in the Medicare Advantage space for a period of two years. This would include any company or carrier that also sells products beyond Medicare Advantage. Additionally, my noncompete is global, lasts two years, AND is the same noncompete given to everyone from a front line customer service rep to a C-suite exec. Therefore, I am being forced to ignore my most recent skills and industry and look for a job outside of the health insurance industry. The noncompete is unnecessarily punitive and prevents someone who was let go from a job from seeking new employment in that industry where their skills are most aligned. I support the elimination of broad non-competes. If companies want to utilize non-competes they need to be written more narrowly and based on the actual knowledge and role of the person previously employed."
Nicole	"Please work to undue noncompete clauses for physicians. Physicians may need to change jobs for many reasons but this shouldn't mean they have to abandon the community and patients they care for."
Stacy	"I am a professional recruiter aka headhunter in IL. Non-competes are standard in my industry and after building a book of business for 10 years I moved companies and lost $200,000 in annual earnings to do that. My past company suffered the loss of my clients and my new employer couldn't access them either so it was a hit to both employers and mostly myself and my family. I firmly support this action to create a more free marketplace for sales professionals of all types."
Patricia	"I am a Home Instead franchisee owning two franchises and employing approximately 135 individuals in the community. The two franchises have been operational under my ownership for over 2 decades and in compliance with all franchise agreement directives. A solid business has been built and run providing hundreds of jobs and millions in revenue for the state. The purpose of this letter is to discuss how the noncompete agreement that I was required to sign in connection with the signing of my franchise agreement may cause me to be forced to relinquish my business or sell for pennies on the dollar due to recent changes unilaterally made by the franchisor. In August 2021, our franchisor – Home Instead, Inc. – was purchased by Honor Technology, Inc. – a private-equity/venture-capital backed entity. Franchisees had no say in the and only found out after the fact. Honor is attempting to fundamentally change our franchisee-franchisor relationship and business model in a way that I do not support. The following changes are set to be implemented: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Current franchise agreement is for a term of 10 years, but the new franchisor is changing it to only a term of 5 years, which I will be required to sign upon renewal, and which I do not approve of. This duration will also limit SBA financing for any potential buyer thus making resale more difficult. • The new franchisor has announced that it is increasing performance standards in our franchise agreement based on adjusting for current day dollar values. This

	will increase the monthly minimum revenue to triple the amount from my current agreement. The franchise agreement is up for renewal in approx. 18 months. A near impossible feat even in the best of times and more so on the heels of the pandemic and a worker shortage. If those minimums are not met prior to renewal, the franchisor will not renew the agreement and effectively take over all the employees and clients. Essentially “stealing” a million dollar business and I will be held to a non-compete agreement with no recourse and lose my retirement asset. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The franchisor installed Honor corporate offices within my protected territory and are competing with all local Home Insteads for clients and employees. • Beginning 1 May, we will be required to download all our monthly finances from quickbooks for franchisor assessment. I do not agree with this process as I am considered an independently owned and operated business and should not be required to turn over details of non-essential finances. • Royalties are being adjusted from 5% to a scale of 4-7% based on monthly growth along with the 2% current marketing fee and a new technology fee of $500/month with no new technology provided and additional technology costs being added. • Franchisor is now no longer required to provide franchisee support which is the whole reason I initially purchased a franchise. I am now in an involuntary contractual relationship business, and it severely limits my ability to create or own another similar business. If the franchisor is allowed to change the terms of the agreement so onerously as to not have franchisees qualify for renewal or set terms that so severely change and limit your ability to make a profit, then I should not be held to a non-compete agreement which forces me to lose all employees and clients. The economic penalty of not renewing is overwhelming, thereby forcing me to renew with an entity and agree to terms that I would not otherwise do. As such, I ask that you consider banning post-contract non-compete clauses in franchise agreements. Because of the noncompete agreement, I effectively am unable to leave the relationship, even when the term of my existing franchise agreement ends. The franchisor can effectively impose conditions which make it unlikely or impossible to renew the franchise agreement after years of building a business. This provides the opportunity for the Equity Group (franchisor) to take over your business knowing that you have no recourse due to the non-compete."
Sheryl	"I have been subject to a Non Compete document and when the economy got really bad and I couldn't accept positions that I wanted and had to accept positions that were a detriment to my economic reality. I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Afshin	"As a physician with a family the non compete drastically hinders our ability to provide appropriate care to our patients. Being from a small rural town it is impossible to provide the care our patients deserve with the noncompete in

	place. I have first hand seen physicians who were born and raised in my hometown come back to work at one of the two local hospitals. They provided top care and due to being local were very well known and respected within our community. However, due to the noncompete they were forced to uproot themselves and their families from the town they were born, the patients who trusted them, tear their children from their grandparents all because they weren't allowed to work within this same town, for hospital profits. These were stand up physicians who were from our own hometown who were forced to leave because of the noncompete. .Once we are under contract with a hospital and a noncompete is in effect we are unable to continue to care for our or any patients in the community we have vested in from a medical standpoint or just as a community. We are forced to uproot our children from their schools, friends and any social circle they are in. After investing in a community and providing that community and patients the ability to trust a physician, Patients are left to fend for themselves without the ability to have any continuity of care or ability to see a physician who they trust or know . In all families suffer, patients are not able to continue the continuity of care, physicians are forced to move or at best commute far away for their jobs and back to their families, children are forced to uproot their lives all for hospital profitability. Administrators main concern is to maintain patients within their system alone. Administrators who have never once seen or provided any bedside patient care make these decisions. The noncompete is never been or will be for the benefit of the patients, but is for the benefit of hospitals profitability. This is not how are healthcare should be. Do away with the non compete and be a part of improving patient care, helping physicians lives and children being able to maintain normality in their lives, staying within their family unit(including grandparents) without unnecessary movement."
Rahul	"It should include physicians and also non-profit hospitals."
Deepak	"We should eliminate non compete clause for physicians . DK"
Seungjun	"I fully support this proposed nde especially for physicians and surgeons"
Matt	"I am STRONGLY in favor of eliminating non-compete clauses. As a Social Worker , non-compete clauses are often used to keep mental health professionals working in lower paying jobs rather than leaving to start their own practice or working for a different company in a better paying job."
Jeff	"Non-compete agreements have no place in the 21st century economy, and serve only to subvert the free market - one of America's most cherished principles - by putting an artificial cap on the ability of workers to seek the highest possible wages for their labor, and on the ability of companies to offer those wages. It is my hope that the FTC implements this rule to ban new, and invalidate current, noncompete agreements."
Deena	"Non-compete clauses in contracts restrict the free market and prevent the growth of the medicine. When there's already a preexisting shortage of physicians , imposing a non-compete is counter productive to providing adequate healthcare since it drives away physicians."

Emily	"Please consider adding employers who are not for profit to this proposal. There is no reason workers of not for profits should have lower standards than other workers."
David	"I absolutely support the abolishment of the anti compete clauses in contracts. They stifle innovation and can trap workers in poor conditions due to lack of available work"
Ali	"To Whom It May Concern, This is exceptionally important for workers in the healthcare field. When we are hired by large corporations we are subjected to very wide and long non- compete clauses/restrictive covenants that do real damage to our careers and families. For instance, my restrictive covenant is 2 years and 25 miles. I would have to move out of state to change jobs. There was no possible way to negotiate this out of my contract. As most healthcare organizations are not for profit. This MUST APPLY TO 501-3c organizations as well or else it is meaningless Please help us. We have already been through so much with the pandemic. Thank you."
Ellen	"I am a veterinarian so am very familiar with non-compete clauses in my profession, though I have never personally had to sign one. I feel they should be banned. They are definitely unfair to the person who is affected by them. They keep wages down as the individual cannot just leave to find another job unless they are willing to relocate to another community. The fear of taking business with them is out of proportion to the severe impacts it has on the individual. I opened my own veterinary clinic in 2015 and did not require my associate to sign one. I felt that if I had a good business environment and treated my employees fairly, they would stay. If they left and a few clients followed them, I would recover. I strongly encourage the ban of non-compete clauses for all businesses."
Mark	"I am in favor of the proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses. I am a professional employee specializing in a narrow field of chemical engineering , and my employer made me sign a non-complete agreement that prevents me from accepting job offers from my employer's competitors. Because my work experience is very narrow and specialized, any prospective new employer who values my work experience is likely to be a competitor of my employer and therefore covered by the non-compete agreement that I signed, and this has deterred me from seeking new employment. Furthermore, I've realized recently that my employer might not even like me much as an employee, because they have told me that I am free to quit and look for another job; however, they have not fired me, so I wonder if they might think the non-compete agreement might be more difficult to enforce against me if they fire me (rather than letting me quit voluntarily, which they have sometimes encouraged me to do when I was unhappy about something). For these reasons, I support the proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses, and I want to emphasize that the ban on non-compete clauses needs to apply also to professionals (not just to blue-collar workers in a lower pay category who have also been forced to sign unfair non-compete agreements in recent years).. Thank you."

Wyatt	"I am thankful that the FTC is finally actually doing their job and enforcing fair competition. For far too long, employers have gotten away with a million dirty little tricks like non-competes to keep their workers subdued and wages as low as possible. The FTC better go through with this, as it is a no-brainer. Go after monopolies next. But those trusts! Strengthen worker power with unions! This rule would affect me as a worker in mathematics . I don't currently work in tech, but I have avoided tech jobs for a number of reasons, including being scared of being locked in to a job that I hate by various contractual chains that prevent me from getting a new job in the same field if I were to quit."
Alex	"I strongly support this rule. It will encourage better conditions for workers while increasing innovation."
Emil	"I am a property manager in Illinois and currently being sued for breaking a non compete clause. I am an on-site manager for a gated community for just under six years. The HOA decided to find a new management company due to my company's mishaps through a transition in ownership. The HOA wants to keep me as an employee under the new management company in which I accepted. My old company is now suing me for $150,000. The noncompete is causing a huge burden and stress on my life. I merely want to remain working in the environment where I feel comfortable. I should not be penalized for something that is out of my control especially since the old management company was terminated and I was asked to stay. I take pride in my work and know that by staying is best for commute, pay and my livelihood. Please consider my situation in order for the case to be dismissed."
Traci	"I am in support of this rule to end non-compete. It traps workers in harmful toxic work environments as it hurts wage growth when workers have to move or take time off before switching to a new position. This impacts all types of laborers including healthcare workers greatly."
Denis	"Non compete clauses are used to prevent physicians from freely practicing and changing practices. This hurts the patients in the long run, especially in areas where one practice has a practical monopoly. Instead of staying and taking care of patients physicians are forced to move to other areas. Please ban non compete clauses. - concerned MD"
M	"I wholeheartedly support the proposed rule. As a physician , not only will employed physicians benefit but their patients will also benefit as well. Grateful for those who are working on this change!"
Joe	"Employees need to be able to get better jobs without having to be bound by non-compete contracts!"

Emily	"I have a non-compete clause with my employer and it has prevented me from advancing my career. I don't have access to any confidential information. There's nothing that I can bring to a competing company besides my experience. Opportunity for growth is limited at my current company, so I'm stuck. Banning non-competes will open new opportunities."
David	"Non-competes area plague in the brokerage logistics space for far too long. They hamper growth in our industry by keeping young professionals in bad environments, or by forcing them out due to the threat of legal action. Non-competes keep wages down by preventing talented employees moving on to better paying roles and opportunities. I fully support the proposed rule."
Martin	"I am an independent private practice medical physician practitioner in favor of abolishing noncompete clause is in the medical arena. It has long baffled me that large hospital systems can pressure their physicians to keep their patient referrals in-house, the large medical or hospital system that employs them, as opposed to referring patients to the best doctor for the best care. That practice would be prevented with the dissolution of noncompete clauses. Many other medical practice-related statutes carry the justification that best and most appropriate care for a patient trumps the fiduciary aspect of patient referrals. How is it possible that large hospital systems are allowed to continue with these are ethical, if not illegal, restraint of trade practices? The dissolution of noncompete clauses in the medical arena will do nothing but allow private practice physicians to thrive, as opposed to being (unethically, if not illegally) shunned by the large hospital systems in most urban areas. It would allow the best quality of care for a patient: the patient will be referred to the best physician for their specific needs, as opposed to whatever physician is within the hospital system, regardless of clinical acumen. A Wall Street Journal article addressed this subject: 'The Hidden System That Explains How Your Doctor Makes Referrals' by By Anna Wilde Mathews and Melanie Evans Dec. 27, 2018 . Ask any private practice physician in an urban center, especially centers that are surrounded by large hospital systems, and you will find the same scenario. I see many physicians who used to be able to refer to me in social situations. They will invariably tell me "Marty, we really miss you and miss your patient care". What is left unsaid is the fact that they cannot send to me any longer. They arc either pressured from administration or, in a significant amount of instances, monetarily penalized. How is this legal? Mind you, when they, or family members, have medical issues that come under my purview as a physician, they have no problem coming to see me. Apparently, what is good enough for them is not good enough for their patients? I don't think so. Abolishing medical practice noncompete clauses will allow physicians to leave the large conglomerate medical systems that are taking over medical care, and to take their patients with them. The large medical systems, quite obviously to even the most naïve examiner, focus on profit as opposed to clinical outcomes and appropriate patient care. Unfortunately, the present patient data points for medical care really do not measure true quality of care. As a matter fact, simply ask any hospital system employed physician or nurse about the amount of pressure put upon them to strive for stellar patient satisfaction surveys. Being nice to a patient, is of course, of vital importance. It would really help if they

	would also value quality of care. That is absolutely not the case, I could give multiple examples of how patient satisfaction surveys and fiduciary concerns wholly override medical quality of care. By abolishing noncompete clauses, there would be less large system employed physicians who can have thriving medical practices outside of the conglomerates that control the patient flow. As should be obvious, patient flow and referrals are all dictated by administrators in these systems as opposed to physicians. Their wellspring of patient referrals cannot be equaled by independent private practitioners who don't have the massive marketing budget that these large health systems do. Independent practitioners used to rely on the word of mouth, by referring physicians, as well as patients. That is no longer the case. One can no longer just hang the proverbial shingle and have the confidence that being a good doctor will allow you to maintain a practice. Noncompete clauses in the medical arena, will allow a patient to be referred to the best physician for their needs. Savvy patients often know to seek out the appropriate physician for them, whether in be inside or outside the medical system that employs their primary care physician and controls their referrals. Often less educated and disadvantaged patients do not have this ability. This population are often the ones who suffer. Supposedly, the health care insurance company's justification for disallowing physicians waiving patients co-pays, is about quality of care. Their claim is that patients should be allowed to make decisions absent monetary and fiduciary concerns. Why is that not the case with employed physicians, who cannot practice independently due to a noncompete clause? The quality of care delivered to patients without health system pressures on independent referring physicians would be vastly improved. Isn't our medical system supposed to value quality care over fiduciary factors and business-based physician restrictions? Tracy	"Non compete clauses ONLY benefit corporate interests. People should be able to take their skills with them. Non compete clauses should be made illegal"
Shreya	"Banning non-competes is the right decision. The agreements are predatory and typically used in conjunction with severance agreements to coerce employees to comply. They limit job prospects and protect the company without adequate compensation for the employee. An employee can follow a non disclosure agreement without also needing a non-compete."
Todd	"I am 100% in favor of eliminating the non-compete clauses. These non-compete clauses have enhanced the disparity of wealth in the US along with stifling small business innovation. I understand that the non-compete clauses damage workers' power from all income levels. I'm concerned with all but I think those living on the margins should not be subjected these onerous agreements."
Joshua	"Dear FTC, I have read and carefully considered the regulatory document regarding the proposed ban on non-compete policies. As a worker and a member of the public, I fully support this proposed rule change. Non-compete policies unfairly restrict workers from pursuing job opportunities and limit their ability to advance their careers. These policies can also stifle innovation and competition by preventing workers from using their skills and knowledge to benefit multiple companies. Based on my own personal experiences and conversations with other workers, I believe that non-compete policies have a negative impact on job mobility and career advancement. Additionally, I have reviewed scientific studies that demonstrate the detrimental effects of non-compete agreements on workers wages and economic opportunities. While there may be some trade-offs associated with banning non-compete policies, such as the potential for increased employee turnover, these concerns are outweighed by the benefits of allowing workers to fully utilize their skills and pursue new job opportunities. I appreciate the opportunity to share my views with the FTC, and I hope that you will consider implementing this proposed rule change. Thank you for your time and attention to this important issue. Sincerely, Joshua Lawrence"

Stephen	"Idea is great, especially for larger businesses where enough employees are affected to actually affect the job market in a region. should have exemptions for certain size businesses"
Jennifer	"I strongly support the new rule banning non-compete clauses. My family has been directly impacted by these. My dad lost his job after his union failed to reach an agreement with his previous employer, but because the old contract had a non-compete clause he was unable to work around our home. As a result, he now drives 50 miles across the state border for his current job. I find these completely unacceptable and am glad the FTC is working on behalf of worker's rights to fight them."
Matthew	"My name is Matthew. I am an attorney that represents workers impacted by non-competes. Non-competes are anti-worker, un-American, and do enormous damage to the innovation and mobility of our workers."
Justin	"Make non competes illegal for all, including physicians!"
Michael	"Thank you, thank you, thank you for proposing this rule. Non-compete and non-solicit agreements are clearly anti-competitive, and anti-employee. NDA's protect trade secrets, we should be free to move employment."
Elizabeth	"Please abolish this rule. It allows corporations too much power over individual workers. I have a two years non-compete in my previous job, and now I have to travel out of state for work."
Asher	"Please ban non-compete clauses from all contracts. They are a detriment to employee rights and only further emphasis an unfair balance of power between employers and employees as well as reduce competition and the value of highly skilled workers. Do not make exceptions for any field."
Trixie	"Non competes should be outlawed. I'm a physician who had to move my entire family by a county to continue working as a physician after leaving a hospital to avoid violating my non compete. The expense with my family's sacrifice is so pointless. I'm contributing to the greater good so why make me give up my life to continue working as a physician?"

Kevin	"I wholeheartedly support the proposed rule. I am a management consultant and I signed an overly restrictive and broad non-compete at my previous employer that bars me from working for a competitor anywhere in North America and Europe for two years, which effectively prevents me from practicing my trade for that period. Recently I received an offer from a competitor, but when I tried to take the new offer my previous employer threatened to sue. Even though every lawyer I talked to said this overly broad non-compete would never stand up in court, the new employer rescinded the offer because of the threat, and my previous employer has now fired me because I was trying to negotiate an amendment to the non-compete. This has now left me jobless with few options. Leaving carveouts or loopholes in the rule will allow employers to draft abusive agreements because they won't be punished and the mere threat of a lawsuit or the potential cost of a lawsuit will stop employees from fighting back."
Kelvin	"YES PLEASE FOR THE SAKE OF US WORKERS DO AWAY WITH THIS WAGE DESTROYING CLAUSE!!!!"
Aaron	"I support this proposed rule. The existence of non-compete clauses stifles innovation, locks away good workers from being able to do good work, and lowers wages. Non-compete clauses were completely egregious and unfair for workers from the start, and a term which no person should be bound too. I hope that the committee will do the correct thing, and ban new non-compete clauses and void previous ones. In a free market, the best workers are the ones who deserve to be hired, not the best workers out of those who do not have a non-compete clause. While companies suggest that this rule would infringe on their intellectual properties, they fail to acknowledge that non-compete clauses also infringes on the worker's, since the worker is not allowed to use it. Please do the right thing for the American worker."
Toni	"I am a Director level executive in the rental car industry that spent the last 20 years moving across North America and making an impact everywhere I went. I am facing a noncompete that has placed restrictions on me and making my next step difficult. I support my family and am a minority woman, so finding a job is important and extremely hard. A non-compete in our industry may have made sense when companies were evolving, but now it's harmful to employees who have to move on. I can't verbally share my noncompete details, making it very hard to talk to prospective employers. I am so pleased to see that you are supporting a change. This change will be instrumental for individuals like me. To find and obtain gainful employment is already a hard transition, and to hinder an individual is just not right, particularly when the company is earning Billions, and I want to keep a roof over my daughter's head and not have to take her out of her school and away from her friends."
William	"Currently I am an Orthopedic Surgeon in Wisconsin. I spent the last 13 years in a small rural community developing a practice and taking care of patients."

	Upon leaving a large multi specialty group I was forced to abandon my patients and move over an hour north. The patients in the area I vacated then did not have any specialty orthopedic care near their homes and are now forced to travel to see me or find another orthopedic surgeon over one hour away. The proposed ban by the FTC will allow patients to stay with their preferred medical providers if they choose a group change and will assist physicians by allowing them the opportunity to keep care local and to alleviate the need to uproot families or drive non sustainable distances"
R	"Industry secrets can remain protected under a NDA agreement/contract. T	"My dental practice was acquired by a dental DSO which then sold it to another PE Finn within 6 months. The term of the contract changed and the restrictive/non-compete distance and time were changed to 35 miles. Nothing any of the does could do about the change because we were told we would be dragged into the new agreement. The only options for the dentists are to either quit dentistry for 3 years and let the covenant run out or move to another town halfway across the state. How is this fair? How can dentists be allowed to legally become indentured servants to corporations? These non-competes should be abolished and fair competition between dentists should be allowed."

As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements. Tara	"As a female person of color and executive recruiter, my career and income were limited by non-competes from 2007 - 2021. Despite working in horrible, toxic and sometimes even discriminatory environments, I had to choose to either stay or be unable to work, and eam, to my full capacity for the following 12-18 months. My husband, a physical therapist, lost his job at a non-profit in 2020 and due to a non-compete had to leave the industry entirely. The job for which he was still paying off student loans, but couldn't earn an income for. I had to financially support our household by myself for that year. The bottom line is that non-competes should absolutely be banned so that peoples livelihoods and are not held hostage by their employers."

Madhusudan	"I as a physician strongly support the ban on non compete clause as proposed by the FTC. This ban is essential for a physician to practice medicine as it should be practiced in the interest of the patients rather than of the corporations. The opposition to this ban is motivated by the greed and need of the corporate hospital groups to dominate the market and control the physicians."
Patrick	"Support the FTC's ban on non-compete clause."
Madhavi	"Practicing medicine and caring for patients who trust and respect the care provided to them is often hindered by the non compete clause. It would benefit both patients and physicians if this clause was removed. It only benefits the hospitals and large organizations."
Peter	"I've been an independent contractor and a member of the television news media . Non-compete agreements put employees in a virtual stranglehold and essentially powerless against their employers. This has been going on for years. It's totally unfair to the employees."
Sean	"I believe this is just good policy. The fact that low-salary service industry workers are subject to boiler-plate non-compete clauses originally designed for corporate executives, simply to keep them in a job that pays less than they could get elsewhere is absolutely unfair and should be stopped as the illegal act that it is. And it's especially pernicious and despicable that many people who sign non-compete clauses aren't even legally bound by them, but stick around at their jobs because they fear legal action when only the wealthy can actually afford the time and cost of taking things to court. As Ms. Khan stated so clearly, these policies are clearly costing individuals and industries in talent and money and must be halted."
L	" I currently have 4 years remaining in my franchise agreement and cannot continue my business because the terms offered for renewal are drastically more one-sided than my current agreement. The new agreement has conflicting requirements of me, exorbitant new fees, late and insufficient funds penalties, and a new minimum $100K penalty to me if I choose to terminate me, which per the agreement they have grounds to do at anytime. Also, they can audit me at anytime and bill me the amount of their choosing for it. It is a document that puts my family in a real financial risk. Also, when presented with this new agreement, I was also provided a financial disclosure document that was not accurate. Due to my franchisor's ability to make it impossible for me to continue my current operation and my current agreement has a non-compete, I am put in the situation where I simply just lose the equity I have spent years building. There is no consequence to my franchisor, who can split my territory and resell to make a substantial profit by my loss. There is no way for me to salvage my equity. They seem to have everything to gain by making it impossible for me to run my business in a meaningful way any longer and I have no recourse. Removing the non-compete restores a bit of power-balance so if my franchisor is not being fair and reasonable, I have an option to maintain the assets that are rightfully mine."

	I've worked hard to build a solid business and now I see just how unfair a non-compete can be in my situation."
Michael	"My restrictive covenant with my employers Hinders, my ability to make a competitive salary. I have no choice but to leave the Chicagoland area if I want to be paid fairly or to stay in a position that treats me unfairly. I have no real recourse. My present restrictive covenant is two years and 15 miles which encompasses essentially the entire Chicagoland area. There's a 30 mile diameter. This is clearly a restraint of trade And jeopardizes and harms the communities that I serve and treat due to the fact that if I were to leave, I would have to potentially leave the state to practice elsewhere. If a large percentage of surgeons did this, they would be a void in treating patients and caring for the emergency needs. By eliminating restrictive covenants, this will allow me to be competitive, and our employers, to be honest, compensation and have fairness, in how they treat their physicians."
Thomas	"The absolute audacity of this proposal cannot be understated and serves only to line the pockets of hospital administration while limiting physician opportunities and wages despite our years of training and dedication to serving the public. The proposition will do nothing to alleviate the troubles of rural hospitals or healthcare broadly and represents a continuing, troubling trend of reducing physician ability to practice and further increases the already considerable burnout within the profession. Should those arguments fall on deaf ears, at the very least the anti-capitalistic/free-market principles embodied within the proposal should be noted"
Clint	"I am a veterinarian in a rural setting and have had two non-compete clauses drastically impact my life in the 18 years I have in private practice. In rural areas, employers try to impose 20-50 mile radius bans on competition which deprives our local community of veterinary options. Likewise, these non-compete covenants restrict associate veterinarians to earning fair wages in other facilities and simply leave us stuck should our current employer begin poor practice models. I firmly support the ban on the practice of non-compete clauses and pray this is resolved soon."
Patrick	"I agree with the elimination of the non-compete rule. I have worked for many contracting agencies who put legal jargon that lay people cannot or do not understand. This contract often says you cannot work for any other company in IT for example, may only be represented by "X" contracting company, etc. It is ridiculous. I have spoken to attorneys about it who have said unless you are getting paid you are not bound by the contract. But my last contract that I signed said I could not work for another IT company for 2 years. Inthnnation Technology is my area of specialization. I cannot earn nearly as much as a Project Manager in manufacturing and even less in construction. It is critically important to me in this ever changing economy that I have options of who I can work for and when I can go work for another company. I appreciate the effort. Thank you, Patrick McDonnell"

Bonni	"I'm a freelancer . I support the change in the rule to eliminate non-compete agreements. We need the freedom to work!"
Clayton	"I support the FTC's proposed rule to eliminate non-compete provisions. I recently took a new job but was blindsided during the orientation by severe strict post-employment restrictions in the post-hire employment agreement. I had turned down other lucrative options to work in a field I found exciting, but I can not agree to abide by a contract that would essentially make my job experience their property. I am trying to come to a compromise with my new employer, but I am afraid that I may be back on the lookout for a job somewhere that respects my growth wherever it takes me. I would love if no one else needed to find themselves in a similar position."
Sana	"I wholeheartedly support the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete agreements. These agreements are often used to intimidate workers from leaving positions, asking for better wages or improved working conditions. I see this among my physicians colleagues. Often communities are left with limited physicians (in primary care and in subspecialties) because they have been forced to relocate rather than work at another hospital or start their own private practice. Large corporations now own a majority of "health care" facilities, and they can employ fleets of lawyers to intimidate and bully physicians with non-compete. Non-compete agreements are often written that extend well beyond a reasonable scope in both distance and duration or over-reach into job descriptions that were beyond the employees' role within the hospital. As a specialist my non-compete from Northwestern Medicine in Illinois stated I am not allowed to work in any scope of medicine within a 15 mile radius from an NM affiliated hospitals and outpatient clinics for 2 years. This would have forced me out of state if I didn't fight hard tbr it. I do not possess trade secrets. I am not privy to management meetings or corporate leadership discussions. The sole purpose of the non-compete is to bully physicians from leaving a corporation for a better opportunity, better work-life balance, or daring to start own practices. Non-competes are nothing but a modern-day shackles on physicians! They need to go as soon as possible."
Suwan	"I'm glad there is a movement to remove the non compete. This will help people gain experience and engage a healthy competitive spirit in many disciplines especially health care. Thank you to the federal government for taking this important initiative."
Laura	"I work as a physician and am against noncompete agreements. I take care of women with high-risk pregnancies in a semi-rural part of the Midwest. We need more providers not fewer. Yet physicians are forced to leave the region due to noncompete agreements if unhappy with an employer. It is an unfair choice for us and our families, limiting our ability to walk. Further, maternal mortality is a worsening problem in the US, including in rural areas. Worsening access to care through noncompete agreements only raises risk to women further."

Keith	"Non-Competes are the most unethical things in the business world! My life was RUINED because of choices I made adhering to a Non-Compete back in 2012! Then, in 2021 a Non-Compete once again make my life a catastrophe!"
Ann	"As a journalist, I support a democracy, not a totalitarian state. Noncompete agreements run counter to our democratic form of government and the U.S. Constitution. Thank you to the Federal Trade Commission for opening up this issue for public comment. I agree with the arguments the FTC has made in explaining why it wants to prohibit noncompete agreements. Besides suppressing wages, hampering innovation and blocking new business development, in my experience noncompetes also run counter to our nation's historical support of freedom of speech. Noncompetes give businesses the upper hand because no one wants to be without a paycheck for a period of time, so employees at these businesses work in fear of losing their jobs. This leads to oppression and suppresses dialogue among workers who are afraid to rock the boat. It flies in the face of best management practices encouraging people to speak openly to help resolve issues, to hold others' accountable and to design a mousetrap better than the competition. In the profession I'm in, too often newsrooms are too silent. This leads to less cohesive news teams and lessens the enjoyment of working for a news organization. Regardless of the industry, people are less likely to take a risk by offering suggestions if they think management will use their comments as an excuse to get rid of them, triggering the noncompete. Companies requiring noncompetes often have a top-down management approach that leads to mediocrity instead of excellence. Employees operating under noncompetes tend to keep their heads down and do what they're told even if they know better. This is reminiscent of a fascist society. The First Amendment says no law shall abridge freedom of speech or of the press. A news organization that requires journalists to sign noncompete agreements prohibiting them (loin working for competition is not operating in the spirit of this law. To ban former employees from working for a competing news organization in effect prohibits journalists from exercising their First Amendment rights. Those who suggest journalists could write on their own without pay apparently have forgotten the United States doesn't allow slavery. In my opinion, no rationale supports a media company's right to require professional journalists to abandon their profession and accept a position in another industry instead of allowing them to work for a competitor. For the government to allow noncompete agreements at news organizations could be construed as censorship. If this is decided on a case by case basis, think of how politics might play a role and censor some people but not others. Too often the same companies that require noncompetes also resort to coercive tactics to get people to sign the agreements. After months of negotiations prior to my accepting a position as a staff writer at a newspaper owned by a national company, I arrived at the newsroom for my first day of work only to be told I must sign a noncompete agreement that hadn't been mentioned previously. It was so poorly worded that I wasn't certain what I was being asked to sign. The noncompete agreement the company has provided said, "Nothing herein will prevent me, after my employment terminates, from using skills and knowledge of a general nature gained while I am employed by the Company other than working with competition within a 50 mile radius." I had already moved from Illinois, which entailed putting

	my townhouse on the rental market, finding a tenant, emptying the townhouse, storing many belongings and signing a lease on an apartment near the newsroom. Did I really have a choice about whether to sign the agreement at this point? The editor replied I had to sign it to work there. I believe it is illegal to ask an employee to sign an agreement that even the editor said he didn't understand especially well after the terms of the job had been negotiated (See the Americans with Disabilities Act Amended Act coercion clause). Yet I signed the agreement because I saw no way around it. When I was let go a year later, shortly after a 25% headcount reduction was announced, this noncompete kept me from accepting an offer to work at another newspaper that covered the same territory. This was a financial hardship. I was unemployed for six months subsequently. How could such an agreement restricting First Amendment rights be legal? Management apparently decided the best way to resolve this was to say I quit, but this meant I wasn't eligible for unemployment benefits in my home state. At a minimum, the government should ban these agreements for journalists and declare null and void any existing noncompetes journalists may have signed so as not to restrict news coverage, which has suffered enormous blows from other forms of competition over the past 20 years. I'm in favor of banning noncompetes at all companies. Thank you for this opportunity to provide these comments. Ann Meyer Professional Journalist Evanston, IL"
Olufenwa	"I am a urologist in Chicagoland. I have a 15 mile radius non compete for 2 years from my previous employer, a very large multispecialty practice. Because I saw patients in multiple office locations (at one point up to 4 different locations across 3 different counties), I am currently restricted from 2 different geographic office locations that do not overlap. Essentially 30 miles of the Chicagoland area is prohibited. In a time when there is a growing doctor shortage, it is an incredible disservice to the public to continue to allow restrictive covenants of these kinds."
George	"It seems to me to be a "no brainer". Businesses can relocate to wherever and whenever they want so why should this basic concept be restricted to workers alone? If capital is free to move, so should labor."
Alex	"Non-Compete Clauses prevent innovation and freedom. They need to go. Power to the people!"
gregory	"Absolutely non-competes should become illegal. They were created because there is monetary value to industry experience, but the idea that a company can own your experience well after employing you is completely unethical. People work hard to build their careers, and being able to leverage your most valuable skills is required to make a decent living. I think this is coming up because of the revolution in employment we are seeing now that workers are simply not going to accept being treated unfairly anymore. Making this proposal a law is simply keeping up with the times. If we want our economy and workplace cultures to continue to improve this must be done."
Maritka	"Allowing businesses to use non-compete clauses with employees contributes to a decline in democracy."

Ayezah	"This is a much needed change, doctors feel stuck in their jobs for decades due to the non compete, it leads to physician burn out and can lead to poor patient care outcomes. It gives health systems unnecessary powers that are abused."
Nureain	"Non compete clause should not implemented as it's a way to abuse doctors"
S	"Non-compete clauses are a disaster for physicians. As an ob-gyn , I'm required to live within 30 minutes of the hospital where I deliver babies. Most non-compete clauses in my area are 15 miles and since hospitals tend to be conveniently about 20 miles apart, that means if I leave my job I have to sell my house, move my entire family to a new community, and change my children's schools. The physician and patients who love their doctor are the losers; the winner is corporate medicine who can bait-and-switch doctors into terrible work situations, with no options without uprooting their entire family."

kevin	"I am dentist that has worked for 17 yrs in a medium sized community around Chicagoland. The company I work for was bought by a Dental Service Organization. Upon purchase, the company has decreased compensation, decreased benefits, increased restrictive covenant distance and time for noncompete. I have 3 children that go to the local schools in the town I work. The current noncompete is 3 yrs and 35 miles. This town is within 15 miles from Lake Michigan Lake front. The company has banned me from working essentially in all of Chicago, all the way to Indiana and almost up to the Wisconsin State line. This restrictive prevents me from treating millions of people. Unless I uproot my children from school and friends, or I drive 2 hr round trip for work, I am an "indentured servant." These large organizations say restrictive covenants are in place to protect the investment in staff training and trade secrets. I believe companies will lose employees whom have been trained and have learned specific ways a company does things, however these companies with hopefully acquire employees whom have been trained by other companies too. These restrictive covenants inhibit fair competition between companies. A better work environment, better pay, happier and more productive employees will be the result of striking down restrictive covenants. Please don't allow this forced labor to continue. Strike down restrictive covenants"
John	"It is not enough to consider non-competes, but also non-solicit contracts should be equally scrutinized. As a college graduate in an entry level role, signing a non-solicit did not mean much to me. When I changed firms 13 years later I was saddled with unscrupulous restrictions in how I would be able to contact my clientele. My clients and I were harassed, threatened, and victimized by the prior employer, but of course it is that employer who was able to sue claiming

	"irreparable" damages to a fortune 500 company from a single client facing employee. 2 years later, I am still threatened with arbitration and have absolutely no recourse unless a client chooses to submit an affidavit, likely souring my relationship. Non-competes and non- solicits may be appropriate for certain key employees, but the rank and file should not be subject to them. Please consider non- solicit contracts as well."
Mohammed	"I am a Physician and non compete clauses affect my individual liberty, ability to practice medicine and moreover are extremely difficult for someone like a Physician to move their entire life from a geographic area to a different one. Therefore I support this bill to end the non compete clause."
Jennifer	"Passing this non-compete clause rule is good for workers. The downside for business is they would have to pay more and treat their workers better to keep talented people."
M	"As a veterinarian , I work in an area with many veterinary hospitals. The current restrictive covenant (non compete) that I can not escape from is 15 miles. This greatly reduces my ability to find a place to work closer to my home as I have my husband with early onset dementia to care for. It would mean a pick up and move which would not be a good decision for him. These non competes are an outdated concept that no longer apply to today's situations. With the advent of the auto industry clients can drive wherever they truly want to. Rarely will clients leave a business where they have established accounts and are familiar with. If a client leaves it is because they are unhappy with the business as a whole, not to follow a single person leaving. This policy should be outlawed, on a national level. It is unfair business practice and traps people in a position that can become unacceptable."
Joseph	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth! In wake of the global pandemic and continuing economic uncertainty, we need common sense policy that supports workers and ensures we are able to pursue a living wage without fear of retaliation."
Amol	"I strongly support the FTC's proposed rule. Moreover, I think it is important to explicitly include language to ensure this rule covers employees at non- profits (at least within the healthcare field). As background, I am a Family Medicine physician practicing in Central Illinois. I also work as a faculty member with a residency program and teach medical students. I chose a career in primary care medicine and medical education because I believe strongly in the importance of primary care as the backbone of the healthcare system and take my responsibility to train future physicians very seriously. I try to work as hard as I can for the well being of my patients every day. Many (if not most) physicians I know are governed by a non-compete agreement. These agreements restrict our ability to negotiate and advocate for better working conditions for ourselves and better care of our patients. Moreover, if we wish to leave our current position, we

	often have to travel many miles away (i.e., 50 miles) to continue practicing medicine. This is not only an undue burden on the physician and their family but also robs our patients of continuity with the doctor who they know and trust and has cared for them for years or even decades. I know there is some debate about if and how this rule would apply to non-profit health systems. I unequivocally think it should apply to non-profit health systems, clinics and hospitals. All of the issues I detailed above apply whether or not the institution is nominally a non-profit or a for-profit entity. Also, many non-profit health systems employ similar strategies as for-profit businesses and these non-compete agreements are an example of this. Ultimately, I think the FTC's proposed rule has transformative power in the healthcare system - it would allow physicians and other providers more negotiating power for ourselves (thus combatting physician burnout) and more importantly for our patients who have suffered in many ways under the current system. I am happy to discuss this further if it would be helpful."
Dhara	"If any other profession is able to shift jobs and locations without these types of regulations, why aren't physicians? My patients Google me and found my new location. They are traveling over 50 miles to continue seeing me as their physician. That is their right."
Harry	"I strongly believe this non-compete clause will help workers tremendously in improving their careers quicker or being able to start new businesses and help the economy. As someone who is experiencing issues with their former employer and their non-compete agreement, this clause would help me start my own business and further my career for the betterment of my life and family. Non-compete agreements are anti-competition and encourage big businesses to scare their employees into signing non-compete agreements Banning non-compete agreements would give workers more control over their career and allow them to not be taken advantages of by their employers."
Mark	"As a doctor, non compete clauses harm both myself and patients. In Illinois, my contract has typically had such a large non compete are that it requires a move or a lengthy commute in order to change jobs. Patients loose access to a doctor in their area because the employment contract forbids the doctor from working in the same area after employment ends."
Jennifer	"I fully support banning non-competes, especially when there is no proprietary information to protect. My employer made me sign a noncompete when I was hired for a customer service position, banning me from working with a competitor in our industry who sells the same equipment for 2 years after I leave. I moved to sales after a few years within the company, the company was sold, they've changed the organization in many ways and there is nothing proprietary that I have access to. Our employer uses the original non-compete now to scare us into staying while promising better benefits, new positions, etc. and never delivering on these promises. If non-competes were only allowed sparingly, or not at all, then employers would be forced to treat their employees like humans and create a culture of respect, rather than use threats of legal action to keep them in their place."

T Michael	"How is it that corporations are allowed to compete almost without limits yet employees are not? Noncompete agreements are simply anti-capitalistic."
Gilad	"Dear Sir/Madam. I support your new proposed rule wholeheartedly and in fact, was a victim of a non-compete clause enforcement in the summer of 2022. I worked for my previous employer, a large global market research company, for nearly 10 years, and after exhausting all avenues of career growth within, decided to look for opportunities elsewhere. I was a top performing employee and communicated my intention to my employer months in advance, also advising them of my wish to stay, if an appropriate opportunity will arise. After finding a new opportunity with a different company and advising my employer, I was shocked to find out they wish to exercise the non-compete clause against me. This practice was very rarely used in this company and only reserved for when very senior executives departed. This was not my case. Conversations with colleagues and other people revealed that this was a case of retribution and deterrence. My boss simply couldn't stomach the fact that his top employee left and likely wanted to deter others from doing that. I had gone out of my way to provide ample evidence to our legal team to show that there is no direct conflict of interest. The CEO of my new company did everything he could to open a channel of communication and was willing to give my previous employer any assurance they would want to have me start. After more than two months of fruitless communications through the attorneys of both sides, it became clear this was not about a legitimate business concern but rather a vengeful act. Besides the obvious stress and anxiety (I was not sure if the new employer would hold my position or if I would have to look for a new job, again), this had cost me financially, as I had to pay for my benefits out of pocket and (which were a 1/3 of my salary) and of course, lost the higher salary and better benefits with the new employer. To be honest, I didn't even realize this clause was included when signing my employment agreement with my previous employer in 2013. I learned that in most modern countries and economies, such a contract is not allowed. I did a lot of reading on the matter and came to the conclusion that with the potential exception of very rare cases (like very senior executives with inside knowledge of a company's strategy, etc.), this clause gives employers unreasonable power and could, as in my case, be used to punish employees that leave and use as deterrence against others. BTW, all our attempts to remind my previous employer that I am bound by the non-solicitation and confidentiality clauses in my employment contract and thus there is really no need for the non-compete were to no avail. For the sake of many other employees everywhere and for the health of our free economy, I very much hope you will be successful in passing and enforcing this new regulation. Good luck and thank you for your efforts to protect employees and their rights! Gil Niv"
Carlos	"I hereby submit this comment in full support of the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, which would ban non-compete agreements nationwide. There is mounting evidence that non-compete agreements have adverse effects on both workers and the economy, while their benefits to employers are often overstated. Firstly, non-compete agreements limit employees' career mobility and bargaining power, resulting in reduced job satisfaction and lower wages. By preventing

	workers from accepting job offers that would advance their careers and increase their income, these agreements cause financial harm to employees and the economy as a whole. Non-compete clauses also lower wages for both workers who are subject to them as well as those who are not. Secondly, non-compete agreements impede entrepreneurship and innovation, which are both critical drivers of economic growth. Innovation thrives when workers can freely execute their ideas. By preventing employees from leaving their jobs to start competing or similar businesses using their own ideas, non-compete clauses obstruct innovation and entrepreneurship in America. Thirdly, non-compete agreements for healthcare workers and doctors limit access to quality healthcare, particularly in underserved and rural areas. Additionally, non-compete agreements can hinder patient choice and continuity of care. When doctors are restricted from practicing in a particular geographic area, patients may need to travel long distances or switch to a new doctor, which can damage the doctor-patient relationship and harm patient outcomes. Non-compete agreements can result in a decline in patient choice and healthcare quality. Therefore, a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements would benefit employees and the economy as a whole. In healthcare, it would improve patient outcomes, continuity of care, and healthcare quality. A ban on non-compete agreements would promote fair competition, encourage innovation and entrepreneurship, and enhance worker mobility and bargaining power, ultimately leading to higher wages, better working conditions, and more robust job markets. In conclusion, the available data supports a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements. Such a ban would promote innovation, economic growth, and access to quality healthcare, and its benefits would extend to employees and the economy as a whole."
Jeff	"I have been working with the same company in the manufacturing sales field for nearly 10 years. To accept my role to get a job out of college, I had to sign a non compete agreement with very vague knowledge from the company about what I was signing. I never knew how much of a handcuff this would be on my life. Currently I am in a toxic workplace where there is no advancement in salary after trying for years with effort and actual sales success. Due to this, I am forced to take a job outside of the field that I not only love but all my skills pertain to at least for one year because of this contract. My family also feels scared that even after one year, what is stopping the company from suing us or giving us a hard time if I were to work for competitor? My family and I feel trapped by this because all we want is a fresh start and still maintaining a great relationship with the company. With limited jobs available, we may be forced to sell our house, relocate for a year, and take a major hit in salary having a job that is not what I am best at. This has been a major road block for my career to grow. Being able to have the freedom to be happy and contribute in the most effective way with your skills for our country should be the goal for us as a nation to advance. In my opinion, this would greatly strengthen our economy and job growth exponentially while spreading the wealth to middle class blue collar workers."
Kimberly	"Commenting in support of banning noncompete clauses. These are financially punitive to employees and subject them to undue hardship."

Sara	"Competition is one of the basic building blocks of the American government (you could go back to Locke or even Hobbes to see the ideological basis of this). Our economy, our national identity, and our success depends about remaining competitive. Non-Compete Clauses (NCC) perhaps do have a time and place when we are talking about power, regulations, and cultural institutions. I'm willing to hold space for that. However, the ubiquity of NCC in order to get a job or receive severance is unAmerican. It is natural to not want competitors, so I understand why companies do this. But it is absolutely the government's job to foster competition between businesses and restrain them from hampering progression and evolution by stagnating the job market. By keeping qualified people out of jobs because they know too much about your company, we are creating a labor shortage and not providing any incentive to keep good, hard working employees. NCCs make sense from the business's proving of view. They are destructive to the employee and future applicant. They are destructive to a robust economy. They are destructive of America's resources (our citizens) to provide excellence. Getting rid of NCCs will help re-establish America as a world superpower with immense economic power. We've been putting choke collars on our citizens which hasn't only hurt their individual prospects. It hurts America's national identity, our power, and our economy. America fosters competition; it doesn't eliminate it."
Stephanie	"Please eliminate non compete for physicians. We shouldn't be penalized for sacrificing our youth and having extensive training I think we have sacrificed enough with Covid."
Katherine	"I am in support of a non-compete clause ban. Noncompete clauses significantly impact healthcare provider's ability to work where they are needed at a time when healthcare is short on staff. As a nurse anesthetist, I am directly impacted. I have found that I am not able to practice where I would like to at times, and I cannot always go where I am desperately needed to provide care during surgeries due to noncompetes. Healthcare providers work hard everyday to take care of others and should not have to deal with the additional burden of a company or agency owning and controlling them though noncompetes."
Michael	"My father stayed in a job that never appreciated him and kept taking advantage of his talents due to the fact he knew he couldn't support our family with the work he could do outside his non-compete. He could have done so much more good making engineering innovations if it wasn't for that toxic clause."
Carmen	"I fully support a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements for Child and Adolescent Psychiatrists. There is a significant shortage of such specialists in the United States, and non-compete agreements exacerbate this shortage by limiting access to care and impeding the flow of physicians to areas where they are most needed. According to reports from the National Institute of Mental Health, only around 17% of children and adolescents with mental health disorders received treatment from a mental health professional. Furthermore, there are only approximately 8,300 practicing child and adolescent psychiatrists in the U.S., meaning that each one is responsible for the mental health care of

	around 6,000 to 9,500 children and adolescents. This shortage of specialists has been linked to negative outcomes for patients, including increased hospitalizations and higher mortality rates. Non-compete agreements exacerbate this problem by restricting psychiatrists from moving to underserved areas or opening their own practices, thereby limiting patient access to care. A nationwide ban on non-compete agreements would encourage Child and Adolescent Psychiatrists to practice in areas where they are most needed, increase access to care, and reduce the negative consequences of the current shortage of specialists. Furthermore, a ban on non-compete agreements can improve patient outcomes by allowing for continuity of care. When patients are unable to continue seeing their preferred psychiatrist due to a non-compete agreement, they may have to switch to a new provider, which can disrupt the therapeutic relationship and negatively impact treatment outcomes. By removing the barriers to care caused by non-compete agreements, patients can continue to receive care from the provider who is best suited to their needs, resulting in improved outcomes and higher quality care. In conclusion, a nationwide ban on non-compete agreements for Child and Adolescent Psychiatrists is necessary to address the shortage of specialists in this field, increase access to care, and improve patient outcomes. The available data indicates that non-compete agreements are contributing to the shortage of specialists and limiting patient access to care. Therefore, I urge the FTC and policymakers to support and implement this ban and take action to improve mental health care for children and adolescents in the United States."
Ronen	"I work as a Clinical Research Associate for a large Sponsor for Medical Devices. It is commonplace in our field to explore other therapeutic areas and move from one sponsor to another or another clinical research contracting organization that supports multiple sponsors. Non-Competes automatically diminishes our ability to find employment in all situations whether its leaving the company or being let go by said company. It is unjust."
Sarah	"I am a physician and mother who worked 15 years at an academic center in a rural state. My non-compete was 50 miles. When I was ready to leave the university, I had to leave the state because of the non-compete!!! Our family left an entire support system that took years to build. Non-compete clauses can hurt parents especially, as we rely on our communities (family, services, neighbors, schools, colleagues) as we raise our children. Many physicians will stay in unfavorable work situations to avoid the toll of a move on their families and themselves. They end up accepting lower than market value salaries and poorer working environments because of this!"
Carolyn	"Medicine has changed over the last 40 years I have been a RN. In the past, doctors were able to practice with the patients best interests at heart. That is no longer true. Hospitals and insurers oftentimes decide what they feel is best. From the hospital perspective: 1. Hospitalists are now employees of the healthcare system. Patients no longer see their PCP's. Hospitalists typically work 12 hour shifts so patients may see multiple different hospitalists during their stay. Hospitalists are trained in "best practices" i.e. how to treat the patient as quickly

	and least expensively as possible. This increases patient risk of falling through the cracks. 2. Healthcare systems are now a business, more often the CEO is NOT a medical professional. Revenue is first and foremost. They are beholden to the share holders. 3. Physicians have very little say in how they practice. Speaking from experience, healthcare systems set appointment limits. Typically 15 minutes for a problem focused visit and 30 minutes for a new patient or complete physical exam. A new Medicare patient taking 10 medications requires minimally 45 minutes for a safe, thorough exam. With set scheduling typically done at a scheduling center, an extended appointment is not an option. 4. When a physician's hands are continually tied fighting for what is best for their patient, the non compete clause is a noose around their neck. They have no options unless they want to relocate, uproot their families, essentially start over. There is no recourse against the healthcare system. Physicians are trapped in a place that does not allow them to practice as they see fit. 5. According to the AMA, recent studies have shown a national burnout rate of more than 50%. This has been increasing over time. Coincidence? I think not since physicians no longer manage their practices. 6. The rationale that a physician takes patients with him if he changes practice is not a valid reason to have a noncompete. All it takes is an internet search and the patient can easily find where the MD has relocated to. 7. The pressure on physicians has been mounting with the changes in healthcare. The list is too long but includes scheduling of patients, increased challenges with ICD coding, prior authorizations for everything from prescriptions to testing, pressure to increase IZVU's, etc. 8. And lastly, the liability these physicians face daily. With the pressure to increase patient load, EMR necessary documentation, supervision of mid level providers, etc. 1 have worked as a medical legal consultant for 25 years. I never cease to be amazed at the number and type of medical malpractice cases. For example, a PCP is allegedly negligent if he does not see the incidental findings of a questionable mass on a heart scan the cardiologist ordered. The PCP is expected to review every test and lab any other specialist orders. Does he get reimbursed for that time? No, the healthcare system typically gives him 4 hours per week to review all tests, imaging, consult with specialists, call patients, etc. And now we want to force these physicians to stay in a practice that exposes him to increased liability? Or work many extra non paid hours and get burned out or worse, make a mistake? It is time to move past this antiquated system of non compete clauses. As these healthcare systems grow, the physicians get backed further and further into a corner. They need the escape hatch of removing the non compete clause. Carolyn Palash, BSN, RN"
Kate	"Support the ban on non-complete clauses in employment. All this does is keep workers hostage to a work environment that no longer suits them, or is dangerous or injurious to them in some way. It keeps the economy down by forcing workers to stay in low-wage jobs, or unemployed when they have to quit a job and can't get another because of a non-compete clause. It's a violation of a employee's privacy and freedom. A person's employer has no right to dictate what an employee can and cannot do in seeking employment if they no longer wish to stay in their current employment."

Alexander	"I strongly support banning the non-compete clause. As a worker limited by this clause it has significantly hampered my potential earnings, as well as, my mobility."
Alexander	"To whom it may concern, As a resident physician I cannot emphasize enough how strongly this change would empower the working class specifically those who work in Healthcare. The AHA will have you believe that this rule change would be detrimental to patients, but the truth is they are against this change because it gives workers power to seek better employment. Right now hospitals use this rule to artificially suppress wages and benefits. The removal of this rule would promote a true free market which would allow labor to flow to the best systems encouraging hospitals to follow in suite. I am 100% in favor of this change."
Vevek	"Non-competes should be illegal"
Michael	"I am a surgeon in the Chicago area and I am in favor of the ban on non-compete clauses. I feel that these clauses are another way that physicians are stripped of bargaining power. When we lose the ability to move from places of employment with poor or even abusive practices without moving our families we are coerced into continuing in negative work environments. These clauses have directly hurt my colleagues and their families."
Susan	"Workers are, and should never be, slaves. They need to maintain the individual right to leave an abusive employer, or move to a better job. In narrow cases, they may need to agree to protect certain trade secrets. But non-compete agreements should be illegal."
Adarsh	"As a physician , hospital corporations should not be able to impose non competes extending beyond the facility. The use of radius from facility effectively blocks a provider from choosing another location near their primary household. The hospital essentially locks a provider out from working in the same county and continue to suppress compensation because there are no viable options due to the non compete."
Atul	"1) For all small businesses, (less than 25 employees), their staff and employees are their key asset!!! All small businesses with less than 25 employees, should be EXEMPT from the ruling. Innovation happens with small businesses. Their intellectual property — trade secrets - are their only real assets. 2) Make it mandatory that all Non-Competes (if allowed) should be very specific, a dollar figure must be attached to the breaking of this non-compete, and explicit compensation as a percentage of the dollar figure be given at the time of signing so that both parties acknowledge the contract. 3) Remove all existing NON-Compete for EVERYONE I t This gives ONE-time opportunity for everyone to re-negotiate."
Kimberly	"As an agency recruiter with a focus largely on senior and executive-level roles, and also as a partner in my own agency I have seen non-compete clauses negatively impact many individuals in their job search efforts, causing financial burdens on the individuals and their families. This would also increase the amount of available talent in the market, and there have been several time periods where the demand for specialized skills exceeds the availability of talent."

Mehul	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements. Sincerely, Mehul Patel West Chicago, IL"
Mit	"Employees should not be restricted by Non Compete clauses and be free to take their talent to any company in the job market."
Neel	"Noncompetes are absurd. They limit the opportunity for work and growth and give employers unfair leverage."
Sean	"Non competes should be gone forever it's unfair. I'm recently being sued from a former employer and was terminated from my new employer because they didn't want to spend the money on a lawyer.I left my former employer because I only made $20,000 that year and they hired 2 reps in my area to compete against me"
K	"This is a good and necessary rule! Employment mobility should be a right of the worker and no employer should be able to dictate or prohibit in anyway an employees freedom of choice over who they are employed by. This rule would have saved me a lot of time effort and headache in returning to my work as a bedside nurse as full time staff at a hospital I was previously working at as agency temp staff. I had to leave the bedside for over a year to break my non compete with the staffing agency."
Anitha	"It is anti free market to have non competes. Almost indentured servitude. Do away with it please."
Julie	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. I have seen first hand how these noncompete contracts have negatively impacted college graduates in their careers. This has restricted their ability to gain further experience in the industry they are in. That harms that industry as well as the small businesses competing in that industry. Our economy and society will do better if we encourage entrepreneurship rather than restrict these talented employees. I just recently became aware that some fast food workers have had to sign noncompete contracts. That is wrong. This hurts these workers from making a living. Workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements. Sincerely, Julie Perzopane Wood Dale, IL"

David	"Non-compete and non-solicitation agreements are bad for consumers and limit competition. Companies hold all the power and use them to intimidate employees, and keep them from leaving to either work for a competitor or start a competing business. They are fundamentally anti-capitalistic. The case could be made to allow them for very small businesses that may need protection until they become viable, but if they are allowed at all, they should be very limited and once a company reaches a certain level of size, they should not be allowed."
Charles	"I strongly support a ban on non-compete agreements. These agreements in the software industry are extremely broad and can easily be abused by companies to prevent individuals from working in across large swaths of the industry just under the threat of legal fees. Companies abuse these agreements to prevent employees from seeking employment at a competitor and starting new businesses and serve as a means to deny someone their livelihood. They also harm companies hying to bring on new talent due to non-compete clauses giving companies and hiring managers hesitation to bring on legal challenges to their company. Banning non-compete agreements would be a positive move towards creating a fairer and more competitive job market that benefits both workers and employers."
Max	"Please go ahead with the new rule to ban non-compete clauses from labor contracts. It will help millions of workers and our economy overall."
Raymond	"I am a practicing physician in Northern Illinois. I have a very narrow specialty of wound care in nursing homes. I have been working with one company (Vohra Wound Physicians) for the past 13 years who has a very strict non-compete clause in their contract for my employment. The nature of this contract makes it nearly impossible for me to find employment in the same field anywhere else in the country due to their presence in most states and populated areas as they have a 25-mile radius clause where I cannot practice in the same setting within 25 miles of any building that they currently are in. Being that they are in over 3,000 buildings nationally, this makes it very difficult. Since they know this, they have continued to reduce my compensation as well as benefits. They claim that the non-compete clause is to prevent any of their employees from starting a company with a similar or identical business model. The fact is that there are dozens of companies that have done exactly that, but I cannot even apply to them due to the non-compete clause. I am far from alone as there are dozens of physicians in the company who feel the same way. We have watched over the years as our incomes have steadily dropped, while the privately owned company profits continue to go up. Personally my income has dropped 40% over the past 6 years while the corporate profits have increased every year! It is basically indentured servitude as our only choices are to go unemployed for two years,

	move to an area where there is not enough population to support our specialty, or go back and do a one to two year fellowship training in another medical field. By eliminating the non-compete clause, this would provide more job opportunities, can provide qualified medical care in buildings that currently do not have it, and will create competition for this highly skilled and specialized class of physician. Overall the entire field will improve. They have plenty of laws that protect their proprietary medical records and billing system as well as their trademarks. PLEASE, I beg of you to take action and make non-compete clauses a thing of the past! This will create better paying jobs, provide better medical care to areas where it is lacking, and create competition for more qualified candidates to fill this specialty. Thank you"
Srinivas	"This should be banned. It's mainly for corporate world to keep feared employees"
Srinivas	"No compete is just a corporate oppression of physicians . This needs banned"
Mark	"I enthusiastically support an end to non-compete clauses. They are anti-competitive and far in excess of any legitimate need by employers."
Talha	"Non-competes should be removed from contracts. It goes against free markets. It is dangerous and allows big health systems to become stronger eventually becoming a monopoly in a region."
Shiraz	"I wholeheartedly support FTCs decision to ban non-compete clauses in contracts for all professions. I can tell you that these clauses have caused irreparable hams in my area - I am a physician in Illinois and involved in hiring doctors to my area. Because of noncompete clauses I have had significant struggles recruiting doctors to our hospital as the No competes clauses three doctors to move out of the state if they end wanting to switch jobs and causes them to not pursue jobs in the first place with these clauses. This has contributed to a shortage of doctors across our system and made it impossible to recruit new doctors to our area. Additionally when we have doctors wanting to join many times their patients follow them, but when doctors move out of state because of these noncompetes they must travel very long distances and have significant delays or drops in their care. More times than I can count this has resulted in patients not following up or finding another replacement doctor and then arriving in an emergency room with problems that could have been avoided in a much cheaper way earlier if they had not lost access to their preferred doctors. Removing these clauses would be a positive step toward improving patient access and care across the nation. This would also significantly reduce cost of care by allowing increased competition among healthcare centers to retain good doctors and nurses and address ongoing healthcare provider shortages and burnout."
Mohammad	"As a software engineer, I am deeply concerned about the impact that Non-Disclosure Agreements (NDAs) can have on both employees and consumers. Many companies require employees to sign NDAs that can make it nearly impossible to find new jobs, limit innovation, and ultimately harm the economy as a whole. As someone who works in the tech industry , I have seen firsthand how NDAs can be used to prevent employees from sharing their knowledge and expertise with potential employers, limiting job opportunities and stifling innovation. This not only banns employees, but it also harms constuners who rely on new and innovative products and services to meet their needs. Moreover, NDAs can be used to prevent employees from speaking out about illegal or unethical practices. This allows companies to continue engaging in harmful practices without fear of being exposed, which can ultimately harm both employees and consumers. Finally, NDAs can be used to stifle competition by preventing employees from working for competing companies or sharing their knowledge and expertise with others in their field. This can reduce innovation, limit constuner choice, and ultimately harm the economy as a whole. In light of these issues, I urge you to consider the negative impact that NDAs can have on both employees and consumers"

Sheetal	"Most importantly, noncompete clauses are unethical and bad for patient care because of loss of continuity. It takes years to develop a relationship with a patient. Especially when people have illness and complicated histories. It is harmful to their care to make them part with their physician Making physicians Drive additional mileage to do their job is bad for the environment. Which is, In turn, bad for health due to additional fossil fuel pollution. In addition, Physicians pay hundreds of thousands of dollars and years of life to earn our education it is unethical to Rob them of the relationships they have built and their vocation. It contributes to physician burn out, which is a large strain on the already burdened, healthcare system."
Robert	""Non-Compete" agreements are an affront to our freedom and our economy!!"
Brian	"Having more workforce fluidity by disabling non-competes increases competition, spreads innovation faster, and better for the health of the economy"
Eric	"Noncompete should be outlawed. Competition is a good thing and will lead to better conditions for workers and likely better pay. It is not reasonable that someone should have to move dozens or hundreds of miles away just to change jobs. There should be NO income exceptions either. Everyone should be eligible."
Ron	"Non compete clause is keeping me from working in the industry I worked in for 30 years. It only protects the corporation non and hurts the employee"
Gregory	"I am fully in favor of banning non-compete agreements!"
David	"I am strongly in favor of the proposal that bans non-compete clauses in the course of business. I am an anesthesiologist and use agencies to arrange work assignments for my practice. The contracts that include non compete clauses, hinder my ability to explore work options and also forbids other local hospitals and Surgicenters from using my services, which is totally unfair"

Will	"For families this is very important that their parents can change job's without having to move."
Danielle	"I fully support the rule to ban non-compete contracts, as I have had to turn down jobs before due to non-compete. In my experience, terrible employers regularly use this to threaten workers, and limit their options for employment. It is great to see the FTC do something that directly challenges corporate power and I hope you will follow through and officially adopt and enforce this rule."
T	"Yes please. Working in certain fields, agreements such as these make it very hard to find other jobs, especially in small towns."
Yasser	"Non compete clauses are damaging Most of us physicians don't receive a lot of business training, there's too much to learn to be a doctor. I remember signing my first non compete and then talking to a lawyer about a business idea I had. The lawyer read my contract and told me that even if I bought a restaurant, technically my medical group could come after me for it. Non competes are also weaponized and are one of the bluntest tools in an employers bag of tricks. One of my colleagues sent me her contract for review, she was taking a job in Nebraska. The non compete made it so that she couldn't work for the only major competitor if she quit her job, who was 200 miles away. So in this she was a pawn between a chess game between those two health systems. Of course the patients are the most affected by this. There are many other experiences I've had with these. The healthcare systems will try and say it is better for patients somehow but that is quite demonstrably, and obviously, false."
Jayaraj	"This Rule is long over due, especially for medical community. Like myself who practice in small cities and serving rural area's. Where it is extremely hard to recruit talent and good doctors. Hospitals and Corporates with their deep pocket entice Physician who have been in the community for more than Decade or two establishing their practices to join them. When the contract ends they enforce these non compete rules, which is forcing established physicians to uproot the family and work or sometime quit all together practicing, which creates shortage of physician workforce in the community. Please please enact this law ASAP. Protect the physician community with unfair labor practices. Abolish Non-compete all together."
JOHN	"Please level the playing field for American workers! These NCA's serve no legitimate purpose 99% of the time - except to put pressure on employees to stay put at their current jobs. THANKS!"
Faisal	"Please do NOT exclude Physicians from non-compete rules. Physicians need the ability just like other professionals to work freely without restrictions. Recent efforts by the American Hospital Association to get Physicians excluded from the non-compete provisions are examples of profits over patients. Please do not fall for it. Thank you"

Jose	"My name is Jose Sanchez. As a constituent, I am for abolishing non-compete agreements. Because of a non-compete agreements, I wasn't able to provide an essential service to the people in my community. Since Illinois recently updated their non-compete laws, I finally have been able to start the process of building my own business that our community desperately needs. I've been hying to change the way the industry I'm in is viewed, perceived, and used by the public. The last 5 years alone, I've proven that I'm the only one in my city with the skill-set to take my industry to the next level. Yet, I've been strong-armed into thinking that I would be breaking my non- compete if I where to ever do so. Now that I have the opportunity to do it, I can't wait to show the world my plans to propel my industry forwards. This is the hope and opportunity that is created when non-competes don't exist. I hope that no one has to feel like their "stuck" working for a company when they have dreams on starting their own. I hope we as a people realize that it's that same hope that build this great country in the first place. A hope for a better life. Thank you for your time, and I hope that this proposal passes for the sake of every American that has hopes of starting a business one day."
Sarah	"Despite collusion to suppress wages being illegal, hospitals of ALL sorts routinely do this by doing 'market assessments' by severely limiting their search area. Non-compete clauses then prevent employees from taking a better paying job in that area (often a 50mi radius). They also then add in 'within 50mi radius of any health system care center'... that can take out most of a state."
Hannah	"I would like to respectfully submit this comment in support of the proposed Non-compete Clause Rule. Non-compete clauses aren't necessary for a business to maintain security over it's assets, and serve only to allow businesses to exert undue control over their workers even after the professional relationship between them has ended. They are anti-competitive and do not serve or support the workers and communities that they impact."
Maliha	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, As a medical professional, I am writing to express my support for the abolition of noncompete clauses for doctors. These clauses restrict the mobility and freedom of doctors, and often serve to protect the interests of employers rather than promoting fair competition. Noncompete clauses can be particularly harmful to doctors, who may have limited negotiating power and are often required to sign these clauses as a condition of their employment. These doctors may be unable to take advantage of better job opportunities due to the restrictions imposed by noncompete clauses, leading to stagnation in their careers and reduced economic mobility. In addition, noncompete clauses can limit the availability of medical care in certain areas. When doctors are bound by noncompete clauses, they may be unable to practice in certain geographic locations, leading to a shortage of doctors in those areas and potentially compromising the quality of care for patients. I believe that noncompete clauses are fundamentally unfair and do more harm than good, particularly in the medical field. I urge the FTC to take action to abolish these

	clauses and promote greater competition and access to medical care for patients. Sincerely, Maliha Sayla MD"
William	"I believe this is a very smart thing to do. I am not an economist, but what I have read about the dampening effect of noncompetes on the economies of states that allow them leads me to agree with the economic argument in favor of banning them. Additionally, as a software developer, I have had the experience of working for a small consulting firm whose contract included a noncompete restricting me from taking subsequent employment with any similar firm within my geographic area for a period of at least a year (I do not recall the specific time period), and I recall feeling distinctly limited by that provision. It dampened my sense that I could strike out and use my skills in relevantly similar employment, and I believe it also allowed my then-employer to simply muddle along without really feeling they had to compete to retain my talents. Overall, it left a bad taste in my mouth. I no longer am subject to a noncompete clause in my current job, but I think for anyone who does your proposed rule change would come as a boon. I also think it is ridiculous that such noncompete clauses are embedded in contracts of lower-paying, lower-skill jobs. Those employers should definitely have to compete to retain their workers, not simply corral them as if they were indentured servants. Trade secrets and intellectual property are important of course, but at/larding individuals the ability to participate in the economy with full freedom and maximal leverage does nothing to undermine those. In short, I fully support this rule change and hope to see it implemented nationwide as soon as possible."
Julie	"Dear Federal Trade Commission, I am writing to urge you to ban non-compete clauses for all employees, including physicians. As you know, non-compete clauses restrict an employee's ability to work for a competitor for a certain period of time after leaving a job. While these clauses may be useful in protecting a company's proprietary information, they can have a significant negative impact on employees and the public. In particular, non-compete clauses for physicians can have a devastating effect on patient care. If a physician is prohibited from treating patients within a certain geographic area, it can limit access to healthcare for individuals in need. This is especially concerning in rural areas, where there may be only a few physicians available to treat a large population. Additionally, non-compete clauses can limit career opportunities for physicians and discourage them from seeking employment in certain areas. This can exacerbate physician shortages and reduce access to healthcare for patients. Continuity of care and maintenance of the doctor patient relationship is central to developing trust. Patients are more likely to participate in care when they have a physician they trust. Physicians need to be able to remain in an area over time for their patients, regardless of the politics or changing ownership of the hospital systems. Therefore, I strongly urge you to include physicians in any ban on non-compete clauses. It is crucial that we prioritize patient care and ensure that individuals have access to the healthcare services they need. By prohibiting non-compete clauses for physicians, we can help to increase access to healthcare and improve the overall quality of care. Thank you for your attention to this important matter. Sincerely, Dr.Schroeder"

Benedict	"Obviously, a Non-Compete clause prevents competition by... preventing competition. It prioritizes the interests of the corporation at the direct expense of the employee. If you leave a job you are specially trained to do, are you just supposed to not work for two years or whatever is the length of the contract? It allows companies to get rid of employees with impunity, leaving them nothing to lose, while an employee has no power and has their livelihood to lose."
Theresa	"All of you reading my comment if you cannot think about the people you serve, then think about your family and/or think about yourself The private practice of medication by large corporations is 100% killing healthcare in the United States. Please read the words of one of my esteemed associates: Physicians took an oath to put patients first, they also have a fiduciary responsibility to their patients. The corporate practice of medicine is illegal in most states. Noncompete agreements are in direct conflict with the ethical practice of Medicine because they put Physicians at risk of being strong, armed into practicing unethical medicine, and putting their employers over their patients. The physician should have a right to work and move freely just like every other person. Physicians are the value creators. There's no intellectual property or business value that is created by health system employers -they bring patients and doctors together, they are compensated, handsomely for that service, and they should have no further influence or jurisdiction over the practice of medicine. Will someone with some sense please put physicians back in charge of taking care of patients? This cannot be done when we are treated like commodities and purchased by the lowest bidder. Please understand, we are all likely to be a patient. Who do you want next to your hospital bed making decisions?"
Alex	"I am the Village Planner for the Village of Hanover Park, although I am providing comment on behalf of myself. Many of our small businesses are struggling to attract workers. Non-compete agreements give a significant advantage to the larger chains who may be better able to attract workers in the first place. With these agreements in place, our small businesses struggle to compete and attract workers. While we have several chain restaurants/stores, the backbone of our local economy is small businesses. Ending non-compete agreements would strengthen our local economy and support small businesses."
William	"Non-compete clause rules also know within my industry (Medical Healthcare Complex) as "restrictive covenants" has been nothing but corrosive and detrimental to the overall good of society and individuals who need healthcare resources. The healthcare industry takes great advantage of such contracts by preventing doctors and other professionals, who are employed or contacted physicians, from using their skills and knowledge to help other populations in nearby communities where the need exist. In rural areas, non-compete contracts can go out to 50-mile radius (such as in my case) which means one has to move away from the communities where their family go to church and children go to school. This is a great hardship for such professionals. In the era of healthcare resource scarcity and shortages of physicians, especially in rural regions of America, doctors are often locked out by local medical centers or large medical group practices from working in these communities once they leave their

	employer. This type of corporate healthcare protectionism keeps competition away and artificially increases demand for high-cost services. These medical corporations' benefit at the detriment to sociality and the individual doctor who cannot fight the legal costs to have the right to work and provide care in their local community. Excuses such as the cost of training doctors or recruiting and thus loss of profits in this high profit business are weak and lopsided compared to the damage imparted to the local community and society at large not to mention the individual professional who has to leave."
Anne	"The non compete clause needs to be eliminated now! It is a tool of the wealthy to enforce poverty wages on workers at the lowest rung of the working class."
Pamela	"Non-compete clauses harm American workers and innovators. The FTC should ban these practices."
Chirag	"Most hospitals are not for profits. Are they really though? The business administration folk are getting billions while the nurses and doctors are getting short changed. We provide the care. There should not be a non compete for us."
Love	"I would highly support this rule. As a future attending and practicing physician, I see absolutely no utility to have noncompete clauses for physicians, who are usually trained and funded by public institutions and money. For example, resident physician stipend come from the Centers for Medicare/Medicaid Services (CMS) and hospitals and communities benefit greatly from our training. Also, most physicians don't operate with exclusive information or are given extensive on the job training by their employer. They should be free to move jobs as they wish"
Neil	"I hope that non competes will be removed for everyone including doctors. I am a retina surgeon who was providing very valuable care to the local population. Because of the extensive non-compete, I was forced to leave an underserved area in Kansas and move to a different state. I would have never moved but was forced to due to my non-compete. It has taken a serious toll on me and my family. I had to leave a lot of friends and family to move to this position and it also cost a lot of money and time. I think this would be a true gift to the American people if we are able to change this."
Nasir	"Very well awaited regulation. This will allow employees not to consider themselves enslaved by their employers because they have invested in their houses and children schools and non compete clause is like a shackle. Also this will allow businesses to excel in terms of employee's care and will compete against other businesses for better employment opportunities."
Sameena	"We really should remove Noncompete clauses as it is a way to solve the physician shortage and provide health care to all. Physicians should be allowed to practice and provide healthcare to the needy."

Robert	"I have a non-compete and it makes me feel like a slave. There is no end to the term of the contract either. So basically...I am not allowed to leave" ismael	"non-compete clauses for physicians have significant negative effects on both the healthcare industry and patients. By limiting physicians' mobility, patients' freedom of choice, and healthcare innovation, these clauses can ultimately harm patient outcomes. Therefore, it is essential to consider ending non-compete clauses for physicians to ensure that patients have access to quality healthcare services and that the healthcare industry can continue to progress and innovate."
Harry	"I fully support dropping non-compete clauses from all contracts. Most physicians are currently employed and not in partnerships like in the past."
Nadia	"Non compete should not be allowed. It basically hurts the patients. They choose organizations according to where their physician is and their provider has to move outside radius due to a contract then patients feel abandoned and not felt like there need was important. Non compete should be removed and providers be able to work in their proximity thus patients will not be affected."
John	"I strongly support the FTC's efforts to ban noncompete agreements"
Rick	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete agreements. As a software developer I have understood them to be used to protect a company's trade secrets, so I was shocked to learn that they're also used for employees of fast food and retail businesses, where employees have no trade secrets. In such cases non-compete clauses don't protect business secrets - they merely keep employees hostage to a work situation that might be improved by taking a different job. Banning non-compete clauses will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth on an open market."
Marc	"Just like any other worker, physicians must be allowed to work and travel wherever is most suited for them. Non-compete clauses violate the very underpinnings of our free market system and benefit the ultra-wealthy at the expense of those working to care for patients. Non-compete clauses prevent continuity of care and promote the abuse of workers by trapping them in situations which they can not easily leave. Patients and providers alike suffer greatly under this policy and I firmly support the removal of any and all non-compete barriers on physicians and any other healthcare workers. When physicians are empowered, patients will benefit greatly. Please do what is right and allow physicians and providers of all types to make free and fair decisions about their work environment, their patient resources, and their futures."
David	"I have been an Emergency Physician for more than 30 years. On multiple occasions I have been forced out of a hospital where I had good relationships with patients, staff and administration, because the contractor who was employing me lost the contract, and the hospital could not afford to buy me out of the mandatory non-compete clause between myself and the contract group. This has resulted in disruption and down-time in my practice, lost income, and

	increased administrative work involved in my job involuntary search for a new job and credentialing at a different hospital. It also has resulted in increased cost to the hospital, who must credential and on-board a new list of physicians, as well as exposing patients to new physicians who require time to work smoothly in the therapeutic team, and may turn out to be unsuited to that particular facility. These costs to the physicians and hospitals involved are precisely the purpose of the non-compete clauses, constituting a barrier to physicians attempting to obtain fair compensation, a barrier to hospitals attempting to obtain quality Emergency Department services, and increased risk to patients who seek quality care. The only entity that benefits is the contract company, whose financial incentives may actually be antithetical to patient care."
John	"Non-compete contracts should be banned immediately. A company should not have total control over an employees rights and ability to find their next job. Being an employee at-will gives workers zero rights as they can be terminate with no cause. Please support the amendments to ban noncompete agreements."
Josh	"I signed a non-compete with a Physical Therapy company and when I tried to find work while furloughed in 2020 they threatened to enforce it. Most employees feel pressured into signing them and do not have the resources to fight back against them. Please ban non-compete clauses."
Francis	"I think this rule is fantastic. As an executive in a specialized field, my options and salary are greatly eliminated because of my companies noncompete. In addition, the noncompete is tied to long term incentives, so I can only benefit if I sign the noncompete. Lastly, if the company terminates me with no cause, the noncompete still applies. Please pass this rule. I'm happy to sign a no disclosure if the company is worried about IP but they shouldn't be able to stop me from getting a job in a similar field at similar or better pay."
Zack	"As a physician, I strongly support the proposed FTC Non-Compete Clause Rule to ban non-compete clauses in employment contracts. In the healthcare industry, non-compete clauses have become all too common and have had a significant impact on our ability to practice medicine freely and effectively. Non-compete clauses restrict our ability to seek better opportunities and pursue advancements in our careers, leading to stagnation in the industry. This can be particularly harmful for physicians who want to relocate to a new area or join a different practice, as they are often forced to choose between staying in a suboptimal position or leaving the profession altogether. Furthermore, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to care by reducing the number of physicians available in a given area. This can create a monopoly on healthcare services and limit the options available to patients. As healthcare providers, our top priority is always our patients, and non-compete clauses directly contradict that priority. By banning non-compete clauses, the proposed rule will help promote competition in the healthcare industry and improve the quality of care available to patients. It will also provide physicians with the freedom and flexibility to pursue career opportunities that are in line with their professional goals and best serve their patients. In conclusion, I urge the FTC to move forward with the

	proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as it will help to ensure a more competitive and patient- centered healthcare industry, while also providing physicians with the freedom and flexibility to advance their careers and provide the best possible care to their patients."
Nitin	"noncompete clauses and contracts shackle physicians to their jobs, and do not allow them to look for better paying positions or better work conditions. Because of noncompete, employers do not have any incentive to keep their doctors happy and provide them with ancillary services they need to do their job well. this country is founded on competition with your neighboring competition, not remote and irrelevant competition. Please pass a rule or law that bans non-competes. They give employers an . unfair advantage."
Jeremy	"Given that the only beneficiaries of these non-compete clauses are companies, rather than the people who labor for their benefit, I wholeheartedly support banning such restrictions on employees. I encourage the FTC to approve its proposed rule."
William	"It's incredibly baffling that this is still A THING in the U.S. The FTC's proposed rule to ban non-compete agreements would be a major step in leveling the playing field for workers. It should also have a significant impact on improving worker wages, yet make it easier for employers to fill open positions. The fact that the public comment period was extended into April is insane. This is a bipartisan bill that should be expedited into law-especially given the current economic climate. The announcement by the FTC to extend the public comment period is baffling Within the statement it was acknowledged that this would modify precedent that has been in place for "hundreds of years". A mind-boggling admission of policy working against the U.S. workforce. Enough is enough. It's time to move this forward. Three in five Americans support this legislation. Let's go."
William	"My wife is currently exploring legal options to fight a non-compete agreement she signed when initially starting her most recent job. Now, because her former manager wanted to take over her book of business to make more money via commission, she is unemployed and unable to work for a competitor for 12 months. All this after less than two years on the job. "Things didn't work out, so we have to let you go, but also, we're scared of you and know you'll be successful with a competitor, so you can't do that." This ban on non-compete agreements can't come soon enough. It's long overdue and will positively impact millions of Americans. For executives and CEOs? Sure. For everyone else? No way. It's not saving your business, it's potentially ruining lives."
Anand	"I am in full support of the proposed rule. As an employed physician in a large city, I have seen the continued entry of private equity and the consolidation of healthcare organizations over the last 12 years in practice. I have a restrictive covenant which does not allow me to practice in a certain geographic area should I leave my employer. Of course, this places an undue burden on the employee to find a position outside a certain area and there are associated costs. The

	organizations (employers) would argue that an employee leaving would be a threat to the organization should they violate their non-compete, but the David vs Goliath dynamic that exists makes this argument invalid. In a true competitive environment, the employer should rely on their business and employment models to retain employees, and not rely on the threat of legal action. I would argue that those who want a less regulated business environment should also be in favor of the proposed rule in that the elimination of non-competes leads to a true competitive environment, Finally, the success of our country in the past has relied on the small individual-owned business and the local community, and not on large corporations. If an employee has put in sufficient work investing and fostering their local community, they should be able to stay in that local community (whether with another employer or starting their own small business) without prohibitive action from large institutions. I appreciate your time reading my comment."
Line	"Please get rid of non-compete . It makes it hard for people live close to work if switching jobs, which is loss of time, cost in gas and travel, and prevents people from getting the jobs they desire to become effective participants in our economy . In my case as a physician, I would have to uproot my kids to get a new job and work close to home . 2 hour per Day extra commute is loss of time, money, and productivity ."
Robert	"eliminate not-compete clause rule....the people worked hard for those skills, and fyi the company didn't pay for that with the time, the energy ,and the money...so they have no place in our world!"
Brad	"I got studied to become licensed for multiple professional exams. I am currently subject to a non-compete in my employment agreement. I have a two year old daughter. If i leave my job, i am not allowed to find work in my professional field with a different company? this is not fair. I am not competing with a big company, i am just wanting to be able to do my job that i have studied and trained for literally for years. Companies should not have this level of power over employees. I also had to deal with a few years of uncertainty/insecurity when i was growing up when my dad left a job that he was subject to a non- compete for! He was unable to work for 2 years when i was in fifth/sixth grade. The field is investment advisor/tax attorney."
Kyle	"Non competes stifle workers rights as well as making it harder for companies to acquire top talent. Given a choice a worker will go to a company without a non compete. For those of us that work for companies that have non competes for new hires, it makes it extremely hard to go out and find help. I know I could try to drive change from within but I'd much rather it just be against the law."
angelo	"Any opportunity for free market enterprise is vital to both our nation and the globe. With the advent of technology on our door step, that has uprooted millions of entry level jobs, non complete cause rule is an important first step"

Eric	"As a family physician who recently completed my training and is now employed in Chicago, I have a very real concern about the non-compete clause in my contract. While I'm happy in my current role, if that were ever to change I would be limited from continuing to practice in nearly the entire city of Chicago for a period of two years. Given that my wife works downtown and I have a young child in daycare, moving or commuting out of the city would be a huge financial and emotional burden for my whole family. Given that I am one of well over a 1000 physicians employed by my health care system there is very little practical impact that I could have on them if I were to leave for either solo practice or to another major academic medical center. I also explicitly asked to negotiate the terms of the non compete during my hiring and was given no latitude to do so. Eliminating these harmful provisions that only serve to restrict job mobility and reduce competition for wages and talent would be a huge benefit to young physicians like myself. I encourage you in the strongest possible terms to complete this rule without carve outs. Thank you for your consideration"
Alex	"I write today to express my strong support for the FTC's proposed ban on non-compete clauses. Here is a real-life example of the non-compete clause's detrimental effect on our city of eighty thousand residents served by two community hospitals in central Illinois. One of the hospitals was recently acquired by a large healthcare corporation. The executives of the corporation forced a major salary cut on physicians when they took over control of the hospital. Half of the physicians decided to leave the hospital, but they could not transfer their practices to the other hospital in town due to non-compete clauses. Most of these physicians ended up leaving the state, including the only interventional cardiology practice in town. As a result, when someone in our city suffers a heart attack, they have to be transferred one hour away to the nearest hospital with interventional cardiology services. Several patients died before they could reach the other hospital. Our community is already medically under-served, because it is not a very desirable area to attract new physicians. This mass exodus of physicians was devastating to our community. If it weren't for the non-compete clauses, most of these physicians would have stayed in our community, because they had deep ties here. Non-compete clauses do not just affect the workers who are forced to sign them. They affect entire communities, who suffer the consequence of reduced access to necessary medical care as a result. I strongly urge you to enact the ban on non-compete clauses. Thank you for your time."
Bryan	"I am writing in support of banning Non-compete clauses. I am an OB/Gyn physician in a very large medical system. My group has dissolved due to my partners either leaving for out of state or retiring. The medical system now wants to move me to a hospital that is 40 miles away. As an OB I have to be within 30 minutes of the hospital in order to be compliant with hospital by laws. Since I live 40 miles away from the proposed new hospital I would have to stay in the hospital every time I am on call which will prevent me from spending time with my wife and children. I have informed my employer that I will be resigning due to the extreme circumstances surrounding maintaining my employment. I have been informed that my employer will be enforcing my current 10 mile restrictive covenant. Not only does this impact me and my family, but it puts patient safety care at risk as my current patients will have a difficult time establishing with a new OB as there is already a shortage of OBs in my area. If these non compete rules were lifted, I would be able to join a practice in my current area that would allow for the continued safe care of the OB patients in my area. I hope the FTC places a high priority on patient safety as a reason to eliminate non compete clauses."

Gail	"As a group, businesses happy to redefine the free market to suit their interests, are once again showing their true colors. The ban on non-compete agreements is necessary for the "free market" to function in our "free" society. So, I say to the Chamber of Commerce, and all others, who are putting large dollars into battling against this to stop. Save your money and do not be afraid of allowing this to occur. Ban the non-compete agreements."
Matthew	"Non-compete clauses are bad for workers. Too often, businesses use them to restrict low level employees under the guise of "protecting trade secrets". Non-competes have been documented to have been used by employers of hairdressers, sandwich makers, and researchers. These are absurd and abusive overreaches of the use of non-competes. There are far more documented examples of non-compete abuses in current media. Individuals' livelihoods have been destroyed by non-competes. I urge the policymakers to ban them."
Rick	"Please move forward with this proposal. It is so unfortunate as an employee to not be able to take another job and source of income because it competes with another employer. Biggest example is a fitness trainer or instructor has difficulty teaching a class a various locations and employers because one or more have a non-compete clause and now I as the employee am now dependent on one employer to give me a living wage, which is highly unlikely. You might get one or two permanent classes per week which could be between $50- 120/week. Not a living wage."
Jennifer	"Non competes should be banned. their utility has always been heavily weighted in favor of the employer, and their practical application actually hinders both corporations and individuals. In many industries, non competes hinder the ability of individuals to obtain new work, as would-be employers are reluctant to hire individuals who have opaque limitations on their ability to contribute to their organization. Ironically, the same risk that is encouraged for individuals in taking on a project is seen as a liability, and hiring managers are encouraged to overlook some more qualified individuals to minimize the potential risk. For individuals, non competes eliminate the natural build on their knowledge and expertise, and many are forced to seek work not aligned to their experiences. This career limiting behavior is detrimental to individuals and their ability to meaningfully contribute to the economy and their careers."
Ken	"I am in support of this ban of non-compete clauses. A non-compete clause is detrimental to a competitive free-market system and it is also anti-labor. The federal government should be supporting and ensuring that American citizens have the right to work where they want when they want. A company should not have the power to restrict my employment. Any argument a company or the Chamber of Commerce would make to keep non-compete clauses would be for the sole purpose of keeping wages low and restricting competition from growing. If the FTC does not have the power to execute this order than Congress should enact a law to eliminate non-compete clauses."

Abe	"I wholeheartedly support the banning of non-compete agreements. It is incredibly evil for companies to stop an employee from continuing in their line of work or career under the guise of protecting trade secrets or whatever excuse. Non-competes only ever benefit companies and harm workers. Companies can protect their "trade secrets" by making it worthwhile for employees to stay."
Shilpa	" Physicians should not be subject to non-compete clauses because it can limit patients' access to healthcare, reduce competition, and negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. Firstly, non-compete clauses limit patients' access to healthcare, particularly in areas where there are already limited healthcare providers. This is because physicians may be prevented from practicing in the same geographic area, which can lead to longer wait times, reduced quality of care, and potentially higher healthcare costs for patients. Secondly, non-compete clauses can reduce competition among healthcare providers, which can lead to higher prices and lower quality of care. This is because patients may have fewer options to choose from, which can result in less pressure on healthcare providers to compete on the basis of quality, price, or innovation. Finally, non-compete clauses can also negatively impact physician autonomy and career opportunities. For example, a physician may be prevented from leaving a particular healthcare organization or hospital to start their own practice or work for a competitor. This can limit a physician's ability to grow their career, gain new experiences, or pursue different professional opportunities. In summary, non-compete clauses can negatively impact patient access to healthcare, reduce competition, subject physicians to predatory and abusive employment situations (which I have personally suffered under) as well as limit physician autonomy and career opportunities."
Daniel	"I support the ban of noncompetes"
Mohammad	"No compete in medicine creates lack of services and fills the pockets of venture capitalist and hospital owners"
Mehul	"It helps patients get better care, if there is no Non-Compete clause. It's a tool by non- physician administrators to tell MDs how to manage patients, instead of MD doing what is right. If there is non-compete clause, the MD feels obligated to do what non- physician MD tells him to Do, or leave the area he worked for years and took care of patients."
Mike	"Non compete agreement is completely unfair & needs to end. I'm one of million employees whose trapped by this agreement in mid size tech company . Please abolish it ASAP. Thanks!"

Kenneth	"Thank goodness,, I've been locked into a non-compete for years.. all it really means is I can't get another job in sales I cannot go out and get a sales job in anything I ever sold at my current company Pittsburgh Pipe.. extremely unreasonable. Basically we've sold everything under the sun... They're able to push their employees around, but only behind their backs by falsifying cost on products etc... They have a nasty way of doing business and I've been wanting to get out of this for years , and it keeps me from teaching disadvantage business enterprises on how to do sales . Basically then I compete should be near illegal but it's not.. 618-917-155 let me know if you need any spokespersons in the St Louis area I've been in industry for 24 years and I've been an advocate for new business, which isn't going to happen around here due to these non-complete disclosures thank you Kenny Waggoner... A resident living in Illinois bound by non-compete from people in St Louis Missouri..."
Kenni	"I work for a company out of St Louis that's mostly in the steel industry. I assisted for decades expanding the plastic industry for a steel company since they were distributor. My plan was to get more involved with Infrastructure and with Federal funding, it must include disadvantage business enterprises. My hope was to retire from my employer, and teach wbe's MBE and others, on how to enter the industry for which I learned on my own. it's about Fair practice and allowing minorities to participate. The question is how do they participate without anybody showing them how to enter the industry. Not only does a non-compete limit a person like me from regaining employment for 18 months, it keeps others such as the NBA's from learning from somebody like me for 18 months. In this regard, the non-compete seems like it keeps minorities from entering the industry, almost like civil Right discrimination, not against me but for those who want to learn from people like me."
Jason	"Since non compete clauses are ubiquitous in medical practices they often prevent patients from maintaining a patient physician relationship if their physician leaves a practice. Furthermore, non competes are signed by physicians directly out of training and often benefit hospitals or large group practices that are far more powerful than an individual physician. Non compete clauses are anti capitalist and have proliferated to become so widespread that they are now primarily used to trap or penalize employees who sign them rather than shield an employer from risk"
Hussain	"I am a father part of a family of four living in a large city. Raising children in america is extremely expensive and these non-competes impede my ability to demand a market wage from my boss. I work in real estate finance and crucial to the business we do. However, my ability to go out and secure a market wage is hampered by these non-competes in our industry. Please please outlaw this practice and allow us to earn the fair wages we deserve and start new businesses and support the ones we use on a regular basis through our spending. thank you!"

Amanda	"I am a physician and would like to see non-competes eliminated I had to move my family of 6 to a new state due to a non-compete agreement. Disrupting to any family would be an understatement."
Kenneth	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, The idea that non-competes effect low income workers but congress people exploit their learned knowledge after their work is done. The best way to understand how this would change the way congress runs is no congress person would be allowed to work for or with any company or business that had any business or issues related to their enterprise before the congress person's time in office. Until you are willing to vote to allow non-competes to exist, you need to be willing to ban all congress people, staff and clerks from working for lobbyists and companies that sell product or provide services to the governments local, state or federal. Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans non-compete agreements. Sincerely, Kenneth Wennemar Dekalb, IL"
Eric	"I agree with the FTC's interpretation that non-compete employee contracts should be banished. The use of these contracts impedes the majority of employees covered by these contracts from leveraging their marketability. The use of these contracts heavily favors employers at the expense of the employee's market flexibility. A suitable vehicle to protect an employer's intellectual property would be a non-disclosure agreement."
Martha	"Non-compete laws are WRONG! Being an employee means trading your expertise & experience for pay. That does not mean that the employer OWNS their workers. Everyone has free will to take a job ANYWHERE if it benefits the worker. Employers have NO RIGHT to stop an employee from taking a job with a competitor. As an employee, I have the RIGHT and DUTY to find the best job that suits me. You cannot allow employers' OWNERSHIP of an employee. Employers have gone too far, they are NOT the almighty. Employers have an obligation to their employees, not the other way around. The "non-compete" is SLAVERY!! If employers want to keep their employees, they must treat them with respect, safety, and better pay. Employers NEED employees more than an employee needs their employer."
Alisha	"A non-compete clause as a physician made me less attractive as a candidate to other employers. This is a big problem when a few hospital systems employ nearly all physicians."
Andrew	"This is great! I love that the federal government is trying to protect the working class from greedy corporations!"
Sherie	"Noncompete clauses should be banned. It's just another way that businesses make life more difficult for workers. They keep workers from switching to better jobs. The government has allowed too many monopolies to exist. Noncompete clauses are just another way for companies to decrease competition."

Kathleen	"People are having a hard enough time providing for themselves and/or their families. There is no justifiable reason to prohibit or severely curtail a person's ability to remain homed by preventing them from freely seeking employment in the same field for better pay or working conditions. If a person has proprietary information, curtail their use of that. Do not prevent them from seeking employment to better themselves out remove themselves from a problematic workplace."
Kirk	"I have on many occasions over the years signed these agreements. There have been times where employers have asked for these after year's of employment. I even had one employer threaten to try and enforce one after letting me go. This was a company that I worked at for over ten years. Thankfully they misplaced their copy of the agreement. If they hadn't, it would have made it difficult to get a job and another person I worked with was not as fortunate. They are oppressive and basically create an endured servant relationship, especially for individuals like me that are creative and tend to be critical to creating and managing systems that create an environment for organizational growth. Another point is that organizations tend to believe they own everything some e to working for them creates, even business processes and management strategies. This thinking takes away from the years of work an individual invests in oneself• this includes education. And certifications that most companies do not pay for. In all, this structure is a power and control function that limits and traps people in situations that limit their ability to grow beyond roles. It also allows these businesses to treat employees poorly."
Gregory	"I fully support the abolishing of non-compete clauses. Employers have been unfairly utilizing these practices for years. Corporations know that workers will not be able to tight this unfair practice in court, where employees would accumulate a mass of legal fees in order to do so. I agree that this practice discourages competition and promotes unfair work practices. Please take my comments into consideration to abolish this unfair practice."
Robert	"Hello. My name is Bob Woodrick. I'm a physician working in an academic medical center in chicago. The proposed ban on non-compete clauses is rational and just. Large corporate healthcare systems now have outsized leverage. We lost one excellent candidate for our group in the past year due to a restrictive non-compete. Clearly competition and the ability to work freely is being impeded."
M	"I'm in total agreement to stop non compete clauses. My husband started his own insurance consulting business and the large Insurance Broker lie had worked for threatened him with legal action if he contacted any of his clients from his prior employer. I never understood why the client can not decide whom he wants to buy insurance? The large Broker doesn't own the clients. In instances with proprietary information or trade secrets I'm in agreement with limitations on future competition"

Emily	"I was made to sign a noncompete with my offer letter when starting an entry-level role right out of college with a medical supply company. Noncompete laws have allowed companies to take significant liberties beyond the original intent, which was only to restrict high-level employees from sharing sensitive information with competitors. Now, myself and fellow employees have to concerns ourselves with figuring out if other potential employers violate our noncompete or not, given the wording is wide-sweeping and vague. Additionally, I had to sign my non-compete in an internal 1-1112 portal, meaning I never received a paper copy and would need to ask HR for a full copy - most likely labeling myself as a flight risk. Now I know better, but my 22 year old self was taken advantage of. Noncompete agreements should not exist given the lack of appropriate guardrails and unnecessary consequences on workers."
Jiajia	"I have been sitting out a non-competitive agreement at my last job during covid. I was significantly under paid to support my family yet not able to join next work due to the unfair agreement I signed at 8 years ago when I was at a much different situation of employment and need a job desperately. The employer did not even bother to raise the non-competition pay to account for inflation."
Andrew	"I strongly support the efforts by the FTC to end the practice of non-compete clauses in employment contracts. While I am not currently under this burden, I have co-workers who are, and the reality is that this creates an unfair imbalance of power in the favor of the employer. Employees are prevented from earning market value for their wages due because they cannot find a job at another company, nor can they create jobs and value by opening their own business in a similar industry. In the case of my coworkers, they are prevented from working for a competitor regardless of why their current employment is terminated. So if they are laid off due to economic conditions, they cannot use their transferrable skills to work for a similar company. This is not only unjust, is also unfair practice in a society that claims to value the principles of free market capitalism."
Mica	"I applaud and fully support this groundbreaking proposal to abolish non-compete clauses. At a minimum, they are an obstacle to free markets in labor while at worst they severely restrict workers from earning a living, potentially diminishing GDP or setting our citizens up for modern indentured servitude due to a litany of economic hardships compounded by this unethical but common labor practice. As an anecdote, in our household we have professionals in food & beverage (cooking instruction) and biotech (sales), both of which have had to negotiate out of non-competes. In both instances, non-competes were written in such a way as to eliminate labor potential for a minimum of 2 years, rendering our specific skills, training, and education inapplicable to the workforce. We were fortunate employers accepted our negotiations, though our colleagues haven't had the knowledge or confidence to have those conversations. As such, they become bound to their employers in a way that limits their mobility and depresses wages, as their labor no longer has free market access - a hallmark of our modern capitalist economy."

Drew	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the American Hospital Association's (AHA) attempt to exempt physicians from the new rule prohibiting noncompete agreements. As someone who believes in protecting workers' rights, I find this proposed exemption deeply concerning. Noncompete agreements are often used by corporations to restrict the movement of their employees, making it difficult for workers to leave unfavorable work conditions or negotiate better terms. Physicians, like any other employee, should be free to seek better employment opportunities without fear of legal repercussions. Exempting physicians from the noncompete rule would only serve to benefit hospital corporations at the expense of the workers. It would allow these corporations to maintain a stranglehold on their employees and limit competition, which could lead to lower wages, fewer benefits, and overall worse working conditions for physicians. I urge the FTC to reject the MIA's proposed exemption and uphold the noncompete rule for all workers, including physicians. It is essential to protect workers' rights and promote a fair and competitive job market. Thank you for your attention to this matter. Sincerely, A concerned physician."
Benjamin	"I highly support a ban or the very least restriction on non-compete agreements. They give an employer too much leverage over an employee and result in lower wages, worse working conditions, and so on. They also disrupt the free market for labor Banning Non-competes would be highly beneficial to workers nationwide."
Colin	"I support the proposed rule eliminating the existence of non-compete clauses. Non compete clauses are an anti-worker tool used largely by anti- competitive employers to exploit and threaten their workers. The American workforce would only benefit from being more free to choose their place of work."
Elizabeth	"I strongly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as proposed in Matter No. P201200."
Rachel	"Non compete clauses hurt doctors and patients. They prevent good patient care and autonomy of physicians to practice where they are needed and wanted. These clauses should be banned and never allowed in the field of medicine."
Christina	"I've actually been going back and forth on a contract about this precise issue. I'm in a strange position where my company was incorporating in my state when I first signed on, so I was a 1099. Now that they're registered, I can become a W2, which is advantageous for tax purposes and accurately represents my type of employment per the IRS's definition of a W2 Employee. Now that I am faced with signing this contract, there are a ton of noncompete clauses. Namely, some that would not allow me to work in my industry for 6 months on top of a 6 week notice. The contract even has a line how I agree that it wouldn't effect my livelihood. I haven't signed yet over this exact issue. I enjoy my job and the company I work for, but the entire issue over the contract has been off-putting to say the least. I would hope that a company would want to keep me and other talent through benefits, compensation, and culture, not pigeonhole us into a position with ridiculous stipulations. I am shocked that non-competes can be so invasion to an

	individual's career. To me, it minimizes the responsibility of the business to the employee in terms of what they might offer with benefits, compensation, growth, etc. If they can't go anywhere without sacrificing 6 months of pay, or whatever someone's situation might be, then the companies are less inclined to offer more perks to retain talent which could effect the overall work culture and compensation to employees. It harms employees by not allowing them agency in their career. If an employee does have a better opportunity they should be allowed to pursue it; that is what drives the market, competition, and innovation. I can see the trickle effects of this within various industries, quality of work, offerings to consumers, economic health, etc. I'm glad to see that the FTC is taking this matter seriously and I hope that something is implemented to prohibit or severely limit non-compete clauses."
Jon	"Thank you for the opportunity to provide a comment on the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking for the Non-Compete Clause Rule. I have been a practicing attorney in Illinois for over 40 years, and I have seen many non-compete clauses in business contracts. (They have been banned for attorneys in Illinois for several years by the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct). Typically these agreements restrict an employee from working in another competing business for a certain period of time, usually about two years. I have advised employees who have been presented by their employers with non-compete agreements to try to negotiate the terms of these agreements. I typically advise employees that if the employer insists on a non-compete agreement, then the employer should correspondingly be required to continue paying the employee's salary or wages for the entire period that the non-competition clause remains in effect. Such a requirement would strike a fair balance between the employer's perceived business necessity and the employee's need to make a living. Such a requirement also requires the employer to more closely examine whether a non-compete clause is truly a business necessity. There are times when non-compete agreements make business sense, such as when the employee have access to highly confidential business information during the course of their employment. Accordingly, I suggest that, rather than ban non-compete clauses entirely, the FTC should consider allowing them where legitimate business needs require them, but also require that any employee who is restricted by a non-compete clause must continue to be paid their full salary by the employer throughout the time when the employee is subject to the restrictions of the non-compete clause. Regarding the impact of the Proposed Rule on existing contracts, I also suggest that the FTC should consider whether the Contracts Clause of the Constitution of the United States (Art. 1, Sec. 10, Clause 1) may restrict the application Proposed Rule on existing contracts and may require the Proposed Rule to apply prospectively only."
Jonathan	"I'm a low ranking engineer at a company within Danaher Corp., and I have a noncompete clause. It is very frustrating to me, because I write fiction in my free time, and sometimes I write near future works with imaginary technology that is based on my engineering experience, and I worry that something I write could be considered a violation of my contract. It is very frustrating how openly worded my contract is. Noncompete clauses go against the principles of the free market. I

	can see how, in rare cases with very high level executives, they can preserve a company's trade secrets, but allowing them for non-C suite employees makes no sense. I feel like it's just there so people can't threaten their bosses with leaving. Also, to make matters worse, I'm only 90% sure I have a noncompete. I looked for a long time to find my employment contract but couldn't. I found a copy of a Danaher noncompete on the SEC's website, and I remember the writing worries when I read my initial contract, so I'm pretty sure it's there. But I can't find my contract to Enid the exact language."
Joseph	"Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking, Matter No. P201200 One question, for those who have already suffered in their career due to non-compete litigation, can these historical rulings and litigations be lifted or some sort of compensation be reached for harm to the ex-employee's career?"
Jeff	"A distinction needs to be made between Non-Compete and Non-Solicit contracts. Non-Competes should be eliminated while Non-Solicits should be allowed. The Non-Compete prevents an employee from seeking work in an industry that has trained him, complete prevention of work in that field. A Non-Solicit contract would allow an employee to seek a job in their field of training but NOT with a direct competitor. The concern is that the "trade- secrets", which might include customer lists, would be taken and used against the initial employer. If, as an example, the hairdresser leaves one salon for another they can not reach out to their clients to "come with them". If the food delivery driver wishes to change jobs they may not use route knowledge and customers from the initial job at their new job. hi both these cases it benefits the new hire. If they job seeker has a Non-Solicit contract and the new company knows this and still wishes to make the hire it means they want the prospective job seeker because of their skill not because they wish to "steal" a competitor's "trade secrets" even if the trade secrets are only customers, stops on a route. Non-Solicit contracts would set a narrow limit on both knowledge learned at a previous job, something that has to be shared to make the employee efficient, while recognizing that this knowledge is education and something that may well be lost if the employee leaves. What should be safe are the files of customers. Those would not have been known unless the employer shared them with the employee. The employee isn't entitled to "take" those files but they are entitled to "take" their training If you eliminate Non- Compete contracts completely this measure is more likely to fail. If, however, you offer a Non-Solicit contract you increase the likelihood of success because you have allowed some protection to the employer about to lose a trained employee. There are ways to protect the initial training company from customer / business loses while allowing continued utilization of skills by a worker wishing to change jobs without changing professions. My sources are from a Harvard Business Review article I read at Kellogg Business School in the mid 1970's. It was valuable then though not completely appreciated and it should be the basis for this discussion."
Aimee	"I am adamantly against non-compete clauses. I am a Healthcare Provider in Illinois. There are 2 large healthcare corporations that manage 90% of the healthcare facilities in the area. Having a non-compete clause causes people to have to continue to work in a toxic work environment. Working long hours and seeing hundreds of patients can cause healthcare workers to burnout. The big corporations put the small offices out of business. There is no choice for patients. These contracts usually are for 20-30 mile radius and 1-2 year time limit after leaving. I have looked at the radius around my work and 20 mile radius can take up to 45-60 minutes to drive. I am unable to relocate for 1-2 years. People would have to sell homes, move schools. These clauses cause healthcare staff that inability to find a job close to their home. This leads to more travel time. Patients also do not have the choice to choose who they feel comfortable with. Unfortunately, for myself, who have ailing parents, children, and grandchildren around, I would have to continue to work in a toxic environment because of these clauses. Healthcare providers from housekeeping, nurse assistants, nurses, nurse practitioners, physician assistants to doctors, do not have trade secrets from one medical facility to another. The mere few hundred of patients that may leave and follow a provider are such a minute amount of the millions of patients that these corporations have. Again, comes to the point that patients do not have a choice who they can see and healthcare workers do not have a choice to change jobs, if needed to get out of a difficult situation and that puts more risk of accidents when caring for patients. I do not think noncompete clauses have any positive reasoning to be involved with healthcare. Having to take a position outside the radius for a particular amount of time, will lead to long drives, increase financial strain on finances, and more time spent away from family. State of Illinois now has laws that if you make less than 75,000, can not have a noncompete. Most healthcare providers do not qualify. It is difficult finding healthcare workers and sometimes just because you offer more money, does not mean that you will get a better healthcare worker. Travel healthcare companies are paying 2-4 times normal wages to travel personnel, rather than treat the local employees well. If the way more competition, corporate healthcare might suffer and healthcare itself will improve. As long as the cost of paying healthcare workers continue to increase, the insurance companies and customers will have higher bills to pay. If there was competition, healthcare employers would need to treat the employees better and not like a number, which in turn wants us to treat patients like a number. When you are at work and feel like you are in shackles, how beneficial and productive are you? How beneficial is that for patients if they have a provider, who leaves and has to practice 30-60 miles away because of the 20 miles radius and the patient feels a connection with that provider and now has to drive that same distance to see them. Patients do not have the opportunity to choose their own healthcare. I understand some businesses especially those that invent things may need safeguards but healthcare is one of the last areas where non-compete clauses should be, not only for the employees but for patients and their choices. I request that the FTC and government work against these big corporations who make employees feel like they are in shackles and do not have a choice but continue to work in a toxic environment. As far as my current situation, I am trying to take a position in a rural, underserved community but since the city is just under 20 miles, I am unable to take position. Shame on the big healthcare corporations. We are to do no harm, I do not see that as an attitude with healthcare corporations. Please continue to fight for not only the healthcare providers that are subject to non compete clauses but fight for the right of patients to be able to make choices."

Constituent Support for the FTC's Noncompete Rule

Indiana | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 in increased wages over the next decade, including for Indiana:

Indiana Covered Workers	Increase in Total Annual IN Worker Earnings	Increase in Average Annual IN Worker Earnings

	"I have been working wider a non-compete for 28 years with my company along with every service technician we've employed in the 35 states we cover. NC prevent everyone of us from advancing in our careers outside of the company we work for currently. Getting rid of non-compete clauses would allow every single one of us to be able to find better paying jobs and allow us to grow in our careers. The company I work for is involved in several shady business practices. If I would like to use my 28 years of experience in this field, I can only work for my current company without being sued. They have sued several people who have quit in the past. I have been in this field since I graduated tech school at 20 years old in 1995 and worked for my current employer since 1999. Unless someone dies or retires I'm currently at the top of my career. Even after I would have to move to Minnesota and there is only my boss and the CEO over me." -Robert
	"I am a family physician with 3000 patients practicing in Indiana. I want my voice heard that I strongly support the ban on non-compete clauses! The corporatization of medicine is growing at a fever pitch since the pandemic began, where the goal is profit by corporate bureaucrats and shareholders. Not patient care or improving health. Not supporting physicians. Noncompetes serve to hogtie physicians in an indentured servitude and, if they leave, are forced to go far enough away that their patients can't access them. Patients lose out at a time when access is becoming harder and harder, especially in primary care. If I want to change employment because I believe it will be better for my professional well-being, my patients should have the right to follow me." -Sara
	"I am a Physician Assistant that currently works in critical care for almost 5 years. I was intubating patients and rounding on some of our sickest individuals at the height of multiple COVID outbreaks. I did not have a non-compete with my primary job when I started. I still work at my first job, even without one, and recently took a second part time job to broaden my experience and bring back knowledge to my primary role. The absence of a non-compete clause did not cause me to flee my employer when times were tough, nor did it cause me to get 'poached' by any of the other major systems in the area. If a healthcare system treats its workers fairly and with respect, employers will have no need to use a non-compete clause to coerce loyalty. Many aspects of employment already bias the employer such as asymmetric knowledge regarding salary and benefits packages, a much larger resource of in house legal support, and the perceived pressure of 'replaceability' that too many of our techs, nurses, providers and other staff already experience. A non-compete clause makes an employer's dominance

	over an employee iron-clad. It uses inherent social pressures such as a stable family life and education for their children as leverage points to make seeking other opportunities as painful as possible." -Christopher
	"Employers often exaggerate the scope of the restrictive covenants to influence an employee's decisions about leaving the company. What I have learned is that it does not matter whether the employer's contract does not meet the criteria prescribed by the state to be enforceable. The mere existence of a restrictive covenant can lead to litigation and legal expenses, even when the former employee has carefully strived to abide by the former employer's demands and threats. I had my restrictive covenant reviewed by an attorney in the state where it would be adjudicated and by my own attorney in my home state at minimal expense. I was very careful to be certain that my new endeavors would not be in violation of any restrictive covenants, yet I just spent almost $55,000 for a retainer for an attorney because my former employer had her attorney send me a letter informing me of my "violations." As my attorney told me, "Anyone with $182.50 can file a suit against anybody," but these restrictive covenants provide a vindictive or ignorant employer with fodder for bullying a former employee with threats of litigation. The rule should provide for significant monetary penalties for employers who are found to have misused restrictive covenants to cause hardships to former employees. At the minimum, when I am vindicated, my former employer should be responsible for my legal expenses without additional costly litigation. A rule without a penalty that the common person can obtain is a suggestion, not a rule." -Cheryl
	"As a financial advisor working for a bank, I have personally built my client base from the ground up, with 90+% coming from my efforts and personal relationships. I do not rely on banking referrals. I also was given a non compete to sign when I otherwise had no other choices as a young person, starting a family. Now as my kids discuss future occupations, the idea of starting a family business and working together is not a choice as my non compete states that even family members cannot follow me to a new place of employment. Many are basically forced into signing these documents as a young professional with little experience or little idea of how their career journey will be formed. Not to mention how non competes even work with the terminology being used or little money to consider hiring a contract attorney to review this. Language should be simple and easy to understand, but in reality, this is a free country and we should be able to work as such, not a slave to the job or employer. They should instead reward and build equity through die relationship to maintain the employee if they are that concerned with losing them." -Jarrod

First Name	Comment Highlights
Noemi	"I support the rule to ban non-competes. For physicians, non/compete clauses lead to physician shortages that harm patients"
Y	"I feel that non compete clause should be abolished for every profession. It gives undue leverage to employers during contract negotiations. Especially for physicians that are tied to their employers and have to move out of area to satisfy this requirement. They can instead continue to serve in the community without restrictions. It is not easy for well established physicians to pack up and leave. This move would also make employers more competitive who would strive to keep talent with in their own pool."
Michael	"I believe that non-compete clauses for physicians should be eliminated. This will assure that employers who employ physicians will provide the physician what is needed to care for patients. Currently, there are times when physicians become "stuck" in bad contracts due to external forces, such as COVID. When the physicians are told to accept a change or leave, then the non-compete makes it impossible to live and work in the same area."
Hassan	"To Whom it May concern, As a physician and American citizen, it is important to note noncompetes exacerbate shortages and access to care, it helps employers evade market forces that would necessitate change and take leverage away from clinicians, and current ruling needs to be modified to apply to all hospital systems including not-for-profit. Given most hospitals are nonprofit, this current ruling will fail to eliminate noncompetes for most physicians who currently have them otherwise."
Amna	"Non compete in health care as it applies to Physicians: There are many health systems that impose non compete clauses when an employment terminates either due to employee or employer. Employment contracts even impose non compete when terminates employees with out cause. This is unfair decision driven by money and inflicts hard ship on the employee. The employee has relocate either temporarily or permanently based on this clause. Many people have to physically move uprooting family and affecting significant others and children. The non compete practice by health systems needs to stop as it is an unfair and unjust practice."
Shahid	"I am a practicing pulmonary physician. Physician restrictive covenant is unfair. At least two physicians being abused, but it also leads to larger enterprises, controlling quality of care that Physician can provide independently and a cheaper rate."

Alex	"I am a physician, now retired from the practice of medicine. When I worked as a physician, I was covered by a non-compete clause. I applaud the FTC's proposal to ban the use of most non-compete clauses in employment contracts. I believe the ban should be as broad as possible, and that a ban should include the large majority of physicians and health care workers. Today, many, probably the majority of physicians are employees of large healthcare groups or corporations, such as hospitals and hospital networks. In most locations, it is increasingly difficult for a doctor to find employment that does not require agreeing to a strong non-compete clause. These clauses effectively make it difficult or impossible for a physician to change jobs without uprooting his/her family and moving to a different city, or often a different state. The business models of most employers in the medical domain do not need physician non-competes. Rather, the clauses give employers substantial control over the professional environment of physicians, more control than is desirable for both the physicians and the public at large. Though it is hard to document, it is sometimes becoming more difficult for a physician to raise reasonable concerns about issues that may impact patient safety and the quality of care. I urge the FTC not to "water-down" their proposed regulation of non-compete clauses. There are a few niche circumstances for which such clauses are appropriate, but in the large majority of cases other, less onerous, mechanisms are available to protect legitimate employer business interests. These include non-disclosure clauses and various forms of deferred compensation that encourage long-term employment without forbidding switching jobs. Thank you for your considerations of these comments."
Rukeme	"I support this bill as it severely limits access to care for patients. It also penalizes physicians and their family and in most states uproots them from the home if they are not happy at their place of work and need to move to another place ."
Mazen	"Non-compete clauses are particularly harmful to physicians and hospitals because they can prevent physicians from working with the patients they have come to know and love, and they can also prevent hospitals from hiring the best physicians available. This can have a devastating impact on patients, as it can reduce their access to quality care. Non-compete clauses can also stifle innovation in the healthcare industry. When physicians are unable to compete with their former employers, they are less likely to develop new treatments and procedures. This can harm patients, as it can limit their access to the latest medical advances. Finally, non-compete clauses can be used to exploit physicians. Some employers require physicians to sign non-compete clauses as a condition of employment, even when there is no legitimate reason for doing so. This can give employers an unfair advantage over their physicians and make it difficult for physicians to find new jobs. For these reasons, non-compete clauses should be banned for physicians and hospitals. They stifle innovation, exploit physicians, and harm patients. In addition to the harm that non-compete clauses cause to patients and the healthcare industry, they also have a number of other negative consequences. For example, non-compete clauses can make it difficult for physicians to start their own practices, as they may not be able to compete with their former employers. This can reduce competition in the healthcare market and lead to higher prices for patients. Non-compete clauses can also make it difficult for physicians to attract new patients, as patients may be reluctant

	to see a doctor who is not affiliated with their current hospital or practice. This can lead to a shortage of physicians in certain areas, which can make it difficult for patients to get the care they need. For all of these reasons, non-compete clauses should be banned for physicians and hospitals. They stifle innovation, exploit physicians, harm patients, and have a number of other negative consequences"
Devona	"The 25 mile radius non compete clause opposed upon me in 2015 prevented me from working in my small town. Iain well know there and there was and still is a shortage of primary care physicians in my area. I can't see any way non compete clauses help at all. with our country's health crisis. Please make them go away!"
Cody	"As a software developer who often works under contracts containing sections stipulating non-compete agreements, I have observed first hand how they can harm the economy by bolstering monopolies, such as in sectors where clientele only have a single choice for meeting their engineering needs. Often, these clients have no other options and are forced to meet whatever arbitrary price point is set by the leading (sole) company, and that company may in turn operate howsoever they choose without feeling the need to adopt reasonable business practices that might exist were there competition. It also means the workers in those areas, who may develop very particular specialties, have no other option than to accept the working conditions of the sole company present in the sector. Without competing businesses there to serve as a safety net, together with the ability to sever one contract in lieu of another (i.e., the nullification of non-compete clauses), such contracted individuals have little freedom and no leverage to use to negotiate for greater rights such as official employment, unionization, benefits, etc. Banning non-compete clauses would only stand to benefit workers and the US economy in general."
Victoria	"Exempting nonprofits doesn't make sense. Their functions may be charitable, but their employment procedures are identical to for-profit organizations and companies, and their employees deserve the same protections as those in other industries, particularly considering that they are generally paid less than workers in identical positions in fur-profit companies."
Tal	"I'm an equine veterinarian. When I left a clinic I had been a part owner in I was forced to have a 9 month non compete in the county the practice had been located and the 4 adjacent counties. This was a terrible hardship and I was forced to work a different job. This slowed the growth of my new business and put considerable strain on our family. I feel that noncompete clauses should not exist in a free market."
Adam	"Non-competes hurt workers and the communities they live in"
William	"I am a physician and health care system employee in a city. Allowing hospitals and health care workers (physicians) to be exempt from a ban on non- complete clauses would be restricting our fair trade and unethical. Please do not bend to the hospital association pressure on this issue. They are seeking to advance their agenda, not that of employees."

Rachel	"I agree that this rule should be put in place, that non-compete rules are unfair and should be done away with."
Leo	"it is essential to remove non competes for physicians. It undermines fair care for patients, especially in smaller hospitals. It's a no brainer for all of healthcare"
Jennifer	"I have no issue with a Non-Solicit, completely fair to ask me to stay away from customers and employees for a certain amount of time... but Non- Competes are completely unfair. If employers want employees to stay and not go to competitors or someone else in their industry, they need to start treating their employees so well that they don't want to."
Lourdes	"By All Means, Please get rid of Non Compete clauses... PLEASE."
Gabriel	"This rule is well-intentioned and well-written. It is a needed change in the United States. One profession that suffers greatly from noncompete clauses is medicine- most physicians in the United States are health system employees, and many. health systems employ physicians under very strict noncompete clauses. For example, my. noncompete does not allow me to obtain a job practicing Pulmonary and Critical Care Medicine anywhere within 20 miles of my current employment for a period of 2 years. Which means that if I become disenchanted with my employer, I would have to uproot my wife and 4 kids and move to another city in order to continue to practice medicine. This rule appears to exempt nonprofit organizations per Section 901.1(b), page 111-112, which states "Some entities that would otherwise be employers may not be subject to the Rule to the extent they are exempted from coverage under die FTC Act...as well as an entity that is not "organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members." Fully 60% of hospitals in the United States, including many of the largest healthcare organizations (and employers) operate under 501c3 status. I would encourage the FTC to not eliminate nonprofits from this rule; if there are compelling reasons to exclude 501c3 nonprofits from this rule, I would encourage the FTC to include a carveout for healthcare systems and nonprofit physician employers in order to include them in the purview of this rule."
Beth	"Non-compete clauses are devastating to physician patient relationships. Several of my medical colleagues have been downsized recently and have been forced to break their relationships with their patients. Some have had to leave medicine all together in order to keep their families in place. We have a crisis in medicine with too few physicians and non-competes are compounding this problem."
Vicki	"Non-compete clauses make it difficult for some to find jobs if they work in a specialized sector of the workforce. I believe non-competes should be banned."

Apryl	"I turned down good job offer for a mental health facility as a psych NP because they had a noncompete that covered 11 counties and 70 Miles. This was a nonprofit community mental health facility with a 9 month wait for appointments with child providers. Morally and ethically it was wrong. Access to mental health care is too important."
Jason	"I am currently a first year gastroenterology fellow and I think non- compete clauses are extremely harmful both to physicians and most importantly patient care. Non- compete affects patient care in many ways, for example, large health systems can use there power and influence to control doctors. They can increase the number of patients a doctor have to see without increasing compensations. This decrease the quality of care for patients, this limits the quality improvements ambitions of physicians. Physicians are stuck in these situations because of non-compete clauses. Enacting this rule would allow physicians to move to other institutions and take their patients insuring the best patient care possible. Physicians are very important to the overall economy and should not be limited, they should be able to stay in the same area and continue to take care of patients. Physicians are often forced to leave their town, city, or state due to non-compete which also significantly affects patient care in a negative way. Thank You"
Rudolph	"I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt working people. In fact, workers in states and industries with more noncompetes suffer from lower wages, less job mobility, and lower levels of job satisfaction, even when they themselves aren't bound by such agreements Thank you for your work, and please issue a final rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Koriander	"An end to the non-compete clause in most contracts would be a life-saver if implemented in the world of professional wrestling. Right now, major companies like the WIVE and AEW implement non-compete clauses into the contracts of their employees, barring them from gaining employment in the field they have been trained in for 90 days or more should talent be fired or quit. This means that for 90 or more days, athletes and other personnel are not allowed to earn an income in their field, leaving most in a financial free fall. Non-compete clauses are irresponsible, unnecessary and a shameful financial burden on those making less than six figures. It is immoral and poor business to hold someone to a contract without pay."
Neil	"I fully support ban non-competes altogether. They are arbitrary and very restrictive to employees. They keep employees from being able to utilize their talents and make decisions that best support themselves and their families They are hurting individuals and unduly slanted in the corporations favor. They are an unhealthy business practice and need to be abolished. Thank you for your consideration in this important matter. An affected employee."

J	"Competition is the American way and the mainstay of capitalism. It will make America stronger eliminate the non-compete clauses!"
Michael	"I was required to sign a non-compete agreement with my former employer, Hill-Rom, starting in 2012 and it remained in place until I ended my employment with them at the end of 2018. I strongly oppose non-compete agreements. The restrict employee freedom and compensation. My employment was also terminated when I returned from an overseas assignment in Sweden. My employer did not honor my expat agreement but frankly it would have cost me a lot of money to contest it. Money I could not afford to lose. I favor legislation which strengthens employee rights. Thank you for your consideration. Respectfully,"
Paula	"I support limiting the use of non-compete agreements. I'm a lawyer. They are unethical in the field of legal services. They should also be prohibited elsewhere."
Jennifer	"Non compete clauses hurt patients, doctors, and their families."
Greg	"Right now I am being held back by a NCC. I have been offered better paying jobs that would have doubled my salary and have better Benefits. Would help greatly due to medical bills from a chronic illnesses my wife has."
Fraaz	"Hospital system lobbies are speaking on their own behalf, and not that of their employed physicians. noncompete clauses in the healthcare field are on the whole bad for both physicians and for patients. They discourage market forces that allow physicians to vote with their feet if they don't agree with decisions being made by hospital systems that are to the detriment of quality medical care or clinician career longevity. In an era where profits are continuously being put above patient care and the physician shortage is amplifying dramatically as physicians leave the field in droves secondary to widespread frustration and burnout, it is important for physicians to be able to speak out about these issues or leave their jobs without retribution or the inability to provide for themselves and their families."
Michael	"Non-Compete clauses are extremely harmful to the workforce as well as the communities of their employers. When every employer has this as a standard, it is impossible to find a job without this in the contract. These clauses remove motivation for the employer to provide their employees with an optimal work environment and if employers don't want their workers to go to their competitors, they should keep their employees content with their work place. Removing this clause puts the onus for employee retention back on the employer where it belongs rather than trapping employees. Working in healthcare in central IN surrounded by small communities, I've seen large health care organizations move in and buy out smaller systems, then significantly reduce the services and resources provided to those communities, and forcing the local population to drive long distances to get the healthcare they need. Local providers can not fill this void, in part due to noncompetes. Furthermore, providers that work for a healthcare system in a densely populated area and disagree

	with the logistics and fees put on patients cannot leave that system to work for a competitor or set up private practice within that same community because the reach of these noncompete clauses is so broad. Health care is a community necessity and should not be run like any other business corporation. It is well past time to do away with these harmful clauses."
TYLER	" I would like to submit a comment in support of the new rulemaking regarding non-compete clauses as an everyday citizen in the workforce market and as a small business owner. First, let me explain that my comments arc about what it's like to be someone looking for employment as a bartender in the service industry while owning a small business that offers live special event entertainment services within that same industry and also what it's like to be a small business owner attempting to get bookings with partners who are either currently receiving competitor services or have recently left a contract with a competitor. When reading through the proposal I found myself empathizing with the sections speaking specifically about the low wage and hourly workers who were locked into these clauses. I have worked in the food service industry for the past 17 years and as a bartender for 13 of those. Many times in the industry hourly workers will work for multiple establishments at the same time due to relatively short shifts and the tipped hourly wage rate being so low. It has only been within the past 5-10 years, however, that I have started to notice more and more companies - small and large - that are requiring all employees to sign and adhere to a contractual agreement that includes a non-compete clause. The clauses for the most part stick to only being for the duration of your employment with the company, but forcing an employee to sign a contract that inhibits them from working at another establishment in the industry in an industry that operates, survives, and thrives off of paying tipped employees $2.13 an hour and oftentimes has very little room for upward movement in wages or position is adding insult to injury on its best day. As someone that also owns a small business that offers services to other businesses within the service industry but still oftentimes holds down a job in the industry running into these clauses with potential employers has been doubly frustrating and creates an interesting situation that ends up cutting out competition within their industry and mine and stifling my ability to make a better living for myself in two different chosen career paths simultaneously. On many occasions in the last few years I have applied and been hired for bartender positions in the service industry only to then have to turn down the job offer due to clauses in the handbook or employment contract that would not have allowed me to operate my own small business due to the language in the non-compete clause - sometimes wildly over reaching. Starting and operating my small business has been affected by non-compete clauses of my competitors time and time again, as well."
Christopher	"I support the proposed rule that would significantly limit or eliminate non-compete agreements. They are widespread in health care and are detrimental to our health care work force. In a time when we are seeing unprecedented difficulties with staffing, these should not be permitted. If nurses/physicians/techs/etc are kept under non-compete agreements, it can suppress wages, decrease their ability to speak out against unsafe patient care (staffing ratios, availability of necessary services, etc), and force employees to make a decision to stay at an employer that is not ideal for their situation or have to relocate their families I am a physician, but lam not a member of

	the AMA, in no small part because they do not support this measure. I would ask the FTC to recognize that the AMA represents a minority of physicians."
Brent	"I am an industrial aluminum salesperson that spent 21 years at the same company. I was required to sign a two year non-compete to receive my quarterly bonus payment in 2016. In 2022 I left the company at my will. I have been working in another field at an acceptable income HOWEVER the agreement I was forced to sign severely limits me from pursuing my preferred employment that would be most fulfilling, while also delaying my expertise to be used to help the industry I was employed in. I believe there may be times when a non-compete is warranted - such as an officer of a company where large salaries and golden parachutes exist. But many people are burdened (financially and emotionally) by the threat of a non-compete negatively impacting their opportunity to lean and live to their potential. At the very least, their should be a time limit on how long a non-compete can be and it definitely should be voided if the employer chooses to part ways with the employee. For someone to unwillingly lose their job and be saddled with a non-compete is terribly wrong."
Cherrish	"I am in full support of this. It is a barrier to me as an employee who is still within the timeframe of my 2 year non-compete. I am not able to transfer my skillsets to a job with another company even though I have no intent to poach staff, customers, or trade secret. It serves to do nothing but keep me trapped in a position or change careers entirely."
Christopher	"I support the FTC's proposal to void existing non-compete clauses and prohibit them in future employment contracts. If you can't completely do away with them, at least create a salary threshold (maybe 10 times the local median wage) that a position has to meet before a non-compete provision can be included."
Daniel	"I have taught generations of emergency medicine residents that Restrictive Covenants in medicine are, as the AMA has affirmed, unethical and not in the public's best interest. Please pursue this."
Kenneth G.	"I write to support the proposed rule. I have studied the legal and economic problems of employee noncompetes as outlined in my attached articles. The growing evidence of employer labor market power has led to increased efforts to use the antitrust laws to curb that power. Historically, the antitrust laws have been applied largely to product markets because instances and evidence of anticompetitive behavior were apparent there. However, agreements among employers to fix wages, or not to "poach" each other's employees, are clear violations of the antitrust laws of the United States because they are horizontal agreements with no apparent pro-competitive justification. Beyond such clear violations, there has also been growing interest in the consideration of labor market effects in the approval process for mergers."

Anthony	"Remove the ability for companies to have non compete clauses! it goes against everything in a capitalistic society and adds another barrier to the free movement of employees to work for any company they choose."
Kathryn	"As a Veterinarian my previous employer's non-compete resulted in abandonment of all of my patients without an alternative solution. I was a solo practitioner and when I turned in my notice I was not able to provide my clients with recommendations and the company was not able to find a replacement. This resulted in not just a loss of continuity of care but loss of ALL care within 6 months as the clinic ended up closing. I strongly believe that the use of a Non-Compete Clause hurts not only the employees but in medicine has a significant negative impact on patients. Please fight against these clauses in for ALL employees!"
Noel	"Working as a Neonatal Nurse Practitioner, noncompete clauses directly affect my ability to continue to work in my local community, should I choose to part with my current employer. I would have to drive 2-3 hrs just to gain employment to work in another NICU. Recently the hospital I work for had to reconfigure the number of NNPs needed due to changing one of our NICUs level of care. One of the NNPs was let go and the hospital would not release her from her NC. She now drives 2hrs to work in a NICU. There is another local NICU that would have been happy to hire her, but due to the NC, she could not even consider applying for fear of ramifications of the NC. It can also harm the community by preventing good providers from staying locally should medical groups contract run out with hospitals. Which also happened with our pediatric cardiology group. The hospital made a unilateral decision that their services were not needed (without consulting the NICU) and those Cardiologists who have been practicing in our community for more than a decade cannot practice in the community for 12 months. NC are unfair, not only to providers, but to the community. It prevents good providers from staying with patients that they have established care with."
Candace	"I am in favor of eliminating non-compete clauses in employment contracts. As a medical provider I feel held hostage by my employment contract, especially in regards to the non-compete component."
Maria	"I'm an internal medicine physician, and noncompete clauses have troubled me throughout my career. Medical groups and hospitals use them to prevent physicians from leaving malignant work environments (decreasing pay, increasing patient load, reducing office support staff, etc). It can leave you miserable, overworked, and hopeless without the ability to seek new employment elsewhere. It also promotes physicians working farther away from their communities, because they don't want to risk being restricted from working close to home for a future opportunity. I personally work 45 minutes/30 miles away from my hometown in rural Indiana, because I don't want to risk a local noncompete clause preventing me from pursuing future endeavors. This is a perfect example of how noncompete clauses prevent physicians from working in communities that need their expertise and skill. I believe that eliminating noncompete clauses would promote businesses to value their employees' unique

	expertise in their fields, and encourage a healthier work environment for their workers. Businesses would compete for the best talent. I want to express my deep gratitude to the FTC for proposing this rule to eliminate noncompete clauses. You have the opportunity to make a difference in so many hard-working professionals' lives by giving them the opportunity to choose where and for whom they work, unrestricted by covenants imposed by big corporations. Thank you for all that you are doing!"
Amanda	"Please ban noncompete clauses. They are unfair and contributing to brain drain for the state of Indiana. A professional should have the opportunity to change workplaces without moving their whole family away from their community, schools and friends."
Daniel	"As a professional that's been in the IT reseller industry for over 30 years, I fully support this change. There are three main reasons I support this change. 1 : Forcing employees to sign a non-compete assumes those employees will conduct themselves in an unethical manner if they change companies. This is damaging to the employees' moral and is bad for the company moral overall. This is an un-American way of doing business. 2: I have been in companies that initially did not have non-compete agreements and after forcing employees to sign non-compete agreements, began to treat their employees poorly. Examples of this would be changing sales teams' compensation plans to negatively impact all sales related positions. Other examples would be a general change in attitude of management towards employees to the negative. I attribute this to the knowledge that their employees have far fewer options to move to other companies. In all cases it was clear that it was used as leverage AGAINST and not for the employees' benefit. 3: In all cases, these have been mandated by HR departments and NOT by upper management. This tells me that these non-compete agreements are NOT something the leadership thinks are a good idea. Rather, these are implemented by people that are obsessed with controlling the actions of individual employees and I can't say that's particularly healthy for anyone. To be clear we have good laws that govern bad behavior and those should stay in place. What I strenuously disagree with is forcing employees to sign documents that effectively make it impossible to move companies within an industry. Its anti-competitive and bad for all employees. I would also submit that its ultimately unhealthy for corporations as well."
Timothy	"I worked for a major player in the rental car industry and signed a NC as part of my hiring/on boarding. Fast forward about 8 months in and after multiple interviews a rival company offered me a branch management position. When I informed my boss and area manager I was told they'd have to check on it since I had a NC. I got a stern letter from the company stating that accepting the job would be considered breach of the NC and I could be sued. I had no special insider knowledge that would have given the next job an edge, I was just trying to get a raise. I ended up declining the offer and then eventually took an internal management position (an hour away and for less pay) because the branch I worked at had an established manager that wasn't leaving anytime soon. I did everything right. I worked hard, showed up on time, went above and beyond for our customers. In the end, when I tried to leverage that into a better job I was denied. I was an at-will employee who couldn't leave my job at-will without threats of a lawsuit. Meanwhile, my employer could fire and replace me without any repercussions."

Anna	"non-compete clauses are harmful and oppressive"
Linda	"I support the FTC's plan to prevent non-compete clauses. My experience with them is that good people sometimes in very unfair and even dangerous employment situations have to buy themselves out or wait out the stated time. A non-compete clause seems most advantageous to employers. Ban them!"
D	"The proposed rule makes logical and business sense, and it fits well with the idea of building our country's economic systems back to strength by supporting the middle class and individuals over corporations and the top 1%. It will also have the effect of supporting smaller towns and specialized needs by removing a barrier to providing services (for example, a town that has unmet animal care needs because there are only two veterinarians there and one can't practice because of a noncompete). I would urge the commission to be very careful with any proposed exceptions. For instance, non-profit designation should have no bearing on the situation. Bureaucracy has shown us time and time again that exceptions are a slippery slope that can render a useful rule meaningless Perhaps the business community who are concerned with this proposed rule could be placated by work to strengthen rules and laws surrounding intellectual property and trade secrets. If the penalties for stealing/sharing the above are made truly meaningful, the noncompete becomes meaningless anyway, except for those who would use it to exert power over workers, and that is categorically bad leadership and should not be indulged."
Joseph	"I do not feel that it should be allowed to restrict the movement of an individual, even in cases where competitive balance may be affected. I feel there are other vehicles to address IP or sensitive information being shared (NDA is ideally suited for this purpose) without restricting an individual for attempting to make a better life for themself."
Jeremy	"As a physician, I have been under a non-compete agreement for my entire career. I have personally experienced how this unfairly limits the free market. I have many colleagues that have been impacted, which has lead some to stay in employment with an employer they don't care for, lead others to seek employment at a position with a much longer commute, or otherwise negatively impacted their free market options for employment. If the proposed rule is finalized as proposed, it will have an immediate positive effect for the vast number of employees affected negatively affected by non-compete agreements."
Matt	"In the engineering territory sales industry, non-compete clauses absolutely limit both competition and an employee's ability to switch employers. Because our company covers 7 states in the Midwest, any employee seeking a new job in the same industry would be forced to move 2 states away to get out of territory. Our company requires everyone in sales to sign a non-compete and actively pursues legal action if someone tries to go to a perceived competitor."

Ken	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. For decades, exploitative noncompete agreements have barred workers from pursuing better employment opportunities in the same industry, stifling wages, and preventing career advancement. Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Kurt	"I fully support the ban on employees being subjected to non-compete clauses. My current non-compete with my employer restricts my ability to utilize my knowledge and experience within my industry to start up a business myself within the same industry or to seek employment with one of our competitors within this industry or an adjacent industry. Give the employees the FREEDOM to be afforded the same opportunities our employers are currently taking advantage of with our workforce!"
Tenzin	"This would be a great rule for the American work force, and should absolutely get put in to place."
Josmon	"I have been an independent consultant for 26 years and due to the Non Compete Clause, I could no grow my company and had always been forced to work through 3rd party agencies. In some cases these agencies take 50% of my compensation. I have my own company and when we place consultants, we limit our compensation to a max of 12%, which accounts for our expenses for insurance, accounting , Marketing, FIR etc. Anything above 20% is greed and the Non-Compete clause help those greedy 3rd party agencies to take undue advantage."
Sheila	"I support banning non-compete clauses. I had a friend who couldn't work in her profession for a year and that made life very difficult"
William	"No completes stifle competition and may lead to higher cost and reduced quality in healthcare and other industries by decreasing innovation and limiting learning in new environments close to your home. In order for me to engage in a new job with new colleagues and work environment (which could invigorate and inspire innovation), I have to travel at least 30 miles away from my current job location which is not desirable and in many cases doable. To acquire a new position similar to my own, I'd have to uproot my family and move - this is just not going to happen. In the absence of a non-compete, I'd easily find new positions to practice cardiovascular medicine in my current hometown maintaining a similar level of compensation and invigorating me to work smarter. As 'burnout' in medicine has take a major toll on healthcare workers everywhere, non-compete clauses have further burdened those shackled by them. I suspect many physicians and others in healthcare would stay in the workforce and suffer less mental health complaints if they felt they had the hope of changing jobs even once in a lifetime while still living in their hometowns. This is currently not possible for cardiovascular medicine specialists where I live in Indiana. It is impossible to compete with the healthcare organizations here as a private practice physician and all the healthcare organizations mandate non- compete clauses in their contracts...because they can. This obviously stifles competition leading to higher prices healthcare. I strongly oppose non-compete clauses in contracts and feel them to be burdensome to the physicians in healthcare as well as to the patients they serve. For me to leave my place of employment, I have to effectively abandon my patients (>2000). This is a very real burden to me to consider."

Terry	"I WORKED FOR LKQ CORP FOR 16 YEARS THEY FIRED ME THEN THEY KEPT ME FROM WORING IN THE AUTO PARTS INDUSTRY FOR OVER A YEAR . THEY WENT AS FAR AS TO CALL A COMPANY AND I WAS LET GO BECAUSE THEY TOLD THEM THEY WOULD SUE BECAUSE THEY HAD A 12 MONTH NON COMPETE I DONT THINK ANY COMPANY SHOULD KEEP YOU FROM WORKING IN THE INDUSTRY YOU KNOW"
Joshua	"Physicians must be included on this ruling"
Jacob	"As someone who has been required to sign non-competes with every job I've had professionally, I agree with this regulation. Non-competes are unfair practice."
Amy	"I strongly support this ban. As a physician I should not have to choose between continuing in a toxic work environment and uprooting my family in order to practice medicine."
Richard	"I believe this is a fantastic amendment. Non-Compete clauses have kept people in jobs that they are no longer wanting to have for less income than they could get on the open market."
A	"I am concerned that these non-complete agreements are overreaching I work for a large multinational corporation that is in many business sectors. If my employment ended with them, I would be shut out of a large portion of employment opportunities."
Taylor	"Please approve there being no more non compete clause"
Mary	"In 40-odd years of law practice, I was retained to both enforce and defend against alleged violations of noncompete clauses. I rejoiced when it was my job to defend the employee. I often spoke to employees who were aghast and incredulous that American law allowed such clauses to be imposed on them. Employers routinely used the burden of litigation to intimidate employees, or seek revenge for the employee's perceived personal disloyalty, rather than to protect any legitimate employer interest. In retirement, I strongly support the proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule, as proposed in Matter No. P201200."

Sean	"I am a physician and I strongly support the banning of non-compete clauses. In healthcare they are bad for patients by frequently removing access to providers in small communities. They are also very disruptive for healthcare workers and frequently obligate them to uproot their families to move elsewhere for work, even in situations like termination without cause. That said, it is important to not exempt non-profit organizations, as many if not most hospitals are legally non-profits and are frequently among the largest offenders in this area."
Sarah	"As a physician, I have been personally subject to non compete clauses. These are nearly the rule in medicine and only serve to protect corporate organizations - which hold the power anyway. As an individual professional I would expect to have equal and fair ability to practice medicine within proximity to my chosen residence. Non-complete clauses frequently make it impossible to practice within 50-100 miles of your previous residence. In some states - such as indiana - that makes the viable practice of your profession impossible within your state- as many subspecialties are located near the primary city in the state - Indianapolis. As the corporatization of medicine becomes larger and larger, individuals are tied to their employer. Even if the employer chooses to not renew the physicians contract they may still have a non-compete clause that prevents their practice of medicine. For many years it has been known that non-compete clauses are not upheld in court but the time and money to fight them are an onerous barrier and so many choose not to. Removal of this unfair limitation for all, would provide a clear transparent and fair work environment."
Catherine	"Yes! Please include physicians too."
Patel	"There should not be a noncompete clause Employers exploit hired physicians"
Bryan	"Non compete clauses are anti capitalistic and create a form of unhinged regulation that removes control from the people to the hands of corporations and other businesses who do not have their best interests in mind. A block across the board for all non compete clauses would improve upward and lateral mobility in job acquisition for all Americans! This is a no brainer, help the American people out and stop companies from ruining lives of the people because they don't want to competitively aquire talent in a fair market system."
Bryrony	"I am an Ob/Gyn physician. I have four young children. My practice became hospital employed 6 years ago. The hospital has since made one change after another to their benefit and to the detriment of the physicians. I love my patients and my partners. I dislike the large hospital system. Yet I cannot change jobs without moving my entire family due to a non-compete. Moving my family is not feasible. I am stuck. I am not happy. Who do hospitals not focus on physician satisfaction?"
John	"I think the elimination of non-compete is a excellent proposal as it is used beyond executive or trade secret level. To often normal employees subject to these strict rules, and may need to move out of state to be closer to family though cannot get a new job in that state even though there employer has not foot print there. Companies can still use Non Disclosure Agreements to protect any insider information or trade secrets."

Jonas	"RE Sales and Banking Non-compete Agreements: I agree that a rule should be enforced due to the unfair effects forced on many employees with no recourse. In my experience most agreements are entered into by the employee through coercion with the threat of job loss of not agreed to. In addition, the risks posed to a company by losing a sales or management employee to a competitor can be enforced with more specific non-disclosure, non-solicit, and non-recruit agreements. A non-compete allows an employer to keep wages artificially low as an employee has no. Negotiating power when requesting raises and the ability of the employee to accept higher wages at another employer are removed with the non-compete."
Joe	"Dear FTC, As a physician I have been significantly harmed by non compete clauses that were non-negotiable in my contract. 2 years ago, I got a great job offer from a competing hospital, but since the job was within my non compete radius, I could not take the position and could not leave my system. That same health care system I stayed with, recently laid me off, to no fault of my own, in order to save money. They had hired too many doctors and now didn't have enough patients. One day out of the blue, they told me my contract was not being renewed. This happened 8 months ago on Good Friday of all days. They gave me three months notice. This is not enough time to even get credentialed at a new job somewhere else, even if I had found a new job the next day. When I was let go, there was no severance, no benefits. In addition, my non compete was enforced even though they unilaterally decided to let me go. For months I worked on getting a new job. Finally, I was offered another job, again with a non negotiable non compete clause. This non compete would prevent me from working within a 2 hour drive of where I live, for 2 years. Since there is not another large metropolitan area nearby, it would have forced my family to move out of the state where we currently reside if something would have gone awry at this new job. Its one thing to tell someone take it or leave it. Its a whole other issue if it is take it or leave it, and if you do leave it, you have to move out of the state. Since we bought before the pandemic, we couldn't even afford our own house now if we tried to buy it again. The argument could be held that my job is something that is good for the community and thus the non compete can be broken. However, the field of hospital administration is similar to college football coaching. There is a constant carousel of movement and none of the administrators want to step on each others toes for fear of stepping on their future boss. I am now currently working in a field that is outside what I specialized in. I travel far distances and have taken a 30% pay cut because I can not work in the field I specialized in. The skillset I possessed was unique and now my former patients no longer have access to me. I continue to search for employment and am trying desperately to not disrupt the lives of my wife and 3 school aged children. Unfortunately the current job is not sustainable for me in the long term. I pray that something helps me find a better situation for me and my family. Non competes are unfair to the vast majority of physicians. The only physicians who would be against getting rid of non competes are millionaire doctors who started private practices that would like other physicians to further their riches while paying them much less than they are worth. I do not fault the hospital administrators for laying me off. They made

	the right business decision for them. However, hospitals are significantly unfairly advantaged compared to physicians in employment disputes. The non compete I have been under has prevented me from finding adequate employment for which I am qualified for. I am now in purgatory until my non compete expires or I uproot my family which would be devastating for my children. Non competes are designed to oppress people. When they are applied to physicians, they harm the physicians, their families, the communities they serve and the patients they are dedicated to helping. Please, please, please, get rid of this."
John	"I am an attorney who primarily represents employees in labor and employment matters, including discrimination wage cases. I also advise employees of their rights in the workplace, including the enforceability of restrictive covenants (non-compete, non-solicitation, etc.) they are often required to sign as a condition of employment. The FTC supports its proposed Rule with findings regarding effects on competition and the suppression of wages. I agree with and wholeheartedly support the proposed Rule based on the economic findings. However, I also wish to state my support for the Rule based on grounds that are not so easily quantified. Specifically, in my counseling of clients, I have found restrictive covenants do more than keep employees from looking for higher paying jobs -- they often keep employees trapped in hostile and toxic workplaces. When an employee is contractually barred from obtaining alternate employment in their chosen field, it allows employers to mistreat and exploit workers (in ways both legal and illegal) without realistic fear of repercussions. Employees facing discrimination, harassment, and wage theft are often reluctant to assert legal claims when they are subject to restrictive covenants. Although their employer could be subject to additional liability for retaliation if they fire an individual who asserts a legal claim, the employee is not released from restrictive covenants based on the reason for separation. The possibility of a legal settlement or judgment months or years down the line does little to ameliorate the fears of an employee who fears retaliation and could be prohibited from practicing their trade for a year or more if they are fired. The oppressive effect of restrictive covenants is compounded by the fact that employers often overreach in drafting them, which can be intentional. It is common practice in the legal profession (especially in states where courts are empowered to re-form restrictive covenants) to advise employer clients to craft extraordinarily broad restrictive covenants and, in the event of litigation, to allow the courts to reform the agreements or carve away offensive language to hind employees to the maximum extent possible. Employees can challenge overly broad covenants and win, but still be left bound and practically restrained by narrower provisions while employers suffer no consequences for overreaching. The potential cost and uncertainty of challenging restrictive covenants has a chilling effect, effectively allowing employers to impose restrictions greater than those ostensibly allowed under the laws of the various states. I would be personally harmed and would lose income if the proposed Rule were adopted -- it would likely eliminate the part of my practice that involves reviewing and advising employees regarding restrictive covenants. I support the proposed Rule nevertheless."
Michael	"If employers pay their employees competitively, treat them with respect, and give them advancement opportunities, they should have no problem retaining them. If they don't do these things then employees should be free to leave, go to a competitor or start a competing business. Non-competes are nothing more than another form of monopoly or employment slavery that stifles innovation and personal achievement. Do away with non-compete contracts!"

Baron	"I fully support the elimination of non-compete clauses."
Richard	"Non compete clauses are outlandish for any position that makes less than 200k a year. I should not be pigeonholed because my boss doesn't want me to take my expertise to their direct competitor. While non-competes can be excused in very specific circumstances, as it has expanded into yet another way for business owners to exert undue pressure on their workforce. Because of this misuse, they should be disallowed in all circumstances. This has an aggregate effect across entire industries of depressing worker wages. Instead of trying to compete against other similar businesses on things such as benefits, wages, hours, or flexibility, a hypothetical business would rather try to prevent their workers from being legally allowed to change jobs within their area of expertise."
Michael	"I personally have been adversely affected by a non-compete clause Banning the clauses would have significantly improved job prospects, and overall happiness for my family. I fully support the proposed rule making and believe the rights of workers would be further strengthened by its' passage."
J	"FTC must ban non-compete clauses. These clauses harm individual workers rights to seek better wages or work conditions. This change in policy will be for the human person and will be fought by corporate identities to allow them to continue to restrict workers from seeking their liberties associated with employment opportunities."
Nichelle	"Ins glad to hear this. After 7 years, I was fired from HMC insurance agency where I was made to sign a non compete by a new vice president who came in after I had already been there 3 years without one. I got no severance pay, and cannot work in my field from one year. I have struggled to find work because I am being held back by the NDA. It has created a hardship for me and I didn't get unemployment"
Lisa	"Non-Compete Clause unfairly prevents people from being employed."
Brooke	"I am in full support of the banning of a noncompete. I work with dentists, and they affect many of my candidates and clients. They take away opportunity, growth, and the ability to practice in an area the professional could potentially thrive in amongst many other factors."
Matthew	"I am a physician practicing in the state of Indiana, and have been subject to restrictive noncompete agreements throughout my career. These restrictive covenants have suppressed my ability to seek competitive contracts in my geographic area. These agreements suppress worker mobility and create a dysfunctional market. I strongly support this ban."

Matthew	"Please put an end to non-compete clauses in labor contracts. When an employer chooses to make a job difficult, when they bypass unenforced labor laws or make demands that are unreasonable, an employee cannot simply choose to work a better employer due these clauses. They unfairly limit a worker's freedom to seek work elsewhere, and in doing so, limit competition between businesses by tying up the labor market."
AJ	"Non-profit organizations should NOT be exempt from this rule. In healthcare, these non-competes drive up the price of care and hurt our beloved physicians. They are the biggest offenders of abusing this rule. Please do not let them off the hook this easily. They are already evading taxes, do not let them lock up physicians any longer."
Rev. Paul	"The New York Times exposed a serious problem with the do-not-compete requirement. People who are no threat to the businesses or trades where they work are not allowed to work anywhere else within often ridiculously great distances. The DNC could be modified to allow them to work. They are caught in an overly broad system that included them in the group who could take trade secrets or proprietary information to the employer's detriment. This traps nurses, hairdressers, etc. who are then unable to work within a certain area, often prohibitively large, and cannot support their families. There should be a way for employees who are not a threat to their previous employer to keep working where they live. Employers abuse this law to keep wages low. Please consider modifying this law to correct this flaw. Thank you!"
Kaitlin	"As a resident of Indiana who is close to many people who are stuck under the weight of non compete contracts, I fully support a ban on them. My partner has worked as a tint and graphics installation technician for 6 years under a small business. He is an expert in this trade and is not part of any union. His boss pays him only $23 / hr, only 2 weeks per year, NO HEALTH insurance and that's it. No other benefits. He doesn't make enough to buy health insurance let alone take care of his teeth or eyes. His non compete clause, which he signed at 19 years old without understanding what impact it would have on him later says he can't work in Tint/Graphics or any other related work within 5 years AND 50 MILES! That is INSANE. The business operates within one county for 90+% of their work which is roughly 20 miles. So at most 20 miles could make sense but 50 is absurd. My partner has spent 6 years becoming an expert in this field and is not allowed to work anywhere near where we live. We own our home. ...Why would a non compete even be legal in a business where the work being done is NOT A TRADE SECRET. It's the same as telling a dog walker they can't walk dogs within 5 years or 50 miles of another dog walking business? These non compete bans are allowing monopolies to flourish and ruining any hope of competition providing better quality work for the most affordable rates."
Keller	"Non compete clauses should be illegal. They allow businesses to establish monopolies, often with the distance in the clause much farther than the business even covers. This leaves people without this service or forced to drive long distances. These businesses also are the ones who don't have benefits or a decent wage. These clauses are not protecting intellectual property, they are keeping young people stuck at a job they may have started right out of high school. They learned how to do the job well, but they can't do this job for anyone else."

Danielle	"I am writing to express concern over objection to the proposed non compete ban. As a new physician, I have seen first hand the effects of prohibitive non- compete clauses. I have been forced to work in environments where I do not have any clinical staff for weeks at a time, essentially being forced to do the job of an MA in additional to the job I was hired to do. Had there not been a non-compete, I could have much easily bargained for a better job within my organization. But these standard non-compete clauses force us to work in unsafe environments where patients are routinely at risk because it is more profitable for the organizations to strip our support than to provide the basic needs to effectively and safely do our jobs. I hope you are not swayed by the numerous comments by large hospital corporations claiming to represent their physicians who predictable advocate against banning non-compete clauses knowing that they will then be forced to provide better working environments for their employees. The non-compete clause ban is fully supported by many of us physicians and ultimately lead to improved patient care and outcomes."
Ahmed	"I am a Gastroenterologist, working for a private group in Indiana. I am an employed physician and not a business partner. I want to join a Veterans Affairs Hospital which is within the geographic no compete area. Despite telling my employer that I am not competing with them by joining the VA they are threatening to take me to court. Strongly support doing away with no compete. Or have them applied with extremely narrow focus."
Farah	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. As a physician I have directly felt their impact and saw how it impacted the patients I was no longer able to serve since I had to leave the community in order to leave my job. I have had to move 3 states in 10 years due to this archaic Practice."
Lori	"I am writing for you to respectfully remove the language that physicians working for any corporation including not-for-profit organizations are an exception to noncompete clauses. Noncompetes hold employees hostage and undercut the free market. Physicians should have the ability to follow any opportunity that provides increased value no matter the location. Noncompetes are geared towards saving corporations money and are not in the best interest of patient care. Especially in suburban or rural areas, a physician would have to leave the community entirely in order to work at another job. This further marginalizes patients and makes it harder to provide continuing care. Why should physicians be held to such strict limitations within noncompetes when we have dedicated years study, time away from friends and family, and countless hours caring for patients to improving the health of our communities? At a minimum, physicians should be free to participate in the free market and not be handcuffed to noncompete agreements."
Carissa	"While I acknowledge noncompetes are complex, I fully believe on a whole they are a hindrance not only to the employee but to the people they serve. I left my position after

	6 years as a vitreoretinal surgeon in a semi rural community, accepting many insurance plans no other doctor in the state would, after the practice was sold to a private equity. Incompetent practice management and mandates to provide unsafe and substandard care led me to leave that practice. Due to the demographic and corporate owned facility, I knew they would not be able to recruit another surgical sub specialist. They could not and began advertising a general ophthalmologist as a retina specialist. My former patients now need to travel 1-2 hours to see a true retina specialist or receive any retina surgical care. While my county wide noncompete may or may not be enforceable, the time and cost of battling a multibillion dollar private equity puts me at a unique disadvantage and detracts from what I love to do, taking care of patients. These patients now do not have a choice. Their access to care is limited and an unnecessary burden has been placed on these individuals and their families. Permanent vision loss and a diminished quality of life are the result."
Dave	"Noncompete agreements completely go against the American spirit and the freedom our forefathers fought to provide. Employers hide behind them so they can keep their thumb on their employees and treat them however they want knowing that their employees have limited options for other employment. The elimination of noncompete clauses would force better work conditions for employees and ensure employees are considered in their decision making processes. It is egregious that they still exist and can actually be enforced in today's world."
Tomasz	"Please do not allow lobbyist for large corporations to limit people's freedom to work for whomever they want. Banning non-compete clauses from employment contracts is comparable to abolition of slavery. Never ever corporations agree in negotiations to strike them out of contracts, and it limits our freedoms. Hospital corporations run us out of town in case of job termination and prevent us for bettering ourselves and our families. We cannot quit abusive jobs, because it would leave us with no option to work in our trade often within 50 miles of our homes."
Melanie	"I am writing to indicate my support for the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. I view these clauses as unfair to workers and a contributor to wages being held down. They also stifle innovation. A ban on them will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth!"
Leo	"I was asked to sign a non- compete agreement during my employment as an installation technician for an accessibility equipment home modification company. I did not have access to any trade secrets or propriety information. We installed other companies' equipment so that physically challenged people could get into and move around the rooms in their homes. Most of what I did for my job was available online for free. Had I left the company, I would not have been able to legally take another job at a home modification company that installed accessibility equipment, effectively keeping me from making a living at that type of work. I think that most non-compete agreements are blatantly anti-competitive. I agree with the Federal Trade Commission's proposal to make non- compete agreements illegal, except for cases of propriety information or trade secrets. I encourage the FTC to implement their ban on the vast majority of non-compete agreements."

Sarah	"In May, I will be graduating as a Doctor of Audiology. I currently live in Indianapolis. 2 practices have multiple locations around the entire metro Indy area. If I am to work for either of those practices and choose to leave, I would have to fully move out of the area in order to be far enough away from any of their practices under non-compete. This significantly hinders individuals from pursuing better fitting careers."
Liece	"I agree with banning non compete clause. I think it limits workers' ability to find better employer in the same industry"
Mark	"Abolish Non-competes!!"
Anthony	"The Federal Trade Commission has just begun collecting comments in support of its new rule to ban non-compete clauses in labor agreements. This sounds technical, but it's pretty simple: Non-compete clauses make it harder to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats you, by allowing your former employer to sue you if you go to work for another company in the same industry. The FTC estimates that banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities for 30 million Americans and raise wages by $300 billion per year. This isn't a done deal -- rules like this go through an official comment period, during which members of the public can make their voices heard. This process isn't easy, but simple step-by-step instructions are being provided to help. STOP NON-COMPETE CLAUSES! STOP THEM NOW BEFORE OUR ECONOMY AND SOCIETY ARE BOTH CRUSHED EVEN FURTHER."
Karla	"Please remove the non compete burden on physicians I know two who have died by suicide because of these clauses keeping them in a practice situation as well as patients that miss out in great care when physicians are forced to work outside of an area ! I myself had a nearly fatal car accident coming home from 1.5 hours away pier call as I had to work that far from home for non compete !"
Garret	"Non-compete clauses are harmful to citizens and legitimate businesses alike. They benefit only harmful entities whose focus is on turning the most profit regardless of the societal cost."
Caitlyn	"I support non compete clauses to no longer be in effect"
Sumiya	"Non compete clauses are ruining the lives of physicians. Please stop allowing corporations to hold us hostages regardless of why we choose to leave a job."
Rama	"Non compete agreements are not good for physicians or patients. Non Compete hurts patients and physicians. It disrupts the life of physicians and their families, makes them feel stuck, can cause psychological distress. Restrictive covenants don't align with the principal goal of caring for the patients and give best care possible to the patients. I strongly oppose restrictive covenants."

Erin	"Hello, I am a family medicine physician. Non competes have been paralyzing to physicians, and have prevented innovation in the workplace and patient care. Currently, due to extremely broad non-competes, most physicians are unable to change jobs without uprooting their lives and families In fact, my last non compete said that I could not deliver any family medicine services within 20 miles for 2 years! Large health care systems are dominating healthcare, to the detriment of physicians and patients. Large health care systems are profit driven, and are making decisions not to improve primary care or patient care, but for their own bottom line. Due to non competes, employed physicians are unable to leave and set up their own private practice in the area where they can deliver the type of medical care that is best for patients. Large healthcare systems are also increasingly driven by "metrics" and insurance contracts, which means that doctors are being forced to see more and more patients in less time. If doctors were not under non-competes, they would be able to set up their own local practices in novel models such as direct primary care. Corporations in America have gotten larger and larger. They now dominate many aspects of modern life, including health care. Unfortunately, when businesses get really big (think Amazon, Ascension, Optum, etc), the people making decisions at the top are very disconnected from the people performing the day to day tasks and taking care of the patient or customer. This has resulted in corporations who are not invested in the health and well being of their employees and the people they "serve". However, many employees have been unable to leave and seek better employment, compensation, or benefits due to the constraints of non competes. This further increases the power of these large corporations and stifles the ability of the "little guy" to further his own career or create innovative businesses. Non competes eliminate any pressure for businesses to treat their employees well, because employees are essentially trapped in an unwinnable position - keep working in a had job, or uproot their lives and move to another geographic area. Eliminating non competes would be one of the biggest wins for the working person; it would give each individual the opportunity to freely find better employment opportunities or to create novel businesses. Thank you for your time and consideration."
Jakeb	"I support the installation of this new rule as it would give the labor force more direct say in their employment status. By utilizing non-competes and other means, Corporations have limited the individual freedoms of the American Workforce. It should be the right of any person capable of participating in the American Labor Force to have the freedom to choose and manage their own work environment. I feel that the current system has, in effect, created a large inequality for the average person that has resulted in Corporations having near tyrannical powers when it comes to employees rights and prospective employment opportunities."
Megan	"This new rule would be very helpful if also extending to professionals with graduate degrees, particularly in medicine. With lower wages and higher costs of education, workers need to have opportunities to find careers that suit them and their families most appropriately. Fighting strict noncompete clauses in court costs time and money

	better spent working to pay off loan debt. Flexibility to change jobs gives workers freedom to make the best choices for themselves and the financial securities of their families"
Joe	"I whole heartedly agree with the position of the FTC to ban non-competes. In the engineering consulting business, non-competes are installed to limit flexibility and salary / ownership potential for employees in turn unfairly tipping the scales to owners. Please see attached document for further comment about cooperate serfdom. Attachments Non-Compete Clause Rulemaking P201200_April Comment"
Ralph	"The AHA does not represent practicing physicians but rather their strangle hold on the contracts they have on the employed physicians. All providers should not be subject to a NPRM. I live in Indiana and in this state it is illegal for an attorney to have a non compete, yet we have them for physicians! Guess who writes the rules at the state house? Attorneys. Stop this silliness."
Carl	"I am a member of a television news organization in a mid-sized city in an off-air role. In order to be employed for my off-air role, I had to sign a non-compete clause. I am fortunate to work in a television market near the rest of my family. But, if I were wanting to change stations for whatever reason, I'll be forced to abandon my loved ones. This includes the desire for a more livable wage. The television industry is known for low wages, despite the illusion of working for a glamorous job. My first television job, I made $9.50 per hour, with a bachelor's degree, in a small market. This was below the living wage for the area. In order to obtain a better wage, I had to move 300 miles from my family, because of the non-compete clause, and leave a position I was relatively happy with. Seven years later, I'm facing a similar situation. It's not a secret that the cost of living is rapidly increasing. But, wages in the television industry are stagnant. Those of us who are forced under non- competes are forced to take one or two percent pay raises. Over the summer, I was faced with the difficult decision to turn down a 23% pay raise. The reason? I didn't want to leave my family. I strongly believe without a non-compete, I would have found a similar position at another station in town, that would pay me the increased rate. Instead settled for a hard-fought 3%. While pay rates and leaving your abandoning your family are both important topics. The other issue with non-compete clauses is that the employees who oversee the station's product, do not have non-compete clauses. For example, my news director, assistant news director and general manager do not have non-compete clauses. Yet, as employees are told we are the station's product, and allowing us work elsewhere in the market would be harmful to our current employer. I'm aware of several states that have individually banned non-compete clauses. The majority of local television companies cast wide nets. The absence of non-compete clauses shouldn't impact their business model. In my opinion, die changes would be beneficial for the business, and retaining talent."
Mohannad	"I strongly support the ban on non-compete clauses. I am a neonatologist, all of my work is inpatient, i do not have a clinic, and there is no way for me to transfer patients with me if i decide to leave my current practice to another in town! Yet, if i am not happy with my current job, i need to think of moving out of my city, with all the struggle that comes with that! Selling and buying homes, change if my kids schools to new ones, new community, new friends! Basically i need to start my life from scratch and this is not fair at all.. Non-compete is a modern form of work slavery and it has to come to an end! Thank you"

Mohannad	"This is a long waiting dream hopefully comes true, i always looked and understood this unfair non-negotiable term as a form of modern slavery in USA! I fully support this bill.."
John	"I'm an engineer working for a large company on battery electric vehicles. Non-compete clauses are sometimes used in my industry to prevent highly motivated employees from pursuing better opportunities at other companies because they wouldn't be able to use their primary skill set even though they put in serious time and effort to become experts in their fields. Non-compete clauses unfairly benefit employers and punish employees."
Alexander	"As a worker who has an absolutely insane 10 non-compete clause in the tech industry, please and thank you."
Charles	"I have been personally negatively affected by non competes in my field as a hospital technician in surgery. I am now currently having to drive 6 hours to work at hospitals that are in another state, since available opportunities in my field are limited. My old company was able to take advantage of my situation 6 years ago and got me to sign a non compete. I proceeded to get them business in multiple hospitals and surgery centers. Over the years they became more and more corporate and made very questionable business decisions. I tried to get a raise after three years since my previous one and they declined. I knew the competition would easily pay me more so I was able to find a travel situation doing the same occupation. Unfortunately the surgeons and surgical teams that I had worked with are now deprived of having a trusted and experienced technician in their operating rooms. The level of service they are getting now has decreased and their patients have to suffer the consequences. If there wasn't a non compete in place, I would have been able to return to those surgeons and ORs with a company that actually cares about their employees and patients, and not treat them like numbers. Also, if these non competes were to be banned, I would be able to free my old coworker technicians from that company. They unfortunately do not have the opportunity to move on to a better overall situation due to their non compete restrictions and personal situations. As you can see these non competes have stifled competition in my career field. These have further reaching consequences that negatively affect not only the employees in the field but also the patients, surgical teams, and the families of these employees. These companies in my field are taking full advantage of these non competes and giving themselves unfair leverage over the competition due to people needing work to support themselves financially. If these companies provided a better situation for their employees then they wouldn't need them to sign a non compete agreement in the first place. This business practice of non competes needs to end, and I support all of the tic and other

	peoples' efforts to put a stop to it. Thank you for taking the time to read this post. Sincerely, Charles"

Pradeep	"I am glad FTC is looking into this matter seriously, I have seen so many physician families getting uprooted, pushed to different cities and sometimes different states due to predatory nature of non compete clause enforcement by big read mammoth hospital system employer. Also seen physician put under lot of pressure to continue to work as they do not want to leave the city. Lets push for this rule change, hope all physicians get actively involved and talk to their local representatives to approve this rule. Thanks FTC for taking up this rule. It will definitely help reduce physician burden."
Harsha	"I am a practicing physician and I have seen with my own eyes how businesses press upon qualified physicians both specialists and non Specialist by imposing non compete clauses. Getting rid of non compete clauses will specially help rural and medically undeserved communities get care they so desperately need. Please make sure physicians are included in this ban of non compete. Thank you."

Subba	"Non compete clause should be eliminated in physician contracts"
Rachel	"Non-compete clauses place undue influence on an individual and inhibit the ability of hardworking Americans to obtain gainful employment in their chosen fields. With layoffs and inflation, it is of the utmost importance that large corporations do not have the ability to take more from the American worker by tying them in indentured servitude."
Kristi	"Noncompetes keep people from having continuity of care with their physicians who know them and their medical history well- this is a major patient safety issue! Noncompetes allow hospitals to mistreat and completely burnout their physicians because they are trapped! Why is our country allowing this to happen to a group of professionals that is vital for all of society?! Noncompetes are for the hospitals and against patients and physicians! Aren't you a patient too?"
Jeremy	"I was laid off by my consultant employer, and even though the client I'd been working with for years was ready to hire me full time, they could not because my previous employer would not release the non-compete. Total lose-lose situation, I was forced to go somewhere wise, and the client had to make do with a new consultant with no experience."
Jeremy	"Non compete clauses trapped me in a dead end job for years, because I could no longer work in any part of that industry if I left. After burning out and being laid off I am starting to recover now, but I have had to start over in my career."
Andrew	"Noncompetes are highly disruptive to healthcare workers. They prevent us from leaving unhealthy work environments unless we leave often a significant geographic area. They further restrict the workforce in already underserved areas if a particular employee does not support a healthy work environment."
Rachel	"I am a healthcare provider and a non-compete has prevented me from taking a better opportunity within my field and forced me to travel a long distance to switch jobs. I really have never wanted to sign any non-compete at all, but have been required to as a provision of employment for every position I've ever been offered. I'm specialized in my field and by not being able to work in a certain area due to a non-compete, patients are limited access to their health care provider of choice. They are extremely unfair to the employee and only serve to protect the interest of the employer to prevent you from having the opportunity to work elsewhere when a better opportunity may be available. I am highly in favor of the proposed ban on non- competes. State laws are so confusing to interpret and ambiguous that even if it seems the non-compete would be considered unreasonable, the fear of litigation intimidates the employee into following them. This ban would make a significant positive impact on my future career and be highly beneficial to the public."

Christine	"I support a federal ban on noncompetes. We're currently in a physician shortage. Non-competes are an undue burden and lead to physicians either stopping the practice of medicine completely or leaving their communities either temporarily or permanently. Both of these outcomes only worsen this shortage and directly impact the health of the American people"
Derek	"Dear Chair Lina Khan, I'm writing today in support of your effort to ban noncompete agreements. Your plan will boost the economy and directly help millions of workers, future new business owners, and people like me all across the country. As you know, noncompetes agreements stifle entrepreneurship and hurt employees. Noncompetes are a monopolistic oligopolistic tool wielded by companies against their employees. Thank you for your work, and please issue a formal rule that bans noncompete agreements."
Stephanie	"This is a fantastic proposal, and extremely necessary. Workers need to have more control over who they work for. If you can't afford to leave your job because you wouldn't be able to get a new one in your field (and thus not in your area of experience and training, and probably at less pay), then you have no choice but to remain with an employer, regardless of the harm you are experiencing at that company. Thank you the this proposal. I support it wholeheartedly."
Robert	"I am Robert Paden and have worked for the past 35-years as a leader in manufacturing companies in a variety of industries. There are two very effective safeguards for companies to protect their intellectual property. Patents and non-disclosure agreements are safeguards that are used extensively and are recognized universally to protect the investment in business and product innovation. There is no reason a former employee should not be held accountable for adhering to these legally recognized information protections. However, the use of non-compete employment clause are anathema to the principles of a market driven economy. I believe it is an abhorrent and unconscionable practice that needs to be stopped. If we as a constitutional republic are to thrive as a nation we need to support each individual's right to choose and pursue the career and job situation of their choosing. Non-compete clauses are absolutely in conflict with this objective and only benefit company ownership to the detriment of the individual employees."
Steve	"This clearly needs to be done. There may be rare circumstances that this makes sense but at least in healthcare it is clearly being used to hold employees captive to prevent them from being able to change jobs."
Douglas	"Non-compete agreements should either be prohibited or greatly modified."
Douglas	"Please support banning exploitive non-compete provisions."
Padmini	"I am a physician and a rheumatologist. I work in a rural area in the Midwest. Rheumatologists are specialists who treat autoimmune diseases like lupus and

	rheumatoid arthritis and spondyloarthropathies, and very rare conditions. There is a cap on how many rheumatologists graduate per year as this is limited by the number of training positions available. There is a need for rheumatologists in rural areas that far exceeds the number of us available. Hospital systems and private practices currently use a noncompete clause that can be quite restrictive and not allow the practice of Rheumatology within 50 miles of any clinic sites or hospital sites one is currently employed at. Often these clauses basically force a rheumatologist to have to move to an entirely different city or state in order to be compliant with the noncompete clause. This causes significant hardships to the rheumatologist but also to the patients they provide care for since if the rheumatologist moves and there is no other local one to replace them the patient has to also drive to seek care in a different city. Noncompete clauses in general also limit competition between Hospital systems to hire the best candidates. They often are able to keep physicians under their employ if moving is just not feasible for the physician. Physicians can be forced to accept work environments or salaries that are not competitive if they cannot leave to a new city (examples of such physicians are those who have bought homes or have children well settled and cannot move for those reasons). I urge you to ban Noncompetes for this reason to encourage competition between hiring physicians and take out issues that plague rural areas already like access to a specialist."
Alexander	"Hello! I'm a chemist in the paint and coatings field. I was required to sign a non-complete clause as part of my employment. It states I cannot work for a competitor in a similar field for three years in the contiguous United States. This is insane that I can "lose" my right to use skills that I have dedicated ten years of my life because companies want to keep my skills under their lock and key. In the document, I also have no provisions if my employment is ended by their choice. I still have to abide by their rules. When I asked about it, they said "They would be nice." I do not expect them to "be nice." Please ban all non-compete agreements as they are incredibly unfriendly to skilled workers like myself. I now have to fear for my future that I will find an employer who is willing to front my legal bills, or save enough to defend myself from my current company using the non-compete agreement as a bully stick to keep me from being employed."
MIGUEL	"The banning of non-compete clauses would be beneficial to the general public. While many businesses would claim that they are important to protect intellectual property, they seem to be used more as a way to punish people seeking new employment. I also feel that these along with arbitration agreements give too much power to employers over their employees and too much control over wages."
Joseph	"I have observed first hand how non-competes have worsened the Veterinarian shortage currently affecting the United States, in particular rural areas. In large animal and mixed practices the geographical range in a non-compete can be very large meaning that in the event that a veterinarian wishes to seek other employment or go out on their own is forced to move far away, or more likely, just not compete. One veterinarian I know went from full-time to part time work because they had to commute so far from their home to be able to avoid the non-compete geographic restrictions. Another decided it was enough burden to leave the field entirely and become a stay-

	at-home parent occasionally working as a relief veterinarian. My own spouse, a Veterinarian, can't convince her clinic to bring on more large animal clients to the mixed practice as the focus of the business is small animal work that pays more. This deprives the rural county we're in of 75% of the time of one of two large animal vets in the area. My spouse has a non- compete that would force her to not work in our county or the surrounding counties and not work with any current clients for 2 years, effectively depriving the county of more large animal veterinary resources or if my spouse did strike out on her own, depriving the entire area of one of the two large animal veterinarians. I'm lucky in my own industry, software engineering, to not have been subject to a non-compete. This has given me great flexibility in finding jobs and even moving jobs to improve my own pay and benefits. Non-competes suppress wages and benefits because the company knows that few will be able to support themselves during the term of a non-compete unless they are moving away. I am in full support of ruling that non-competes are anti-competitive and be banned outright."
Joseph	"As a worker who has been negatively impacted by such non-compete clauses in prior employment on several occasions I would be greatly in favor of this change to eliminate such clauses. A non-disclosure agreement would be more than sufficient to protect the interests of the employer's intellectual property and proprietary processes from "bad actors". Non-compete clauses are entirely too broad and prevent employees who have a novel idea or process from striking out on their own or changing positions to work for an organization where they feel that their new approach would be more effectively executed."
Christine	"My non compete prevents me from getting another job or opening my own practice. I'm a specialist in the medical industry. I am in favor of this proposal."
William	"I strongly support the federal ban on non-compete contracts. This affects me, not as a worker as I am soon to retire, but as a citizen and consumer who wants the best workers and services. As a physician, I have sadly seen the loss of excellent physicians from our community because they ended their employment with a large predatory health care system. I have seen that same system prevent the departing physician from treating indigent patients for free at the public clinic."
Richard	"I am currently working as a contractor with a non- compete. I am basically an employee for the customer. I use their computers, sit in their office, and complete work that the employees of the customer does as well. The manager wants to hire me but can't because of my non-compete. So I am stuck being a 'customer employee' with out the customers benefits. It sucks, if my non-compete is lifted then I can get benefits and start my family."
Sofia	"I would like to voice my choice to NOT have a non-compete clause! It is not only detrimental for me as a physician, but also doesn't allow the flexibility to serve my patients. It affect people of all socioeconomic background! Don't limit physicians with silly clauses, we practice medicine because we want to help people, we don't want to pretend to also be lawyers and contract writers."

Michael	"I fully support a ban on non-compete agreements, and support the FTC proposed Non-Compete Clause Rule (NPRM). Please read my attached authored comment. I request that the FTC take this into consideration. Attachments FTC comment 2023 PDF"
Erika	"I am writing to support the FTC roulette change that would ban non competes. They are anti competitive, impinge on personal freedom and unAmerican. Ironically, in my state, non competes are in fact illegal for the lawyers who work so hard to write them and enforce them on the rest of us. As a physician who has been in practice for 20 years, I think it is insane that my current employer can limit my practice. They didn't put me through medical school— I paid for that. They didn't support me during residency training — the US taxpayers did that. And they shouldn't be allowed to impinge on my right to earn a living now."
Harsha	"My name is Harsha N. I am and MD who have previous several years of my time to practice in a rural set up. I was held against my will by the hospital with minimal pay and was abuse by the hospital system citing non compete clauses. I was not allowed to care for rural patients who needed my specialist care and would've benefit-red from my care. I was disgusted at how a non profit hospital was benefitting by subjugating the competition in the area and all the while paying a paltry low pay for physicians and nurses. Non compete clauses is equivalent to slave trade. It is as bad as apartheid. It is shameful that these non profit hospitals and clinics utilizing the existing discriminatory law and threaten and bully doctors and nurses. Please do away this for even the non profit organization as well. If the organization is not for profit then why should they care about profiteering from paying Healthcare professional so low and not allowing them to help rural and for to reach population?. Thank you."
Jane	"Ending the non-compete tile is essential to protecting individuals who have become invested in their community, but then are exploited by corporations who hold down wages and require longer working hours and more dangerous working conditions. This will help protect communities against the 'company town' corporations, including hospitals, manufacture around their work sites, and is essential for healthy communities, families and individuals."
Andrew	"I agree with the proposed rule change to severely limit or eliminate the use of non-compete clauses. These clauses only serve to limit the ability of workers to offer their skills in the open market, lowering the wages they could rightfully command. If these companies were subjected to the similar restrictions they would scream from the rooftops that it was anti-competitive. (For example: If you have sold your product at Target, you may not sell your product at Walmart for a period of at least one year.) I hope you go even further and severely restrict the use of non-solicitation and non-recruit clauses as well. A market only works to bring public good when it is open and fair."
Mary	"This would be a sea weather change for thousands of physicians. We prohibit non compete clauses for attorneys because of the attorney client privilege. What about the patient physician relationship? The non compete benefits huge hospital systems and huge private equity owned corporate medical practices. Even so-called nonprofit hospital groups (cough Ascension) are usually more like private equity than they are service organizations. It's all about their bottom line and controlling physicians is a large part of that."

Gregory	"Without getting into too much detail, back 2018-2019, I was just generally not happy concerning my job as a Neonatal Nurse Practitioner at a non-for- profit hospital ('NFPH'). I asked for a waiver of my non-compete to work at the hospital I wanted to work at. I was denied my waiver. My argument was I felt there was no legitimate business interest for NFPH to enforce it. I had no trade secrets, no valuable confidential information, no customer lists. and I had received no specialized training from NFPH in regards to my profession. I had no substantial relationships with specific perspective or existing clients, customers, or patients. I received zero referrals, and the only referrals I made were to pre-established physicians, who were for the most part already NFPH physicians in different pediatric specialties. And I only made referrals because I worked in the NICU. If I didn't work in the NICU at NFPH, the exact same referrals would have been made by another provider at NFPII to a pediatric NFPII provider. I took care of infants in the neonatal intensive care unit and after they were discharged the relationship ends. I took care of zero patients in the outpatient setting. I brought no business into NFPH. I brought in zero dollars to NFPH every year. If I stayed or if I went, NFPH would not suffer any loss of revenue. The Neonatologists are in-house 24/7 anyways. Before I started, they covered the hole left from the off days for the other 4 neonatal nurse practitioners. NFPH would save money in the short-term if I leave. No infant would follow me to another NICU. No parents would deliver their future child at another hospital when I left, they followed their OBs. No referral to NFPH was lost to NFPH when I worked elsewhere. No Good will to NFPH was lost. The OBs brought in the mothers and the infants go to the NICU they are born at. Babies born at NFPH stay at NFPI I, babies born at hospital I want to go to stay at the hospital I want to go to. The non-compete covenant of my employment served no purpose other than to keep me from working in my home town outside of NFPH. I believed in my case it was merely a standard procedure for all employees. My nurse practitioner degree is very different from other nurse practitioner degrees. I am a neonatal nurse practitioner. We work with infants in NICUs which only exist in hospital settings. The next closest NICU outside my home town is a 90- minute drive. This is a little far to drive for full time employment. If I drive 5 minutes from NFPII or 3 hours from NFPI I, there will be no impact on NFPH. I thought a covenant not to compete is supposed to be reasonable with respect to the legitimate interests of the business. NFPH cannot show that I have gained some sort of unique competitive advantage or ability to ban NFPH. NFPH will not be providing neonatology services at any of the hospitals I could potentially be working at, and NFPI .1 will not lose any patients if I choose to work at another hospital. Infants do not get to make a choice about medical care on the basis of a Neonatal Nurse Practitioner. The only loss NFP11 incurs is the loss of my continued employment and the use of my knowledge & skills, but that belongs solely to me. NFPH paid no money in regard to any of my education or skills. I would compare me to a sandwich artist at a Jimmy John's who wants to go to Jersey Mike's. People who eat at Jimmy John's will continue to eat there. Vendors & suppliers will not change. People won't follow me to Jersey Mike's to get their subs. Neither restaurant will gain/lose money in their business other than training a new employee. Employers cannot be trusted to only use non-competes when they have legitimate business reasons."

Philip	"My personal experience with a non-compete clause was very discouraging. I would liken it to a vestige of slavery. I was made to believe that the employer "owned" me and I could not do anything about it. I was sued because I tried to leave the situation that I was in. After paying about 50% equivalent of my salary, I was able to be free to pursue another opportunity. I still have hard feelings about what my family and I went through."
Laura	"I am against non compete clauses. As a medical provider, I have specific craft and should not have to drive 2 hours to find work or move my family to be able to support them."
Jason	"Excluding non-profits does not make sense and handcuffs many health care workers to the greedy hospital systems. It might seem unrelated but if you want to help fight burnout in healthcare then allow healthcare workers the ability to change jobs for a better situation."
Aaron	"I agree with the statement. Non compete clauses are bad for the field of medicine in general. They take away from the doctor patient relationship and limit competition."
Ahmad	"As a physician I fully support banning noncompete clauses"
Rachel	"This is absolutely necessary for a true open market. I urge you to do this for the people. The only ones who benefit are the ones that lobby for it due to concerns for having to fighter harder to keep talent."
Rachel	"Physician non competes are ludicrous. Limits their ability to stay in the city the love, if their current employer is horrible. They completely destroy a free market. It seems the free market only exists if it benefits organizations, not people."
Maria	"What was intended as a way to keep company secrets, secret and to prevent corporate espionage has ballooned to effect employees not important enough to know those secrets, or who's departure would be of no real consequence to the employer. It gives power over every aspect of an employees life to the company they work for. I support this action and it would do so much good for so many people. Personally, my parents in law are both doctors and both have been negatively impacted by non-compete clauses. One had to suffer multi hour commutes so that he could work and so his kids would not be uprooted from their community. The other is now stuck in a horribly abusive working environment where her boss actively sabotages her professional career in the hospital system she works in. And she cannot leave for a competitor that might treat her better. She has no special secrets or information that would give a competitor an unfair advantage, she's simply a valuable employee. And instead of competing for her in a free job market by paying her well and respecting her, her company can hold her hostage and treat her poorly with a few lines in an employment contract. Free competition is part of the American spirit and that includes free competition for workers!"

Jacob	"Non-Competes are difficult to enforce because they hinder an individuals ability to make a living but even so, larger corporations tend to weaponize them to reduce competition in what should otherwise be a free market. The FTC should strongly consider eliminating not competes. it's what Thomas Jefferson would do right away."
Austin	"Hello, I support this action by the FTC. Thank you."
J	"I support a ban on non compete clauses which limit workers mobility in the workforce and stifle competition between companies."
Dan	"DO NOT allow the exclusion of physicians and other healthcare providers from this rule. I am an emergency physician and have seen firsthand how non- competes are absolutely ruining healthcare. Physicians are forced to pay a bounty or uproot their families and leave their patients in the name of hospital system greed. If hospitals want to retain physicians, let the market decide and they can improve pay and working conditions to retain them."
Laura	"Please ban all non arbitrary compete clauses."
Todd	"I strongly support the abolishment of non-compete clauses in the healthcare sector. The non-compete clauses restrict providers from moving freely in an open market. The clauses promote non-competitive wages and hours. Very few, if any, healthcare providers possess proprietary knowledge or information that would negatively affect the entity enforcing a non-compete agreement."
Oscar	"Non complete is about controlling profits under the guides of protection of "trade secrets". It purposely stifle innovation by locking in employees to a company and their goals, locking out former employees from working sectors, and emboldened the employers audacity to mistreat their employees."
Ranbir	"Non compete clause prevents entrepreneurship and reduces compensation by providing employers a tool that violates basic right to work and earn where one wants to. It should be up to recipients of services to decide who they want to receive their service from. If organization is good recipients of services will stick with those organizations and if service provider is good, recipients should have the ability to stick with the service provider. Non compete rules makes it impossible."
Sally	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. This policy will make it easier for workers to earn what they're worth. And with all the recent layoff find, banning non-compete clauses will make it easier for laid off workers to find new jobs."

Ryan	"I believe non compete agreements should be illegal, they absolutely harm competition for employees and competitive wages paid to the employees. The non compete agreement I was forced to sign caused a competitors employment offer to be revoked and the offered 200% raise in my wage for a similar, but higher responsibility job description at the new employer to be lost. I don't even have proprietary information which would be protected in other documents, I am only a skilled white collar worker."
Jon	"I strongly support the FTC's proposal to federally ban noncompete agreements. For decades, exploitative noncompete agreements from multiple industries and corporations have barred workers from pursuing better employment opportunities in the same industry, stifling wages, and preventing career advancement. Why has this been happening in this country? Banning noncompete agreements will lead to higher wages and better opportunities for American workers. You remember us right? The American WORKER. We are part of the reason corporations are making record profits yet we are not being compensated and treated fairly and justly. This would be a critical step toward strengthening the middle and working classes --- ultimately building a stronger economy for everyone."
Jon	"Non compete clauses should be eliminated in order for working people to get paid what they are worth. These clauses hold workers' wages down, stifle innovation, and harm working people. Do the right thing for ALL working people in the United States."
Robert	"Strongly encourage the banning of non-compete clauses in employment agreements. As a physician it prevents access to care to our patients and leads to uprooting of families from community they are established in when a change in employment locally is possible. Often these agreements can extend as far as 60 miles."
Nitie	"Please ban non competes for physicians. I am a physician. I worked for a large corporate hospital in my home town. The hospital system shut my practice down due their COVID financial losses and told me I still had to follow my non compete. I literally had no voice or choice but to move during the pandemic away from my aging parents who needed help. Eventually, I was thankfully able to come hack but it took years and loss of income. Non competes for physicians are awful. The patients suffer. The community suffers be they have less doctors to treat patients. The only people that win are corporations who don't value or care for small rural communities who need the care the most."
Andrew	"It is absurd that a company, with all of its resources, could potentially go after a former employee for continuing in an area where they have developed experience. It's one thing to steal clients lets say, but to say a former employee cannot seek employment somewhere else doing the same type of work is ludicrous. I've had personal experience with these so-called noncompete clauses. I even had one that

	state I would not work in my profession for a period of two years in all of New England! No joke. Needless to say I didn't sign it, but did tell them they could re-write the paragraph stating I would in essence not steal their clients. I've been told by others that they have signed such agreements, but most thought they were unenforceable and/or they needed the job and were willing to take the chance. Well, I can tell you that I have known large companies to in fact have gone after former employees, not for stealing clients, rather continuing employment in their chosen profession! What resources does your average person have to fight a corporation? Not many. This, in my opinion, is a gross injustice and needs to be addressed/clarified once and for all."
Joshua	"I am a graduate student in occupational therapy and I am in favor of banning non-compete clauses. As someone who is going into a healthcare field, I'm worried about the effects non-compete clauses have on prevent healthcare workers from serving as patients in different areas. Schooling is very expensive in my field, and limiting the number of opportunities occupational therapists have by forcing them to sign non-compete clauses creates an undue financial burden and limits the number of practitioners able to join the field."
Kevin	"Non-compete clauses cause tremendous harm to physicians, and our ability to compete within the healthcare marketplace, thus limiting options for treating patients or improving healthcare efficiency. Please pass this rule. And please do not add any limitations or exceptions."
Ghayasul	"This is important and a step in the right direction. Non compete tie us down, force us to relocate, force us to Work in situations where we don't want. Let's end non compete"
Tiffany	"Please ban and rescind all noncompetes. Especially among physicians and healthcare workers. These essentially limit access to care by forcing doctors in areas where there are already shortages to move or relocate in order to try to earn a fair wage. Noncompetes are detrimental to patient care."
Matthew	"I have been subject to a non-compete clause for 11 years in aggregate as a physician. Because of my non-compete, I am unable to take position with another organization without having to drive much farther outside of my non-compete stipulated geographic restrictions (which would add to the time that I am away from my family, and costs more in fuel and vehicle maintenance). Because of my non-compete, I haven't had a raise in 6 years because I can't negotiate with my employer because I have no bargaining position to negotiate from if I don't have options of alternate employment within the restrictions of my non-compete. Non-complete agreements keep employees from negotiating, keep them stuck in jobs that they can't leave without requiring moving their whole family, or commuting a great distance. Non-compete agreements should be illegal throughout the U.S."

Miles	"I believe that non compete agreements should be banned. This will give workers a fair opportunity to seek the best employers."
Shannon	"No compete clauses are detrimental to the continuity of patient care. They are inherently unAmerican and prevent physicians from being able to make a fair wage."
Rachel	"I would love to see this pass without carving out physicians! We are often stuck employed by giant healthcare organizations without the option of leaving. Many of us just want to take great care of patients and if the giant hospital systems want to they can run you like a hamster on a wheel without allowing us any power to spend longer with patients."
Andrew	"The proposed rule to ban non-compete clauses in employment contracts is an excellent idea. I worked for a company whose non-compete clause was overreaching and vague. They would take employees and their prospective new employers to court where they would always lose. However, often the threat of a lawsuit was enough to bar the new employer from taking on the employee. My old company would then not hire the old employee back. This was, at its very core, mean-spirited and spiteful. Employers should not be able to bar their employees from seeking employment opportunities in their field, especially when the field is competitive. Some employers will argue that they are the ones who provide their employees the skills they are then taking to a competitor. This may be true, but it is the talent and intellect of the individual who puts those skills to practice for the benefit of the employer. Surely employers cannot argue seriously that their employees minds are proprietary! The FTC should adopt and execute the proposed ban on non-compete clauses in employment contracts. This move, as the FTC has noted, will return substantial negotiating power to employees and will create economic competition that will only benefit employees and employers alike in the long run."
Dennis	"I SUPPORT REVISING non-compete contracts in which an employee is terminated but does not quit. My relative has been a practicing Board Certified Family Physician for over ten years with the same company-(original hiring company was bought by two succeeding corporations). He was notified last month (Feb 2023) that the newest healthcare entity that owned the corporation he was employed with was shutting his and other family practice offices within the network. They evidently invoked the non-compete clause preventing him from working for his original company's competitors within the local geographical area. My question is why should an entity that eliminates an employee(s) be allowed to terminate said employee and at the same time say that employee cannot work for their competitor? My opinion is that is absolutely unfair to the competitive nature of this country and to the individual and their family. My other question references to what happens if they obtain a job as a Board Certified Family Physician in the same geographical area but is not covered by the original non-compete clause; but ultimately that new company he now works fir is bought by the original company that holds the non-compete contract. Would or could the original non-compete clause be invoked by the original company that terminated his employment, thus in effect causing double damage to the employee, his family and his local economy?"

Jason	"Please outlaw non compete clauses. Non compete clauses in the medical industry hurt the workers and consumers. Physicians are often forced to leave a community, which deprives the population of scarce medical providers. In 2019, I was forced to leave my home town of Fort Wayne, IN and move 150 miles south. It took 2 1/2 years for the community to find a replacement for the devices that I was no longer present to provide."
R	"I agree with banning non compete clauses. Or making adjustments to allow workers to have ability to come to mutual understanding with their employer to find a way out. I am a physician and I work in Indianapolis. They 3-4 major health systems in Indianapolis have locked us into our jobs. I was born and raised in Indianapolis. This is my home. Now because the health system has locked me into a non compete if I want to change jobs I have to leave my city. That is not fair to me or my family. I am a hospital based employee so it is wrong of a health system to do this to an individual. I am in no way a threat to them. This is about their control and suppressing our wages. Patients come liar their doctors not for the "name" of the system particularly in Indianapolis."
William	"I support the FTC rule limiting Non-Compete Agreements. In my experience, a company used this type of agreement to restrict my employment options in a technical field, where I had worked diligently and independently of any company support to gain that technical knowledge. The knowledge I gained that qualified me for employment was not specific to the company (solar energy system design) but the agreement was intended to keep me from taking this specialized knowledge to a competing company. Summary: In 2021, during the pandemic lockdowns, I built upon my decade-long experience in residential green building by taking solar energy system design courses online, and I designed the system for my new house, and obtained industry credentials. As the lockdowns eased, I sought work with a solar energy installer company and was quickly hired. Pie-employment, I was presented with the attached non-compete agreement. The company wanted to restrict my employment options and my ability to use my solar energy design knowledge and experience for any other company. This was not about protecting any proprietary information belonging to the company, or any intellectual property. It was only about not losing a qualified consultant in a specialized technical industry to a competing company in a robust market. Further, because I live in Indiana, and the company was based in Kentucky, the additional requirement that any dispute regarding the non- compete be settled in Kentucky courts, even though the said company had physical offices in Indiana. This obviously would have been an additional burden if any dispute had arisen. While the non-compete was presented as mandatory to employment, I declined to sign it and told my supervisor as much, and they processed my hiring without it. It turned out the company's internal workings were a total s show, and I would not abide by their other arbitrary and exploitive-of-customer practices. Bottom line: the non-compete was used to try to restrict my ability to seek better employment conditions and pay for which I was qualified by virtue of experience and technical knowledge gained independently and prior to working for the company."

Anita	"Please do away with non-competes. I was forced to sign one or be terminated after 10 years of service. I was the only employee made to sign one and I am female. I was forced to work without breaks, lunch hours and had to breathe mold for years. I finally got the courage to leave after 28 years and start my own business. My so called non-compete was for 3 years. I have been threatened by my former rich employer and I'm scared to properly advertise my business. Please stop the bully employers from preying on small dedicated female employees like myself."
Errin	"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the use of non-compete clauses in contracts for healthcare providers. I urge the Federal Trade Commission to take action to prohibit the use of non-compete clauses in contracts for physicians. Such a prohibition would help to ensure that patients have access to the care they need, and would promote competition in the healthcare industry. These clauses or restrictive covenants unduly restrict employed or contracted providers from practicing medicine within a certain geographic area and/or for a specified period of time after leaving a practice or other employment situation. This can lead to loss in income and instability for healthcare providers and their families. This is exactly what happened to me as a rural family medicine physician. I worked in Pike county, Indiana for a large hospital organization 45 minutes away in Evansville, IN. My non-compete was 75 miles from ANY of the organization's location. This organization spans over southern Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois. My husband farms in Pike county and so moving and getting another physician job outside of this large black out space wasn't possible. I could not practice and serve my rural community and those patients that most need healthcare access for over a year. I asked to be released from the noncompete and was denied "due to potential competition." No matter at that time there were only 4 physicians in the entire county. The use of non-compete clauses in physician contracts is harmful to the physicians and the patients and communities they serve. Physician non-competes limit the mobility and job opportunities of physicians, and can prevent them from providing consistent care to patients in need. This leads to shortages of physicians in certain areas, and can make it difficult for patients to find the care they need. Furthermore, non-compete clauses in physician contracts can limit competition, which can lead to higher healthcare costs for patients. By limiting the number of physicians in a given area, non-competes can also limit the number of choices that patients have when selecting a healthcare provider. I implore you to take action to prohibit the use of non-compete clauses in contracts for physicians. Thank you for your consideration, Errin Weisman DO Indiana Medical License # 02004107A"
David	"I support the proposed rule."
Timothy	"Non-compete clauses in medicine should be banned. Not only do they limit the ability of physicians to change jobs and stay in their communities, they also limit patient choice."

Angel	"I am a board certified internal medicine physician with close to 200K in medical school debt. I work 12 hr shifts, nights, in a level one trauma center. I treat sick patients every single night. I have worked hard my entire career. There have been years I worked every single holiday except one. I have missed countless family functions for my job. Because of unfair, restrictive and punitive non compete clauses, if I want to change jobs I have to uproot my entire family and move to another town. How much more do I have sacrifice? Please end this."
Malea	"I am employee who just underwent budget cuts in July 2022 and again January 2023. I serve as an Internal Medicine Nurse Practitioner. My last day of employment will be April 28th, 2023. I was given a 90 day notice to fulfill my contract. As a nurse practitioner within this organization I have a non compete clause which states that I am not able to work 15 miles from my facility and to any competitor within the same field for one year past my last date of employment. I was offered another position within this same organization which was not comparable and less monies and benefits plus working every other weekend. I declined this offer as it is not what is best for me or my family. I have an email from this organization which says I can go to private practice. I found an opportunity that is an employer based clinic in a private setting which I would be able to practice family practice to the employees of clinic and their families. However, now I am receiving correspondence that I may opt to buy out my contract and may also be in violation of my non complete. I do not believe that this is a fair practice and they are affecting my ability to be employed in most settings."
Sarah	"Non competes harm employees and their opportunities for growth and freedom of career choice."
Imad	"I support the non compete rule without any reservation, this rule has been unfair for Physician and patients care , destroying many livelihoods . Imad Khadra,MD"
Stacey	"January, 21, 2023 To Whom it May Concern, I am writing in support of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to start the work of banning employers' use of non-compete agreements. It should do so by issuing a notice of proposed rulemaking (NPRM) without further delay. Tens of millions of workers across the US economy remain vulnerable to economic disempowerment through employers' use of, or threat to use, non-compete clauses. Each day that passes without a NPRM weakens the likelihood of a robust final rule and increases the effort's exposure to a potential Congressional Review Act challenge post- 2024. I am a Neonatal Nurse Practitioner (NNP) that leads a team of twenty Physician Assistants and NNPs that work for large hospital system in Indiana. We are highly specialized providers that work in neonatal intensive care units (NICUs) only with sick babies. I am responsible for hiring and firing. We are under a noncompete and the only NNPs in the central Indiana region that are. This limits our ability to hire, if staff leave, they do not come back because they refuse to sign the non- compete. Further rationale includes but not limited to-- Our scope of practice is small and specialized, limiting where we can work. We are subject to an increasing salary gap, upwards of $20,000 per year for experienced NNPs. We are not competitive because we cannot change contracts and noncompete clauses. Our non-

	compete is a 1 year restriction and one cannot work for anyone within a 10 mile radius which includes 2 large hospital systems (the only places) we can work in locally. This forces long travel, relocation, or a gap in work for one year. The closest NICU units outside of that range are one hour away or longer. Not family centered There is no concern for sharing trade secrets, because this is what we do openly as clinicians. We share best evidence practice locally and across the nation. Under Indiana law we are victims of a contract of adhesion. Thank you for your supporting, advocating, and listening, Dr. Stacey Yeo, DNP, MSN, NNP, RN Advanced Practice Lead Indianapolis, Indiana"
Sheraz	"It should ho away for physicians. Its unfair. It promotes healthcare provider shortages"
Michelle	"physicians must not be excluded from non-compete clause that is being proposed. there is already a shortage of physicians and non-competes contribute to this. if a physician is unhappy at their current employment, they should have same rights as non-physicians regarding non-compete clause."
Anonymous	"I am a physician in central Indiana. I work for iu health in Indianapolis. I have a 2 year noncompete with a 30 mile radius from anywhere I practice medicine which includes a satellite office 20 miles from the hospital. My family and I are happy living here but I would like to change hospitals. Indiana signed a law from 2020 onward but I am grandfathered in as my contract is from 2015. I and my partners who are not happy with the leadership at iu would like to leave but the noncompete makes it difficult. I have to ask iu to let me leave and they would likely demand a buyout to leave which would be an enormous number. I hope you pass this law and remove past and future noncompetes. I hope this applies to nonprofits as iu is a "nonprofit" but in 2021 had 800 million profit and 2019 over 1 billion. Despite that they have reduced physician compensation and still charge patients more than any hospital system in Indiana. Thank you for listening."
Anonymous	"I have been under a strict non-compete for over 25 years. I have also been employed with several other colleagues who have been highly restricted by them. I work in the industrial sales space and I can say with the utmost certainty that these restrictions have limited many individuals from branching off and creating their own small business. It has also restricted them from pursuing more financially rewarding opportunities with companies that are also restricted by its language. They are often extremely broad in scope and although likely unenforceable, the business owners know the financial limitations of their employees will limit them from being able to stay afloat financially in order to see the legal system prevail. It is truly a modern day (version) of business slavery and should be completely illegal to allow the pursuit of the American dream for all. In the end, If people are treated well, they will be happy to stay on their own accord."
George	"I believe that a ban on non-executive noncompetes is a logical move for the resiliency of a capitalist economy, a central pillar of which is the freedom to chose one's

	workplace. Attempts to stifle worker mobility goes against one's right to choose their place of employment and their employer and make no sense in the case of lower-level workers who already feel squeezed. I urge the FTC to strongly consider implementing this rule."
Joshua	"I am a licensed attorney in the State of Indiana. I have been practicing law for approximately 22 years. My practice areas include business and commercial law. In Indiana, non-compete agreements are narrowly construed and difficult to enforce. The courts have done a good job of determining when to enforce reasonable non-compete terms and when not to enforce them. Non-compete agreements are essential for some business situations. They are necessary for protecting the legitimate interests a business may have. These interests can include, for example, intellectual property rights, key relationships, knowledge about how to do certain things, and other situations. Businesses seeking to enforce non-compete agreements must show that they have a legitimate protectable interest there must be a valid reason for the non-compete agreement. In addition, the employer must show that it is reasonable with regards to the scope, length of time, and geographic area. In addition, non-compete agreements are important for business transactions. When one business purchases another business, a non-compete agreement is a standard term. Why would a buyer pay a significant amount of money to purchase a business if it cannot prevent the current owner from starting another business doing the same thing and attempting to take the customers? It is also important to consider the impact this type of rule would have on small businesses. Small businesses are a significant part of the economy in Indiana and the United States. This rule raises policy concerns and questions. Additional regulations would increase the costs of doing business and make it harder for individuals and families to start a new businesses. The lack of being able to have a non-compete agreement would increase their risks and discourage them from investing in a new business. Non-compete agreements are essential to protecting businesses. I recommend not adopting a broad rule prohibiting them. Instead, there could be limits on the scope, length of time, or geographic area of non-compete agreements. In addition, it would be appropriate to limit the rule to larger businesses. Finally, I would recommend exceptions for business transactions- such as the purchase of a business or its assets. In a business transaction, where the parties negotiate specific terms there should be a larger scope, length of time, or geographic area. Thank you for your time and consideration of these comments."
Daniel	"The language on pages 111-112 suggest that this this would NOT apply to non-profit institutions, which include many hospital systems, essentially protecting these institutions from abiding by the rule. Non-competes are a HUGE problem for physicians and other medical staff and should be abolished for the good of employees, patients, and the communities these organization serve."

Iowa | Statewide Impact

On April 23, 2024, the Federal Trade Commission issued a final rule to promote competition by banning noncompetes nationwide, protecting the fundamental freedom of workers to change jobs, increasing innovation, and fostering new business formation. The FTC estimates that the final rule will result in 8,500 more new businesses each year, and $400-488 billion in increased wages over the next decade, including for Iowa:

	"As a physician I am opposed to non-compete clauses in work contracts. But I have worked for the same employer for 37 years. An individual should be able to work in the community where they live without restrictions or to work in any community in a nearby city where they wish to work. To restrict otherwise infringes on a USA citizen's right to the pursuit of happiness and economic freedom." -Jon
	"I just heard about this new proposed action of getting rid of Non Competes. Ten and half years ago I went to work for an Insurance agency Out of the blue...the VP came over and I was fired. They claimed the office I worked in was not as profitable as it needed to be and I was the biggest expense and that today was my last day. It was also the first day for my replacement probably starting out at $45,000 per year instead of my $115,000. They then reminded me of my non compete (and) non solicit. I was devastated, loved my career, did well in my career and was thrown away at 47 years of age being told find a new career path. They proceeded to send a letter to all my customers stating, I left for a new career option and that they wish my family the best. Well we are borderline bankrupt now. They had no financial loss and I took no customers. Might I add with no healthcare as we couldn't afford Cobra and suffering from [an illness]. They got to continue their 2022 as business as usual. Myself, my family, we weren't so lucky and still just trying to stay afloat. Non Compete's ruin lives. They take away competition for small business owners who deserve to choose who they want to do business with. They prevent career professionals from continuing their profession, especially when the choice made was not of their own, nor at their fault. They reduce income therefore tax dollars. I for one hope this continues forward and passes." -Tony
	"My employer is threatening to enforce a non compete contract. All I am trying to do is make more money to support my family. I have roughly 52000 to my name, and have made this company several hundreds of thousands of dollars over the past 5 years. Let the backbone of the American workforce have the freedom to work without the threat of being punished for wanting to excel financially. This is BS." -Cooper

"Non-compete agreements are a forced ultimatum that companies use during the hiring process for new employees. New hires are accepted as an employee only if they are willing to sign the Non-compete Agreement. This process has happened to me in my past employment. As a single mother I studied for Microsoft Certified Systems Engineer Certifications through federal student loans and was immediately hired. Within six months the company I was working for decided to let all of their employees go, except for three IT technicians. This put my Non-compete agreement into action because it stated I could not work for another company until 6 months after leaving, being let go, or unless I was hired out of a 150 mile radius. I tried to apply to all of the other businesses in my area that were in my line of work only to have them explain that they could not hire me due to my signing a Non Compete clause with the company who let me go. This clause stated that I would either have to locate a job past a 150 mile radius of where I worked or wait six months. Being a single parent I couldn't move, I couldn't drive 150 miles back and forth to work. All I could do was wait out my time. During the six month waiting period I was unable to attend Tech Net continuing education because I wasn't working for a company and my certifications started expiring. Due to losing my career and losing my income I also lost my house and am not able to pay for the student loans. I will never sign a Non-compete agreement again in my life. Shame on any company who uses this stranglehold tactic for their own profit and reputation at the expense of the employees. Shame on anyone who allows company's the right to use a Non-compete agreement. This happened to me, how many other people have suffered?"

Constituent First Name	Comment Highlights
Ross	"I provide consultant services as a sole proprietor LLC . One of the contracting businesses operates in California which has a requirement of providing similar services to other contracting businesses. The California contracting business has retained the noncompete clause in the written contract, placing my business in a non-win situation. The noncompete clause should be prohibited nationally."
Haroon	"Non compete clauses have been the reason for the loss of many good physicians in a community. They need to be banned outright."
Sajida	"Please consider including health care doctors in this clause . We have a shortage of workforce which is getting worse . There is a crisis looming and non competes makes a had situation worse ."

Jon	"Non compete clauses are an objection to the concept of individual liberty and freedom of choice of where to work. They should not be legal."
Lillian	"I am writing in full support of the proposed non-complete clause rule (NPRM). As a contract worker , it is so difficult to know that when I start working for a client or company, that just by working for them part-time or on an at-will contract-only basis which can end at any time, for any reason, that I am legally prohibited from taking on work with other clients. It has never seemed right to me that by agreeing to work, I am also agreeing to NOT work, to TURN AWAY work. While a contract might last one week, one month, or one year, knowing that accepting that work, and doing that work, hinders my ability to accept other work is mind boggling. Especially in the role of freelancer and contract worker, where everything is at will. I have to pay for my own health insurance. I have very little legal protection or control. I have had clients not pay me before, and with the cost of legal fees and lawyers, have had to let it go. Passing this non-complete clause rule (NPRM) would be a game-changer for my feeling of control and security to work, at will, how I want and for who I want. It would change the game for my business, for my financial security, and for my ability to serve more clients with my time, talent, and expertise. I like working with clients in the health and wellness sector, that is the type of clients I serve best. No longer being limited in which clients I am allowed to work with based off of which clients I previously worked with, well, that would greatly impact my business in a positive way!"
Vidya	"The American Hospital associations attempts to Force Physicians to continue being affected by the non-compete clause is inappropriate, illegal and is clear evidence of their greed, desire to continue treating Physicians like slave labor. Physicians are primary caregivers to their patients and should be allowed to practice freely without the Restriction of a non-compete. The presence of a non-compete is essentially an attempt on the part of organizations to obtain forced commitments from the physicians. I would like to respectfully chime in and include Physicians in The Proposal to make non-competes illegal"
Van	"I live in Iowa, and people are struggling here. Companies have too much power to keep wages low and keep us stuck in poverty. People need the power back. Get rid of non-compete clauses."
Brandon	"I am writing to you briefly as a medical student , soon to be starting practice as a resident psychiatrist. I am writing to you to voice my support in favor of eliminating noncompete clauses. While I recognize their utility from an employer standpoint, the state of affairs (specifically as psychiatrists in mental health) creates an unhealthy environment whereby the physician must either move out of the community or travel to a different community in order to find work that complies with the noncompete. I find this to place undue strain on a system that already finds itself lacking with regards to a limited psychiatric workforce. Thank you for your time."
Elizabeth	" Physicians are people too and non-competes uproot our families, disrupt our spouses employment and keep us disconnected from communities. Most of us will already be excluded as many of us work for non-profit organizations. But as private equity and major for profit corporations buy up and consolidate practices across the country, some are holding physicians in perpetuity because they cannot escape their

	employer since their employer now covers multiple states. Health care deserves happy, healthy physicians. Most of us already worked an average of minimum wage or less during residency and to be tied to a job where we may be unhappy is exceptionally cruel when there are so many shortages of health care workers at this time. If hospitals treated employees well, they wouldn't be trying to impede the right to leave."
Michelle	"I support the FTC's ban on non-compete clauses. Non-compete clauses make it harder for workers to move on from a job that underpays or mistreats them by allowing their former employer to sue if they're hired by another company in the same industry Banning non-compete contracts would open new job opportunities and raise wages."
Thomas	"I am an Emergency Physician; I graduated 40 years ago this year. I believe non-compete clauses in the medical field are immoral, unethical and against the public interest. First and most basic: the patient "owns" themselves; no one can "steal" a patient. People must be free to see whomsoever they feel they need to address their care needs. For this to work, the person they select to care for them must be free to accept their care without legal risk from these clauses. Next, these clauses restrict the free flow of talent, especially early in the career. I counsel my med students to never sign them; these are a sign that the contract is sub-optimal. This especially affects women and minorities, already at the lower end (financial, not talent.) Finally, I think non-compete clauses are for weeny, insecure companies. By presenting or, worse, requiring them, the company is revealing it does not think it is the best in the field. You are to stay with them for legal risk, not because they are any good. You can't know this before signing. This creates a serious quality risk as the best talent does not go the best company under non-compete clauses. Instead, it goes to the company with the deepest pocket and the most skilled law firm. I'd be happy to give in person testimony about this important topic. I represent only myself"
Amy	"Be sure to include coverage for contract workers: like Realtors and other positions that we not " employees" Many real estate brokerages are swapping 'free' training programs the non compete clauses, if the new agent does not like the brokerage or if the broker changes their services, staffing, and fees etc - the relationship no longer works for that agent - they agent can NOT switch and go subcontract with another broker. If the brokerage changes their services then that non compete agreement should be voidable."
Emily	"I support the elimination of non-compete clauses. I do not think that non-profit entities should be excluded from the clause, since many non profits operate in the same economic spaces as for-profit (example, small hospitals). Non competes in small rural hospitals limit providers staying in the vicinity and further compromise rural access to healthcare."
Becky	"Please do away with non-compete clauses! These harms workers and professionals and can trap people in toxic work environments or places that just aren't a good fit. Especially in places that aren't big cities, some professions' non compete clauses force people to move their entire families to new cities unfairly. I'm a primary care physician, and if I wanted to switch jobs, I would have to move 50 miles away, which would place me in a rural location with no jobs available. To find a job I'd have to move 70-90 miles away."

Bryan	"Physicians/medical doctors are very commonly and more often placed under unfair and highly restrictive non-compete clauses imposed by very large organizations and hospitals more than any other type of worker. They are subject to limitations on where they can practice based on these clauses. In this era of serious shortages of healthcare personnel, these clauses should be illegal because they restrict the ability of a physician to determine the best practice for he or she to work in and it unfairly limits our ability to seek a better paying job and artificially limits income due to these restrictions. Most members of the public do not fully understand the significant time commitment of at least 15 years of education and training, deferred income stream compared to peers in the workforce and the extraordinary burden of debt incurred for student loans and we must do more to encourage medicine as a career, abolishing non- competes would certainly help. Why should any company or organization with very deep pockets have an unfair advantage to prevent competition against a single worker from seeking to better their personal situation and finances? These agreements are anti- American and must be made illegal without delay. No worker should be subject to these clauses and any claims made by corporations regarding intellectual property etc can easily be covered by non- disclosure agreements, rendering that argument void."
Bonnie	"I'm a single mom of 4 and work as a CMA. I recently accepted a new job only to find out I signed a noncompete. The Dr is now threatening to take me to court. This new job is better pay, better benefits, and better for my mental health. I think Non-Competes for Medical Support Staff needs to be thrown out."
Chad	"I am a surgeon who has heard recently that the American Hospital Association is opposing this rule. The AHA is using these non-competes to hold down wages and free trade for healthcare professionals. If a professional wants to take a job elsewhere in the same region they are blocked from doing so. I have personally seen case where someone is "afraid" to point out quality concerns for fear of losing their job and having to move their family. This is wrong! This AHA in opposing this is only trying to keep costs for employees down and create a culture of fear in their hospitals. The "non profit" designation of many is also a joke. While they look to keep costs down, while CEO's and administrative positions are making tens of millions of dollars off of the labor they are trying to restrain. I emphatically implore you to pass this rule and to not exempt hospitals and other health care organizations."
Erica	"Physicians are largely bound by non-compete clauses in private practices and large healthcare systems. The problem with these non-compete clauses is that they essentially either trap a physician in either a toxic job or a job that is no longer a good fit for the physician. Or, the physician has to essentially uproot and move to an entirely new city, town, or state. Who loses in these situations? Patients and employed physicians. Physicians need to be included under the non-compete proposal, despite the strength of the Hospital Association lobbies or the non-profit status granted to many healthcare systems. These non-compete clauses are terrible for people - patients, and for the health and wellbeing of the employed physicians. As a psychiatrist who is practicing in rural Iowa, I had turned down several offers in rural Minnesota that required a non-compete clause to be signed. Psychiatrists are a much- needed speciality in the rural Midwest and there is no reason that any healthcare system or employer in underserved regions such as the rural Midwest, needs to be concerned about a psychiatrist leaving and "competing" when waitlists for patients include at least 500 people. This is a matter of money and power. Please
